Le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique invoque l'holocauste pour justifier certains articles du projet de loi anti-terroriste du gouvernement conservateur. "L'holocauste n'a pas commencé dans les chambres à gaz; ça a commencé par des mots", a lancé le ministre Steven Blaney lors de son témoignage devant un comité parlementaire qui étudie C-51. Le ministre tentait de justifier un des articles du projet de loi qui rend illégal le fait d'applaudir à un acte terroriste. Son collègue de la Justice, Peter MacKay, assurait de son côté que cette interdiction était suffisamment circonscrite dans le texte du projet de loi. "Le test appliqué ici est la promotion ou le plaidoyer en faveur, alors l'encouragement, les efforts faits pour attirer une personne vers l'exécution d'actes terroristes", a tenté de clarifier le ministre MacKay. "Les termes "promotion" ou "plaidoyer en faveur", certains disent qu'ils sont trop vagues, en fait, il faut se fier à la jurisprudence", a ajouté le ministre. La référence à l'holocauste a fait bondir le député néo-démocrate Randal Garrison. Le député a réclamé que le ministre Blaney retire ses paroles. Le ministre, au contraire, s'est enflammé et les a répétées. "La violence ça commence avec des mots; la haine ça commence avec des mots", a repris le ministre Blaney, citant le génocide au Rwanda. Presse Canadienne (Le Devoir, Metro Montreal); La Presse; Radio-Canada

Blaney makes Holocaust comparison in C-51 hearing

Critics got a lot more than answers on the government's controversial anti-terrorism legislation at committee this morning when Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney made a comparison between jihadi propaganda and the Holocaust, a reference he repeated when asked to rescind it. The question asked was on propaganda and violent images online, but the response was what the opposition called "some of his extreme rhetoric". "The Holocaust did not begin in the gas chambers, it began with words," said Blaney. NDP Public Safety critic Randall Garrison asked the minister if he would retract his comment, saying it was "at best trivializing the Holocaust", but Blaney adamantly refused to, saying that "violence begins with words, genocide begins with words" and that if that is a shock, then so be it, but the responsibility now is to protect Canadians freedoms and safety. "I'm disappointed that the Minister did not take the opportunity to climb down from some of his extreme rhetoric, including his parallel to the Holocaust," said Garrison after committee ended. iPolitics

Jihadis hate Canadian values, says Public Safety Minister

New anti-terrorism measures are needed to protect the public from extremists who hate Canadian values, says Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney. The international jihadi movement has "declared war on Canada" and other countries around the world, Blaney told MPs Tuesday as they began hearing testimony on the federal legislation. The House of Commons public safety committee plans to hear from more than 50 witnesses over the next few weeks. The Conservatives brought in the bill, which would broaden the Canadian Security Intelligence Service's mandate, following the murders of two Canadian soldiers last October. The legislation would give CSIS the ability to disrupt terror plots, make it easier for police to limit the movements of a suspect, expand no-fly list powers, crack down on terrorist propaganda, and remove barriers to sharing security-related information. The new disruptive powers do not apply to "lawful" advocacy, protest and dissent, but some critics say they could be used against activists who protest without an official permit. Blaney took issue with the idea the bill would allow CSIS to trample civil liberties, telling the committee he wanted to "set the record straight." Canadian Press (Hamilton Spectator, iPolitics, The Globe and Mail, Huffington Post, City News, Global News); QMI Agency (Toronto Sun, Kingston Whig Standard, London Free Press, Calgary Sun)

Conservative ministers downplay concerns terror bill infringes on freedoms

The Conservative government's top public safety and justice officials sought to quell criticism that its new anti-terror bill is too broad and would unnecessarily infringe rights and freedoms. At the first hearing to begin the Commons' detailed study of Bill C-51, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney clarified a couple of provisions that have been the subject of widespread criticism.

Bill C-51 allows sharing of Canadians' private information among some 17 departments and agencies and it allows CSIS, with a judge's prior approval, to "disrupt" perceived threats with actions that would infringe Charter rights. However, Blaney said the new definition of threats to national security, which includes activity that interferes with "the economic or financial stability of Canada" or with critical infrastructure, will only apply to information-sharing provisions. Blaney said that definition would not be used when it comes to granting CSIS broad new powers to disrupt activities of suspected threats to national security. He said the spy agency would continue to use its new powers against threats to national security as they have been defined in the CSIS Act for the past 30 years. He said the agency will not target lawful protest, advocacy or artistic expression, nor will the information-sharing provisions. Both Blaney and Justice Minister Peter MacKay defended the ability to have 17 departments and agencies share much more information among themselves as a measure that will close gaps and modernize the federal regime. Blaney raised the hypothetical example of someone in the Middle East who may show up at a consular office, wounded and seeking a new passport, claiming he'd lost his. Blaney suggested in that case it would raise suspicions but officials couldn't share the information to determine if the individual was a threat. Toronto Star

Empower CSIS to operate overseas

Canada's spies should be able to operate overseas without following the laws of "failed states," Canada's public safety minister said Monday. Steven Blaney defended Bill C-44 in front of a Senate committee examining the government's planned expansion of CSIS powers. The proposed legislation would allow a judge to authorize CSIS to conduct foreign operations "without regard to any other law, including that of any foreign state." Blaney reminded senators of the threat posed by Canadians who become foreign fighters in unstable countries. "We believe that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides sufficient guidelines for the activities of CSIS," Blaney told the Committee on National Security and Defence. "Asking them to abide by the laws of the possibly failed states where the activities would take place, as some have suggested, is simply ludicrous." The proposed legislation would also protect the identities of sources. QMI Agency (Calgary Sun, Kingston Whig Standard, Edmonton Sun, London Free Press)

Le grand patron du SCRS plaide en faveur de C-44

De passage devant un comité sénatorial, hier, le directeur du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), Michel Coulombe, a défendu le controversé projet de loi qui devait être déposé le jour même où le tireur Michael Zehaf-Bibeau a perpétré son attaque au parlement canadien, en octobre dernier. La mesure législative devra permettre, a-t-il fait valoir, de mieux protéger les «sources humaines» qui collaborent avec les agents du SCRS. «Ces gens-là surtout dans le domaine du terrorisme collaborent avec le Service souvent au risque de leur vie, non seulement de leur vie si leur identité est dévoilée, mais de leur famille et je dirais même de leur famille étendue quand leur famille est encore dans leur pays d'origine par exemple», a-t-il expliqué. Le projet de loi permettra aussi de ne pas dévoiler l'identité des employés du SCRS, surtout les recrues, qui dans le futur seront appelés à collaborer sur des activités opérationnelles cachées. Devant le comité du Sénat, le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a pour sa part fait valoir l'importance d'écrire «noir sur blanc» dans la loi que le SCRS possède le pouvoir d'entreprendre des enquêtes à l'étranger. «Nous nous assurons ainsi qu'il sera très clair dans la loi que la Cour fédérale aura compétence pour lancer des mandats autorisant le Service à entreprendre certaines activités à l'étranger lorsqu'il enquête sur des menaces à la sécurité du Canada», a soutenu le ministre. Le Journal de Montreal

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Broadcast media report on a Q&A with reporters outside of the committee room by Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney regarding bill C-51. (CBC News, 10h53 ET; RDI, 11h30 ET) CBC News rough transcript

Le Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale étudie le projet de loi C-51. Les ministres Steven Blaney et Peter Mackay ont commencé à expliquer en quoi C-51 viendrait combler des lacunes dans les autres lois sur la sécurité nationale. Le NPD a reproché aux conservateurs de ne pas avoir de stratégie nationale pour lutter contre la radicalisation. Cette séance d'étude est la première d'une série de neuf. Ce projet de loi donnerait plus de pouvoir aux différentes agences de renseignement. (RDI 10h49 ET)

RDI rapporte que le ministre Steven Blaney défend le projet de loi C-51, plus particulièrement le nouveau délit de communiquer de manière à préconiser ou à fomenter la perpétration d'actes terroristes. Le ministre indique qu'il ne faut pas inciter à la violence et ceci inclus des sites Web. Il

note que « l'Holocauste n'a pas commencé dans les chambres à gaz, il a commencé avec des mots. » Transcription ébauche

CBC News reports Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney states he is proud of bill C-51 because it protects the rights and freedoms of Canadians. Minister Blaney couldn't say exactly what in the bill might have stopped an attack like the one on October 22, given the suspect was not on anyone's radar or anyone's surveillance. The opposition believes the new powers provided by the bill require more stringent independent oversight. NDP Public Safety Critic, Randall Garrison states the minister himself said there's no judicial oversight of the warrant process. Rough transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Gogama derailment: Stronger tanker cars not the only answer, expert says - Train accidents can be 'extremely violent,' and thicker steel won't necessarily prevent spills and fires

Jean-Pierre Gagnon, a leading expert on the tanker cars involved in the two CN train derailments and fires near Gogama, Ont., says there is "no miracle solution" to preventing catastrophic accidents. Gagnon, who was Transport Canada's superintendent in charge of rail tank car regulations and standards before being laid off prior to the Lac-Mégantic rail disaster, says even the most heavily reinforced tank car can be breached. "Accidents can be extremely violent events," says Gagnon, who worked for 30 years with tanker cars and the movement of dangerous goods. "It's not just a matter of speed, but how the cars pile up, and if there's a rail pointing out like spear, and the car is at the right angle and goes into it, it's going to be breached. CBC News

Train derailments revive debate over how to move oil - With 4 oil-train derailments in North America in past 3 weeks, pipeline-vs.-rail debate resurfaces

There have been four oil-train accidents in the past month in North America, including two in Northern Ontario, one of which only recently stopped burning, near the town of Gogama. These trains were travelling at moderate speeds, in some cases well under the 80 km/h speed limit, and the CPC-1232 tanker cars were sturdier, made of tougher stuff than the rail cars that exploded so tragically in Lac-Mégantic in 2013. The 1232s were supposed to be safer. Still, in each derailment, the tanker cars caught fire. For some, this raises questions about rail safety, train speeds and length, tanker-car standards and stabilizing the oil within the tankers. For others, it means we should be talking about pipelines again. "Slowing down is one option," said Ian Naish, a former director of rail and pipeline investigations at the Transportation Safety Board of Canada. "Shorter trains might be another option, but that will cost money. And then — dare I say it — another option is pipelines or some other mode of transportation." When it comes to pipelines versus rail, it's not comparing apples to apples. When a pipeline leaks, more product is spilled, but it's not likely to explode. When an oil car derails, there is a higher chance of loss of life or destruction of property, but the spill is relatively contained. It really depends on what you're worried about — cost, CO2 emissions, safety, or the environment? CBC News

Ontario calls on feds to ramp up rail safety after recent derailments

Ontario's transportation minister wants the federal government to step up rail safety after the third CN derailment in the province in less than a month. Steven Del Duca said he will contact federal Transportation Minister Lisa Raitt, CN and CP this week to reiterate the Liberal government's "serious concerns with respect to ensuring our railways are safe." As of Monday morning, crews were still battling the blaze from the latest derailment. Authorities say a train with 38 cars carrying crude oil from Alberta went off the tracks early Saturday near the village of Gogama, Ont., about 150 km south of Timmins. Police said as many as five cars broke through the ice and into the Makami River, prompting health officials to advise Mattagami First Nation residents to avoid drinking the water. Nearby residents were also warned over the weekend to stay inside to avoid smoke inhalation. Raitt responded to Del Duca in a statement saying she's "very concerned" with the spike in derailments. "Should non-compliances be found, the company will face the full force of the law," she said. QMI Agency (Kingston Whig Standard; Toronto Sun; Ottawa Sun)

Les élus locaux pressent la ministre fédérale des Transports d'agir

Alors que le Bureau de la sécurité des transports (BST) intensifie son enquête sur l'incendie provoqué par un déraillement de train survenu samedi à Gogama, en Ontario, les voix s'additionnent pour dénoncer l'inutilité des nouveaux wagons renforcés et réclamer d'Ottawa un sérieux resserrement de la réglementation du transport ferroviaire. Lundi, deux wagons gisaient toujours dans la rivière Mattagami et, malgré le feu qui couvrait encore, quatre nouveaux inspecteurs du BST ont été dépêchés sur les lieux pour recueillir des pièces et interroger des témoins, a fait savoir une porte-parole de l'organisme fédéral. L'incident est survenu à quelques kilomètres de la petite communauté de Gogama, abritant 400 personnes, et de la réserve des Premières Nations de Mattagami. Le député néodémocrate de Nickel Belt, Claude Gravelle, se désolait de ce troisième déraillement survenu en moins d'un mois dans le Nord ontarien, malgré la présence, dans deux des incidents, de convois composés de wagons à sécurité renforcée. Le 14 février, une trentaine de wagons du CN charriant du pétrole brut avaient aussi quitté les rails, à 37 kilomètres de Gogama. Le Devoir

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Privacy, security and terrorism: Everything you need to know about Bill C-51

The Conservative government has introduced multiple pieces of legislation in recent months that affect security, privacy and the power of policy agencies (read our earlier explanations of bills C-13 and S-4, and C-44). The latest, Bill C-51, would beef up the powers of Canada's spy agency (the Canadian Security Intelligence Service), criminalize the promotion of terrorism and provide the RCMP with new powers of preventative arrest. The Conservatives say the bill is necessary to combat the threat of terrorism, while critics say it constrains too many freedoms in the process. Here's what you need to know about the legislation. The Globe and Mail

Liberals Are Supporting Bill C-51 So Tories Can't Make 'Political Hay,' Trudeau Says

Federal Liberals are supporting the Conservatives' controversial anti-terrorism bill because they don't want the government to make "political hay" of national security issues in an election year, party leader Justin Trudeau suggested last week. Speaking at the University of British Columbia Wednesday, Trudeau encountered a student audience that was vocally critical of the Grits' support for the sweeping legislation. Huffington Post

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports Justice Minister Peter MacKay is appearing before the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security to discuss bill C-51. Rough transcript

CTV News reports on Justice Minister Peter MacKay appearing before the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security to discuss bill C-51. Rough transcript

Le Commissaire à la protection de la vie privée a soumis un mémoire au Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale. On ne sait pas s'il sera entendu. (RDI, 11h03 ET)

RDI présente une entrevue avec le commissaire à la protection de la vie privée du Canada, Daniel Therrien. On discute du projet de loi C-51. Il affirme ne pas avoir été consulté par Sécurité publique Canada mais plutôt informé. Il ajoute qu'on n'a pas tenu compte de ses préoccupations. Par ailleurs, il se dit d'accord avec l'objectif de façon générale. Par contre, le projet de loi va beaucoup trop loin dans le partage des renseignements des particuliers. Il dénonce le fait que le projet de loi autorise la collecte et le partage de l'ensemble des renseignements que le gouvernement détient sur l'ensemble des Canadiens. Transcription ébauche

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Setting the right precedent (while you still can)

The ubiquity of progressively handheld technology has yet to stop presenting new questions for us to answer. Whether it's piracy and its effect on the media it deals with, and how that has changed the consumption of TV, movies and music; or the way that tech changed the nature of kid's social settings, with cyber bullying now a recognized (and ideally, prevented) factor of younger social scenes. Given how quickly the technology advances in capability and the way it is used, on occasion it presents an entirely unanticipated predicament to consider. On March 2, Alain Philippon, 38, resident of Ste-Anne-des-Plaines, Quebec did not submit his phone's password to Canada Border Services Agency (CSBA) workers when they compelled him to do so. Subsequently, Philippon was charged with obstructing border officials, which he has chosen to fight. The claim is that his refusal to give digital access to his phone fell under section 153.1 (b) of the Customs Act for hindering or preventing border officers from performing their role under the act, which could result in a minimum fine of $1,000, with a maximum fine of $25,000 and the possibility of a year in jail. Despite this point, the case is anything but cut and dry. There is no strict point of reference for the CSBA to ask a citizen to provide unlocked access to their phones. Brock Press

CBSA advises travelers of poultry ban

The Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) reminds all travelers that it is important to remember that certain food, plants, animals and related products are restricted or prohibited because they can harbor foreign animal and plant pests and diseases. These pests and diseases could threaten Canada's economy, pose a risk to human, plant or animal health, or cause irreparable harm to Canada's crops, livestock, or environment. Canadian law requires that you declare all goods including food, plants and animals and related products that you are bringing into Canada. If you do not declare your products, the CBSA could confiscate them and you could face monetary penalties, and/or prosecution. When you are planning your trip abroad, check beforehand to see if the goods you want to bring back are restricted or prohibited from entering Canada. General guidelines on what food, plants, animals and related products that you can or cannot bring into Canada can be found on the Canadian Food Inspection Agency's (CFIA) website. Specific CFIA import requirements for each product that you plan to bring to Canada can be found by consulting the CFIA's Automated Import Reference System (AIRS). My Steinbach

Privacy lawyer warns against flying with 'intimate information'

A privacy expert in Halifax says you might want to clean out your smartphone before you cross the border. When you're returning to Canada from vacation or a business trip, your smartphone is open to inspection, just like a suitcase. That surprised Quebec's Alain Philippon last week who got charged for refusing to give up his Blackberry password at the airport in Halifax. David Fraser, a privacy lawyer with McInnes Cooper, said consider deleting anything private from your device before you fly. "There's a huge amount of intimate information you might not want to share with anybody. It might be completely lawful, but you don't want to show it to people," he said. Fraser says the quality and quantity of information stored on smartphones has changed dramatically in recent years. It's unclear if border officers can check banking and email apps, which themselves are password protected. CBC.ca

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News has learned an imam in Calgary known for speaking out against the threat of radicalization is a wanted man in the United States. The federal court has ordered a new refugee hearing for Abdi Hersy. Immigration Canada's position is Hersy misled or withheld information about the U.S. allegations. Hersy is asking the government to drop the case so he can focus on securing permanent residency here. (CBC News, 9h38 ET)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Hackers invade Bloc Québécois website

Hackers took over the Bloc Québécois' website Monday, replacing the homepage with a "United Islamic Cyber Force" banner. The separatist party's home page was completely black, except for a red inscription that quoted from the Muslim prophet Muhammed: "You will invade the Arabian peninsula and Allah will grant it (to you). Then (you will invade) Persia and Allah will grant it (to you). Then, you will invade Rome and Allah will grant it (to you). Then, you will invade The Dajjal and Allah will grant him (to you)." The hackers' Facebook address appeared below the inscription. The page, created earlier this month, consists mostly of banners touting the "rise of the cyber jihadists." The hacked Bloc page remained up late Monday morning, and it was impossible to click through to the party's actual website. It wasn't immediately clear if the United Islamic Cyber Force is associated with ISIS, an ultra-violent terrorist group that controls large swaths of Iraq and Syria. ISIS recently hacked several websites in the U.S. and Europe. Bloc spokesman Simon Charbonneau said the party plans to notify the police. QMI Agency (Edmonton Sun, 37)

NSA mass surveillance targeted in lawsuit by ACLU and Wikimedia - 'This kind of dragnet surveillance constitutes a massive invasion of privacy,' lawyer says

The American Civil Liberties Union said Tuesday it had filed a lawsuit on behalf of organizations including the Wikimedia Foundation and the conservative Rutherford Institute against the U.S. National Security Agency and the U.S. Department of Justice, challenging the American government's mass surveillance program. The lawsuit alleges that the NSA's mass surveillance of internet traffic, often called "upstream" surveillance, violates the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, which protects freedom of speech and association, and the Fourth Amendment, which protects against unreasonable search and seizure. The NSA and its partner spy agencies tap into the fibre-optic cables that carry internet traffic to collect hundreds of millions of emails and other internet communications, as part of their intelligence gathering. Reuters

Microsoft Corp warns 'Freak' security bug leaves hundreds of millions of PC users vulnerable

Hundreds of millions of Windows PC users are vulnerable to attacks exploiting the recently uncovered "Freak" security vulnerability, which was initially believed to only threaten mobile devices and Mac computers, Microsoft Corp warned. News of the vulnerability surfaced on Tuesday when a group of nine security experts disclosed that ubiquitous Internet encryption technology could make devices running Apple Inc's iOS and Mac operating systems, along with Google Inc's Android browser vulnerable to cyberattacks. Microsoft released a security advisory on Thursday warning customers that their PCs were also vulnerable to the "Freak" vulnerability. The weakness could allow attacks on PCs that connect with Web servers configured to use encryption technology intentionally weakened to comply with U.S. government regulations banning exports of the strongest encryption. If hackers are successful, they could spy on communications as well as infect PCs with malicious software, the researchers who uncovered the threat said on Tuesday. Reuters (National Post)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Fisherman dies after falling overboard off southwestern N.S.

A 64-year-old fisherman is dead after falling overboard off southwestern Nova Scotia. The RCMP say Larry Wayne Sears of Shag Harbour was lobster fishing in the Cape Sable area Monday evening when the incident happened. Investigators say Sears was hauling lobster pots with two crew members when the trawl line became snarled in the hauler. Sears was pulled overboard when he attempted to clear the snarl. The crew onboard a nearby fishing boat heard cries for help and pulled Sears from the water and onto their boat. CTV News

Look out, left-lane hogs: B.C. police are coming for you

Road rage and a dictionary's worth of expletives have yet to rid the world of left-lane squatters, so British Columbia is trying a new approach: stiff fines. On Mar. 3, Transportation Minister Todd Stone announced he would introduce a bill this spring to crack down on slow drivers set on staying in the passing lane. By amending the Motor Vehicle Act, the ministry hopes to give police more power to penalize left-lane hogs and, in turn, improve traffic flow and prevent accidents; provincial and RCMP data indicate slow drivers, and the tailgating and unsafe passing they induce, cause a large number of the province's motor accidents. MacLean's

Mounties allege Pamela Wallin committed fraud, breach of trust

The RCMP says Pamela Wallin committed fraud and breach of trust by billing the Senate for travel expenses related to her work on corporate boards, with court documents alleging she described an echocardiogram as networking and a meeting with an ex-lover as parliamentary business. According to the RCMP documents released by an Ottawa courthouse Monday, the ongoing police investigation into Wallin's travel expenses involves 150 "suspicious" travel expense claims filed over three years, including 24 trips to Toronto for board-related activities. Toronto Star

Pamela Wallin drags prominent Canadians into RCMP probe

Court records released yesterday show the RCMP interviewed a number of high-profile people after suspended Senator Pamela Wallin said she had official meetings with them. The Mounties are investigating Wallin's Senate travel expenses and allege she claimed 24 trips that weren't related to her work as a senator, for a total of $27,493.72. Wallin told auditors at Deloitte, who examined her expenses at the request of the Senate, that she had official business with a number of prominent people. That led the RCMP to meet with them to try to verify Wallin's claims. CBC News

The Gargoyle – With expensive criminal trial looming, suspended Senator Mike Duffy mortgages home

Mike Duffy's loss of income and his upcoming criminal trial appear to be putting a financial stress on the suspended senator. Land registry documents show Duffy and his wife, Heather, have taken out a steep mortgage on the Ottawa home that initially triggered the scandal over his expenses. The Duffys borrowed $550,000 against the home from the Royal Bank of Canada in November. Duffy purchased the new house next to a Kanata golf course for $292,783 in 2003, when he worked as a broadcaster covering Parliament Hill. Ottawa Citizen

Law enforcement hockey tourney raises $7,000

Charity began at the rink for police who paid it forward with a fundraising effort for the BC Children's Hospital. Mounties from Merritt and Kamloops, along with sheriffs and conservation officers, participated in a five-team hockey tournament at the Nicola Valley Memorial Arena from Feb. 27 to March 1 and raised approximately $7,000 in the process. The Law Enforcement Charity Hockey Challenge generated a $2,000 increase in funds collected over last year's total. Organizer and Merritt RCMP Const. Derrick Francis said the funds were raised through community donations, raffles, a silent auction and a beer garden. Merritt Herald

Vernon RCMP remind drivers to slow down after speeding spike

The Vernon RCMP is reminding the public to slow down after clocking one driver going upwards of 50 km/h over the posted limit — just one of numerous drivers ignoring posted speeds. Traffic services noticed the excessive speeder Mar. 7 around 7:21 a.m. on Highway 6 near Ricardo Road in an 80 km/h zone, RCMP spokesperson Gord Molendyk said in a release. The officer's radar reading on the driver's speed showed he was travelling 56 km over the limit. "While our officer was dealing with the driver he noticed an odour of liquor on his breath. The driver was asked to provide two roadside breath samples, they resulted in a fail," Molendyk said. The 21-year-old Vernon man was charged with excessive speeding and officers issued him a 90-day immediate roadside prohibition and notice of impoundment. Infornews.ca

Firefighters, police officers honoured for saving baby Grant

Two Courtenay firefighters and two Comox Valley RCMP officers were recognized for their acts of bravery in rescuing a seven-month-old baby from the Puntledge River on January 30. Firefighters Margaret Hamilton and Chris Murdock, and constables Steve Trevor and Mike Wheeler were presented commendations for their heroic deeds by Mayor Larry Jangula in Monday night's regular council meeting. Jangula said the dramatic rescue event was an extremely difficult day for all the first responders from all agencies as they went to desperately search with the utmost urgency the freezing and fast-moving river for a baby and his mother, who were reported by passers-by after seeing them floating in the water. Comox Valley Echo

Kelowna RCMP produce sketch of child luring suspect

The Kelowna RCMP has released a composite sketch of the suspect in an attempted child luring incident. Police say on the afternoon of February 26th a 10 year old boy was riding his scooter on a path in the vicinity of Gramiak Road and Mary Court. The boy was approached by a man who asked if he wanted to talk, saying his house was just down the road. After being ignored the man asked if they could meet later. He was last seen heading eastbound on Saskatoon Road. Investigators believe the suspect may have been in the area of the Springvalley Schools earlier in the day. Global News; Castanet

Edmonton Police Association head disappointed in cop steroid trafficking charges

The head of the Edmonton Police Association is disappointed to hear two officers have been charged with trafficking anabolic steroids. "We certainly don't want the city -- or the people we police in the city -- to make a big wide assumption there's this big rampant problem in regards to steroids," said Sgt. Maurice Brodeur. "Trafficking can be giving to somebody or simply one person purchasing this stuff for themselves, but a lot of times people have this big perception of trafficking as the drug dealer in the back alley and that's certainly not the case here." Edmonton Sun

Montreal police to cut 200 to 250 jobs

Montreal's police service will slash between 200 and 250 jobs over the next five years, as the city attempts to reduce salary costs. Montreal police chief Marc Parent confirmed the cuts in an interview with Radio-Canada. Parent says between 40 and 50 jobs will be cut each year, over the next five years. Parent says the positions will be eliminated by attrition, by not replacing police officers who retire. The job cuts are expected to save the city up to $25 million dollars, or $100,000 for every position that is eliminated. CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Le cachot pour la vie

Un article d'opinion déclare, « Ce projet de loi sera au centre du programme conservateur pour les prochaines élections: quoi de plus rentable que de s'ériger en justicier implacable contre les criminels et de flatter dans le sens du poil les nostalgiques de la peine capitale? Or, ces derniers sont nombreux! Selon un récent sondage, les deux tiers des Canadiens souhaitent le retour de la peine de mort... Le gouvernement Harper n'entend pas la rétablir. Il fera pire, en un sens: on enfermera les criminels jusqu'à ce que mort s'ensuive, en jetant la clé du cachot à la mer. Dans ce système inspiré de la philosophie de la droite dure américaine, il n'y a pas de place pour la réhabilitation, pas de place pour l'idée qu'une société civilisée doit aider les criminels qui le veulent et le peuvent à s'amender après avoir été dûment punis. Il n'y a plus que ce concept primitif: oeil pour oeil, dent pour dent. Les auteurs de crimes crapuleux, les agresseurs sexuels, les terroristes et les assassins de policiers seront particulièrement visés. Outre qu'il s'agit d'une vaste catégorie dont les membres ne sont pas tous des monstres irrécupérables, rien n'empêchera des juges particulièrement zélés d'imposer cette peine à tous les individus coupables de meurtre prémédité. Le gouvernement avait déjà ouvert la voie en incitant les tribunaux à imposer des sentences consécutives pour les meurtres multiples. Ainsi, Justin Bourque, l'Acadien de 24 ans qui a tué trois policiers, a été emprisonné l'an dernier pour 75 ans sans possibilité de libération conditionnelle (trois fois 25 ans, qui était auparavant la peine maximale). Il pourra demander une libération (sans nécessairement l'obtenir) à l'âge de... 99 ans. » La Presse

La fatigue des détenus

Une lettre à l'éditeur déclare, « J'ai travaillé pendant 10 ans au Service correctionnel du Canada dans des pénitenciers à sécurité maximale. J'ai ainsi pu constater que l'un des principaux facteurs réduisant la récidive est la «fatigue» des détenus qui constatent, après parfois de nombreuses années d'incarcération, qu'ils n'auront pas le dessus sur le système judiciaire. Cette fatigue diminue grandement le risque de récidive. Selon moi, le principal élément dissuasif pour la plupart des criminels est leur évaluation des risques de se faire arrêter. Les conservateurs et penseurs de droite créent encore une fois un faux débat et réfutent les données factuelles parce que la peur fonctionne bien pour eux. » La Presse

Le pardon a ses limites

Un article d'opinion déclare, « Le gouvernement harper annonçait récemment son intention d'aller de l'avant en abolissant la possibilité des libérations conditionnelles après 25 ans pour certains crimes très graves. Les spécialistes de la compassion s'en sont tout de suite indignés: les conservateurs flatteraient l'électorat dans le sens du poil, ils joueraient sur la corde sensible de la loi et de l'ordre. Étrange réflexe. Comme si, en démocratie, on se grandissait en dédaignant le peuple et ses aspirations. Comme si en méprisant le peuple, on se rapprochait un peu plus du bien commun. Suffit-il que le commun des mortels désire quelque chose pour qu'on sache que c'est une chose mauvaise? Depuis quand s'intéresser à ce que souhaite l'électorat suffit-il à donner mauvaise réputation à un politicien? Mais l'essentiel est peut-être ailleurs. Le gouvernement Harper, ici, exprime peut-être une philosophie de la justice assez différente de celle qui prévaut en ce moment au Canada. L'idéologie dominante, en matière de justice, croit peut-être plus qu'elle ne le devrait à la réhabilitation. Le pire homme, après 25 ans en prison, peut avoir tellement changé qu'il ne représente plus une menace pour la société. Il doit avoir la possibilité de recouvrer sa liberté. » Journal de Montréal, 25 (Journal de Québec)

Here's a hot tip ...

Alleged serial killer Mark Moore phoned Crime Stoppers from jail to proclaim his innocence, blame police and implicate two men, a jury heard Monday. Moore's recorded phone conversation with the police crime tips service was played at the accused killer's murder trial. Moore made the jail-house call on Oct. 21, 2011, two days after being charged with four counts of first-degree murder in the shootings of Jahmeel Spence, 27, Mike James, 23, Courthney Facey, 18, and Carl Cole, 45. The violence started on Sept. 10, 2010 with the shooting of Spence and ended just over two months later on Nov. 24 with the killing of Cole, court heard. Moore, who turns 31 Tuesday, has pleaded not guilty to all charges. QMI Agency (Toronto Sun, 5)

Double meurtre: le procès du présumé chauffeur d'un tueur à gages est reporté

Leslie Greenwood, accusé d'avoir participé à un double meurtre commis à deux pas d'un restaurant McDonald's de l'arrondissement Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, en 2010, ne sera pas jugé avant l'automne prochain. Son procès, qui devait s'ouvrir lundi matin devant 12 jurés au palais de justice de Montréal, a dû être reporté au mois de septembre parce que la juge Sophie Bourque est dans l'impossibilité de le présider comme prévu. La juge Bourque se remet présentement d'un «sérieux» problème de santé et aucun autre juge de la Cour supérieure n'est disponible à court terme pour assurer sa relève, a expliqué le juge coordonateur Marc David, lundi, en remerciant les neuf hommes et trois femmes qui avaient été choisis pour former le jury. Originaire de la Nouvelle-Écosse, Leslie Greenwood, 44 ans, est inculpé des meurtres prémédités de Kirk Murray et d'Antonio Ones, abattus dans le stationnement d'un McDonald's de la rue Saint-Jacques, le 24 janvier 2010. Le tueur à gages devenu délateur, Robert William Simpson, qui était à la solde des Hells Angels, ainsi que son frère cadet, Shawn Timothy Simpson, ont déjà confessé les meurtres et purgent des peines d'incarcération à perpétuité. Détenu depuis son arrestation au printemps 2012, Greenwood aurait agi comme chauffeur des frères Simpson, d'après la preuve amassée par la Sûreté du Québec. Journal de Québec (Journal de Montréal)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

La Fraternité dénonce un plan de suppression de 250 policiers

La police de Montréal (SPVM) veut couper 250 postes au sein de ses troupes d'ici cinq ans, prévient le syndicat des policiers en accusant la ville de "tronçonner" les budgets en sécurité publique. C'est ce que vient d'écrire le président de la Fraternité des policiers et policières de Montréal (FPPM), Yves Francoeur, à ses quelque 4200 membres dans leur journal interne. M. Francoeur a précisé au Journal que la direction du SPVM l'a informé des intentions de la Ville, le mois dernier, lors d'une réunion d'un comité de travail. Le président du syndicat mentionne à ses membres qu'"informellement, on nous a annoncé que 250 postes de policier seraient supprimés sur cinq ans, au rythme de 50 par année". La première suppression de 50 postes est déjà prévue au budget 2015 du SPVM. Ces postes seraient abolis par attrition, soit des départs à la retraite non comblés. Journal de Montréal, 9 (Journal de Québec)

Police taking a second look at shootings

Guns and Gangs detectives are re-examining many of last year's shootings after arresting a man Saturday afternoon who is "well known" to police. Jordan Payette-McLean, 22, was arrested after a raid of a Cedarcroft Cres. home in the city's east-end. Staff Sgt. Ken Bryden said Payette-McLean faces 10 charges in relation to the raid where his officers found a loaded .380 automatic handgun with an altered serial number. Cops also found a bullet-proof vest and 86 rounds of ammunition. In addition to a slew of weapons charges, he's also facing a drug trafficking charge after cops seized an ounce of cocaine. However, Bryden said investigators don't believe Payette-McLean is affiliated with any gangs. Ottawa Sun, 4

Local group wants city to address community violence, missing murdered Aboriginal women, in strategic plan

A local group wants the city to include solutions to violence in its next strategic plan. Walking with our Sisters Thunder Bay is a group of volunteers concerned about safety in the community and missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls. It came to city council Monday asking that the city make solutions to community violence a priority in the next strategic plan, work with the group to find solutions related to missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls and also include the First Nations community's voice in that plan. "We want to focus on understanding and we really want to focus on solutions," chair Leanna Marshall said. Marshall said the group didn't come to council to blame the city, which is considered a "hotspot" as more than 1,200 Aboriginal women and girls have gone missing or been murdered in Canada in the last 30 years. Instead, the group wants to join the city's efforts to find solutions. "It's not just an indigenous women's issue, it's everybody's issue," Ontario Native Women's Association policy and research director Kezia Picard said. TB NewsWatch, CBC News

Say something and help end domestic violence

Saturday was International Women's Day. In Nanaimo, MLA Michelle Stilwell hosted a special event with an impressive array of speakers at the Grand Hotel. Other events were also held in the city and around the world to celebrate the event. There was plenty of important dialogue. To further that dialogue, we're happy to share the following opinion piece, from Minister of Children and Family Development Stephanie Cadieux and Dr. Balbir Burm: "March 8 was International Women's Day, an opportunity to reflect on and talk about the issues women face around the world. "One of those issues is domestic violence. Domestic violence has claimed the lives of 113 British Columbians over the past decade - and this chilling statistic only tells part of the story. Because incidents of domestic violence continue to be under-reported, it is difficult to say with certainty how many people suffer through this potentially deadly form of abuse. In 2013 alone, there were 12,359 victims of police-reported intimate partner violence in B.C., though research suggests that only about one in four victims ever reports the crime to police. Nanaimo Daily News

Why we need to bring back the Family Violence Intervention Court

An opinion piece states, "Over the past few decades, governments across North America have created domestic violence courts as they've recognized that, with its idiosyncrasies and tremendous importance, intimate partner violence demands a specialized approach. But in 2013, Newfoundland and Labrador's provincial government bucked this growing understanding by dismantling its Family Violence Intervention Court (FVIC) to save $5,000,000 a year. When active, the FVIC offered support and protection to victims of partner violence that the present system does not. The FVIC focused on rehabilitating perpetrators of intimate partner violence. This approach was more effective in reducing the number of repeat offenders than any other intervention currently offered within the justice system. The FVIC operated from 2009 until 2013. During that time, offenders who committed violent crimes against intimate partners were tracked. It was found that, whereas 40 per cent of offenders who went through regular court ultimately reoffended, only 10 per cent of those who went through FVIC reoffended. The Muse

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Le Service de police de la Ville de Montréal va supprimer quelque 250 postes de policiers d'ici cinq ans. Cette information a été confirmée ce matin par son chef de police. Une situation que dénonce le président de la Fraternité des policiers. (RDI, 9h56 ET)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

WHO creates independent panel to assess response to Ebola outbreak

The World Health Organization says it has created a panel of independent experts to assess its response to the biggest-ever Ebola outbreak in history. In a statement Tuesday, the UN health agency said the panel was commissioned after a resolution passed by its executive board. The panel will be chaired by Barbara Stocking, a former chief executive of Oxfam GB. A preliminary report is due in May. WHO's handling of the Ebola outbreak that has killed over 9,900 people in West Africa has been heavily criticized. WHO admitted in an internal draft report that it fumbled early attempts to curb the outbreak, blaming incompetent staff and a lack of real-time information. Others also criticized WHO for not declaring an international health emergency until nearly 1,000 people had died. Associated Press (CTV News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER

kady

Bill C-51: Blaney, MacKay questioned on anti-terror bill fine print: Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney ... <http://bit.ly/1KRcTGv> #hw

kady

NO Minister Blaney -- Canada condemns torture, it doesn't "condone" it. #C51

TondaMacC

Blaney says CSIS dir Coulombe said yesterday he has all the resources he needs to confront the terrorist threat. (Will have to check).

cmaconthehill

Minister @MinStevenBlaney asked again about holocaust comments and once again defends his words #cdnpoli

RadioCanadaInfo

Blaney et MacKay défendent la loi antiterroriste <http://bit.ly/1E8WzKN>

globeandmail

Extremists have 'declared war on Canada,' public safety minister says <http://trib.al/Oaou2yn> #cdnpoli

QMInews

#BREAKING: Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney paraphrases Qur'an, says verse "goes against Canadian values"

ipoliticsca

Blaney makes Holocaust comparison in C-51 hearing | iPolitics <http://bit.ly/1C4t9Qs> #cdnpoli #C51

LizT1

Canadian Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney draws parallels between Islamist terrorism & Holocaust.
<http://www.ipolitics.ca/2015/03/10/blaney-makes-holocaust-comparison-in-c-51-hearing/> ... #cdnpoli #C51

nationalpost

'Holocaust did not begin in the gas chamber it began with words': Minister on anti-terror bill <http://natpo.st/1HvyleX>

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT

MacleansMag

Ottawa defends rail safety efforts after derailment near Gogama, Ont.: <http://ow.ly/K9BCO> #cdnpoli

CBCCanada

Pipes vs. rails: Which is better for moving oil? <http://ift.tt/1E3b2pc>

CBCCanada

Stronger tankers not the only answer to derailment spills, expert says <http://ift.tt/1Mq7HXo>

CBCPolitics

Lisa Raitt says Gogama train derailments raise questions about CN operations http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/sudbury/lisa-raitt-says-gogama-train-derailments-raise-questions-about-cn-operations-1.2987105?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter ... #cdnpoli #hw

NATIONAL SECURITY

bccla

Tonight free event @cnc_bc_ca 7pm @bccla discusses #C51 #humanrights with #StandupfortheNorth Join us #PrinceGeorge! <http://tinyurl.com/ob4zboq>

AaronWherry

Just about to start the C-51 committee post-game show:
<https://twitter.com/MacleansMag/status/575315449640022017> ...

MacleansMag

Join @aaronwherry and @cforcece at 11:30 for a live chat on C-51. They want to hear from you. <http://ow.ly/K9Glj>

TheHillTimes

AFN National Chief Perry Bellegarde to testify on Bill C-51 at House Public Safety Committee March 12. #cdnpoli

mgeist

RT @althiaraj: Why The Liberals Are Really Supporting Bill C-51 http://www.huffingtonpost.ca/2015/03/09/liberals-are-supporting-b_n_6835700.html ...

OpenMedia_ca

Edward #Snowden reveals just how weak Canada's #spying oversight framework is. <http://ow.ly/K80Hj> #BillC51

MacleansMag

.@cforcece in our live chat on #C51: "We think it is possible to make this bill at least a C+" Join our talk here: <http://ow.ly/K9Plj>

Kristie_Smith

Committee budget for #C51 passes. $39,000 for eight days of expert testimony. #cdnpoli

natnewswatch

B.C. terrorist suspects made video to inspire others to join holy war: trial | National Newswatch
<http://www.nationalnewswatch.com/2015/03/10/b-c-terror-suspect-say-attack-as-call-to-action-trial/#.VP8fNFrg2G4.twitter> ...

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

CBCNews

NSA sued by Wikipedia over mass surveillance <http://ift.tt/1aZQvur> pic.twitter.com/aeE64kfkDU

RCMPNB

Online criminals try to acquire personal information by luring you to a website that looks legitimate, but is a fake site.
#FPM2015

LAW ENFORCEMENT

TorontoStar

Agree or disagree? Reform our dopey marijuana laws: Editorial. #cdnpoli <http://on.thestar.com/1woJo8q>

bcRCMP

Firefighters, police officers honoured for saving baby Grant <http://shar.es/1fpZFE>

RCMPNS

#RCMP at scene of serious vehicle incident on Sunrise Trail, Pictou County. 42 y/o man taken to Aberdeen Hospital.
Traffic reduced to 1 lane

theprovince

RCMP allege that Pamela Wallin fabricated meetings in $27K fraud <http://theprovince.in/1HqP4jv>

natnewswatch

Pamela Wallin drags prominent Canadians into RCMP probe <http://www.cbc.ca/news/politics/pamela-wallin-dragg-prominent-canadians-into-rcmp-probe-1.2988642> ...

INTERNATIONAL

guardian

Fukushima, Japan four years on: 'Nuclear power and humans cannot co-exist' – video <http://trib.al/2nRq8Tf>

TuThanhHa

Fukushima cleanup: 4 years after tsunami, bags of radio-active trash still pile up outdoors <http://www.theglobeandmail.com/multimedia/the-fukushima-cleanup-four-years-after-the-tsunami/article23354595/> ...

CTVCalgary

WHO creates independent panel to assess response to Ebola outbreak <http://bit.ly/1C1OvfA>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51
2015-03-11

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding Bill C-51 continued to be extensive throughout the day today, while broadcast had lessened in comparison to yesterday. Of note:
 - An opinion piece in the New York Times written by legal scholars Craig Forcese and Kent Roach was highly critical of Bill C-51, stating that it takes a "breathtakingly broad view of national security" and among their criticisms state that Bill C-51 would empower courts to authorize CSIS conduct that violates "any other law, including that of any foreign state".
 - Numerous media outlets reported on a mail-out by Conservative MP Lawrence Toet highlighting Bill C-51. The mail-out received widespread criticism online and in media as it only contained two possible pre-determined answers: "I agree with my MP Lawrence Toet. We must take additional action to protect Canada from terrorism," or "I disagree. Terrorists are victims too."
- Overall, the tone of coverage was less balanced in comparison to yesterday, with some negative articles regarding Bill C-51 coming out later in the day.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- « Quand une loi permet à l'appareil de sécurité d'un État de faire certaines choses, il va le plus souvent se ranger du côté de l'application la plus extrême de cette loi » ~ Kumi Naidoo, directeur de Greenpeace International

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

NIL

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Tory ministers on defensive over criticism of terror bill

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney repeatedly invoked the Holocaust Tuesday as he sought to justify the Conservative government's tough new anti-terror provisions to curb radical speech. "The Holocaust did not begin in the gas chamber; it began with words," said Blaney as he and Justice Minister Peter MacKay claimed new bans on the "promotion of terrorism" are necessary to protect Canadians from a "jihadist threat." Blaney's remarks came on the first day of hearings as a Commons committee began its detailed study of Bill C-51, the proposed Anti-Terrorism Act 2015. Several academic critics say the new ban on "promotion of terrorism" could chill legitimate dissent or speech, noting for example it could apply against an individual urging support for rebels fighting Russia's incursions in Crimea or eastern Ukraine. Blaney and MacKay scoffed at such notions and "so-called experts," insisting the "real" threat is from "radical jihadists" and is evolving fast. Blaney said "jihadist terrorists" have "declared war" on Canada "simply because these terrorists hate our society and they hate our values." Toronto Star, A1

Blaney évoque l'Holocauste pour justifier le projet de loi C-51

L'opposition accuse le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité Publique, Steven Blaney, de « banaliser » l'holocauste en évoquant le génocide pour justifier certaines dispositions du controversé projet de loi antiterroriste. « L'Holocauste n'a pas commencé dans une chambre à gaz, mais avec des mots », a déclaré le ministre Blaney, devant le Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale, qui a entamé hier l'étude du projet de loi C-51, qui prévoit notamment accorder plus de pouvoirs aux agents du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS). Le ministre faisait ainsi référence à une disposition visant à criminaliser la promotion du terrorisme et de permettre, par exemple, que du matériel en ligne soit retiré. Certains critiques estiment que cette mesure pourrait porter atteinte à la liberté d'expression. La déclaration du ministre Blaney suivait celle du ministre de la Justice, Peter MacKay, qui a expliqué au comité que la loi actuelle est insuffisante pour protéger le public de « l'effet corrosif du terrorisme et de la promotion ». QMI Agency (Le Journal de Montreal, 19)

Blaney utilise l'holocauste pour faire la promotion du projet de loi antiterroriste

Le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique a invoqué l'holocauste pour justifier certains articles du projet de loi antiterroriste du gouvernement conservateur et il exhorte l'opposition à l'adopter par devoir moral. « L'holocauste n'a pas commencé dans les chambres à gaz; ça a commencé par des mots », a lancé le ministre Steven Blaney lors de son témoignage devant un comité parlementaire qui étudie C-51, mardi matin. Il tentait alors de justifier un article du projet de loi qui modifie le Code criminel pour ériger en infraction «le fait de sciemment préconiser ou fomenter la perpétration d'infractions de terrorisme en général» - en d'autres mots, la promotion du terrorisme. Presse Canadienne (L'Acadie Nouvelle, 18)

Ministers try to allay concerns regarding reach of terrorism bill

The federal government is trying to reshape the public perception of Bill C-51, five weeks after the anti-terrorism legislation was tabled and subjected to intense scrutiny and debate across the country. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and Justice Minister Peter MacKay appeared in front of a parliamentary committee on Tuesday in a bid to ease concerns over the reach of the bill. At the same time, they attacked critics as "so-called experts" who are raising needless fears about Canada's law-enforcement authorities. Their appearance was the first of nine meetings of the Public Safety Committee, which will hear from up to 48 other witnesses this month. Globe and Mail, A8

Terror bill worries are 'ridiculous': safety minister

Canada's public safety minister came under fire Tuesday for invoking the Holocaust in an attempt to defend controversial new antiterrorism measures. Bill C-51 is needed to protect the public from extremists who hate Canadian values, Steven Blaney told MPs as they began hearing testimony on the federal legislation. The law establishes a new category of crime, making it illegal to promote terrorism, and gives authorities the power to seize "terrorist propaganda." The minister said the international jihadi movement has "declared war on Canada" and other countries around the world, and he compared their message to Nazi propaganda. "The Holocaust did not begin in the gas chamber, it began with words," he said. The NDP's public safety critic said Mr. Blaney's comment trivialized the murder of six million Jews, according to the CBC. "There is no equivalence in anything we're talking about here to the Holocaust," Randall Garrison said. He later accused the government of "overusing fear." Mr. Blaney reportedly defended his earlier comments, but denied he was suggesting the terror bill is needed to prevent a Holocaust in Canada. "Violence starts with words, hatred starts with words," he said. "Let's call a cat a cat ... hate propaganda has no place in Canada, and the time has come for the government to take our responsibility." Canadian Press (National Post, A5)

Government stands firm on security bill

The government stood firm on its contentious security legislation at a stormy parliamentary committee hearing Tuesday, refusing to consider changes to Bill C-51 that opposition MPs say would help prevent state security agencies from violating civil liberties. "Protecting security while maintaining liberty are at the heart of our Conservative government's approach to national security," Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said as the first of 50 experts and other witnesses expected to testify on the proposed bill this month before the Commons' public safety and national security committee. "It is the jihadi terrorists who endanger our security and would take away our freedoms." Flanked by Justice Minister Peter MacKay, Blaney and other Conservative committee MPs used much of the hearing to promote the bill's proposal to allow 17 departments to more freely share information about Canadians and others who undermine "the sovereignty, security or territorial integrity of Canada or the lives of the people of Canada." Postmedia News (Windsor Star, C6)

Terror bill worries are 'ridiculous': safety minister

Canada's public safety minister came under fire Tuesday for invoking the Holocaust in an attempt to defend controversial new antiterrorism measures. Bill C-51 is needed to protect the public from extremists who hate Canadian values, Steven Blaney told MPs as they began hearing testimony on the federal legislation. The law establishes a new category of crime, making it illegal to promote terrorism, and gives authorities the power to seize "terrorist propaganda." The minister said the international jihadi movement has "declared war on Canada" and other countries around the world, and he compared their message to

Nazi propaganda. "The Holocaust did not begin in the gas chamber, it began with words," he said. The NDP's public safety critic said Mr. Blaney's comment trivialized the murder of six million Jews, according to the CBC. "There is no equivalence in anything we're talking about here to the Holocaust," Randall Garrison said. He later accused the government of "overusing fear." Mr. Blaney reportedly defended his earlier comments, but denied he was suggesting the terror bill is needed to prevent a Holocaust in Canada. "Violence starts with words, hatred starts with words," he said. "Let's call a cat a cat ... hate propaganda has no place in Canada, and the time has come for the government to take our responsibility." Canadian Press (National Post, A5)

Anti-terrorism bill concerns 'ridiculous'

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney is trying to assure Canadians an anti-terrorism proposal won't run roughshod over civil liberties. In his testimony Tuesday at committee hearings examining the federal legislation, Blaney dismissed concerns the new provisions would allow the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to squelch or infiltrate environmental protests that fall outside the letter of the law. The planned measures are needed to protect the public from extremists who hate Canadian values, Blaney said during a meeting of the House of Commons public safety committee. The international jihadi movement has "declared war on Canada" and other countries around the world, Blaney told MPs Tuesday, as they began hearing testimony on the federal legislation. The committee plans to hear from more than 50 witnesses during the next few weeks. Canadian Press (The Record, A2)

Quote kicks up controversy

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney's office denies he cited a verse from the Qur'an as an example of hate speech that "goes against Canadian values." Blaney's office says the minister's remarks about killing infidels originated from the terrorist group ISIS, not the Muslim holy book. The minister appeared before a Commons committee to defend Bill C-51, his government's new anti-terrorism legislation. It would allow authorities to remove online terrorist propaganda and charge the publishers. "If we click on the Internet, and a site is hosted in Canada, and promotes jihadism and says: 'Kill all the infidels wherever they are around the world, I believe it goes against Canadian values,'" said Blaney. The quote appears to paraphrase chapter 9, verse 5 of the Qur'an, which reads in part: "Kill the polytheists (idolaters, pagans) wherever you find them." Many Muslim scholars say the verse refers only to self defence. In an e-mail to QMI Agency, a spokesman for Blaney said the minister was in fact quoting ISIS spokesman Abu Muhammad al-Adnani, who urged followers to kill westerners. QMI Agency (Winnipeg Sun, 11)

C-51 inquiète le directeur de Greenpeace

Le directeur de Greenpeace International, Kumi Naidoo, estime que le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 donnera trop de pouvoirs aux agences de sécurité et aura pour effet d'intimider la société civile. Le militant originaire de l'Afrique du Sud a profité de son passage au Canada pour offrir son point de vue dans ce débat, le jour où des ministres du gouvernement Harper ont défendu leur initiative devant un comité parlementaire. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a balayé du revers de la main l'affirmation selon laquelle les pouvoirs accrus accordés au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) pourraient leur permettre de perturber des manifestations pacifiques. «C'est ridicule», a-t-il affirmé sans ambages, soulignant à titre d'exemple que le SCRS ne se soucierait pas d'une manifestation qui serait jugée illégale dans les rues de Montréal parce que les organisateurs n'auraient pas obtenu un permis au préalable. Mais lors d'un entretien téléphonique avec La Presse, le directeur de Greenpeace International s'est dit sérieusement préoccupé par les impacts que pourraient avoir les changements proposés par Ottawa dans la foulée de l'attaque du parlement, en octobre dernier. La Presse, A10

Projet de loi antiterroriste - Les conservateurs se portent à la défense de la désobéissance civile...

Les environnementalistes, les autochtones et les autres militants de tout acabit, même ceux versant dans la désobéissance civile soft, ne doivent pas craindre le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51. C'est le plaidoyer que les ministres conservateurs sont venus livrer en comité parlementaire mardi. Ils ont donné leur parole que la loi ne sera pas utilisée par les espions canadiens pour déranger les activités citoyennes, même celles illégales. "Cet article [de C-51] doit être lu de manière étroite de façon à exclure les formes de manifestation légitimes qui ne sont pas contraires au Code criminel. En d'autres mots, ne pas avoir un permis municipal pour une manifestation ne serait pas couvert par ce projet de loi", a déclaré le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney. Sa comparution marquait le début des audiences sur le projet de loi. Le Devoir, A3

Jovialisme sécuritaire

A en croire le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, et son collègue de la Justice, Peter MacKay, le projet de loi antiterroriste, C-51, serait un modèle parfait d'équilibre entre la protection des Canadiens contre la menace terroriste et la protection de leurs droits et libertés. Qu'importe ce qu'en disent les partis d'opposition et les " soi-disant experts ", les pouvoirs accrus accordés à la GRC et au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) seront adéquatement surveillés, ont martelé les deux hommes, qui comparaissaient mardi devant le Comité parlementaire de la sécurité publique et nationale. Ils en veulent pour preuve qu'avant de contrecarrer une menace, comme le prévoit C-51, les espions canadiens devront obtenir l'approbation d'un juge pour avoir recours à une méthode illégale ou contraire à la Charte des droits et libertés. Et il y aura toujours le Comité de surveillance des activités de renseignement de sécurité (CSARS) qui pourra, après le fait, examiner la conduite du SCRS. Le Devoir, A3

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

Canada's Antiterror Gamble

An opinion piece states, "The Canadian Parliament is debating the country's most significant national security reform in over a decade. The proposed act, known as Bill C-51, would supplement antiterror laws enacted following 9/11. Responding to United Nations Security Council resolutions calling for the criminalization of terrorism, that legislation — passed without partisan rancor — modified Canada's criminal code, creating a host of new terror offenses. In contrast, Bill C-51, proposed in January by the Conservative government of Prime Minister Stephen Harper, is a highly politicized response in a parliamentary election year to the October terrorist attacks in Ottawa. With Conservatives controlling the House of Commons, it is widely expected to pass before Parliament breaks in June... Bill C-51 would authorize the C.S.I.S. to "take measures, within or outside Canada, to reduce" national security threats. The government argues that this would enable a range of valuable actions, like allowing C.S.I.S. agents to speak with parents of potential terrorists. But the real endgame could be much more concerning. If the bill is passed, the C.S.I.S. could have the capacity to do things like block the return of Canadians fighting abroad; remove Web postings it found threatening; drain bank accounts; engage in disinformation campaigns; or bypass traditional police channels in order to detain suspects. The only limits explicitly spelled out in Bill C-51 are acts that would cause "death or bodily harm," willfully obstruct justice or violate sexual integrity.... Bill C-51 could see Canadian Federal Court judges asked to authorize lawbreaking or unconstitutional behavior by a covert agency whose mandate would extend beyond spying. If foreign governments have thus far eschewed commenting publicly on the proposed legislation, two features should stand out for the international community. Bill C-51 would permit C.S.I.S. interventions beyond Canada's borders. And it would even empower Canadian courts to authorize C.S.I.S. conduct that violates "any other law, including that of any foreign state." NY Times

Canada's anti-terror fight could be hit by lack of finances

A lack of resources could threaten Canada's efforts to combat terror attacks at a time when the government is talking up the threat of jihadist violence, say top current and former security officials. The right-leaning Conservative government wants legislators to pass a bill that would for the first time allow the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) spy agency to interrupt suspects' travel plans and communications. Yet Ottawa has given little sign it will boost the agency's budget at a time when the anti-terror fight is under strain. Canadian police on Wednesday said a man on a watch list of people suspected of wanting to fight for militant groups abroad had left the country illegally. Royal Canadian Mounted Police Commissioner Bob Paulson told legislators last week he had transferred 600 officers from organized crime, drug and financial integrity files to the counter-terrorism beat.

Initial spending estimates released this month showed the government, determined to balance the budget in the run-up to an October election, planned to slightly trim the RCMP's budget and give CSIS a little more money in 2015/16. By contrast, Australia said last August it would add $632 million ($479 million) in counter-terrorism funding for four years. "If you add up the resources, and you look at the amount of work that we do, it (funding) is miniscule compared to our Western allies," said a source familiar with security matters. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney, in overall charge of law enforcement, told a Parliamentary committee on Monday he appreciated how the RCMP was juggling its budget. "Like any other agency they were asked to rationalize and optimize their efforts and I think this is what the taxpayers expect of any one of us," he said, giving no sign extra money was coming. The question of bigger budgets is also crucial for CSIS, which will have broader responsibilities once the new security law is passed. Reuters

Security bill's power to break foreign laws gains international attention

The government's maligned security legislation is gaining international scrutiny, in part for sanctioning Canadian spies to undertake offensive actions in other countries and for empowering Canadian judges to authorize those agents to break the laws of foreign nations. The explicit direction to ignore the statutes of sovereign states was highlighted in an online New York Times op-ed article Wednesday by Canadian legal scholars Craig Forcese and Kent Roach, whom the newspaper invited to write. They are to testify Thursday before a Commons committee studying the proposed Bill C-51. Ottawa Citizen

Canada's anti-terror fight could be hit by lack of finances

A lack of resources could threaten Canada's efforts to combat terror attacks at a time when the government is talking up the threat of jihadist violence, say top current and former security officials. The right-leaning Conservative government wants legislators to pass a bill that would for the first time allow the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) spy agency to interrupt suspects' travel plans and communications. Yet Ottawa has given little sign it will boost the agency's budget at a time when the anti-terror fight is under strain. Canadian police on Wednesday said a man on a watch list of people suspected of wanting to fight for militant groups abroad had left the country illegally. Royal Canadian Mounted Police Commissioner Bob Paulson told legislators last week he had transferred 600 officers from organized crime, drug and financial integrity files to the counter-terrorism beat.

Initial spending estimates released this month showed the government, determined to balance the budget in the run-up to an October election, planned to slightly trim the RCMP's budget and give CSIS a little more money in 2015/16. By contrast, Australia said last August it would add $632 million ($479 million) in counter-terrorism funding for four years. "If you add up the resources, and you look at the amount of work that we do, it (funding) is miniscule compared to our Western allies," said a source familiar with security matters. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney, in overall charge of law enforcement, told a Parliamentary committee on Monday he appreciated how the RCMP was juggling its budget. "Like any other agency they were asked to rationalize and optimize their efforts and I think this is what the taxpayers expect of any one of us," he said, giving no sign extra money was coming. The question of bigger budgets is also crucial for CSIS, which will have broader responsibilities once the new security law is passed. Reuters

Six Things Protesters Need to Know about Bill C-51

At over 60 pages, Bill C-51 -- the Anti-Terrorism Act -- is a heavy read. The Anti-Terrorism Act proposes a myriad of radical changes to Canadian law and to Canada's national security apparatus, many of which seriously jeopardize the rights and freedoms of Canadians while promising little improvement to public safety. Canada's privacy commissioner, ex-CSIS officials, former prime ministers and international whistleblower Edward Snowden have all raised alarm about the bill's impacts on Canadians' freedom and privacy. Lawyers at the B.C. Civil Liberties Association have gone over the bill paragraph by paragraph, and we've outlined the parts of this document that concern us most. The Tyee

NDP MP concerned Bill C-51 will see pipeline protests labelled as national security threat

B.C. could become a flashpoint if the antiterror bill C-51 passes, according to an MP who has served as legal counsel for the independent body that reviews the operations of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. "Given that there are pipeline issues that seem to be pronounced in British Columbia more so than perhaps other parts of the country, then it is possible that we will be seeing this bill applied to people who are fighting pipelines, no question," Murray Rankin told the Straight by phone Tuesday (March 10). "It's a scenario we need to be concerned with," added Rankin, former legal counsel with the Security Intelligence Review Committee and now the NDP MP for Victoria. Rankin was interviewed on the same day that the public safety committee of the House of Commons began hearing testimony on the proposed legislation. Georgia Straight

'Loaded' terrorism mailout from Conservative MP raises eyebrows

A mailout with a "loaded" question on terrorism from Conservative MP Lawrence Toet is getting a lot of attention on social media. Toet, who represents the Elmwood-Transcona riding in Winnipeg, sent the mailer this week about Bill C-51, or the anti-terrorist act being proposed by his party. After pitching the Conservative argument for the bill, Toet's mailout asks "What do you think?" and requests people check off one of the following options: I agree with my MP Lawrence Toet. We must take additional action to protect Canada from terrorism; I disagree. Terrorists are victims too. "It's a loaded question," said Curtis Brown, one of those who received the mailout on Monday. "What it's really about is identifying potential supporters and also people who are hostile towards you." Brown, who happens to be the vice president of Probe Research, a public opinion research firm, posted a photo of the question on Twitter, where it quickly spread and jumped to social networking and news website Reddit. Many people have expressed outrage at the "you're for us or you're against us" nature of the question and the money spent to send it out. CBC News

Conservative mail-out question on terrorism called 'ridiculous' by pollster

A survey question in a mail-out sent to voters in Winnipeg's Elmwood-Transcona riding by Conservative MP Lawrence Toet has been called "ridiculous" by a local pollster. Curtis Brown of Probe Research received the mail-out at his Winnipeg home Monday night. The kind of mail-out he said politicians are allowed to send to 10 per cent of people in their riding as part of their parliamentary privileges. The letter sent to people focused on the Conservative government's proposed anti-terrorism law, bill C-51. CTV News

Toet's terrorism mailout 'a joke'

A local researcher denounced a mailed-out survey by Conservative MP Lawrence Toet as “a joke.” Toet, who represents Elmwood-Transcona, tried to drum up support for the Conservatives' proposed anti-terrorism legislation C-51 and asked his constituents to check off one of the following two responses: “I agree with my MP Lawrence Toet. We must take additional action to protect Canada from terrorism,” or “I disagree. Terrorists are victims too.” “I got one the other night,” Probe Research vice-president Curtis Brown said Wednesday. “My wife and I had a chuckle about it ... 'Terrorists are victims, too' — that's what made me laugh. “I took a picture of it and posted it on Twitter and now, everyone's outraged by this.” Brown said his company would never have worded such a survey that way. Winnipeg Sun

Bill C-51 Mailout From Tory MP Features Loaded Question, Attracts Scorn

Canadians either support the government's new anti-terror legislation, or see terrorists as victims. That's the message a Conservative backbencher delivered to his constituents in a mailout that is now attracting a lot of attention — and scorn — online. Manitoba MP Lawrence Toet, who represents the Winnipeg riding of Elmwood-Transcona, sent the mailer this week expressing his support for Bill C-51. Constituents were invited to take a survey and mail the results back to Toet. However, the options left little by way of a middle ground. Recipients could either check a box saying they agreed with Toet that “additional action” is needed to combat terrorism, or one saying they disagree, as “terrorists are victims too.” Photos of the survey were posted to Twitter Tuesday, with many complaining about the loaded question, and the fact that taxpayers cover the cost of such mailers. By Wednesday morning, an image of the survey was a top post on social media site Reddit, with many commenters suggesting ideas for future polls. “Do you believe the Keystone pipeline is in Canada's best interests?” wrote one commenter. “Yes! It will create thousands of jobs. No! I am an environmental terrorist and should be put in prison.” “Will you be voting for Stephen Harper next election?” wrote another. “Yes, I want Canadians to be safe. No, I like ISIS.” Huffington Post

Conservative mailer's terrorism comments called 'preposterous,' mocked online

A Conservative Member of Parliament is being mocked online over questions about terrorism contained in a mailout to his constituents. The flyer from Lawrence Toet asks people in his Winnipeg riding to choose between two statements — either they agree with him that Canada needs more protection from terrorism, or they disagree and feel “terrorists are victims too.” The question prompted some acerbic parody on the social media site Reddit. iPolitics

Winnipeg Conservative MP's flyer being ridiculed for 'preposterous' survey

A constituency flyer sent by Conservative MP Lawrence Toet was singled out for ridicule Wednesday over a survey question a local market researcher says is simply preposterous. Curtis Brown, vice-president of Probe Research in Winnipeg, received one of the flyers at his home in Toet's Elmwood-Transcona riding this week. It prompted him to take a photo and tweet it with the message “Someone in @lawrencetoetMP's office needs to go to survey-question writing school.” At first it appeared similar to other mailings he receives from Toet, this time promoting the government's anti-terrorism bill. “Our Government has never hesitated to call jihadi terrorism what it is,” the flyer claims. “We understand that extreme jihadists have declared war on us, on all free people, and on Canada specifically.” Winnipeg Free Press

Winnipeg MP's terrorism 'survey' draws online scorn

A Conservative MP is being ridiculed for a pamphlet that suggests anyone who doesn't agree with the Harper government's proposed anti-terrorist legislation must sympathize with terrorists. Lawrence Toet, the Conservative MP for the Winnipeg riding of Elmwood-Transcona, sent the mailer to constituents to promote Bill C-51. It asks what readers think about the bill, with only two possible answers: “I agree with my MP Lawrence Toet! We must take additional action to protect Canada from terrorism. “I disagree! Terrorists are victims too.” The loaded question was called out by pollster Curtis Brown of Winnipeg's Probe Research, who posted it on Twitter... Global News

Justin Trudeau and a Liberal take on liberty - Paul Wells on Trudeau's speech, Bill C-51 and a nation's capital, gripped with fear

An opinion piece states “Here in the nation's capital, the Rideau Canal has finally thawed and everybody's odious. “Where is the fear?” Steven Blaney, the generally amiable minister of public safety, said to a committee studying the government's proposed anti-terrorism law, Bill C-51. "The fear is on the side of those who are attacking this bill." And then he said that C-51 seeks to criminalize pro-terrorist speech because "the Holocaust did not begin in the gas chambers, it began with words." So. The government's opponents are fear-mongering, to hear the minister tell it, and they're also increasing the likelihood of some new Holocaust. As long as you don't see any connection between the Holocaust and fear, the minister was being perfectly consistent. Blaney spoke a day after Justin Trudeau delivered a humdinger of a speech in Toronto. It was certainly Trudeau's most important speech since he became Liberal leader, and probably the first time he has substantially helped his cause since last summer. Not that his arguments will be universally popular. Certainly, members of the Harper government didn't like what he said one bit." Maclean's

Blaney makes Holocaust comparison in C-51 hearing

Critics got a lot more than answers on the government's controversial anti-terrorism legislation at committee this morning when Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney drew a link between jihadi propaganda and the Holocaust - a reference he repeated when asked to retract it. Blaney was asked about propaganda and violent images online, but the response was what the opposition called "some of his extreme rhetoric". "The Holocaust did not begin in the gas chambers, it began with words," said Blaney. iPolitics

Mulcair slams Blaney, Trudeau for Holocaust references

The Conservative government and Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau were completely out of line in citing the Holocaust in recent statements about terrorism, Islam and C-51, said Opposition Leader Tom Mulcair. Speaking to reporters after the NDP's weekly caucus meeting today, Mulcair criticized Minister of Public Safety Steven Blaney for comments he made Tuesday, and Trudeau for a speech he delivered earlier this week. "Using any reference to the Holocaust in relation to the situation in Canada is singularly inappropriate," said Mulcair. In a Tuesday appearance before a Commons committee looking at the government's controversial new anti-terrorism bill, C-51, Blaney compared jihadi propaganda to factors leading to the Holocaust. "The Holocaust did not begin in the gas chambers. It began with words," said Blaney. Mulcair pointed out that Blaney was given a chance to drop the Holocaust comparison. "When he was called to task by one of our MPs and given an opportunity to explain himself and back away from that statement, he doubled down," said Mulcair. "So what you're seeing there is the reflection of Stephen Harper's firm determination to use that type of inflated language to defy people." iPolitics

Bill C-51 protest in Lindsay takes place Saturday

Area residents have joined a national movement opposing the creation of Canada's Anti-Terrorism Act, Bill C-51. A rally is planned for Saturday, March 14 in front of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock MP Barry Devolin's constituency office on McLaughlin Road in Lindsay. Mike Perry, local federal NDP candidate, will speak at the roughly hour long event that begins at 9:30 a.m. and coincides with National Day of Action to Stop #C51 rallies organized through Lead Now... Kawartha Lakes This Week

In Election Year, Bill C-51 Is Best Opposed by Supreme Court

An opinion piece states, "Unless you've been under a rock as of late, you've likely heard about the Conservative-proposed Bill C-51. The one that aims to transform our secret service, CSIS, into a de-facto policing entity. If you have, you've either expected your opposition leaders to fiercely oppose it, or you've been enthused, if slightly concerned, by the drastic powers given to the intelligence agencies under proposed legislation. One thing should be clear, in an election year rife with the pervasive, if elusive, threat of another ISIS-orchestrated attack like the Ottawa shootings, you should expect the supreme court to be the only effective opposition to the proposed changes to CSIS, the criminal code, and CSEC, in a majority Harper government. That is a good thing." Huffington Post

Bill C-51 wants you to stop protesting in support of Palestinians

A blog post sates, "One of the less discussed questions of the Harper government's anti-terror bill, Bill C-51, is whether Palestinian rights advocates and advocates of boycott, divestment and sanctions (BDS) will be targeted by CSIS agents armed with new powers to target and disrupt, courtesy of a judicial warrant. Admittedly, the legislation and its intended objects are vague, except that what constitutes "terrorism," seems to be broadening beyond wanton acts of violence. So, we need to be on guard when Public Safety minister Steven Blaney, the author of Bill-C-51, also talks about "zero tolerance" for promoters of the international BDS campaign against Israel. What does that exactly mean? We know that Harper and his Conservatives have cozied up so close to Israeli government and policy that there appears to be little daylight between them at the moment." Rabble.ca

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

Government's anti-Muslim rhetoric could harm intelligence gathering: Ex-CSIS operative

The ex-CSIS operative who infiltrated the Toronto 18 terror plot says the Harper government's anti-Muslim rhetoric risks sabotaging Canada's intelligence gathering efforts in the war against terrorism. Mubin Shaikh told iPolitics that Muslim communities across the country are frustrated with rhetoric that brands ISIS-inspired violence as Islamic and that their efforts to quell radicalization get little to no recognition from the government. Unless that rhetoric changes, he says, intelligence agencies could soon have a harder time finding members of those communities to work with them. "If you're trying to encourage the community to come forward, to be cooperative, then it doesn't make sense that we engage in these narratives that alienate and isolate the Muslim community further," Shaikh said. "If the community begins to feel that, why would they come forward? ... It's just very frustrating that the Muslim community is doing all this work and yet we get no credit for it." iPolitics

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was minimal in comparison to yesterday.

Of note:

CBC News provides live coverage of Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney speaking to reporters on the case of Jhanzab Malik who was planning a bomb attack on the U.S. consulate in Toronto. He was arrested by CBSA. Minister Blaney thanks CBSA, the RCMP and CSIS for their continued dedication towards the security of Canadians. He states bill C-51 will help these agencies by giving them the tools they need to destroy and degrade ISIL here and abroad. Rough Transcript

CTV News reports on the arrest by CBSA of Jhanzab Malik. It is alleged he was planning to attack several targets in Toronto, including the U.S. Consulate. CTV News gives details on Malik's background.

CTV News states the Public Safety Minister would not point to anything that was involved in this case that might be assisted by bill C-51. Rough Transcript

RDI rapporte des détails sur la vie de Jhazab Malik, cet homme arrêté lundi à Toronto. Il projetait faire exploser le consulat américain. Les autorités ont entrepris un avis d'expulsion. Le ministre Blaney mentionne le projet de loi C-51. Transcription ébauche

General Coverage / couverture générale

NIL

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

Overall, there were approximately 3,232 social media posts today regarding Bill C-51. The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

In total, there were approximately 2,608 tweets, 488 Facebook posts, 91 news site posts, 42 blog posts, and 15 comment posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the day:

Coverage peaked from 15:00 – 16:00 ET with approximately 392 social media posts, the majority of which critical of Bill C-51. Of note, the following tweet from Canadian author Margaret Atwood was re-tweeted 130 times today:

MargaretAtwood

Bill C-51 will create "secret police" force in Canada. We must stop this. <http://fb.me/3iLMFfyJK>

Stakeholders

mgeist

RT @sniderm: First folio as editor - Bill C51 explainer from @danlebla and @channay. <http://Tgam.ca/billc51>

mgeist

Canada's Antiterror Gamble: important New York Times op-ed from @cforcese & Roach <http://www.nytimes.com/2015/03/12/opinion/canadas-antiterror-gamble.html> ... #BillC51

OpenMedia_ca

Canada's Privacy Commissioner has grave concerns about secret police #BillC51 <http://ow.ly/Kb01o>

OpenMedia.ca

The gov't is trying to ram through reckless secret police #BillC51 - learn more: <http://ow.ly/Kd52l> #StopC51
#rejectfear #cdnpoli

Media

reutersLjungg

Shimon Fogel of Centre for Israel and Jewish Affairs, asked about Blaney's Holocaust C-51 comments, says they are not out of place #cdnpoli

reutersLjungg

Fogel: Blaney spoke to "element of the legislation that focuses on the power of words & referenced Rwanda & the Holocaust in that context."

reutersLjungg

Fogel: "Considering the genocidal statements issued by the Ayatollah calling quite literally for a new Holocaust targeting the Jews" (more)

reutersLjungg

Fogel: "and the actions of ISIL along with their pronouncements, any discussion about the rationale for legislation that would address" (m)

reutersLjungg

Fogel: "such language and its potential toxic influence is not at all out of place"

TheTye

Six Things Protesters Need to Know about Bill C-51 http://thetyee.ca/Opinion/2015/03/11/C-51-Six-Things-To-Know/?utm_source=editor-tweet&utm_medium=twitter&utm_campaign=110315... #cdnpoli

althiaraj

Tory MP's mailout says those against Bill C-51 see terrorists as victims <http://huff.to/1GrWRfQ> via @HuffPostCanada

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
March 13, 2015 / le 13 mars 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Reports link Islamic state recruiter to Canadian Embassy in Jordan

Canada's embassy in Jordan, which is run by Prime Minister Stephen Harper's handpicked ambassador and former top bodyguard, is being linked in news reports to an unfolding international terrorism and spy scandal. The federal government refused to comment Friday on multiple Turkish media reports that a foreign spy allegedly working for Canadian intelligence - and who was arrested in Turkey for helping three young British girls travel to Syria to join Islamic State militants - was working for the Canadian Embassy in Amman, Jordan. Reports also say the suspect has confessed to working for Canadian intelligence and was doing so in order to obtain Canadian citizenship. He also previously travelled to Canada with the embassy's approval, said one report... In Ottawa, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney has refused to comment on the reports, citing operational security. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service, RCMP and Prime Minister's Office have also refused comment. Ottawa Citizen; CBC News; Toronto Star; Canadian Press (iPolitics)

Tories unrepentant for 'McCarthyesque' attacks on security-bill critics

Conservative MPs ignored opposition demands Friday to apologize to some of Canada's leading environmentalists, civil liberty advocates and Muslims for remarks that appeared to insinuate these people were national security threats because they spoke out against the government's security legislation. Tory members on the Commons public safety committee launched strident questioning of three groups testifying this week against Bill C-51, which would radically change Canada's national security laws to combat terrorism and other security threats. The harsh remarks led the head of a group representing some of Canada's Muslims to accuse veteran Conservative MP Diane Ablonczy of engaging in "McCarthyesque" tactics, a reference to U.S. Republican Sen. Joseph McCarthy's practice in the 1950s of tarring political opponents with unfair and unfounded accusations of communist links. On Friday, NDP MP Megan Leslie rose in the House and called on Ablonczy – without success – to apologize for her "disgraceful behaviour." The us-versus-them tone of this week's confrontations also evoked a 2012 statement by then-Public Safety minister Vic Toews, who stood in the House and challenged critics of the government's proposed Internet snooping legislation with this line: "You can stand with us, or with the child pornographers." A hint of how the government might handle some of its Bill C-51 critics at committee first came from Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney Tuesday. Leading testimony before the committee, he spoke out against members of the opposition and "so-called experts" who oppose the bill. Ottawa Citizen

NP Explainer - What is Bill C-51, the government's proposed Anti-terrorism Act, and why is it so controversial?

Prime Minister Stephen Harper unveiled his government's new anti-terrorism bill, known by its parliamentary number as C-51, in late January from Richmond Hill. Adrian Wyld/ Canadian Press Justice Minister Peter MacKay (left), Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney, CSIS director Michel Coulombe and RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson arrive at the House of Commons public safety committee hearing witnesses on Bill C-51, Anti-terrorism Act on Tuesday March 10, 2015. Taking that show on the road from Parliament Hill to the Greater Toronto Area was the first in many controversies that have since emerged in legislation aimed at making Canadians safer but which critics warn could endanger their civil liberties. Justice Minister Peter MacKay and Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney formally introduced the bill Jan. 30, and that's when it became C-51. The sweeping bill tackles everything from police powers to "terrorist propaganda" online. It's already been pushed through second reading and into committee, and could well become law before the house wraps its spring sitting and heads towards a fall election. National Post

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

On eve of Bill C-51 protests, B.C. premier sounds note of caution over lost freedoms

B.C. Premier Christy Clark has entered the debate over the federal anti-terrorism bill, calling attention to the potential dangers of government overreach but stopping short of criticizing the legislation directly. Asked about Bill C-51 this week, the Premier said there is a need to balance the protection of personal freedoms with matters of national security. "I think it is really important that all Canadians recognize that both of those aspects of the debate are properly recognized," Ms. Clark said in Victoria. "I know that when personal individual freedoms are taken away by government, it's really hard to get them back. And we are so lucky to live in a free and democratic society, so I hope the parliamentarians in this debate can find some balance." The Premier said she could not provide in-depth comment on the bill, details of which she has learned through the media, and that her remarks were not meant as opposition. Globe and Mail

Spy nation: Six reasons you need to worry about C-51

At over 60 pages, Bill C-51 - the Anti-Terrorism Act - is a heavy read. The bill proposes a myriad of radical changes to Canadian law and to Canada's national security apparatus, many of which seriously jeopardize the rights and freedoms of Canadians while promising little improvement to public safety. Canada's privacy commissioner, ex-CSIS officials, former prime ministers and international whistleblower Edward Snowden have all raised alarm about the bill's impacts on Canadians' freedom and privacy.

Lawyers at the B.C. Civil Liberties Association have gone over the bill paragraph by paragraph, and we've outlined the parts of this document that concern us most. iPolitics

Q and A - Greenpeace executive director Kumi Naidoo highly critical of Canadian policy

Kumi Naidoo, the executive director of Greenpeace and veteran of the anti-apartheid struggle in South Africa, was in British Columbia this week to attend a First Nations ceremony commemorating Greenpeace's 1971 voyage to stop a U.S. nuclear test. In an interview with the Montreal Gazette, he shared his thoughts on Canada's environmental record, federal anti-terrorism legislation Bill C-51, university fossil fuel divestment and more... What's your take on Bill C-51? It worries me in the sense that it could have a chilling effect on young people, in particular, who are wanting to get involved. Government is telling them don't participate in peaceful protest. Young people everywhere - I think Canada is no different - are worried about the future and they feel that adult leadership is selling their future down the drain by not acting on climate. I think it (Bill C-51) is tough on terrorism but hard on democracy. Montreal Gazette

SFU Prof. Tim Takaro called by RCMP after taking photos near Kinder Morgan site

A B.C. climate change scientist says he got an "intimidating" call from RCMP because he had taken pictures on Burnaby Mountain near the site of a proposed Kinder Morgan pipeline. Tim Takaro, a health sciences professor at SFU, says he was having lunch in Tofino with his family on Wednesday when his daughter's cellphone rang. When she answered it, she was told it was the Burnaby RCMP calling and they were looking for her father. "I was very upset that he had called my daughter and that he was basically threatening, intimidating on the phone," says Takaro. He says the officer asked him if he had recently had been taking photos near a Trans Mountain pipeline work site on Burnaby Mountain. They also told him they knew he had been to protest rallies that had taken place there a few months earlier. A few days before, Takaro says he had been taking photographs along the Burnaby Mountain conservation trails when a guard at the nearby work site approached him and told him he couldn't take any photos. Takaro says the phone call was "nerve-wracking," especially in light of the Conservative government's push to pass Bill C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act. The bill mentions "activity that undermines the security of Canada," which includes "the economic or financial stability of Canada." CBC News

Tories let niqabs sidetrack them in terror debate

The Conservatives are hoping to win over voters with their tough talk on terror. But did Prime Minister Stephen Harper lose his way in a side skirmish over niqabs? "I think they've lost the plot, which was about fighting terror somewhere else and now they're in a discussion about dress code," said Bruce Anderson, chairman of Abacus Data. Terror, religion, culture and dress codes got meshed together in the debates this week on Parliament Hill. Toronto Star

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

CBC News' Power and Politics featured an interview with security experts Wesley Wark and Ray Boisvert on Canadian connection to the man accused of helping three British girls join ISIS and Bill C-51. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Temporary foreign workers pin hopes on April 1 reprieve

Stephan Belitsky is like thousands of temporary foreign workers in Alberta: his life is in limbo and all he can do is wait. His work permit will expire April 1, which is when a deadline kicks in for those workers who have been in Canada for more than four years. They either need to be on the path to becoming permanent residents, or they have to leave the country. CBC News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP officer says Halifax chemicals investigation began after wife came forward

The investigation of a Halifax man accused of possessing dangerous chemicals and threatening police began when his wife told the RCMP she felt her family's safety was at risk because of the materials he was storing, a Mountie testified Friday. RCMP Sgt. Lisa Stuart told the bail hearing for Christopher Phillips that his wife came to police on Jan. 19 and told them her husband's mental health was deteriorating and he was behaving strangely. Gosia Phillips told investigators her husband had osmium tetroxide in eight vials and possibly possessed uranium and she was fearful the chemicals posed a threat to her children's safety, Stuart testified. Canadian Press (CTV News)

Suspect arrested after two attacks on women near cemetery

Mounties have arrested a suspect following a pair of disturbing attacks on women near the same Vancouver Island cemetery. The first victim, a 21-year-old woman, was assaulted by a stranger while walking on a trail through Hatley Memorial Gardens in Colwood shortly before midnight Thursday. The man tried to speak with her, and when she ignored him he grabbed a suitcase she was carrying and punched her in the face. "The victim was not physically injured and did not require medical attention," Const. Alex Berube said in a release. Just 12 hours later, while Mounties were investigating that attack, another woman was assaulted in the same area by a man with a similar description. CTV News

OPP union leaders stole and laundered funds, RCMP allege

The RCMP is investigating allegations of fraud, breach of trust and money laundering by three senior managers of the Ontario Provincial Police union, search warrant documents show. The information comes from an affidavit used by the RCMP to obtain search warrants and has not been proven in court. None of the managers named in the court documents has been charged with a criminal offence. But the RCMP believe senior managers at the Ontario Provincial Police Association were involved in: - The unusual investment of union money in condos in the Bahamas. - The formation of a company to provide exclusive travel services for both union business and personal travel by members - The formation of a consulting company to advise the union about investments, including a three-year deal that would bill the union $5,000 a month. - Questionable vacation and travel expenses billed to the union, in some cases totalling more than $100,000 a year. The affidavit focuses on the dealings of three senior managers of the union, which represents more than 6,200 uniformed and 3,600 civilian members of the OPP. The RCMP probe began last October following complaints by union staff alleging fraud. CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

B.C. man who assaulted mom with toddler present declared dangerous offender

A Penticton, B.C., man has been declared a dangerous offender after a brutal sexual assault on a 22-year-old woman whose toddler was nearby. B.C. Supreme Court Judge Peter Rogers says he found David Bobbitt to be the very definition of a psychopath. Thirty-nine-year-old Bobbitt pleaded guilty to seven charges stemming from the 15-hour attack in his second-hand store in July 2011. Canadian Press (Soo Today)

Calgary gang assassin Nathan Zuccherato gets life in prison

Being a major player in a "reign of terror" on Calgary citizens will mean a minimum 25 years behind bars for gangster Nathan Zuccherato, a judge ruled Friday. Justice David Gates agreed with submissions by Crown and defence lawyers that despite committing multiple murders, Zuccherato's parole ineligibility could not exceed 25 years. Gates sentenced Zuccherato, 28, to three concurrent life sentences and said he could apply for release to the Parole Board of Canada in a quarter century from his arrest. Since the Calgary man has been in custody since 2009, he can seek full parole beginning in June, 2034, when he'll be 48. Calgary Sun

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Living in fear of being written off as another 'high-risk' aboriginal woman - Fort McMurray's Melissa Herman lives in a state of perpetual fear due to the RCMP's inaction on cases of murdered or missing indigenous women – a mindset she is passing down to her 10-year-old daughter

Melissa Herman takes the usual precautions when she goes for an early-morning run along the Snye River. She wears a bright yellow shell and brings along her bounding dog, a high-energy mashup of husky and chocolate lab named Charlie. But then she takes a further step, calling her brother and telling him when she's running and the route she'll take, so that someone knows where she is. It's not because Fort Mac is particularly unsafe, even in Ms. Herman's downtown neighbourhood next to the infamous Syncrude Towers. Running through Snye Park is no more dangerous than going for a jog through one of Toronto's leafy ravines. What troubles Ms. Herman, 28, is that, if she were actually to go missing or be murdered, she would be written off by the RCMP and by society as just another "high-risk" aboriginal woman. "I'm scared that if something happens to me, they're going to be, 'Oh, why was she jogging on that trail at 6 o'clock in the morning? High-risk behaviour!' It's so real," she says. "I think that's why I try to present myself the way that I do, because if I do [go missing] I don't want to be the 'high risk.' I don't want that in my profile at all. The possibility of going missing or being found dead is an ugly fact of life for aboriginal women. It happens at an alarming rate – an RCMP report in 2014 said that 1,017 aboriginal women were murdered and 164 went missing between 1980 and 2012. Aboriginal groups, including the Native Women's Association of Canada, and several provinces have been calling on the federal government to launch a national inquiry. Earlier this month, the United Nations' Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women added its voice to that chorus. The Conservative government has refused. Globe and Mail

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NDP MP Martin asks Conflict of Interest Commissioner to investigate former minister Toews

NDP MP Pat Martin has asked the federal conflict of interest commissioner to investigate a payment the common-law spouse of former Public Safety Minister Vic Toews received from a First Nation band in Manitoba on whose behalf Mr. Toews lobbied in the development of a horse-racing venture in the province. Mr. Toews' spouse, Stacey Meek, confirmed to Postmedia this week she received a payment of "less than $50,000" from a lawyer handling financial transactions for the Peguis First Nation, on behalf of which Mr. Toews lobbied the Manitoba government after he left the federal Cabinet and resigned as an MP in July, 2013. But Ms. Meek denied that she had received $966,500 from the Peguis band as claimed in a ledger presented as evidence the lawyer, Jeffrey Rath, presented to the First Nation to show how he had disbursed millions of dollars from the band's trust account. Hill Times

INTERNATIONAL

Boko Haram-ISIS alliance makes both groups more sustainable, experts say

The Islamic State's decision to accept Boko Haram's pledge of allegiance will make both groups more sustainable over the coming years, say terrorism experts. Dozens of groups have pledged allegiance to ISIS, or the Islamic State, over the past year but few have been officially welcomed into the fold of the terrorist army in the same way as Boko Haram. While many create trouble for the local governments and populations where they operate, few control much physical territory and are therefore of little long-term strategic benefit to a group like ISIS - which has gained legitimacy by securing swaths of land. iPolitics

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

usembassyottawa

@DHSgov Secretary Johnson, @Safety_Canada Min Blaney to sign preclearance agreement Monday:
<http://goo.gl/JsmBCd>

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

globalnews

Hazmat incident in downtown Vancouver closes Burrard Street <http://ow.ly/Kja35>

CTVNews

UPDATE: 6 people treated for nausea after 'suspicious' envelope found in Vancouver building <http://ow.ly/Kj9GQ>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NahlahAyed

Spy accused of helping teens join ISIS claims he worked for Canadian intelligence <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2993716>

rabbleca

Harper's anti-terrorism act is a torture act via Michael Keefer #stopC51 #rejectfear

rabbleca

Everything you need to know about Bill #C51 this weekend. And how we can stop it. #cdnpoli

rabbleca

POLL TIME: What do your friends and family think about Bill C-51? #stopc51 #c51 globepolitics

On eve of Bill C-51 protests, B.C. premier sounds note of caution over lost freedoms #cdnpoli

OttawaCitizen

Former Ottawa imam surfaces in video telling Libyans 'jihad today is simple and easily accessible' #ottnews
<http://ow.ly/KitnH>

VancouverSun

Former Ottawa imam surfaces in video telling Libyans 'jihad today is simple and easily accessible'
<http://ow.ly/2VURcv>

LP_LaPresse

Radicalisation: le Québec va coopérer avec la France et la Belgique <http://bit.ly/1Be2Dx6>

TorontoStar

Tories let niqabs sidetrack them in terror debate #topstories

TorontoStar

Privacy experts: Bill C-51 contains information-sharing provisions that are clearly excessive <http://on.thestar.com/1BCZ3Ah>

PnPCBC

First Nations chiefs are "on same page" opposing bill, says @perrybellegarde. #pnpcbc #C51

PnPCBC

@perrybellegarde: First Nations deserve more, but Canadians deserve more. That's why we're asking for the withdrawal of this bill. #C51

PnPCBC

More on The @CBCTheHouse tomorrow: the fatwa against ISIS and a discussion with the 2 professors leading the charge against #C51.

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CTVNews

RCMP officer says Halifax chemicals investigation began after wife came forward <http://ow.ly/KjgmL>

CKNW

#Surrey RCMP identify driver involved in fatal hit and run <http://bit.ly/1BeCpup>

CTVancouver

RCMP probing two disturbing attacks on women near Vancouver Island cemetery: <http://bc.ctvnews.ca/rcmp-probing-disturbing-attacks-on-women-near-cemetery-1.2278961> ...

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

CdnPress

B.C. man who assaulted mom with toddler present declared dangerous offender <http://bit.ly/18HGGuQP>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
March 17, 2015 / le 17 mars 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Expert challenges government claims that C-51 similar to allies' powers

The government is being challenged over its repeated claim that its divisive security bill, C-51, will upgrade Canada's spy agency powers to those of our closest allies. Not so, says Craig Forcese, a national security law expert and leading critic of the proposed legislation. "I believe these claims to be incorrect, or at least require substantial nuancing," he writes in the respected National Security Law blog. When the Conservatives unveiled the legislation Jan. 30, a government backgrounder noted that "intelligence services in most of Canada's close democratic allies have had similar mandates and powers for many years." Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney has repeated it many times, as have other Conservative MPs. Forcese recently reviewed national security law in the United States, United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, and spoke with experts. He concludes that "none of our 'Five Eye' allies have seen fit to give their domestic covert service the power to do things domestically that the government wants CSIS to do in Canada. Ottawa Citizen

Elizabeth May's voice rings loudest against Bill C-51 in flood of online chatter

Green Party leader Elizabeth May's online voice rose above the fray and fracas of Twitter noise protesting the Conservative government's anti-terror legislation this weekend. According to an analysis of social media activity from March 11 to March 15, May's Twitter account was the most tweeted individual account on March 14 during cross-country protests against the government's controversial anti-terror legislation, Bill C-51... Critics of the bill — which was tabled in the House of Commons in January, after attacks on two Canadian soldiers in St-Jean-sur-Richelieu and Ottawa in October — say C-51 goes too far in giving Canada's spy agency CSIS and police authorities expanded powers, and that it infringes upon privacy rights. The Conservative government, however, insists the bill and its measures are necessary for keeping Canadians safe from terrorist threats. The office of the minister of public safety, Steve Blaney, sent out a statement to media on Saturday in response to the cross-country protests. "We reject the argument that every time we talk about security, our freedoms are threatened. Canadians understand that their freedom and security go hand in hand. Canadians expect us to protect both, and there are safeguards in this legislation to do exactly that," the statement reads. The exact number of how many Canadians turned out on March 14 is unclear. Media reports put the Toronto protest at 1,500 to 2,000 and a couple hundred in many of the other cities where protests took place. Yahoo! News

C-51 aurait nui aux mobilisations de 2012, selon Gabriel Nadeau-Dubois

Une loi antiterroriste comme celle actuellement à l'étude à Ottawa aurait privé d'oxygène le mouvement étudiant au printemps 2012, croit l'un de ses anciens porte-étendards. «À partir du moment où on soupçonne des gens de terrorisme ou d'incitation au terrorisme, c'est sûr que l'impact sur le moral des gens qui se mobilisent est indéniable, donc à mon avis, c'est sûr que ça aurait pu avoir un effet grave en 2012», a suggéré Gabriel Nadeau-Dubois en entrevue téléphonique avec La Presse canadienne, lundi. L'ancien coporte-parole de la CLASSE ajoute sa voix au concert naissant de voix québécoises qui commencent à s'élever pour dénoncer l'étendue des pouvoirs qui seraient conférés aux services de renseignement grâce au projet de loi antiterroriste C-51... Le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a balayé ce type de critiques du revers de la main, lundi dernier, les qualifiant de «complètement fausses et franchement ridicules». Mais pour Gabriel Nadeau-Dubois, il y a un peu de place au doute: dans un contexte de «crise sociale» comme celui qui prévalait au printemps 2012, les autorités sécuritaires n'auraient probablement pas laissé filer l'occasion de profiter de toute l'étendue des pouvoirs que leur accorde C-51. «La situation était très tendue, les forces policières étaient sur les dents, les tribunaux également étaient très impliqués, et on a assisté à plusieurs dérapages», a-t-il lancé à l'autre bout du fil. «Il me semble que si des dispositions comme celles contenues dans le projet de loi C-51 avaient été en vigueur à l'époque, je pense qu'on aurait pu assister à des dérapages encore plus graves», a ajouté l'ancien militant étudiant, qui avait été rencontré par la Sûreté du Québec au plus fort de la crise. Le Devoir

U.S., Canada strike deal to speed border checks

Travel by roadway, rail and water between Michigan and Canada could become easier under a deal signed Monday by U.S. and Canadian officials. The impact on crossings in the Great Lakes state is likely years away, though the effects could be felt sooner in other states if the U.S. Congress and Canadian Parliament approve it. The proposed change could mean shifting some American customs inspections to the Canadian sides of the border crossings at Detroit and Port Huron, and allowing U.S. customs agents to carry weapons while stationed inside the Canadian border. The deal — years in the making as part of the Beyond the Border Initiative — sets out a legal framework allowing law enforcement agents into each other's countries to conduct customs, immigration and agricultural inspections inside the border. It is a process already in operation at eight Canadian airports, including Toronto. "This agreement will help facilitate the legitimate trade and travel that keeps our economy thriving as we maintain utmost vigilance to the security of our borders," U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said. "We remain committed to our deep partnership with Canada, a true ally, neighbor and friend of the United States." A new process for advance government screening of business shipments and individuals could relieve congestion and shave off time while traveling between the two countries, officials say. Canadian Public Safety Minister Steve Blaney said the "historic" agreement builds on decades of successful pre-clearance operations in Canadian airports. About 4.5 million passengers traveling through Toronto airport now go through the pre-clearance process before traveling to the United States, Blaney said. Detroit News; AFP (Yahoo! News); Reuters; Buffalo News

EDITORIAL: A welcome fix for border bottlenecks

An editorial states "A new Canada-U.S. deal to ease travel between the two countries will whisk individuals across the border faster — and business groups are optimistic that it will eventually do the same for cross-border trade. The agreement, announced Monday by Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson in Washington, D.C., will extend U.S. customs pre-clearance at eight Canadian airports, including Halifax Stanfield International Airport. A streamlined customs regimen will also cover cars, trucks, buses, trains and ferries, reducing border holdups for the 400,000 people who cross the border each day. With the Canadian dollar some 20 per cent below its U.S. counterpart, this is welcome news for the Nova Scotia tourism industry. The deal will also help to ease growing concerns about Canada's relationship with the U.S. after President Barack Obama's February veto of the Keystone XL crude oil pipeline from Alberta to Nebraska." Chronicle-Herald

Protestor lost argument with Hitler sign

An opinion piece states "If you want to kill the momentum of a movement in this town, plan a public protest. St. John's has seen its fair share of demonstrations that went bust, the inflated balloon of optimism pricked as organizers struggle to understand why the masses didn't mobilize. Sometimes you get lucky... Not so Saturday, however. Barely 50 citizens showed up for an icy March march in downtown St. John's. It was part of a cross-Canada protest of C-51, the proposed anti-terrorism bill making its way through the committee process in Ottawa... When you're rallying the troops to protest a complex issue, you can't always be sure everyone understands the cause. And you're bound to get a few who miss the dartboard completely. Like the ones who came out Saturday with placards depicting Prime Minister Stephen Harper as Adolf Hitler. Such misguided souls were peppered through the crowds across Canada, including at least two or three in St. John's... You can overlook the scattered bird-brained placard when most in the crowd know what they're really fighting for -- or against. But you have to wonder when a senior member of government doesn't even understand the Hitler taboo. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney made an oblique reference to the Holocaust last week in defending C-51. And Blaney is more than a face in the crowd." St. John's Telegram

Broadcast News

CBC News' Power and Politics featured an interview with US Ambassador to Canada Bruce Heyman on a number of topics, including yesterday's border pre-clearance announcement. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

New federal rail-car standards should come faster, safety agency says

Canada's transportation safety agency is questioning a federal proposal to bring in new tank-car standards by 2025, saying a recent spate of fiery derailments shows that swifter action is needed. The Transportation Safety Board made the comments in a progress report on its investigation into a crude oil train accident earlier this month in northern Ontario. The board is investigating the derailment of a Canadian National train near Gogama, Ont. on March 7, which spilled crude oil into a nearby river and caused a massive fire that burned for more than three days. Globe and Mail

Elders speak out about devastating effects of flooded First Nations

Being forced out of their communities has created feelings of isolation, mental health issues and a higher rate of suicide. Four years after a devastating flood, elders from four first nations spoke out about the challenges they face as evacuees gathered in Winnipeg. Marshall Ross says he misses being able to take care of himself and his home. "I'm getting sick of it now, nothing to do, just sleep and eat where I'm staying. I had my own house, I had a few things to do outside, cleaning up my yard." CBC News

Nova Scotia snow storm: how to prepare your home

Here's how to best prepare your home to weather Nova Scotia's coming snow storm and to avoid flooding when the snow melts. Heather Mackenzie-Carey, the regional emergency management co-ordinator in Lunenburg County, spent Tuesday preparing for the Tuesday/Wednesday storm. CBC News

Winter Storm Warning issued for Yarmouth County

A winter storm warning was issued for Yarmouth County at 3:58 p.m. Tuesday. For the earlier part of the afternoon it appeared Yarmouth and Shelburne counties would be spared the weather event, with warnings issued for every other county in the province. The Vanguard

#WinterISurrender: Atlantic Canada turns tail on winter

Atlantic Canada shuddered when we learned yet another mid-March storm is about to dump up to 20 centimetres of snow on us tonight. Perhaps if we surrender, winter will take pity and leave us alone? Share your photos and videos of #WinterISurrender to add to our media wall. You can tweet, Facebook or Instagram us with that hashtag. CBC News

Halifax snow storm could take days to clean up

City officials in Halifax took the extraordinary step Tuesday of urging people to postpone non-essential travel for the next several days. The latest in a series of winter snowstorms will hit the city by midnight, bringing heavy snow and high winds to parts of the province already struggling to find new places to store the snow. CBC News

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

CBC News' Power and Politics featured an interview with Transportation Safety Board Chair Kathy Fox on rail safety measures. Rough Transcript

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Support Plummets For Harper's Anti-Terror Bill, New Poll Shows

Just weeks after one poll showed a convincing majority supported the Canadian government's sweeping new anti-terrorism law, a new survey suggests that support is dropping, and fast. The Forum Research poll, provided exclusively to VICE, says support for the legislation now stands at 45 percent, with nearly the same amount opposed to the bill. And as scrutiny increases, that support can be expected to drop even further. Of those who are familiar with the proposals in the bill—nearly 70 percent of those asked—support drops even further, with half saying they disapprove of the bill, and only 31 percent supporting it. Opposition proves to be pan-Canadian. British Columbia, the prairies, and Atlantic Canada prove most opposed to the legislation, with only slim pluralities in Alberta and Quebec endorsing the bill. Vice News' QMI Agency (Edmonton Sun)

Castlegar bands together to fight for freedom

Thousands of concerned citizens took to the streets on Saturday to oppose Harper and his governments anti-terrorism bill. In defiance of bill C-51, rallies were held in Toronto, Calgary and many other communities across Canada, including Castlegar. Gathered outside city hall and the RCMP building, near 100 people from Castlegar and the Kootenay area, hoisted signs along with their voices, in hopes of saving their freedom. "We are here today to tell our government we will not become a police state," said Gail Hunnisett, reading from a letter by Alex Atamanenko. "We need to tell Harper and his Conservatives that we will not be intimidated by his fear tactics. Please keep up the struggle, the future of our democracy depends on it." Castlegar News

Alleged terror plotter likely deported within six months, lawyer says

The lawyer for a man alleged to have plotted to bomb the U.S. Consulate in Toronto is certain his client will be deported within six months. Anser Farooq said Tuesday that Jahanzeb Malik will not be given an opportunity to properly defend himself at the Immigration and Refugee Board, a body where the threshold of evidence is lower than a criminal court. That means the 33-year-old, who is a permanent resident, will be deported, likely to his native Pakistan, the lawyer said. "They don't have to produce the kind of disclosure needed during a criminal proceedings," Farooq said. "I would expect within four to six months they're going to have a hearing to say, 'Look, we have enough information here to kick him out of Canada.'" Malik was arrested March 9. The Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) alleges he told an undercover RCMP officer he planned to bomb the U.S. Consulate and targets in Toronto's financial district. He has not been charged criminally in relation to the allegations, which Farooq says Malik denies. Toronto Sun

B.C. terrorism suspects drank methadone to avoid being 'dope sick' during attack – trial

John Nuttall roused his wife from sleep on the early morning of Canada Day 2013 with a gentle reminder of the task at hand. "Wake up for jihad," Nuttall told Amanda Korody as they started the day in a motel in Sidney, B.C., not far from where the ferry arrives from Vancouver. The couple, who are on trial for terrorism-related offences, had spent months plotting their alleged Canada Day attack on the provincial legislature in Victoria and now it was time to set the plan in motion. Video and audio from that day were played Tuesday for a B.C. Supreme Court jury, which has already sat through dozens of hours of recordings. The earliest video footage from that day shows Nuttall and Korody making last-minute preparations as Nuttall waxes about just how proud he is of himself and his wife. Vancouver Sun; Vancouver Province

We can't accept Internet surveillance as the new normal

An opinion piece states, "As The Globe and Mail has reported today – based on classified documents obtained from an anonymous source – U.S. intelligence officials appear to be mapping the communications traffic of several large Canadian corporations, including Rogers Communications Inc., one of the country's largest Internet and telecom providers. Perhaps the most depressing aspect of this news is how completely unsurprising it is. By now, we have all been subjected to a veritable tsunami of surveillance-related leaks, courtesy of documents obtained by former U.S. intelligence analyst Edward Snowden, a trove from which this latest piece of information is also drawn. These files suggest that the National Security Agency uses every method at its disposal, legal and otherwise, to track every speck of Web and voice traffic, including tapping directly into the undersea cables that make up the backbone of the Internet. In that context, the idea that intelligence agencies are snooping on the networks of Canadian corporations like Rogers seems totally believable, despite the fact that there is a 66-year-old agreement between Canada and the United States that supposedly prevents each country from spying on residents of the other. While the classified document that has come to light doesn't say that any snooping is occurring, it seems clear that the behaviour it describes is designed to create a map of those networks in order to facilitate future surveillance activity..." Globe and Mail

Editorial - Terrorism bill reaches too far

An editorial states "The threat of terrorism to Canada should not be minimized, but neither should it be exaggerated. Prime Minister Stephen Harper and his government are doing the latter. In going too far, they threaten to erode the democracy they claim to protect. In January, the Conservative government introduced Bill C-51, the Anti-terrorism Act. The bill would broaden police powers and allow police to detain terrorism suspects. It would give new powers to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. These new powers come without corresponding provisions that would keep a proper check on those powers. Harper and his cabinet have played on people's fears as they promote the new legislation, and in doing so, have raised more fears than they have quelled. Thousands of people, including a huge crowd in Victoria, rallied across Canada on Saturday to protest the proposed legislation's sweeping powers and threats to civil liberties. The risks from terrorism are real, and we see and hear of horrifying scenes abroad, but the risks are relatively small in Canada. Despite highly publicized incidents, the vast majority of Canadians are not in danger from acts of terrorism from without or within. But all Canadians are in danger of having freedoms curtailed and their privacy invaded by legislation that is unnecessary." Times-Colonist

The Spectator's View: CSIS shines a light on relative terror threats

An opinion piece states "The question isn't whether or not we should be worried, even frightened, about terror attacks by religious and other extremists. Of course we should. But how worried should we be, and of what and who? Most Canadians today would probably answer we should be most concerned about terror attacks by those practising their own form of twisted Islam. That might seem like a reasonable position considering that we've had two attacks in recent memory, along with several others that have been thwarted. And the Harper government is playing to that perception, going to the extent of citing the threat of Islamic terror attacks as being the main driver of Bill C-51, which gives sweeping new powers to Canada's spy agency, among other things. But what does CSIS itself say about the relative threat? You might be surprised. Internal documents obtained from the spy agency say that when it comes to so-called "lone wolf" attacks, the kind recently perpetrated against members of Canada's military, terror attacks are more likely to come from white supremacists and extreme right-wing ideologues as opposed to Islamic radicalism. The former two ideologies are responsible for 17 per cent of lone-wolf attacks worldwide, the CSIS documents state. Islamic extremism accounted for 15 per cent of similar attacks, while "black power" and left-wing extremists perpetrated 13 per cent." Hamilton Spectator

Opinion - Vague language in Bill C-51 is worrisome

An opinion piece states "In 2013, Edward Snowden and the Guardian newspaper revealed the extent to which the U.S. National Security Agency is able to track someone's calls, read emails and SMS, hack into a smartphone and computer, and monitor 'nearly everything a user does on the Internet'- even web browsing. NSA counterparts in Canada and other 'Five Eyes' countries reportedly have similar capabilities or have information sharing agreements with the NSA. Bill C-51, currently before Parliament, would now 'encourage and facilitate' information sharing between Canada's Communications Security Establishment and nine other Canadian federal government agencies, including Canada Revenue Agency. Information can be shared to protect Canada against activities that 'undermine its security.' Such activities do not include 'lawful advocacy, protest, dissent and artistic expression.' Surely federal government agencies should have the means to protect Canada against terrorism. But the definition of 'activities that undermine security' is too broad. It includes those that would 'unduly' influence a government by 'unlawful' means. Sounds reasonable, eh?" Montreal Gazette

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Leahy says US-Canada deal step to restoring Montreal rail

U.S. Sen. Patrick Leahy says a new agreement between the United States and Canada is a big step toward restoring rail service between Vermont and Montreal. On Monday U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson and Canadian Minister of Public Safety Steven Blaney signed a new pre-clearance agreement in Washington. The agreement makes it possible for more travelers to pass through U.S. Customs and Border Protection inspections prior to traveling. Such an agreement was needed before discussions to create a pre-clearance facility at Montreal's Central Station. Leahy says the agreement is also a positive step for improving air service between Burlington International Airport and Toronto City Airport. Amtrak's cross-border service between Montreal and Vermont ended in 1995. Now Amtrak service ends in St. Albans. Associated Press (Washington Times; 2015-03-16)

Border agreement brings opposing viewpoints on Cornwall's port of entry

There are differing views on whether a new border security agreement between Canada and the U.S. signed Monday could change the future makeup of Cornwall's border. The customs pre-clearance agreement would also allow agents from both border agencies (Canada Border Services Agency and the U.S. Customs and Border Protection) to work in each others countries. This is part of the Beyond the Border plan signed by U.S. President Obama and Prime Minister Harper in 2011. North Country Chamber of Commerce Chairman Garry Douglas tells North Country Public Radio the plan would allow the CBSA to set up at the Massena port of entry in Hogansburg, N.Y. "Anybody who has crossed that crossing knows is the very tight landlocked situation they have on the Cornwall side, which doesn't have the space to adequately build facilities, to process trucks, let alone growing volumes of traffic," he tells NCPR. Cornwall Newswatch

Pair face multiple charges after border bust in Sault Ste. Marie

Two people are facing multiple charges following an RCMP and Canada Border Services Agency investigation in Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., earlier this month. Police say a car with Alberta plates coming from the U.S. was sent for secondary inspection after the occupants told CBSA officials that they made a wrong turn and wished to return to Canada. The Mounties say the pair were arrested after a search resulted in the seizure of drug paraphernalia, oxycodone tablets and suspected stolen identification documents. Canadian Press (CP24)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Des armes à feu pour se protéger en milieu rural?

Stephen Harper a-t-il raison de laisser entendre que les armes à feu peuvent assurer une certaine sécurité dans des régions rurales parfois éloignées des secours policiers? Vérification faite : non. D'abord, la loi ne permet pas de garder une arme chargée à portée de la main au Canada, comme cela serait nécessaire dans les cas d'intrusion à domicile. Ensuite, qu'en est-il de la criminalité violente dans les régions rurales? Les dernières données de Statistique Canada comparant la criminalité entre les régions rurales et urbaines remontent à 2005. On dénombrait un peu plus de 1000 crimes violents par 100 000 habitants en zone rurale, contre un peu plus de 800 dans les grandes régions urbaines. Radio-Canada

Quebec premier rips Harper's pro-gun comment, says it risks legitimizing vigilantism

The fewer guns circulating in Quebec and Canada the better, says Premier Philippe Couillard, putting distance between himself and Stephen Harper. A small game hunter and proud to represent the rural riding of Roberval, Couillard nevertheless said he thinks "a good number if not the majority" of Quebecers would agree Quebec and Canada don't need more guns floating around. "A country where lots of guns are circulating is not a country the majority of Canadians and Quebecers want to live in," Couillard told reporters arriving for a meeting of the Liberal caucus. "The less firearms we have in circulation the better we are, the better we will all be." But Couillard drew a nuance between the sport of hunting and owning guns for other reasons. He fancies himself a sportsman and has been interviewed on hunting and fishing television shows. He can speak at length on salmon fly fishing. "Look, I'm a hunter myself - small game only mind you," Couillard said. "But I register my firearms. I have no problem with this at all." Couillard made the remarks as debate raged across the country in the wake of comments made recently by Prime Minister Harper. National Post

RCMP on lookout for violent offender

An arrest warrant has been issued for a local man police believe to be armed and dangerous. Robert Lee Milligan, 32, has been charged with breach of probation. He is described as a white male standing 5'11" tall, weighing 201 lbs. Milligan has brown eyes and brown hair that he often keeps shaved. "Milligan has an extensive history with police, is known to be violent and is presumed to be armed and dangerous," said a Prince George RCMP press release. Prince George Citizen

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Omar Khadr bail application violates U.S. plea deal, Ottawa says - Granting bail to Khadr would damage U.S. relations, federal government says

The federal government says Canadian courts have no authority to grant Omar Khadr bail while he appeals his war crimes conviction in the United States. And even if they do have the power, they should still refuse to release him, the government argues in a new legal brief prepared in response to Khadr's bail application. It also says that granting bail to Khadr would undermine public confidence in the justice system, subvert international law, and damage Canada's relations with the U.S. The document notes that Khadr pleaded guilty before a U.S. military commission in Guantanamo Bay and waived his right to appeal the conviction. It also states his transfer to Canada to serve out his sentence was done under a treaty that required the American legal proceedings to have been final. Ottawa says Khadr's bail application, which will be heard on March 24 and 25 in Edmonton, constitutes a "direct violation" of his plea deal. Canadian Press (CBC News); Presse canadienne (L'Actualité)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Beyond bombing, critics ask: What's the plan to defeat the Islamic State?

A decision by the federal cabinet on renewing Canada's combat mission against the Islamic State is expected soon, but calls are getting louder for the Harper government to present a comprehensive war strategy beyond the military campaign. It's widely expected that the federal government will deliver a motion to the House of Commons within the next couple of weeks, to renew and possibly reshape the commitment of warplanes and special forces against extremists in northern Iraq. Prime Minister Stephen Harper has recently cast the conflict in wider terms, saying the terrorist organization and its affiliated jihadists have "declared war on Canada specifically." But analysts and opposition critics say he and his ministers rarely discuss what diplomatic, development and humanitarian measures are needed to tackle the instability and sectarian divisions that feed the conflict. Harper is not alone in facing that criticism. In the U.S., Barack Obama receives the same strident calls for clarity as his war resolution grinds its way through Congress. Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press)

U.S. Air Force vet accused of planning to join ISIS in Syria

A U.S. Air Force veteran who was recently fired from his job as an airplane mechanic plotted to travel to Syria to join ISIS and was arrested on terrorism charges, federal prosecutors said. Tairod Nathan Webster Pugh, of New Jersey, was indicted Monday on charges of attempting to provide material support to a terrorist group and obstruction of justice. He was in custody and will appear Wednesday in federal court in New York City. His lawyer did not immediately respond to a message seeking comment. Associated Press (Global News)

Japanese tsunami debris will continue to wash up on US shores, expert says

Debris from Japan's 2011 tsunami will continue to litter the North American coastline over the next three years, with everything from refrigerators to lumber and sports balls still floating offshore in the Pacific, an expert said on Tuesday. About 1m tons of debris was still lingering in the Pacific Ocean four years after a magnitude 9.0 earthquake – the most powerful ever recorded in Japan – set off a series of massive tsunami waves that devastated a wide swath of Honshu's Pacific coastline and killed nearly 20,000 people. It also damaged the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear plant, leading to a series of explosions and meltdowns in the world's worst nuclear disaster since Chernobyl 25 years earlier. Reuters (UK Guardian)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

macleod_ian

Expert challenges government claims that C-51 similar to allies' powers <http://ottawacitizen.com/news/politics/expert-challenges-government-claims-that-c-51-similar-to-allies-powers/> ... #cdnpoli #C51 #CSIS #ottnews

ElizabethMay

Support Plummets For #C51 Thanks to VICE !! http://www.vice.com/en_ca/read/support-plummets-for-harpers-anti-terror-bill-new-poll-shows-263... #stopC51 #GPC

RobynUrback

Trudeau has the chance to brand Liberals as the party for "freedom." Support for C-51 is standing in the way <http://natpo.st/1EZRTKc>

CdnPress_Ott

CSIS helped government prepare for expected Northern Gateway protests <http://bit.ly/1CqaQnn> #cdnpoli

CdnPress_Ott

Terror bill provisions would have stifled Quebec's student protests: ex-leader <http://bit.ly/1xc4GXr> #cdnpoli

OpenMedia_ca

NSA, CSE tracking RBC, Rogers communications traffic <http://ow.ly/Ks0ng> #spying

OpenMedia_ca

According to law expert @cforcese secret police #BillC51 could drastically undermine our freedom <http://ow.ly/KsBPY>

TheHillTimes

Finance Cmttee to study terrorism when House returns, Tories 'beating drum' on issue in every forum: lawyer <http://bit.ly/1O3JiZA> #cdnpoli

citytammie

VIA TERROR TRIAL: jury question "important and difficult" according to judge. It is 2 pages long and looks to clarify element of intention

citytammie

Editing of jury question may take some time, so judge has ordered jury stop deliberating for the night #viatrial

TheTorontoSun

Man accused of plotting to bomb U.S. Consulate in Toronto likely to be deported within 6 months, his lawyer says. <http://bit.ly/1FxG24J>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Safety_Canada

RT @DHSgov Today, the U.S. and Canada enhanced our preclearance agreement, helping make trade & travel more efficient & secure

Safety_Canada

RT @bcchamberofcom The BC Chamber applauds @Safety_Canada announcement on Canada-US #preclearance agrmt; <http://ow.ly/KpgaH>

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

globeandmail

Child exploitation a pervasive threat for fast-growing chat apps <http://trib.al/gEAluAK> #cdntech

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RadioCanadaInfo

Des armes à feu pour se protéger en milieu rural? <http://rc.ca/90IGZI>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

CBCCanada

Omar Khadr bail application violates U.S. plea deal, Ottawa says <http://ft.tt/1BQX5gY>

Lactualite

#Ottawa présente ses arguments pour s'opposer à la libération d'Omar Khadr #polcan <http://bit.ly/1bdSFa9>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

APTNNews

Tyendinaga Mohawk youth 'shutting down the highway of tears' - APTN National News <http://fb.me/79wcWAzns>

INTERNATIONAL

GlobalNational

U.S. Air Force vet accused of planning to join #ISIS in #Syria <http://gln.ca/Kss5N>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca.*

Today's News / Actualités
March 23, 2015 / le 23 mars, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Le NPD veut faire témoigner trois ministres québécois

Le NPD veut faire témoigner en comité parlementaire trois ministres du Québec qui ont soulevé des inquiétudes sur le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51. L'opposition officielle à Ottawa déposera une motion en ce sens durant la séance du comité, qui se réunit lundi soir, pour poursuivre l'étude du projet de loi. Dans une lettre transmise à leurs homologues fédéraux la semaine dernière, les ministres Stéphanie Vallée (Justice), Lise Thériault (Sécurité publique) et Jean-Marc Fournier (Affaires intergouvernementales canadiennes) ont fait part des nombreuses préoccupations que soulève C-51 au Québec. Ils ont reproché au gouvernement Harper d'avoir agi de façon unilatérale dans ce dossier et dit s'inquiéter particulièrement des nouveaux pouvoirs que C-51 accordera au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), «y compris la possibilité de poser des actes qui seraient contraires à la Charte des droits et libertés et aux règles du droit canadien». Les trois ministres du gouvernement Couillard demandaient ainsi à ce que des correctifs soient apportés pour s'assurer du respect des droits fondamentaux des Québécois. Ils invitaient Ottawa à mettre en place des mécanismes de surveillance et de contrôle pour mieux encadrer ces nouveaux pouvoirs. (...) La semaine dernière, le ministre fédérale de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, qui pilote le projet de loi C-51, avait réagi aux critiques formulées par les trois ministres québécois. «Le ministre se réjouit de l'appui du gouvernement québécois pour de nouvelles mesures visant à assurer la sécurité du public contre l'extrémisme violent», avait écrit son porte-parole, Jean-Christophe de Le Rue. Le Journal de Quebec

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reported on a group of alleged radicalized medical students, including one Canadian, who have travelled to Syria to work in ISIS-controlled hospitals. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney was mentioned during this segment. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Canadian National Railway's derailment numbers soared 73% before recent crashes

Canadian National Railway's safety record deteriorated sharply in 2014, reversing years of improvements, as accidents in Canada blamed on poor track conditions hit their highest level in more than five years, a Reuters analysis has found. Canada's Transportation Safety Board (TSB) said on Tuesday that track failure may have played a role in CN's three recent Ontario accidents, which have fuelled calls for tougher regulation. The agency said oil unit trains, made up entirely of tank cars, could make tracks more susceptible to failure. Reuters (National Post)

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Des citoyens font circuler une pétition en faveur d'une enquête publique sur la catastrophe de Lac-Mégantic. On veut savoir pourquoi les systèmes de sécurité ont failli. Aujourd'hui, un comité permanent et les élus se rencontrent. Ils vont décider s'ils appuient cette pétition. (RDI, 9h41 ET)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

No reason to criticize Bill C-51: Kramp

Prince Edward-Hastings Member of Parliament Daryl Kramp says Canadians have nothing to worry about Bill C-51, the proposed legislation that has been described as Canada's "anti-terrorism" bill. The bill was the subject of a nation-wide protest on March 14, with demonstrators picketing outside Conservative MPs' offices—including Kramp's Belleville office—arguing the bill will cause a police state and could make even peaceful demonstrations illegal. But in an interview from his Parliamentary Hill office on Monday, March 23, Kramp said the criticism from protesters isn't warranted. "Most of their information is dead wrong," he said. "They're quoting rumours and they're quoting mistruths." Kramp is directly involved with the bill as he's the chair of Canada's Public Safety and National Security Committee, which is in the process of writing it. More witnesses are expected to speak to the committee this week before the bill is tabled in the House of Commons. Inside Belleville

C-51 hearings: Topless protester dragged from House of Commons

An unidentified woman seated in the House of Commons gallery managed to put the government's proposed anti-terror legislation back in the parliamentary spotlight, albeit briefly, when she interrupted the proceedings to raise her voice — and bare her breasts — to protest the bill. "Seconds ago, tattooed, bare-breasted young #C51 protester in #HoC grabbed and removed by security," Liberal MP Joyce Murray tweeted moments after the interruption took place. "Wow!" added New Democrat MP Peggy Nash, also via Twitter. "[A] #StopC51 protester just flashed the #HoC from the spectators' gallery shouting No C51 and interrupting a speech on Viet Nam," Nash wrote. The demonstration came as MPs were debating a Senate-initiated private members' bill to create a "journey to freedom day" to mark the exodus of refugees from Vietnam. The House public safety committee is set to resume its review of the bill during a two-hour session this evening. CBC News; Le Journal de Montreal; Global News

Bill C-51 protects all Canadians, doesn't threaten your freedom

An opinion piece states, "The international jihadist movement has declared war on Canada. Canadians are being targeted simply because these terrorists hate our society and the values it represents. Jihadi terrorism is not a human right; it is an act of war. The CSIS Act has not changed significantly since 1984, but the threats facing Canada have grown and become more complex. The interconnected phenomena of global terrorism, home grown terrorism and terrorist travel illustrate how the threats to Canada's security have evolved. That is why our government has put forward measures that protect Canadians against jihadi terrorists who seek to destroy the very principles that make Canada the best country in the world to live. Through Bill C-51, the government is taking additional action to ensure our law enforcement and national security agencies can counter those who advocate terrorism, prevent terrorist travel and the efforts of those who seek to use Canada as a recruiting ground and disrupt planned attacks on Canadian soil." York Region

Expert raises concern about anti-terrorism bill, C-51

An expert on Internet governance is warning policy-makers to carefully consider the range and scope of new security powers aimed at patrolling the illegal underbelly of the World Wide Web. Eric Jardine, a research fellow at the Centre for International Governance Innovation, says an increasing number of criminals are moving away from the top-level Internet most people use every day and shifting toward the more anonymous Dark Web. His comments come as the federal government is considering a new anti-terror bill, C-51. Technology and government policies have not kept pace with the shift, meaning as legislation is developed to better police the web, it is average citizens, not criminals, who are most likely to lose civil liberties. "Over-policing that top level (of the Internet) will only end up impinging upon individuals' rights without causing a real reduction in the occurrence of crime," said Jardine. Terrorists, drug and weapons dealers, child abusers and other criminals use the Dark Web to help co-ordinate their activities anonymously online. It is also used by repressed citizens, such as those living in Syria or China. The more anonymous nature of the Dark Web allows political dissidents in those countries to communicate with the outside world and share information. The new anti-terror bill would expand the powers of Canada's spy agency, known as CSIS. The bill has been criticized for a lack of oversight while giving CSIS too much power. Others have criticized it for the potential of targeting non-terrorism related activities, such as pipeline protests or land use disputes. The Record

Moore announces $75M in drone tech funding

In a bid to catch up in the fast-growing drone market, Industry Minister James Moore has announced $75 million in funding for Canadian tech firm L3-WESCAM to create the "next generations" of surveillance and targeting drones. The funding will disperse over five years and will lead to partnerships between L3-WESCAM and over 60 suppliers in Ontario. The announcement was made this morning in Burlington, Ont., at L3-WESCAM headquarters, where Moore highlighted past uses of WESCAM's cameras, saying "this technology has proven itself to be absolutely critical in responding to the realities of surveillance and search and rescue operations". As Canada's largest "manufacturing defence and security company", WESCAM's tech has been used in missions in Afghanistan and Iraq, in the 2014 search for the gunman who shot down three RCMP officers in Moncton and in security operations on the Canada/U.S. border. With the additional funding, WESCAM will invest $2 million in universities and colleges for training in future security and defence tech positions. iPolitics; CTV News; QMI Agency (Kingston Whig Standard, London Free Press, Sault Star, Cornwall Standard, Canoe, Toronto Sun, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun); CBC News

Customs asked where he'd been: 'I was in Iraq. Fighting ISIS with the Kurds'

Dillon Hillier can't help but laugh at the reaction as he surrendered his passport at Toronto's Pearson Airport, the dust of the world's most watched conflict still fresh on his boots. "Where did you go? What did you do?" came the Canadian customs query in the usual bored monotone. "I was in Iraq. Fighting ISIS with the Kurds," answered the bluntly truthful Hillier, 26, a former Canadian soldier with an unusual taste — quite obviously — for action. "Uh-huh," said the customs officer, who then went for the jugular. "Did you bring any cigarettes or alcohol back with you?" Okaaaay then. Welcome home, volunteer soldier. Just like that, Hillier was in — and in the air again, flying to the family home outside Ottawa. Later, two Canadian intelligence officials arrived at the door, less concerned about smokes and booze. A full debriefing followed, with Hillier spilling the beans, telling the full how/what/why of a journey into war with Islamic State radicals. Six weeks later, Hillier, son of Carleton Place MPP Randy Hillier, is licking his wounds in a west end bar. The scars are not from his two-month odyssey in Erbil province, but from the wide range of brickbats and bouquets that greeted his return. A hero to many, misguided to others. An outright idiot, to the most critical few. Mostly, he says, the reaction has been positive. A case in point: he's a first-time Torontonian, thanks to an offer he couldn't refuse from a Toronto investment firm whose name he wants to keep private. "They said, 'We need risk-takers. You appear to be an interesting risk-taker.' They're training me from scratch. I'll be wearing suits for the first time in my life. It's a different kind of challenge. But an exciting one," said Hillier, a retired corporal who served five years with the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, including deployment to Afghanistan. The Record

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News' The National reported on growing opposition to Bill C-51 and testimonies set to take place this week during the Commons public safety committee hearings. Rough Transcript

CBC News reported on Canada's electronic spy agency and its cyber warfare capabilities and how those powers may expand if Bill C-51 is passed. Rough Transcript

CBC News interviewed a security expert regarding the Communications Security Establishment's cyber warfare capabilities and how those powers may expand if Bill C-51 is passed. Rough Transcript

CBC News reports the House of Commons debate on Bill C-51 was suspended for a few minutes while security escorted a woman away. She was protesting topless from the gallery. Rough transcript

CBC News provides live coverage of Industry Minister James Moore announcing at L-3 WESCAM headquarters in Burlington, an investment in that will support its R&D of new high-tech air, land and sea surveillance cameras and sensors that are essential to Canada's defence, security, and search and rescue operations. It's the new generation of drones that according to the Industry Minister could help fight terrorism in this country and internationally. Rough transcript

CTV News reports that a Canadian medical student is with a group of people suspected of crossing into Syria to join ISIS. A Turkish MP and the father of the Canadian student believe he crossed into Syria. The student is believed to be 21 or 22 years old from Toronto. Rough transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A new report released by Canada's Border Services Agency says officers at small, remote crossings are facing safety hazards. It shows radon gas, pests, poor heating and drinking water and proper shelter at some posts. Lack of cameras also poses a threat to the general safety and security of officers. Another major concern is the proper maintenance of old buildings. The border agency plans to invest $99 million over five years to address these issues. It will also upgrade technology to help officers record more traveler information. (CBC News, 12h18 ET)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

The undercover war on your internet secrets: How online surveillance cracked our trust in the web
A black shrouded figure appears on the screen, looming over the rapt audience, talking about surveillance. But this is no Big Brother figure seeking obedience though, rather its opposite - perhaps even its nemesis. NSA contractor-turned-whistleblower Edward Snowden is explaining how his former employer and other intelligence agencies have worked to undermine privacy on the internet, and beyond. TechRepublic (Yahoo! News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Envelopes with unknown white powder sent to Senators' offices

The RCMP has been notified after envelopes containing an unknown white powder were received at two Senators' offices. The Senate Protective Service sent an email on Monday, notifying staff and senators that the envelopes and their contents have been secured. The return address on the envelopes is marked "Ottawa shooting." The mail services team has been advised to watch for other such envelopes, the Senate Protective Service said. Meanwhile, Senators and their staff have been asked not to open their mail unless it's from a confirmed source. None of the employees who came in contact with the envelopes are showing any signs of illness. CTV News

River Rock Casino revenue floated as stop-gap for social services

Richmond City Council is set to ratify a new spending plan for the money it makes from the River Rock Casino — but councillor Chak Au said the money could be better focused in a fund designed specifically to help social services in the city. Last year, the River Rock Casino generated $21 million for the city — up 19 per cent from the year before, and the casino's profits are showing no signs of slowing down. While most of the surplus revenue goes towards capital reserve accounts, paying down debt and funding RCMP officers, staff recommended establishing a Council Community Initiatives Account that would offer one-time initiatives to social, environmental, recreation and sports, heritage, arts and culture, safety and security and infrastructure projects. CBC News

Robert's Arm break-ins: Police believe they have their man

Police believe a 21-year-old man from Robert's Arm was responsible for multiple break, enter and thefts in the small community in Green Bay over the past year. Springdale RCMP said the man has been in police custody since he was arrested in South Brook on Thursday. Members of the community of 800 began banding together after a major spike in the number of home break-ins, with neighbours keeping watch on each other's properties and holding public meetings. The RCMP said the man, who has 11 charges against him — nine of which involve break and enters into houses and sheds in the community, got inside the properties by climbing through windows, forcing open doors and "manipulating locks." CBC news

David Mande Saulnier found dead at Yarmouth waterfront

RCMP have confirmed a body found Monday morning at the Yarmouth waterfront is that of David Mande Saulnier. The 64-year-old went missing last Tuesday after he left his home but did not return. Police say his body was found after it washed up on shore near the Yarmouth wharf. RCMP Sgt. Al LeBlanc says Saulnier's family is "very devastated." "The man was missing since last Tuesday and, of course, I'm certain that it was their hope that he would be found alive," LeBlanc says. An employee who works at the Yarmouth wharf made the discovery, according to RCMP Cpl. Stacey Gosling. CBC News; Chronicle Herald

Road rage video in Fredericton creates Facebook stir

A Fredericton man has apologized after a video of him in a road rage incident was shared widely on Facebook on Sunday evening. The road rage incident was captured on cellphone video by Iain MacDonald's son and posted to MacDonald's Facebook page on Sunday. It has been viewed more than 334,000 times on Facebook on Monday morning. MacDonald was driving on Priestman Street with his children when the angry driver approached their car after stopping in front of it. He then launched a tirade at MacDonald for cutting him off, something which MacDonald denies. "I pulled out with lots of room, I didn't cut this guy off or provoke him in any way," said MacDonald. MacDonald, who works at the CBC as a broadcast technologist, says five other people have contacted him to say they experienced similar incidents with a person who they believe was the same driver. He said he has been contacted by the Fredericton Police and the RCMP. CBC News

Men ages 25 - 34 more commonly killed in crashes over last 10 years

Provincial police say data compiled over the last 10 years suggests men aged 25 to 34 are the most common victims in the fatal collisions they investigate. OPP say they are releasing the figures in order to shed light on the victims and factors involved in more than 3,500 deaths on provincially patrolled roads between 2005 and 2014. Young adult males are the hardest hit, police say, with the 10-year data revealing that twice as many males (2,358) have died in collisions as females (1,146). Men aged 25 to 34 accounted for 397 of the deaths and of those, 310 of them were drivers and 60 were passengers. Drivers accounted for about 69 per cent of the deaths, while about 23 per cent of those killed were passengers and 7.7 per cent were pedestrians. Over the 10-year period, 856 people died in crashes in which lack of seat belt use was a factor in their deaths - 611 of them drivers and 245 passengers. And a total of 696 people died in collisions involving large commercial transport trucks, with 604 of those killed being occupants of the other vehicles involved. Among the 92 truck drivers who died, 70 of them were reported as not driving properly at the time of the collision. A total of 279 motorcyclists died during the 10 years, with 190 of them reported as not driving properly at the time. Hamilton Spectator

Inquest called into Lee Allan Bonneau's death

The Chief Coroner of Saskatchewan has called an inquest into the death of Lee Allan Bonneau, a six-year-old foster child killed by a 10-year-old boy who was also receiving child welfare services. The inquest is set to begin April 6 at Regina Court of Queen's Bench and is slated for two weeks. Bonneau was in the care of the Ministry of Social Services and living with his foster parents at the time of his Aug. 22, 2013 death. He was found badly injured on the Kahkewistahaw First Nation and later died of his injuries. At a news conference called at the time, RCMP indicated Bonneau had been beaten to death with a blunt object — possibly a stick — after coming into contact with a boy outside a bingo hall on the First Nation that evening. Leader-Post

Police watchdog investigating after Calgary officer shoots and critically injures 30-year-old man

Alberta's police watchdog is looking for witnesses after it says an officer shot and critically injured a 30-year-old man shortly after he appeared to taunt demonstrators at an anti-racism rally. The Alberta Serious Incident Response Team issued a news release saying the shooting happened "in an open, highly populated, busy downtown location on a Saturday morning." The agency is asking anyone who saw or heard anything unusual in the area, or saw any part of the incident, to contact them. Witnesses have told local media that the man walked up to the demonstration and shouted "white power." Canadian Press (National Post)

Thunder Bay Police investigate racist Facebook pages

Thunder Bay Police expect more information to be available Monday in the investigation into racist Facebook pages. In a media release Friday, police said they were in the preliminary stages of an investigation into racially charged comments posted on two pages. Police said remarks made on the pages are extremely offensive and include posts of pictures of people who appear to be Aboriginal. The pages appear to originate in Thunder Bay. Police said it was too early to determine if there is a criminal aspect to the pages, but said it's necessary to condemn this kind of activity and a collective stand must be taken. CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Nouvelle politique fédérale en santé mentale : l'accès aux soins des détenus compromis, selon un psychiatre

La nouvelle politique fédérale en santé mentale compromet l'accès aux soins des détenus. C'est ce que soutient un psychiatre de Moncton, le Dr Louis Thériault. Le gouvernement fédéral a annoncé la fermeture irrévocable du Centre de rétablissement Shepody, au pénitencier de Dorchester, au Nouveau-Brunswick, à compter du 1er avril 2015. « Ce sera le seul centre de traitement au Canada à passer sous le couperet du gouvernement Harper. On réduira le nombre de lits dans d'autres institutions, mais aucun autre centre de traitement ne sera fermé », raconte le Dr Thériault. « Le gouvernement fédéral actuel entame une transformation radicale des milieux carcéraux fédéraux. Dès 1935, la recherche démontrait que les sentences indéterminées ou encore les punitions cruelles n'avaient aucun impact sur le taux de récidive criminelle », soutient-il. Le Dr Thériault raconte qu'en 1960 on a mis en place des programmes éducatifs. On a commencé à ériger des centres de traitement pour les détenus souffrant de problèmes de santé mentale. En 1990, on a reconnu l'importance de traiter les prisonniers souffrant de maladie mentale et on a jugé qu'ils avaient autant de droits que les détenus souffrant de maux physiques. En 1994, le Nouveau-Brunswick s'est doté d'une loi avant-gardiste sur la santé mentale, loi qui donne accès à un traitement pour le patient affligé d'une maladie mentale dont les conséquences sur soi ou autrui pourraient être tragiques. Radio-Canada

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

U of S sex assault centre pitched

With the University of Saskatchewan facing scrutiny in its handling of sexual assault cases as recently as last year, an on-campus group has approached administration about the creation of a centre specifically tasked with addressing the issue. Called the Coalition Against Sexual Assault (CASA), the group is made up of both faculty and students, including members of the U of S Students' Union, women's centre and Graduate Students' Association. CASA has submitted a proposal to the university addressing what it feels is a need for greater education on sexual assault awareness, and outlining how a dedicated centre would help make this goal a reality. "We want the university to do more than write words on a page," said Liz Quinlan, assistant professor at the U of S and member of CASA. "That's not fundamentally going to make a bit of difference unless those policies are backed up with adequate resources so that the commitments expressed in those policies are translated into material change." The centre would be a prevention and response unit capable of administering trauma therapy, collecting forensic evidence and keeping records to accurately monitor sexual assault cases. Universities use different methods of tracking sexual assault, with the U of S relying on its Protective Services. Leader-Post

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

L'organisation Médecins sans frontières (MSF) dénonce la réaction de l'Organisation mondiale de la Santé et sa lenteur à répondre à l'épidémie d'Ébola qui a secoué l'ouest de l'Afrique. Alors qu'on souligne le premier anniversaire de la déclaration officielle de la maladie en Guinée, MSF publie un rapport qui fait état de ses actions pour contrer l'épidémie. (RDI, 9h32 ET)

INTERNATIONAL

NIL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

financialpost

Canadian National Railway's derailment numbers soared 73% before recent crashes <http://natpo.st/1Hs7uTL>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

KatieSimpsonCTV

Ambulance, fire, and lots of RCMP cars on the Hill re: white powder sent to 2 offices belonging to senators.

CTVNews

#BREAKING: White powder sent to senators offices, RCMP investigating unknown powder

CTVNewsVI

RT @CTVNews: #BREAKING: White powder sent to senators offices, RCMP investigating unknown powder

CBCNews

See the miniature town on the front line of digital terrorism <http://www.cbc.ca/news/world/1.3004797> ...

cbcsteve

CyberCity: Model town on front line of digital terrorism <http://www.cbc.ca/1.3004797>

cbcdaveseglins

CBC News: Canadian spies hacking into computers in Middle East, North Africa, Europe, Mexico <http://buff.ly/1LKDCF8>

cbcdaveseglins

From hacking to attacking, a look at Canada's cyberwarfare tools <http://fw.to/iHZGCFj>

ipoliticsca

Topless C-51 protestor in RCMP custody: Speaker's office | iPolitics bit.ly/19fv2fx #cdnpoli #C51

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBCNews

Canadian border agents at small posts said to face safety hazards <http://ift.tt/1DO2vvI>

MacleansMag

Safety hazards plague small, remote border posts, from a lack of heating to a lack of drinking water <http://www.macleans.ca/news/canada/safety-hazards-plague-small-border-posts-federal-evaluation-says/> ...

hscoffield

RT @CdnPress_Ott: Safety hazards plague small border posts, federal evaluation says bit.ly/1FtC7HB via @JimBronskill #cdnpoli

HuffPostCanada

Man killed by U.S. border agent was wanted for Alberta murder huff.to/1LOmazx

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

TimesTranscript

Judge chastises RCMP officer for 'wolf pack' comment: #NB ow.ly/KGxay

leaderpost

Inquest called into Lee Allan Bonneau's death <http://ow.ly/KGQhL>

leaderpost

Police watchdog investigating after Calgary officer shoots and critically injures 30-year-old man <http://ow.ly/KGkgS>

weathernetwork

A late, great submission to our #MakeThisPhotoMoreCanadian challenge. Thanks @jimpook! oak.ctx.ly/r/2oaoq

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

MartineB_RC

La nouvelle politique fédérale en santé mentale compromet l'accès aux soins des détenus. C'est ce que soutient un...
<http://fb.me/257jiSE7Y>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

metromontreal

Des opposants et des critiques du gvment rwandais qui habitent au Canada craignent pour leur sécurité -
<http://bit.ly/1G4Jnsz>

TheStarPhoenix

U of S sex assault centre pitched <http://www.thestarphoenix.com/news/assault+centre+pitched/10911795/story.html>
... #spnews #yxe

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
March 25, 2015 / le 25 mars, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Aboriginal Affairs won't fund life-saving airstrip in Saskatchewan

A Cree community in northern Saskatchewan without access to air ambulance service says people's lives have been lost or endangered while the federal and provincial governments squabble over jurisdiction. Six hundred kilometres northeast of Saskatoon, on the southern shore of Reindeer Lake, the community of Southend is home to 1,000 people. It doesn't have an airstrip that can accommodate an air ambulance, and the nearest hospital and doctor are located in La Ronge, a two- to three-hour drive on a winding gravel road. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Man arrested by RCMP over allegations he might commit terrorism

The RCMP have arrested a man after a peace bond was ordered against him based on allegations he might commit a terrorism offence. Police say Amir Raisolsadat was released on unspecified conditions and ordered to return to court on April 20. No other information about the man, including where he is from, was released by the RCMP, citing the fact there is an ongoing criminal investigation in the case. Radio station Toronto 680 News says the man was arrested in Prince Edward Island, but a spokeswoman for the Mounties in that province would not comment, referring questions about the case to RCMP national headquarters in Ottawa. "Due to the nature of the information laid, coupled with the fact that the investigation is currently underway, RCMP on Prince Edward Island will be referring all inquiries to national RCMP headquarters," said Sergeant Leanne Butler. The RCMP in Ottawa issued a news release on the arrest, but declined to answer any questions. The Globe and Mail (iPolitics)

Prince Edward Island RCMP make arrest on terror-related peace bond

Prince Edward Island RCMP have made an arrest under a section of the Criminal Code that is related to terrorism. RCMP said Amir Raisolsadat was arrested Tuesday under section 810.01 of the Criminal Code, which says police may pursue an application for an order to keep the peace if they have reasonable grounds to believe that a person may commit a terrorism-related offence. Police gave no specific details and made no mention of any charges pending against Raisolsadat, saying only that the man was released with conditions and would return to court on April 20. CBC News; Canoe (Le Journal de Montréal, Le Journal de Québec)

Ottawa police, CSIS conduct joint training exercise

Ottawa police and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) is conducting a joint training exercise in the east end near Ogilvie Road Wednesday morning between 10 a.m. and noon. "During the training exercise, nearby residents may see an enhanced police presence in the vicinity and at (CSIS HQ at 1941 Ogilvie Rd)," police said in news release. Police said there will be no public or media access to the simulation exercise. Ottawa Citizen; Metro News

Information privacy at threat by Bill C-51

Bill C-51, known as the anti-terrorism bill, has drawn criticism for provisions that many feel are excessive and open to abuse. One of these provisions allows government agencies to share information about Canadians for reasons of national security. Associate Professor Hasan Cavusoglu of the Management Information Systems Division at the UBC Sauder School of Business weighs in on the privacy risks for Canadians. UBC News

Bill C-51: First Nation chief worries 'lives will be lost'

A chief, who once went to jail for defending his First Nation's traditional territory during a mining dispute in northern Ontario, says he has grave concerns about Bill C-51. Kitchenuhmaykoosib Inninuwug Chief Donny Morris sent a letter to his MP, Natural Resources Greg Rickford, asking him to withdraw support for the proposed anti-terrorism law. Morris and six others from Kitchenuhmaykoosib went to jail in 2008 after peacefully protesting mining activity near Big Trout Lake, about 600 kilometres north of Thunder Bay, Ont. He's worried that under Bill C-51 the consequences for Indigenous activists will be much worse. "I take this to my heart," Morris said. "Because I know it will happen. It happened to us. We got sentenced. We got sent to jail, what's going to stop an officer from taking that next step." That next step, in Morris' mind, is First Nations people being shot by police during land-based disputes. CBC News

C-51 has sparked a much-needed conversation about security and rights

An opinion piece states, "The best thing that might come out of Bill C-51, the government's proposed new anti-terrorism legislation, will not be the bill itself, certainly not if it passes through the House of Commons and Senate un-amended. The best thing might be an affirmation that Canadians care about finding the right balance between security and democratic rights, including privacy rights. Achieving that balance is no easy matter, given the complexity and pace of change of security threats, and the modern Pandora's box of surveillance capabilities represented by what officials benignly define as the security "toolkit." High levels of official secrecy hamper the debate. Some 14 years after the Sept. 11 attacks and the original passage of Canada's first anti-terrorism legislation, we now are busy adding layers to what has become a dense legal foundation, compounding the problem of knowing whether our laws protect us or might imperil us. It is, simply, hard to know what security and intelligence agencies might need to meet threats, hard to know how newly-minted capabilities might actually be used in the future, and hard to know what their impact on rights and freedoms might actually be. Maybe the impact will be less than feared and the security-rights balance that we worked so hard to create after 9/11 will be fine. Maybe not. Because of the unknowns, there have been many calls for matching new powers with catch-up provisions for strengthened accountability. Concerns on this front have been expressed, in an unprecedented way, by four former prime ministers; Canada has even been called out by none other than Edward Snowden, the NSA whistleblower, as having one of the weakest intelligence oversight systems in the Western world. Strengthened accountability may well be our best bet to ensure that new security powers are balanced against rights protections." The Globe and Mail

Canada may go after groups linked to ISIL as part of mission in Iraq, Syria

The Harper government is leaving the door open to targeting groups affiliated with the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant as part of its expanded mission in the Middle East. Foreign Affairs Minister Rob Nicholson - who was supposed to have been joined by Defence Minister Jason Kenney - told a news conference today that Canada's fight is against ISIL. But asked specifically about going after other groups, he stuck to talking points about ISIL being the main target. "Our focus has been ISIL. We have been very clear from the start on that," Nicholson said. "We have had an outstanding record these past six months, a record we can be very, very proud of. Our commitment is to degrade ISIL. We have been very clear on that, and that will be the focus of our operations in the region." Nicholson spoke a day after Prime Minister Stephen Harper proposed to expand and extend Canada's war against ISIL to include air strikes on extremist positions in Syria. Canadian Press (iPolitics, The Gazette, Vancouver Observer); CTV News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News interviews the General Council of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association about Bill C-51. They are concerned about the excessive powers given to CSIS without accountability mechanisms. Rough transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Opération contre le travail illégal dans l'Est ontarien

L'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada mène en ce moment une opération dans une usine de St-Eugène, dans l'Est ontarien. Une quarantaine d'agents, appuyés par la Police provinciale de l'Ontario (PPO), ont visité la Ferme Skotidakis. L'opération s'inscrit dans une enquête portant sur une agence de placement de travailleurs de Montréal. Deux autres interventions similaires se sont d'ailleurs déroulées ce matin à Montréal et à Beloeil. « C'est dans le cadre d'une enquête sur du travail illégal, qui vise une agence de placement de Montréal et son propriétaire. L'ASFC a mené une opération de contrôle des travailleurs qui se trouvaient sur la ferme de St-Eugène », confirme le porte-parole de l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada (ASFC), Dominique McNeely. Radio-Canada.ca; Journal de Montréal.com (Journal de Québec)

Skotidakis dairy farm, Quebec businesses raided for potential illegal workers

Agents from Canada Border Services are conducting raids on the Skotidakis goat dairy farm in eastern Ontario and two other businesses in Quebec regarding potential illegal workers. The raids are linked to an investigation into a Montreal-based placement agency, according to Dominic McNeely, a spokesman with Canada Border Services Agency. McNeely said agents raided the Skotidakis farm in St-Eugene, Ont., as well as a business in Montreal and one in Beloeil, Que., which is just east of Montreal. He would not confirm any arrests or details about the raids. McNeely would not reveal any details about the two businesses. The CBC's Denis Babin reported that Ontario Provincial Police officers and officials from CBSA arrived at the Skotidakis farm, located on County Road 10 in St-Eugene, Ont., on Wednesday morning. McNeely also said 40 border officials were involved in the three raids. CBC.ca

Patrick Brazeau's lawyer attacks credibility of alleged sex assault victim

The defence in suspended senator Patrick Brazeau's assault and sexual assault case attacked the credibility of the main witness today in a Gatineau, Que., courtroom. A publication ban prevents the identification of the alleged victim, who testified yesterday that Brazeau struck her, grabbed her by the throat, pushed her down a flight of stairs and smashed her head against a wall. She also alleges Brazeau pulled down her pants and touched her inappropriately. Brazeau's attorney, Gerard Larocque, went after the complainant on a number of different fronts on Tuesday. He began with her arrival from Mexico in Montreal in 2008 with her two children. Although she is Colombian, she used fake Mexican passports to get on the plane to Canada. Upon arriving at Canadian customs, she presented the officer with both the Mexican and Colombian passports and claimed refugee status. All of the passports were returned to her in 2013 when she received permanent resident status. CBC.ca

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

CRTC fines PlentyOfFish

Canadian online dating website PlentyOfFish has paid a fine of $48,000 after regulators found the company violated its new anti-spam legislation. The CRTC says the fine was levied after complaints alleged PlentyOfFish Media Inc. sent emails that did not have a clearly labelled or easy-to-use unsubscribe option. The apparent violations happened between July 1 and Oct. 8 of last year. Canadian Press (Castanet.net)

Google lets any app use its malware-blocking tools

If you've ever been saved from visiting a virus-laden website by Chrome's malware-blocking technology, we have good news: You can expect to see this safeguard in other apps, too. Google has added tools for spotting "unwanted software" to its Safe Browsing developer kit, so any program can stop rogue web downloads. It'll take a while before you see this show up elsewhere, but don't be surprised if future apps with built-in web viewers are smart enough to raise a red flag. Engadget

China clamps down on sexual content on WeChat

China's Internet regulator issued on Wednesday new guidelines prohibiting sexual and vulgar content on Tencent Holdings Ltd's popular messaging app, the latest step in the agency's perennial campaign to clean up China's Internet. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Thousands of fentanyl pills among massive Edmonton drug bust

Five people were arrested after a drug bust in Edmonton that included nearly 2,000 fentanyl pills among the $545,000 worth of drugs seized by the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams. The bust is the first time in Edmonton that ALERT has seized fentanyl, which is a deadly synthetic drug that appears in the form of pills or powder. It is often referred to as 'greenies' on the street and is sometimes sold as OxyContin, because the pills look similar... The drugs seized include 1,841 fentanyl pills, 2.6 kilograms of cocaine, 1 kilogram of methamphetamine, and 468 grams of MDMA (Also known as Ecstasy or Molly). The value of the fentanyl alone, which was manufactured to look like oxycontin, is valued at $147,280. An alarming number of Albertans are dying from illicit use of fentanyl, according to information released last week by RCMP, AHS and the Chief Medical Examiner. Global News; CTV News; Edmonton Sun

Albert Bridge man to appear on drug trafficking charges

Police have charged an Albert Bridge man with drug trafficking charges after searching a residence on Brickyard Road. Members of the Cape Breton Regional Police Street Crime Unit and RCMP Drug Section executed a search warrant under the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act on March 24, seizing oxycodone and more than $18,000 cash. A 39-year-old male was arrested and released on a Promise to Appear in Sydney Provincial Court on Oct. 19, when he'll face a charge of possession for the purpose of trafficking in oxycodone. Police are also conducting a proceeds of crime investigation. Cape Breton Post

NL RCMP paying close attention to intersections this morning

Members of "B" Division Traffic Services will be conducting intersection enforcement patrols in various communities. The goal of this enforcement initiative the RCMP explained in a press release, will focus on both education and enforcement. Traffic Services members will be monitoring intersections to identify infractions of the Highway Traffic Act. These infractions will primarily include failing to stop at a stop sign and failing to yield. In addition, any other traffic offences (e.g. occupant not wearing a seatbelt) that are observed by officers will also be enforced. With the high snow banks and reduced visibility this time of year for motorists, intersections can be a very dangerous place, the police said. The RCMP is reminding motorists to ensure your vehicle has come to a full stop at stop signs and to ensure it is safe to proceed through an intersection. The Telegram

Halifax man accused of threatening police with chemicals to stand trial

A Halifax man accused of threatening police with dangerous chemicals has been committed to stand trial. Defence lawyer Mike Taylor waived the right to a preliminary inquiry for his client Christopher Phillips, who appeared briefly in Dartmouth provincial court on Wednesday and was remanded into custody. Phillips, who is charged with uttering threats and possession of a weapon for a dangerous purpose, is due in Nova Scotia Supreme Court on Thursday to set trial dates. He has elected to be tried by judge alone. Police have alleged that a cottage and a shed that the 42-year-old man owned in the Halifax area were filled with chemicals in various states of degradation. 680 News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Broadcast media report on a developing story in Prince Edward Island. The RCMP made a terror-related arrest, but the police force is not saying much about it at this time. The man was arrested last night after a peace bond was ordered. He has since been released on conditions, and is expected to appear in court on April 20th. The RCMP says it will make no further comment now because the case is before the courts. (680 News, 7h19 ET; CIWW-AM, 8h34 ET; CBC News, 6h13 ET; CHCH News, 7h32 ET; RDI, 10h04 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

« Omar Khadr n'est pas un danger pour le public » selon son avocat

La Cour du Banc de la Reine s'apprête à entendre pour une seconde journée la cause d'Omar Khadr pour sa remise en liberté provisoire. Omar Khadr, 28 ans, veut sortir de prison pendant qu'il fait appel des accusations de crimes de guerre pour lesquelles il a plaidé coupable devant un tribunal militaire américain en 2010. Selon son avocat Me Dennis Edney, il ne représente aucun risque pour la société. « Il a démontré qu'il est un étudiant sérieux, attentionné et dédié », explique-t-il. Le gouvernement fédéral n'est pas du même avis. Selon le procureur fédéral de la Couronne Bruce Hughson, puisque Omar Khadr a été accusé aux États-Unis une cour canadienne n'est pas autorisée à lui accorder une remise en liberté. Le procureur ajoute que comme le détenu a accepté d'être transféré au Canada pour purger sa peine, il ne peut pas être considéré comme d'autres prisonniers au pays. Radio-Canada

Lyle Howe's appeal of sex assault conviction begins today

Suspended Halifax lawyer Lyle Howe is back in court this morning as he appeals his conviction for sexual assault. Howe was sentenced last July 30 to three years in jail for sexually assaulting a 19-year-old woman in March 2011. He was convicted of the charge on May 31, 2014. Documents filed with the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal allege that Chief Justice Joseph Kennedy erred when he refused to instruct the jury in Howe's trial on considering the issue of honest but mistaken belief in consent. It claims doing that was important because the evidence had established an "air of reality to the fact that the complainant was not so incapacitated that she could not have initiated and consented to sexual activity." It also alleges Kennedy failed to adequately review the evidence -- including the testimony of Howe's friend, Jeff Brown, and expert toxicologists -- and inconsistencies between the woman's initial complaint to police and her later testimony. The appeal also says the judge "unfairly and improperly impugned an appellant's credibility" in front of the jury and undermined the position of the defence by asking inadmissible questions of a witness and denigrating his evidence. Chronicle-Herald

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Project speaks against violence in all forms

Every woman living in Campbell River has the right to live without violence. And April 12-18 is a time for the woman and men of Campbell River to step forward to change social attitudes, beliefs and behaviors that allow violence to continue. The NI Transition Society, Community Based Victim Services, Stopping the Violence Outreach Program along with the CR Women's Centre will be hosting the "clothesline project" at Spirit Square on Tuesday, April 14 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. They invite everyone to go down to view this powerful display. Courier Islander

Cindy Gladue case sends a chilling message to indigenous women

An opinion piece states, "The logic usually goes that if someone admits to injuring another person to the point that those injuries contribute to their death, the law will respond by convicting that person of a crime -- the crime of murder, or manslaughter, if intent to kill cannot be proven. Not so, it seems, for indigenous women like Cindy Gladue. Last week, a jury comprised solely of white men found Bradley Barton not guilty of Cindy Gladue's murder, despite evidence that he had caused the wound that led to her death. The details of the case are too traumatizing to recount in full, but you have to question what is considered justice if an 11 cm wound inside a woman's vagina that results in her bleeding to death is not evidence enough that a crime was committed. The details of the trial indicate how mechanisms within the justice system can be used to normalize violence against indigenous women. The violence they experience often seems to lie beyond the arms of the law: Violence with impunity; murder without fault. The illogics run deep, yet to indigenous women, they sound all too familiar." Globe and Mail

Valcourt used unreleased RCMP data to claim Aboriginal men responsible for majority of murders of Aboriginal women: Chiefs

Aboriginal Affairs Minister Bernard Valcourt said during a private meeting in Calgary last Friday that unreleased RCMP data shows Indigenous men were responsible for 70 per cent of murdered Indigenous women cases, according to two chiefs who were at the meeting. Valcourt met with Treaty 7 Grand Chief Charles Weaselhead, who chaired the meeting, Treaty 8 Grand Chief Steve Courtoreille, and Treaty 6

Grand Chief Bernice Martial last Friday in Calgary at the Delta Bow Valley Hotel. There were about 20 people in the room during the meeting including Lubicon Lake Band Chief Billy Joe Laboucan. Martial and Laboucan told APTN National News on Tuesday evening Valcourt said that according to the RCMP's statistics, Indigenous men were responsible for 70 per cent of the murders of Indigenous women. "He said that 70 per cent of the murdered and missing women is by Native men, that is what he stated right at that meeting," said Martial. "He said that yes," said Laboucan. "It was something that he quoted saying it was an RCMP investigation and that it was perpetuated by Native men, the deaths or the murders."

APTN

Winnipeg police officer who saw Tina Fontaine days before she died now suspended without pay

A Winnipeg police officer who came into contact with a missing teen days before her body was found in a river has been suspended without pay. Tina Fontaine, 15, was in a vehicle pulled over by two officers more than a week after she was reported missing last summer, but she was not taken into custody. Her body was found nine days later in a bag in the Red River. No arrests have been made in her death. Both officers were put on administrative leave in October. The force says the other officer will remain on administrative leave pending the outcome of disciplinary proceedings. Police have not said if their investigation determined whether the officers knew Tina's identity at the time, or whether they were aware she had been reported missing. Canadian Press (National Post, Huffington Post)

'Mean Tweets' video sheds light on gravity of cyberbullying in Calgary high schools

The harsh reality of cyber bullying is unveiled as Calgary students read real tweets on-camera for an anti-bullying video called "Teens Read Mean Tweets." "Why are you even alive? Kill yourself. You're a waste of DNA." This is a mild example of one the tweets read — more extreme posts contained profanity, racial slurs, and sexually violent content. All these tweets were sent by Calgary high school students. Aqurii Harvey, a Grade 12 student at Bishop McNally High School, said she chose to participate in the video because of her own experiences with bullying. With the prevalence of cyberbullying in high-school communities, Harvey said spreading awareness about the issue is critical. "I used to get teased a lot back home in Barbados, so I know what it's like," Harvey said. "The tweets were pretty harsh and some of them really hit home. But I think it's good to get the message out there." Fellow McNally student Joseph Suarez was also in the video, and said one of the scariest things about cyber bullying is the anonymity. Metro News (2015-03-24)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Indian Prime Minister to visit Canada in April: PMO

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi will visit Toronto, Ottawa, and Vancouver from April 14 to 16, the Prime Minister Stephen Harper's office announced Wednesday. The visit is Modi's first bilateral visit to Canada since taking office and the first by an Indian Prime Minister since 1973. According to the release from the PMO, discussions will focus on science and technology, innovation, education, security, counter-terrorism, and energy. "Canada and India enjoy a close friendship based on shared values of democracy, pluralism and a mutual interest in expanding trade," Prime Minister Harper said in the release. "India's growing economy presents enormous opportunities for Canada and I look forward to meeting with Prime Minister Modi to further strengthen bilateral relations and expand our trade and investment ties with a view to benefitting citizens of both countries." iPolitics

INTERNATIONAL

NIL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

DavidSweetMP

The first duty of government is the safety of its citizens @MinStevenBlaney bit.ly/1BqmoC0 #hamont #adfw

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBA News

We'll be live tweeting tonight's Bill #C51 appearance before #SECU. You can also watch it live here - <http://owl.li/KN3n2>. #cbaadvocacy

CBA News

RT @detaylor: So yeah, suffice to say, @CBA_News pretty much outlined all of the problems I have with #C51. Proud to be a member. #cdnpoli

@CBA_News

@detaylor Thanks for your feedback Duncan! We're glad represent your voice on Bill #C51! #cbaadvocacy

CBA News

MT @jbsohn: READ: .@CBA_News Submissions on Bill C-51 Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015 with Recommendations #C51 #cdnprivacy <http://www.cba.org/CBA/submissions/pdf/15-15-eng.pdf> ...

CBA News

MT @SimcoeNorthNDP: Giving #C51 testimony @ #SECU tonight: @hassan_yussuff @MackenzieInst @CBA_News @DrZuhdiJasser <http://is.gd/6rwqO7>

CBA News

MT @CBAAlberta: .@CBA_News releases full submission to gov't on #C51 <http://owl.li/KMleH> #cbaadvocacy

CBA News

Here's what we think about Bill #C51. <http://owl.li/KMleH> #cbaadvocacy

CadsiCanada

2/2 D. McConkey (Canadian Gas Association), F. Breau (Via Rail) + special guest DM Public Safety Canada François Guimont.

OttawaCitizen

Ottawa police, CSIS in joint training exercise near CSIS HQ from 10 a.m. to noon. <http://ow.ly/KMvGn> #ottnews tvouvelles

View translation La GRC arrête un homme soupçonné de complot terroriste <http://bit.ly/1OyPI8R>

globeandmail

Man arrested by RCMP over allegations he might commit terrorism trib.al/3MF0TDE

globalnews

Man arrested by RCMP on suspicion he may commit terrorism

JorgeBarrera

!?! RT @newstalk1010: RCMP make terror-related arrest in P.E.I. bit.ly/1brG7Mv

PEIGuardian

RCMP make terrorism arrest in P.E.I., according to Toronto radio station: The Mounties have arrested a man in ... bit.ly/1HDE4lu

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBCOttawa

Skotidakis dairy farm, Quebec businesses raided for potential illegal workers

<http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/ottawa/skotidakis-dairy-farm-quebec-businesses-raided-for-potential-illegal-workers-1.3008774?cmp=rss> ...

iciottgat

Opération contre le travail illégal dans l'Est ontarien <http://rc.ca/96S185>

denis_babin

A raid on Skotidakis Farm in St. Eugene, Eastern Ontario, is conducted by the CBSA. @CBCNews @CBCOttawa

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CdnHumanRights

News: Unreleased RCMP data used to claim Aboriginal men responsible for majority of murders of #Aboriginal women: aptn.ca/news/2015/03/2...

APTNews

Valcourt used unreleased RCMP data to claim Aboriginal men responsible for majority of murders of Aboriginal... fb.me/3FipalclM

APTNews

Is the RCMP withholding part of its report into #MMIW goo.gl/oEvGwF

GlobalEdmonton

Thousands of fentanyl pills among massive Edmonton drug bust: #YEG

RCMPFoundation

Today at noon ET #RCMPTalks to Canada's east coast about Bullying and Cyberbullying rcmp.ca/-Uod capebretonpost

Albert Bridge man to appear on drug trafficking charges <http://bit.ly/1HEH2mo>

CityNews

Halifax man accused of threatening police with chemicals to stand trial. <http://ow.ly/KMJYP>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

icialberta

« Omar Khadr n'est pas un danger pour le public » selon son avocat <http://rc.ca/96NMXN>

CBCNS

Happening now: Nova Scotia Court of Appeal to hear case of suspended lawyer #cbcns

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

GlobeDebate

The #CindyGladue case sends a chilling message to indigenous women, @thesarahhunt and @kwetoday write. #MMIW

TorontoStar

Winnipeg police officer suspended without pay in Tina Fontaine case #topstories

INTERNATIONAL

Reuters

Hollande, Merkel, Rajoy arrive in French Alps for international tribute to the 150 #Germanwings crash victims:
<http://reut.rs/1N81XIB>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
April 22 2015 / le 22 avril, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Nova Scotia burning restrictions begin

It may be raining in much of Nova Scotia Wednesday, but the day also marks the beginning of annual burning restrictions across the province. The restrictions mean campfires and domestic brush burning are not allowed between 8 a.m. and 2 p.m. daily. The Department of Natural Resources says domestic brush refers to burning on non-industrial lands, such as farms, woodlots and private properties. CBC News

Emergency crews respond to Peggys Cove after man falls in water

Emergency crews are responding to Peggys Cove, N.S. after receiving reports that a young man fell into the water. RCMP Cpl. Greg Church says witnesses at the Sou'Wester Restaurant saw the man fall off the rocks and into the water at 12:15 p.m. Police, fire crews and the Joint Rescue Coordination Centre are on scene, working to rescue the man. A Sea King has been dispatched from CFB Shearwater. Church says there are also reports of fishing boats heading to the area to assist. CTV Atlantic

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Authorities are watching New Brunswick's rivers as the province braces for more rain on top of the 25 millimetres that fell Tuesday. The province's Emergency Measures Organization said in its latest release that a state of local emergency remains in effect for areas at risk of flooding. (CTV News, 10h09 ET)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Harper Government Threat to Criminalize Criticism of Israel Generates Strong Opposition

A blog post states, "In recent years, Israel and its allies have become increasingly concerned about the growing international movement to expose and sanction Israel's behaviour. Their chosen response appears to be one designed to intimidate and suppress this opposition through the threat or actual use of legal punishments. Nowhere has Israel's call for help in this outrageous endeavor been more enthusiastically embraced than in the government of Stephen Harper, which is an unquestioning ally of the widely reviled Benjamin Netanyahu and his Likud party. In the face of growing efforts at intimidation by the Harper government, Independent Jewish Voices – Canada (IJV) decided to write a statement identifying the tangible threat to criminalize criticism of the state of Israel in this country. We reached out to civil society organizations across Québec and the rest of Canada, with the goal of finding broad public support in defense of our civil liberties, which are already under attack through the ominous Bill C-51." Rabble.ca

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Reporting on the federal budget, CBC News notes that when it comes to security, $290 million is set aside for the RCMP, CSIS, as well as CBSA, for counterterrorism measures. $36 million is budgeted to improve security on Parliament Hill. (CBC News, 10h06 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

FBI warns on airline hacking threat following tweet

The US Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has issued a formal alert telling airlines to be on the lookout for hackers. It follows an onboard tweet from security expert Chris Roberts, who joked about being able to hack into a United Airlines plane's wi-fi network. A terrorist could theoretically take over systems that fly a plane by compromising equipment at their seat. United Airlines has now banned Mr Roberts from all its flights. The FBI and the US Transportation Security Administration (TSA) said they had no information to support claims a plane's navigation system could be interfered via its onboard wi-fi kit, but added that they were evaluating the evidence. BBC News

Computer Attacks Spur Congress to Act on Cybersecurity Bill Years in the Making

Responding to a series of computer security breaches, the House is expected on Wednesday to pass a bill, years in the making, that would push private companies to share access to their computer networks and records with federal investigators. The vote will come after false starts and bitter disappointment for the Obama administration on cybersecurity legislation. The cybersecurity bill, similar to a measure approved overwhelmingly by the Senate Intelligence Committee, would be Congress's most aggressive response yet to a burst of computer attacks that helped sink a major motion picture release by Sony Pictures Entertainment, exposed the credit card numbers of tens of thousands of customers of Target stores and compromised the personal records of millions of people who did business with the health insurer Anthem. The House Intelligence Committee passed the bill unanimously last month. New York Times

FBI: Public officials at higher risk of cyberattack

The FBI is warning public officials that they are at an increased risk of cyberattack when their personal information is publicly available online. The Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3) issued an alert late Tuesday urging government leaders and law enforcement officials to beware of hackers that could use their visibility to launch attacks. The Hill

Why U.S. Grid Still Vulnerable to Cyber Attack

On Dec. 10, the Department of Homeland Security's Industrial Control Systems Cyber Emergency Response Team (ICS-CERT) released a troubling update about an ongoing, sophisticated malware campaign that had compromised "numerous" industrial control system environments inside utilities and companies in other sectors. Several organizations working with ICS-CERT identified the malware, known as BlackEnergy, on a variety of human-machine interface (HMI) products connected to the Internet. Electric utilities use HMIs to help monitor and operate the grid; they also act as a user interface to the industrial control systems that generate, transmit, and distribute electricity. Wall Street Journal

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Mother, 3 children under 9, slain in Tisdale, Sask

A mother and three children from Tisdale, Sask., were found slain and police say a suspect in the killings has also been found dead. Police made the grim discovery this morning in the northeast Saskatchewan town. The suspect's body was found in Prince Albert, the RCMP said Wednesday morning. A six-month-old baby was found with him. The baby appeared to be unharmed, CBC News; Canadian Press (Globe and Mail, CTV News); 620 CKRM; CKOM 650; Prince George Citizen

Constables honoured for their dedication and service

Recently, the Surrey RCMP and the City of Surrey held a special ceremony to honour the city's dedicated auxiliary constable volunteers. More than 60 auxiliary constables were recognized for their valuable contributions to community safety and crime reduction. Dignitaries and special guests were in attendance including senior officers of the Surrey RCMP, the Mayor of Surrey and city councillors. "The quality of our auxiliary constable Program and the difference these individuals make in our communities is immeasurable," said Surrey RCMP Officer in Charge Chief Superintendent Bill Fordy. "Auxiliary constables are a valuable presence to our officers on the road and to any crime prevention activities we are involved in." Surrey Leader

Murder charge laid in Mission trailer home fire

The man accused of murdering a Mission woman and attempting to kill her two children by setting their mobile home on fire made his first appearance in court on Monday. Walter Joseph Ramsay, 42, was arrested April 18 and charged with one count of first-degree murder, two counts of attempted murder and one count of arson, stemming from the tragic incident that occurred the day before. Just after 3 a.m. on April 17, Mission RCMP were called to Green Acres Mobile Home Park on Shook Road by Hatzic Lake after a trailer home went up in flames. Mission Record

Man arrested after shots fired in Lower Sackville

A 19-year-old man is in custody after shots were allegedly fired on Jennifer Court in Lower Sackville, N.S. early Wednesday. The RCMP say a man was seen running down the street and a car was spotted driving away shortly after the incident at 12:30 a.m. A man matching the suspect's description was arrested a short distance away from the scene. Police initially said the Bedford man was released without charges, but they later said he remains in custody. There is no word on charges at this time. Police are still investigating and are asking anyone with information to contact them. CTV News; Metro News; CBC News

Man charged after woman assaulted in northeastern N.B.

A 25-year-old man has been charged after a woman was allegedly assaulted at an apartment building in Lagaceville, N.B. The RCMP responded to the building around 3 a.m. Tuesday. They say a 25-year-old woman was taken to hospital with serious injuries. Two children under the age of six were also found in the apartment. They were not injured. Police determined a small fire had been set in the apartment before they arrived but neighbours managed to extinguish the flames. A man was arrested and taken into custody. CTV News

Arun Bains was not a gang member, family says of Surrey homicide victim

The family of Arun Bains — the first person killed in a recent spate of gun violence in Surrey believed to be linked to gangs — says he was not a criminal. "Arun was not a criminal. He was not a gang member. He was loved by everyone who knew him," the family said in an emailed statement. "This is an extraordinarily painful time. Arun was the heart of our family." The family described Bains as a "fine young man" who had a "bright future ahead of him." He was the nephew of MLA Harry Bains... The RCMP has not confirmed whether this latest shooting is connected to a recent escalation in violence between rival gangs of Somali and South Asian descent in the area, but they did say they believed this was a targeted shooting. Bains' family is urging anyone with information to contact the police immediately. "We are determined to support our community's efforts to end this violence and spare another family this pain." CBC News

Metrotown stabbing under investigation by Burnaby RCMP

Police in Burnaby, B.C., say a 36-year-old man was stabbed in the leg in an apparently random attack by one or two other men in the Metrotown Mall food court just after 6 p.m. PT, Tuesday. RCMP Staff Sgt. Major John Buis said the victim, who was taken to hospital with serious but not life-threatening injuries, is not co-operating with the investigation and may have mental health issues. Officers are now reviewing surveillance tape from the mall and interviewing witnesses, he said. "I know there were quite a few people in that food court area. We are interviewing those people and we are very thankful people did come to the assistance of this person," said Buis. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports the RCMP are investigating the death of a woman and three children in Tisdale, Saskatchewan. Rough transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Canada-wide warrant issued for federal inmate known to frequent London area

OPP have issued a Canada-wide warrant for a 25-year-old federal inmate who is known to frequent the London area. The Repeat Offender Parole Enforcement Squad is asking for the public's help finding the man. Police say the warrant was issued as result of his breach of parole. Damien Elijah is described as 5'9" tall and 194 pounds. He has a tattoo of the name "Dallas" on the right side of his neck, and a tattoo of the name "Elijah" on his left upper chest. He is serving a two-year sentence for assault with a weapon, use of a firearm while committing an indictable offence and assault cause bodily harm. CTV News, AM980, Blackburn News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Kelly Goforth celebrated on her birthday

It was a great day for a barbecue as bright spring sun warmed the cool breeze as it blew through Heritage Park on Tuesday. "It's a Kelly day," said Maxine Goforth. "It's a beautiful day for her." More than 100 men, women and children showed up to help the family celebrate what would have been Kelly Goforth's 23rd birthday. Cake, balloons and traditional hand-drum singing were part of the day's events. On Sept. 25,

2013, Goforth's body was discovered in an alley on the 1700 block of McAra Street a day after she was last seen. Clayton Bo Eichler is charged with first-degree murder in her death. (...) Goforth said it's not just about her daughter anymore. It's about raising awareness about missing and murdered indigenous women in Canada because there are so many families, like hers, who have been hurt by such a loss. She's especially proud of her son Ezekiel Bigknife who has taken up the challenge to raise awareness about the issue. Although he's only 15, Bigknife already knows what needs to happen and why. "I was passed down the flag for missing and murdered indigenous women so I have to put on four events by Feb. 14th of next year," he said. "It's a big responsibility. I didn't expect it, but I'm going to do it." Holding a flag bearing the name of his big sister, Bigknife said he wants to do his part to not only honour his sister, but all indigenous women. Leader-Post

Police target Toronto gang in country-wide human trafficking probe

Toronto police have arrested nine people and laid 61 charges in a multi-province investigation into an alleged human trafficking operation. One person is still wanted, with a warrant outstanding. From October 2014 to April 2015, the Sex Crimes Human Trafficking Enforcement Team were looking into a Toronto street gang called the Complex Crip Gangsters for what they believed to be a Canada-wide human trafficking network. Police called the investigation Project Guardian. Police say the accused would recruit women at dance clubs, schools and group homes and force them into sex work. They would also befriend women online, using Facebook and Instagram. The victims involved ranged in age from 15 to 33 and were from Nova Scotia, Ontario and Alberta. The girls and women were forced to work and turn over the money they earned, and if they did not make enough money, they would be physically beaten and threatened, police say. The police allege the women were being forced to service 10-15 clients a day. Police say they identified four alleged victims during their investigation. CBC News

Cyberbullying situation at ELSS

The Algoma District School Board (ADSB) advises parents in Elliot Lake that we are managing a cyberbullying situation at Elliot Lake Secondary School (ELSS). Under the direction of the Ontario Provincial Police (OPP), the school has taken precautionary measures to secure the building and the OPP are at the school directing school administration and staff on the situation and traffic in and out of the building. Classes are proceeding as normally scheduled. Director of Education, Lucia Reece, reminds parents that students' safety is always our first priority. We will continue to work in partnership with the OPP who will advise when the situation is resolved. We thank parents and the community of Elliot Lake for your patience, understanding and cooperation. Further updates and information will be shared through the local media. Elliot Lake Standard

York high school stands out as welcoming to Grade 9s

A collaborative initiative between staff and students at Archbishop Romero Catholic Secondary School is helping Grade 9 students feel welcome and safe in their first year of high school. And leading the initiative are the Grade 12 students in the religious education classes who developed, planned and implemented anti-bullying workshops with guidance from the school's child and youth workers. (...) This year, they specifically focused on the issue of cyber-bullying. Inside Toronto

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

It was standing-room only in a Surrey gym Tuesday for a forum held in response to escalating gun violence in the city that took a man's life over the weekend. The forum at Tamanawis Secondary School, hosted by the City of Surrey, the Surrey School District and multiple police agencies, saw hundreds of concerned parents, students, teachers, police, politicians and community leaders pack the gym. (CBC News, 12h20 ET)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

From Vietnam to ISIS: Canada needs to apologize

A blog post states, "Over a four-hour period, they "methodically slaughtered more than five hundred unarmed victims, killing some in ones and twos, others in small groups, and collecting many more in a drainage ditch... They faced no opposition. They even took a quiet break to eat lunch in the midst of the carnage. Along the way, they also raped women and young girls, mutilated the dead, systematically burned homes, and fouled the area's drinking water." It sounds like a terrorism story ripped from today's headlines about ISIS, the kind likely to inspire ritualized name-calling ("death cult ... barbaric cultural practices ... no value for human life") from Stephen Harper, Jason Kenney, and their locker-room gang of over-grown boys eagerly vying to be the first to post on Twitter about Canadian aerial attacks." Rabble.ca

INTERNATIONAL

ISIL takes body blows in Iraq - but affiliates are growing elsewhere

Even as the Islamic State takes body blows in Iraq from a U.S.-led coalition, the extremist group's arms are extending elsewhere around the world. Aided by slick propaganda videos, the group, headquartered in Syria, has attracted affiliates in Egypt, Libya, Nigeria and Afghanistan-plus recruits and lone-wolf terror plotters from Western locales as far apart as Minneapolis, France and Australia. Its signature theatrical brutality was on display in a video released Sunday that showed executions by beheadings and shootings of dozens of Christian and other captives by affiliates in Libya. In the videos, killers wore khaki fatigues, while the Christian beheading victims wore orange jumpsuits and the shooting victims wore black. Color coordinated outfits, choreography and editing for such Internet films are some of the tools the Islamic State provides affiliates to attract followers across the region, says William McCants, a terrorism analyst at the Brookings Institution. The group uses the videos "to send a message to potential adversaries and to scare citizens in areas they're hoping to conquer," McCants said. "They're also trying to attract people, a calling card for other rough men that would be interested in joining a group that celebrates that kind of violence." Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi is recovering from life threatening injuries sustained last month during an allied bombing attack, according to a report Tuesday in The Guardian of London. But the group's coordinated fighting shows it can operate without him. The Hamilton Spectator

Taliban announce plans to ramp up attacks in Afghanistan

The Afghan Taliban on Wednesday announced the start of its annual spring offensive, warning it would ramp up attacks on foreign embassies and government officials, as well as military targets, starting on Friday. The Islamist militant group has been fighting the Afghan government and its foreign backers since it was ousted from power by U.S.-backed Afghan forces in 2001. "If the foreign occupiers really want to relieve themselves from this nuisance of fighting, they should immediately withdraw," the Taliban said in a statement. The Taliban typically steps up its military efforts when warmer weather facilitates the transit of fighters and weapons. This year's offensive has been dubbed "Azam" or "Resolution", similar to the name chosen for the NATO-led coalition's two year "Resolute Support" mission that started in January. Reuters

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Police have arrested a man who was allegedly planning an imminent attack on churches in Paris. Officials say the 24-year-old is an Islamic extremist who had an arsenal of heavy weapons. (CTV News, 9h15, 10h18; CNN, 10h30 ET)

RDI ajoute qu'il aurait eu l'intention de partir pour la Syrie pour rejoindre les rangs djihadistes. L'homme d'origine algérienne est aussi soupçonné d'être impliqué dans le meurtre d'une jeune femme. (RDI, 10h44 ET)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Pastroptot

"Le budget va plaire aux Québécois, aux familles, aux aînés, aux entreprises" Steven Blaney >> ici.radio-canada.ca/emissions/c_es... pic.twitter.com/YsgRFEgLam

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

RickGrantCTV

A Halifax RCMP spokesman says witnesses at Sou Wester restaurant in Peggy's Cove saw a young man go off the rocks & into the water.

RickGrantCTV

RCMP say the man was seen going off the rocks & into the water at Peggy's Cove at 12:15. RCMP say Joint Rescue Co-ordination Ctr is involved

RickGrantCTV

RCMP Cpl Greg Church says Fire, Ambulance & Police responding. Church says there are reports of fishing boats headed to the area.

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Colinfreeze

@cbcamber has some fascinating ATIP docs re: Canadian surveillance agency CSE's reaction to Snowden WiFi YYZ leak. cbc.ca/1.3040816

Colinfreeze

CSE use of "Quova" databases explained pic.twitter.com/ws3zzX8Xc2

Colinfreeze

3/X) This point seemingly validates (the still-awesome) @NewmanRobinson analysis of the deck luxexumbra.blogspot.ca/2014/08/analyz... pic.twitter.com/i41FvJPZZY

Colinfreeze

4/X) In #22-#25 CSE seems resents reporting that it collected jointly with NSA. Says it got 300K IDs itself, dammit! pic.twitter.com/36HnhwttwJ

Colinfreeze

5/X) The CBC YYZ wifi scoop of 2014 prompted watchdog office — doing a "metadata review" for years — to ask new Qs.

Colinfreeze

6/X: When it comes to Big Data, CSE "CARE"S pic.twitter.com/0n9GE3J4Tl

Colinfreeze

7/X) Spy agencies fear blown methods. Issue here was disclosing how SigInt "seed" locales show "roamers' geohops"

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

natnewswatch

Unwilling dual citizens face 10-month wait to shed U.S. citizenship in Toronto globalnews.ca/news/1952125/u...

CTVNews

Potentially deadly sea-crossings worth risks, refugee claimant who arrived on MV Sun Sea says ow.ly/LYib4

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

KimberleyMolina

#RCMP priority crimes task force showcasing items seized from Markerville home incl. shells, plastic bottle drug pipe

nationalpost

Breaking: Five people — including three children under the age of 9 — found dead in Tisdale, Saskatchewan natpo.st/1buZ29e

CBCCanada

Mother, 3 children, slain in Tisdale, Sask. ift.tt/1yPTG2J

CBCSask

RCMP have not confirmed the identities of the victims or suspect. More details here: cbc.ca/1.3043863 #Tisdale

canoepolitics

RCMP says woman and 3 children murdered at a Tisdale, Sask., home. Male suspect found dead alongside uninjured baby cnews.canoe.com/CNEWS/Crime/20

CKNW

An anonymous bomb threat has forced the evacuation of Scott Creek Middle School in #Coquitlam. #RCMP say precautionary measures in place.

connie_walker

Fifty RCMP officers searching two Comox sites in relation to woman's 2013 disappearance shar.es/1p2to0 via @theprovince

dempsterCBC

Cocaine, heroin, ammunition, hand guns - all seized by RCMP at property near Markerville, Alberta last week. #CBC pic.twitter.com/4UgDqhRdJR

dempsterCBC

About 100 RCMP officers descended on this Markerville, AB property last wk. Found explosives, firearms + drugs.
#cbc pic.twitter.com/wwnMRYKSqg

dempsterCBC

Along with drugs + guns, RCMP also seized stolen vehicles, including a Mercedes, from Markerville property. #cbc pic.twitter.com/X0YSpd1zVt

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

ChiefPinnell

Paul Charkavi from Corrections Canada discussing Electronic monitoring of Offenders in Ontario at #OACPBOD Mtg.

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

dauidakin

#NewsNOW in Ottawa: Employment Min @PierrePoilievre announces funding for the Ottawa Police Service.

INTERNATIONAL

Reuters

Taliban says it plans to ramp up attacks on foreign embassies and government officials: reut.rs/1IHSv5J pic.twitter.com/mfVHIAeseU

cnnbrk

Man arrested in France in alleged church attack plot was directed by someone in Syria, prosecutor says.
cnn.it/1zL5DBR

mashable

Drone carrying bottle of radioactive material lands on Japanese prime minister's office on.mash.to/1Esb146 pic.twitter.com/tEZdZqsDDJ

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
May 6, 2015 / le 6 mai 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Supreme Court ruling hobbles pursuit of child predators, police say

Police officers assigned to fight child pornography say a Supreme Court of Canada decision is hobbling their ability to track down internet pedophiles and child sexual abusers. In a Charter of Rights and Freedoms case last June, the high court abruptly ended the ability of police to informally request subscriber information from internet service providers (ISPs), saying officers must first obtain a production order or warrant from a judge. The ruling immediately ended all so-called law enforcement requests to ISPs such as Rogers, Shaw and Bell, replacing them in part with time-consuming paperwork that has sharply reduced the number of cases that can be pursued by police. An internal document shows there were 1,038 such informal requests sent to ISPs in 2013 by the National Child Exploitation Co-ordination Centre, an RCMP-run agency in Ottawa that acts as a hub for police forces in Canada fighting internet-based child sexual abuse. And in the half-year until the Supreme Court decision on June 13 last year, known as R. vs. Spencer, the centre had already filed 726 such informal requests, a 50 per cent increase in caseloads to that point. But after that date, there are none. The RCMP now are limited to filing "jurisdictional requests," which simply ask an ISP for the city and province of a suspect IP address and whether the company will be retaining the subscriber's full information record for at least 60 days. Previously, full details of the identity of the subscriber were turned over to police. (...) The Supreme Court ruling suggested the government could pass a "reasonable" law to allow police to obtain basic subscriber information from ISPs, but a spokesman for Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney indicated that is not yet in the works. "Our government is currently reviewing the decision," said Jeremy Laurin. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports on how a Supreme Court decision from last June has slowed down or stopped investigations into child pornography by the RCMP. A spokesperson for the Public Safety Minister's office is mentioned. Rough transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Forest fire hazard level elevated

Ontario's Ministry of Natural Resources has upgraded the forest fire hazard level for this region. Officials with the MNR say this region is now listed as high to extreme for forest fire conditions. This elevated status comes following five new confirmed fires in the Northwest Region. Most of the new fires are located in the Dryden and Kenora area. TB News Watch

Flooding forces Sask. R.M. to close bridge between Quill lakes

Flooding in east-central Saskatchewan has forced a rural municipality to close a bridge. Grid 640 in the R.M. of Lakeside, which allows motorists a passage between Big Quill and Little Quill Lakes, closed Tuesday afternoon. According to the Saskatchewan Water Security Agency, the lakes are at a record high of 520.64 meters – up nearly 16 inches from the summer of 2014. Kerry Holderness, a councillor with the R.M., said water has risen to dangerous levels, threatening the safety of the bridge on the 640, forcing the municipality to shut it down. "The road is still firm in centre although the sides are eroding with each east or west wind. The bridge is the most at risk," said Holderness. "There has been daily erosion on the abutments at each end on the west side, and today's east wind has eroded the southeast corner. Any windstorm at anytime day or night can remove the remainder of the travel surface." Global News

Ontario overdue for next 'big one' tornado, but don't panic

A generation has grown up with very little exposure to deadly tornadoes in southern and central Ontario, but it shouldn't deter anyone from being prepared for the next 'big one' when it arrives. In a weather preparedness seminar in Hamilton, Ont., Environment Canada's Geoff Coulson reminded the audience of the history of severe weather in Ontario and warned that awareness of the next 'big one' in southern Ontario remains paramount to limiting its destructiveness. "On May 31, 1985 there were 13 tornadoes across southwest and south-central Ontario, two of those events were rated as F4 events," Coulson said. "We have not seen the like in terms of an event that intense since that time and we feel that we are, in fact, overdue for a tornado of that intensity in Ontario. "We're using this group as a way to spread the word from here," Coulson added. "We're having key decision-makers in the crowd... and they'll pass the word along." The Weather Network

Mount Polley spill changing local ecosystem, new report says

It has been more than nine months since the Mount Polley copper and gold tailings pond spilled sending millions of cubic meters of hard metals into nearby lakes and creeks.. Now a new report has found that environmental disaster has led to major changes in the local ecosystem. The study done by researchers from the University of Northern British Columbia, analyzed samples taken two months after the spill. Quesnel Lake rose by nearly 10 centimetres in that time while the temperature in the lake increase by up 2.5 degrees Celsius. Sediment levels were also higher after the spill. But the main concern is how the spill will affect future generations of salmon that spawn in the affected bodies of water. Last fall, more than 800 salmon spawned in the area which is a promising sign. Experts are still keeping track of younger generations, however, worried that the prolonged exposure will start to show complications down the road. More research is required before the extent of the damage due to the spill is understood. The Weather Network

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Amid Concerns, Canada Set to Pass 'Disturbing' Anti-Terror Law

The Conservative government under Prime Minister Stephen Harper is poised to pass anti-terror legislation Wednesday, despite overwhelming concerns about civil liberties from rights organizations, lawyers, and the public in general. The legislation, known as bill C-51, has been nearly universally panned for being too far-reaching in scope. As part of Canada's legislative process, a bill must go through a committee where the government and opposition legislators analyze the bill and propose amendments. However, Michael Geist, a law professor at the University of Ottawa who has been vocal about his opposition to bill C-51, said that "the government treated the committee process as theater." The Canadian Bar Association also came out strongly against the bill, saying, it puts "the entire Charter into jeopardy, undermines the rule of law, and goes against the fundamental role of judges as the protectors of Canada's constitutional rights," in reference to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which enshrines civil rights in the country. Former NSA contractor and whistle blower Edward Snowden also warned Canadians of the dangers of the anti-terrorism legislation, saying that the proposed legislation would create a "secret police" force. The criticism was echoed in an editorial by the right-wing Globe and Mail, who said Stephen Harper "wants to turn our domestic spy agency into something that looks disturbingly like a secret police force." Social organizations and activists also warned that the legislation could infringe on the right of Canadians to protest peacefully. Indigenous people in particular are concerned that the bill will target actions taken by them to protect their territories from unwanted resource exploitation. Telesur

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Teenage victims of online exploitation sought by RCMP

A 24-year-old Moncton man may have victimized as many as 2,000 teenage boys around the world and is facing several sex-related charges. RCMP investigators say the man was luring boys online by pretending to be a teenaged girl. The man would contact boys online using a video of a teenaged girl who appeared to be live and convinced the boys to undress and initiate sex acts, which were then taped and distributed over the internet. The website Omegle.com, which doesn't require a username, was one site that was used frequently. The man's identity cannot be revealed because of a court-ordered publication ban. The sexual exploitation took place from at last January 2012 until the fall of 2014. The victims are believe to be as young as 10 and up to 16 years of age and some of them may not even be aware they have been victimized, stated the RCMP in a release. The RCMP's child exploitation unit is seeking the public's help to identify victims, Investigators say there could be as many as 2,000 victims living in Canada, the United States, United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Australia, Russia and possibly elsewhere. CBC.ca; Kelowna Now

RCMP seize cash, drugs in Charlottetown raid

P.E.I. RCMP officers seized marijuana, oxycodone pills and more than $170,000 in cash from a home in Charlottetown last month. The RCMP confirmed a 32-year-old man and a 34-year-old woman were arrested and released pending charges related to the seizure from a home on Mulberry Avenue. Members of the RCMP federal investigation unit searched the home and seized more than $170,000 in cash along with 38 pounds of marijuana, 1.5 pounds of hashish and more than 500 oxycodone pills.

Charlottetown Guardian

St. Albert RCMP honoured at awards

The changes Geoffrey McKay makes in people's lives are said to be priceless. That's not hard to believe, said Kate Quinn, executive director with CEASE, the Edmonton Centre to End All Sexual Exploitation. She recently sorted through 11 letters nominating McKay for a Man of Honour award. The award was presented to him by the organization on May 1. It's a character award, given to men who demonstrate compassion and understanding, and develop healthy relationships and positive opportunities in their community, she said. "So when you have a man who has been nominated by 11 people from his community, how could you say no," she said. "He obviously has touched people in so many ways." McKay spent 25 years as an RCMP officer and has continued to work as a reservist with the RCMP in St. Albert since his retirement. He has helped a countless number of people turn their lives around and is frequently stopped in public by the many he has helped, his nomination letter stated. He is also a school resource officer and works to raise awareness on the dangers of illegal drugs, and the consequences of making poor choices. "He is a compassionate man who treats people with dignity and respect," stated Cpl. Laurel Kading in a letter. St. Albert Gazette

Démantèlement du réseau de trafiquants de cocaïne à Laval : saisie de plus de 3 M $

Six individus appréhendés et plus de 3 M $ de valeurs récupérées par les policiers lors de l'importante frappe policière menée, jeudi dernier, dans Chomedey et dans les Laurentides. Tel est le bilan livré aujourd'hui, mercredi 6 mai, par le Service de police de Laval. Trois membres de la famille Bigras, André, Michel et Danièle, ainsi que leurs complices Philippe Ouellette et Guy Roy demeurent détenus depuis la frappe et seront de retour devant la justice le 12 mai prochain. Ils ont comparu une première fois vendredi dernier, 1er mai, où ils ont été accusés d'une kyrielle de chefs. Un autre individu, Sylvain Monette, subit son enquête pro-format aujourd'hui. Les perquisitions ont été nombreuses pour le Service de police de Laval accompagné par la Sûreté du Québec, la Gendarmerie royale du Canada et la Police provinciale de l'Ontario tout au long de l'opération qui s'est terminée aux petites heures dans la nuit de jeudi à vendredi dernier. Outre à Laval, les policiers ont mené des saisies à Lac-des-Écorces et Lac-du-Cerf dans les Hautes-Laurentides. L'Écho de Laval

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports on the need for RCMP sexual assault kits to be updated. Rough transcript

CBC News reports on an international child porn investigation by York Regional Police. Police forces make 41 arrests on more than 100 charges. Victims and suspects identified around the world. Project Hydra could uncover thousands more victims. Rough transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Omar Khadr poses 'low-moderate' risk to commit future crimes: psychological report

A recent psychological assessment of convicted war criminal Omar Khadr obtained by CBC News, found the young man poses a "low-moderate" risk to commit future violent crimes – as long as he stays away from "individuals or organizations involved in extremist or terrorist activities." Entered as evidence at Khadr's bail hearing in Edmonton Tuesday, the assessment portrays Khadr as a good prisoner who stayed out of trouble, followed his "correctional plan," and accepts what he did. "It is unlikely that Mr. Khadr will engage in generally violent behaviour (e.g. robbery, bar fights, etc.)," a prison psychologist at Bowden Institution in central Alberta wrote in a report dated April 9. "However, should he associate with members of any extremist or terrorist organization, his risk for committing violence or aiding and abetting acts of violence (eg. in the form of terrorist activities) would escalate significantly," the assessment states. "As such, the availability of strong positive community supports takes on extra import." CBC News

Inside the mind of Omar Khadr

Omar Khadr told a prison psychologist that he takes full responsibility for the grenade attack that killed a U.S. soldier in 2002, that he renounces the violent al-Qaeda ideology embraced by his late father, and that he's anxious for fellow Canadians to "get a chance to know the new me." He also said he blames himself for the 13 years he's languished behind bars—"I got myself into this s—," he said—but holds out hope people will judge him on the man he is today, not the naïve, uneducated teenager he was. "I've screwed up in the past and I'm worried it will haunt me," Khadr told the psychologist, Nhan Lau, during a lengthy interview on Feb. 20. "People will think I'm the same person as I was 12 or 13 years ago. ... However, if I carry myself with dignity and respect, people will respect me." Filed in the Alberta Court of Appeal as part of Khadr's much-publicized bail application, the psychologist's report provides the clearest glimpse yet of his current mindset—one day before the province's high court will decide if the former Guantanamo Bay inmate, now 28, should be set free with conditions. "I can't afford to be bitter," he said. "I did something bad and I'm here for a reason. The only way to survive is to have hope." Maclean's

Family's tale of murder's impact a familiar story for Muskoka resident

It was a chilling story that resonated with Leeana Kingmill. After she read the story in last week's newspaper regarding a former NHL star warning the Gravenhurst community that a convicted murderer could be walking their streets, the long-time Muskoka resident was immediately struck with a sobering thought. "They're not listening to him," she said after reading this newspaper's interview with Don Edwards regarding George Harding Lovie, who is reportedly working unsupervised in the south Muskoka region with the approval of officials from Beaver Creek Institute. (...) Edwards, a former goaltender with Buffalo, said Correctional Service Canada officials told him that Lovie had been granted the 60-day release by Beaver Creek officials, as of April 11. (...) Few could understand what the Edwards family is going through better than Kingsmill. The mother of slain Huntsville resident Jesse Coward has had to live for more than decade with the horror of her son brutally murdered by his then-friend Christopher Hammill in December 2001. (...) In the 13-plus years since he was convicted, Hammill has been moved from different federal penitentiaries – due to misconduct, claims Kingsmill – and is now being held at Mission Institution, a medium/minimum facility located about 80 kilometres east of Vancouver. (...) According to the Parole Board of Canada, day parole allows an offender to participate in community-based activities in preparation for full parole or statutory release. Muskoka Region

Alicia Murphy retrial set for November in Whitehorse

A trial date has been set for a Whitehorse woman, who will answer to a 2008 murder charge for a second time in court. Six years ago, 34-year-old Alicia Murphy was convicted of second-degree murder in the death of Evangeline Billy, who was found beaten and drowned in the Yukon River in downtown Whitehorse in June, 2008. Murphy was sentenced to life, and was nearly six years into her sentence when the Yukon's Court of Appeal ordered a new trial last year. CBC News

Terrace, B.C. killer given day parole

The family of a woman killed here in 1998 says it's devastated her murderer has been given day parole. "His release only serves to depreciate the seriousness of his crime, undermine respect for the laws of this country and marginalize our family's loss," Anita Johnstone said of the National Parole Board decision regarding Christopher Alexander who was convicted of killing her sister, Linda LeFranc. Alexander, who has been in jail for 13 years, over half of which has been spent at an aboriginal healing village in the Fraser Valley, was released to a halfway house in the Fraser Valley area this week. Terrace Standard

Father of Peter Whitmore abduction victim speaks out

The father of a young boy abducted almost ten years ago says it's vital for parents to talk to their children. In 2006, Peter Whitmore abducted and sexually assaulted two young boys, one from Saskatchewan and one from Manitoba. Whitmore pleaded guilty and was given a life sentence. The father of one of the boys, who can't be named because of a publication ban, spoke at a Child Find Saskatchewan event today. "There are a lot of things you can say and do," he said. "You've got to teach your kids simple things, to be aware of strangers, to talk to you, come forward." The father said the message is fairly simple, and should start in kindergarten, speaking to very young children. CBC News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Time to end the silence

An opinion piece states, "Terms such as sexual assault, sexual violence, sexual abuse are often thrown around and used interchangeably — but what do they actually mean? Often their meanings are the same because their effects are the same — resulting in fear and shame for victims and survivors. May marks Sexual Assault Awareness Month and is dedicated to creating awareness and promoting education. We know that sexual assault is a serious problem — one in three women and one in six men will experience sexual abuse and only 10 per cent of these will report this to police. We also know that these numbers are higher for certain populations — including aboriginal women, women with disabilities, younger women and immigrant and refugee women. Sexual Assault Awareness Month is a time to raise our consciousness and call attention to the issue. It is important for us as a community to move beyond narrow definitions of sexual violence as purely physical. We must acknowledge the broad continuum of sexually violent acts — from street harassment and sexual manipulation in intimate relationships to drug-facilitated rape and ongoing sexual abuse." Hamilton Spectator

Les « cyberagressions sexuelles » sous la loupe du CALACS d'Ottawa

Harcèlement, menaces, chantage : la violence sexuelle se déroule aussi sur Internet. Les victimes, en grande majorité des jeunes filles, ont de la difficulté à dénoncer leurs agresseurs. Le Centre d'aide et de lutte contre les agressions à caractère sexuel francophone d'Ottawa (CALACS) veut changer les choses. L'organisme souhaite aider à prévenir et à éliminer ce qu'il appelle les « cyberagressions à caractère sexuel ». Il s'inquiète du nombre grandissant de harcèlements sexuels, de menaces ou de partage de contenu intime sans consentement sur Internet et dans les médias sociaux. Pour mieux comprendre le phénomène, le CALACS interroge les élèves de quatre écoles secondaires francophones. Le premier volet de la recherche, intitulée « La cyberagression à caractère sexuel : aider la collectivité à intervenir », est publié cette semaine. Radio-Canada, La Presse (2015-05-05)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Top public service bureaucrat targets hiring, policy and mental health in her first report

Canada's top bureaucrat is making recruitment, policy development and mental health top priorities as she continues her drive to modernize the public service into a "high-performing" workplace. Privy Council Clerk Janice Charette Wednesday released her first report as clerk to Prime Minister Stephen Harper, laying out the public service's accomplishments over the past year and explaining where she hopes to guide it in the coming year as it faces massive changes. "The forces of change are many ... as our world continues to evolve, our focus continues to be and must remain excellence in delivering quality programs and services to Canadians and evidence-based advice to government," she said. Charette, the second female clerk in Canada's history, began the job last fall. She has been called the "transition clerk," leading change on many fronts. She is rolling out Blueprint 2020 (meant to transform the public service); preparing the bureaucracy for an election; and managing an embattled workforce that is coming through six years of job cuts and freezes. Ottawa Citizen

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

NIL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

mgeist

RT @cancivlib: Bill C-51: Soon to be law, and as murky as ever <http://fw.to/2t94joe>

OpenMedia_ca

Commons FINAL VOTE on C-51 is coming TODAY at 6pm ET. MPs are being inundated with messages. Keep speaking up Canada! <http://ow.ly/Mzk6M>

OpenMedia_ca

Last chance: HOURS to tell your MP to #RejectFear and #StopC51 <https://stopc51.ca/?src=tw>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBCShane

RCMP have released this video detailing the case of on-line sexual exploitation charges against a #NB man <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8EZxvXouZkM...>

CityNews

2,000 boys may be victims in a global child sexual exploitation investigation, RCMP says <http://ow.ly/MAXbL>

CBCCanada

Major child pornography bust leads to arrests, more victims ID'd <http://ift.tt/1JqOhQ5>

CBCNews

Suspicious packages prompt evacuations of N.L. courthouses <http://ift.tt/1JQlMrY>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

MacleansMag

What a new psychological report reveals about Omar Khadr: <http://ow.ly/MAGcC>

CBCEdmonton

Khadr poses little risk of future offences, psychologist's report says cbc.ca/news/canada/ed... #yeg

vicecanada

Howard Sapers is being shown the door after investigating abuses in Canadian prisons: <http://bit.ly/1IKwhlM>

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

PostmediaNews

Top public service bureaucrat targets hiring, policy and mental health in her first report <http://ow.ly/MBkp4> via @ottawacitizen

INTERNATIONAL

tvanouvelles

Dakota du Nord - Un train en feu force l'évacuation d'une ville <http://bit.ly/1EXmzuA>

CanadaFP

Canada is providing more than 1500 tactical medical kits to #Ukraine. #UnitedForUkraine <http://bit.ly/1FPm46K>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
May 7, 2015 / le 7 mai 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Former Guantanamo Bay inmate Omar Khadr to be released on bail in Canada

A former Guantanamo Bay inmate convicted of killing a U.S. soldier will be released on bail Thursday after a judge refused a last-ditch attempt by the Canadian government to keep him imprisoned. Court of Appeal Justice Myra Bielby rejected the government's emergency request to stop Omar Khadr release's while he appeals his U.S. war crimes conviction. A lower court judge granted him bail last month. "Mr. Khadr you're free to go," Bielby said before cheers erupted in the court room. Khadr smiled. (...) Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper's Conservative government has long refused to support Omar Khadr, reflecting ambivalence in Canada over the Khadr family. "We are disappointed with today's decision, and regret that a convicted terrorist has been allowed back into Canadian society without having served his full sentence," said Jeremy Laurin, a spokesman for Canada's public safety minister. U.S. State Department spokesman Jeff Rathke declined to immediately comment on the judge's decision. Associated Press (Newser.com, KMPH, Chron.com, WQOW, NBC29, News Times, New Jersey Herald, KLKN TV, WAOW, Hawaii News Now, Hickory Daily Record, WAND, WBOC, Lynchburg News and Advance, Scottsbluff Star Herald, 12 News Now, Grand Island Independent, Town Hall); Canadian Press (Yahoo News); Macleans; Radio-Canada

Khadr free on bail after 13 years in custody

"Mr. Khadr you're free to go." With those words, Alberta Court of Appeal Justice Myra Bielby turned down the federal government's last-ditch effort Thursday to keep the 28-year-old detained. Khadr and his supporters in the courtroom erupted in cheers when the decision was read. Khadr himself broke into a big, wide smile. He is expected to be released by mid-afternoon. "It is going to be a major adjustment for him but I'm sure he's up for it," Nathan Whitling, one of his two Canadian lawyers, said. "Whatever anybody might think of Mr. Khadr he has now served his time." (...)

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said of the decision, "We are disappointed with today's decision, and regret that a convicted terrorist has been allowed back into Canadian society without having served his full sentence. Omar Khadr pleaded guilty to heinous crimes, including the murder of American Army medic Sergeant Christopher Speer. By his own admission, as reported in the media, his ideology has not changed. Our thoughts and prayers are with the family of Sergeant Christopher Speer during this difficult time. We have vigorously defended against any attempt to lessen his punishment for these crimes. While Justin Trudeau refused to rule out special compensation for this convicted terrorist and the NDP actively tries to force Canadian taxpayers to compensate him, we believe the victims of crime, not the perpetrators, are the ones who deserve compensation," Blaney said. Toronto Star; Kamloops BC Now

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney says the Parole Board of Canada has the funding to deal with a long-standing backlog of old pardon applications for serious offences. Blaney told a House of Commons committee this morning the board is meeting its objectives and on time in handling the application backlog, which dates back as far as 2012 when the Conservative government overhauled the pardons system. That will be news to the roughly 5,800 applicants whose efforts to seal their old criminal records and move on with their lives have been in limbo for years. The board said in March that it was on track to clear the backlog of old applications for less serious, summary convictions, but that it could not continue to devote resources to tackling the more serious cases. The Conservative government overhauled the pardons system to make it more expensive and rigorous after The Canadian Press reported in 2010 that serial sex predator Graham James had been granted a pardon three years earlier. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, CBC News)

Blaney touts budget proposals, C-51 at security committee

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney appeared before the House of Commons national security committee Thursday morning to review main estimates - and also took the opportunity to talk up the security funding proposals outlined in the federal budget and the passage of C-51. Blaney was invited to the committee to talk about 2015/2016 main estimates. He stressed the increasing demands being put on Canada's security agencies. In all, the government is expecting to spend $8.5 billion on the public safety portfolio over 2015/2016 - a one per cent increase over the previous year. "Obviously these are large amounts," said Blaney. "I want to assure you they are being well used." After running through a list of legislation the government has brought forward on the security front, Blaney outlined several of the initiatives in the budget that would slightly increase funding for security agencies and projects. The RCMP is seeking $2.6 billion, Correctional Services Canada wants $2.4 billion, CSIS will get another $500 million, the Canada Border Services Agency wants $300 million and $1.2 billion will go to emergency response. There also will be $848 million going to the provinces for natural disaster mitigation. iPolitics; La Presse

Anti-terror Bill, C-51, passes the House amid angry and personal exchanges

A blog post sates, "Sometimes debate in the House of Commons becomes personal. On Wednesday night, the House of Commons passed the government's anti-terrorism law, Bill C-51, with a few small amendments. Both the ruling Conservatives and the Liberals voted in favour, although the latter have vigorously opposed a great many of the Bill's key provisions. Nobody keeps this sort of record, but one could probably safely say that we have never before seen the likes of this in the Canadian Parliament: a party opposing a bill, root and branch, and then voting for it. The Liberals say they did it because they think a small number of C-51's provisions are salutary. In a more candid moment, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau admitted that he did not want to leave himself open to the accusation that he is "soft on terrorism." That's where the personal part comes in. The day before the vote, there was a final debate on C-51. The Minister of Public Safety Steven Blaney led off for the government. He started by quoting Danny Eisen, the co-founder of a group that calls itself the "Canadian Coalition Against Terror." Eisen is not an expert on civil liberties, human rights or security. He is someone, Blaney told the House, who "lost a relative on the American Airlines flight on 9/11." Opposition members did not take kindly to the Minister using this sort of emotional appeal. The government has not been willing to hear from many who have well-documented and legitimate concerns about many of C-51's provisions, including the Privacy Commissioner, an officer of Parliament." Rabble.ca

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports Minister of Public Safety Steven Blaney has issued a statement reacting to Omar Khadr being granted bail. Rough transcript

CBC News reports Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney was in front of the Commons Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security to answer questions about the national security budget. The minister explained where $300 million in additional spending will be going this year. The total national security budget is more than $8 billion. Rough transcript

The Parole Board of Canada has the funding to deal with a long-standing backlog of thousands of old pardon applications for serious offences, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney told a House of Commons committee that the board is meeting its objectives and is on time in handling the application backlog, which dates back as far as 2012. (CJFX-FM Antigonish, 12h04; NCI-FM Cross Lake, 10h02)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Thunder Bay area residents urged to prepare for emergencies

NorWest Community Health Centres are marking emergency preparedness week by reminding people in the Thunder Bay area to make a plan, and pack a kit, in case of a disaster such as a flood, storm, or major power outage. On Thursday May 7 the health centres are hosting an event, titled "Are you Prepared?" from 1 p.m. - 7 p.m. at the NorWest Recreation Centre, where people can get started on building their own emergency preparedness kit. Everyone should have a kit ready with enough supplies to get them through three days, said Anita Jean, the manager of health and social programs with the NorWest Community Health Centres. CBC News

Open-air fires banned across southern Quebec

Open-air fires either in or close to forests have been banned in certain areas across southern Quebec due to current weather conditions. The ban was put in place on Wednesday by Quebec's ministry of forest, fauna and parks. Areas from Quebec City to the Outaouais region and everything south of that fall under the ban, including Montreal, Laval and parts of the Eastern Townships. The ban was announced at the same time as a fire ripped through six hectares of forest in Mont St-Grégoire Wednesday. Montreal Gazette

Saskatoon pleased with Notifynow alert system tests

The numbers are in from Saskatoon's Notifynow emergency alerting system test, conducted earlier this week. The city's Emergency Measures Organization is describing it as a success. The system is designed to be used to contact residents in the event of an emergency. The messages would be sent out by landline telephone, email, text and cell phone. The test showed that Notifynow reached 101,334 contact points in about an hour. This means that it could get word to a specific neighbourhood in about three minutes. The city plans to test the system twice a year. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Broadcast media report Bill C-51 has won the approval of the House of Commons. The Anti-Terrorism Act passed third reading. (CTV News, 9h10, 9h40, 11h11; CBC News, 10h11, 11h30 ET)

Broadcast media report the federal government will announce measures allowing officials to stop suspected extremists from leaving the country, take their passport away so they can't go. They also do it after people leave, so they can't come back. (CTV News, 9h12 ET; Lake 88 News Perth, 8h33; CHOZ-FM St. John's; 8h)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Ontario man fined $5,000 for using illegal workers

A young man from Ontario has been fined $5,000 after pleading guilty to immigration charges. Lior Haimov, 23, of Maple admitted Wednesday in Dartmouth provincial court that he knowingly violated the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act by employing five Israeli nationals who were not authorized to work in Canada. The offences were committed between October 2013 and March 2014. The Israelis -- four women and one man -- worked at kiosks throughout the Maritimes selling a product called Heat In A Click, a gel-like heating pad. Crown attorney Tim McLaughlin said Haimov is an Israeli national who has permanent resident status in Canada. "He told the workers the safest thing for them to do was to obtain a work visa, but he knew they didn't have one," McLaughlin said. "He knew the rules. He chose not to follow them." Haimov apologized to the court for his actions. Judge Timothy Gabriel accepted a joint sentencing recommendation from lawyers and fined Haimov $1,000 on each count. The judge said offences like this are motivated by profit. "It's essentially greed," he said. "There are rules in place for a reason. They're in place for the protection of not only employers and the employees ... but for the public in Canada as well. "Individuals or corporations who choose to circumvent those rules, to take shortcuts to try to increase their profit, do so at their peril." The judge gave Haimov one year to pay the fine. McLaughlin said the illegal workers were deported after they were arrested by Canada Border Services Agency officers. Chronicle Herald.ca

Bad month for Cornwall, Ont. cigarette smugglers

Not everyone is enjoying the bright spring weather. Police say April has been a tough spring for tobacco smugglers near the eastern Ontario city of Cornwall. A task force of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Ontario Provincial Police, Canada Border Services Agency, and the Ontario Ministry of Finance made five busts of cigarette smugglers. Some of the busts were relatively small while others involved large volumes of illegal cigarettes. They combined for seven arrests and seizures of more than 1986.7 kg of fine cut tobacco, 11 cases and 131 large baggies of cigarettes, six cases of cigars, 206 grams of marijuana, and three vehicles in a month. Toronto Star (Metro News)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Young man escapes spray of bullets in Surrey shooting

A young man escaped harm this morning in Surrey after multiple shots were fired at his car. RCMP say shortly before 2:30 a.m., police received several 911 calls about shots being fired in the area of 68th Avenue, between 124th Street and 121st Street. Witnesses reported that a gold coloured car pulled up beside a vehicle stopped on the road. Then someone in the gold car fired shots at the parked vehicle. The driver of the parked car, a man in his 20s, was uninjured. He then drove westbound on 68th Avenue with the gold car in pursuit. He lost control at an intersection and struck a post. Times Colonist

Policing in spotlight at annual National Police Week event

Policing will be in the spotlight next Thursday as various law enforcement agencies participate in National Police Week events at the Amherst Centre mall. Organized by the Amherst Police Department and the Cumberland RCMP, the daylong event will feature numerous interactive displays from various policing agencies and from their community partners. It's all part of National Police Week, which runs from May 11 to 17. "Police Week is a vehicle to reinforce ties with the community and to honour police for the services they provide and to inform the community of the role of police in the community," Const. Tom Wood of the Amherst Police Department said. Various community partners will also be participating in the event including EHS, the Amherst Fire Department and the Canadian Red Cross while there will also be information displays from a number of community organizations such as Amherst Youth Town Council, MADD, SADD, Silent Witness, CANSA, early intervention and others. Cumberland News Now

Bernard Naulalik relieved alleged RCMP assault to be investigated

An Iqaluit man allegedly hit by an RCMP officer in a holding cell last July says he's relieved there will be an independent investigation. "I just hope they're investigated and do what they have to do to do the right thing," says Bernard Naulalik, 24. "Make sure those officers are fully investigated." Naulalik filed a complaint against an officer last month alleging excessive force and public mischief. Surveillance video of an RCMP holding cell taken last July, and released publicly this week, shows Naulalik lying face down in the cell when an officer enters and starts searching him around his waist. Naulalik pushes the officer away, then a scuffle ensues as the officer tries to pin Naulalik down. For a moment, the prisoner has the officer backed into the corner. A second officer enters the cell and suddenly, the first officer is seen throwing five punches. CBC News

Several Hells Angels plead guilty to conspiracy to murder

A large group of about a dozen Hells Angels and their associates, who were arrested in Project SharQc, pleaded guilty Thursday to taking part in a general conspiracy to murder rival gang members between 1994 and 2002. Almost all of the 14 men who appeared at the Gouin courthouse are part of the Trois Rivières chapter. After entering guilty pleas, their cases were broken up into small groups for sentencing. One group will be sentenced in June: Marc Andre Hotte, Steve Rainville, Jean-Francois Bergeron, Bernard Plourde and Gilles Robidoux. Another group will be sentenced in November: Yves (Flag) Gagne, Paul Magnan and Stephane Poitras. Another two, Clermont Carrier and Francois Hinse, will be sentenced in September. Montreal Gazette; Radio Canada; Journal de Quebec; La Presse

Iqaluit court closes as RCMP investigate suspicious package

The Nunavut Court of Justice in Iqaluit has been evacuated after a suspicious package was found there this morning. Iqaluit RCMP say they received a call at 10:30 a.m. about a suspicious package at the Nunavut Court of Justice building. Police say blockades have been set up within the 500 block where the courthouse is located. Niaqunngusiaq, the main road, is still open. Nunavut justice officials tell CBC News the evacuation could be related to similar incidents at courthouses across Canada, including Manitoba and Nova Scotia. CBC News; Nunatsiaq Online

Suspicious packages still arriving at Canadian courthouses - 'It looks like this is being done to create unrest, to create disruption,' says security expert

Suspicious packages, with postmarks from Asia, continue to arrive at Canadian courthouses, with the latest reaching one in Nunavut, as police forces investigate. The packages have police forces across the country investigating. However, authorities are releasing little information about what's inside them. On Thursday, the Nunavut Court of Justice in Iqaluit was evacuated after a suspicious package arrived. However, justice officials in the territory have only said it could be linked to others across the country. Another package was discovered Thursday morning at a post office in Happy Valley-Goose Bay, Labrador. It was addressed to the provincial court in the town. Including Nunavut, a total of about two dozen packages have been intercepted en route to or received at courthouses in: Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Labrador, and The Northwest Territories. On April 8, packages were received by Manitoba court buildings in Winnipeg, Brandon, Morden and Minnedosa. RCMP tested the contents and have said they contained no dangerous chemicals, but police have not revealed the contents. CBC News

RCMP arrest 2 in Fredericton Junction credit union robbery

Two men have been arrested in connection with an armed robbery Wednesday at the Citizens Credit Union on Sunbury Drive in Fredericton Junction. RCMP arrested a 67-year-old man from McAdam and a 42-year-old man from Saint John shortly after 8 p.m. outside a residence in the St. George area. The men are scheduled to appear in provincial court in Burton Thursday afternoon to face charges. An undisclosed amount of cash and a weapon that police believe was used during the robbery were seized. On Wednesday, RCMP said two suspects fled the scene on a motorcycle at about 11 a.m. after entering the credit union with a weapon and demanding cash. A woman, whose identity is being protected for her safety, was disturbed by the armed robbery in the normally peaceful village. She says she saw the men fleeing the scene. "They were two grown men on a motorcycle that wasn't very big," she said. CBC news

RCMP urge parents to put computers in open areas at home

A child pornography investigator is encouraging parents to put computers in well-travelled areas of the home after dealing with a case where a Moncton man may have filmed as many as 2,000 boys under the age of 16 performing sexual acts. RCMP Sgt. Jean Marc Paré said having computers in places like a child's bedroom or a quiet basement increases the chances for such crimes to occur. "Obviously these youths had the opportunity to be alone on their computers to perform these sexual acts," said Paré, who is with the RCMP's internet child exploitation unit in New Brunswick. "Had those opportunities not been available to them, a lot of these crimes wouldn't have happened." CBC News

Canada Post employee may have saved Qualicum Beach fraud victim $8,000

A Canada Post employee's keen eye may have saved a Qualicum Beach senior thousands of dollars. According to police, a 75-year-old woman wired approximately $8,000 to fraud artists claiming to be lawyers and insurance agents representing the victim's son. "She was out around $8,000 and when she came in (to the post office) again to make another transaction a post person said 'Hold on, you should contact police,'" Oceanside RCMP Cpl. Jesse Foreman told The NEWS. The Canada Post employee noticed "suspicious money transfers" and immediately stopped the victim. Police are investigating the incident, commonly known as the Family Emergency Scam. PQB News

N.S. man arrested for impaired driving twice within two hours

A Nova Scotia man is facing charges after he was allegedly caught driving under the influence of drugs twice within a two-hour period. The RCMP stopped the 21-year-old Heatherton man on Highway 245 in North Grant, N.S. around noon Wednesday. He was arrested and taken to the RCMP detachment in Antigonish where he was evaluated and charged for impaired driving by drug. The man was released but RCMP spotted him driving on Highway 104 in Heatherton less than two hours later. He was arrested and charged with impaired driving by drug a second time. His vehicle has been impounded. CTV News; Global News

A tribute to retiring Staff Sgt. Mike Casault

I recall listening as Mike Casault taught the Drug Abuse Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.) program at Isabella Dicken Elementary School (IDES). Friendly and approachable to children and parents, Casault said hello when passing by in his police car and spoke to individuals in. Casault is admired and respected for his consistent community work, his friendliness, his compassion towards those that got in trouble and his understanding of how this affected parents. Casault truly is the policeman you want in your town, the one you look up to, the one you feel is there to protect and help you. He's someone you can trust. On Friday, May 1, a get-together was hosted to honour Casault on his retirement from the police force. It was great to see several retired officers and spouses as well as current officers and friends come to pay tribute to Casault. Staff Sgt. Lorne Craig said, "Thank you for coming to this dinner in honour of Mike who has retired from the RCMP after 25 years of service. Staff Sgt. Mike Casault Regimental #41287 first became exposed to the RCMP in 1986 when he was hired as summer student constable in McLennan, Alberta. After this experience Mike decided to volunteer as an auxiliary constable and focus efforts on his application to the RCMP. The Free Press

RCMP seek public help to locate Jennivera Rabbit

Maskwacis RCMP are asking the public's assistance to locate a 28-year-old woman. Jennivera Rabbit was reported missing by her family May 5. Her family has not seen or heard from her since April 27, 2015.

The last time Rabbit was seen was on May 4 in the Samson Town Site in Maskwacis. Rabbit is 160 cm (5'3") tall, weighs approximately 79 kg (174 lbs), has dyed light brown/blonde hair, and brown eyes. She has a tattoo of the letters JPR on her left arm and the Playboy bunny symbol tattooed behind her left ear. Rabbit has been known to frequent the Calgary and Morley areas. Wetaskiwin times

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Omar Khadr to be freed on bail while awaiting appeal

After 13 years in prison Omar Khadr will be free on bail while he appeals his convictions in the United States for war crimes. In court on Thursday, Alberta Court of Appeal Justice Myra Bielby said there was no clear evidence there would be irreparable harm if he were released. Khadr was expected to be released within the next two hours and was expected to be free by noon MT. Some supporters gasped and clapped while others cried after hearing Justice Bielby ruling. Court of Queen's Bench Justice June Ross granted Khadr bail last month, but the federal government appealed that decision. Bielby heard arguments on Tuesday from Khadr's lawyers and from a federal prosecutor seeking an emergency stay of the lower court ruling. Khadr will have to continue seeing a psychologist and will live with his lawyer, Dennis Edney, under a curfew from 10 p.m. to 7 a.m. CBC News, Postmedia Network (Warton Echo, Sault Star, 24 Hrs Vancouver, Northern News, Cornwall Standard Freeholder, Tillsonburg News, Edmonton Journal, Toronto Sun), Presse canadienne (Journal Métro), AFP (5 Minutes, RTBF), Radio NRJ, Agence QMI (Canoe, Journal de Québec, Journal de Montréal), Toronto Star, Canadian Press (iPolitics), Radio-Canada, Associated Press (Newser), Reuters (Channel News Asia, EuroNews, Daily Mail, Huffington Post, KDAL, KFGO, WHTC), Globe and Mail, The Guardian (UK), La Presse

Why life in prison rarely works out that way in Canada

An opinion piece states, "Life imprisonment doesn't necessarily mean life in Canada – but for the most heinous killers, it should. Our most severe penalty gives the most atrocious murderers parole eligibility after 25 years into their "life" sentence – and many are paroled. The federal government's Bill C-53 (Life Means Life Act) would change this by making life imprisonment without parole a mandatory sentence for heinous murders (such as planned and deliberate murders of police officers or planned and deliberate murders while the accused is committing sexual assault, hostage-taking or terrorism). These lifers could apply after 35 years to the federal Cabinet for "executive release." Heinous murderers should face stiffer sentences for several reasons. (...) Bill C-53 should be amended so that life without parole would be a discretionary – not a mandatory – sentencing option for heinous murders. Judges should also have the option of ordering a fixed-term parole ineligibility period of between 25 and 75 years for heinous murders." Globe and Mail

Several Hells Angels plead guilty to conspiracy to murder

A large group of about a dozen Hells Angels and their associates, who were arrested in Project SharQc, pleaded guilty Thursday to taking part in a general conspiracy to murder rival gang members between 1994 and 2002. Almost all of the 14 men who appeared at the Gouin courthouse are part of the Trois Rivières chapter. After entering guilty pleas, their cases were broken up into small groups for sentencing. One group will be sentenced in June: Marc Andre Hotte, Steve Rainville, Jean-Francois Bergeron, Bernard Plourde and Gilles Robidoux. Another group will be sentenced in November: Yves (Flag) Gagne, Paul Magnan and Stephane Poitras. Another two, Clermont Carrier and Francois Hinse, will be sentenced in September. (...) Marc Andre Hinse, another influential member of the chapter, is already serving a 10-year prison term he received in 2009. If Vincent accepts the sentence recommendation, Hinse would be sentenced to an overall prison term of 12 years and seven months. It would leave him with a sentence of nine months that could be tacked on to his current sentence. (...) Daniel (Johnny) Royer, 57: (...) Royer would later tell the Parole Board of Canada that he gravitated to the biker gang gradually after he began working in motorcycle repair in 1989. Montreal Gazette

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Broadcast media report a juge ruled to grant Omar Khadr bail. CBC News rough transcript

CBC News provides live coverage of Omar Khadr's lawyers speaking to the media in Edmonton.
Rough transcript

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

West Shore mayors want regional crime unit restored

Less than six months after the successful regional crime unit folded, the mayors of Colwood, Langford and View Royal want the province to force its resurrection in response to a crime spike in the West Shore. It wasn't long after the regional crime unit - which targeted prolific offenders - disbanded at the end of 2014 that serious crime in the West Shore started to rise, said Langford Mayor Stew Young. "Everything was going great until the last three to six months, when we saw a spike in violent crimes," Young said. "It's doing so much damage to our community because it's not there." On the heels of a Tuesday meeting with West Shore RCMP Insp. Larry Chomyn, Young, Colwood Mayor Carol Hamilton and View Royal Mayor Screech will write a letter to the Justice minister and police services division asking for a meeting about West Shore's police resources and the possibility of bringing back the regional crime unit. Despite high-profile arrests of the region's most prolific property criminals, the unit folded after withdrawals by Victoria police in 2008, and Central Saanich police and Sidney-North Saanich RCMP last year. Times Colonist

Mishkeegogamang Walkers Headed to Thunder Bay to Honour Murdered and Missing

A group of walkers are headed to Thunder Bay from the First Nation community of Mishkeegogamang. The walk will start with an opening prayer by Eva Skunk at her residence. We will be walking from Mishkeegogamang to Sioux Lookout, then to Dinorwic, to Kakabeka Falls and completing the walk in Thunder Bay. This walk is to honour, acknowledge and bring awareness of our women that have been "reported missing", Sarah Skunk and Viola Panacheese, and the "unsolved murder" of Rena Fox. Also, to remember the unsolved cases within the community, Lena Lawson, Thomas Lyons and Sophie Wassaykeesic. Net Newsledger

How Idle No More Lives on in Canada

Idle No More, a movement that had so swiftly grown to command the attention of a nation, faded from view in the summer of 2013. Although prominent Aboriginal speakers talked about a "sovereignty summer" that would follow the winter of discontent, the groundswell of indigenous activism failed to materialize. But Idle No More was not gone. Far from it. (...) Idle No More lives on in the form of empowered and determined aboriginal activists. There were many committed and capable indigenous leaders in the past, but the movement added greatly to their ranks. There is a new and continuing level of commitment across the country that shows up in reaction to proposals such as the Northern Gateway Pipeline, and demands for an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women. It shows up, equally, in aboriginal confidence inside organizations and institutions, like universities and colleges, within local aboriginal governments, and in relations with government officials and corporations. Huffington Post

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Progress spacecraft plummets to Earth this evening - Russian supply ship for ISS is expected to burn up almost completely in Earth's atmosphere

An out-of-control, unmanned Russian cargo spacecraft that malfunctioned on its way to the International Space Station last week will fall to Earth this evening. As of Thursday mid-morning, the Progress 59 M-27M spacecraft was expected to fall between 6:13 p.m. ET and 9:51 p.m. ET Thursday, the Russian space agency Roscosmos reported. The ship is expected to burn up nearly completely in the Earth's atmosphere, and only a few small pieces will reach the planet's surface, Roscosmos said. They should be similar in size and nature to those that fall to Earth when a Progress spacecraft normally burns up in the atmosphere after making a successful delivery to the International Space Station, Roscosmos added.

CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

NSA mass phone surveillance revealed by Edward Snowden ruled illegal

The US court of appeals has ruled that the bulk collection of telephone metadata is unlawful, in a landmark decision that clears the way for a full legal challenge against the National Security Agency. A panel of three federal judges for the second circuit overturned an earlier ruling that the controversial surveillance practice first revealed to the US public by NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden in 2013 could not be subject to judicial review. But the judges also waded into the charged and ongoing debate over the reauthorization of a key Patriot Act provision currently before US legislators. That provision, which the appeals court ruled the NSA program surpassed, will expire on 1 June amid gridlock in Washington on what to do about it. The judges opted not to end the domestic bulk collection while Congress decides its fate, calling judicial inaction "a lesser intrusion" on privacy than at the time the case was initially argued.

UK Guardian

Sur les pas des fiancées du djihad

Les nouvelles d'étudiantes quittant leur pays pour se joindre au groupe État islamique ont choqué le monde. Métro s'est penché sur ce qui peut inciter ces jeunes femmes à se rendre dans les bastions islamistes en Syrie et en Irak. Pour une adolescente impressionnable, l'univers du groupe terroriste État islamique (EI) en est un de rêve et de rébellion. Se joindre au groupe armé lui offre aussi l'occasion d'épouser un séduisant «héros» islamiste. Mais qu'est-ce qui peut exactement fasciner des jeunes filles dans ce monde brutal? «Il y a deux ou trois ressortissantes britanniques à Raqqa, un bastion islamiste en Syrie. Le groupe État islamique est le principal recruteur de jeunes femmes – elles ont de 14 à 20 ans et ne comprennent pas qu'il s'agit d'un voyage où il n'y a pas de billet retour», explique à Métro Loretta Napoleoni, une analyste italienne du terrorisme. Journal Métro; National Post

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A U.S. Court of appeals in New York ruled that the country's national security agency phone tapping program is illegal. (CTV News, 11h09 ET)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

reutersLjungg

@MinStevenBlaney is disappointed by Khadr decision, says "Trudeau refused to rule out special compensation for this convicted terrorist"

jasonfekete

Here's what Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney's spokesman has to say about Omar Khadr being granted bail: <http://twitter.com/jasonfekete/status/596354412697636864/photo/1pic.twitter.com/5PhAmyDrtF>

VassyKapelos

Statement from Steven Blaney's office re: #Khadr decision..."we're disappointed" #cdnpoli journos_dale

Blaney's spokesperson goes for class and partisanship over #OmarKhadr.

nutgraf1

Blaney on Khadr: We regret a convicted terrorist allowed back into Canadian society without serving his full sentence.

ipoliticsca

Blaney touts budget proposals, C-51 at security committee | iPolitics <http://www.ipolitics.ca/2015/05/07/blaney-touts-budget-proposals-c-51-at-security-committee/> ...

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

mtlgazette

Open-air fires banned across southern Quebec <http://bit.ly/1canwVd>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

VancouverSun

Changes due today making it easier to revoke passports of radicalized Canadians intending to join ISIL <http://ow.ly/2YI4Pw>

ddale8

Toronto extremist turned CSIS informant Mubin Shaikh is testifying to U.S. Senate committee on terrorist recruitment: <http://www.hsgac.senate.gov/download/?id=0243ef6a-d76e-4c27-afa1-bfc843042f61> ...

nationalpost

The Tories' controversial anti-terror bill is through the HoC, expected to be law by summer <http://natpo.st/1H3DJcc>

rabbleca

The #C51 vote got a little heated last night. @KarlNerenberg breaks down what happened: <http://buff.ly/1FOL0rb>
#stopc51 #rejectfear

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

mbelhumeurTVA

SharQc: 14 Hells Angels viennent de plaider coupable à une accusation de complot pour meurtre.

CBCPolitics

VIDEO: RCMP commish Bob Paulson says claims about under-resourcing are false: <http://www.cbc.ca/player/News/Politics/ID/2666620624/> ... #hw

theprovince

Another Surrey shooting leaves car immobilized, driver on the run <http://theprovince.in/1IkYi2w> pic.twitter.com/xkmzdfRYUJ

CBCNews

Suspicious packages still arriving at Canadian courthouses <http://ift.tt/1FRUR3e>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

MelanieNagyCTV

Still in Edmonton and back at court today for proceedings regarding #OmarKhadr's release on bail. #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

Last month, an Alberta judge granted #Khadr bail. Justice June Ross accepted the argument that he is a low risk and issued release order. #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

But earlier this week federal lawyers entered an emergency motion to stop his release. #OmarKhadr #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

Today Court Appeal Justice Myra Bielby will rule on the stay of proceedings application. #OmarKhadr #CTV

MelanieNagyCTV

Federal lawyer Bruce Hughson argued that #Khadr should stay in prison until government's appeal of bail order is heard. #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

If judge rules against stay #Khadr will be released on bail. His bail conditions were decided and finalized on Tuesday. #CTV

MelanieNagyCTV

#OmarKhadr is once again here for the court proceedings. He is wearing the same black shirt and smiled when greeted by his lawyer #CTV

MelanieNagyCTV

When greeted by longtime lawyer Dennis Edney #OmarKhadr smiled and asked Edney how he was doing. #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

The Judge is now reading her decision

MelanieNagyCTV

The judge is going over context of stay application. Going over arguments presented. #Khadr listening closely. #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

Everyone is on the edge of their seats waiting for the decision. Lots of shuffling from public gallery. #Khadr focused on judge. #ctv

MelanieNagyCTV

#OmarKhadr was smiling when judge ruled he could be released. It's expected to take two hours to process paper work. #ctv

Perkel

Bielby notes if the government bail appeal succeeds, likely in September, Omar #Khadr would have to go back to prison. #cdnpoli

Perkel

Bielby: 'Irreparable harm' to Canada if Omar #Khadr gets bail? Crown led no evidence from U.S. and CSC affidavit was 'speculative' #cdnpoli

CBCEdmonton

Follow CBC reporters as they tweet live from the Khadr bail ruling. <http://cbc.ca/1.3064168>

ReidFiest

Decision: Omar #Khadr will be free on bail after nearly 13 years in custody. Ottawa loses emergency motion to stop his release #Guantanamo

suntonyblais

Alberta's highest court ruled Thursday that former Guantanamo Bay detainee Omar Khadr can be released on bail pending his U.S. appeal. #ye

shephardm

Decision: Omar #Khadr will be free on bail after nearly 13 years in custody. Ottawa loses emergency motion to stop his release #Guantanamo

CBCAlerts

#Edmonton judge allows release of #OmarKhadr on bail. Conditions include residing with lawyer Dennis Edney.

briarstewart

BREAKING Justice Bielby says #khadr is free to go #cbc

RadioCanadaInfo

La justice albertaine rejette la requête du gouvernement Harper; Omar #Khadr pourra être libéré sous conditions pic.twitter.com/vspRQtxvYM

CBCAlerts

#OmarKhadr lawyer Nate Whitling pleased with client's release on bail, says freedom will be big adjustment.
#Edmonton

OTHER / AUTRE

CBCNews

Out-of-control Russian spacecraft plummets to Earth today <http://ift.tt/1FRE6Ft>

INTERNATIONAL

metromontreal

Sur les pas des fiancées du djihad... ces étudiantes qui quittent leur pays pour l'ÉI? <http://bit.ly/1cqIsJm>

metromontreal

Un autre puissant séisme secoue la Papouasie-Nouvelle-Guinée - <http://bit.ly/1cqBgfa>

CBCAlerts

US appeals court rules Nat'l Security Agency's program of collecting billions of telephone records illegal. #NSA
#PatriotAct

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
May 7, 2015 / le 7 mai 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Canadians trying to join terror groups could have passports cancelled without notice

Canadians preparing to travel overseas to enlist with terrorist groups could have their passports cancelled without notice and revoked for up to 10 years under measures announced Thursday. The proposed changes would allow the Minister of Public Safety to cancel, refuse and revoke Canadian passports when federal authorities suspect that doing so would prevent a terrorist offence. At the same time, the government is introducing legislation allowing it to withhold the information upon which such decisions are based — although judges would still be allowed to rely on it. Steven Blaney, the Public Safety Minister, portrayed the measures as a response to the growing number of Canadians leaving to join violent extremist groups, notably the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant. "We cannot ignore the danger posed by high-risk travelers looking to travel to places like Syria, only to potentially return back to Canada with training and experience necessary to threaten the safety of Canadians by engaging in jihadi terrorism here at home," Blaney said. National Post; La Presse

Blaney to get power to revoke passports under new budget bill

The government tabled its budget implementation legislation Thursday afternoon and in it are several significant changes to the way security is handled on the Hill — and to the process for deciding when to revoke the passport of a suspected extremist. Under the new Prevention of Terrorist Travel Act, proposed in the budget bill, the minister deemed responsible by the governor in council — likely Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and/or Citizenship and Immigration Minister Chris Alexander — would be able to make the decision on whether to revoke or refuse a passport to someone suspected of plotting to commit a terrorist act in Canada or abroad. Right now, that power resides with Passport Canada, while final authority rests with the Citizenship and Immigration minister. iPolitics

Canada introduces measures against high-risk travelers

Canada Thursday announced the introduction of the Prevention of Terrorist Travel Act and changes to the Canadian Passport Order (CPO), new measures designed to protect Canadians by preventing the travel of those seeking to engage in terrorist activity abroad. "Our Government has seen the troubling evidence of Canadians traveling overseas to participate in terrorist activities, particularly with the so-called Islamic State. We cannot ignore the danger posed by high-risk travelers looking to travel to places like Syria, only to potentially return back to Canada with training and experience necessary to threaten the safety of Canadians by engaging in jihadi terrorism here at home," Canada's Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Steven Blaney, said. Xinhua (Shanghai Daily)

Pardons backlog can be cleared, says Blaney, but parole board has no time frame

The Parole Board of Canada has the funding to deal with a long-standing backlog of thousands of old pardon applications for serious offences, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said Thursday. Blaney told a House of Commons committee that the board is meeting its objectives and is on time in handling the application backlog, which dates back as far as 2012 when the Conservative government overhauled the pardons system. "A little more than 5,000 are left and Mr. (Harvey) Cenaiko (the chairman of the parole board) and his team confirmed to me that they have the financial resources to keep dealing with the backlog," Blaney said in response to a question from a New Democrat MP. "And they really are on objective and on time." Canadian Press (Yahoo! News)

Omar Khadr released on bail

Omar Khadr has been released from prison after an Alberta Court of Appeal justice rejected a last-ditch government attempt to keep the Guantanamo Bay prisoner behind bars. Justice Myra Bielby ruled Thursday the government failed to prove that allowing Khadr out now would cause "irreparable harm" to Canada's international treaty obligations. Khadr was in the courtroom and let out a smile when Bielby announced her decision. It is Khadr's first taste of freedom in almost 13 years, since his capture as a wounded 15-year-old in Afghanistan in July 2002... The government regrets a convicted terrorist has been allowed back in to Canadian society without having served a full sentence, Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Steven Blaney responded. "Omar Khadr pleaded guilty to heinous crimes, including the murder of American Army medic Sergeant Christopher Speer. By his own admission, as reported in the media, his ideology has not changed," said Blaney. Global News; Edmonton Journal; Toronto Star; CBC News; New York Times; CTV News; Globe and Mail; Washington Times; Wall Street Journal

There will be more Omar Khadr. We need a better system to deal with them

An opinion piece states, "... Things didn't go that way on Aug. 6, 2002. That's the day that a United States Army unit fighting in Afghanistan entered the ruins of a building that had been bombed by U.S. aircraft. In that building waited 15-year-old, Toronto-born Omar Khadr. A grenade was thrown — probably by Khadr, though some doubt the veracity of his confession. Whoever threw it, it killed U.S. Army Sgt. Christopher Speer. In the resulting exchange of fire, Khadr was grievously wounded. But, thanks to rapid medical aid, he did not die. Thus began the long legal odyssey that had its latest chapter on Thursday, when a judge for the Alberta Court of Appeals in Edmonton ruled that Khadr would be released on bail pending an appeal of his conviction. Khadr was not serving a life term; he was always going to get out eventually. But the federal government had hoped to keep him behind bars for the rest of the prison term he was sentenced to by an American military tribunal. Critics of this ruling, and that includes the federal government, call this a disgrace. A terrorist will now walk freely in Canada, the public safety minister grumbled in a statement. Many, however, are relieved, if that's the right word: Khadr is a child soldier, they've long argued. He never should have been imprisoned and sentenced in the first place, and Canada should have done more to bring him home for rehabilitation sooner. Both sides are right. No one should be comfortable with the fact that Khadr, who was, after all, fighting for our enemy, is now partially free while Speer remains dead. But it's also true that Khadr was, by any definition, a child soldier, and that's supposed to mean something. We don't have to like him or his family to recognize that no 15-year-old who follows his father into battle should be held totally and personally responsible for that. In any other context, we'd call that abuse, not a war crime..." National Post

The global debate over security and privacy may yet wound PM

An opinion piece states, "It came in like the proverbial lion, dominating debate both here and across the country, sparking protest and anger. But when Stephen Harper's anti-terrorism legislation passed the House of Commons this week, it was delivered on time, virtually untouched, just as he drew it up. It moved to the Senate, looking a little like a lamb. Bill C-51 passed as much of Ottawa was tied up in debate about tax breaks for the middle class and much of the country was marvelling at the electoral breakthrough in Alberta by the NDP... Then Thursday, Omar Khadr, the child soldier who had grown to become this government's tough on terror symbol, walked free in Edmonton after government lawyers were left with no arguments to overturn a decision by the Alberta Court of Appeal to grant him bail. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney was left to bluster on about disappointment, heinous crime and the same boilerplate the government has always mustered in its bid to keep Canadian streets safe from the man who has served nearly 13 years behind bars at Guantanamo Bay and Alberta. The Canadian anti-terror debate is not happening in isolation, of course..." Toronto Star

Omar Khadr, free at last

An editorial states, "Omar Khadr is a free man today, no thanks to Prime Minister Stephen Harper's obsessively vindictive government. But the injustice Khadr has suffered continues to shame us all. When the ugly history of Guantanamo Bay and the war on terror is written, it will record that Canada, alone of all Western countries, did not press for the return of a detainee... And on Thursday Justice Myra Bielby quashed a federal bid to keep him behind bars, ruling that Ottawa failed to prove that setting him free would cause "irreparable harm" to Canada's relations with the United States and other treaty partners. As the Star's Michelle Shephard has reported, the U.S. State Department has made it abundantly clear that Khadr's release won't damage relations. Within hours, Khadr was free. The Canadian courts have got it right. Psychological profiling confirms that Khadr poses no great threat. He admits to having "screwed up" as a youth. He is appealing his dubious Gitmo conviction in the U.S. courts. And he hopes to rebuild his life. His tough bail conditions include living with Edney, wearing an electronic monitoring device, observing a curfew and having only restricted, supervised access to the Internet and his own family. Even so, the Harper government intends to press on, obtusely, with its appeal of Justice Ross' original bail order. Far from being humiliated by the court's rebuff, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney seized the occasion to launch a crude attack on the Liberals and New Democrats for not being tougher on terror. It was a contemptible response..." Toronto Star

City takes pragmatic approach to proliferation of pot dispensaries

An editorial states, "Sooner or later, it was bound to happen. With the marijuana trade recently legalized in some U.S. states and British Columbians long toking in parks and on street corners, the policing of pot use was eventually going to become less rigorous in Vancouver... Health Minister Rona Ambrose and Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney are urging Vancouver council and the police department to close all the dispensaries which, they insist, are illegal operations. Much as the Harper government has refused to recognize the practical need for a safe injection site in Vancouver, it is denying the fact there is widespread recreational marijuana use on the West Coast..." Vancouver Sun

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News provides live coverage of an announcement by Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Steven Blaney and Minister of Citizenship and Immigration Canada Chris Alexander. A new section under the Canadian passport order that will authorize the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness to cancel, refuse, or revoke passports in national security-related cases and terrorism-related offences. Rough Transcript

CTV News – Power Play interviewed Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney regarding Omar Khadr being released on bail as well as today's passport revocation announcement. Rough Transcript

CBC News – Power & Politics interviewed Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney regarding Omar Khadr being released on bail as well as today's passport revocation announcement. Rough Transcript

RDI – 24/60 a fait un entretien avec le ministre Steven Blaney au sujet de Omar Khadr et la révocation de passeport. Transcription ébauche

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Evacuation ordered as brush fire burns east of Halifax

An out-of-control brush fire has prompted firefighters to issue a mandatory evacuation order for about 200 homes east of Halifax. Deputy fire Chief Roy Hollett says no injuries have been reported, but residents on about a dozen streets in East Lawrencetown have been asked to leave. Canadian Press (Metro Halifax); CBC News; Radio-Canada

Northwest should plan on more severe storms, flooding

A meteorologist with Environment Canada said research shows you may be needing those emergency kits more frequently in the coming years. Geoff Coulson said the main weather concern for the northwest is that the region could see more severe thunderstorms. He said those storms can lead to flooding. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Conservative budget bill sets up battle with federal unions

The Conservative government is giving itself new powers in the latest omnibus budget bill to impose controversial sick leave changes to the public service, a move that sets up a battle with federal unions just months before the October election. The budget bill tabled Thursday, C-59, has 157 numbered pages, which is less than half the size of both budget bills tabled last year. However Thursday's bill continues the pattern of jamming budget bills with a wide-range of substantive measures, including entirely new laws. Bill C-59 includes the government's long-promised balanced budget legislation, as well as a new law called the Prevention of Terrorist Travel Act, which restricts the release of intelligence used by government to cancel a passport on national security grounds. Globe and Mail

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Paulson in the hot seat in committee after 16x9 investigation

MPs grilled RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson on Parliament Hill today, following a 16X9 investigation into the RCMP's equipment and training and the Moncton shooting. Questions were raised in the 16x9 report about the RCMP's training and preparation for an event such as the Moncton shooting, including the years-long delay in rolling out the carbine program – a semi-automatic weapon. Asked about the investigation during a public safety committee meeting, Paulson accused 16X9 of using actors to draw a link between lack of equipment and the Moncton shooting, a link he didn't think was fair. During the committee meeting Liberal MP Wayne Easter said he's received emails from a number of RCMP members and the people who work with them since the investigation aired, and read one of the emails from a dispatcher aloud. Paulson interrupted Easter, insisting members could come forward. "People, they couch these criticism in the blanket of repercussion, and there are no repercussions," Paulson said. "What we are building, what I've built and what I insist on having is an organization where those conversations take place without repercussion." Easter hopes Paulson's comments about coming forward open the door to members doing so. "I would say to those officers if they do express them {their concerns} to Commissioner Paulson and there are repercussions, then give us a call," Easter said. Global News

Crown wants 3 years for Mountie who lied about Dziekanski's death

When Zofia Cisowski immigrated to Canada she saw the RCMP as the symbol of democracy and trust, but that was destroyed in the years since officers jolted her son with a Taser, a court heard. "My faith in the honesty of the RCMP has forever been shaken," said the mother's letter read at the sentencing of RCMP Const. Kwesi Millington on Thursday. Millington was convicted of perjury for lying during a public inquiry into Robert Dziekanski's death at Vancouver's airport in October 2007. His defence lawyer opposed allowing Cisowski to read her victim-impact statement into the record. But B.C. Supreme Court Justice William Ehrcke rejected the argument that Cisowski didn't qualify as a victim because Millington's crime was against the "administration of justice." Canadian Press (CTV News); CBC News

Officer acquitted in Dziekanski perjury trial files complaint

One of the two Mounties found not guilty of perjury in relation to the taser-related death of Robert Dziekanski at the Vancouver airport in 2007 has filed complaints against the prosecutors who tried to convict him. RCMP Constable Gerry Rundel made a brief statement outside the courthouse where the sentence hearing of another officer who was convicted is taking place. AM 730

RCMP withdraws disgraceful conduct allegations against Nunavut Mountie

The RCMP's disciplinary directorate has withdrawn allegations of historical sexual misconduct against a Nunavut officer. Sgt. Gregory Sutherland, with Nunavut RCMP in Iqaluit, was facing two allegations of disgraceful conduct involving a fellow member of the RCMP. His disciplinary hearing was supposed to be held in Federal Court in Calgary last month but it was postponed. On Thursday, the discipline directorate said after careful consideration of additional information it received, the allegations were withdrawn because they "could not be established on a balance of probabilities." Sutherland, who had been under suspension with pay, will soon return to work in Nunavut. CBC News

Moncton man accused in massive child porn case facing pre-existing sex-related charges

As word gets out about a child pornography case that could have thousands of unwitting victims, more information is coming to light about the accused Moncton man. A 24-year-old Moncton man was charged earlier this week by the RCMP, who say the investigation stemmed from information received by York Regional Police in Ontario. York Regional Police announced on Wednesday that 41 people had been arrested and charged for their alleged participation in an international child porn ring. RCMP say the Moncton man posed online a teenage girl, befriending teenage boys and asking them to perform sex acts, which he taped and distributed without their knowledge. Now, RCMP say the publication ban protecting his identity is connected to an earlier, separate investigation. The 24-year-old man was already facing charges that include making and possession child pornography, sexual assault, and touching a person under the age of 14 for a sexual purpose. Meanwhile, as RCMP face the difficult task of identifying all the victims all over the world, they say they're pleased with how quickly word of the case has spread. CTV Atlantic

Man known to police escapes spray of bullets in latest Surrey shooting

There was more gunfire in Surrey Thursday morning, as a young man escaped unharmed after he was shot at in a car. The latest shooting brings the number to more than two dozen such incidents since early

March. RCMP say shortly before 2:30 a.m., police received several 911 calls about shots being fired in the area of 68th Avenue, between 124th Street and 121st Street. Vancouver Sun

Calls for more police patrols after series of suspected arsons in Joggins, N.S.

A Cumberland County Councillor would like to see increased RCMP patrols in his community after a suspected arsonist destroyed five buildings and damaged another Tuesday night. Mike McLellan represents Joggins as a Cumberland County Councillor. "I'm going to ask for more police protection, show more presence of the RCMP," says McLellan. There has been increased RCMP activity in Joggins since Tuesday. Police are cautious about the progress as they continue to investigate, and explore any tips that come in. "They will see more police around here now because there are a number of follow up investigations, people to speak with," says RCMP Staff Sgt. Allan Carroll. CTV Atlantic

Two More Packages Sent to Government Buildings

While the RCMP investigation into suspicious packages is ongoing, VOXM News has learned that two more packages have been intercepted by Canada Post. RCMP Staff Sergeant Boyd Merrill says Canada Post identified packages in Harbour Grace and Happy Valley-Goose Bay which originated from the same international address as those reported yesterday. Merrill says the packages are suspicious because of the common address, and because they are similar in appearance and have the same markings as the other packages. RCMP say that suspicious does not necessarily mean hazardous, and there is no threat to public safety. The investigation into the packages is continuing. VOXM

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Omar Khadr's lawyer calls Harper a 'bigot' after judge denies federal attempt to block prisoner's release

Omar Khadr's lawyer called Prime Minister Stephen Harper a "bigot" who "doesn't like Muslims" Thursday after an Alberta Court of Appeal justice rejected the Conservative government's last-ditch attempt to keep the former Guantanamo Bay prisoner behind bars. Justice Myra Bielby ruled the government failed to prove that allowing Khadr out now would cause "irreparable harm" to Canada's international treaty obligations. "My view is very clear, Mr. Harper is a bigot. Mr. Harper doesn't like Muslims," Khadr's lawyer, Dennis Edney told reporters outside court. "[Harper] wants to show he's tough on crime, and who does he pick on? A fifteen-year-old boy who was picked up and put in a hell hole in Guantanamo." Khadr was in the courtroom and let out a smile when Bielby announced her decision. It will be Khadr's first taste of freedom in almost 13 years, since his capture as a wounded 15-year-old in Afghanistan in July 2002. Canadian Press (National Post); Toronto Star

Omar Khadr's ordeal: When a war crime isn't a war crime

When Omar Khadr first arrived at Guantanamo Bay in 2002, he was a baby-faced 15-year-old and one of the military prison's youngest detainees. He had been severely wounded in a firefight in Afghanistan in which a U.S. army medic was killed and other U.S. soldiers injured. The incident began a 13-year ordeal marked by repeated interrogations, torture, alleged threats of rape, and a plea bargain with a fundamentally flawed military commission. After being imprisoned nearly half his life, Khadr, now a bearded 28-year old, was finally released on bail Thursday by a court in Canada. MSNBC; CNN; BBC News

Veronica Park's prison death details kept from family

Correctional Service Canada won't tell Veronica Park's family how the 38-year-old Newfoundland woman died in one of its prisons last month. Park was serving time at the Nova Institution for Women in Truro, N.S., for robbery and breach of recognizance. She began complaining of a sore throat in April and asked for medical help due to chest pain. The pain got worse, and on April 24, the 38-year-old Corner Brook woman died after being taken to hospital. Her family wants to know what happened. Correctional Service Canada has told them an investigation is underway, but not much more than that. CBC News asked Correctional Service Canada when the family might learn what caused Park's death. "Correctional Service of Canada does not share information regarding the investigation with the next of kin," it said in response. Park's family may now have to file an access to information request to learn how she died in custody. CBC News

Harper treatment of Gov. watchdog abuse of power

An editorial states, "As Canada's correctional investigator or ombudsman for 11 years, Howard Sapers has been a burr under the saddle of three prime ministers. That's the nature of independent watchdogs. They tend to embarrass the government of the day. Prime Minister Stephen Harper, however, has decided it's time to eliminate the constant annoyance of being reprimanded for flaws in the federal parole and penal system. Mr. Sapers frequently challenged the government's law-and-order agenda and exposed abuse and injustice. The ombudsman has been particularly aggressive in the case of former Guantanamo detainee Omar Khadr — whose release on bail Thursday was opposed by the government — issuing three separate reports critical of his treatment by the correctional service..." Winnipeg Free Press

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News – Power Play interviewed Andrea Prasow of Human Rights Watch regarding Omar Khadr being released on bail. Rough Transcript

CTV News – Power Play interviewed MPs Elizabeth May, Blake Richards, Scott Simms and Robert Chisholm for their reaction to Omar Khadr being released on bail. Rough Transcript

CTV News – Power Play interviewed Benjamin Perrin, Senior Fellow at the Macdonald-Laurier Institute regarding Bill C-53, Life Means Life Act. Rough Transcript

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Federal government fends off criticism over $97M in 'lapsed' funds

Money promised for federal programs but never spent, referred to as "lapsed funds," is a normal part of the budgeting process and has nothing to do with politics, federal Finance Minister Joe Oliver says. CBC News

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Report: US Strike Kills Top Al Qaeda Militant

A top al Qaeda militant who claimed responsibility for the Charlie Hebdo attack has been killed, SITE intelligence group reports. According to al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), Nasser bin ali al Ansi was killed in a US strike in Yemen, SITE reported. The militant group said he died alongside his eldest son and several others. The report could not be independently verified. Al Ansi appeared in video posted online in January claiming AQAP was behind the Paris attacks, which left 12 people dead. He said the attackers - Said and Cherif Kouachi - had been acting on the orders of al Qaeda's global commander, Ayman al Zawahiri. Sky News

Atlantic hurricane season may get early start

Though the official start of the Atlantic hurricane season doesn't start until June 1, meteorologists are keeping a close eye on a system off the coast of the Carolinas that could give the season an early start. The U.S. National Hurricane Center is forecasting a 70 per cent chance of tropical storm formation within the next 48 hours. Though the hurricane season hasn't officially started yet, it's not completely unheard of for a hurricane to develop in May. Global News

Spy scandal tarnishing German public's trust in Angela Merkel

Two years ago, Germany complained bitterly when whistleblower Edward Snowden revealed the extent of U.S. spying in Europe, which reportedly included monitoring Chancellor Angela Merkel's cellphone. Now there is a new scandal infuriating Germans. Only this time, the outrage is not because the country was a victim of aggressive intelligence gathering, but because reports suggest it was a willing participant. Germany's foreign intelligence service, the BND, allegedly carried out extensive surveillance at the request of the U.S. National Security Agency. The targets reportedly included European companies, institutions and individuals, violating German policy and possibly breaking the law. Globe and Mail

White House fence getting sharper spikes in security upgrade

The black iron fence surrounding the White House will be topped with a row of "sharp metal points" in July, the U.S. Secret Service said on Thursday, part of a series of security upgrades for the famous mansion where the president and his family live. Reuters

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MinStevenBlaney

Meilleurs vœux à Marc Parent du @SPVM un membre très respecté de la communauté des forces de l'ordre et un défenseur de la sécurité publique

MinStevenBlaney

All the best to @SPVM Chief Marc Parent a very respected member of the law enforcement community and advocate for public safety.

WatchCTVNews

LIVE NOW: @MinStevenBlaney announcement regarding Canada's national security ow.ly/MFfE5 #cdnpoli

CBCEdmonton

Watch live as Canada's public safety minister Steven Blaney reacts to Omar Khadr's release. cbc.ca/1.3064945

CP24

WATCH LIVE: Steven Blaney to make announcement on Canada's national security cp24.com/video?clipId=6...

ipoliticsca

Blaney to get power to revoke passports under new budget bill | iPolitics ipolitics.ca/2015/05/07/bla...

CBCAAlerts

Public Safety Minister says thoughts should be with victims of #OmarKhadr, reiterates belief he should serve full sentence after confession.

jasonfekete

Steven Blaney: Won't say whether the government will appeal Omar Khadr's release to the Supreme Court of Canada. Says legal issues ongoing

PatMorrell_CBC

Steven Blaney, @MinStevenBlaney, reacts to #Khadr #omarkhar 's Bail snpv.tv/1EldmYu

CTVCalgary

Public Safety Minister says parole Board has funding to clear old pardons backlog: bit.ly/1zOIPqz

CBCAlerts

Safety minister defends #PMHarper from bigotry accusation made by #OmarKhadr lawyer. #Blaney says PM champions tolerance, respect. #cdnpoli

robinlevinson

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney says the government is "disappointed" with Khadr's bail. Pursuing ongoing legal action

Perkel

I reported that Omar #Khadr said his ideology hadn't changed - because he didn't have one then @MinStevenBlaney twisting words. #cdnpoli

CTV_PowerPlay

LIVE: @MinStevenBlaney on Omar Khadr being released on bail and new passport revocation rules. #cdnpoli #ctvpp

CTV_PowerPlay

@MinStevenBlaney says at this point he cannot comment on whether or not Khadr will receive a Canadian passport #cdnpoli #ctvpp

PnPCBC

@MinStevenBlaney says the gov't is disappointed with #Khadr decision - his thoughts are with the victims.

PnPCBC

@MinStevenBlaney says #Khadr is somebody who pleaded guilty to horrible crimes, agreed to spend 8 years in prison.

PnPCBC

@MinStevenBlaney says Omar #Khadr should serve out his entire sentence.

PnPCBC

@MinStevenBlaney takes issue with Dennis Edney's comments about @pmharper. Says you can disagree with someone - but have to show respect

AMarieDussault

#RD12460 maintenant: Omar #Khadr libéré après 13 ans de détention s'adresse aux médias vers 19h30 + la réaction de @MinStevenBlaney #polcan

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

APTNews

How prepared is BC for an earthquake? APTN takes a look - APTN National News fb.me/3L29XgEpk

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

rabbleca

Anti-terror Bill, C-51, passes the House amid angry and personal exchanges via @KarlNerenberg buff.ly/1F0L1LA #stopc51 #rejectfear

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

TorontoStar

It's a bad month for cigarette smugglers in Cornwall, Ont. on.thestar.com/1bAQ6OZ pic.twitter.com/pWJIMH1SOj

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

globalnews

RCMP Commissioner grilled by MPs after 16x9 investigation into Moncton RCMP shooting. glnb.ca/MFn5n

VassyKapelos

RCMP's Paulson calls 16X9 investigation into equipment/training "sensational", admits he hasn't watched it. globalnews.ca/news/1985955/p... #cdnpoli

CTVancouver

Robert Dziekanski's mother wants to read statement at Mountie's sentencing hearing <http://bc.ctvnews.ca/dziekanski-s-mom-wants-to-read-statement-at-mountie-s-sentencing-hearing-1.2363805> ...

Bernardo980

Zofia Cisowski statement: Lies told by officers would have 'tainted' her son's memory forever and her faith in #RCMP has been 'shaken'. 1/2

Bernardo980

2/2 'I can forgive, but I can never forget.' She's also grateful for witness video proving claims made by #RCMP were wrong.

Bernardo980

Crown seeking jail time of 18-36 months for #RCMP Constable Kwesi Millington re: perjury conviction linked to death of #RobertDziekanski.

Bernardo980

Judge reserves sentencing decision for #RCMP Constable Kwesi Millington until 10am June 22nd. Millington declined opportunity to comment.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Reuters

Omar Khadr, once a Guantanamo inmate, freed on bail in Canada: reut.rs/1F1ILVx

nationalpost

First steps of freedom for Omar Khadr after his lawyer calls Harper an anti-Muslim 'bigot' <http://natpo.st/1H3YLaB>

RadioCanadaInfo

« C'est un jour merveilleux pour la justice. » - Dennis Edney, avocat d'Omar Khadr ici.radio-canada.ca/regions/albert... pic.twitter.com/gTJ5LiNA0l

canoepolitics

'Mr. Khadr, you are free to go': Judge rejects federal government's to prevent release ow.ly/MFmuP

fullcomment

Matt Gurney: There will be more Omar Khadr's. We need a better system to deal with them natpo.st/1cbUg0c

Perkel

'Great day for justice' Omar #Khadr out on bail. Story. j.mp/1F8mO87 #cdnpoli

CBCAlerts

#OmarKhadr to speak outside his lawyer Dennis Edney's house in #Edmonton at 6.30 pm/et. #cdnpoli

CTV_PowerPlay

.@andreaprasow says it's Canada's obligation to rehabilitate Omar Khadr #cdnpoli #ctvpp

CTV_PowerPlay

Perrin: Charter Challenge would strike down "life means life" bill. Says bill is "heading for a train wreck." #cdnpoli #ctvpp

TorontoStar

What Omar #Khadr's lawyer said: 'Mr. Harper is a bigot' on.thestar.com/1F1WKtm

PnPCBC

Source tells @evansolomoncbc you are going to be surprised how "articulate" and "balanced" Omar #Khadr will be.
He is "amazing young man."

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

wicary

Tory budget bill imposes sick-leave changes, setting up battle with federal unions, @curryb reports
http://www.theglobeandmail.com/news/politics/conservative-budget-bill-sets-up-battle-with-federal-unions/article24309929/ ... #cdnpoli

CBCNews

Federal government fends off criticism over $97M in 'lapsed' funds ift.tt/1csPpsf

INTERNATIONAL

StewartBellNP

AQAP leader who called for 'lone wolf' terror attacks in Canada killed in US drone strike. <http://natpo.st/1bB3Wkj>

Reuters

White House fence getting sharper spikes in security upgrade reut.rs/1cbVAQO

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
May 8, 2015 / le 8 mai 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Harper Brushes Off Khadr Remarks, MacKay Acknowledges Them

Prime Minister Stephen Harper sounded an unrepentant note Friday about his Conservative government's failed efforts to keep former Guantanamo Bay prisoner Omar Khadr behind bars. Khadr has pleaded guilty to serious crimes, including murder, Harper told a news conference, adding that his thoughts and prayers would remain with the family of U.S. Sgt. Christopher Speer. Khadr, now 28, pleaded guilty in October 2010 before a widely discredited military commission to five war crimes — including murder in the death of Speer, a U.S. special forces soldier. Prime Minister Stephen Harper sounded an unrepentant note Friday about his Conservative government's failed efforts to keep former Guantanamo Bay prisoner Omar Khadr behind bars. Khadr has pleaded guilty to serious crimes, including murder, Harper told a news conference, adding that his thoughts and prayers would remain with the family of U.S. Sgt. Christopher Speer. Khadr, now 28, pleaded guilty in October 2010 before a widely discredited military commission to five war crimes — including murder in the death of Speer, a U.S. special forces soldier. (...)After Khadr's release, a spokesperson for Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said *the minister regretted that a convicted terrorist had been released without having served his full sentence. Canadian Press (Huffington Post, Brandon Sun, Mississauga News, CTV News, Edmonton Journal, Toronto Star, Inside Ottawa Valley, Inside Belleville, Simcoe, Brampton Guardian, Hamilton Spectator, Cranbrook Daily Townsman, Aldergrove Star, Mission City Record, Arrow Lakes News, Richmond Review, 100 Mile Free Press, Kelowna Capital News, Vanderhoof Omineca Express, Williams Lake Tribune, Monday Mag, Peace Arch News, Chilliwack Times, Vernon Morning Star, Saanich News, Cloverdale Reporter, Coast Mountain News, Nelson Star, Parksville Qualicum Beach News, Grand Forks Gazette, Comox Valley Record, Houston Today, Agassiz-Harrison Observer, National Post, Free Press, Kimberley Daily Bulletin, Clearwater Times, Castlegar News, Hope Standard, North Island Gazette, Sook News Mirror, Penticton Western News, Nanaimo News Bulletin, Rossland News, Prince Rupert Northern View, Langley Times, Surrey Leader, Caledonia Courier, Campbell River Mirror, Tri-City News, Creston Valley Advance, Lake Cowichan Gazette, Kootenay News Advertiser, Quesnel Cariboo Observer, Smithers Interior News, Kitimat Sentinel, Salmon Arm Observer, Ladysmith Chronicle, Golden Star, Maple Ridge News, Invermere Valley Echo, Terrace Standard, Chilliwack Progress, Alberni Valley News, Westerly News, Courier Islander, CFRA, Times Colonist, Metro News)

Houseguest Omar Khadr a remarkable young man, Patricia Edney says

The woman who has invited Omar Khadr into her home says she has great hope for this "remarkable young man's" future. Weeks ago, Patricia Edney prepared a room for Khadr in her suburban home and bought him clothes, waiting for the day he would be released from a period of incarceration that began when he was 15 years old. That day came Thursday, when an Alberta Court of Appeal judge released the now 28-year-old on bail under strict conditions. Those conditions include living with Edney and her husband Dennis Edney, who is Khadr's lawyer. As well, Khadr will have to wear an electronic tracking ankle device and have limited contact with his Toronto family, including only talking to them via video or telephone under supervision and in English. Patricia Edney says she was "just delighted" when the decision was read Thursday and admits after the stress of the last few months, she burst into tears. "All our hopes and wishes for that moment kind of cascaded and I started to cry. It was wonderful," Edney told CTV's Canada AM Friday morning. Not everyone was pleased with Khadr's release. A spokesman for Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney, Jeremy Laurin, said on Thursday that Khadr had pleaded guilty to "heinous crimes," including the 2002 murder of U.S. Army Sgt. Christopher Speer. CTV News, 1

Chief Isadore Day – C-51 Glaring Theft of Charter Rights and Freedoms

The Anti-Terrorism Act, also known as Bill C-51, easily passed third reading this week by a margin of 183 to 96. Chief Isadore Day, candidate for the Ontario Regional Chief position says, "Thanks to the Conservative government's majority, and the promised support of the third-party Liberals, we are witnessing one of the most glaring thefts of Charter Rights and Freedoms, known in modern times." Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney has said the legislation is required to keep Canadians safe from Jihadi-inspired attacks like those that claimed the lives of two soldiers in attacks just days apart last October. Chief Isadore Day along with a majority number of Canadians and First Nations alike, say that the federal Conservatives have designed other agendas in this bill that are clearly targeting Indigenous Peoples who step out and protest against government policy and/or development. "Chiefs in Ontario do not need more talk on Bill C-51 and its infringements – we need action," said Chief Day. "Simply, a third reading means that federal parliamentarians have had their say – we must turn up the volume in the loud speaker to the Governor General of Canada and denounce the passage of this through the "Royal Assent" process. We need to support and seek standing in a constitutional challenge; and we must educate all Canadians and Indigenous people across this country, and we must continue to rally, protest, and peacefully demonstrate against this insanity," urges Chief Isadore Day. It is expected that Day and other First Nation leaders across the country, who are being advised their legal experts, will not let this rest. Net News Ledger

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News provides live coverage of Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney answering questions from the media following an announcement on measures to combat human trafficking. Minister Blaney commented on Omar Khadr's release on bail. Rough transcript

En direct, RDI présente la conférence de presse de Steven Blaney, ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile du Canada et le surintendant principal Jean Cormier, directeur de la Police fédérale de la GRC. On souligne les mesures prises pour lutter contre la traite de personnes. On note le travail de l'équipe de la lutte contre la traite des personnes de la GRC situé à Montréal. Transcription ébauche

En réaction à la libération conditionnelle d'Omar Khadr, le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney affirme, « Il a reconnu ses crimes, nous l'avons accepté, au pays, dans le cadre d'un accord international de transfèrement sur le fait qu'il s'était engagé à servir sa sentence de huit ans. » (RDI, 9h40 ET)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Le recours collectif de la tragédie de Lac-Mégantic autorisé

Le recours collectif intenté à la suite de la tragédie de Lac-Mégantic a été autorisé contre World Fuel services et la compagnie de chemin de fer Canadien Pacifique (CP). Ces deux compagnies sont les seules poursuivies à la suite de la tragédie du 6 juillet 2013 qui a fait 47 morts et détruit le centre-ville de Lac-Mégantic qui ont choisi de ne pas s'inclure dans le règlement proposé en vertu de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies (LACC) de la Montreal, Maine & Atlantic (MMA). En échange de leur participation dans le Fonds d'indemnisation des victimes de Lac-Mégantic, qui atteint près de 300 millions $, les autres entreprises poursuivies pourraient obtenir une quittance des poursuites intentées aux États-Unis ainsi qu'au Canada dans le cadre du recours collectif. La Tribune

Flooding prompts Sask. RM to declare state of emergency

A state of emergency has been declared in the rural municipality of St. Louis due to flooding. Thousands of acres of land are under water in the central Saskatchewan RM, located south of Prince Albert. The RM declared the emergency state Thursday. Flooding around Lac Chicot has made several roads in the area impassable. CTV News \(2015-05-07\); CBC News

Event urges wildfire preparedness

Vernon residents can learn more about protecting their homes from wildfire. Predator Ridge will be the site of wildfire preparedness activities Saturday. "The event will feature a FireSmart information session by the Ministry of Forests' protection branch, demonstrating the tasks that need to be performed as part of becoming a FireSmart community," said Keith Green, Vernon fire chief. The Predator Ridge Community Emergency Management Committee is hosting Wildfire Preparedness Day beginning at 8 a.m. Directions to the event will be available at Predator Ridge fire hall. Vernon Morning Star

10th annual Emergency Preparedness Day

Police cars, fire trucks, army tanks. These are only some of the vehicles being showcased at today's 10th annual Sarnia Lambton Emergency Preparedness Day at the Clearwater Arena. Hundred of children are attending today's event to learn about the importance of being prepared for an emergency. CHOK talked to people at the event to find out their favourite part about the day. This week marks National Emergency Preparedness Week. Families are encouraged to assemble a 72-hour emergency supply kit to celebrate and prepare ahead of time. Blackburn News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

I asked CSIS for its file on me. Here's what I got

Ever wondered if Canada's spy agency has a file on you? We know from Edward Snowden that spy agencies are vacuuming up unprecedented amounts of information. That got me wondering if, somewhere in a Canadian Security Intelligence Service database, my name would turn up. So in January, I asked CSIS to search their records by filling out a form on the federal government's Access to Information and Privacy website. The form took less than five minutes to fill out. Beyond basic personal information – like my home address and birthday – I was asked to tell them what I was requesting. This is what I wrote: "I'd like to be provided with documents or be informed about the existence of documents related to my identity. This might include but is not limited to, internet surveillance, publication history (I'm a journalist), travel history or any record where my name ("Craig Desson") occurs." My expectation of even having a CSIS record was low. Besides watching a few ISIS propaganda videos on YouTube, I couldn't imagine how I might have attracted CSIS's attention. That's why I felt a minor panic when a sturdy envelope arrived in the mail three weeks later. (...) The letter was signed by "Ken Benson, Head, Disclosure I," and included sentences like this: "This is a Program Record and not a Personal Information Bank and thus contains no personal information about you." It also had this line: "Some of the information has been exempted from disclosure by virtue of one or more sections. . . as it relates to the efforts of Canada towards detecting, prevention or suppressing subversive or hostile activities." Toronto Star

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Ottawa auto theft ring bust leads to 2 arrests

Two Montreal men have been charged in connection to a string of vehicle thefts in Ottawa last year. Ottawa police say investigators determined 25 vehicles, mostly Lexus/Toyota products, were stolen from driveways of private residences in various neighbourhoods in Ottawa from April to September 2014. The total value of these vehicles was in excess of $800,000, police say. Six of the stolen vehicles were found in shipping containers at the port in Montreal. Police believe the remaining vehicles were either shipped overseas, dismantled for parts or had their vehicle identification number changed from a stolen vehicle to a legitimate one. [...] Ottawa police say the arrests came as a result of cooperation with Gatineau Police Service, RCMP National Port Enforcement Team and the Canada Border Services Agency. CBC.ca; Ottawa Sun

CTA, PMTC Give Thumbs Up to New eManifest Rules

Two trucking groups have given their endorsement to changes in regulations regarding eManifest information required by Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) prior to arrival in Canada. The Canadian Trucking Alliance (CTA) and the Private Motor Truck Council of Canada (PMTTC) responded following the Wednesday announcement in the Canada Gazette Part II. The rules indicate to carriers that there is now a short time to comply with CBSA's Advanced Commercial Information (ACI) eManifest requirements for all trucks, loaded or empty, coming into Canada. eManifest requires the electronic transmission of manifest information from highway carriers at least one hour prior to the trucks' arrival at the first port of entry into Canada. Information identifying the truck, trailer, shipment and driver can be sent to CBSA through a free web based portal, a direct connection to the CBSA or through a service provider. Beginning July 10, CBSA will begin to issue "zero-rated" penalties under the Administrative Monetary Penalty System (AMPS). That means that although a penalty has technically been issued, no money will be owed to CBSA. The penalty will instead serve as a warning to carriers they must correct the issue that led to the penalty and be prepared to fully comply with ACI requirements. The "zero-rated" AMPS period will last for six months, after which, full AMPS will apply, including monetary fines, beginning Jan. 10, 2016. Today's Trucking

Big fine for undeclared vehicle

Two unidentified Canadian residents paid a hefty penalty for the return of their vehicle after making false statements about its value to Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) officers at the Lansdowne port of entry. The pair was fined $14,382 after falsely stating they were returning to Canada April 21 in their brother's American-registered vehicle, on loan after their own motor vehicle broke down. Further investigation revealed the ownership of the suspect vehicle, valued at $26,150 in Canadian currency, had been transferred to the pair, leading to the CBSA's seizure of the vehicle. If the owners had declared their intention to import the vehicle, they would have been charged about $1,300 in goods and services taxes and $2,900 in provincial sales tax. A CBSA spokesman said the names of the accused are not being released as they face no charges and will not be appearing in a court of law. Recorder.ca

Seaway bridge south span closed

The port of entry to New York state has closed, and will likely remain inaccessible for at least a few hours. It appears there may be a structural problem on the Seaway International south span bridge, said Andre Girard, spokesperson for Federal Bridge Corp., on late Friday morning. "Engineers are right on site now," said Girard, who did not want to speculate on the nature of the problem. He said last year's inspection report was "excellent." The Canada Border Services Agency is urging motorists to use the Prescott port of entry. Girard added that access to and from Cornwall and Cornwall Island remains unchanged on the new low-level north span of the bridge. Standard-Freeholder.com

South channel bridge will be closed for the weekend

Traffic to the United States from Akwesasne and also from Cornwall to the U.S. has been halted and will likely be closed for most of the weekend. Seaway International Bridge Corporation spokesman Andre Girard tells Cornwall Newswatch the bridge has been closed since 8:30 a.m. this morning. Engineers have discovered an extension joint on the bridge deck at the south tower has shifted causing a misalignment of the bridge deck, he said. Speaking with CNW just before 1 p.m. Friday, Girard says the bridge will be closed for up to 48 hours. Girard maintains the integrity of the bridge is good and the latest inspection reports for the south span show "it's in perfect condition." The Canada Border Services Agency is recommending travellers use the border crossing at Prescott as an alternate in the meantime. Cornwall Newswatch; Cornwall Free News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

U.S. concerned about China cyberattack on Internet content: State Dept

The United States is concerned about reports that China has interfered with Internet content hosted outside of China, the State Department said on Friday. "We are concerned by reports that China has used a new cybercapability to interfere with the ability of worldwide Internet users to access content hosted outside of China," State Department spokesman Jeff Rathke said. He said the United States has asked Chinese authorities to investigate the cyberattack. Reuters

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Early-morning police incident in Surrey

It appears a police situation in Surrey is wrapping up. The incident began around 6 a.m.; Chad Dey in the News1130 Air Patrol flew over the scene at a home in Whalley; about a dozen RCMP cruisers were in the area. "The situation is definitely more calm now, at this house at 128th Street and 104th Avenue," he describes. "There are not many details at this time. They had a number of members surrounding this house. There is yellow tape up near the sidewalk, right at the back of this home, but it's still unclear what exactly happened this morning." News1130 has made several calls to the RCMP but they haven't confirmed any details. News 1130; CTV News; Global News; Vancouver Sun

Man pleads guilty in major auto theft ring bust

One man has pleaded guilty to multiple charges, and a second is awaiting trial after police busted a major auto theft ring operating between Ottawa and Montreal. The Ottawa Police Service Organized Auto Theft Section worked in conjunction with Gatineau police, RCMP and the Canada Border Services Agency in the investigation. Cops laid charges against two men in the organized auto theft network that was targeting Lexus/Toyota products. Erik Poulin, 34 of Montreal, was charged on April 9 with 23 counts of theft of vehicle, 25 counts of possession of break-in instruments, four counts of attempted theft and two counts of possession of property obtained by crime. Joel Pilon, 27 of Montreal, was charged with 22 counts of theft of vehicle, 22 counts of possession of break-in instruments and two Counts of theft over $5,000 on March 3. Ottawa Sun

UPDATE: Kamloops police find missing 13-year-old

Officers found a missing teenager who was last heard from yesterday, Wednesday, May 6. Shyla Billy is 13 years old, aboriginal, 5'3" and weighs 130 pounds. She has brown hair with blonde highlights and brown eyes. Cpl. Cheryl Bush, a spokesperson for the Kamloops RCMP, said police were concerned for Billy's well-being and urged anyone with information on her location to come forward. Infote!

Edmontonian's "spidey sense" helps locate stolen trailer: police

Thanks to one man looking to buy a trailer, police were able to find more than $150,000 worth of stolen goods. Almost a year ago, a man reported a suspicious ad for a trailer that he was interested in purchasing. After meeting the seller in person to check out the trailer, the man noticed the VIN of the trailer looked incorrect. Police were contacted and warrants were issued to check the property of the seller, which police found more than $150,000 of stolen goods. Local officers worked in conjunction with 12 RCMP detachments in Alberta and Saskatchewan, along with the Saskatoon Police Service, and Calgary Police Service to recover and return almost $85,000 worth of stolen property to their rightful owners. Metro News; Global News

Portage RCMP share in the RBC Cup experience

RBC Cup fever is picking up speed and the Portage la Prairie RCMP are joining in as they handed out about 100 game tickets to unsuspecting drivers, recently. "What I instructed our members to do was, I gave them various tickets to various games and they went out during their regular patrols and enforcement, and if they found people that were obeying the laws they pulled them over and conducted a regular vehicle stop and informed them that ... we would thank them for driving safely and contributing to road safety and provided them with a complimentary pair of tickets. We've been able to hand out almost all of them and it's been a real positive effect," said Sgt. Brian Brewer. Portage Daily Graphic

Reddit moderator and 'doxing' victim says police reaction lacklustre

A Halifax man who says he was harassed and doxed on a local internet message board says he's had a "frustrating" time trying to get authorities to investigate, even though Nova Scotia has laws against it. Doxing — a shorthand of the word documents — is the practice of posting a person's personal information online, often against a person's wishes. Blake Hebb is a moderator on the popular online forum Reddit, where he says a recent thread about the upcoming federal election got out of control. The political escalated to the personal when Hebb said a user posted Hebb's full name and the street he lived on. "There are very few rules Reddit as an entity enforces, but one of the main ones is don't post personal information," says Hebb... Nova Scotia RCMP and Halifax Regional Police say this is the first case of doxing they've heard of. The RCMP doesn't comment on specific cases. The CyberScan unit, which was established to crack down on cyberbullying, says their involvement depends on what the user is doing with the personal information. If it's used to bully someone online, they can investigate. If someone uses personal information to harass an individual offline, it's a police matter. They referred CBC News to the police on the question of doxing. CBC News

Father appears to confess to killing his daughter, wife and his sister as police descend on burned-out home near Chilliwack

It appears that a man possibly involved in a triple homicide in Rosedale, B.C., has confessed online to murdering his wife, sister and daughter before killing himself by setting the family home on fire Thursday. Police haven't yet confirmed the nature of the fire, but The Province has learned that Randy Janzen, who appears to be a resident of a home that exploded on Llanberis Way, wrote a disturbing confession on his personal Facebook page before shooting his family. The Integrated Homicide Investigation Team has since taken over the investigation of the blaze. While the details are yet to be confirmed, RCMP Insp. Davis Wendell told Global they're investigating a "very serious police incident which has resulted in the deployment of several specialized units." The Province

Cooke Aquaculture says vandals cut fish pens loose in St. Marys Bay

Nova Scotia RCMP are investigating a vandalism complaint filed by New Brunswick-based Cooke Aquaculture after the company says vandals cut loose some of its fish pens. The free floating equipment has since been secured. Nell Halse, a spokeswoman for Cooke Aquaculture, says the company received reports from the Joint Rescue Co-ordination Centre on Thursday that a salmon pen was floating free from a fallow salmon farm in St. Marys Bay, near Digby. "There was a pen that we found yesterday that had been cut away from one of our sites. Our guys have been out there last night and have brought it back to the site and resecured it," said Halse. CBC News

POLICE WEEK: A look at what police and partner agencies do for Kamloops

Local RCMP along with partner agencies plan to tell the public more about the work they do at this weekend's event to celebrate National Police Week. On Saturday, May 9, the public is invited to join local agencies in the Sahali Mall parking lot from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. to see educational displays on law enforcement and partner agencies in town. Families can expect to meet representatives from Kamloops RCMP, Kamloops Fire Rescue, B.C. Ambulance Service, B.C. Sheriffs, Federal Fisheries, B.C. Forestry, Search and Rescue, Community Safety and more. Each agency member will be open to answering questions about their careers. Displays will also include information on government vehicles, some of which will be present on site. Infote!

Idle No More movement was like 'bacteria,' says internal RCMP document

The Idle No More movement was like "bacteria" that spread across the country carrying with it the potential for an outbreak of violence, according to an internal RCMP document shared by senior officers. The internal document was a site report from Attawapiskat Chief Theresa Spence's camp which was set up during her liquids-only fast on Victoria Island in the Ottawa River within sight of Parliament Hill and the Supreme Court of Canada. The camp became a hub of activity during the height of the Idle No More movement between December 2012 and January 2013. The site report was written by RCMP Cpl. Wayne Russett, the Aboriginal liaison for the national capital region, and sent to Insp. Mike LeSage, the acting director general for National Aboriginal Policing. LeSage passed it on to Carrie Ann McPherson, a senior analyst with the RCMP's Operations Intelligence Analysis Section. APTN (2015-05-07)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Insulté par l'avocat d'Omar Khadr, Stephen Harper ne commente pas

Traité de sectaire et d'islamophobe par l'avocat d'Omar Khadr, jeudi, M. Harper n'a pas voulu commenter l'insulte alors qu'il était questionné vendredi matin au cours d'un point de presse à Ottawa. Le premier ministre s'est contenté de répéter que M. Khadr avait plaidé coupable à des crimes graves. Pour le reste, il s'est réfugié derrière le fait que M. Khadr poursuit sa lutte devant les tribunaux. Il a ainsi refusé de faire de plus amples commentaires. Le 14 mai, c'est devant la Cour suprême que les avocats des autorités canadiennes et ceux du jeune homme s'affronteront. Il s'agira alors de déterminer si Omar Khadr aurait dû être traité par les services correctionnels canadiens comme un délinquant juvénile puisqu'il avait 15 ans lorsqu'il a posé les gestes qu'on lui a reprochés. Libéré sous caution jeudi par la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta, M. Khadr attend également un appel de sa condamnation par un tribunal américain. Presse canadienne (Le Devoir, La Presse), iNews 880 (630 CHED)

High-risk sex offender fails to return to Vancouver halfway house

A Canada-wide warrant has been issued for a high-risk sex offender for failing to return to his Vancouver halfway house last night. Gerald Richard McLean, 46, was convicted of sexually assaulting a child in 2000 and a teenager in 1995. He is a two-time federal offender, who is serving a long-term supervision order after completing a two-year sentence for sexual assault. Global News, News 1130

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Broadcast media provide extensive coverage of Omar Khadr's release on bail. (RDI, 9h22, 9h40, 10h12; CBC News, 9h13, 9h42 ET)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Barely Illegal

Barely illegal: Canada's vice laws have undergone radical change in the last few years - but it hasn't necessarily affected how Canadians, and the police, behave. In a two-part package, National Post looks at enforcement (or the lack thereof) around marijuana and prostitution. If several thousand people gathered in Downtown Vancouver for a mass light-up of cigarettes, it would be assailed by condemnations from the city's chief medical health officer. If they came to chug moonshine, the gathering would be stopped in its tracks by riot police. But when a midsize town's worth of people convene to smoke marijuana in the heart of Vancouver, it is essentially a civic institution. On April 20 - the world's unofficial marijuana holiday - as many as 30,000 people gathered around the Vancouver Art Gallery for the city's annual "smoke-out." By mid-afternoon, a crushing throng of people splayed for a block in every direction, all cloaked by a skunky thin haze. National Post

Sexting is a growing danger for young teens

This week York Police raided a home after receiving a tip about a potential child pornography perpetrator but instead found a young teenage victim who was coerced by unknown people on the net to send self-exploitative images of himself on popular social media sites. In May 2014, a global hunt for child pornographers and predators dubbed Project Hydra has led to the arrest and prosecution of dozens of individuals worldwide. But despite global efforts to crack down on child pornography, it continues to thrive and the reason has to do with the ease with which young teenagers can upload and send images of themselves to friends, lovers and other strangers in an instant. Sexting, is the rage among young teens across the world. Thousands of images of young teenagers from Canada and the US are circulating on the web and police are now stressing the need for parents to start educating their children about the dangers of sexting and keep the dialogue going. CanIndia

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Subtropical storm Ana forms off South Carolina coast

Subtropical storm Ana developed Thursday night about 170 miles south-southeast of Myrtle Beach, South Carolina. Ana is the first storm of the 2015 Atlantic hurricane season and it's a month ahead of schedule. The storm sustained winds of up to 25 mph and is moving at a rate of 2 mph. Ana is expected to strengthen but may weaken before it hits the Eastern Seaboard. A tropical storm watch was issued for the coast from Edisto Beach, S.C., to Cape Lookout, N.C. "We have had tropical storms and hurricanes in May before – including a Category 3 storm in 1951, which was named Able," said Weather Network meteorologist Dr. Doug Gillham. The Weather Network

ISIS activity prompts threat level increase at bases

Security conditions at U.S. military bases were raised Thursday night, because of growing concern of a jihadist threat in the U.S. It comes hours after FBI Director James Comey raised the prospect there are thousands of ISIS followers online in the U.S. "We have a general concern, obviously, that ISIL is focusing on the uniformed military and law enforcement," Comey told reporters Thursday. The order was signed by Admiral William Gortney, head of the command. "We have the same concern about the potential threat posed by violent homegrown extremists," said Captain Jeff Davis, spokesman for the U.S. Northern Command which oversees all U.S. military installations in the continental U.S. Davis declined to specify the new security measures. But a U.S. official confirmed to CNN that U.S. military bases are now at "Force Protection Bravo," which is defined by the Pentagon as an "increased and predictable threat of terrorism." US bases generally have not been at this level since the tenth anniversary of the 9-11 attacks the official said. CNN

FBI knew shooter might go to Muhammad drawing contest

FBI Director James B. Comey said Thursday his agents learned hours before the start of a cartoon contest and exhibit depicting the prophet Muhammad that one of the gunmen had expressed interest in going to the controversial event in Texas, but there was no indication he was planning an attack. Comey said the FBI sent an intelligence bulletin to local authorities through its Dallas field office that included a picture of Elton Simpson, 30, and other details such as his associates and possible license plate numbers. "But we didn't know more than that," Comey said in an interview with reporters at FBI headquarters. Simpson and his roommate, Nadir Soofi, 34, who lived in Phoenix, were killed by a local traffic officer as they opened fire at a conference center in Garland, Tex., where the competition was taking place. Washington Post

5 things on NSA's mass spying being deemed illegal

A U.S. appeals court has declared illegal the National Security Agency program that collects data on the landline calling records of nearly every American. The ruling Thursday, the first of its kind by an appeals court, comes as Congress considers whether to continue, end or overhaul the program before June 1, when the legal provisions authorizing it expire. Five things to know about the court ruling, the program, and the congressional debate about where to go from here... Associated Press (Toronto Star)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

rabbleca

Can stop. Will stop. #StopC51 #cdnpoli via @OpenMedia_ca

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Reuters

U.S. concerned about China cyberattack on Internet content: State Dept <http://reut.rs/1cfEnWG>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

GRCNE

La #GRC en Nouvelle-Écosse célèbre la Semaine nationale de la police 2015 <http://ow.ly/MHNPQ>

RCMPNB

RCMP Musical Ride kicks off 2015 tour in New Brunswick, Fredericton, N.B. #fredericton <http://ow.ly/MHUGz> pic.twitter.com/48ZLxi7ogP

georgiastraight

Beleaguered #surreybc Mounties will hold open house to build goodwill in wake of shootings
<https://www.straight.com/blogra/447266/beleaguered-surrey-mounties-will-hold-open-house-build-goodwill-wake-shootings...>

GRCSask

1/2 Une personne disparue peut être trouvée vivante ou décédée, ou peut demeurer disparue après 6 mois. ^mm

GRCSask

2/2 Découvrez ce qui est arrivé à #JaiDisparu <http://www.reginapolice.ca/2015/05/missing-persons-week-outcomes-video/...> ^mm (anglais)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

CBCAlerts

More @CBCNews: #Nunavut's new correctional facility open early due to mould, sanitation, health issues at old prison. <http://cbc.ca/1.3066202>

COMMUNITY SAFETY AND PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

VancouverPD

Have you seen high-risk sex offender Gerald McLean? <http://bit.ly/1KRGIbO> He's wanted Canada-wide.

INTERNATIONAL

CTVNews

U.S. military increases threat level at bases across North America <http://ow.ly/MHlpZ>

washingtonpost

FBI knew Texas shooter might go to Muhammad cartoon contest and sent a bulletin to authorities in Texas
<http://wapo.st/1F9Gvwk>

TorontoStar

5 things on NSA's mass spying that are being deemed illegal. <http://on.thestar.com/1AKO7OF>

CBCAlerts

Chemicals including #Sarin, other nerve gases found at #Syrian military site: Reuters. #UN classifies Sarin as weapon of mass destruction

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
May 21, 2015 / le 21 mai 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Le djihadisme, une «réalité du présent» au Canada, dit Harper

Trois jours après l'arrestation d'une dizaine de jeunes présumés djihadistes à l'Aéroport Montréal-Trudeau, le premier ministre Harper s'est rendu sur les lieux ce midi afin de souligner les investissements supplémentaires de son gouvernement dans la lutte contre le terrorisme. Flanqué de son ministre de la Sécurité publique, Stephen Harper a qualifié le terrorisme islamiste de «réalité du présent au Canada». Dans un garage d'entretien aéronautique, il a rappelé que le dernier budget fédéral incluait des enveloppes supplémentaires de 150 millions sur cinq ans pour la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) et de 5,4 millions sur la même période pour l'Agence des services frontaliers (ASFC). Le bureau du premier ministre a souligné l'importance de ces investissements pour «identifier les voyageurs à haut risque». Mardi, la GRC a confirmé qu'elle venait de mettre la main au collet d'une dizaine de jeunes Québécois qui s'apprêtaient à rejoindre des groupes extrémistes au Moyen-Orient. Leur passeport a été confisqué. La Presse

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

BC's Northeast Experiencing Extreme Fire Danger Ratings

The public is encouraged to exercise caution when it comes to recreational activities in the backcountry. The Wildfire Management Branch reports that fire conditions east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the Peace River are extremely dry with the danger rating in many areas now at "extreme." Exhaust from recreational vehicles could potentially light a wildfire in these current conditions. Firefighters in the Prince George Fire Centre continue to battle the Little Bobtail Lake Fire that initially started on Saturday, May 9th. It is still an estimated 25,000 hectares in size but is 45 per cent contained. More than 315 fire suppression personnel are on the scene along with 11 helicopters, 38 pieces of heavy equipment and six airtankers. Kelowna Now

Feux de forêt : forte augmentation en Saskatchewan

Le nombre d'incendies de forêt a augmenté de 92 % en Saskatchewan en 2015 comparativement à 2014. La province a enregistré 136 feux de forêt depuis le début de l'année comparativement à 85 feux à pareille date l'an dernier. La plupart des incendies de forêt étaient situés dans les régions de Prince Albert et Buffalo Narrows. Douze feux étaient actifs dans la province mercredi, soit le double qu'à la même période l'an dernier. Le gouvernement provincial a pris les grands moyens pour combattre un brasier près de Creighton mercredi. Un bombardier d'eau et un hélicoptère ont été utilisés pour éteindre le feu. L'étendue de la zone touchée et les dommages causés par l'incident sont actuellement inconnus. Par ailleurs, des feux de forêt ont forcé l'évacuation d'environ 650 résidents de la Première Nation Black Lake Denesuline dans le nord de la Saskatchewan le 16 mai. Radio-Canada; CBC News

Canadian Coast Guard temporarily loses radio communication with boat traffic

For at least the second time in a week, the Canadian Coast Guard's vessel traffic control system lost radio communications. The system went down Thursday morning for around 20 minutes. On Sunday, it was down for 15. The outages are drawing attention because they come after the federal government's decision to close the Coast Guard's communication centre in Vancouver and move it to Victoria. And that means that when the system goes down, the centre can't even have visual contact with vessels. The communication centre closure is one of several changes to the Coast Guard in Vancouver that have drawn immense public criticism, including the shuttering of the Kitsilano base in 2012. CKNW AM 980

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Harper announces extra money for RCMP and border services to fight terrorism

Prime Minister Stephen Harper says the federal government will provide substantial resources to the RCMP and the Canada Border Services Agency in the fight against terrorism. Harper announced in Montreal today that the RCMP will receive $150.4 million in new money over five years, beginning in 2015-16, and $46.8 million a year after. The money will go to help the Mounties conduct criminal investigations related to terrorism. The border-services agency will get $5.4 million over five years and $1.1 annually in subsequent years, with some of the funds earmarked for identifying high-risk travellers. Harper says violent jihadism is not a future possibility but is a reality in Canada and around the world. He was speaking at the Pierre Elliott Trudeau International Airport, where 10 youths were arrested last weekend after being suspected of wanting to leave Canada to go join jihadist groups. Canadian Press (Globe and Mail)

Mother of ISIS recruit wants to expose recruiting

Security experts say the struggle against ISIS is different from the fight against Al Qaeda. ISIS is waging a war for hearts and minds that is not just taking place in Yemen, Syria and Iraq. But also in Europe, Canada and the United States. Isis has proven very effective at recruiting people in the west. One Canadian mother has made it her mission to stop them. CNYcentral.com

Secret Documents Reveal Canada's Spy Agencies Got Extremely Cozy With Each Other

Highly classified documents obtained by VICE News offer new insights into how Canada's two-headed spy apparatus works to blend its intelligence, skirt court oversight of its spying powers, and intercept communications inside the country's borders. The documents are protected under Canada's highest intelligence classifications of "secret" and "top secret" and reveal that even the Canadian government was nervous over the agencies' effort to try and give themselves more latitude to operate free of political oversight. The 87 pages, released under Canada's access to information laws, include three agreements between the country's domestic spy agency, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), and its foreign intelligence counterpart, the Communication Security Establishment (CSE), as well as meeting notes and memos. It, however, is carefully redacted to keep secret crucial details about their work. Those who closely follow Canada's intelligence community, were not surprised to learn that the country's two main spy bodies worked so closely. For civilians, like independent member of parliament Brent Rathgeber, it's the limited oversight that gets their antennas up. VICE (2015-05-20)

Le SPVM se garde de lister des indicateurs visibles de radicalisme

Par crainte de « dérapages », le SPVM vient de mettre sur la glace toutes ses démarches pour dresser un « portrait type » de l'apprenti djihadiste basé sur des signes apparents facilement identifiables par les patrouilleurs. « J'ai mis un holà sur tout ce qui est signes et indicateurs. C'est important. C'est là qu'on pourrait déraiper, comme on l'a fait avant, avec le profilage racial », a raconté hier Fady Dagher, directeur adjoint au Service de police de la Ville de Montréal, lors d'un colloque sur la radicalisation tenu à Laval. Du côté de la GRC, la surintendante Martine Fontaine a elle aussi insisté sur l'importance de ne pas se fier à l'apparence des sujets d'enquête. « Il n'y a pas de profil de visage, de couleur de peau, de cheveux. Ce n'est rien par rapport à l'apparence, c'est une question de comportements », a-t-elle martelé. La Presse

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News provides live coverage of PM Stephen Harper in Montreal, speaking on anti-terror efforts. PM Harper said there is no more important task than protecting Canadians. He stated Bill C-51 is designed to help authorities thwart terrorist attacks and allow the exchange of information as well as removing these threats from our streets. He said there is no excuse for a Canadian to become a terrorist. The RCMP and CBSA are receiving more funds to fight terrorist threats. The RCMP will receive $150.4 million in new money over five years, beginning in 2015-16. The border-services agency will get $5.4 million over five years. Rough transcript

Le gouvernement du Québec va proposer un plan d'action pour contrer la radicalisation d'ici la fin du mois de juin. (RDI, 12h06 ET)

The Quebec government will introduce new legislation to try to fight the radicalization of the province's youth. The move follows the arrest of ten young people at Montreal's Trudeau Airport over the weekend. (CBC News, 6h34 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Land of the freeloaders: The battle for a new cross-border bridge

Chapter 1: 'Roy, get the bridge' Amid the homey nasal accents of America's Midwest, Roy Norton's formal locutions and precise enunciations give him the air of a proper gentleman diplomat of the old school. A one-time foreign policy adviser to Joe Clark, the Ottawa native had cashed in an inheritance to study U.S. politics at Harvard—"a sensible investment." Next came a Ph.D. in international relations and a diplomatic career that landed him at the Canadian Embassy in Washington. When his name comes up in conversation, it's often alongside the word "nerd," a label he embraces proudly. White-haired at 60, Norton does not seem like the type of guy to launch into public combat with one of the wealthiest men in America or end up in an episode of The Daily Show. But his life took an unexpected turn in the fall of 2010, when Norton was plucked from Washington and sent to Detroit to serve as Canada's consul general in Motor City. His orders from Ottawa came by phone. The then minister of foreign affairs, Lawrence Cannon, was brief and urgent. Canada wanted a new crossing between Detroit and Windsor. Macleans.ca

Albertans targeted in immigration scams, warns CBSA

The Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) is warning Albertans about a number of immigration scams reported to them in recent weeks. In most cases, the CBSA says victims are threatened via email or phone by someone who tries to scare them into paying fictitious fees for immigration-related issues like permanent resident cards. The CBSA says they will never: ask you to deposit money into a personal bank account. ask you to transfer money through private money transfer service. use free email services, such as Hotmail, Yahoo Mail, or Gmail for official communications. call individuals for the purpose of collecting money, or a payment, via telephone. In another popular scam, the CBSA warns Canadians are meeting people online who say they are from overseas. Once they've established a relationship with that person, the scammer will say they plan to visit Canada, but will end up "detained at the border" unless a large sum money is transferred into a bank account to guarantee their release and entry into Canada. Global News

When saving lives does not count and government promises are not fulfilled

Since claiming a majority victory in 2011, the Harper government, with its Minister of Immigration Jason Kenney, and later Chris Alexander, has succeeded in quickly transforming Canada from a country known for its humanitarian tradition of welcoming outsiders and providing sanctuary to the oppressed into one that fears and distrusts refugees. In 2012, the government implemented the Protecting Canada's Immigration System Act. The Act, according to its architects, mainly aimed to deter 'bogus' refugee claimants who are allegedly wasting Canadian tax money. The government also promised a fairer (and faster) hearing process for refugees. Along with this Act, the Minister of Immigration committed to increasing the number of refugees resettled from overseas, depicted as 'genuine' refugees. [...] Government statements on tax savings are deceptive, however, since they fail to account for the costs associated with enforcing the new deterrence measures. The Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) budget alone grew from 0.997 in 2003-2004 to nearly $1.85 billion in 2013-2014. Then there are the millions of dollars spent on the legal fees of lawyers and consultants hired by the government to fight challenges to health-care cuts, the IRB appeal process, and the human smuggling law. Perhaps the Harper government will insist that spending the tax dollars is essential and justifiable when the goal is to secure Canadians, regardless of the consequences for people fleeing persecution and oppression. In actuality, the government record shows that these exclusive and ineffectual measures are an attack on refugee rights that implement a cynical vision of Canada. Rabble.ca

Busy summer ahead for tankers

Wayne Coulson has big plans for the Martin Mars water bombers this summer. The CEO of the Coulson Group of Companies, which owns the mighty twin tankers, said one of the planes should be in a U.S. museum later this summer, and the other will be training Chinese government workers to fight forest fires there. Chinese workers will be in the Alberni Valley this summer, Coulson said. They'll be learning how to operate the Hawaii Mars - the world's largest flying tanker. But Coulson's plans to ship the Philippine Mars to the U.S. National Naval Aviation Museum in Pensacola, Florida caught the attention of the Canadian Department of Heritage. Under federal law, certain items of historical and cultural value require a special permit to be exported. The CBC reported on the weekend that the federal department notified the RCMP and Canada Border Services Agency of the issue. The Department of Heritage did not comment on the case but noted in an email to the Times that permanent and temporary export permit applications are submitted to and issued by the Canada Border Services Agency permit issuing offices. Coulson said they may have been misinformed about the situation, and seemed to be unaware that the Hawaii Mars is still in the Alberni Valley. He received the notification from the department in an email earlier this year, he said. "They hadn't been told the whole story," Coulson said. "They didn't understand that there was two aircraft." Coulson is confident he can legally export the Philippine bomber, as it was originally built in the U.S. by the Glenn L. Martin Company during the Second World War. Alberni Valley Times

UN Experts Urge Canada To Compensate For Deporting Mentally Disabled Jamaican

Canada's deportation of a Jamaican man with a mental disability who had spent much of his life in Canada amounted to cruel and inhuman treatment, effectively leaving him without the medical and family support he depended on, a UN Committee has found after examining the case. The Geneva-based Human Rights Committee said Canada should allow the man, whom it identified by his initials 'A.H.G.', to return to Canada if he wished and give him adequate compensation. A.H.G., 52, who emigrated to Canada when he was 18 years old, was diagnosed with paranoid schizophrenia in 1993. He was deported to Jamaica on 29 August 2011, after the Canadian authorities ruled that he was not eligible to be in the country on the grounds of serious criminality, in particular as a result of his conviction in 2005 of assault with a weapon. In its findings, the 18-member Committee recognized Canada's legitimate interest in protecting the general public but highlighted that A.H.G.'s criminal offenses were recognized to be related to his mental illness. The Committee experts noted that in 2005, after A.H.G. was evicted from his home and started living in shelters, he had difficulty in taking his medication and experienced psychotic relapses. RTT News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Canada in spy group looking to leverage mobile vulnerabilities: Report

What do we expect from Canadian spy and policy agencies empowered to intercept suspicious mobile communications — warn the public of a vulnerability discovered, or quietly exploit it? That's a question raised by a CBC report today from documents purloined by former U.S. whistleblower Edward Snowden. They show that Canada and the other countries in the Five Eyes spying partnership — the U.S., Britain, Australia and New Zealand — began targeting UC Browser in late 2011 after discovering it leaked revealing details about its half-billion users as part of a strategy to find ways to implant spyware on smartphones. Among the targets were servers used by Google and Samsung mobile app stores, ideal places to introduce spyware. What the agencies didn't do, says the CBC report, was warn the public, Google, Samsung, or UC Browser's maker of any vulnerabilities they found. "That potentially put millions of users in danger of their data being accessed by other governments' agencies, hackers or criminals," said the CBC. The report raises a lot of other questions, including how worried CISOs should be about the apps on the wide number of mobile devices allowed to connect to their networks. At the very least it shows data loss prevention software has to be part of every organization's arsenal. IT World Canada

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A document obtained by CBC News shows electronic intelligence agencies began targeting UC Browser — a massively popular app in China and India with growing use in North America — in late 2011 after discovering it leaked revealing details about its half-billion users. Their goal was to collect data on suspected terrorists and other intelligence targets — and, in some cases, implant spyware on targeted smartphones. The 2012 document shows that the surveillance agencies exploited the weaknesses in certain mobile apps in pursuit of their national security interests, but it appears they didn't alert the companies or the public to these weaknesses. University of Ottawa's Michael Geist, an expert on internet law, is troubled by the notion Canadian agencies are actively looking to exploit vulnerabilities in the software that millions of people are using. (CBC News, 10h02, 12h04 ET)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP take to the sky to catch speeding drivers near Corner Brook

Speeding drivers in Corner Brook had to have their eyes in the sky Wednesday to watch for police, as RCMP utilized a helicopter to catch speeders on the Trans-Canada Highway. Cst. Sam Munden said a spotter in the helicopter was able to monitor drivers as they passed through markers along the highway to find out how fast they were going. After a little bit of math, if it was calculated the driver was violating the speed limit, Munden said the spotter communicated that to the multiple squad cars on the side of the highway. "We'll explain to the driver at that time what method was used to calculate their speed and of course we always bring it back to the aircraft," he said. "It's not something that's used all that often, but it is one of the tools we have available to us. It raises a few eyebrows." According to Munden, there are other spots on the Trans-Canada Highway in this province that have similar markers that enable a police helicopter to monitor traffic when needed. CBC News

Alberta RCMP arrest armed and dangerous suspect

An Alberta man is behind bars after being arrested for a long list of charges connected to a dangerous incident in Grande Prairie. RCMP arrested Brandon Bjorgan, 25, Wednesday afternoon at a home in the northwestern Alberta city. Bjorgan is accused of stealing a pick-up truck and assaulting a woman with a sawed-off shotgun. He's facing numerous charges including robbery, assault with a weapon, and pointing a firearm. Bjorgan has lived in Manning, Edmonton and Grande Prairie. He remains in police custody awaiting a bail hearing. Global News

Surrey mayor addresses crime in State of the City speech

As she looks to stop a streak of shootings in Surrey, the city's mayor says the cost of new RCMP officers is inconsequential. Linda Hepner tackled the "elephant in the room" in her first State of the City speech. She says while statistics could show Surrey is a safe place, if people don't feel safe then that's all that matters. "I think we've made some good progress because I think that first of all, that elephant in the room relative to the crime and the shootings, we've already seen five arrests. We know that tree have gone to crown counsel and have been accepted. So we know we are making some progress there." Hepner says the 100 new Mounties approved by Ottawa will be on the job within the year. "It's actually a pretty specific time line. The contract requires them once the feds have approved to be within 12 months, but we have different levels, so we may get some transfers in, we may get some promotions." CKNW AM 980

Bertrand Charest, former Alpine Canada coach, faces new charges

Former Alpine Canada ski coach Bertrand Charest is set to appear in court again on Friday to face additional charges. Charest, 49, is already facing a total of 56 charges involving 11 alleged victims. He was arraigned in March on charges including sexual assault and breach of trust involving girls and young women between the ages of 12 and 19 between 1991 and 1998. Charest allegedly assaulted the women north of Montreal and in France, Austria, New Zealand and the United States. He has been denied bail and detained since his arrest. Alpine Canada said in a March statement it contacted the RCMP in 1998 about sexual-abuse complaints against Charest. The organization said it opened its own investigation early in 1998 and then told Charest he was being removed as a coach. Alpine Canada maintains it was not aware of the results of any RCMP investigation. CBC News

Creative Kids and RCMP partner for second year

Encore time! Creative Kids Saskatchewan and the RCMP are partnering for the second year in a row. On May 23, their sold-out charity gala will be held at the RCMP Drill Hall at "Depot" Division in Regina, bringing together 400 members of the arts, culture and business communities. Organizers hope to raise $100,000 for grants to help children and youth who need financial assistance to access cultural activities. Last year, the Creative Kids RCMP Charity Gala raised $85,000... The event features entertainment showcasing a variety of artistic mediums, from song and dance to visual arts. RCMP chef Jeff Varls will prepare Saskatchewan-inspired cuisine. All the money we raise goes 100 per cent to supporting applications we receive from children and youth throughout the province of Saskatchewan to participate in art and culture activities right in their own community," explained Nenson. "So kids that have those financial barriers to participation they can't afford to pay for music lessons, dance class, art classes, theatre, that kind of stuff can apply to Creative Kids and we will help pay for those activities." Leader-Post

Baby Albion funeral will be open to the public

The public is invited to attend the funeral for the baby whose body was found on the grounds near the Free Church of Scotland in Mount Albion on April 12. While the identity and family of the newborn, affectionately named Baby Albion by the RCMP, still hasn't been determined, the community and the RCMP have planned a funeral service. The funeral will be held May 30. The Free Church of Scotland with the assistance of the Hennessey Cutcliffe Charlottetown Funeral Home, and Heritage Memorial, are providing a burial and will erect a headstone. CBC News; CTV news

Five designs for RCMP memorial presented to Moncton residents

Moncton residents were invited to see five models vying to be the city's RCMP memorial Wednesday evening. Wednesday night residents saw a variety of ideas that included massive maple leaves, life-sized sculptures of the fallen officers and public areas of reflection related to the event. Global News

RCMP Senate investigations could cost millions on top of $21M audit

Taxpayers spent $21 million on a sweeping new Auditor's General audit that uncovered 10 more senators with troubling expense claims, CTV News revealed Tuesday. Now, CTV has learned it will likely cost millions more in public funds for the RCMP to investigate those 10 unnamed senators. Documents show more than $1.7 million was spent on police investigations into suspended Conservative senators Mike Duffy, Patrick Brazeau and Pamela Wallin, along with retired Liberal Sen. Mac Harb. The RCMP investigations into Duffy, Brazeau and Harb cost $919,775. That's on top of an audit that cost $138,784. The police investigation into Wallin, which is ongoing, cost $823,685 as of last year. That followed an audit that cost $390,058. CTV News (2015-05-20)

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

À l'approche du premier anniversaire de la fusillade de Moncton, la ville souhaite ériger un monument pour commémorer la tragédie. RDI note que le projet va coûter plus de 1 million de dollars et le fédéral va financer le projet ainsi que le provincial et la ville de Moncton. (RDI, 10h23 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Second of four sex offenders on the lam taken into custody

Update: Vancouver police say Gary Vogrig, 51, was spotted drinking near Second Beach in Stanley Park on Wednesday night. He was arrested without incident. Vogrig was the subject of one of four warrants issued in recent days for high-risk sex offenders on the lam. A second offender, 46-year-old Richard Galt of Abbotsford, was also captured after failing to return to his halfway house. However, two sex offenders remain at large: Timothy Daniel Jones, 48, and Gerald Richard McLean, 46. They're both wanted Canada-wide. The Province, CTV News

Man just released on parole said to be victim of Halifax stabbing

A 28-year-old man released on parole earlier this month was stabbed in downtown Halifax Thursday morning. Halifax Regional Police received a call at 9:54 a.m. from the Salvation Army on Gottingen Street. A source at the scene said the injured man is Jason Kyle DeYoung, who was recently released from jail under a number of special conditions. Const. Pierre Bourdages of Halifax Regional Police said the man had been stabbed in the 5500 block of Cornwallis Street, near the intersection of Creighton Street, before making his way to Gottingen Street. He said paramedics took the man to hospital for treatment of what are believed to be non-life threatening injuries. Chronicle-Herald

Saskatchewan court rejects appeal in child porn case

While the defence contended an unconstitutional night search of a home smacked of a "police state" and should warrant overturning a man's conviction on child pornography charges, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal didn't see it that way. Dallas Brian Poole's bail came to an abrupt end Wednesday when the province's top court rejected appeals of his conviction and 27-month prison sentence. Speaking for the appeal court, Justice Peter Whitmore said the judge who presided at Poole's trial had made no error to warrant reversing her decision, and her conclusions were reasonable. "The appellant overstates the effect of the decision below - that it would lead to an acceptance of night searches without authorization. This is not the effect of this case," said Whitmore. "Each case is decided upon its own merits." Poole, 42, was sentenced in April last year to one year in prison for possession of child pornography plus 15 months for creating it after Court of Queen's Bench Justice Janet McMurtry found him guilty of the two charges. Leader-Post

Auditor General: N.W.T. prison spending should focus on illness, not OT

Northwest Territories justice officials defended their record to territorial MLAs at a hearing Wednesday night, responding to a March corrections report by the Auditor General of Canada saying the department is failing to meet key responsibilities in its management of inmates. MLAs are currently reviewing the report prepared by Auditor General Michael Ferguson, which identified numerous major concerns, including everything from the availability of rehabilitation programs to safety gaps at some facilities. Ferguson was also present at the review, fielding questions about the report from MLAs. (...) This spring, Ferguson released reports on the corrections systems for all three territories. At the review hearing Wednesday, he said jails in the Northwest Territories, Nunavut and the Yukon have problems that are particular to each, but all are doing a bad job of dealing with inmates with mental illness. "I think that's something that all correctional systems, including the federal correctional system, is really challenged to figure out how to manage that," he said. "I think most of these systems are not set up to manage mental health issues the way they need to be managed." CBC News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Non-assistance à personnes en danger

Un article d'opinion de la députée Carole Poirier déclare, «La violence - physique, sexuelle et psychologique - infligée aux femmes autochtones est documentée. Selon Statistique Canada, son incidence est trois fois plus élevée que pour les femmes non autochtones. Les actes violents perpétrés contre elles sont également plus graves, en moyenne. Cette violence, que l'on peut qualifier de systémique, est carrément une question de vie ou de mort pour un trop grand nombre de femmes autochtones. Selon la GRC, celles-ci sont quatre fois plus susceptibles d'être assassinées que les femmes non autochtones. Cette tragédie quotidienne ne se déroule pas dans un pays lointain. Elle a lieu ici même, au Québec, ainsi qu'au Canada. Bien sûr, les affaires autochtones sont, pour une large part, de responsabilité fédérale. Mais le Québec a son mot à dire; il partage cette responsabilité et, à notre échelle, non seulement nous pouvons agir, mais nous le devons. Il s'agit d'un impératif moral. Huffington Post

Des élèves suspendus à Bridgewater à la suite de plaintes pour photos inappropriées

Neuf garçons ont été suspendus de l'école secondaire de Bridgewater, en Nouvelle-Écosse, en raison d'allégations concernant des images inappropriées qui mettent en scène des filles. L'histoire a fait surface la semaine dernière quand plusieurs élèves se sont confiés à la directrice de l'école. Il est impossible de savoir pour le moment comment ces photos ont été obtenues et si elles ont été distribuées. Ni le personnel de l'école ni le conseil scolaire ne les ont vues. La direction de l'école a porté plainte au service de police. Les photos sont maintenant entre les mains des enquêteurs. Les neuf garçons ont été suspendus en vertu du code provincial de conduite dans les écoles. La durée des suspensions varie d'un à cinq jours. L'école secondaire de Bridgewater veut se servir de cette situation pour éduquer les élèves et les parents sur les conséquences que peut entraîner la distribution de photos inappropriées. Radio-Canada

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Canada lands second airstrike on ISIL in Syria, marking aerial return to region with assault on 'staging area'

Canadian fighter jets landed their second airstrike on an ISIL compound in Syria on Wednesday, according to the Department of National Defence. Defence Minister Jason Kenney said in a statement that two CF-18 Hornet aircrafts led an aerial assault on an ISIL "staging area" north of Ar-Raqqah, a city in northern Syria. Casualty totals were not immediately clear. Kenney said an assessment of the damage is ongoing, adding that crew members aboard the CF-18 jets returned safely to their base. "These strikes demonstrate our government's firm resolve to tackle the threat of terrorism against Canada and to promote international security and stability," Kenney said. "[W]e will continue to work with our allies and partners to bring stability to the region." National Post

INTERNATIONAL

Terrorist accusations: British man charged with trying to join al Shabab in Somalia

A British man has been charged with making plans to travel to Somalia to link up with Islamic extremists there. Trevor Mulindwa of south London was charged Thursday with preparing to join the al-Shabab group responsible for a string of terrorist attacks in Africa. The 20-year-old is scheduled to answer the charges Friday in Westminster Magistrates Court. Associated Press (FOX News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Gvaliante

Steven Blaney talks in Montreal before PM: says terrorists are targeting Canada simply because of our values. #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

We are running this country with tremendous integrity, Blaney says, contrary to what the NDP says. #cdnpoli

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Justin_Ling

Top secret documents show, for the first time, how closely CSIS & CSE cooperate to spy on you. <http://bit.ly/1EZMihl>

Justin_Ling

We updated our CSE/CSIS spying story to include all of the top secret documents we obtained from the Service. https://news.vice.com/article/secret-documents-reveal-canadas-spy-agencies-got-extremely-cozy-with-each-other?utm_source=vicenewstwitter...

CKNW

Your thoughts on Bill C-51? @OpenMedia_ca says "Canada's privacy deficit" has "alarming consequences for democracy" <http://player.cknw.com>

davidakin

Here's today's PMSH announcement: His government just passed C-51 and is giving the RCMP more resources to fight terrorism.

davidakin

PMO set this up event a couple of weeks ago, before RCMP arrested 10 would-be jihadis earlier this week here at PET airport.

TurnbullJay

Stephen Harper in #Montreal announcing millions to help CBSA and RCMP counter terrorism. #canpoli #cbcmf

TurnbullJay

$150M to RCMP over 5 years and nearly $47M per year afterwards. #canpoli #cbcmf

TurnbullJay

$5.4M over 5 years for CBSA and $1.1M per year afterwards. #cbcmf #canpoli

TurnbullJay

#PMSH says $ will "enhance organization's capacity to conduct criminal investigations related to terrorism" #cbcm! #canpoli

TurnbullJay

Says it will enable CBSA to ID high-risk travellers. #cbcm! #canpoli

Gvaliante

Harper takes stage, says world is dangerous place, talks about Sept. 11, and discusses what he says are terror targets in Canada. #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

We will never forget the murder of our two soldiers on our territory, Harper says in Montreal. #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

"Here in Montreal we saw too many young people who have left their families to join terror groups," Harper says. #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Harper is touting his government's legislation and laws against terrorism that "help make Canadians safe." #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Harper announces "substantial new resources to RCMP and CBSA" to combat terrorism threats "at home and abroad" #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Harper says new resources will "help support investigative abilities of the RCMP." #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Harper says government will utilize "all necessary resources" to protect Canadians. #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Martin Bolduc, VP Operations at CBSA: "Never before has it been more critical for us to work closely with RCMP." #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Harper says he has evidence ISIS using its base to target Canada. #cdnpoli

Gvaliante

Harper: "There is no reason, no excuse, for Canadians to become members of terror groups, it's completely unacceptable." #cdnpoli

RichardMadan

PM Harper re-announcing $$ to enhance border security & anti-terror measures, first promised in #budget2015. Now he's taking q's #cdnpoli

680News

Harper announcement: The threat of violent jihadism is a present-day reality here in Montreal and elsewhere in Canada #cdnpoli

680News

Harper announces "substantial additional resources" to the Canadian Border Services Agency and RCMP to counter terrorism #cdnpoli

danlebla

Annonce de Harper à Mtl: des fonctionnaires servent d'arrière-plan, alors que des partisans dans la foule applaudissent.

AndrewQMI

Why are so many #CBSA and other officers attending what is a very political news conference.... I am not comfortable, Nor should they be..

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CanBorder

CBSA alerts public to immigration scams <http://news.gc.ca/web/article-en.do?nid=977639> ...

GlobalLeth

Albertans targeted in immigration scams, warns CBSA: bit.ly/1PyL9c1

CanBorder

CBSA officers kept #Manitoba communities safe last month by screening for criminality. <http://news.gc.ca/web/article-en.do?nid=977719> ...

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Colinfreeze

New leak from @CBC @the_intercept @citizenlab: #CSE led #FVEY effort v Chinese Web browser <https://citizenlab.org/2015/05/a-chatty-squirrel-privacy-and-security-issues-with-uc-browser/> ...

alexboutillier

New Snowden: Five Eyes (including Canada) planned to infiltrate your mobile by targeting Google, Samsung app stores. cbc.ca/news/canada/sp...

OpenMedia_ca

BREAKING: #CSE and Five Eyes revealed targeting mobile browsers and App Stores <http://ow.ly/NfbIA> #NSA #Snowden

OpenMedia_ca

BREAKING: CBC reports that spy agency CSE is hacking mobile browsers and App Stores - leaving millions at risk.

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

TimesTranscript

Top Story: 5 proposed designs for #Moncton RCMP memorial unveiled last night. See them here: ow.ly/Newgg

CBCNL

Sculptor Morgan MacDonald among 5 memorial proposals for Moncton's slain Mounties cbc.ca/1.3081450

Global_NB

Five designs for RCMP memorial presented to #Moncton residents globalnews.ca/news/2009385/f... by @brionglobal

vicecanada

RCMP Intercept 10 Youths at Montreal Airport Suspected of Wanting to Join Jihadists bit.ly/1eg6kyl via @vicenews

GlobalEdmonton

Alberta RCMP arrest armed and dangerous suspect: gln.ca/NeStm#yeg

TimesTranscript

RCMP continue to investigate possible explosives discovery in Grand Barachois: ow.ly/NeYoQ

VanObserver

Feds approve 100 new #RCMP officers as #Surrey gang war rages ht.ly/Ne25S

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
June 1, 2015 / le 1 juin 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

A lawyer is arguing in a B.C. court this week that the RCMP systematically discriminated against women and a class action lawsuit against the federal government should go ahead. David Klein told reporters Monday that RCMP misconduct has occurred "over a period of months or years," was committed "by multiple perpetrators" and was "ignored by management on multiple occasions." Klein's client, Janet Merlo of Nanaimo, B.C., is seeking to represent 362 women from nine provinces... Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney responded that the government has a zero-tolerance policy on sexual harassment. "Members of the RCMP must feel safe and I'm confident the leadership will face these challenges with the appropriate tools and structures that are currently in place," Blaney said. CTV News; Canadian Press (News 1130; Vancouver Sun)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Feux de forêt au Yukon: un mois de mai record

Le mois de mai a connu un nombre record de feux de forêt au Yukon avec 93 brasiers, dont 70 brûlent toujours. Les températures modérées et la pluie ont fait baisser l'indice de risque d'incendie au cours de la fin de semaine, mais la foudre a allumé 17 nouveaux feux dans les régions de Carmacks, Mayo et

Beaver Creek. Trois nouveaux incendies ont été déclenchés dans la seule journée de dimanche, dont un brasier d'une superficie d'un hectare situé à 18 kilomètres de Pelly Crossing qui a nécessité une intervention immédiate des pompiers. L'incendie de Ruitter Creek à 11 kilomètres de Dawson demeure une priorité pour autorités et s'étend toujours sur une superficie de 220 hectares. Vingt pompiers, aidés d'hélicoptères, d'avions, et de machinerie lourde, combattent le brasier. Radio-Canada; CBC News

Canada's SARS outbreak helped prepare us for MERS, doc says

One of Canada's SARS experts says health-care workers here need to be on guard for Middle East Respiratory Syndrome (MERS) after at least 17 people in South Korea were diagnosed with the virus in recent days. "(A confirmed case) might happen to us anytime. It's not likely, but the truth of the matter is it wasn't likely in South Korea either," said Dr. Allison McGeer, director of infection control at Toronto's Mount Sinai Hospital who travelled to Saudi Arabia in 2013 as part of a World Health Organization team to study MERS. MERS coronavirus, from the same family as the common cold and SARS, is largely centred in Saudi Arabia, but the disease is making its way out of the Middle East. On Monday, health officials in South Korea worked to contain an outbreak there - isolating 682 people for fear they may have the virus. Postmedia Network (London Free Press; Edmonton Sun; Toronto Sun; Calgary Sun)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Government fights disclosure of 'sensitive' CSIS documents on Montreal imam whose passport was revoked

The government has asked the Federal Court for permission to withhold "sensitive" intelligence documents about an Iranian-trained Montreal imam whose passport was revoked last year for national security reasons. Releasing the five Canadian Security Intelligence Service documents "could injure national security," the government argued in court filings that were themselves kept secret until a judge lifted the confidentiality of the case. A hearing on the matter was scheduled for Wednesday. The application for non-disclosure under the Canada Evidence Act was made in the case of Ali Sbeiti, whose Canadian passport was "invalidated" on Nov. 19 without explanation. After Sbeiti challenged the decision in court, the government released official documents showing he had been described by the RCMP's Integrated National Security Enforcement Team as a "subject of interest in an ongoing investigation." National Post

More questions than answers about new deradicalization centre

Almost three months after Mayor Denis Coderre announced the creation of a deradicalization centre in Montreal to great fanfare, neither the city nor the police can say when it will be opened, what or where it will be, or even who is on board. Applications for the centre's director position are being accepted. But the radicalization hotline, set up the same day to receive calls from worried parents or friends, has been ringing: It has received 125 calls since March 9, and the police have intervened on three occasions, according to a statement released by the Montreal police on Monday. The hotline has also received calls for help from five "outside" sources — notably Collège Maisonneuve, the CEGEP where 11 of 17 youths who left Quebec or were arrested at the airport en route to Syria or Iraq attended classes. Montreal Gazette

National Post View: The Parliament Hill shooter's manifesto has finally been released. As usual, it was a total fiasco

An opinion piece states "In March, after months of hemming and hawing over how and when and (outrageously) whether to allow Canadians to see Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's final videotaped thoughts before he murdered a soldier standing guard at the National War Memorial and then stormed Parliament, the RCMP finally released a version that was missing 18 seconds. Commissioner Bob Paulson offered no explanation for the redaction beyond 'sound operational [reasons]'. ... The House of Commons is conducting an internal review of how security forces reacted to the attack, and will release some of it. But Speaker of the House Andrew Scheer did not inspire much confidence before a committee last week when he mentioned such basic facts as "where people were standing at what time, and where resources were deployed," as potentially worthy of redaction. We know some noteworthy details of RCMP actions on Parliament Hill — both good and bad — only because CTV "learned of" the details. Good news is thin on the ground. But Commissioner Paulson has at least promised unambiguously to release the Ontario Provincial Police's review of RCMP operations without delay. For once, he should follow through. This fiasco is unbecoming of a serious democracy." National Post

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Calgary multi-million dollar fraud suspect arrested by CBSA

Calgary Police report Anshul Edison Fernando, a man suspected of taking part in defrauding an elderly victim out of $8 million, was arrested on Saturday, May 30 at the Calgary International Airport. Last week, CPS officers arrested 66-year old Joseph Edison, a.k.a. Joseph Edison Fernando and 37-year old Stephanie Haase Fernando in connection with the alleged scheme. The two have been charged them with fraud and theft-related counts. Beacon News; Calgary Sun

Canada to deport ASWJ man who had amassed large cache of weapons

A member of the banned Ahl-e-Sunnat Wal Jamaat will be deported from Canada to Pakistan next month after he was caught with a cache of firearms, an immigration hearing heard on Monday. According to the daily National Post, Muhammad Aqeeq Ansari had stockpiled Can$20,000 worth of guns and ammunition in the basement of a Peterborough, Ontario home. He has lived in Canada since 2007, but was stripped of his permanent residency and ordered his deportation last month. An immigration and refugee board ruled him inadmissible to Canada on "security grounds" over his membership in the ASWJ, formerly known as Sipah-e-Sahaba Pakistan (SSP). AFP (Pakistan Express Tribune)

Hundreds make final bids to stay in Canada after deportation hold lifted

Ulrick Lafleur reaches into a brown envelope and gently pulls out a large folded piece of paper from the top of a pile of immigration forms. On official Haitian state letterhead with muted lettering, as if the printer needed ink, it informs Mr. Lafleur that his 49-year-old son, Nazaire, was shot to death and that his body was found on the street on May 12. It contains technicalities – his feet were pointing south, and his head north – but no condolences. Beneath that letter is Mr. Lafleur's application for permanent residency in Canada on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. It is dated exactly a week later, May 19, around the same time he received the letter from Haiti. Mr. Lafleur is one of 3,500 people in Canada – 3,200 Haitians and 300 Zimbabweans – who were affected when the federal government lifted a hold on deportations to their home countries, deeming the situation in Haiti and Zimbabwe to be stable. Those without status were given six months to apply for residency on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. Hundreds raced to submit the applications by the June 1 deadline. Some will be granted permanent residency and some will be eventually removed from Canada. Globe and Mail

CBSA Intercept Wisconsin Man At Tunnel

While attempting to enter Canada at the Detroit-Windsor Tunnel, on May 22, Canada Border Security Agency officers referred a Wisconsin man to secondary inspection. There they discovered images of child sexual abuse on electronic devices belonging to the man. The CBSA arrested Jeremy Frederick, 32 of Fond du Lac, WI, and charged him under the Customs Act. He was then turned over to the Windsor Police Service and further charged with accessing and possessing child pornography. The Windsor Square

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Justin Bourque's murderous path haunts Moncton neighbourhood

When Nadege Bujold looks out her front window and onto her quiet residential street, she is still sometimes haunted by the memory of a dying RCMP officer slumping to the ground. Bujold and her husband were on their back patio a year ago, enjoying a sultry June evening when the loud crackle of gunfire sounded out. At first, the pair thought little of it — perhaps a car backfired or kids set off fireworks. But when neighbours began pouring onto the street, shouting that someone was shooting police, the 37-year-old raced inside and peered out her window. She soon saw a solitary figure walking calmly down the street, looking like "Rambo" and closing in on their home with a large gun. At the end of a 70-second burst of gunfire, Bujold watched in horror as Const. Douglas Larche fell to the ground. Justin Bourque didn't break stride as he continued his march down Mailhot Avenue and into the woods. It was 8:07 p.m. last June 4 and Larche had become the last of three Mounties murdered by Bourque in a 20-minute span in Moncton, N.B. Canadian Press (Metro News)

Marc Dupré et Karim Ouellet sur la colline du Parlement le 1er juillet

Marc Dupré et Karim Ouellet font partie des artistes qui se produiront sur scène lors de la prochaine fête du Canada, à Ottawa. La programmation a été dévoilée lundi matin. Les artistes invités comprennent aussi des représentants de la musique pop de Toronto, avec Magic! et le jeune Francesco Yates. Ce dernier, âgé de 19 ans, est considéré par le Billboard Magazine comme le « jeune prodige canadien ». Le chanteur country Gord Bamford, né en Australie, mais qui a grandi en Alberta, est aussi à l'affiche. Il partagera la scène avec Jonas and the Massive Attraction (Montréal, Qc), Andee (Lévis, Qc), The Jerry Cans (Iqaluit, Nunavut) et The Bishop Grandin Marching Ghosts (Calgary, Alberta). Pour ce qui est de la sécurité, la coordination a été revue depuis la fusillade du 22 octobre dernier. « Certainement ça va être très différent avec tout cela », reconnaît la ministre, tout en renvoyant à la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), responsable de la sécurité du la colline, pour les détails. Radio-Canada

Chief Rod Knecht reflects on 39 years of police service - Knecht's path to EPS police chief anything but routine

After nearly 40 years in the police service, Edmonton's chief of police says he's now busier than he's ever been — and he likes it. "It's an exciting time to be a chief of police because there's so much going on," Chief Rod Knecht told Mark Connolly in a sit-down on Monday. "The city is morphing." A huge part of that change comes from Edmonton's rapid expansion. According to Knecht, Edmonton can no longer go on with its small-town attitude, but must instead embrace its position as a growing metropolis, with a growing police force to match. Knecht, a 35-year-veteran of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, has been overseeing that growth for four years now, ever since he retired from Ottawa. "I thought I'd be slowing down a little bit and I can tell you quite candidly anything but ... I can say, as the chief of police, that I'm probably busier now than I was when I was ... as a senior deputy and overseeing all operations for the RCMP across Canada." "This is an exciting job." CBC News

Homme blessé par balle à Bouctouche

Le Groupe des crimes majeurs de la GRC enquête sur un incident au cours duquel un homme a été blessé par balles, vendredi dernier, dans la région de Bouctouche. Radio-Canada

3-year investigation leads to child porn charges

A Stoney Creek man is facing child pornography charges after a three-year investigation, police say. Officers started the probe back in 2012, after another police service executed a search warrant on a server company. Hamilton police won't say what police service was involved, what the company's name is or where it was based. At the time, several servers were seized that contained more than 800 links to child pornography, and Hamilton police launched its own investigation. CBC News

First Nation chiefs demand investigation into death of B.C. aboriginal teen Paige

The Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs is demanding police investigate the government agencies whose alleged inaction led to the overdose death of an aboriginal teenager in Vancouver's Downtown Eastside. Union President Grand Chief Stewart Phillip says workers in health care, education, policing and community agencies may have broken the law by repeatedly failing to report that 19-year-old Paige needed protection. Provincial legislation states that failure to inform the government of a child needing protection is punishable by a fine of up to $10,000 and six months in jail. Vancouver Police Chief Adam Palmer says that an investigation into Paige's death is necessary and that it should be conducted at arm's length by the RCMP. Vancouver Sun

Christopher Phillips, accused in chemical scare, begins trial

The trial of the man at the centre of a January chemical scare began his trial today in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, with testimony from an RCMP officer who said Christopher Phillips was considered a threat to public safety. Phillips, 42, is accused of uttering threats against police and one count of possession of a dangerous weapon - the chemical osmium tetroxide. The chemical can be absorbed through skin and can be lethal. Phillips has pleaded not guilty to the charges. On Monday morning, RCMP Sgt. Lisa Stuart spent two hours testifying about the contents of emails sent to and from Phillips. She said police came to the conclusion that Phillips was considered a threat based on long, rambling emails from him that were turned over to police by Phillips's wife in late January. CBC News; Radio-Canada

Food tampering reports come from Annapolis Valley, Bridgewater - Nail found in potato salad at Woodville community barbecue

Potatoes containing metal objects continued to turn up in food tampering incidents in two different parts of Nova Scotia over the weekend, police reported Monday. Kings District RCMP announced it is investigating an incident where a finishing nail was found in a potato salad at a community barbecue in Woodville on Sunday. No one was hurt in the incident. RCMP said the potato salad was made by Kings Processing in Middleton, which is working with investigators to determine the source of the potatoes. Police have the nail and the partially eaten meal. CBC News

Name the RCMP foal contest begins, contest open to kids across Canada - Six RCMP foal names needed this year

The RCMP is inviting kids from across Canada to help them come up with the names for six foals who were born this spring at the RCMP breeding farm west of Ottawa. The foals may grow up to be part of the world-famous RCMP Musical Ride. "Every year we look forward to seeing the creative names children and young people from across the country submit for the foals," says Superintendent Leslie Cook, Officer in Charge of the Musical Ride Branch. "The Name the Foal" contest is an annual tradition we look forward to, thanks in large part to the enthusiasm of the participants." Beacon News

New Brunswick gears up for another fight over energy project

Nearly two years after New Brunswick made news around the world with its fracking protest, another energy project is raising concerns in the province. On the weekend, hundreds of people rallied against the energy east pipeline. A growing coalition is concerned over its impact on the environment. APTN News

Colby Cosh: The weird, pointless secrecy of reports on Alberta police violence

An opinion piece states "The instinct of Alberta's police for pettifogging, pointless secrecy has now officially reached the point of generating poetry. On May 22, the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team (ASIRT), a provincial police agency that investigates other police forces, released the results of an inquiry into the RCMP's fatal 2013 shooting of a suspect on the Cold Lake Indian reserve. The document tells the unhappy story of a former convict who had continued to lead a violent existence, but who was determined not to go back to jail. The final confrontation is explained, and justified, very convincingly. The report contains all the detail one could desire — except for names. The cop who killed a man is the 'Subject Officer'; the man he killed becomes the 'Affected Person.'... Confrontations having the nature of a distraught or disturbed person's "suicide by cop" are arguably more preventable than other police homicides, and more urgently in need of public scrutiny, not less. ASIRT is sowing confusion between a question of social sensitivity — essentially of etiquette — and a hard ethical principle: criminal justice must always, up to the ultimate limits of practicality, operate in public." National Post

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Officials end lockdown, search at Dorchester Penitentiary

Officials have ended a lockdown that was put in place at the medium security unit at Dorchester Penitentiary on May 27, and the institution has resumed its normal operations. At about 2 p.m. on May 27, a lockdown was put in place in the medium security unit at Dorchester Penitentiary to enable staff members to conduct a general search. The search was ordered to ensure the safety and security of the institution, its staff and inmates. Officials with Correctional Service Canada (CSC) say they are strengthening measures to prevent the entry of contraband into its institutions in order to ensure a safe and secure environment for everyone. Sackville Tribune-Post

Lawyer wants inquiry into aboriginal incarceration in Saskatchewan - Saskatoon lawyer wants to know why Sask. has worse numbers than Alberta, Manitoba

A Saskatoon criminal defence lawyer wants an inquiry into Saskatchewan's over-incarceration of aboriginals. Michael Nolin said Saskatchewan has a disproportionately high number of incarcerated aboriginals compared with the rest of the country. That includes Manitoba and Alberta, both provinces with similar aboriginal populations. "What are the factors in play in Saskatchewan that are causing such a difference?" he asked. Aboriginals make up approximately 11 per cent of Saskatchewan's population, according to Statistics Canada data from 2011. They represent 16 per cent of the population in Alberta and 14 per cent in Manitoba. While aboriginal adults in correctional services exceed their representation in the general population in all provinces and territories, the gap is largest in Saskatchewan. The representation is seven times greater (81 per cent), according to 2007-2008 statistics. In Manitoba, 69 per cent of adults sentenced to custody are aboriginal and 39 per cent in Alberta are aboriginal. As of April 2013, there were 54 active dangerous offenders in Saskatchewan, 45 in Alberta and 17 in Manitoba, according to Corrections Canada. CKOM News

Inmate at federal pen was suspected of plotting to use drone to bring in tobacco

An inmate serving time at a federal penitentiary in Quebec was suspected of plotting to use a drone to smuggle contraband tobacco into the jail, a method that appears to be becoming increasingly popular in such institutions. The detail is just one of many contained in the Parole Board of Canada's recent decision to impose several conditions on the upcoming release of Kris Grabowski, 35, a man serving an 86-month prison term for his role in a home invasion in the Laurentians during which he and his brother Kyle, 29, assaulted a man and a woman while seeking revenge for marijuana plants that were stolen from them. A written summary of the decision reveals that Kris Grabowski has often been a problem for Correctional Service Canada since he started serving his sentence in 2011. He is alleged to have ordered an assault on another inmate following an argument over phone privileges and was himself the victim of an assault. He also refused to undergo urinalysis tests on three occasions based on what he considered a matter of principle. Montreal Gazette

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIAT S

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

ISIS Revamps Recruitment Propaganda

After a selection of tunes, the presenter with an American accent offers "a glimpse at our main headlines." IS militants have just seized three Iraqi cities. A bomb blows up a factory, killing everyone inside. Militants destroy four enemy Hummers and an armored vehicle. The newscast's tone sounds much like National Public Radio in the United States. But this is Al-Bayan, the Islamic State radio targeting European recruits — touting recent triumphs in the campaign to carve out a Caliphate. All news is good news for Al-Bayan's "soldiers of the Caliphate." In this narrative, the enemy always flees in disgrace or is killed. The broadcasts end with a swell of music and a gentle English message: "We thank our listeners for tuning in." Associated Press (Huffington Post)

While nobody was looking, the Islamic State launched a new, deadly offensive

Syrian rebels appealed for international assistance to counter a new offensive by the Islamic State in the northern province of Aleppo that could reshape the battlefield in Syria. The surprise assault launched over the weekend opened a new front in the multipronged war being waged by the extremist group across Iraq and Syria, and it underscored the Islamic State's capacity to catch its enemies off guard. The push took the militants within reach of the strategically vital town of Azaz on the Turkish border and came on the heels of their capture of the Syrian city of Palmyra and the western Iraqi city of Ramadi late last month. The offensive reinforces the impression that the Islamic State is regaining momentum despite more than eight months of U.S. led-airstrikes. Washington Post

NSA surveillance powers in limbo

For the first time since Sept. 11, 2001, Congress curtailed the National Security Agency's authority to track suspected terrorists as lawmakers struggled to restore approval for mass collection of phone records and other surveillance methods. No solution was likely before Tuesday at the earliest. The high-stakes drama played out as Congress debated significant changes prompted by the disclosures of Edward Snowden, the former NSA contractor who revealed the phone records collection and other main surveillance programs. While intelligence officials publicly warned of danger, they said they were not deeply concerned with a lapse of a few days or weeks, given that the authorities remain available in pending investigations. What they most fear is a legislative impasse that could doom the programs permanently. Republican Sen. Rand Paul, a presidential candidate, took credit for blocking the Senate from extending the surveillance powers in an extraordinary Sunday session. Associated Press (Chronicle-Herald)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

TondaMacC

@MinStevenBlaney : "Our govt has a zero-tolerance policy" to sexual harassment within the #RCMP, expect sr mgt to ensure members feel safe.

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

PostmediaWire

Canada's SARS outbreak helped prepare us for #MERS, doc says. Story by @kristyisty #health bit.ly/1AK1rlh

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

rabbleca

"Passed or not passed [Bill C-51] is an illegitimate law we must defeat." -- Josephine Grey buff.ly/1FP5Ed0 #stopc51 #rejectfear

PostmediaNews

Gunman Zehaf-Bibeau urged others to similar attacks in missing video segment ow.ly/NK20W via @OttawaCitizen

mtlgazette

More questions than answers about new deradicalization centre bit.ly/1M5lySt

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

theprovince

Pakistani man caught with $20K weapons cache in Peterborough, Ont., will be deported... theprovince.in/1Q0ztPD
#canada pic.twitter.com/vJrCJRfbmX

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

News1130radio

#RCMP toxic to women, says lawyer as hearing begins for potential class-action bit.ly/1FPQVym

RCMPNS

June 4 marks the 1st anniversary of the Moncton tragedy where 3 #RCMP members lost their lives and 2 others sustained serious injuries. 1/2

RCMPNS

A wreath laying ceremony will be held tmrw (June 2) in the Hfx Hall room at City Hall with @MikeSavageHFX at 11:30 a.m. All are welcome. 2/2

APTNews

New Brunswick gears up for another fight over energy project - APTN National News fb.me/7IE9oxTRH

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

CSC SCC en

Keeping communities safe since before confederation! 180 years of #CSC_SCC and counting... #YGK
#FreedomOfTheCity

CSC SCC en

#YGK #FreedomOfTheCity #CSC_SCC pic.twitter.com/bhxZ80We1F

INTERNATIONAL

washingtonpost

A surprising new offensive by the Islamic State in Aleppo could reshape the battlefield in Syria wapo.st/1AGAh5v

Blogs

RCMP Slam doors shut on High River Access To Information requests

It's one thing for the RCMP to refuse to send all the records I have requested, under the authority of the Access to Information Act (ATIP), regarding the RCMP's illegal searches of 4,666 High River homes following the 2013 flood; however, it's quite another thing to exempt ALL the records I requested in their entirety. I couldn't believe it the first time it happened but now that I have received three responses in a row from the RCMP saying I was being denied copies of ALL the records I requested. It appears that a blanket cover-up is now underway on the High River Forced Entries, Unwarranted Searches and Seizures file. Here are the three High River ATIP files that have been exempted in their entirety in the last five weeks. Please note the hyperlinks in the titles below take you directly to my letters of complaint filed with the federal Information Commissioner and supporting documentation... Canada Free Press

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
June 2, 2015 / le 2 juin 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Allan Légère: Miramichi craint sa libération conditionnelle

Il y a 25 ans, le tueur en série Allan Légère a mis en émoi tout le Nouveau-Brunswick. Le maire de Miramichi, Gerry Cormier, supplie la population de contacter la Commission des libérations conditionnelles du Canada pour éviter que le «Monstre de Miramichi» soit libéré d'un pénitencier à sécurité maximale en Alberta. Allan Légère a droit à une audience de libération conditionnelle cet automne. Plusieurs, dont le maire de Miramichi Gerry Cormier, souhaitent qu'Allan Légère, maintenant âgé de 67 ans, demeure derrière les barreaux pendant le reste de ses jours. «Il est censé avoir son audience en octobre. Le monde se souvient encore de cette terreur. Les gens ont encore peur, même après 25 ans», dit-il. Gerry Cormier se souvient encore des événements de 1989. «C'était une vraie terreur. Il est le Monstre de Miramichi. Même aujourd'hui quand son nom est mentionné, le monde se rappelle de la terreur. Les gens ne veulent pas qu'il soit libre.» Tilly O'Neill Gordon, députée conservatrice de Miramichi, s'est aussi immiscée dans le débat. Elle a soulevé la question devant la Chambre des communes plus tôt cette semaine. Son homologue, Steven Blaney, ministre de la Sécurité publique, a rappelé la position du gouvernement Harper. «Nous allons prendre toutes les mesures possibles pour nous assurer que des individus comme Allan Légère sont gardés derrière les barreaux», a-t-il dit. L'Acadie nouvelle

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Canada says no danger posed by U.S. anthrax shipment

The Canadian government confirmed on Tuesday that it received an anthrax sample kit from the U.S. Department of Defense that might have contained live bacterium, but it said there were no reported illnesses. In a statement, the Public Health Agency of Canada said it received the sample in August 2006, but that it had not been used for over five years and was relocated to a secure laboratory. Reuters; CBC News

Alberta considers lifting northern fire bans

Alberta Environment officials are considering removing fire bans across the north later today and replacing them with less-stringent restrictions. Although fires bans have already been lifted in some areas, much of Alberta currently remains under one because of the dry spring. Wildfire information officer Geoff Driscoll said Tuesday that cooler and wetter weather has helped firefighters gain ground on blazes that had been fuelled by dry, windy conditions. Driscoll said there are 36 wildfires burning provincewide, down from a high of 65. There are still four fires out of control, but at one point 20 were in that category. A major fire 40 kilometres northwest of Cold Lake covers 31,000 hectares, Driscoll said. That blaze led to Canadian Natural Resources Limited and Cenovus to evacuate more than 2,000 workers from energy sites May 23. Edmonton Journal

N.W.T. forest firefighters get weekend off to battle fatigue

Most Northwest Territories fire fighters were given last weekend off, with the territorial government suggesting that it wants to address the issue of fatigue early in what has already become an above-average fire season. Richard Olsen, the territory's manager of fire services, says the decision was made in "recognition of last year," when 385 fires burned in the Northwest Territories at a cost of over $56 million. This season, there are already 51 fires reported across the N.W.T. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Footage from inside Centre Block won't be released for security concerns

A video showing Michael Zehaf Bibeau's first moments inside the Centre Block is being kept secret even as reports are to be made public Wednesday detailing the security response on the day of Parliament Hill shooting. Cameras near the front door of the Centre Block captured Zehaf Bibeau wrestling with a House of Commons security guard and shooting at other guards before sprinting down the Hall of Honour, according to two sources with knowledge of the video. There are no cameras in the hall itself, which runs between the Conservative and NDP caucus rooms. Zehaf Bibeau was killed in a shootout with security forces at the end of the hall. The Ontario Provincial Police had access to the video as part of its multi-pronged investigation into the actions of security forces on the day of the shooting. Heather Bradley, a spokeswoman for House of Commons Speaker Andrew Scheer, says the video won't be made public for security reasons. Canadian Press (Times-Colonist); Presse canadienne (La Presse)

Bureaucrats dismissed, deleted Oct. 22 shooting email alerts as spam: documents

An internal government report shows federal workers deleted emails alerting them to last October's shooting on Parliament Hill because they thought the messages were spam. The report from Agriculture and Agri-Foods Canada, obtained by The Canadian Press, says not every department followed orders to lock down their Ottawa offices. Indeed, the documents say the majority of departmental emergency response plans don't even deal with lockdown incidents. In a separate questionnaire, the department told the Government Operations Centre that briefings and security reports during the day didn't help it make timely decisions, pointing to ongoing communication problems. On Wednesday, the public will get its first look at two reports on how security forces on Parliament Hill reacted on the day of the shooting. Canadian Press (Global News; Globe and Mail); Presse canadienne (L'Actualité)

It doesn't matter who actually killed the Parliament Hill gunman: MPs

With a report into the deadly rampage on Parliament Hill last October expected out tomorrow, we're learning more about what happened that day. While it may not have been Sergeant-at-Arms Kevin Vickers who killed gunman Michael Zehaf Bibeau, MPs say it's not important who fired the fatal shot. The CBC reports the Ontario provincial police report into the shooting will show that Michael Zehaf Bibeau was shot 31 times, and the kill shot to the head was actually fired by an RCMP officer. The NDP's Paul Dewar says this clarifies a lot for him, since he spoke with that very officer on October 22nd. "What he had told us is simply, 'I shot him. He's down. He's dead.'" But several MP's like Conservative James Bezan say regardless of who took that shot, the only thing that matters is that security and RCMP worked together to take out the threat. News 1130; National Post

'You could be branded terrorists': RCMP officer to demonstrators

Protesters at a rally against Bill C-51 were treated to an unexpected conversation about the legislation with an RCMP officer on watch over the weekend. Video of the exchange surfaced on YouTube some time after the Saturday afternoon protest on Parliament Hill in Ottawa. In it, the officer and a couple of protesters are seen discussing Bill C-51, the government's controversial anti-terror legislation. "People are really scared that they're going to be taking the law to the worst possible limit. Is that going to happen? I'm not sure," the officer, so far unnamed, says in the video. "Whenever you're attacking the Canadian economy you could be branded a terrorist, right?" the officer says a little bit later. "Which is not necessarily what's going to happen, but it could happen." It's unknown whether "they" was in reference to the Conservative government, the Department of Justice or law enforcement brass. And it's also unclear whether the officer was relaying his personal opinion about the bill or repeating interpretations and analysis from the media. In a post on his CANADALAND web site, journalist and media critic Jesse Brown noted that the officer believes the bill gives authorities the power to "temporarily revoke a protester's rights and status as a Canadian citizen." Yahoo! News

Accused terrorists could be not guilty of terrorism even if part of al-Qaida: judge

A B.C. Supreme Court judge has told a jury that a couple accused in a bombing plot could be found not guilty of terrorism even if it decides they thought they were acting on behalf of al-Qaida. Catherine Bruce says that Crown prosecutors in the trial of John Nuttall and Amanda Korody have argued the accused were part of a terrorist group involving only them. Bruce says finding that the couple acted on behalf of any other terrorist group would not be enough for a guilty verdict. She reminds jurors to disregard the involvement of undercover police officers because by law they can't be part of a staged conspiracy. Canadian Press (MySask.com)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Gay Palestinian seeking asylum in Canada set to be deported despite death threats

If the Canadian government decides to deport John Calvin back to Palestine on Nov. 4, he believes he will be killed. "It's a known thing that it will be a death sentence, so there would be no way around it," he said from his home in Edmonton. "Scared, terrified, disappointed, there's a bunch of different things that one in my situation would feel." The Canadian government believes the 24-year-old is, or was, a member of the Palestinian militant organization Hamas and therefore is ineligible to seek asylum in Canada as a refugee... Citizenship and Immigration Canada referred a request for comment to the Canada Border Services Agency, which said in a statement that it cannot speak to the specifics of the case and that "the decision to remove someone from Canada is not taken lightly." "Everyone ordered removed from Canada is entitled to due process before the law and all removal orders are subject to various levels of appeal," the statement read. "Our position is clear, once individuals have exhausted all legal avenues of recourse/due process, they are expected to respect our laws and leave Canada or be removed." CBSA says a pre-removal risk assessment by CIC "is one of the safeguards in place to ensure people in need of protection are not removed," which is where Calvin's case currently stands. Global News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

UN watchdog group warns of cyberattacks on nuclear facilities

Nuclear facilities around the world are facing daily cyberattacks on their systems, a United Nations nuclear watchdog group said during a Monday conference. "Reports of actual or attempted cyberattacks are now virtually a daily occurrence," said Yukiya Amano, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). "Last year alone, there were cases of random malware-based attacks at nuclear power plants and of such facilities being specifically targeted." The conference at which Amano spoke, the International Conference on Computer Security in a Nuclear World, is in its inaugural year and goes until June 5, the UN reported. SC Magazine

IRS data breach would have been 'much more difficult' with security upgrades

The Internal Revenue Service failed to implement dozens of security upgrades that might have prevented the hacking of more than 104,000 US taxpayers, according to J Russell George, treasury inspector general for tax administration, at a Senate committee hearing on Tuesday. It would have been much more difficult if they had implemented all of the recommendations we made," George, told the Senate finance committee about the data breach. The data breach occurred in Get Transcript, a system set up to make taxpayers' interactions with the IRS more convenient and allow them to download their tax "transcript" online. The hackers, who attempted to download transcripts from around 200,000 questionable email domains, made about 104,000 successful downloads. To successfully download the transcripts, the hackers must have passed a security screen that asked for required information including a social security number, date of birth, tax filing status and street address. UK Guardian

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

'It erodes your spirit': Hammonds Plains woman alleges gender discrimination, harassment in RCMP

Cathy Mansley said her time in the RCMP eroded her spirit and her self-worth. Now the Hammonds Plains woman is one of hundreds of women who have come forward in a class action lawsuit against the Mounties. The lawsuit is currently before B.C. Supreme Court and has not yet been certified. The female complainants say the Mounties failed to provide a work environment that was free from gender-based discrimination, bullying and harassment. Mansley joined the RCMP in 1995 and worked in the Yarmouth, Tantallon and Sackville detachments. But she describes a working environment that was hostile to women. Global News

RCMP Insp. Tim Shields suspended with pay

B.C. RCMP Insp. Tim Shields has been suspended with pay, CBC News has learned. The high profile former spokesman for the RCMP was suspended May 19, according to "E" division spokesman Sgt. Rob Vermeulen. Vermeulen did not provide a reason for the suspension. Shields is being sued by his former civilian co-worker, Atoya Montague, who is accusing him of sexual harassment. Shields has denied Montague's allegations. CBC News; CTV News; Vancouver Province; Radio-Canada

Christopher Phillips's chemical trial continues in Halifax today

An RCMP forensic science expert says police found 510 different chemicals that could be used to make 11 different homemade explosives when they searched properties where they suspected Christopher Phillips stored chemicals. Phillips, 42, is accused of uttering threats against police and one count of possession of a dangerous weapon - the chemical osmium tetroxide. The chemical can be absorbed through skin and can be lethal. He has pleaded not guilty to the charges. CBC News

Richmond RCMP probe shooting of family dog by Mountie - After being operated on for its wounds, the dog is now convalescing at home, albeit very subdued and heavily medicated

Richmond RCMP has launched an investigation after a Mountie shot a family dog in the face during a property search. The incident happened at 3340 Garden City Road in north Richmond as officers — reacting to reports of a break-in nearby and believing the suspect was still in the area — honed in on a duffel bag, matching the description of the suspect's bag, police say was inside the dog owner's yard. Noticing "beware of dog" signs all over the fencing, officers claim they shouted out to the owners and made plenty of noise so not to startle any animals as they investigated the bag. As they ventured into the yard last Friday around 9 a.m., police say one of the family's two pitbull-cross rescue dogs, Koda, ran at the officers, one of whom fired his weapon as he fled, apparently in fear for his safety. Richmond News (Vancouver Sun)

La Ronge man dies while in RCMP custody

A 43-year-old man has died while in custody of La Ronge RCMP, and the Saskatoon police major crimes unit is investigating. According to RCMP, a man was found unresponsive in the La Ronge RCMP cell on Sunday around midnight. The La Ronge man was taken to a local hospital and then transferred to Saskatoon hospital before being pronounced dead on Monday. RCMP said in a news release that the Saskatoon Police Service was asked to conduct an independent external review into the man's death. In addition, RCMP asked the Ministry of Justice to appoint an independent observer. Saskatoon police will report the results of the investigation to the Ministry of Justice and the attorney general. Star-Phoenix; CTV News; CBC News

Former Canadian Forces members say they were kicked out for being gay, ask government for apology

Darl Wood says she was "purged" from the military 37 years ago for being gay and the memories of what she went through are still vivid. "I was young and idealistic. It sounds naive, but I went into the military just wanting to serve my country," she said. Wood says she had been working for three years when she was called into her boss' office and 'accused' of being a lesbian. I was then taken into custody by the special investigation unit, where I was interrogated for hours and hours," she said. "Two men railed me about my sex life, they wanted to know how, who, when, where and what we did in the privacy of our home and bedroom." Wood is part of the newly-formed "We Demand an Apology" network. Members of the group were in Ottawa Tuesday to band with the opposition and demand a formal apology from the government for the way they say they were treated... Researchers say Wood is one of hundreds, if not thousands of gay and lesbian Canadians kicked out of the military and other national security agencies beginning in the 1950s because their homosexuality was seen as a weakness that could make them vulnerable to the 'enemy'. Victims claim the RCMP even used what was known as a "fruit machine" to identify gay members among the rank and file. The test allegedly measured heart rates as officers were shown pornography. Global News

Moncton cyclists to honour fallen RCMP officers with ride

A group of cyclists in Moncton are coming together to pay tribute to the three RCMP officers killed in Moncton's north end almost a year ago. Henry Greene is organizing a community ride that he says will take place through the very neighborhood where the three RCMP officers were gunned down last June. "I was in the lockdown zone yes and that was scary seeing armored vehicles in the streets." He says it has not been easy for the community to move forward and that's why he and his cycling group are planning a cruise in support of the three fallen officers, their families and RCMP officers still paroling the city. Global News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Correctional service officially installs deputy commissioner of Ontario

Correctional Service Canada held a change-of-command ceremony at its regional headquarters in Kingston on Monday, installing Mike Ryan as the new deputy commissioner of Ontario. He replaces Lori MacDonald, who has taken up another position in the federal government. According to a CSC news release, the ceremony reinforces the responsibility of leadership in the role of the regional deputy commissioner. It represents the symbolic passing of responsibility, authority and accountability from one correctional leader to another. "It is with great pride that I accept the position of regional deputy commissioner to manage Correctional Service Canada in the Ontario Region," Ryan said in a statement. He has held a variety of positions with CSC since 1985. Kingston Whig-Standard

Alexandria man with lust for old ladies dodges dangerous offender tag

An Alexandria alcoholic with an appetite for women of a certain age narrowly escaped a dangerous offender designation last month that could have seen him imprisoned indefinitely. Andre Taillefer, 49, was instead branded a long term offender two years after his latest conviction -- a 2013 criminal harassment rap for spamming a senior with 104 sex notes. The Crown had argued Taillefer was a menace to seniors who couldn't be safely managed in the community. But defence lawyer Geraldine Castle-Trudel convinced Judge Robert Pelletier a fixed sentence and a long-term offender designation -- which will keep him under court supervision for up to 10 years -- would be sufficient. Ottawa Sun

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIAT S

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Man accused of threatening father of Rehtaeh Parsons has charges withdrawn

Charges were withdrawn against a Nova Scotia man who pleaded not guilty to threatening the life of Rehtaeh Parsons's father online after the Crown determined there wasn't enough evidence to convict him. Attorney Eric Taylor said in Dartmouth provincial court Tuesday that he reached an agreement with the defence to dismiss charges of uttering threats and criminal harassment that were laid last year following complaints by Glen Canning. Canning alleged earlier that the charges related to online threats made against him in 2013 on a YouTube site. But, Taylor said a finding of guilt was unlikely even though there was material of a threatening nature. "There were threats that were posted on a YouTube account against the complainant -- that evil would befall the complainant and his family," Taylor said outside court. "There was some suspicion, but obviously not enough for a conviction." Cape Breton Post

INTERNATIONAL

U.S. Red Team agents expose gaps in airport security - Special team from Department of Homeland Security identified a weakness so glaring that the operators successfully concealed mock explosives and weapons from airport screeners 67 out of 70 times

They are so expert at evading airport security that a former head of the Transportation Security Administration once hailed them as "super-terrorists" for their ability to smuggle weapons and other prohibited items aboard planes. They are said to use disguises and false identities, and one recently managed to sneak fake explosives taped to his body past a TSA screener's routine pat-down. But they are undercover federal agents, known as the Red Team, working for the inspector general at the Department of Homeland Security, and their job is to test airport screening in an effort to expose security gaps and keep TSA screeners sharp. In recent tests, the Red Team identified a weakness so glaring that the operators successfully concealed mock explosives and weapons from screeners 67 out of 70 times, according to a law enforcement official who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss internal reports. That stunning failure rate of more than 95 per cent was behind Secretary of Homeland Security Jeh Johnson's decision late Monday to reassign Melvin Carraway, the acting administrator of the TSA. Toronto Star

Allies back Iraq plan against ISIS, Baghdad seeks more help

Western and Arab states carrying out air strikes on Islamic State fighters backed on Tuesday Iraq's plan to retake territory from the jihadist movement after being accused by the Iraqi premier of not doing enough to help Baghdad push back the insurgents. Around 20 coalition ministers met Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi in Paris, in part to persuade his Shi'ite Muslim-led government to repair relations with Iraq's Sunni minority to strengthen its campaign against the Sunni Islamic State, also known as ISIS. Despite a show of unity, Abadi appeared to reject suggestions that Baghdad was paying insufficient attention to reconciliation with Sunni. He said the world had "failed" Iraq, highlighting the significant number of foreign Islamic State volunteers entering Iraq from countries in the coalition. Reuters

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CBCAlerts

Public Health Agency of Canada says testing kit from US that could 'possibly' contain live anthrax was sent to Winnipeg lab in August 2006.

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

globalnews

Parliament Hill shooting email alerts deleted as spam bit.ly/1dcC3Qz

globeandmail

Bureaucrats dismissed, deleted Ottawa shooting email alerts as spam @globepolitics #cdnpoli

Lactualite

Des fonctionnaires ont ignoré les alertes lors de l'attentat au Parlement #polcan bit.ly/1JnPgmb

OttawaCitizen

Who fired the fatal shot that killed Michael Zehaf-Bibeau? Eyewitness account suggests it wasn't Kevin Vickers ow.ly/NMJyv

cmaconthehill

It's now official, the OPP report into the Parliament Hill shooting will be released tomorrow at 1:00pmET. Media lock up at noon #cdnpoli

CP24

Footage of gunman inside Centre Block won't be released cp24.com/news/footage-o...

HRWcanada

#Canada already has ample & sufficient powers to confront violent extremism. Senators vote no to Bill C-51 ow.ly/NLKB7 #cdnpoli

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Frontierecan

Nous utilisons les #chiensdétecteurs pour empêcher l'introduction de contrebande au #Canada. cbsa-asfc.gc.ca/security-secur... #chiensauboulot

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

GetCyberSafe

#SeniorsMonth: It's important that seniors stay informed on how to stay safe when using computers and the Internet. getcybersafe.gc.ca/cnt/prtct-yrsl...

SCMagazine

UN watchdog group warns of cyberattacks on nuclear facilities | ow.ly/NMFO4

guardian

IRS data breach would have been 'much more difficult' with security upgrades trib.al/HKi6KeQ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CTVNews

Accused in N.S. case had enough chemicals to make explosives: RCMP ow.ly/NMqqE

cbcnewsbc

High profile RCMP officer suspended with pay ift.tt/1G2CisR

News1130radio

BREAKING: RCMP Inspector Tim Shields has been suspended with pay. Allegations of sexual misconduct were made against him in 2013

CTVVancouver

Update: High-profile former RCMP spokesman Tim Shields suspended with pay bc.ctvnews.ca/high-profile-m...

GlobalNational

'It erodes your spirit' - Hammonds Plains woman alleges gender discrimination, harassment in #RCMP: bit.ly/1SUaoF1 #Halifax

RCMPNB

RCMP arrest man in connection with 2004 suspicious death #Central Blissville ow.ly/NMHeD

GRCNE

Les techniciens judiciaires de la GRC déchiffrent les codes des pédopornographes et exposent leurs crimes. grc.ca/-7zU

CTVVancouver

RCMP have released new photo of Darwin Lescano, 38-year-old Richmond man accused of killing his mom last month.

INTERNATIONAL

TorontoStar

U.S.-led coalition doubles down on strategy to fight Islamic State on.thestar.com/1la16yA #topstories

Reuters

Allies back Iraq's plan to retake territory from Islamic State: reut.rs/1MhNzXI

WHO

Middle East respiratory syndrome is a newly emerging disease that remains poorly understood goo.gl/1YjqqW #MERS

OpenMedia_ca

BREAKING: US Freedom Act passes as first surveillance reform in a decade, only 2 years after #Snowden 's revelations ow.ly/NN5xI

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
June 14, 2015 / le 14 juin 2015
09:00 – 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 9:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 9h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Court hearing to decide whether $432M settlement for Lac-Mégantic victims can go ahead

A Quebec Superior Court justice will begin hearing arguments Monday that could determine whether more than $431 million can be distributed to victims and creditors of the Lac-Mégantic train derailment or if the entire settlement process will come to a screeching halt. Lawyers for Canadian Pacific Railway - the sole firm accused of responsibility in the rail disaster not to participate in the settlement offer - will argue the process is illegitimate and unfair, according to court documents and lawyers representing the victims. CP spokesman Martin Cej wrote in an email while families of the 47 victims of the July 6, 2013 tragedy deserve compensation, CP is not one of the companies responsible for what happened when the runaway train owned by Montreal Maine and Atlantic Railway Limited (MMA) derailed and exploded in Lac-Mégantic's downtown core. Lawyer Jeff Orenstein, of Consumer Law Group, helped launch a class-action against about 25 companies - including MMA and CP - accused in the derailment. The class action was put on hold, however, pending the result of the settlement process. If the Superior Court Justice Gaetan Dumas approves the settlement fund, all the companies who together offered the combined $431.5 million will be released from legal liability in the U.S. and Canada and permanently removed from the class-action. Montreal Gazette

Rain brings relief for Alberta firefighters

Rain appears to be helping firefighters in Alberta. Provincial wildfire staff say the 14-hundred-hectare Rockslide Creek wildfire received about 15 millimetres of rain by yesterday morning. It's still out of control and has burned into Jasper National Park, but officials say it doesn't pose a threat to Grand Cache or other communities, and they say additional rain is forecast. Rain has also brought relief for firefighters in the Slave Lake area, where crews continue to battle three fires from last week that were sparked by lightning. Canadian Press (CTV News)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Amanda Lindhout breaks silence after RCMP arrest suspect in her brutal kidnapping

The Canadian journalist at the centre of a seven-year probe to find the men who kidnapped and brutalized her for 15 months in Somalia has broken her silence. "I'm not sure I ever quite believed it would happen," Canadian journalist Amanda Lindhout said in a statement released Sunday morning. She was kidnapped in August 2008 alongside Nigel Brennan, an Australian photographer, and their translator and driver, while working as a freelance journalist in Somalia. Lindhout was held for 15 months and tortured, beaten and sexually brutalized in an ordeal she has since detailed in her book, A House in the Sky. For seven years, Canadian officials have been trying to track the men who took her hostage, and on Thursday they made one arrest: Ali Omar Ader. Police believe he was the "main negotiator" in the journalists' kidnapping, and Lindhout recalls him terrorizing both her and her family. When the RCMP called Thursday with the news Ader had been arrested in Ottawa, the reporter says she broke down with relief. "I was stunned that they'd made the arrest. I was even more stunned that the accused kidnapper was in my home country," Lindhout said. "I had forgotten to sit down, and my knees gave out. I lay on the floor crying, saying the words, 'Thank you, thank you, thank you so much,' again and again." On Friday the RCMP detailed the sweeping investigation that spanned continents and investigative services. National Post; Canadian Press (Metro News); Global News; Ottawa Sun; Calgary Sun; Toronto Sun; Globe and Mail; International Business Times; CBC News; Radio-Canada

No military involvement in arrest of Somali kidnapping suspect: Kenney

The Canadian military was not involved in the arrest of a Somali man alleged to have been part of the 2008 hostage-taking of a Canadian freelance journalist, according to Defence Minister Jason Kenney. Speaking to CTV's Question Period, Kenney said he was not aware of any military involvement in the arrest of Ali Omar Ader, who was arrested Thursday in Ottawa, for his alleged role in the kidnapping of Amanda Lindhout and Australian photographer Nigel Brennan in Somalia. Kenney applauded the RCMP for years' worth of investigative work on the case. "The fact that the RCMP, with other international police agencies, have stayed on the case and brought this investigation to a successful conclusion is a great credit to them." Sources told CTV News that Ader's arrest was the result of a sophisticated operation that involved several government agencies as well as the Australian police. Kenney refused to provide any further details. "I can't get into operational details," said Kenney. "I suppose some of that may come out when this person faces a trial." In other remarks, Kenney said Canada's security and police agencies have been on a "higher state of alertness" in the last year, due to domestic and international terror threats, including those posed by Somalia terror group al-Shabaab. "We have seen several dozen Canadians travel to Somalia to join al-Shabaab," said Kenney. "And this is something that we can't ignore ... Those who have not made it abroad but have violent intent obviously impose a serious threat to us here at home." CTV News

Human Rights Watch raises concerns over B.C. terrorism trial - Canadian police using U.S. post-9/11 tactics to target vulnerable individuals in sting operations, group claim

A terrorism trial underway in British Columbia runs disturbingly parallel with an emerging trend in U.S. anti-terror efforts targeting some of society's most vulnerable people, says an international human rights group. Human Rights Watch members have been observing the case of John Nuttall and Amanda Korody, two Vancouver-area residents found guilty earlier this month of plotting to decimate the provincial legislature with pressure-cooker bombs. Andrea Prasow, the organization's deputy Washington director, says the case resembles U.S. authorities' post-9/11 undercover operations to thwart terror attacks before they happen. CBC News

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

CTV News - Question Period interviewed Defence Minister Jason Kenney regarding the arrest of Ali Omar Ader among other subjects. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Russia, China crack Edward Snowden files, U.K. pulls out spies

Britain has pulled out agents from live operations in "hostile countries" after Russia and China cracked top-secret information contained in files leaked by former U.S. National Security Agency contractor Edward Snowden, the Sunday Times reported. Security service MI6, which operates overseas and is tasked with defending British interests, has removed agents from certain countries, the newspaper said, citing unnamed officials at the office of British Prime Minister David Cameron, the Home Office (interior ministry) and security services. He went to Russia via Hong Kong, and although he claimed in 2013 that the encrypted files remained secure, Britain believed both Russia and China had cracked documents which contain details that could allow British and American spies to be identified, the newspaper said, citing officials. British Foreign Secretary Philip Hammond said Snowden had done a huge amount of damage to the West's ability to protect its citizens. An official at Cameron's office was quoted, however, as saying that there was "no evidence of anyone being harmed." A spokeswoman at Cameron's office declined to comment when contacted by Reuters. A Home Office source told the newspaper that Russian President Vladimir Putin did not grant Snowden asylum for nothing. "His documents were encrypted but they weren't completely secure and we have now seen our agents and assets being targeted," the source said. A British intelligence source said Snowden had done "incalculable damage." "In some cases the agencies have been forced to intervene and lift their agents from operations to stop them being identified and killed," the source was quoted as saying. British security agencies declined to comment. The Russian and Chinese governments were not immediately available for comment. Reuters (CBC News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

2 men in hospital after second Surrey shooting in 2 days

For the second time in as many days, two men have been injured in a shooting in Surrey. Surrey RCMP received reports of shots fired between two vehicles in the 18600 block of Highway 10, at about 10 p.m. Saturday night. Officers responded, but didn't find anyone at the scene. Two homes were hit by the gunfire. Nobody inside was hurt. Shortly afterwards, police say two men arrived at hospital with gunshot wounds, forcing the hospital to be put on lock down. The men are being treated for their injuries, which police describe as non-life-threatening. Police say the shooting does not appear random, but it's too early to say if it's linked to other recent shootings in the city. On Friday night, two men were injured in an apparent drive-by shooting that left a home on 152 Street riddled with bullet holes. CTV News; News 1130; Global News; Radio-Canada; Metro News

RCMP, Nelson SARS conduct search for missing Blewett man

Nelson RCMP and Nelson Search and Rescue conducted a ground search of the area around the residence on Blewett Road and the Kootenay Canal/Rover Creek area Saturday evening. Nelson RCMP said to date no signs of Joe Moyer, age 42, have been located. Friends and family advised they will be conducting their own searches this morning, with Nelson Search and Rescue regrouping Sunday afternoon. Family is very concerned as Moyer has not been eating regularly and his condition when last seen was described as weak. Castlegar Source

The culture of sexual abuse in the RCMP and Canada's military - Michael's Essay

An opinion piece states, "Why do we always seem to be shocked, then outraged, when we read about the sexual harassment of women in our armed forces and national police service? The evidence, anecdotal and actual, would fill a dozen filing cabinets in a fair-sized room. We know it goes on. And we know it has gone on for decades. A familiar pattern has developed over the years. Public outrage is followed by promises by the military and the RCMP to do better. Public outrage then cools. To the military leadership of the armed forces and the officer corps of the RCMP, sexual abuse, including sexual assault, seems to constitute a public relations problem to be managed rather than a culture and practice to be expunged. If the years of allegations had been taken seriously, senior serving officers would have been degraded in rank or discharged from the armed forces altogether. Responsible Mounties who engineered cover-ups, and attacked the character of complainants would have been kicked off the force. In the armed forces, denial has become standard operating procedure. As late as last May, the now retiring Chief of the Defence staff said he did not accept the "notion" that sexual violence was part of the military culture. Former Supreme Court Justice Marie Deschamps put paid to that idea in her sweeping report. There is indeed a sexualized culture in the military, she wrote, which intimidates female victims and discourages them from reporting the harassment. It's the same in the RCMP. Female members are fearful of speaking out because of reprisals against their career advancement. Seeking protection in numbers, some 350 female RCMP members are waiting to see if a judge will certify their class action against the forces. To repeat: that's more than 350 women." CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Tories introduce 'born to die' bills before Parliament breaks

The Harper government has stuffed the legislative pipeline with newly introduced bills in the past two weeks, despite being well aware that those proposed laws are dead in the water. Seven of 10 new bills introduced so far this month and sponsored by Conservative ministers are stalled. They range from a new national marine conservation area for Lake Superior and the Georges Bank Protection Act, to motor vehicle safety amendments, copyright changes, new mandatory minimum sentences for gun crime and changes to the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act. With seven or fewer sitting days remaining before the House of Commons rises for the summer recess, the bills can't possibly be passed before the break. Canadian Press (CTV News)

INTERNATIONAL

Kurdish fighters close in on key ISIS-held town, officials say

Thousands of Syrians cut through a border fence and crossed over into Turkey on Sunday, fleeing intense fighting in northern Syria between Kurdish fighters and jihadis. The flow of refugees came as Syrian Kurdish fighters closed in on the outskirts of a strategic Islamic State-held town on the Turkish border, Kurdish officials and an activist group said, potentially cutting off a key supply line for the extremists' nearby de facto capital. Taking Tal Abyad, some 80 kilometres (50 miles) north of the Islamic State stronghold of Raqqa, would deprive the militant group of a direct route to bring in new foreign militants or supplies. The Kurdish advance, coming under the cover of intense U.S.-led coalition airstrikes in the area, would also link their two fronts and put even more pressure on Raqqa. Associated Press (CTV News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

VancouverSun

Firefighters contain blaze near Lytton ow.ly/2ZXA6r

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

AmandaLindhout

It's been a whirlwind few days. Here are some of my thoughts. facebook.com/AmandaLindhout...

VassyKapelos

Amanda Lindhout's statement re: arresr of Ali Omar Ader: facebook.com/vassykapelosgl... #cdnpoli

VassyKapelos

Ader expressed a desire to visit Canada, marry Lindhout and her mother, according to Lindhout #cdnpoli pic.twitter.com/KZ9nGucJjd

StewartBellNP

Amanda Lindhout says she recognizes man arrested by RCMP as kidnapper who made ransom demands. facebook.com/AmandaLindhout...

nationalpost

.@AmandaLindhout breaks silence after RCMP arrest suspect in her 2008 kidnapping in Somalia natpo.st/1FUcOu9

MetroNewsCanada

Amanda Lindhout has thanked the RCMP for capturing and charging her alleged kidnapper ow.ly/Oifgr

CTVAmanda

#amandalindhout releases emotional statement re historic #RCMP arrest of one of her alleged kidnappers #yyc

OttawaCitizen

Amanda #Lindhout breaks silence, thanks RCMP after arrest of suspect in her brutal kidnapping bit.ly/1Fh5IE7

OttawaCitizen12:14pm via Hootsuite

"I lay on the floor crying, saying the words, "Thank you, thank you, thank you so much," again and again." bit.ly/1Fh5IE7

CBCCanada

Human Rights Watch raises concerns over B.C. terrorism trial ift.tt/1V24IE pic.twitter.com/OU2fGFMqge

rabbleca

Yikes! Harper's anti-terror bill will very soon be law. What does this mean? buff.ly/1GzfXU0 #c51 #cdnpoli pic.twitter.com/MU9qZHURjz

INTERNATIONAL

CTVNews

Escaped prisoners could be 'in Mexico by now,' New York governor says ow.ly/OiNwJ pic.twitter.com/jpjTBF8KGm

CTVNews

Kurdish fighters closing in on key ISIS-held town: officials ow.ly/OiNYd

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
June 14, 2015 / le 14 juin 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Earthquake detected near Fox Creek

Natural Resources Canada recorded an earthquake near Fox Creek, Alta., just before 6 p.m. Saturday. The 4.4-magnitude quake was recorded 36 kilometres east of Fox Creek. Earthquakes with a magnitude between 3.5 and 5.4 on the Richter Scale are described on NRC's website as "often felt, but rarely cause damage." EdmontonJournal.com

B.C. wildfire forces evac

The Lytton First Nations community in B.C. has evacuated 10 homes as a 1,500-hectare wildfire south of Lytton, B.C., continues to spread. Another 65 homes are on evacuation alert. B.C.'s Wildfire Management Branch says more than 80 firefighters and seven helicopters are battling the blaze. Edmonton Sun, 48

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Human Rights Watch raises concerns over B.C. terror trial

A terrorism trial underway in British Columbia runs disturbingly parallel with an emerging trend in U.S. anti-terror efforts targeting some of society's most vulnerable people, says an international human rights group. Human Rights Watch members have been observing the case of John Nuttall and Amanda Korody, two Vancouver-area residents found guilty earlier this month of plotting to decimate the provincial legislature with pressure-cooker bombs. Andrea Prasow, the organization's deputy Washington director, says the case resembles U.S. authorities' post-9/11 undercover operations to thwart terror attacks before they happen. Canadian Press (CTVNews.ca)

ISIL fighter's mother in Ottawa, offering a voice for new approach to anti-radicalization

There's another face to Islamic extremism, one filled with tears, not hate. The heart-wrenching documentary film of Christianne Boudreau, mother of a dead 22-year-old Islamic State fighter from Calgary, arrived in Ottawa on the weekend, part of a cross-country tour by the Extreme Dialogue project aimed at reducing the appeal of all forms of extremism among teens and young adults. A second slick film explored the hate-filled radicalization of Daniel Grant, a former white supremacist. The effort is led by the Institute for Strategic Dialogue in Britain, with funding from the federal Kanishka Project. Packages of educational resources to accompany the films and other details are at extremedialogue.org. Boudreau's son, Damian Clairmont, was killed fighting in Syria in January 2014, about four years after he converted to Islam. She soon found, as the mother of a "terrorist," that there was no place to get help with her grief, anger and similar fears for her younger son. She is now one of the country's most vocal advocates for a more nuanced approach to anti-radicalization that doesn't simply demonize individuals. Boudreau spoke to the Citizen Saturday following a showing of the film. OttawaCitizen.com

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Russia and China crack Snowden files: report

Russia and China have cracked the top-secret files stolen by Edward Snowden, according to a report from London newspaper the Sunday Times. The report cites anonymous government sources who said the alleged decryption forced British intelligence agency MI6 to pull its agents out of "live operations in hostile countries." Moscow has gained access to more than a million classified files, according to the Sunday Times report, while China has also decrypted documents which contain details allowing British and American spies to be identified. In regards to questions about any potential Canadian security impact, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and department of Foreign Affairs could not offer comment by press time. Toronto Star, A8; TheSundayTimes.co.uk

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Gun violence sends 2 to hospital in Surrey

Surrey RCMP are investigating, after more gun violence sent two men to hospital on Saturday night. Police said the shooting happened between two vehicles — a white or light-coloured sports utility vehicle (SUV) and a silver Pontiac Vibe — in the 18600 block of Highway 10 in Surrey, B.C. Several people reported hearing shots fired in the area, just after 10 p.m. PT. Police responded and found evidence that shooting had occurred, including bullet damage on two houses. Surrey RCMP said they were alerted by a regional hospital that two victims had turned up with non-life-threatening gunshot injuries. The hospital was subsequently locked down as a safety precaution. Police believe the attack was targeted, but couldn't say whether it was connected to the drug turf war that has recently been blamed for many shootings in the city. CBC.ca; CKNW.com

Two injured in Surrey drive-by shooting

Two men were sent to hospital Friday evening following what's believed to be a targeted drive-by shooting in Surrey. Just before 10 p.m., police responded to the 5700-block of 152nd Street following several reports of shots fired. Upon arrival, Surrey RCMP discovered two men suffering from apparent gunshot wounds. Both were taken to hospital. Their condition is unknown. A man at the scene Saturday morning identified himself as a relative of one of the victims. The man told the Sunday Province that one of the victims was grazed in the head by a bullet, while the other was shot in the foot. The Province, A18; Canadian Press (Times Colonist)

RCMP investigate death of wanted man

Police are investigating the death of a Fort Saskatchewan man who may have died by suicide in his house while police were trying to enter and arrest him. Early Saturday morning, Fort Saskatchewan Mounties went to the residence of a 31-year-old man who was wanted for outstanding robbery related offences and a parole violation. Once inside the home, officers discovered the man in medical distress due to "self-inflicted wounds." EMS were called, but the man was pronounced dead at the scene. The investigation into the death is continuing. Fort Saskatchewan RCMP are being assisted by the Edmonton Major Crime Unit and the Edmonton Forensic Identification Unit. EdmontonJournal.com

Remains ID'd as those of Richmond County woman killed by son

The body of a Richmond County woman, who has been missing for two years, has been positively identified. Human remains exhumed May 27 have been positively identified as those of Michelle Marie Demers. Demers-Kennedy's son, Merlin Demers-Kennedy, of Framboise, pleaded guilty to manslaughter last month in connection with her death. After a seven-month investigation, RCMP arrested the 32-year-old in January 2014. He has been in custody ever since and will be sentenced June 19 in Port Hawkesbury Supreme Court, the release said. TheChronicleHerald.ca; CBC.ca

More guns and drugs, including fentanyl, seized by ALERT Edmonton

More guns - including an assault rifle - and the deadly fentanyl drug have been seized by police, this time from a group of suspected fentanyl and cocaine dealers, says the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams (ALERT). ALERT Edmonton conducted a joint investigation with Bonnyville RCMP that concluded with three search warrants being executed in Bonnyville on June 5. A total of eight firearms and three body armour vests were seized along with an estimated $125,000 worth of drugs. CalgarySun.com

Citizen tip aids arrest of robbery suspects

A call from a concerned citizen about suspicious persons near St. Albert led to the arrest of four young offenders. Around 12:45 a.m., Morinville RCMP received a call from a civilian about the suspicious young people in the Sturgeon River Valley subdivision. After extensive patrols, Mounties located four suspects, along with items that had been stolen from vehicles. Charges for theft from a motor vehicle and possession of property obtained by crime have been laid and all four suspects are expected to attend youth court on Aug. 20 in Morinville. EdmontonJournal.com

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Man jailed for attack on First Nations elder

A man who attacked and robbed a 74-year-old First Nations elder has been designated a dangerous and long-term offender. Kenneth Kirton, 48, was convicted in October 2013 of aggravated assault, robbery and assault. He was sentenced last week in provincial court in Vancouver to 12 years in prison followed by a 10-year supervision order. The Province, A26

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRE

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

NIL

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
June 26, 2015 / le 26 juin 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Attentats : le ministre Blaney parle de gestes ignobles

Le ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile du Canada, Steven Blaney, a qualifié d'ignobles, de morbides et de sauvages les attentats perpétrés aujourd'hui en France, en Tunisie, au Koweït et en Somalie. «C'est avec consternation que j'ai appris qu'une nouvelle attaque terroriste avait été perpétrée en France, sans oublier les incidents qui se sont déroulés en Somalie, au Koweït et en Tunisie», a-t-il indiqué alors qu'il était de passage à Saint-Camille dans sa circonscription de Lévis-Bellechasse. «Cela démontre, a-t-il ajouté, que nous devons faire affaires à une organisation qui est prête à toutes les atrocités pour arriver à ses fins et troubler nos collectivités». Monsieur Blaney a indiqué qu'il a écrit, ce matin, au ministre français de la Sécurité intérieure, Bernard Caseneuve, «pour lui réitérer notre empathie, notre sympathie et notre solidarité». «Nous attendons le résultat des enquêtes qui seront menées, mais tout cela démontre à quel point la menace est réelle et que nous devons rester vigilants», a-t-il conclu. Le Peuple Lévis; Radio-Canada; Journal de Montréal

David Sweat en route vers le Canada?

Même si son complice a été abattu vendredi par les policiers, David Sweat, qui s'est évadé de la prison de Dannemora il y a 20 jours, pourrait choisir le Canada comme prochaine destination. «Nos recherches nous ont permis de développer des preuves comme quoi les suspects pourraient se diriger vers le Canada», a indiqué le Major Charles E. Guess, porte-parole de la police de l'État de New York. Ces propos ont été tenus avant que les autorités localisent et tuent l'autre fugitif Richard Matt. Les préoccupations demeurent toutefois les mêmes, puisque l'un des deux évadés, considéré comme étant extrêmement dangereux, court toujours... Dans l'éventualité où Sweat se déplace toujours à pied, il n'aurait besoin que de quatre heures pour se rendre jusqu'à la frontière canadienne. Seulement 20 kilomètres séparent Malone de Beith, la municipalité québécoise la plus près de la frontière. Les autorités croient que le fugitif se déplace la nuit. «Le Canada ne sera pas un refuge pour les criminels violents et les terroristes, a indiqué Jean-Christophe de Le Rue, porte-parole du ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile, Steven Blaney. Les responsables canadiens de police et de sécurité ont travaillé en étroite collaboration avec leurs homologues américains sur cette situation.» Journal de Montréal

One of 2 escaped murderers shot near Canadian border: reports

Richard Matt, one of two convicted murderers who escaped from a maximum-security prison three weeks ago, has been shot near the town of Malone, N.Y., according to multiple reports. Malone is located 15 kilometres south of the New York-Quebec border. The town is about 50 kilometres southeast of Cornwall, Ont. and approximately 110 kilometres southwest of Montreal. The shooting has not been confirmed by CTV News... Public safety minister Steven Blaney's office said Friday that Canadian officials are working closely with American counterparts to catch the escapees. "All necessary law enforcement resources will be brought to bear," Blaney's spokesperson said. "Should these individuals enter Canada, they will be found and brought to justice." CTV News; iPolitics; New York Daily News; Associated Press (National Post); UK Guardian

Hand it over - Judge agrees Harper government can't be trusted

An opinion piece states "As soon as you draw a comparison to Hitler, you lose the argument. That's the conventional wisdom. Up until that point, however, Federal Court judge Luc Martineau was making a pretty sly point. The occasion was a hearing in Montreal Monday as to whether the federal government should be required to hand over a hard drive of Quebec gun registry data to the court. The request was made by lawyers for information commissioner Suzanne Legault, who launched a court battle Tuesday over legislation that would pardon government agencies who may have prematurely destroyed gun registry data before court cases were resolved. It all sounds a little tangly, but the question is this: can the government be trusted to secure the data until court proceedings have been exhausted? Judging from their past record, the answer is no. So on Monday, Martineau ordered Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and the RCMP commissioner to hand over the goods – which they did the next morning. The message is pretty extraordinary. Martineau agreed that the Harper government can't be trusted. And he wasn't just playing politics." Cape Breton Post

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Fires in northern Saskatchewan lead to evacuations, fire ban

The Ministry of Environment is issuing an update on the escalating wildfire risk in northern Saskatchewan. The province is recommending people avoid travelling north of La Ronge, Sask. A fire ban has been reinstated for all parks within northern forests. Tammy Cook-Searson, Chief of the Lac La Ronge Indian Band, said they are organizing the evacuation of 456 people from Sucker River. An evacuation order has been lifted for the communities of Sikachu Lake and Clam Lake Bridge. Cook-Searson said arrangements are being made to return people to their homes. CBC News; CTV News; CKOM News Talk 650

$20M Alberta flood lawsuit filed against 10 insurance companies

A $20-million lawsuit claims insurance companies didn't honour policies for seniors' and assisted living facilities damaged in the 2013 Alberta floods. The non-profit housing management company, Foothills Foundation, is suing 10 insurance companies. A statement of claim filed at the Calgary Court Centre alleges four seniors' and assisted living facilities in High River and Black Diamond have not received insurance compensation for damages. A fifth property is an administration office in High River. The document details the June 20, 2013 discovery that the properties were "severely damaged or destroyed" by the flood. Insurers were supposed to pay for "remediation and or replacement of equipment, personal property and/or damage to structures or dwellings on the properties." Losses and damages pegged at $20 million, plus other unnamed punitive costs. CBC News

Virus du Nil occidental : risques toujours présents en Saskatchewan

Les risques de contracter le virus du Nil occidental sont plus élevés entre la mi-juillet et la fin août avec les hautes températures, selon les autorités sanitaires de la province. Les intervenants ne sont pas en mesure d'indiquer si les risques sont plus élevés cette année, mais ils rappellent aux citoyens de se protéger contre le virus qui se transmet à l'humain par les moustiques. Un texte de Nahila Bendali La majorité des gens qui contractent le virus du Nil se rétablissent d'eux-mêmes, mais les patients doivent être vigilants si des symptômes plus graves se déclarent, indique la médecin en chef adjointe de la Saskatchewan par voie de communiqué. La province souligne que la prévention est de mise, particulièrement à la tombée de la nuit. Depuis 2003, les autorités provinciales ont recensé 157 cas neurologiques sévères et 17 décès liés au virus. Toute personne dans la province ayant des questions au sujet du virus peut appeler la ligne Info-Santé au 811. Radio-Canada

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Winnipeg ISIS supporter back in custody after losing bail condition

The Winnipeg man labeled a potential terrorist threat by the RCMP is headed back to jail. Aaron Driver, 23, was re-arrested Friday afternoon at his home in Charleswood, after a woman who helped bail him out withdrew her support. "He will be taken into custody the bail is no longer in effect," said Ian Mahon, Chief Federal Prosecutor in Manitoba. Driver was living in a woman's house on Carlotta Crescent; she put up a $1,500 surety and Driver was required to live in her house under strict conditions as part of his bail. Members of the RCMP national security section arrested Driver June 4th at the Carlotta Crescent home, and applied to court for a peace bond over fears Driver "will participate in or contribute to, directly or indirectly, the activity of a terrorist group for the purpose of enhancing the ability of any terrorist group to facilitate or carry out a terrorist activity, pursuant to S.810.01 of the Criminal Code." Global News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés

CBC News' Power and Politics featured a discussion with security experts Amarnath Amarasingam and Mubin Shaikh on terror attacks and Canadian security. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Canadian solar module makers say duties needed to survive cheap Chinese imports

A band of small Canadian solar panel manufacturers is banking on an upcoming trade decision in hopes of surviving an onslaught of low-priced Chinese imports. The four Ontario companies say they hope a decision next week by Canada's International Trade Tribunal will uphold duties on imports they say are priced below the Chinese companies' actual cost of production... An investigation by Canada Border Services Agency alleged in early June that about half a dozen Chinese companies, and a China-based subsidiary of Canadian Solar International, were benefiting to varying degrees from government subsidies – in contravention of World Trade Organization agreements. "We're obviously pleased with their findings," says Silfab's Atkins. "We believe it mimics what we experienced in the marketplace." Canadian Solar International, a Nasdaq-listed company based in Guelph, Ont., declined to comment prior to a report from the trade tribunal, to be released by July 3, that will determine whether the CBSA can continue to charge provisional duties set in March. The law firm acting for most of the Chinese companies didn't respond to requests for comment. Canadian Press (Medicine Hat News)

Florida man tries to enter Canada with four handguns, 10 over capacity magazines

A 54-year-old Florida man is in hot water after getting caught trying to bring four undeclared guns across the border. The man, from Venice, Fla., was trying to enter Canada at the Rainy River border crossing on May 21 to bring his boat to his summer camp for the season. A search resulted in Canada Border Services Agency guards discovering one handgun with loose ammunition. A more detailed examination of the vehicle found three more guns and 10 overcapacity magazines of ammunition. The man has been charged with non-report of goods, willful evasion, possession of illegally imported goods and smuggling. TB Newswatch

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Mountie charged with stealing rifle, shotgun from Manitoba detachment

A Manitoba Mountie is facing several criminal charges, including theft of guns from a detachment. RCMP allege Cpl. Jason Prettie of Dauphin was working in Minnedosa when two weapons were stolen in 2009. A spokeswoman says the rifle and shotgun were not police-issue and had been in RCMP custody. The guns were found this year in a private residence connected to Prettie. The officer has suspended with pay pending the outcome of his court case. Prettie is also charged with obstructing justice and possession of a weapon obtained by crime. He is to appear Tuesday in Dauphin provincial court. Canadian Press (Westman Journal); CBC News; QMI Agency (Winnipeg Sun); Presse canadienne (98,5 FM)

ALERT seizes 'significant' amount of GHB from northeast Edmonton home

More than eight litres of GHB, an odourless, colourless, tasteless liquid commonly called the "date-rape drug" was seized from a northeast Edmonton home last week. The 8.5-litre seizure of gamma-Hydroxybutyric acid, or GHB, was the largest bust of that drug by the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams and resulted in the arrest of four people. A total of 44 charges were laid against the quartet, relating to drugs, guns, stolen property and breaches. Last year, ALERT teams from across the province seized a total of eight litres of GHB. Edmonton Journal; CBC News

Surrey : une fusillade fait 2 blessés

Deux personnes ont été transportées à l'hôpital après une fusillade à Surrey en Colombie-Britannique. L'enquêtrice de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) Anick Pasqua explique que les policiers répondaient à un appel concernant un méfait sur Iona Place, lorsqu'ils ont reçu un autre appel rapportant qu'une personne avait été atteinte par balle. « En arrivant sur les lieux, on a trouvé qu'il y avait deux victimes », souligne-t-elle. Radio-Canada

RCMP seek help locating Taylor McCauley, 15, of Moncton

Codiac Regional RCMP are seeking the public's help in locating a missing 15-year-old Moncton boy. Taylor McCauley was last seen at his residence on June 15. CBC News

UPDATE: RCMP raid huge crystal meth lab in Kamloops, more arrests pending

A massive crystal meth operation capable of producing 60,000 hits of the drug in one batch has been shutdown by Kamloops RCMP in the Barnhartvale area and the two men arrested are facing charges. A house in the 1700-block of Pratt Road has had a heavy police presence in front of it since June 24. According to the RCMP's drug unit coordinator Cpl. Derek Westwick, officers wearing hazmat gear will stay on site until all the evidence is collected and the scene is cleaned up. At this stage in the investigation, Westwick says it appears the lab was operating solely out of a garage on the property. Vernon InfoNews

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Final Confession: Man who killed Ottawa police officer reveals full story of his crime

In 1983, Peter Collins killed police officer David Utman in at Bayshore Shopping Centre. Now, on his own deathbed, he reveals to Andrew Duffy the full story of his crime, what he would say to his younger self, and his plea to die outside prison walls. Ottawa Citizen

Dying Collins waits for "compassionate" parole hearing

Correctional Service Canada (CSC) has sent the case of Peter Collins to the federal parole board for an early hearing to decide if he'll be released after 32 years in prison. It will be the sixth time he has stood before the parole board in the past seven years. A date has not yet been set for the special hearing, convened under a provision that allows for the compassionate release of dying inmates. The legal test for Collins's release, however, will be no different than in past applications. Collins's case is complicated by the fact that he doesn't hold Canadian citizenship and, if released, must be deported to Britain where he won't be subject to mandatory supervision. The parole board has always insisted that a "gradual and structured release" for Collins should include time in minimum-security. Collins, however, said CSC has repeatedly denied his requests to transfer to a minimum-security prison. What's more, CSC has refused to award him the escorted temporary absences that might also help to prove he can be trusted in a less-secure facility or outside prison walls. It is, he said, an impossible Catch-22 situation: The parole board wants him to engineer a structured release, but the prison system denies him the tools to do it. Ottawa Citizen

"Prison is not good for people": Peter Collins

Few people have more experience with the prison system than Peter Collins, which makes his critique of the system, if not unbiased, at least well informed. "I've been in prison for more than 30 years and I'm sure of one thing: prison is not good for people," he says. Collins has done time at Millhaven, Ste-Annes-Plaines, Joyceville and Bath. He has spent three years in two super-maximum security special handling units and long stretches in solitary confinement, including one six-month stint after he was falsely accused of a 1994 inmate murder at Joyceville. Another prisoner was arrested last year in that cold case based on new DNA evidence. Collins says most people emerge from their prison experience more frustrated, unstable and dangerous than when they went in. Ottawa Citizen

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Harper makes changes to senior ranks of public service

The Prime Minister announced a number of changes to the senior ranks of the public service in a press release Friday afternoon. With the retirement Louis Lévesque, Deputy Minister of Transport, Infrastructure and Communities, and Luc Portelance - President of the Canada Border Services Agency - a number top bureaucrats were shifted around four months before the fixed federal election date... Linda Lizotte-MacPherson, currently President of the Canada School of Public Service, becomes President of the Canada Border Services Agency, effective July 6, 2015... John Ossowski, currently Associate Deputy Minister of Public Safety, becomes Deputy Commissioner of Revenue, effective July 6, 2015. Gina Wilson, currently Associate Deputy Minister of Employment and Social Development, becomes Associate Deputy Minister of Public Safety, effective July 6, 2015. iPolitics.ca

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Bomb-making instructions, execution videos and 46K pro-ISIL Twitter accounts: Path to jihad runs wild online

Once on the path to violent extremism, there is no end to what would-be terrorists can find online to solidify their beliefs. It's all just a few clicks away. While it remains unclear just how connected Friday's trio of terror attacks are to the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, there is no arguing that the group has made it maddeningly simple for sympathizers worldwide to take up the extremists' cause. It takes about 30 seconds to create a Twitter account and connect to someone in Syria. And as one journalist in France found out, expressing an interest in ISIL on Facebook quickly leads to a flood of information as the service's algorithms suggest similar sites and friends with the same interests. A constant stream of beheadings and images of children with guns soon starts to seem normal. ISIL has put out a guide to travelling to the territory it controls, as well as information on how to be a jihadi in the West, complete with training on toy Nerf guns, making pressure-cooker bombs and stealing money from infidels. Postmedia News (National Post)

Unknown if Canadians among casualties in Tunisian terror massacre

The Foreign Affairs department says its officials in Tunisia are trying to determine whether any Canadians are among the dozens killed in a fearsome terrorist attack. A gunman fired on sunbathers at a beach near two hotels in the coastal resort city of Sousse. The department says 826 Canadians were known to be in Tunisia. However, that number is only an estimate, since registration is voluntary and the figure is typically not fully representative of the actual number residing or visiting an area. Chronicle-Herald

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

LePeupleLevis

@MinStevenBlaney parle de gestes ignobles #attentats bit.ly/1LAE8o8

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PnPCBC

.@CaliphateCop says Aaron Driver should be in custody. He's endorsing attacks on soldiers, police. No question he's a terrorist sympathizer

PnPCBC

.@CaliphateCop there's one way to deal with these ISIS attacks: send in special ops from Jordan, Turkey; bomb the group in Iraq and Syria.

PnPCBC

.@AmarAmarasingam tells us Aaron Driver - ISIS supporter from Winnipeg - is the real deal. He was plugged in with fighters in Iraq, Syria.

PnPCBC

.@CaliphateCop says we're not really making progress on radicalization.

PnPCBC

.@AmarAmarasingam says ISIS attacked Shia mosque in Kuwait to set off sectarian strife.

PnPCBC

Is the Islamic State's military success in Iraq and Syria inspiring terrorist attacks around the world?

CBCPolitics

MP James Bezan wants Aaron Driver charged for inciting terrorism cbc.ca/news/canada/ma... pic.twitter.com/kZeJ5FT9L8

OpenMedia.ca

"If pressed, say nothing" - that was spy agency CSE's attitude to this key Parliamentary committee.
cbc.ca/news/politics/...

Lactualite

L'agence canadienne d'espionnage électronique se plaint des fuites de #Snowdenbit.ly/1GxSE9K
pic.twitter.com/wLCZya2g6y

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

ottawasun.com

Escaped N.Y. prisoner killed by police: Report ottawasun.com/2015/06/26/esc... pic.twitter.com/bFIUGRonc9

CTVCalgary

One of 2 escaped murderers fatally shot near Canadian border: reports bit.ly/1TSEMjo pic.twitter.com/uFxzXBGHtN

CBCAlerts

#RCMP: No reason to believe #EscapedPrisoners are in Canada. #NewYork police say they may try to cross border.

nationalpost

The two escaped murderers may be headed to Canada, police say, and they're likely armed natpo.st/1LtZLWI

guardian

New York prison break convict Richard Matt shot and killed by police trib.al/5PrdTyC

CanBorder

Four undeclared firearms seized at the Rainy River port of entry news.gc.ca/web/article-en...

CanBorder

Officers stopped a handgun and suspected child pornography from making its way into #Saskatchewan last month.
news.gc.ca/web/article-en...

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

jenniferhollett

On the 5th anniversary of the G20 in Toronto #MyG20 memory: reporting for CBC and chased off the streets by police. pic.twitter.com/88ZNVr7Tdy

VancouverSun

RCMP say two men face charges after meth lab discovered in Kamloops house ow.ly/30Cby5

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

PostmediaNews

Nine senior federal bureaucrats take on new jobs in government ow.ly/ORaaw via @ottawacitizen

INTERNATIONAL

globeandmail

Islamic State attack in northeast Syria reported to displace 60,000, UN says trib.al/bXPbPQs pic.twitter.com/PZPcQCfNQB

nationalpost

Execution videos and 46,000 pro-ISIL Twitter accounts: The path to jihad runs wild online natpo.st/1Lu5TxG pic.twitter.com/Mhimf1AizD

BreakingNews

Islamic State claims responsibility for Tunisia hotel attack via social media account - @Reuters
breakingnews.com/t/BKzj

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
June 26, 2015 / le 26 juin 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

*CP24 reports on a terrorist attack in southeastern France. Minister Blaney's tweet is mentioned.
Rough Transcript*

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NIL

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Latest Conservative ad could violate government's own anti-terror law

A new Conservative attack ad takes aim at Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau's position on the mission against the Islamic State, but it uses the terrorist group's own horrifying propaganda images. In the online ad, posted on the Conservative Party's Facebook page, Trudeau is shown in a CBC interview saying he would end the CF-18 bombing campaign against the terrorist group, also known as ISIS or

ISIL. The ad uses Islamic State propaganda, including gruesome images of prisoners facing death by drowning and beheading -- and those images may actually violate the government's own anti-terror law. The new C-51 legislation gives a judge "the power to order the seizure of terrorist propaganda or, if the propaganda is in electronic form, to order the deletion of the propaganda from a computer system." "Here they are using the music and images of a terrorist organization. So not only does it undermine decency, but it undermines the credibility of the Conservatives on their own bill," NDP MP Paul Dewar told CTV News. Advertising executive Tony Chapman wondered how the uses of ISIS imagery would help the Conservatives score political points. CTV News

Canada's electronic spy agency says Snowden leaks 'diminish the advantage' over terrorists, other targets

Canada's electronic spy agency says leaks by former U.S. intelligence contractor Edward Snowden have "diminished the advantage" it enjoyed over terrorists and other targets, both in the short term and — of more concern — well into the future. In newly released briefing notes, the Communications Security Establishment says Snowden's disclosures about CSE's intelligence capabilities and those of its allies "have a cumulative detrimental effect" on its operations. The Ottawa-based CSE monitors foreign communications of intelligence interest to Canada, and exchanges a large amount of information with partner agencies in the United States, Britain, Australia and New Zealand. The notes, obtained by The Canadian Press under the Access to Information Act, were among the briefing materials prepared for CSE chief Greta Bossenmaier's March 25 appearance before the House of Commons committee on national defence. Documents Snowden handed to the media revealed the U.S. National Security Agency — the CSE's American counterpart — had quietly obtained access to a huge volume of emails, chat logs and other information from major Internet companies, as well as massive amounts of data about telephone calls. National Post (Charlottetown Guardian)

More than a third of Canadians condone torture, says poll

New numbers from the Pew Research Center show that, despite categorical evidence that torture does not work as an investigation tool, over a third of Canadians believe they could justify the torture of terror suspects after 9/11 — and would condone the Canadian government torturing suspected terrorists. The survey asked: "If the Canadian government used torture against people suspected of terrorism to try to gain information about possible attacks in our country, do you think this could be justified or could not be justified?" A whopping 37 per cent said yes, while two per cent said 'it depends'. "I am surprised and frankly concerned that so many Canadians would be okay with using torture on people we haven't even confirmed — just suspected," said Irwin Cotler, retiring Liberal human rights critic and former justice minister and attorney general. Alex Neve, secretary general of Amnesty International Canada, said it's disappointing to see such "significant numbers of Canadians who feel that torture can and could be justified in some circumstances." jpolitics.ca

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Police believe two escaped New York prisoners headed to Canada

Two escapees from an upstate New York prison are believed to be headed for Canada, New York State Police Major Charles Guess said on Friday. Guess said police have a "high degree of confidence" that the convicted killers who fled nearly three weeks ago from Clinton Correctional Facility in Dannemora, New York, about 20 miles from Canada, are moving north to the border. The conclusions were based on items found and being tested for DNA, Guess said, but he declined to give further details. Reuters

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

*CBC News reports police believe two escaped New York prisoners are headed to Canada.
Rough Transcript*

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Police presence will be heavy on Saskatchewan highways this weekend

Expect some heavy police presence on Saskatchewan highways this weekend. In particular - Highway 11. RCMP will be stepping up enforcement and checkpoints on Highway 11 to coincide with the Roughriders regular season home opener. The Riders host Winnipeg at Mosaic Stadium tomorrow at 6:00. RCMP have already sent out tweets and other alerts indicating police presence will be high on the roads. They warn they will be targeting impaired, distracted and aggressive drivers ensuring all fans get to and from the game safely. Police say they will employ this strategy through the entire 2015 season. CKRM 620; CBC News; News Optimist

Two in hospital after overnight shooting near Surrey high school

At least two people were taken to hospital after an overnight shooting in Surrey. Residents reported hearing gunshots in the area of Iona Place around midnight, but RCMP say it is not known how many shots were fired. There is now a heavy police presence in a residential neighbourhood close to L.A. Matheson Secondary School. Investigators say it is unclear whether the shooting is related to more than a dozen others that have been linked to a gang turf war involving the street-level drug trade. Mounties have not released any further information. Canadian Press (the Province); CTV News; News 1130; CBC News

RCMP raid huge crystal meth lab in Kamloops

A massive crystal meth lab has been shutdown by Kamloops RCMP in the Barnhartvale area and the two men arrested are facing charges. Police say a home in the 1700-block of Pratt Road was raided by the RCMP Targeted Enforcement Unit on Wednesday, June 24 as part of an ongoing investigation. Two Kamloops men were arrested, a 55-year-old and a 25-year-old, and are facing charges of production and trafficking of a controlled substance, according to a RCMP media release. "The RCMP Clan Lab Team was deployed to assist with the execution of the search warrant and the processing and cleaning up of the scene," Cpl. Cheryl Bush says in the release. "This process is anticipated to take several days." Infotel; Castanet

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Glen Assoun to miss daughter's wedding after Crown denies move to N.S.

Glen Assoun has missed out on a lot of major family events since he was imprisoned for 1995 killing of his former girlfriend, Brenda Way, a murder he has always said he didn't commit. He wasn't around to watch his children grow into adults, the births of his six grandchildren or to attend the funeral of his mother. After serving more than 16 years in prison, last November the 59-year-old was released on bail while federal officials probe whether he was the victim of a possible miscarriage of justice. But it looks like he's about to miss another huge family milestone: walking his youngest daughter, Amanda Assoun, down the aisle when she gets married in August. His request to move to Nova Scotia to be close to his four children who support him has been rejected. His children are outraged. CBC News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Attentat en Isère : un corps décapité, deux hommes interpellés

Une personne est morte, décapitée, et au moins deux autres ont été blessées dans un attentat commis contre une usine chimique à Saint-Quentin-Fallavier (nord de l'Isère, dans le sud-est de la France). Vendredi matin, une explosion a secoué l'usine Air Products. D'après nos informations, la déflagration a été causée par deux individus qui ont foncé en camionnette contre le bâtiment, percutant des bouteilles de gaz. L'explosion a fait au moins deux blessés. Une tête a été retrouvée accrochée au grillage de l'usine, à côté d'un drapeau avec une inscription en arabe dans une « mise en scène macabre », selon une source policière proche de l'enquête. Le corps de la victime, qui ne fait pas partie des employés de l'usine, a été retrouvé un peu plus loin. Selon une source proche du dossier, la victime était un chef d'entreprise résidant dans le Rhône. François Hollande, qui participait vendredi à un sommet européen à Bruxelles, s'est exprimé avant de rentrer « en tout début d'après-midi » à Paris, où il présidera un conseil de défense restreint à 15 h 30. Le chef de l'Etat a confirmé la « nature terroriste » de cette attaque. Le président a confirmé qu'un suspect avait été « arrêté » et « identifié », et évoqué un possible deuxième auteur dans cet attentat qui a fait un mort et deux blessés légers. Selon nos informations, un deuxième homme, « soupçonné d'avoir fait des repérages sur le site », a été interpellé. Le ministre de l'intérieur, Bernard Cazeneuve, qui s'est rendu sur place, a divulgué l'identité du suspect interpellé : il s'agirait de Yassin Salhi, un homme âgé de 35 ans qui avait fait l'objet d'une « fiche S », pour sûreté de l'Etat, en 2006 pour radicalisation. Cette dernière n'avait pas été renouvelée en 2008. L'homme n'avait pas de casier judiciaire et « résiderait à Saint-Priest » (dans la banlieue sud-est de Lyon), selon M. Cazeneuve. Le ministre a évoqué « plusieurs gardes à vue » en lien avec l'enquête, sans en préciser le nombre. Selon une source judiciaire, l'épouse de Yassin Salhi a été interpellée près de Lyon. Le Monde; Le Figaro; NY Times

37 morts et 36 blessés dans un attentat dans un complexe touristique en Tunisie

Trente-sept personnes ont été assassinées et 36, blessées dans la ville touristique de Sousse en Tunisie, par un homme armé qui a ouvert le feu sur les vacanciers. D'après les autorités, l'attaquant est arrivé par la plage en cachant une carabine Kalachnikov dans un parasol avant d'ouvrir le feu sur les touristes. À partir de là, il est entré dans l'hôtel Imperial par l'aire de la piscine, tout en tirant sur des gens. Il a infiltré l'hôtel Riu Imperial Marhaba de Sousse, une ville située sur la côte ouest de la Tunisie, et a ouvert le feu sur les clients. Les forces de la sécurité sont immédiatement intervenues et l'ont tué "durant un échange de coups de feu". Les autorités croyaient d'abord qu'il y avait plus d'un attaquant, mais le secrétaire d'État du ministère de l'Intérieur, Rafik Chelli, a indiqué à une station de radio qu'il n'y en avait qu'un, un jeune étudiant riginnaire de la ville de Kairouan, inconnu des autorités. La Presse Canadienne (98,5 FM); Associated Press (CP24); BBC News

Explosion At Mosque In Kuwait City Kills 25, More Than 200 Injured

A suicide bomber killed 25 people when he blew himself up inside a packed Shi'ite Muslim mosque in Kuwait city during Friday prayers, the interior ministry said, the first attack of its kind in the major oil-exporting country. The Islamic State militant group claimed responsibility for the attack, which also wounded 202 people according to the interior ministry, in the district of Sawaber in the eastern part of the Kuwaiti capital. Reuters (Huffington Post); Associated Press (National Post); International Business Times

Al-Shabaab kills dozens of African Union troops at base in Somalia

Dozens of soldiers have been killed after Al-Shabaab overran an African Union base in Somalia, according to witnesses. People in the village of Lego, about 62 miles north-west of the capital Mogadishu, described intense fighting on Friday which left corpses strewn on the ground. Witnesses said there were as many as 50 bodies, some of which had been decapitated, but this could not be confirmed. The military outpost had been manned by about 100 Burundian soldiers, part of the 22,000-strong African Union Mission in Somalia (Amisom). AFP (The Guardian); The Nation

Attacks in France, Tunisia, Kuwait prompt fears of jihadi influences' spread

Terrorists attacked sites in France, Tunisia and Kuwait on Friday, leaving a bloody toll on three continents and prompting fresh concerns about spreading jihadi influences. In France, attackers stormed a U.S.-owned industrial chemical plant near Lyon, decapitated one person and tried unsuccessfully to blow up the factory, in what French authorities said was a terrorist attack. In Tunisia, gunmen opened fire at a beach resort, killing at least 27 people, officials said. At least one of the attackers was killed by security forces. And in Kuwait, the Islamic State claimed responsibility for an explosion at a mosque in Kuwait City. Local news reports said twenty-five people were dead and 202 people had been wounded, according to Reuters. There was no immediate indication that the attacks were coordinated. But the three strikes on three continents came at roughly the same time, and a mere days after the Islamic State, the militant group, called for such operations during the Muslim holy month of Ramadan. While authorities in each country were investigating, the timing of the attacks raised the possibility that militants from the group that has seized territory in Iraq and Syria were increasingly inspiring sympathizers to plan and carry out attacks in their own countries. NY Times (Globe and Mail); Bloomberg News (Toronto Star); CNN

Canada 'mourns' after wave of deadly attacks

Prime Minister Stephen Harper condemned a wave of deadly attacks on three different continents Friday morning, saying Canada will work with allies to track down those responsible. Early-morning and midday attacks Friday in France, Tunisia, Kuwait and Somalia have left dozens killed, including at least 28 people after gunmen stormed a hotel in a Tunisian resort town. Also on Friday, French authorities say one man was decapitated and others injured after an attack on a gas factory in southeast France. And on the same day, an Islamic State group claimed responsibility after a blast at a mosque in Kuwait's capital killed at least 16. In a tweet, Harper said Canada "mourns" with France, Kuwait, Tunisia and Somalia, and vowed to help allies track down those responsible for what he referred to as acts of terror. CTV News

Islamic State kills at least 145 civilians in Syria's Kobani

Islamic State fighters killed at least 145 civilians in an attack on the Syrian town of Kobani and a nearby village, in what a monitoring group described on Friday as one of the worst massacres carried out by the hardline group in Syria. Islamic State pressed a separate assault to capture government-held parts of the northeastern city of Hasaka, blowing up a security building and triggering a government appeal for all residents to take up arms. The United Nations said 60,000 people were reported to have fled the attack. Reuters

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MinStevenBlaney

My thoughts and prayers are with France this morning. We are following the situation closely.

MinStevenBlaney

Mes pensées et prières sont avec le peuple de France ce matin. Nous suivons la situation de près.

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBCPolitics

CSE says Snowden leaks eroding spy agency's long-term advantage over terrorists cbc.ca/news/politics/... #cdnpoli
#hw

Securite_Canada

Michel Coulombe, directeur du SCRS, commente la sanction royale de la Loi #antiterroriste de 2015.
pic.twitter.com/3TUxloSYC0

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

RadioCanadaInfo

La police américaine croit que les deux évadés de la prison de New York sont en fuite vers le Canada

ReutersUS

Police believe two escaped New York prisoners headed to Canada reut.rs/1LKCQnA

INTERNATIONAL

CNN

Terror attacks on 3 continents: Shooting in Tunisia, beheading in France & bombing in Kuwait. cnn.it/1GNFt6U

CBCAlerts

Death toll soars after suicide bombing at #Kuwait mosque. At least 25 dead, 202 wounded. #ISIS claims responsibility.

CTVNationalNews

Tunisian state TV raises toll from beach attack to 28 dead ow.ly/OQpWc

BBCBreaking

Death toll rises to 37, with 36 wounded in #Sousse attack, Tunisian health minister says bbc.in/1QTX9pa

CBCAlerts

Death toll from shooting attack on #Tunisian resort hotel in #Sousse rises to 37, health ministry says.

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
July 16, 2015 / le 16 juillet 2015
8:00 – 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Feds Sold New CSIS Mandate To Public With Completely Inaccurate Claims: Baloney Meter

"With its new mandate, CSIS could take measures, at home and abroad, to disrupt threats when it had reasonable grounds to believe that there was a threat to the security of Canada. ... Intelligence services in most of Canada's close democratic allies have had similar mandates and powers for many years." Public Safety Canada backgrounder on proposed anti-terrorism bill, January 2015. In introducing its sweeping security bill earlier this year, the government said the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, Canada's spy agency, did not have a legal mandate to take action concerning threats. Rather, CSIS was limited to collecting and analyzing information as well as advising the government. The government characterized the bill's proposed new powers — which have since received royal assent — as a means of bringing the spy service's capabilities in line with those of allied counterparts... Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney defended the planned powers at a Commons committee, saying: "Currently CSIS can detect security threats but is unable to take action unlike most allies are doing. With the new threat disruption mandate, CSIS would be authorized to take direct action to disrupt threats to the security of Canada at home and abroad like most of our allies, such as Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, France, United States, United Kingdom, and Australia. It's about time, Mr. Chair."... The office of Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney declined to provide any additional information about CSIS and international parallels. Canadian Press (Huffington Post)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

University of Saskatchewan study tracks risk to family ties due to wildfires

A study at the University of Saskatchewan suggests more care must be taken to protect family and culture when wild fire threatens northern communities. The study, by Julia Scharbach and James Waldram in the department of Archaeology and Anthropology at the U of S, takes a look at the experiences of the Hatchet Lake Denesuline First Nation who were evacuated due to wildfire back in 2011. The findings are particularly relevant this year, as an unprecedented number of people were forced to flee their homes this summer as forest fires raged across northern Saskatchewan. CBC News

Prince Albert SPCA dealing with arrival of dogs from northern communities

John Morash's duties as Executive Director of the Prince Albert SPCA include many things, but unloading a truck with 15,000 pounds of donated dog food from across the province is not normally on the list. But for the past three weeks, Morash and his staff have been making it up on the fly. "I don't know if this has ever been done before in Prince Albert," said Morash as he wiped the sweat from his forehead. The SPCA has taken in more than 150 dogs and cats from northern communities affected by wildfires. Most of the animals have owners who were not allowed to bring their pets with them to evacuation centres. On June 27, Morash and his team sprang into action. "We sent a convoy of six trucks to La Ronge to pick up 44 dogs, one cat and a turtle. We brought them back and had 20 cars lined up with families ready to take them in as fosters." CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports hundreds of people forced from their homes in northern Saskatchewan can now return, but the battle against the wildfires is not over yet. (CBC News, 11h00 ET)

CBC News reports Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall suggests new national repository of firefighting equipment to help fight future wildfires. (CBC Radio – World Report, 11h29 ET)

CBC News reports rain is in the forecast for northern Saskatchewan and should prevent fires from growing any larger. (CBC News, 12h15)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBP agents not consistently screening unaccompanied migrant children, GAO says

Congressional investigators said Customs and Border Protection agents aren't properly screening the tens of thousands of unaccompanied migrant children who cross the U.S. borders at Mexico and Canada each year to make sure they aren't victims of trafficking or persecution before being sent back to their home countries. In a new report published July 14, the Government Accountability Office said "agents made inconsistent screening decisions, had varying levels of awareness about how they were to assess certain screening criteria, and did not consistently document the rationales for their decisions." The report largely focused on unaccompanied children from Mexico. The report recommended that federal agents who come in contact with such children need to better understand the agency's policy and the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act, or TVPRA, of 2008 requirements that establish certain criteria for the Homeland Security Department to follow before the children can be returned to their home countries. Fierce Homeland Security

Falling loonie cuts Canadian shopping in Maine border towns

A weakening Canadian dollar, which fell Wednesday to its lowest point against the U.S. dollar in six years, has Maine businesses along the border seeing a dip in Canadian shoppers. Nicknamed the "loonie" because of the loon imprinted on the face of its $1 coin, the Canadian dollar plunged to as low as 77.34 cents U.S. Wednesday after the Bank of Canada cut a key interest rate and lowered its forecast for the economy, according to the Chronicle Herald. It was the lowest the loonie has dropped since March 2009, when Canada was in the midst of a deep recession. "We have seen a customer count drop in our Aroostook County stores that we believe is related to Canadian business," said Craig Burgess, general manager of the Marden's chain of surplus and salvage stores. "Based on discussion that our store staff are having with Canadian customers, they are expressing that the weak Canadian exchange rate is reducing the frequency of their shopping trips and the amount they purchase." Ethel Donovan, a Woodstock, New Brunswick, resident who was shopping at the Houlton Marden's on Monday, said that she pays attention to the exchange rate and also carefully combs catalogs, watches sale fliers and clips coupons to get the best deals. Bangor Daily News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Spectacular breach at Italian surveillance company puts the world's spymasters in the hot seat

A dramatic breach at an Italian surveillance company has laid bare the details of government cyberattacks worldwide, putting intelligence chiefs in the hot seat from Cyprus to South Korea. The massive leak has already led to one spymaster's resignation and pulled back the curtain on espionage in the iPhone age. More than 1 million emails released online in the wake of the July 5 breach show that Hacking Team sold its spy software to the FBI and to Russian intelligence. It worked with authoritarian governments in the Middle East and pitched to police departments in the American suburbs. It even tried to sell to the Vatican all while devising a malicious Bible app to infect religiously minded targets. "It's a mini-Snowden event," said Israel-based security researcher Tal Be'ery, likening the impact of the leak to the publication of top secret NSA documents by former intelligence worker Edward Snowden. The Telegram

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Burnaby shooting: Risk to City of Vancouver staff reduced, say police

Vancouver police are scaling back their presence outside several city work sites following the fatal shooting of a City of Vancouver staffer outside a Burnaby home on Wednesday. "As the risk to a City of Vancouver employee has been substantially reduced, the VPD are scaling back resources at work sites," said police spokesperson Randy Fincham. Security at Vancouver City Hall, the Manitoba and National works yards, and the Crossroads building on West Broadway was ramped up following the shooting on Wednesday afternoon. The city has confirmed the shooting victim was a staff member, but he has not yet been officially identified by police or city officials. "The City Management Team, elected officials and staff across all departments are shocked and saddened to learn of the tragic murder of a longtime city employee," the city said in a written statement issued on Thursday morning. The flag at city hall is flying at half-mast in honour of the employee, the statement added. CBC News

Heavy police presence at Vancouver City Hall after murder of sanitation superintendent

A Vancouver city sanitation superintendent was shot and killed in Burnaby Wednesday, triggering an extraordinary police presence at city hall and a number of city work sites. Burnaby RCMP found a critically injured man at a house on Wickham Place, a residential cul-de-sac, after they received a report around noon about multiple gunshots being fired. The man died a short time later in hospital. Shortly after, Vancouver city administration sent a number of sanitation and engineering crews home after it said a "very serious incident" had happened that involved threats to at least one city staff member. Gerry Kahrmann / PNG staff photo Vancouver Police officers guard city hall, Vancouver July 15 2015. The works yards were also shut down for security reasons. The victim is believed to be Hanif Jessa, a Vancouver city employee, and sources told the Vancouver Sun that the suspect is a former city employee. A Vancouver City staff directory lists Jessa as a night superintendent for street cleaning operations. Calls to his home went straight to a voice mailbox that was full. Jessa is listed as living on Wickham Place. RCMP and Vancouver police released few details other than to say the shooting had been turned over to the Integrated Homicide Investigation Team. Postmedia News (National Post)

Shaken workers return to City Hall after shooting of city sanitation superintendent

The shooting occurred at around noon Wednesday when a suspect approached a Burnaby home, a shouting match with the homeowner ensued and shots were fired. RCMP in Burnaby say the victim, who has not been officially identified, died a short time later in hospital and the case has been turned over to the Integrated Homicide Investigation Team. The City of Vancouver locked down one of its public works yards in the wake of the attack and increased security at other yards and engineering department offices, but security levels have since been scaled back and operations are returning to normal. A statement issued by the City of Vancouver says counselling and support is being offered to staff and the man's co-workers, and the flag at City Hall has been lowered to half-mast in honour of the victim. No arrests have been made but homicide investigators have said further details could be released today. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun)

Wetaskiwin Mounties look for missing teen

The Wetaskiwin RCMP need your help in locating a missing teenage girl. Shaylynn Roasting, 14, was last seen by her family on July 11, around 10:30 p.m. It's believed she snuck out of her residence later that evening or early in the morning of July 12. Roasting is described as aboriginal, about 5' tall, 130 pounds with brown shoulder length hair and brown eyes. The RCMP believe the teen may be in the Louis Bull or Samson First Nations Area in Maskwacis. Anyone with information is asked to call the Wetaskiwin RCMP Detachment at 780-312-7200 or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-222-TIPS (8477). 660 News; Wetaskiwin Times

RCMP tight-lipped about circumstances of man found dead near Doyles

Police say they will have a further update today on the death of a man found near Doyles on Tuesday. Dr. Simon Avis, the province's Chief Medical Examiner, was to conduct a postmortem examination to determine the identity of the man and the circumstances surrounding his death. The attention of the RCMP in Port aux Basques was drawn to an abandoned vehicle on the railbed by an ATV rider who was in the area late Tuesday night. Upon investigation, the man's body was found. Besides Avis, the subsequent investigation has involved the RCMP Major Crimes Unit, Forensic Identification Section and officers from the Port aux Basques detachment. Western Star

Search continues for missing boater on Wabamun Lake

Crews resumed the search Thursday morning on Wabaman Lake hoping to find a missing boater, but were forced to call off their efforts due to choppy water. Police say two men were out on the lake Wednesday afternoon when their boat hit a large wave, throwing them from the vessel into the water. One of the men swam back to the small motor boat, but the other man - believed to be in his 30s, did not make it to the boat or to shore, according to the RCMP. Cst. Melanie Murdy with the Stony Plain/Spruce Grove RCMP said the men weren't wearing life jackets and the one who is missing was not a swimmer. "This is a very difficult situation for any family and any community," Cst. Murdy told reporters at the lake on Wednesday evening. "There is a lot of family here... the support is great but it's still a very tragic event." CTV News; CBC news

La GRC ne dévoile plus l'identité des victimes de tragédie

La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) ne révèle plus l'identité des victimes d'accidents de voiture ou d'autres accidents tragiques, comme elle le faisait avant. La GRC veut respecter la Loi sur la protection des renseignements personnels. Cette nouveauté a été gardée sous silence et la GRC ne révèle pas pourquoi la politique vient d'être mise en place. La porte-parole de la GRC Julie Gagnon souligne qu'il y a trois exceptions : l'information est déjà accessible au public; la divulgation d'informations est nécessaire pour faire avancer une enquête; la GRC croit que l'intérêt du public justifie de dévoiler des informations privées. Par exemple, la GRC pourrait décider de dévoiler le nom d'une victime d'homicide quand elle a besoin d'informations du public pour faire avancer l'enquête. Radio-Canada; CBC News (Huffington Post)

Kamloops RCMP member may face charges after independent investigation

The independent investigation office of B.C. delivered a report to Crown counsel following an RCMP incident which left a man with serious injuries to his spine last year. Investigators with the office independently examine cases when members of the public sustain injuries after coming in contact with RCMP members. According to members of the Kamloops detachment, on Sept. 10, 2014 officers were attempting to take a local man into custody near Yew Street on the North Shore when he fled. Members found the man injured after he went over a fence and transported him to Royal Inland Hospital for the injuries to his back. The office's Chief Civilian Director investigated the file, completed his review and opted to forward a report to Crown Counsel after determining the officer involved may have committed an offence. Infotel

Police investigating death of young P.E.I. man in Nova Scotia

RCMP are investigating the death of a Summerside man who was attending a music festival in Antigonish, N.S. over the weekend. Police are investigating the death of a young P.E.I. man who was attending a music festival in Nova Scotia. Dylan Jonathan Avery Champion died Tuesday at the Halifax Infirmary. "We are gathering information about the circumstances that led to the death of a 21-year-old man from Summerside...we want to understand how this happened," says RCMP Sgt. Alain LeBlanc in Halifax. "This must be a difficult time for the family...something very tragic - the death of a 21-year-old man." LeBlanc says an autopsy will be performed today. Champion was attending the Evolve Music Festival in Antigonish last weekend. The Guardian

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News reports about a shooting in Burnaby, B.C. on Wednesday. In addition, a threat was made against an employee of the city. The mayor commented on the incident. Rough Transcript (CBC News 9h12 ET, 12h09 ET)

CBC News reports Vancouver police increased security at a number of city sites after a municipal employee was shot and killed yesterday. Burnaby residents fear the victim was targeted. (CBC News, 12h07 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Manitoba offers to host roundtable on missing, murdered women

The Manitoba government has offered to host a second national roundtable on missing and murdered aboriginal women to follow up on last winter's event in Ottawa. Newfoundland and Labrador Premier Paul Davis said Tuesday that Canada's premiers support the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's recommendations and will act on them – with or without Ottawa's help. Davis spoke Wednesday at a closing news conference after hosting provincial and territorial leaders and the heads of five national native groups in Happy Valley-Goose Bay, N.L. The provinces have not only pledged to act on the commission's 94 recommendations but, in some cases, have already started, he said. Prime Minister Stephen Harper's longstanding absence from first ministers' meetings is a missed chance for collaboration, he also said. An RCMP report has said almost 1,200 aboriginal women have been murdered or have vanished since 1980. Canadian Press (Global News)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

O'Toole's office fires back at union ad campaign

Veterans' Affairs Minister Erin O'Toole's office is firing back at a new ad campaign launched by Canada's largest federal public service union, alleging that a top veterans union official admitted privately that - contrary to the messaging in the PSAC ad - some veterans offices "had to be closed." This week, the Public Service Alliance of Canada (PSAC) launched a Vote to Stop the Cuts ad campaign, which includes the Harper government's controversial cuts to veterans' services. The campaign, being launched before the formal election campaign spending restrictions come into effect, is to include billboards, posters, radio ads and targeted social media ads. John MacDonell, O'Toole's chief of staff, said the admission that some of the closures of veterans' affairs offices were necessary was made by Carl Gannon, president of the Union of Veterans Affairs Employees (UVAE) - a PSAC affiliated union - during a closed-door meeting between the two men on Jan. 26. iPolitics

OTHER / AUTRES

Teen swatter has 'Jekyll and Hyde' persona, victim says

One of the U.S. victims of a Coquitlam, B.C., teen who shut down Disneyland as part of a campaign of internet harassment says her family is still traumatized by the youth's actions. The woman — whose identity is protected by a publication ban — told CBC News the 17-year-old faked a bomb threat at her daughter's apartment, exposed their personal information online and trolled them repeatedly. And he live streamed all of it to his followers. "He is almost like on a stage with a live audience and he is performing to the hilt," the woman said from her home in Arizona. "There was nothing shy about him. Nothing geeky. Nothing quiet. Nothing humble. Nothing subdued. He was so far the opposite that it was scary. This kid is a Jekyll and Hyde. He's a master manipulator." CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

Chattanooga college on lockdown after shooting in Tennessee city

A police officer was shot on Thursday and Chattanooga State Community College in Tennessee was placed on lockdown after a shooter fired at what appeared to be a military-related center, the school and media reports said. "Horrific incident in our community," Chattanooga Mayor Andy Berke wrote on his Twitter feed, saying more information on the shooting will soon come. The school on its website said there was a shooting and added: "Everyone stay inside, close doors." Reuters (Globe and Mail); CNN

Barbados rocked by magnitude 6.5 earthquake

A magnitude-6.5 earthquake struck northeast of Barbados early Tuesday, jolting thousands from their sleep but causing no reported damage or casualties. It also was felt in the nearby French Caribbean island of Martinique. Barbados Police Const. Chris Greg told The Associated Press by telephone that the earthquake was felt throughout the island. "It was strong," he said. CBC News

ISIL affiliate in Egypt says it destroyed one of country's navy vessels with rocket fire

The Islamic State's affiliate in Egypt's Sinai says it has destroyed an Egyptian navy vessel with a rocket off the strategic peninsula's Mediterranean coast. The claim of responsibility by the Sinai Province of the Islamic State, as the group calls itself, was made in a brief statement posted on Twitter accounts known to be linked to the group. The authenticity of the statement could not be immediately verified, but it was accompanied by photos purporting to show what appears to be a rocket flying toward the vessel, a large explosion engulfing most of the boat and then black smoke rising up from the vessel. Postmedia (National Post)

Obama visits prison to call for a fairer justice system

Barack Obama is set to become the first sitting U.S. President to visit the inside of a federal prison as part of a push to change the country's justice system. Obama will meet separately Thursday with law enforcement officials and nonviolent drug offenders who are paying their debt to society at a medium-security prison for male offenders in the state of Oklahoma. From shortening the prison sentences of nearly four-dozen non-violent drug offenders to advocating the reduction, or outright elimination, of severe mandatory minimum sentences, Obama has argued forcefully this week for an alternative to the continued lengthy incarceration of people convicted of crimes he said did not fit the punishment. Associated Press (CTV News, CBC News).

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CBCAlerts

Thousands to return home in #Saskatchewan as evacuation order lifted in La Loche, Montreal Lake, Ramsey Bay, Weyakwin, Timber Bay. #skfire

Jantafrench

Evacuation orders lifted for Montreal Lake, La Loche, Weyakwin, Michel Village/St. George's Hill, Timber Bay and Ramsey Bay, Dillon #spnews

Jantafrench

More good news for wildfire situation: 20-30 mm of rain forecast for parts of northern Saskatchewan during next couple days

Jantafrench

"If the forecast holds true, it has a major impact," says Daryl Jessop, director of wildfire support for Sask. Min of Environment.

Jantafrench

Jessop says firefighters are now able to move to "offensive" firefighting, rather than defensively backed against the edge of La Ronge

Jantafrench

A total of 99 structures have now succumbed to wildfires in northern Saskatchewan.

globebusiness

Supreme Court rebuffs Bell Mobility challenge over 911 service fees trib.al/Tbl2aZN

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBCPolitics

Baloney Meter: With new powers, is CSIS simply catching up to allies? cbc.ca/news/politics/... #cdnpoli #hw

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

cbcnewsbc

RCMP quietly stops naming victims, citing privacy act ift.tt/1I5fMm3

Colinfreeze

Finding RCMP "just got easier" rcmp.gc.ca/detach/en Finding out what they do just got harder cbc.ca/news/canada/no...

CitytvNews

Original @MayorGregor statement @CityofVancouver threat. @GS_Harper reports possible link w#Burnaby shooting death. pic.twitter.com/dZyQXkaTEo

CTVVancouver

A fatal shooting in Burnaby and possible links to Vancouver remain under investigation. bc.ctvnews.ca/police-called-... pic.twitter.com/lunF1UusRT

CTVVancouver

#Update: A long-time City of Vancouver employee has been confirmed killed. bc.ctvnews.ca/long-time-city...

CBCNews

Risk to staff 'substantially reduced' say Vancouver police after Burnaby shooting ift.tt/1I615xd

VancouverSun

Heavy VPD presence at Vancouver City Hall after shooting of city sanitation superintendent shar.es/1srl7g

CKNW

Some @CityofPoMo staff worked with #Burnaby murder victim & have been told by police they may be danger. 1/2 #Vancouver #Burnaby #PortMoody

CKNW

2/2 One @CityofPoMo staff person in particular was told by police not to go home last night, and he didn't. #Vancouver #Burnaby #PortMoody metrohalifax

Young man dies in Halifax hospital after attending Evolve Music Festival, RCMP investigating. ow.ly/PHvZx

jsjayward

@ErinOTooleMP & @CPCGailShea announces 61 new #VAC positions for #PEI to support Canada's Veterans & RCMP retirees.

globalhalifax

RCMP investigation into fatal shooting complete; gln.ca/PHT8z

NatashaPace

Just in: Nova Scotia RCMP has concluded an investigation into a fatal shooting that occurred on January 12, 2015 in Bathurst, New Brunswick.

NatashaPace

On January 13th, Nova Scotia RCMP was requested by Bathurst Police Force to investigate a fatal shooting

NatashaPace

Michel Vienneau, a 51-year-old man from Tracadie-Sheila, was fatally wounded by police as part of an ongoing investigation.

NatashaPace

A team of Nova Scotia RCMP major crime investigators was assigned to investigate.

NatashaPace

The full investigation has been handed over to NB Public Prosecution Services who will review to determine if charges are appropriate.

NatashaPace

The #NS #RCMP say they will not be commenting on the details of the investigation at this time.

OTHER / AUTRE

theprovince

Near collision on Ottawa airport runway part of a larger problem: report theprovince.in/1O8P9Lk #canada

globalnews

EXCLUSIVE: Amal Clooney says Cdn officials assured her they will support her effort to secure @MFFahmy11's release gln.ca/PHMXK

INTERNATIONAL

CTVNews

Suspected extremists admitted plans to behead officer on camera: French official ow.ly/PHhDp

CP24

At least 3 Indonesian airports closed due to volcano eruptions cp24.com/world/at-least...

CTVNews

Why Obama will be first U.S. president to visit a federal prison ow.ly/PHkJM

ChattanoogaPD

Active shooter situation is over. Details forthcoming #chanews

cnnbrk

Update: Navy now confirms shooting at Navy Reserve center in Chattanooga, Tennessee cnn.it/1J2yZ6F

cnnbrk

"Active shooter incident" reported at Navy support center in Chattanooga, Tennessee, fire chief says. cnn.it/1J2yZ6F

cnnbrk

Memorial Hospital in #Chattanooga, Tennessee, on "precautionary" lockdown after reports of shooting in the city cnn.it/1J2yZ6F

cnnbrk

Tennessee emergency managers request flight restrictions around #Chattanooga after shooting cnn.it/1J2yZ6F

cnnbrk

#Chattanooga police tweet that the "active shooter situation" is over. Details forthcoming #chanews cnn.it/1J2yZ6F

ReutersUS1:22pm via SocialFlow

BREAKING: Active shooter situation is over, Chattanooga police say in tweet.

USNavy

#BREAKING: #USNavy confirms no shooting at Reserve Center on Amnicola Highway, #Chattanooga, TN. (1/2)

USNavy

(2/2) Investigating report of shooting at Navy recruiting building on Lee Highway. More to follow.

USNavy

#BREAKING CORRECTION: #USNavy confirms shooting at building on Amnicola Highway.

CBCAlerts

Shooting in #Chattanooga, #Tennessee reportedly involves multiple victims. Police say situation now under control.

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
July 26, 2015 / le 26 juillet 2015
08:00 – 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 08h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Evacuees focus on restocking food as Sask. wildfires decrease

As residents from northern Saskatchewan displaced by wildfires return home to their communities, they're now starting to focus on restoring some semblance of order to their lives. Hall Lake and Clam Lake Bridge were the last two areas in the province that had evacuation orders in place this past week. Local leaders and the province lifted the evacuation orders for the two areas on Wednesday. Kyla McKenzie said most of the evacuees she has been working with are happy to be back home, but they're now shifting their focus to restocking food and finding their pets. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Traveller's Rest marijuana seizure one of largest in P.E.I. history

RCMP in Prince Edward Island say the drug unit has seized one of the largest batches of marijuana plants in the Island's history and they may have been planted by accident. On Friday, police say they found 1,250 immature marijuana plants in a farm field in Traveller's Rest. CBC News

'It was never a concern,' RCMP believe shooting at Geary speedway was accidental

A 39-year-old man remains in serious but stable condition after being shot while asleep in a camper at Speedway 660 in Geary. The incident happened around 5 p.m. Saturday, during the races that happen most Saturdays at Speedway 660. RCMP believe the bullet came from the property beside the Speedway's campground where people were target practicing. "We heard some people screaming, and we went over and there was a lady who said her son had been shot so we went in to help with him, and people went to try to find the shooters to tell them what had happened," said Corrie Oblenenis, a resident of the campground. One of the owner's of the speedway told Global News the property has been a popular spot for target practice for years. Global News

Teen, man, arrested in homicide on Red Earth First Nation

Carrot River RCMP and the RCMP Major Crime Unit are investigating after a 42-year-old man was found dead on the Red Earth First Nation on Saturday. Police were called to the home around 11:20 a.m. CST, for a call of an injured man, but when RCMP arrived he was dead. A 16-year-old boy and a 20-year-old man were arrested later that day, after being located at two separate homes on the First Nation. An autopsy on the man is scheduled for Monday at Saskatoon City Hospital. No charges have been laid. The man's name has not been released. CBC News; Global News

RCMP search for missing Bear Island man

RCMP in New Brunswick are looking for a Bear Island man reported missing Saturday morning. Kevin Boudreau was last seen around 2 p.m. Friday driving an all terrain vehicle off Route 105 in Bear Island. Police believe the 41-year old may have become stuck in the woods. CBC News; Global News

Un guide de pourvoirie retrouvé mort à South Indian Lake

La Gendarmerie royale du Canada enquête sur la mort suspecte d'un homme de 28 ans à South Indian Lake, dans le nord du Manitoba, survenue jeudi matin. L'homme travaillait comme guide à la pourvoirie de chasse et pêche Big Sand Lake Lodge, sur la réserve crie d'O-Pipon-Na-Piwin depuis 10 ans, selon la gérante de l'établissement, Linda McKerchar. La GRC n'a pas donné plus de détails sur les circonstances de la mort. Radio-Canada

Un homme arrêté après la découverte d'un corps à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard

La GRC à l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard dit avoir arrêté un suspect à la suite de la découverte du corps d'une femme, vendredi soir, à Pleasant Grove. Le corps se trouvait dans un secteur boisé le long du chemin de Pleasant Grove, indique Leanne Butler, de la GRC. Mme Butler affirme que le suspect et la victime se connaissaient. Selon elle, il ne s'agit pas d'un geste commis au hasard. Elle ajoute que le public ne court aucun risque. Radio-Canada

RCMP warn Albertans about phone scam

RCMP in Alberta are warning residents about a phone scam being used in the province. Investigators explained that callers claim to be with the Canadian Revenue Agency (CRA) and say they are auditing past income tax claims. CTV News

B.C. mental health services and RCMP must communicate better, says dad

Gord Bylo has watched his 33-year-old son Brian bounce in and out of jail after being arrested 60 times, but he's not upset with his son — he's upset with the system. Surrey teenager Brian Bylo was a good student, athlete and son. "He was liked by pretty well everybody," said his father. But in March 2000, it became apparent that something was wrong. Since then, Brian has been diagnosed with many different forms of mental illness, including bipolar disorder and schizophrenia. But to this day, Bylo said his son still hasn't received the help he needs, and frequent arrests aren't helping things. Bylo points to flaws in the communication between law enforcement and health services. He says when officers make an arrest, their computer systems are only able to access a record of that individual's past charges and convictions. "There's nothing in their computers about health-care because the two agencies don't share information," said Bylo. "That's why I'm always fearful when he's out on the street, when he's homeless, for the safety of him, because his insight is extremely low, and he is at risk. He is at risk to himself. This is a nightmare for a family." "The health-care databases and the police databases are separate for very good reasons," said Cst. Taylor Quee with the Surrey RCMP Mental Health Intervention Unit, the first of its kind in Canada. "We shouldn't really have access to that detailed level of information." Instead, officers are trained to liaise with hospitals and on-duty psychiatric professionals to determine how best to approach each individual situation. While officers can bring at-risk patients to the hospital for immediate treatment following a street-level intervention, it is ultimately up to the patient and their health professionals to set a long-term course of action. "We don't control behaviour at the end of the day. We don't control clients' choices," Quee said. CBC News (2015-07-25)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Al Shabab suicide truck bomb rams top Somali hotel, killing at least 8

A suicide bomber rammed a truck rigged with explosives into the outer wall of one of Mogadishu's most secure hotels, severely damaging the building and killing eight people, said police Capt. Mohammed Hussein. The attack was claimed by the al-Qaida-linked Al-Shabab group and also wounded 20 people. The walled, luxury Jazeera Hotel is considered the most secure in Somalia's capital and is frequented by diplomats, foreigners and visiting heads of state. Associated Press (Global News); Al Jazeera; BBC News; Reuters

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

alexbutillier

A Canadian Snowden? CSE launched "education" campaign about insider threats after U.S. leaks. m.thestar.com/#!/article/news... #cdnpoli

OttawaCitizen

Social media giants fighting legislation requiring them to alert of terrorist activity bit.ly/1HSUx3H

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

OPP_News

We enjoyed our #Partnership during the #PanAmGames & look forward to #WorkingTogether for #ParaPanAm pic.twitter.com/zz8Yu7Rf6J

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](#).*

Today's News / Actualités
August 4, 2015 / le 4 août 2015
8:00 – 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 14:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

B.C. fires: Harrison Lake wildfire still growing officials say

A wildfire near Harrison Hot Springs, B.C., continues to burn uncontrolled and is still growing say officials with the Ministry of Forests. The B.C. Wildfire Service says it hasn't been able to assess the exact size of the fire on the west side of Harrison Lake due to heavy smoke. But it says the fire more than doubled in size over the weekend to 100 hectares by Monday evening. "We're going to be reassessing the fire's growth and continue to work toward containment," said Donna MacPherson with the B.C. Wildfire Service. The flames are currently spreading northward, away from the community of Harrison Hot Springs. CBC News

Tornadoes: El Nino may give Canada's twister season a boost

An above-average number of tornadoes may be ripping through — and ripping up — Canada this summer, scientists say. Just this past Sunday, a tornado near Guelph, Ont., smacked down trees and powerlines and caused "significant damage" to two houses. Last week, a 'monster' tornado whipped through southwestern Manitoba, uprooting trees and smashing fences and buildings for nearly three hours. A week earlier, a tornado touched down southwest of Calgary amid a thunderstorm, funnel clouds and golf ball-sized hail. Canada may see more than the usual number of tornadoes this year because it's an El Niño year, and that may give tornado activity in Canada a boost, says John Allen, postdoctoral research scientist at the International Research Institute for Climate and Society at Columbia University in Palisades, N.Y. "El Niño seems to produce the conditions that we would expect to foster more tornadoes in Canada, similar to what is seen in Florida in El Niño years," he told CBC News. CBC News

'It was nuts': Manitoba reservist back from fighting Saskatchewan fires

A Manitoba reservist is back in the province after fighting wildfires in Saskatchewan – an experience 12 years in the making. Keith Griffith was seven years old and living in the Okanagan Valley in 2003 when wildfires ripped through the area, destroying homes and prompting evacuations. Griffith watched soldiers arrive and help people get out – something he knew he wanted to do when he got older. Now, he's 19, back in Manitoba and has helped families escape from La Ronge, Sask. "I would describe it life changing in a way -- knowing that I lived through that," he said. "I know what evacuation and all that feels like, and seeing the community basically almost being destroyed because of the fire that was coming at them -- life changing. That's how I'd describe it." CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Protéger les Canadiens au détriment de leur vie privée

Le 18 juin dernier, le projet de loi C-51, qu'il faudra désormais appeler la Loi canadienne antiterroriste de 2015 (la «Loi») est entré en vigueur dans une relative indifférence de la population canadienne. Essentiellement, la Loi vise à resserrer les règles existantes afin de faciliter l'identification, le contrôle et la répression des menaces envers la sécurité du Canada. Si l'objectif de la Loi est sans conteste louable, c'est plutôt sa portée et les répercussions qu'elle aura sur le quotidien des Canadiens qui a suscité certaines critiques relativement à la protection des droits et libertés individuelles. En effet, on reprochait notamment à la Loi de permettre une surveillance indue des activités des Canadiens. D'ailleurs, le Commissaire à la protection de la vie privée, Daniel Therrien, soulignait en janvier dernier que l'atteinte aux droits à la vie privée semblait disproportionnée par rapport aux objectifs de la Loi. Or, ces critiques auront été insuffisantes pour faire reculer le gouvernement fédéral, qui contrôle la majorité de la Chambre des communes et du Sénat. Branchez-vous.com

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBSA Seizes 115lbs of Coke

The Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) has announced the seizure of 52 kilograms of suspected cocaine at the Ambassador Bridge. On July 27, a border services officer referred a commercial truck and trailer, driven by a 26 year-old man, for a secondary examination. While searching the truck, officers discovered 52 bricks of suspected cocaine inside three duffel bags and a tote, located in the storage area of the truck. "This seizure was outstanding work by all involved," said Rick Comerford, CBSA's Regional Director General for Southern Ontario Region. Since January 2014, the CBSA in the Southern Ontario Region has made 57 cocaine seizures with a combined total weight of 302 kilograms. CBSA officers seized the suspected cocaine and arrested the individual. They then contacted the RCMP, who took custody of the drugs and the suspect. The RCMP have charged Lavdrim Mehmeti, of Scarborough, with importing cocaine and possession of cocaine for the purpose of trafficking. Mehmeti is currently in custody and is scheduled to appear in the Ontario Court of Justice in Windsor today. Windsor Square

Border Guards Make 11 Drug Seizures at Winnipeg Ports

The Canada Border Services Agency was kept busy during the second quarter in Winnipeg, including its airport, commercial and inland operations. The CBSA reported from April to June, officers made 11 suspected narcotics seizures including over 115 grams of suspected marijuana, and 514 dosages of suspected steroids. Officers also intercepted four separate shipments containing substances suspected to be the steroid dehydroepiandrosterone, commonly known as DHEA. These substances were destined for various addresses Alberta and Winnipeg and the packages were declared as different types of supplements. Border guards at James Richardson International Airport seized four grams of suspected loose marijuana on June 19, as well as as over 92 grams of cookies and candies infused with suspected marijuana from a 38-year-old California man. ChrisD.ca

Drugs, weapons, cash seized from northeast home

City police have charged two people after officers seized drugs, weapons, cash and stolen property from a northeast home. Members of the drug unit and tactical unit were called to a residence in the 300 block of Taralake Way N.E. on July 28 to execute a search warrant. [...] With the help of Canada Border Services Agency officers, city police made two arrests. Gurnazbir Singh Sandhu, 25, of India, was charged with one count each of possession of methamphetamine for the purpose of trafficking, possession of proceeds of crime, possession of stolen property, possession of a weapon for a dangerous purpose and two counts of breach of probation. Calgary Herald

Protestation contre la venue à Montréal d'un blogueur qui banalise le viol

Des associations dénoncent la venue dans la métropole québécoise de l'auteur et blogueur américain Daryush Valizadeh en raison de ses propos misogynes qui banalisent le viol. L'homme, plus connu sous le pseudonyme Roosh V, doit présenter une conférence samedi dans le cadre d'une tournée mondiale entamée en juin, au cours de laquelle il donne des conseils aux hommes pour coucher avec des filles, tout en faisant la promotion du viol et de l'antiféminisme. Parmi ses propos controversés, il dit qu'il « faut rendre le viol légal si c'est fait dans une propriété privée » et que « le féminisme fait croire aux femmes que leur simple présence suffit pour réussir ». La présidente du Conseil du statut de la femme du Québec, Julie Miville-Dechéne, trouve que ce genre de propos est extrêmement décevant, mais qu'il est remarquable qu'il y ait une forte mobilisation pour s'y opposer. Une pétition pour tenter d'empêcher le blogueur américain d'entrer au Canada, sur la base qu'il fait la promotion et la diffusion de la haine, a récolté jusqu'à maintenant 7798 signatures. La pétition invite les signataires à envoyer un courriel à l'agence des services frontaliers. Radio-Canada.ca

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

The Deep, Dark Web Is Getting Some Company Soon — From Canadian Cops

Canada's federal police service is investing in software that, it hopes, will let it shed light onto the darkest regions of the deep internet. The money, part of a wide-reaching program aimed at defense and security research, will be spent developing software to trace and monitor supposedly nefarious activity on the darknet — a series of encrypted sites that advertise everything from human trafficking to hitmen. The Canadian Safety and Security Program (CSSP) is a funding regime that provides resources to various public safety, policing, and military programs run in conjunction with government departments. Previous rounds of funding have contributed to products that can track explosives, equipment that can detect drugs from their vapors, and training to protect Canada's energy infrastructure from cyber attacks. The most recent cash infusion, worth some $12 million for a dozen projects, focuses on everything from efforts to combat radicalization in Muslim communities, to defusing improvised explosive devices (IEDs), and technology targeting drones. Perhaps the most politically-charged and potentially controversial project is run by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) and two technology firms. VICE News

The digital nudist colony

An opinion piece states "Hacker group blindsides CSIS with 'cabinet-level' security breach, July 29. As usual the hackee, this time the Canadian government, cries foul while scrambling to catch up with the hacker. Of course the hacker is to blame; nice people do not pry into other peoples' secrets. But in this, and in every other case I can recall, no one mentions the security professionals who design and implement the obviously inadequate protections that Anonymous, Edward Snowden or Royal Canadian Navy Sub-Lt. Jeffrey Delisle are able to circumvent. Incompetent and negligent "experts" are collecting hundreds of millions of dollars from governments, companies and citizens for an illusion of security and, worse, we continue to pay for the privilege of belonging to this digital nudist colony." Toronto Star

Canadian hacktivists use Donald Trump's website to praise Jon Stewart

The Canadian arm of an anonymous, decentralized hacktivist group is taking credit today for sending a public thank you message to outgoing Daily Show host Jon Stewart — via Donald Trump's official corporate website. "We are writing you today via Mr Trump's website because, seeming, the only way to get anyone to pay attention any more is to grease a Presidential candidate's website," reads an archived version of a page on Trump.com entitled "Your Moment of Zen, Mr. Stewart." Signed by TelecomixCanada, the letter goes on to thank Stewart for his "many happy years of quality journalism and entertainment" on The Daily Show, and to extend an invitation of sorts. CBC News

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Alberta woman charged in death of 2-year-old boy

An Alberta woman has been charged with second-degree murder in the death of a two-year-old boy. The 29-year-old woman from the Tsuu T'ina First Nation was arrested on July 31 and will appear in court today. The child died in a Calgary hospital on Sept. 25 last year after being admitted to hospital on Sept. 18 with injuries. Police have not released the woman's name or details about the autopsy, which was concluded in April. Police say the child was in her care when he received the injuries RCMP led the investigation with the help of police from the reserve. CBC News; Global News; Calgary Sun; AM 770; 660 News; CTV News

Terror Threat Case Back In Court

The case of a Winnipeg man accused by RCMP of being a terror threat is back in court today. Aaron Driver is challenging a peace bond that would seriously limit what he can and can't do. His lawyers are meeting with a federal crown prosecutor and a judge to try and have his challenge heard more expeditiously. Last month a court heard it may be next Spring before the case makes it in front of a judge. Driver is not facing criminal charges and is living under strict conditions while he waits for a ruling. CJOB AM 680

Woman charged in man's death on Waywayseecappo First Nation

A 37-year-old woman is charged with manslaughter in the death of a man in western Manitoba. The man was found dead from a stab wound on Aug. 1 at a home on Waywayseecappo First Nation. Police say the victim and the accused were known to each other. Out of respect for the family members, the man's name will not be released, RCMP said. The RCMP are investigating, along with the Dakota Ojibway Police Service. CBC News; Winnipeg Sun

Police investigate vandalism at church in New Brunswick

Police in New Brunswick are investigating two acts of vandalism in the village of Bath, including damage that was done to the doors of a Catholic church. The numbers "666" were painted twice in red on the doors of the church, along with an upside down cross. The RCMP says nearby on Church Street, a crosswalk sign was painted with what they believe is the same red paint. The Mounties say the vandalism happened sometime through the night on Friday into the early morning on Saturday. CTV News; CBC News

N.B. man charged with murder after death of 68-year-old man in Central Waterville

RCMP in western New Brunswick say a man is charged with second-degree murder in the death of a 68-year-old man. Thirty-year-old Andrew Merlin Schriver of Central Waterville was charged during a court appearance today in Woodstock. Police say they were called to a home in Central Waterville on Sunday where they found two men injured with what appeared to be stab wounds. Both men were taken to hospital where police say Richard Foster later died of his injuries. The Mounties say an autopsy is being conducted to determine the exact cause of the Bull Lake man's death. Canadian Press (Global News)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

B.C. picks company to upgrade electronic-monitoring program for high-risk offenders

The province has picked the company for a re-vamped program to electronically supervise high-risk offenders. Headed up by U.K.-based company Buddi Ltd., the new system will allow BC Correction to program ankle bracelets using GPS technology and track offenders and make sure they stay within their court-ordered area. Currently, monitoring in B.C. is done mainly by corrections and police officers visiting offenders under house arrest and by curfew. Ankle bracelets are used but offenders can't be tracked if they go out of bounds, such as failing to return to their halfway house. The issue came under scrutiny last September after 17-year-old Serena Vermeersch was killed in Surrey. The high-risk offender accused in her death was not being electronically monitored. CKNW

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

'Girls' keep working streets despite serial predator warning

Chantelle walks the same streets her sister used to walk, head held high, determined to turn another $20 trick, then kick her crack addiction and figure out how to get a roof over her head. Determined as well, on this July night, to never forget her sister Edna Bernard - a mother of six who was strangled, lit on fire, then dumped in a farmer's field near Leduc in 2002. Her sister's remains were among five bodies found since that year within an eight-kilometre radius, something that last week prompted the RCMP to say they're looking for a "serial predator." Police identified the other victims as Katie Ballantyne, Delores Brower, Amber Tuccaro and Corrie Ottenbreit, the latter the most recent to be discovered after disappearing in 2004. (...)CBC's Aboriginal Unit has revealed there are at least 15 unsolved cases of indigenous women who vanished or were murdered in and around the Edmonton area. While the discovery of the remains of the five women near Leduc looms large on Edmonton city streets, it barely resonates with some of the women Thomason stops to speak with. They're used to threats, black eyes, broken bones. For Thomason, though, the prospect of a serial predator makes her fearful for the safety of these street women. Her life's passion is on the city streets, delivering blankets, cans of soup, driving women to medical appointments, listening to their concerns. She's spent almost two decades tracking them, and has known personally many who have been murdered, like Ottenbreit. CBC News

Prévenir la violence faite aux femmes autochtones : de Thunder Bay au reste du pays

Un programme de prévention de la violence faite aux femmes autochtones qui a vu le jour à Thunder Bay se répand en Ontario et ailleurs au pays. « Je suis un homme bon » ou « Kizhaay Anishinaabe Niin » offre du soutien aux hommes autochtones et les aide à retrouver leur culture et leur rôle au sein de leur communauté. La participation est volontaire, mais elle peut aussi être imposée par un ordre de la cour. Le programme, offert notamment dans cinq centres de détention de la province, est chapeauté par l'Association ontarienne des centres de l'amitié autochtone. Une douzaine de centres de l'amitié l'ont aussi adopté autant en Ontario, en Alberta qu'en Colombie-Britannique. Besoin d'une enquête nationale sur les femmes autochtones Le responsable du programme Sylvia Maracle croit cependant qu'une enquête nationale sur les nombreux cas de femmes autochtones assassinées ou disparues est indispensable. Radio-Canada, CBC News

Walk for missing, murdered indigenous people passes 800 km mark

A group of Canadians are walking west from Manitoba to Prince Rupert, B-C to press the federal government to launch an inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women and men. The group left Winnipeg yesterday after having already trekked 800 kilometres from Norway House, Manitoba. They plan stops in many cities along the way, including Saskatoon and Edmonton, and hope others will join them. The group's GoFundMe page bills the trek as an "awareness walk for all missing and murdered." 570 News, Radio-Canada

New Toronto police mobile app makes it easier to report crimes

The Toronto Police Service has launched a mobile app that will allow users to report crimes and quickly get information about crime prevention across the city. Using their smart phones, residents will be able to file certain police reports, get safety alerts, locate police stations, file traffic complaints, and receive notifications from police social media accounts, among other features. "We feel that this will help with the relationship we have with victims," said Const. Hugh Ferguson during a press conference on Tuesday morning. Specifically, residents can use the app to report incidents that include damage to property or vehicles under $5,000, fraud under $5,000, theft under $5,000, graffiti and driving complaints, among others. Users can also contact Toronto Crime Stoppers anonymously through the app, police say. "It gives the public an opportunity to report crime when it's convenient," Ferguson said. Toronto Star, Toronto Sun

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Massive California wildfire jumps containment line; evacuees settling in emergency shelters

As firefighters battled a massive Northern California wild land blaze threatening numerous homes, some of the 13,000 people urged to flee their residences were spending what may be just one of many nights in evacuation shelters. The blaze that has charred nearly 97 square miles of brush and timber, jumped a highway Monday that had served as a containment line. Its rapid growth caught firefighters off guard and shocked residents. Associated Press (Globe and Mail)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CTVNews

RT @LisaLaFlammeCTV: ICYMI - here's last night's lead story on tornado touchdown in small mennonite community: ow.ly/Qt3vR

globeandmail

B.C. crews fight aggressive human-caused wildfires trib.al/PpN1ASc From @GlobeBC

LisaLaFlammeCTV

ICYMI - here's last night's lead story on tornado touchdown in small mennonite community by @KatieSimpsonCTV : ow.ly/Qt3vR

CBCToronto

Tornadoes: El Nino may give Canada's twister season a boost ift.tt/1IVp7gz

MacleansMag

Weather experts confirm a tornado ripped through a southwestern Ontario community on Sunday: ow.ly/QsX9O

CKNW

Latest on the wildfire near Harrison Hot Springs: It's now at 600 hectares, and still 0% contained.

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Justin_Ling

The RCMP want to police the darknet. I spoke to the academics who might make that possible.

news.vice.com/article/the-de...

CBCNews

Canadian hacktivists use Donald Trump's website to praise Jon Stewart cbc.ca/1.3178066

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBCNews

Fentanyl suspected in overdose of two Vancouver teens cbc.ca/1.3177504

CBCEdmonton

'Girls' keep working streets despite serial predator warning
cbc.ca/news/canada/ed...

GlobalSaskatoon

UPDATE: McLean #Sask homicide victim Lisa Strang was the Director of Finance for @SaskParty gln.ca/Qtwg8

INTERNATIONAL

globeandmail

Massive California wildfire jumps containment line; evacuees settling in emergency shelters trib.al/Turx3Zs

Reuters

Atomic bomb survivor explains why he's against rebooting reactors after Fukushima disaster: reut.rs/1E6j7ua

globeandmail

Drone drops package of drugs in U.S. prison yard, spurring inmate fight trib.al/6vAdZ16

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
September 8, 2015 / le 8 septembre 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Safeway recalls cucumbers over salmonella risk

Safeway is recalling field cucumbers and products that contain cucumbers because of the risk of salmonella related to a U.S. outbreak that has sickened 285 people in 27 states.

The Canadian recall covers Safeway grocery stores in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. No illness has been reported in Canada from contaminated cucumbers, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency reports. The recall covers fresh field cucumbers and in-store products that contain cucumbers, including Greek salad, vegetable trays, sushi and sandwiches bought at Safeway on or before Sunday. The recall was triggered by a recall in California involving Andrew and Williamson Fresh Produce of San Diego which announced a recall of its "Limited Edition" brand cucumbers on Friday. Toronto Star; i-Politics

Tragédie de Lac-Mégantic: le procès criminel pas avant le printemps ou l'automne 2016

Le procès criminel en lien avec la tragédie de Lac-Mégantic ne se déroulera vraisemblablement pas avant la fin du printemps ou même l'automne 2016. La cause pour négligence criminelle ayant causé la mort de 47 personnes le 6 juillet 2013 a été reportée au prochain terme des assises criminelles au palais de justice de Lac-Mégantic. Au cours des prochaines semaines, l'un des accusés Jean Demaître devra cependant se dénicher un nouvel avocat. Celui qui le défendait depuis le début des procédures en 2014, Me Gaétan Bourassa, a demandé au juge de se retirer du dossier étant donné que son client n'était admissible à l'aide juridique. La Tribune (La Presse); Radio-Canada

Wildfire season illustrates the good, bad side of drones

As a wildfire raged near Testalinden Creek in southern British Columbia last month, threatening award-winning Okanagan vineyards, the B.C. Wildfire Service put some muscle into the fight, launching eight helicopters and five aircraft to support fire crews on the ground. Everything was going as well as could be expected in the midst of an out-of-control forest fire when suddenly a drone appeared. No one knew where it had come from or who was piloting it, but there was only one solution - ground all firefighting aircraft until it was gone. "That incident had a significant impact on our firefighting suppression efforts that day," said Noelle Kekula, a fire information officer for the B.C. Wildfire Service. "I have no idea why someone would do that." It wasn't the first time it had happened - or even the first time this summer. In early August, a helicopter supporting ground crews at a wildfire west of Kelowna was forced to land after multiple drones were spotted in the area. This prompted the B.C. Wildfire Service to issue a press release pointing out that Transport Canada explicitly prohibits the use of drones near a wildfire because they can pose a "significant safety risk to personnel." If caught - a task that's easier said than done - violators can face fines of up to $5,000 and up to six months in jail. Financial Post (Windsor Star, Montreal Gazette)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Teen charged after bringing time-bomb alarm clock in carry-on bag to Toronto's Pearson Airport

A 15-year-old has learned the hard way to think very carefully about what to put in a carry on bag when boarding a plane. Screening staff at Toronto's Pearson Airport called in a police bomb disposal unit Saturday night when they detected what they thought was an explosive device. The police force responsible for security at Pearson, Peel Regional Police, say the device was fake. They say it turned out to be a novelty alarm clock that looked like several sticks of dynamite bound together with a timer. The teen has been charged with mischief. National Post

Terrorisme: début du procès d'un adolescent montréalais

Le procès du jeune Montréalais de 15 ans qui est soupçonné d'avoir voulu quitter le Canada pour participer à des activités terroristes doit s'ouvrir ce matin en Chambre de la jeunesse de la Cour du Québec, à Montréal. L'adolescent, dont l'identité est frappée d'un interdit de publication, fait face à deux chefs d'accusation reliés à l'activité terroriste. L'adolescent est soupçonné d'avoir commis un vol qualifié «au profit ou sous la direction» d'une organisation terroriste en plus d'avoir voulu quitter le Canada pour participer «aux activités d'un groupe terroriste à l'étranger». La Presse

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Un mur à la frontière canadienne : «Ça paraît ridicule»

Avancée par le candidat à l'investiture républicaine aux États-Unis Scott Walker, l'idée de construire un mur à la frontière canadienne reçoit un accueil glacial dans le secteur de Newport, une petite municipalité située à l'extrémité sud du lac Memphrémagog. À Newport, plusieurs personnes portent un nom de famille d'origine québécoise. Le maire de la ville s'appelle par exemple Paul Monette. De nombreux Québécois se sont installés en Nouvelle-Angleterre, au fil des décennies, et leur descendance est souvent demeurée dans le pays d'adoption. Compte tenu de la filiation existant entre la Nouvelle-Angleterre et le Québec, il est facile de comprendre pourquoi les habitants de la région de Newport rejettent l'idée de mur suggérée par Scott Walker. Mais cela va plus loin, car la population de ce secteur semble tout simplement préférer vivre en harmonie avec ses voisins et refuser le repli sur soi. « J'ai entendu parler de cette suggestion du candidat républicain et, bien franchement, je la déteste, confie Larry Boisvert, un citoyen rencontré par La Tribune dans la petite ville américaine. Un mur serait mauvais pour les échanges entre nos deux pays. » « En plus, je ne pense pas que ça changerait quoi que ce soit en ce qui concerne l'immigration illégale en provenance du Canada vers les États-Unis, lance M. Boisvert. Ça paraît ridicule. » « Je n'aime pas cette idée de mur, déclare Edna Petit, dont un des aïeux a quitté le Québec pour s'établir aux États-Unis au 20e siècle. Selon moi, l'origine de ce type de proposition, c'est le 11 septembre 2001. Ce qui est arrivé ce jour-là a changé bien des choses. Les gens ont peur et une forme de paranoïa s'est installée. » La Presse

Border idea should be smashed into a thick wall

For many years, there has been desultory talk of a wall between the United States of America and its southern neighbour, Mexico. Given the size of the project, it has always seemed a little “over the top.” Nevertheless, that border has always been a sieve. With only a shallow river separating the countries in some places, it has always been easy for illegal immigrants to walk or swim across. When we spent time in southern Arizona some years ago, we were warned to look out for people walking on highways, carrying jugs of water. There seemed to be quite a few. Border patrols checked out the area where we stayed every day, but when they took the illegals back across the border, they just returned the next night. Or they tunneled under the border to crawl to what they considered to be safety. It has been a never-ending problem, so it is not surprising that the US government has been constantly in search of solutions. It's not surprising either that Donald Trump, after his tirade against Mexicans, and other presidential hopefuls should bring up the subject now. Trump, of course, would like to deport 11 million illegal aliens from Mexico. I wonder who he thinks will replace them in hotels, motels, restaurants etc. At the same time, it seems counterproductive when in recent presidencies “The Three Amigos” – Canada, the USA and Mexico - have declared their friendship and solidarity. Which way should our neighbour to the south go, back to the isolationism of the 1930s, or onward to a greater continental unity? Niagara This Week

U.S. man arrested on child porn charges while crossing Canadian border

A 48-year-old man from California is facing charges related to child pornography after being arrested Monday at the Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., border crossing. Niagara Region police say they were called by the Canada Border Services Agency after searching a vehicle at the Queenston-Lewiston Bright. As a result of the investigation, Brian Galeazzi was arrested and charged with possession of child pornography and importing child pornography. Galeazzi was held in custody pending a bail hearing today in St. Catharines. CTV News

Seafarers' union takes government to court over foreign sailors

The Seafarers International Union of Canada is preparing to take the federal government to court over the use of foreign sailors — some of whom are allegedly being paid as little as $2 per hour — on internationally-flagged ships in Canadian waters. The labour group, which represents unlicensed sailors in all of the country's coastal waters, has been firing warning shots for month over the growing refusal of shipping agents to hire Canadian crews — something to which the federal government has allegedly has turned a blind eye. The Canadian Press has learned the union intends to ask the Federal Court in Vancouver on Tuesday for a judicial review of the practice of issuing the foreign sailors temporary work permits. The union points to the 60,000 ton, Greek-owned tanker Almathea, which was just in the Port of Montreal and licensed to be transporting crude oil in Canadian waters until Sept. 13. Fourteen employment contracts, obtained by The Canadian Press, show hourly wages for non-licensed crew members range from as little as $2.13 to $8.80, depending upon the job and before overtime. CBC News

Yoga teacher, Cuban national both jailed for importing cocaine

A Mississauga man and Brampton man are each going to jail for more than six years after a Superior court judge ruled the pair acted as “couriers” in smuggling more than $600,000 worth of cocaine into Pearson International Airport. Some of the drugs were smuggled in through an inflatable toy, Justice Michal Fairburn heard prior to handing down her sentence. In convicting Juan Carlos Carrera-Vega, 25, of Mississauga, and Roberto Sablon-Leal, 60, of Brampton, of importing cocaine into Canada, jurors rejected their evidence that they had purchased new luggage while vacationing in Panama back in December 2011, chose to bring the bags back empty and were "shocked" to discover the new bags contained more than seven kilograms of cocaine when they were busted by Canada Border Services Agency officers. Mississauga News

Un syndicat canadien dénonce l'embauche à bas prix de marins étrangers

Le Syndicat international des marins canadiens (SIU) se prépare à traîner le gouvernement fédéral devant les tribunaux concernant le recours à des marins étrangers sur des navires battant pavillon étranger dans les eaux canadiennes. Le groupe, qui représente les marins non brevetés travaillant dans toutes les eaux côtières du pays, dénonce depuis plusieurs mois le refus des agents maritimes d'embaucher des marins canadiens, un phénomène qui semble vouloir prendre de l'ampleur et qu'Ottawa aurait apparemment décidé d'ignorer. La Presse Canadienne a appris que le syndicat avait l'intention de demander, mardi, à la Cour fédérale à Vancouver de procéder à une révision judiciaire de la pratique consistant à délivrer des permis de travail temporaire à des marins étrangers. Le SIU a notamment mentionné le cas de l'Almathea, un pétrolier de 60 000 tonnes appartenant à des intérêts grecs, qui a récemment mouillé l'ancre dans le port de Montréal et qui a reçu la permission de transporter du pétrole brut dans les eaux canadiennes jusqu'au 13 septembre. Radio-Canada.ca

Brampton man arrested for allegedly importing fentanyl from China

A Brampton man has been charged with illegally importing approximately 513 grams of the drug fentanyl from China. The RCMP says it also found a set of body armour, a number of long knives and cash at the man's home when he was arrested on Sept. 2. "Fentanyl trafficking and abuse is a serious concern that plagues Canadians coast to coast. The RCMP is determined to stop the illegal importation of fentanyl into Canada and to arrest the people who are responsible for it," RCMP Insp. Dean Dickson said in a statement. Street drugs The RCMP says it partnered with the United States Customs and Border Patrol (CBP) and the U.S. Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) on the investigation. The 31-year-old man faces charges including importing drugs into Canada and conspiracy, and is scheduled to appear in Brampton Provincial Court on Oct. 2. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A California man is facing charges related to child pornography after being arrested Monday at the Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., border crossing. Niagara Region police say they were called by the Canada Border Services Agency after searching a vehicle at the Queenston-Lewiston Bright. (Newstalk 610 CKTB St. Catharines, 8h04 ET)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Apple couldn't comply with warrant because of encryption

Apple rejected a court order to turn over communications sent using its iMessage feature citing their encryption system, The New York Times reported. It's a situation the Department of Justice (DOJ) and FBI have long warned about, but has rarely been seen. Federal investigators apparently wanted to intercept, in real time, the text messages that two suspects using iPhone were sending to each other. Both individuals were thought to be part of an illegal drugs and guns scheme. But Apple rebuffed the request, arguing the system is encrypted and the company can't access those messages. Reportedly, some within the DOJ and FBI pushed to take the Silicon Valley titan to court over the matter. Officials have backed off for now. The incident is a stark example of the long-brewing tensions between federal investigators and the tech community. In the wake of the surveillance programs exposed by former National Security Agency (NSA) contractor Edward Snowden, companies like Apple, Google and Microsoft have moved quickly to bolster their encryption in the hopes of keeping customer data out of reach from the government. The Hill

Beijing expected to escape US hacking sanctions

Looming sanctions aimed at Chinese interests suspected of stealing and profiting from U.S. trade secrets are unlikely to directly target Beijing, as the White House is expected to go after companies instead of foreign governments. A series of leaked comments from unnamed White House sources over the past few days has revealed that sanctions against hackers are now in the works. But experts say they won't apply to cyberattacks like the recent hack of the federal Office of Professional Management, which compromised the personal information of millions of workers and is widely considered to be the work of state-backed hackers. That's because the Obama administration is wary of imposing sanctions for normal state-sponsored intelligence gathering tactics the U.S. government itself employs on an ongoing basis. The Hill

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Two Police Shootings in a Year Leave RCMP, RNC Investigating Each Other

The RNC are investigating the circumstances surrounding a police shooting in Cartwright Labrador over the long weekend. RCMP responded to a call about a man assaulting a woman. When they arrived, they were confronted by a man brandishing a weapon. After he failed to heed police orders to drop his weapon, police shot the 25-year-old man, sending him to hospital with non life-threatening injuries. It's the second police shooting in the province this year. On Easter Sunday, an RNC officer, part of the premier's security detail, was investigating comments made on Twitter, when something went awry. He shot and killed 59-year-old Donald Dunphy in his Mitchell's Brook home. That matter is now under investigation by RCMP. VOCM.com

Une femme évacuée pour cause d'insalubrité extrême

Une femme âgée aux prises avec la maladie mentale a été évacuée de sa maison dans des conditions d'insalubrité extrême, à Saint-Antoine. D'une quinzaine de chats retrouvés dans la demeure, six ont été euthanasiés. «C'est le pire cas que j'ai vu de ma vie et ça fait 28 ans que je travaille auprès des animaux.» Pauline Cormier n'en croyait pas ses yeux lorsqu'elle est arrivée sur les lieux pour s'occuper des félins. Habituellement chargée de s'occuper des chiens, l'agente de contrôle des animaux indépendante de Dieppe a été appelée par la GRC, après que la Société pour la prévention de la cruauté envers les animaux du Nouveau-Brunswick (SPCANB) ne soit pas intervenue (lire texte en page 5). L'appel d'urgence initial a été logé par un employé de Meals on Wheels, peu après 18 h le 13 août. «Quand les policiers m'ont dit d'apporter une combinaison Hazmat, je me doutais que c'était grave, mais pas à ce point...» La scène était digne d'un film d'épouvante. Le plancher était complètement recouvert d'excréments d'animaux et d'autres déchets secs et organiques, le lit de la femme était entouré de sacs de vidanges et parsemé de crottes, et le bain était rempli à ras d'excréments humains ; elle s'en servait comme toilette depuis déjà quelques mois. L'odeur était pestilentielle. L'Acadie Nouvelle

N.B. RCMP probe Molotov cocktails left in front of Credit Union

The RCMP are investigating after Molotov cocktails were left in front of the Credit Union in Blackville, N.B. Monday afternoon. Police responded to a report that bottles containing flammable liquids had been left in front of the building on Main Street around 2 p.m. Police seized the bottles. No one was injured and nothing was damaged. CTV News; CBC News; Canadian Press (Global News)

Brampton man arrested for allegedly importing fentanyl from China

A Brampton man has been charged with illegally importing approximately 513 grams of the drug fentanyl from China. The RCMP says it also found a set of body armour, a number of long knives and cash at the man's home when he was arrested on Sept. 2. CBC News; Brampton Guardian

3 youth charged with arson in Peter Pitseolak High School fire

Nunavut RCMP say they have charged three youth with arson after a fire at Cape Dorset's Peter Pitseolak High School. In a news release, RCMP say the fire, which burned the school to the ground Sunday, was deliberately set. Three youth between the ages of 13 and 16 have been charged with arson with damage to property and arson with disregard for human life. There will be no classes for Peter Pitseolak students Tuesday and Wednesday while classes continue as usual at Sam Pudlat elementary school. CBC News; Nunatsiaq Online

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Lockdown lifted at Millhaven Institution

A five day lockdown put in place at Millhaven Institution has been lifted, said a press release from Correctional Service Canada, on Tuesday. The lockdown was put in place at the maximum security institution around 4 p.m. on Thursday Sept. 3. Over the long weekend staff conducted an exceptional search of the facility which houses over 400 inmates. Some visits were affected by the lockdown, said an earlier release but normal operations have resumed. CSC did not say what they were looking for or how the contraband was brought into the institution. Kingston Whig-Standard

Voting rights extended to over 22000 prisons

In the upcoming election, thousands of inmates will vote from prisons across Canada. According to current Canadian law, prisoners are eligible to vote in the riding where they lived before they were incarcerated. During the 2011 federal election, 54 per cent of eligible voters in prison cast their vote, a number which closely resembles our own population voting turnout. In 2002, a Supreme Court ruling granted federal prisoners the right to vote based on constitutional grounds. The vote was 5-4 however, showing how split the judges were on this controversial issue. The ruling stemmed from the Richard Sauvé, a former biker in Satan's Choice gang who was serving a life sentence who challenged the law which prevented him from voting. Following the case, all Canadians living in the country were made eligible to vote in the federal election excluding Canada's Chief Electoral Officer. Though the prisoners' voting day is different than the rest of the country, Elections Canada will send representatives to each prison to administer the vote. According to Melissa Hart, a spokeswoman for CSC, "One or more polling stations are set up in the institution and voting starts at 9:00 a.m. local time. Polls will remain open until everyone who wants to vote has voted, but no later than 8:00 p.m. local time". Brock Press

Lawyer to get new trial

The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal has ordered a new trial for a high-profile Halifax lawyer sentenced last year to three years in prison for sexually assaulting a 19-year-old woman. In a written decision released Friday, Justice David Farrar concluded the judge who heard Lyle Howe's case in May 2014 was mistaken when he told the jury the complainant was unconscious when she engaged in sexual activity with Howe. This was a key point in the case because, under the law, an unconscious person is incapable of giving consent to a sexual act. According to Farrar's judgment, the trial judge instructed the jury: "Even if she expresses her consent in advance ... it is not possible for an unconscious person to satisfy the requirement of actual, active consent throughout every phase of the sexual activity." Farrar's decision says the Crown's position and evidence presented at the trial gave no indication that the complainant was unconscious at the time of the offence. Canadian Press (Cape Breton Post)

Statutory release revoked for man who robbed Kingston pharmacy

The Parole Board of Canada has revoked statutory release for an Annapolis County man who robbed the Kingston Pharmasave at knifepoint in January 2013. Mark Howard White, 27, of Nictaux, was sentenced to two years federal custody for the robbery in February 2013. (...)The Parole Board of Canada imposed special conditions on White's statutory release as part of an April 24 decision. He had served two-thirds of his sentence. White was released from custody May 7. The Correctional Service of Canada suspended White May 26 after his "strange behaviour and the criminal behaviour of another resident of the community residential facility created suspicion" regarding White's activities. It was later determined that White had spent the evening drinking alcohol with another resident who reoffended during the evening. (...)Information from the parole board states the Correctional Service of Canada "is of the opinion that you (White) cannot be trusted under conditional release in the community and that your risk can no longer be managed as it has become undue." Kings County News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Missing people subject of Shelburne walk

They carried flags and wore shirts inscribed with the names of those missing, as they walked to remember people who have disappeared. The walk, held in Shelburne on Sept. 5, and organized by Jeanette Nickerson, included a performance of the Women of the Shore drummers, and a message from Acadian First Nations chief Deborah Robinson. Chief Robinson said community efforts such as Saturday's walk were an important part of the process of finding answers and she called for a national inquiry on the issue of murdered and missing aboriginal women. Shelburne County Coast Guard

The Story of Fentanyl, Part 1: A prescription drug turned dangerous pill

Brigette Krieg sits by her daughter's hospital bed, waiting for 16-year-old Ally to wake up. The Saskatoon teenager is in a coma after purposefully taking a pill to try and end her life. The illegal tablet contained toxic amounts of fentanyl, a strong prescription painkiller. When used appropriately, fentanyl isn't lethal. But its deadly effects have been felt across Saskatchewan, with a heightened awareness over the past year. The Office of the Chief Coroner has confirmed six deaths related to illicit fentanyl pills in Saskatchewan since 2013. Five were in Saskatoon, one was in Kindersley and all of them were men. But that only includes overdose deaths where victims accidentally took fentanyl thinking it was OxyContin, or "fake oxy." Nineteen other people have died in Saskatchewan from overdoses involving pharmaceutical fentanyl, according to the latest government statistics obtained by CKOM News. CKOM

View of the City from a Patrol Car

It's a relatively quiet night on city streets for Saskatoon Police Patrol Sgt. Paul Pitzel as he surveys the central division of Saskatoon. Pitzel, who has been with the force for 16 years, has a supervisory role with police. He assesses and watches over up to 12 officers in his area that covers downtown Saskatoon and avenues A to Z, and provides backup when needed. (...)Pitzel says there's been more calls for service since he started in Saskatoon, and there's been more calls for firearm-related incidents. However, he says police are always adapting to crime, and there's also been better training, facilities and equipment for officers since he began. Nearly two months ago, Statistics Canada ranked Saskatoon atop the country in their Crime Severity Index. Pitzel believes Saskatoon is a safe city, and that the stats show that people are more comfortable with police in reporting information. Saskatoon Homepage

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Mohamed Fahmy case: 300 notable supporters ask Stephen Harper to help get journalist home

In an open letter released today, nearly 300 prominent Canadians are asking Prime Minister Stephen Harper to act directly to help get jailed journalist Mohamed Fahmy released from an Egyptian prison. Many are members or officers of the Order of Canada. At least two are non-Canadians. Fahmy, an Egyptian with Canadian citizenship, was sentenced Aug. 29 to three years in prison after an appeal of his earlier conviction failed. The charges are terror related and widely denounced as a sham. "The world knows that Mr. Fahmy is an innocent man trapped in a political nightmare — that he is in prison simply for doing his job," the letter says. It concludes: "We urge you, as Canada's Prime Minister, to communicate directly with President [el-Sisi] the need to have Mr. Fahmy returned home safely and swiftly. It goes to the very heart of what it means to be Canadian that we defend the rule of law and protect our fellow citizens from harm." CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

David Cameron draws up 'kill list' of Isis fighters who can be taken out at a moment's notice

David Cameron has drawn up a secret hit-list of Isis fighters who can be taken out at a moment's notice if the opportunity arises, it has emerged. The National Security Council, which is chaired by the Prime Minister and meets weekly, authorised a list of about 10 jihadists earlier in the summer and included the two British Isis fighters who were killed by the RAF in a drone attack in Syria last month. It means the RAF can launch another drone attack on anyone on the hit list without having to go back to the NSC or the Attorney General for approval. Among them is Mohammed Emwazi, otherwise known as Jihadi John, who has been filmed carrying out barbaric murders on a number of British hostages. Last month's secret killing of Cardiff-born Reyaad Khan and Ruhul Amin, from Aberdeen, was revealed by the Prime Minister yesterday. It was the first time the UK government targeted a British citizen in a foreign country. News of the hit list led to a father of two young British men who are believed to be fighting for Isis in Syria voicing concerns that they too are on the Government's hit list. The Prime Minister defended the killing of Mr Khan and Mr Amin, insisting it was "entirely lawful" and the Government was "exercising Britain's inherent right in self defence". Mr Cameron told MPs that Mr Khan and Mr Amin had been linked to a number of plots in the UK, including ones to target public commemorations, understood to have been the VE Day and Armed Forces Day events this summer, which were attended by the Queen. The security services had identified Mr Khan and a second UK-born target, Junaid Hussain, as "a direct threat to the UK", with evidence showing he was actively recruiting people to carry out terrorist attacks in the West. The Independent; The Telegraph; Daily Mail

US places 4 Hamas, Hezbollah operatives on terrorism blacklist

The Obama administration is placing four members of the radical Hamas and Hezbollah groups on a terrorism blacklist that subjects them to U.S. sanctions. The State Department announced Tuesday that Hezbollah spokesman Samir Kuntar along with Hamas military leaders Yahya Sinwar, Rawhi Mushtaha, and Muhammed Deif had been added to the specially designated global terrorists list. The move will freeze any assets they may have in U.S. jurisdictions and bans Americans from doing business with them. Associated Press (NY Times)

Freddie Gray's family settles with city of Baltimore for $6.4M

The city of Baltimore says it has reached a $6.4 million wrongful death settlement with the family of a black man who died after suffering a critical spine injury while in police custody. Freddie Gray's death in April sparked protests, rioting and unrest that shook Baltimore for days. Six Baltimore police officers face criminal charges stemming from Gray's death. Gray, 25, was critically injured April 12 in the back of a prisoner transport van after he was arrested. The settlement still needs the approval of a board that oversees city spending. They meet Wednesday.

Associated Press (Global News, CBC News)

Thousands seeking new lives in Europe enter Hungary as country works on 4-metre-high border fence

Thousands of people seeking new lives in Europe entered Hungary on Tuesday, even as the government pledged renewed efforts to stop migrants from the Middle East, Asia and Africa with a fence on the Serbian border. Outside the border village of Roszke, around 400 migrants were at a collection point at noon, waiting to be taken a fenced-in registration area nearby. Impatience among the migrants who had crossed over from Serbia was growing, as only two buses had been sent to get them since 6 a.m.

Associated Press (National Post)

German Vice Chancellor says half a million refugees can be harboured per year 'for several years'

A top German official said his country could take half a million refugees a year "for several years," even as some critics questioned Tuesday whether generous asylum policies serve to entice more migrants to make the dangerous trek for Western Europe. "I believe we could surely deal with something in the order of half a million for several years," Vice Chancellor Sigmar Gabriel told broadcaster ZDF late Monday night. He spoke amid signs that the migrant flow — many from war-battered Iraq and Syria — is only escalating amid a humanitarian crisis that has sharply tested European cooperation and fundamental policies such as open borders. National Post

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

HomicideTeam

Significant developments in the 2014 homicide of Nicholas Hannon. #IHIT holding Presser with family today at 8:30am at RCMP EHQ /GTimbers

DavidBellICTV

RCMP confirm 2 bodies found in house fire at 12 Denis St. in Bouctouche NB, bodies taken to Saint John for autopsy.

NickMurray91

Nunavut RCMP charged three youths with arson in connection with the Peter Pitseolak high school fire in Cape Dorset #CBCnorth

NickMurray91

In a release, RCMP say the youths, 13-16, have been charged with "arson with damage to property" & "arson with disregard for human life"

NunatsiaqNews 12:11pm via Twitter Web Client

#Nunavut RCMP have charged three youth, aged 13-16, with arson in connection with the Sept. 6 Cape Dorset school fire.

CBCNB

Blackville RCMP respond to explosives outside bank cbc.ca/news/canada/ne...

Global NB

RCMP find Molotov cocktails outside Blackville Credit Union globalnews.ca/news/2208498/r...

theprovince

Three men charged in first-degree murder of Langley teen Nicholas Hannon <http://theprovince.in/1iaudKy>

INTERNATIONAL

guardian

How UK government decided to assassinate Reyaad Khan <http://trib.al/zdeybWMM>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
September 12, 2015 / le 12 septembre 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Henri Fizzles Out, Fog Continues

That's about it for tropical storm Henri. It has fizzled out without causing any real trouble. The southeast Avalon got the highest amount of rain on land in the region as the heaviest rain remained offshore overnight and this morning. However, Provincial Airlines and Aerospace meteorologist Brian Walsh says that with a slight shift in direction, the Avalon could have been in for 30-50 mm of rain. Winds were not a factor. In the meantime, heavy fog is causing some flights to alter their plans. While no flights have been cancelled, some outbound ones are being delayed for anywhere between 15 or 20 minutes to a couple of hours. The fog is expected to hang around metro for most of the day. VOCM; St. John's Telegram

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Trouble shooting - America's computers and networks are under attack. Retaliation against Chinese hackers looms

IF CHINESE spies broke into an American government building and stole important documents, or were seen planting explosives in the electric grid, uproar or worse would ensue. Yet state-supported Chinese hackers have, officials say, been getting away with the digital equivalent for years, with notably little response. Now President Barack Obama's administration has drafted economic sanctions against Chinese companies that it believes have profited from trade secrets stolen from American firms. Amid wrangles inside the administration, there are hints that they could come into force soon, though probably not before Xi Jinping, China's president, visits Washington this month. The Economist

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Fallen RCMP Officers to be Honoured in Regina Sunday

On Sunday, two fallen officers will be honoured at the RCMP Academy in Regina. The names of Cpl. George Ronald Hawkins and Cst. David Matthew Wynn will be added to the Cenotaph, the Honour Roll and the Memorial Wall. Each year, the service honours members, special constables, auxiliary constables and civilians that lost their lives in response to a police duty, where there was the element of life threatening risk. SaskatoonHomePage.ca

RCMP investigate after man suffers stab wounds near Metrotown SkyTrain station

Burnaby RCMP are investigating after a man was found with stab wounds at the Metrotown SkyTrain station. Police rushed to the scene at around 11:30 p.m. Friday and found a 25-year-old man who suffered two knife wounds. He was taken to hospital with non-life-threatening injuries. Global News

RCMP investigating homicide in Crowsnest Pass

The RCMP has determined foul play was involved in the death of a woman found dead in her Crowsnest Pass home. The investigation began Wednesday, when police and paramedics responded to a call from a concerned neighbour and found Hannah Meketech, 69, dead inside her home in Coleman, 145 kilometres west of Lethbridge. An autopsy determined that someone killed Meketech, but police are withholding her cause of death for investigative reasons. The RCMP is now in the process of trying to determine the comings and goings from Meketech's home at 1421 81 St. in Coleman in the days leading up to her death. Meanwhile, the RCMP's major crime unit is also probing a death in central Alberta on Friday. Calgary Herald; CTV News; Radio-Canada

Vancouver marijuana dispensary responds to warning letter from Health Canada

The BC Compassion Club Society is looking for some more details after the federal government threatened to call in the RCMP unless it and 12 other marijuana dispensaries close. John Conroy is the Compassion Club's lawyer and says they've written back to Health Canada. "[We are] asking them to comply with the duty to act fairly that falls upon all administrators when they are going to take action that could adversely affect anyone." Conroy believes if the Mounties move in, you'll see patients in wheelchairs complaining about police taking their medicine. "We'll see if they charge sick people with the situation, bearing in mind [that a] lot of these folks used to be on all kinds of prescribed opiates. Many of them are now not on any opiates and doing much better." He says raids used to happen when the Compassion Club first started 20 years ago. "There [were] patients on the news complaining about the police taking away their medicine." Conroy adds they want specifics about claims the non-profit club is advertising "It's a bit puzzling what they have come up with and why they seem to have focused on the ones that are the best, the most compliant." News 1130

Battlefords RCMP respond to report of gunshots near school

Saskatchewan RCMP are on the lookout for a suspect involved in a reported shooting in North Battleford Friday morning. At about 8:35 a.m., RCMP received a call about a suspicious person in the area of Douglas Avenue and St. Laurent Drive. Shortly after, multiple shots were fired in the area, according to authorities. No one was injured but property was damaged as result of the discharge of the firearm. Global News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Canada promises more humanitarian aid for victims of conflict

Canada will be supplying additional humanitarian assistance for victims of the conflict in Syria. International Development Minister Christian Paradis on Saturday announced that the federal government will match "eligible" Canadian donations up to $100 million under the Syrian Emergency Relief Fund. That's in addition to $503.5 million in humanitarian assistance funding Canada has already allocated for humanitarian efforts in Syria and neighbouring countries since the beginning of Syria's civil war. Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne commended the federal move Saturday while announcing her province is pledging $10.5 million to help more refugees settle in Ontario and support international relief efforts. Wynne says $8.5 million over 2 1/2 years will go to support refugees, increase the number coming to Ontario, and help settle them once they arrive, while the remaining $2 million will be donated for humanitarian efforts. Canadian Press (Macleans; Ottawa Sun; Vancouver Sun)

Mom of four kids allegedly abducted overseas wants Canadian government to 'bring them back'

Vancouver Island mother fears her four missing children are in the same region where hundreds of thousands of refugees are fleeing. Alison Azer's children were allegedly abducted by her ex-husband overseas a month ago and she believes they could now be in the Middle East. The Canadian government needs to do more to bring them home, Azer says. "I'm a Canadian citizen. My children are Canadian citizens. We need the Canadian government to locate them and bring them back," she says. "After one month, I certainly expected more from my own government." The four children were legally allowed to travel to France and Germany with their father in early August, but the group did not return as scheduled. Canadian Press (Edmonton Sun)

At least 89 people killed, 100 injured in twin explosions at central India restaurant

At least 89 people were killed at a restaurant in central India on Saturday when a cooking gas cylinder exploded and triggered a second blast of mine detonators stored illegally nearby, police said. The restaurant, located next to the main bus station in the town of Petlawad in Madhya Pradesh state, was crowded with people having breakfast when the blasts occurred. The building where the restaurant was located and an adjacent building were destroyed in the explosions, and motorbikes outside the restaurant were flattened, said Mewa Lal Gond, a police inspector in the mining district of Jhabua, where Petlawad is located. Rescue workers extricated 89 bodies from under a huge heap of rubble, Gond said. Local police officer Kamlesh Bamaniya said early Saturday evening that the rescue operation had ended and that there were no more bodies under the rubble. Bamaniya said a local contractor, Rajendra Kashawa, had been given a license to purchase detonators for his business of digging wells, but had stored the detonators illegally in a room adjacent to the restaurant. Associated Press (Newser)

'They're using mustard': U.S. official says ISIL is creating its own chemical weapons

ISIL is increasingly believed to be manufacturing its own crude chemical weapons, according to a U.S. official. The extremist group has used mustard agents on at least four occasions as it fights to expand its self-declared caliphate across Syria and Iraq. The Telegraph (National Post)

Obama's bid to shut Guantanamo mired in federal-state politics - Detainee transfers ensnared in red tape as myriad agencies review cases

The Obama administration's struggling quest to close the U.S. detention centre at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, is mired in state and federal politics. Frustrated White House and Pentagon officials are blaming each other for the slow progress releasing approved detainees and finding a new prison to house those still held. U.S. Defence Secretary Ash Carter is facing criticism from some administration officials who complain that he has not approved enough transfers, even though 52 Guantanamo detainees are eligible. Carter's predecessor, Chuck Hagel, was forced from the Pentagon job in part because the White House felt he was not moving quickly enough to send detainees to other countries. Associated Press (CBC News)

Russian military planes carrying aid, not troops to Syria, government says

Russian military cargo planes have taken supplies to Syria to set up a tent camp for more than 1,000 refugees, Russia's Defence Ministry said Saturday as the main Syrian opposition group blasted Moscow over its military presence in the Arab country. U.S. President Barack Obama has expressed concern about Russia's increased military activity in Syria, particularly at an air base near the coastal city of Latakia. Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov has said that Russia is airlifting weapons to Syria, a longtime ally, and Russian troops are training the Syrian army on how to use them. Defence Ministry spokesman Maj. Gen. Igor Konashenkov said Saturday the humanitarian aid included materials for setting up a tent camp, including beds, mattresses, stoves, water cisterns and food. The Syrian National Coalition condemned what it called "direct Russian military intervention," describing such a step as "hostile behaviour." The coalition's statement said the Russian intervention puts Moscow in a position that is "hostile to the Syrian people and turns its forces in Syria to occupation forces." Associated Press (CP24)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

theprovince

Asking why people become terrorists is natural, but it's better to recognize the... <http://theprovince.ca/1i6NnAr> #canada

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

TheEconomist

Cyber-security talks between China and America stalled after Snowden revelations. What now?
<http://econ.st/1K0w4s9> pic.twitter.com/0NdrK4UDhf

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CTVCalgary

@RCMPAlberta investigate homicide near #Coleman

CTVCalgary

Neighbours shocked as @RCMPAlberta investigate homicide in Coleman @ctvcalgary @ctvlethbridge
<http://ctv.news/qFGFVgg>

BC1

@BurnabyRCMP investigate after man suffers stab wounds near Metrotown SkyTrain station gln.ca/S7Rci

INTERNATIONAL

CdnPress

Canada promises more humanitarian aid for victims of conflict in Syria <http://bit.ly/1LgaOvO>

CBCAlerts

#RefugeesWelcome calls Ottawa's plan to provide up to $100M in new humanitarian aid for Syrian refugees 'a band-aid solution.'

CBCNews

Obama's bid to shut Guantanamo caught in blame game <http://ift.tt/1Qw10Vv>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
October 13, 2015 / le 13 octobre 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 14:00 p.m. and 20:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Tech founder puts up cash to put the brakes to Bill C-51

A Vancouver-based entrepreneur who has earmarked $1 million of his own fortune to combating the Harper government's controversial anti-terrorism bill said the laws dredge up unsettling memories of the totalitarian regime he fled as a child. Frederick Ghahramani said the sweeping surveillance measures contained in Bill C-51 undermine some of the central Canadian principles that prompted his family to relocate from Iran in 1985. A desire to uphold those values, coupled with concern for the bill's effect on the Canadian economy, have prompted him to offer financial support to organizations intent on overturning the bill. Ghahramani has already contributed $100,000 to Canadian Journalists for Free Expression, the University of Ottawa's Canadian Internet Policy and Public Interest Clinic and OpenMedia, adding he plans to determine how best to spend the remaining $900,000 after Monday's general election... The legislation, which went into effect in May with support from both the Conservatives and Liberals, gives the Canadian Security Intelligence Service more power to thwart suspected terrorist plots -- not just gather information about them. It also increases the exchange of federal security information, broadens no-fly list powers and creates a new criminal offence of encouraging someone to carry out a terrorist attack. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney has said the legislation is required to keep Canadians safe from jihadi-inspired attacks, while a raft of opponents from Amnesty International to the United Nations have decried the bill as a fundamental breach of privacy rights.

Canadian Press (CTV News)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

'We were damn near killed': Atlantic Charger captain speaks out on survival, rescue

The nine men who survived the sinking of the Atlantic Charger off Nunavut last month are trying to put the harrowing ordeal behind them, with the skipper speaking out strongly about why a helicopter was not on the scene to rescue them. "It's on my mind continually. It just haven't left me," Byron Oxford, the Atlantic Charger's captain, said in an interview with CBC Radio's The Broadcast. Oxford, who is still recovering from the Sept. 21 incident, also becomes emotional as he describes the gruelling wait the crew endured for an anticipated air rescue that never arrived. Instead, the nine-member fishing crew was brought to safety amid heavily rolling waves to another ship. "I'm angry. You can't be cutting things to the point where lives are in danger and nine of us aboard one vessel and a lot of these ships down there got 25 or 30 people on them," Oxford said. "Search and rescue needs to step up." CBC News

Nova Scotia flu shots free and ready now

Flu shots are now available from Nova Scotia pharmacies, doctors, nurses, workplaces and clinics - and health officials suggest you get your vaccination now. The shot is for the seasonal flu, not the other kind of "bird flu" that's currently afflicting workplaces. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

New law makes Canadian Jews second-class citizens

An opinion piece states "The past 10 years have seen many changes that have fundamentally altered the Canada that we love. The Conservative government has made it more difficult for refugees to find safety for themselves and their children on our shores. It has passed Bill C-51 anti-terror laws that threaten fundamental civil rights and expand state espionage against citizens, even over objections from national security experts that the new laws will not make us safer. It has singled out certain 'others' within Canadian society as the object of fear, for political benefit. These are just a few examples of how this government has pitted Canadians against each other. Perhaps the starkest example of the divisions that this government has created, in legal terms, are the changes to citizenship law that formally creates unequal classes of Canadians. The new law has transformed every Canadian Jew into a second-class citizen. Jewish Canadians remember Canada policy on Jewish immigration from the 1930s: 'none is too many.'... Let's be clear. We have no sympathy for criminals and terrorists. All Canadians convicted of a crime deserve to be sentenced. Yet we believe it is absurd to apply different rules to Canadians who commit the same crime, based on where they or their families were born. This is discrimination, baked right into the law that is supposed to treat us all as equals. Many Canadians are not aware how far-reaching this law could be. The provisions that could banish dual citizens can also apply to Canadians who might be able to obtain a second citizenship. This would include Canadian-born citizens who are descendants of many countries that grant citizenship to children, grandchildren and even great-grandchildren born abroad. Many countries, like Italy, Ireland, and India grant citizenship or easier access to citizenship to members of their diaspora." Toronto Star

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Family weeps as young cocaine smuggler handed stiff sentence in Kelowna courtroom

Kelowna woman who tried to smuggle a large amount of cocaine into Canada from the United States has been handed a lengthy prison sentence. Friends and family members of Caitlin Gladdish wept Tuesday as a provincial court judge in Kelowna sentenced her to six years and nine months behind bars. Judge James Threlfall said a longer term would have been appropriate, but noted the 27-year-old pleaded guilty, shows genuine remorse, has no previous criminal record and has excellent prospects for rehabilitation.

But Threlfall also said Gladdish knew her car had been modified with a secret compartment and had already used the vehicle to cross the U.S. border five times. Gladdish was arrested near Trail in July, 2014 as she attempted to return to Canada with 35-kilograms of cocaine hidden in her car. Vancouver Sun

Ambassador Bridge inspection appears to be underway

It appears an inspection of the Ambassador Bridge is underway. Michael Evans snapped a shot of what looks like inspectors checking the underside of the international crossing. City officials say Wyandotte Street West will likely remain closed between Huron Church Road and Indian Road for the rest of the week, as they sort out what needs to be done in the wake of falling debris from the Ambassador Bridge. The City of Windsor closed the street Oct. 9 as a precaution against fallen debris from bridge. The city is meeting with Ambassador Bridge representatives this week to determine next steps prior to reopening the area. A gaping hole in the bridge can be seen from the street below. In an email to Radio-Canada, Transport Canada said the bridge must undergo routine inspections. CBC News

Ça tape du pied à l'aéroport - Labeaume attend des appuis formels des partis fédéraux pour le centre de prédédouanement américain

Le maire Régis Labeaume s'impatiente. A quelques jours du vote, il presse les candidats aux élections fédérales d'appuyer formellement le projet de centre de prédédouanement américain à l'aéroport de Québec. Il en va de la vitalité économique de toute la région, selon lui. Le maire de Québec a fait un tour à l'aéroport international Jean-Lesage, mardi matin, pour lancer un nouvel appel aux partis fédéraux. «Ce qu'on demande aux partis politiques, c'est de dire que ce projet-là est incontournable, qu'il sera pour leur gouvernement une priorité et que même si d'autres aéroports s'y opposent, Québec a besoin d'un centre de prédédouanement», a-t-il résumé. Selon lui, «la timidité de certains» pourrait s'expliquer par le fait que d'autres aéroports au pays veulent aussi obtenir un tel équipement. C'est le cas de Billy-Bishop à Toronto, qui fait concurrence au géant Pearson dans la même ville. «Pourquoi il y aurait un deuxième centre à Toronto et pas à Québec?» a demandé M. Labeaume, perplexe. Le maire ainsi que le président et chef de la direction de l'aéroport, Gaëtan Gagné, ont fait valoir que l'appui du gouvernement du Canada était indispensable, même si ce sont les Américains qui, au final, décident où ils installent leurs douanes. Sans le ok des autorités locales, le projet est mort-né. «Ça prend un engagement ferme», a insisté M. Gagné, mettant de l'avant les retombées économiques et touristiques évaluées à 75 millions $ par année. Le Soleil; Journal de Québec

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Moldovan man charged in bank phishing scheme that cost Pennsylvania drilling firm $3.5 million

Federal prosecutors in Pittsburgh say a man from the eastern European country of Moldova ran an email phishing scheme that enabled him and others to steal banking information from U.S. companies, including a western Pennsylvania drilling firm that lost more than $3.5 million as a result. Thirty-year-old Andrey Ghinkul was indicted under seal in August; the charges were announced late Tuesday. Associated Press (Cape Breton Post, The province, Brandon Sun, The Telegram)

Siri will obey hackers from 16 feet away

Siri is fickle enough to do the bidding of hackers, a pair of French researchers discovered recently, and will readily obey the commands of anyone who talks to her. Hackers using radios to transmit commands from 16-feet away can control the Apple iPhone "personal assistant," according to a report in Wired. The researchers, from the French government agency ANSSI, used radio waves to prompt voice commands (silently) on an iPhone or Android that features Siri or Google Now and is being used in conjunction with headphones plugged into the phone's jack. The headphone cord is essentially used as an antenna to change electromagnetic waves to electrical signals. The phone's OS then recognizes the signals as audio from the microphone, the report said. SC Magazine

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

One dead, several hurt in attack at B.C. band office

One man is dead and as many as 10 people are hurt, some with life-threatening injuries, after a man walked into the Bridge River Indian Band office in Lillooet, B.C., armed with a hammer. Michaela Swan with the Interior Health Authority says it's caring for two patients in critical condition, another two in serious condition and six others with non-life threatening injuries. The injured people have been distributed at hospitals around the region. RCMP say they were called just before 8:30 a.m. to a report that a man with a weapon and found the suspect already restrained, but he was unconscious and unresponsive. Canadian Press \(CP24\); CBC News; Presse canadienne \(L'Actualité\)

Alleged fencing ring used drug addicts and downtrodden to steal for it

Charges are expected after the arrests of three people alleged to be the masterminds of a large fencing ring in Metro Vancouver. At a media briefing to show off the $100,000 worth of stolen goods seized in Vancouver and a business along Surrey's King George Boulevard, police said the people behind the massive theft ring preyed on drug addicts and the downtrodden who supplied them with the stolen merchandise. Investigators believe certain products stolen from drug stores were being sold to people involved in a methamphetamine lab. "A lot of the cold medication products were acquired for methamphetamine drug labs," said Vancouver police Insp. Earl Andersen. He said police expect more people to be apprehended as they continue the investigation... Most of the goods were stolen from retailers in the Vancouver area and then taken out to an operation in Surrey. "Hundreds and hundreds of crimes were being committed every month to fuel this business," Andersen said. Surrey RCMP Insp. Ghalib Bhayani said busting the fencing ring was the result of a multi-jurisdictional approach to law enforcement. Vancouver Province

Mounties arrest man who may know about central Alberta shootings

Andrew Snow was arrested by Red Deer RCMP on Tuesday afternoon while travelling as a passenger in a vehicle. Police say they arrested him without incident following a reported sighting. Snow is facing charges for breaching court-imposed conditions and remains in custody. In September, Mounties asked the public for help in finding Snow, describing him as armed and dangerous. They said they believed he had information about a Sept. 17 shooting in Sylvan Lake and another shooting in Eckville on Sept. 2. Global News

Dramatic video reveals suspects preparing for thwarted B.C. home invasion

The RCMP have released dramatic video footage of an attempted home invasion robbery in Richmond, B.C. The Mounties say the video was taken Oct. 6, outside a north Richmond home, as four men surrounded the house shortly before midnight. The video shows two men approach the front door of the house while two others, who appeared to be armed with a rifle and a shotgun, waited at the side. Once the original two men leave, the armed pair enter the frame, though the door slams and they don't get inside. Cpl. Dennis Hwang says the attack is not believed to be random. The homeowner is co-operating with police. Canadian Press \(Globe and Mail\)

Canada's Justice System Is Totally Racist and Classist: Study Confirms the Obvious

The disproportionately high rate of visible minorities and poor people in Canada's prisons is rooted in the discriminatory decisions made by the politicians who run our cities, a recent study claims. McGill professor Jason Carmichael analyzed the factors that determine the size of a city's police force and discovered it had little to do with crime rates. Rather, he found officials determined the number of officers on the ground based primarily on the size of the city's visible minority and lower-income populations, regardless of criminality. VICE sat down with the sociologist to discuss his work, his hopes for the upcoming election, and his take that more police actually means more crime. Vice.com (2015-10-13)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

More drugs intercepted at Joyceville

For the third time in a week, staff at the medium-security at Joyceville Institution have intercepted a cache of drugs and tobacco entering the institution. On Sunday afternoon around 3 p.m., correctional officers stopped an inmate who was trying to bring contraband into the institution... According to a release from Correctional Service Canada, the seizure was the result of the combined efforts of correctional officers and security intelligence officers at the institution. Whig-Standard

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Quebec Conservative candidate backtracks on inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women

A Conservative candidate in Quebec has clarified his position after seeming to contradict leader Stephen Harper in suggesting the party would launch an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal if re-elected. Yvon Boudreau, running in the riding of Manicouagan, was asked about the idea during a debate in Forestville Tuesday night. "There is an opening and I believe, upon our return to power, there is going to be a commission of inquiry that is going to happen," Boudreau said. CBC News

Winnipeg advocates stand up to fight modern slavery

Justache October's second annual 30-Hour Standoff begins Friday in downtown Winnipeg. Members of the advocacy group will stand for 30 hours to bring attention to modern-day slavery around the world, such as forced child labour and human trafficking for the sex trade. The hope is to raise $50,000 for International Justice Mission Canada. The group believes that amount would be enough to extract as many as 11 people from slavery. CBC News

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Veterans Affairs has hired only 25 injured soldiers in last decade

Despite a federal government push to hire former soldiers who were released due to medical issues, Veterans Affairs Canada has only hired 25 of them in the past 10 years. According to statistics from the Public Service Commission, Veterans Affairs only hired 25 former soldiers who had been medically released in the past decade, and just one in the last two years, as the government was emphasizing the need for such hirings... Correctional Service Canada is the second-largest employer with 63 such employees, followed by Employment and Social Development Canada with 52. Public Works has hired 28, Fisheries and Oceans 27 and the RCMP 25. Ottawa Citizen

OTHER / AUTRES

Anti-surveillance items helping people go off the grid - An undulating cloak that hides you from Google trackers, a kaleidoscopic one-piece that thwarts face-recognition software - they're real examples of anti-surveillance wear that smartphone users can don to keep private information under cover

We've come a long way from the tinfoil hat, that traditional aluminum trademark of conspiracy theorists. These days, the idea that average citizens need protection from Orwellian-style surveillance seems more practical than paranoid, because of Bill C-51, Canada's expansive "anti-terror" legislation that allows for more personal information to be shared among a list of government departments or the warnings of former National Security Agency contractor Edward Snowden, who advocates for greater global privacy-protection rights. While the concept of blocking unwanted signals - ones that transfer data from your phone, including your whereabouts, your surfing habits and your e-mail history - isn't exactly mainstream, product designers are coming up with a surprisingly broad range of surveillance (or anti-surveillance) items designed to protect our privacy. The trend was neatly encapsulated by Ways to be Secret, a recent display at the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, which ran from April to September. Curated by Corinna Gardner, the show drew attention to objects that both encourage sharing information online (such as the selfie stick) and block it (such as the Cryptophone 500, a military-grade mobile with the highest security standards on the market - 100,000 of them are in use worldwide). "Moments of social, economic and political change are articulated through these objects," says Gardner, a curator in the museum's department of contemporary architecture, design and digital, who attributes the growth in this category to increasing awareness of surveillance "creep." Globe and Mail

INTERNATIONAL

149 Child Sex Trafficking Victims Rescued In Nationwide Sting

The FBI and local authorities arrested 150 pimps and johns and rescued 149 sexually exploited children in a nationwide sweep last week, dubbed Operation Cross Country. In the operation's ninth year, authorities netted more recoveries and arrests than in any previous enforcement year, the FBI reported Tuesday. The sting spanned more than 135 American cities, with about 500 agencies working together with the FBI and National Center for Missing and Exploited Children to help save victims. Huffington Post

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

theprovince

North Shore Rescue hails gift of search device <http://theprov.in/1X4Vz3D>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CTVNews

Vancouver entrepreneur putting up his own cash in effort to combat Bill C-51 <http://ow.ly/TpM9o> #Elxn42

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

OttawaCitizen

RCMP: Mounties who took down Ottawa gunman will be recognized, but 'we need to assemble facts' first <http://ow.ly/ToLoi> #Cdnpoli

madinuk

Aboriginal peoples of Canada Adaptations Regs (Firearms) rcmp-grc.gc.ca/cfp-pcaf/fs-fd...

vicecanada

Is Canada's law enforcement classist and racist? <http://bit.ly/1GFY96E>

CKNW

RCMP say @iibc has been called after man dies at band office near #Lillooet. Armed man allegedly assaulted three people.

CP24

One dead, several hurt in armed attack involving hammer at B.C. band office <http://www.cp24.com/news/one-dead-several-hurt-in-attack-at-b-c-band-office-1.2609957...>

CBCAlerts

#Lillooet, B.C. #RCMP say man who allegedly assaulted 3 First Nations band members has died while in police custody: <http://cbc.ca/1.3271168>

GlobeBC

UPDATED: Suspect dead, 10 hurt, after man with hammer attacks B.C. band office

http://www.theglobeandmail.com/news/british-columbia/four-injured-when-man-armed-with-a-hammer-attacks-staff-at-bc-first-nation/article26812337/ ...

rcmpgrcpolice

Meet RCMP requirements? Get vision & hearing assessments then apply online. #RCMPrecruiting <http://rcmp.ca/TqB>

grcrcmppolice

Sarah Skunk - Dernières nouvelles : 1ère Nation Mishkeegogamang en 1986 (ON) #disparuscanada
<http://ow.ly/T2juq>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

globeandmail

Is Harper correct in his assessment that "most" cases of murdered indigenous women are "solved"?
<http://trib.al/FefvkK8> #AskTheGlobe #MMIW

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
October 15, 2015 / le 15 octobre 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 14:00 p.m. and 20:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

SURREY IN FOCUS: Shedding crime image hasn't been easy for city

An opinion piece states, "For decades, Surrey has been fighting the negative image that it's a crime-ridden bedroom community of Vancouver. Some of that perception has been inflated, but statistics bear out a lot of the claims of crime waves... Surrey First, which installed Mayor Linda Hepner and all eight councillors, promised 100 new officers in the coming budget. They were ordered and the community waited for them to arrive. Many doubted whether the force could deliver such a large number to Surrey. After being hammered by the NDP in the House of Commons, Federal Minister of Public Safety Steven Blaney said in June there were "20 boots on the ground" in Surrey. But none had arrived by that time. Meanwhile, crime statistics in the city continued to paint a grim picture. RCMP-generated quarterly statistics showed that in the first half of 2015, violent crime skyrocketed by 34 per cent and attempted murders were six times higher than during the same time in 2014..." Surrey Leader

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Montreal mayor says federal government 'negligent' for halting raw sewage dump into St. Lawrence River

The federal government is "irresponsible and negligent" to have ordered a halt to the City of Montreal's plans to begin construction work that would see eight billion litres of raw sewage dumped into the St. Lawrence River, Mayor Denis Coderre said Wednesday. Coderre said Ottawa's decision "makes no sense" and puts the city's water-treatment infrastructure in jeopardy... Five experts at Montreal's Ecole polytechnique engineering school published a position paper on the proposed dump last week, suggesting the city was correct in its assertion there were no other viable options. They say it is important to weigh the impact of such discharges against the dangers of neglecting maintenance or repair of critical infrastructure. They noted the repair work, once complete, will limit sewage getting into the river. Canadian Press (National Post)

A baby saved, a mother swept away

Five Etobicoke firefighters, answering a call to rescue people stranded in a car by the Humber River, are tossed into the roiling waters and drown when their fire truck overturns. Thirty-five people on Raymore Dr. in Weston die when floodwaters carrying the remnants of a bridge knock out the foundations of their homes, sweeping them away... These are just some of the heartbreaking stories of Hurricane Hazel, which struck the Toronto area on Oct. 15-16, 1954, with winds that reached 124 kilometres an hour and more than 200 millimetres of rain falling in 48 hours. It remains one of Canada's worst hurricanes and one of the GTA's worst natural disasters, resulting in 81 deaths, leaving some 1,900 homeless and racking up more than $1 billion in damages in today's dollars. Toronto was not prepared. A number of factors had conspired to make the city ripe for the "perfect storm." Hamilton Spectator

Christian evangelist Will Graham giving people hope for tough times

When the massive flood of two summers ago swept through the Siksika Nation east of Calgary, Samaritan's Purse and the Rapid Response Team chaplains with the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association of Canada quickly sprung into action to help people in the devastation. On Thursday, Will Graham, 40, son of preacher Franklin Graham and grandson of evangelist icon Billy Graham, was holding a Celebration of Hope outreach program at the Nation. Calgary Herald

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Hundreds participate in Frontier Sentinel 2015 military exercise in Yarmouth
Moans, bloody injuries and confusion greeted paramedics who arrived at the scene of a mock terrorist attack at the Yarmouth ferry terminal around noon on Thursday. The scenario was one of several that took place during Frontier Sentinel 2015, a joint/combined interagency exercise involving Joint Task Force Atlantic, the U.S. and Canadian Coast Guards, the RCMP, the Royal Canadian Navy and the U.S. Navy Fleet Forces as well as Transport Canada, Public Safety Canada, Health Canada, Canada Border Services Agency, Nova Scotia Department of Health and Wellness, Emergency Health Services and the Nova Scotia Health Authority and the Town of Yarmouth. NovaNewsNow.com

The Woman Who Joined the Taliban

The Woman Who Joined The Taliban is the personal and tragic story of a woman's quest for truth amidst the global war on terrorism. Beverley Giesbrecht is a publishing executive and devout Christian living near Vancouver, when the events of September 11th change her life. Within seven months, she converts to Islam and begins a journey that takes her to the heart of Taliban territory in the mountains of Pakistan. As a Canadian Muslim convert, Giesbrecht sees herself as a bridge between two warring cultures. Her website Jihad Unspun presents the radical Islamist's views to readers in Canada and the West. Determined to present an alternate view of militant Islam, she travels as a journalist to the most dangerous place on earth – the Taliban-controlled mountains of Pakistan - to make a first person documentary. But before she can finish her project, she is betrayed and taken captive by Taliban fighters who are convinced she is an American spy. CBC Firsthand

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Abdi Hersy, Calgary imam wanted on U.S. sex assault charges, granted new review

A Calgary imam facing criminal charges in the United States has launched a new bid to remain in Canada as a refugee. Abdi Hersy is wanted in the United States on sexual assault charges. Earlier this year, the Immigration and Refugee Board revoked Hersy's protected status in Canada. But on Thursday the Federal Court agreed to review the decision. Hersy is accused of sexually assaulting two female patients while working as a respiratory therapist in Minnesota in 2006. He lost his job and his licence soon after the reports surfaced. Then he crossed the border into Canada. CBC News

Voters worried about public service cuts: PSAC poll

A large majority of Canadians want the federal government to restore funding for the country's military veterans and re-open nine veterans' services offices that the Conservatives closed to cut costs, according to a new poll. The survey by EKOS Research Associates for the Public Service Alliance of Canada on Canadians' views of government spending cuts – either made or planned – suggests a majority are heading to the polls Monday concerned about cuts to public services, especially for veterans, food inspection, border services and environmental monitoring... About 60 per cent agreed that defending Canada's borders is too important for border services to be cut while about 21 per cent felt reducing government spending mattered more. Albertans were the big outliers with only 49 per cent saying border security was too important to cut staffing. The Canada Border Services Agency's plans and priorities reports show about 1,100 positions at the Canada Border Services Agency will be cut by 2017, including border workers, intelligence officers and dog detector teams... Food inspection, border security and services to veterans were slashed under the Harper government," said PSAC President Robyn Benson. "We hope that Canadians will elect a new government on Monday, so we can begin to restore the services that all citizens rely on." Ottawa Citizen

Former horse owners charged with animal cruelty now face arrest warrant

An arrest warrant has been issued for a couple after they failed to appear in P.E.I. provincial court for the sixth time on animal cruelty charges related to a massive horse seizure from their property last year. Last November and December Department of Agriculture and Forestry officials seized 41 horses at the property of Tawni Frank and George Smith on Byrnes Road near Morell... Their lawyer Peter Ghiz told the court he hasn't been able to reach them. He said the couple is living somewhere in the United States but has changed their phone numbers and haven't responded to his emails... Crown attorney Jeff MacDonald says, to the best of his knowledge, Frank and Smith are New York state residents. Unless the couple returns to Canada or there's an extradition order to get them back in the country, there's little the courts can do, he says. CBC News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Le transfert Europe-USA de données personnelles est compromis

Dans une décision rendue le 6 octobre, la Cour de justice de l'Union européenne a invalidé le « Safe Harbour », un arrangement administratif qui permettait le transfert de données personnelles entre l'Europe et les États-Unis. La décision est une conséquence des révélations d'Edward Snowden au sujet des intrusions de l'agence américaine de sécurité dans les données personnelles de milliers d'internautes. Elle remet en question le cadre juridique qui permet le transfert massif de données d'un continent à l'autre, notamment plusieurs services reposant sur des solutions « infonuagiques », comme Facebook, Google ou Amazon. Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, Journal de Québec)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP look for man after police assaulted on Manitoba First Nation

A 27-year-old man allegedly assaulted RCMP officers before escaping out the window of a home on a Manitoba First Nation. Officers were called to the home on the Ebb and Flow First Nation, about 180 kilometres from Winnipeg, on Oct. 10. During their investigation, police learned a man in the home, who falsely identified himself, was wanted on a warrant. They tried to arrest him but the man fought off the officers and assaulted them, RCMP alleged in a news release. The man then left the house through a window. The officers ran after him but couldn't catch the man, who they say was Victor Norbert St. Paul. St. Paul is now wanted for assaulting a peace officer, obstructing a peace officer, theft, uttering threats, possession of a weapon and another assault charge. CBC News; CJOB AM 680; Winnipeg Sun

CRDA files centre of court dispute between RCMP and ombudsman

Lawyers for the RCMP and Nova Scotia's ombudsman squared off in court in Amherst Thursday over a request by fraud investigators for confidential files related to the Cumberland Regional Development Authority. The RCMP wants the Nova Scotia Office of the Ombudsman to turn over everything it has related to its 2012 probe of questionable financial reporting at the now defunct development agency. Much of the information is already in the hands of police, however, the ombudsman is resisting a formal production order that seeks what's left. CBC News

Driver charged in Coquitlam hit-and-run that left cyclist with 'catastrophic' injuries

Three criminal charges have been approved against 28-year-old Sean William McAllister of Port Coquitlam in connection with a hit-and-run in Coquitlam in July of last year. He has been charged with failure to remain on scene, impaired driving causing bodily harm and dangerous driving causing bodily harm. McAllister came forward and identified himself as the driver in August of last year. Global News; CBC News

Chambers Canada: Brian Greenspan makes short list of elite white-collar crime practitioners

When trouble hits members of the Canadian elite, many turn to Toronto lawyer Brian Greenspan for help. His name is connected with a number of high-profile trials that have captured the attention of the business world... The feedback we were receiving from clients is that more and more companies were looking to equip themselves to deal with criminal investigations and required knowledgeable counsel with the sophistication to do so," says Joanna Lane, an editor with Chambers & Partners. She notes the RCMP has cracked down on enforcement, leading to a number of high-profile charges and some convictions. RCMP and regulatory agencies are taking steps to beef up their investigations of corporate crime. This year the force's Integrated Market Enforcement Team (IMET) moved into the headquarters of the Ontario Securities Commission, Canada's largest securities regulator. This was done to better coordinate their efforts. "We now have the capacity to take on more complex cases," says Karen Manarin, Deputy Director of Enforcement at the Ontario Securities Commission (OSC). "We expect more solid outcomes; more cases in courts, more jail time, and greater protection for the investing public." A 2012 study out of Toronto's York University and Holland's University of Tilburg suggests there is room for improvement. Schulich School of Business professor Douglas Cumming studied "fraud risk" at three leading stock exchanges. He found there was 10 times less reporting or litigation of corporate fraud in Canada than in the U.S... The apparent cracks in the system are clearly visible to Greenspan. He says IMET investigators "truly missed their mark" in the Royal Group Technologies Inc. case where he acted as defence counsel. In another high-profile prosecution, of Nortel Networks Corp., he believes the RCMP's financial crimes unit relied upon flawed information. "The Integrated Market Enforcement Teams were remarkably unsuccessful in effectively investigating and prosecuting, presenting cases for successful prosecution. They do not have a stellar record of success," Greenspan said. Both of these cases, defended by Greenspan, were closed without any convictions, leading to pointed criticism of the RCMP and their investigation methods. There were even calls, at the time, for IMET to be dismantled. Manarin calls white-collar crime enforcement a tough business. She believes working collaboratively with police partners "an elevator ride away" is generating results. "We will continue to fight the hard fight," she says, "as we know that insider trading is a serious issue for the integrity of our markets." National Post

Blood spatter expert tells Oland trial he was called four days after crime

An RCMP blood spatter expert says he was called four days after Richard Oland's murder to assist in the investigation. Sgt. Brian Wentzell of Halifax testified today that he arrived in Saint John, N.B., on July 11 and began to examine the scene. Canadian Press (Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Edmonton Sun, London Free Press, Canoe.com)

La criminalité en baisse au N.-B. en 2014

Les taux de criminalité ont continué de diminuer au Nouveau-Brunswick. C'est ce qui ressort du rapport annuel 2014 de la division néo-brunswickoise de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada. Selon les statistiques avancées dans le rapport, les crimes contre les biens sont en baisse de 6% et ceux contre la personne en baisse de 2 % comparativement à 2013. « Depuis plusieurs années, la GRC au Nouveau-Brunswick a adopté une démarche axée sur les preuves et le renseignement, et cela a donné de bons résultats », a déclaré le commissaire adjoint Roger Brown, commandant de la GRC au Nouveau-Brunswick. Radio-Canada ; Global News

RCMP investigate arson, gunshots in Whitehorse neighbourhood

RCMP in Whitehorse are investigating after discovering a series of gunshots had been fired into a city residence early this morning. CBC News

Enlèvement à Drummond: la GRC détient un suspect

La GRC a arrêté Gilbert Thériault, 43 ans, en lien avec un enlèvement survenu le 5 octobre 2015 à Drummond au Nouveau-Brunswick. La victime, un homme de 62 ans, est maintenant en sécurité. Il a été légèrement blessé, mais n'a pas eu besoin d'être hospitalisé, selon les forces policières. La GRC a procédé à l'arrestation de Gilbert Thériault à Plaster Rock, jeudi vers 13h (HA). Le 8 octobre, un mandat d'arrestation pancanadien avait été lancé contre Gilbert Thériault relativement à cet enlèvement. Radio-Canada ; CBC News

Airdrie RCMP lay charges in relation to several arsons

Mounties in Airdrie have charged two men in relation to several arsons that occurred on Monday, and RCMP say they are continuing to investigate a spate of suspicious fires in the city and surrounding rural areas over the past two weeks. On Tuesday, RCMP received a tip regarding two suspicious men seen in the vicinity of a dumpster fire on Monday in downtown Airdrie. Calgary Herald

Mounties nab suspect in shooting near Surrey school

One of the men wanted in connection with a shooting near a Surrey elementary school last month has been arrested. Surrey Mounties collared Amarpreet Samra, 21, early Thursday morning after the vehicle he was in tried to avoid a traffic stop. The Province

Steinbach RCMP make arrests in drug trafficking investigation

On October 13, 2015, at approximately 5pm, Steinbach RCMP stopped a vehicle on Reimer Avenue near Main Street in Steinbach after receiving a call from a concerned member of the public. RCMP report that a quantity of methamphetamine was seized from the vehicle, along with items related to the sale of methamphetamine. Also seized in this investigation were several weapons. My Steinbach

Cocaine seized in Marystown

A search of a Marystown residence has resulted in the confiscation of drugs and drug paraphernalia. On October 14 the RCMP searched a residence and found a quantity of cocaine. Also seized was an amount of cash, along with various sized baggies, scales, score sheets, and cutting agents. The Telegram; CBC News; VOCM News

Alberta community mourns three sisters killed in farming incident

Catie, Jana and Dara Bott liked to play ball, camp, fish and go quadding. The sisters did chores on their generational family farm – three blond kids getting dirty as they helped and played. Now, members of this rural community are mourning at their church, the Withrow Gospel Mission, after the three were killed in a farming incident this week. Catie was 13 years old. Dara and Jana were 11-year-old fraternal twins, although they had separate birthdays – one born just before midnight, the other after. The sisters on Tuesday were “playing on a grain truck loaded with canola when they were buried in the grain,” the RCMP said in a statement. Globe and Mail

'You're definitely putting everyone at risk': RCMP nab drunk driver going 185 km/h

RCMP caught a drunk driver going 185 kilometres per hour on Highway 11 near Prince Albert over the long weekend. “You're really putting the odds against yourself and everyone around you. You're definitely putting everyone at risk," said Staff Sgt. Stephane Caron, commander of North Central Saskatchewan Traffic Services. Leader-Post

Police union survey to give 'clear' sense of members' feelings about the service

The Hamilton Police Association is set to release a new survey sounding out members' opinions on the current state of affairs in the service and looking to the future. The survey, which is expected to be released imminently, arrives as the Hamilton Police Services Board is discussing whether to reappoint Police Chief Glenn De Caire for another three years. Hamilton Spectator

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Mort d'un détenu au pénitencier Dorchester

Un détenu est mort mercredi au pénitencier Dorchester au Nouveau-Brunswick. Robert Lionel Hatt, un détenu de l'unité à sécurité moyenne du pénitencier, a été trouvé inconscient dans sa cellule. Le personnel a pratiqué des manoeuvres de réanimation cardiorespiratoire et les services d'urgence ont été appelés. Le détenu de 54 ans n'a cependant pas pu être réanimé. Il purgeait, depuis le 2 avril 2008, une peine d'emprisonnement pour ne pas s'être conformé aux conditions de probation et agression armée. Il avait demandé sa libération en février, mais la Commission des libérations conditionnelles du Canada avait refusé, considérant qu'il était trop dangereux. Le Service correctionnel du Canada examinera les circonstances de ce décès. Radio-Canada

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

An Ex-Cop's Mission to Solve the Murders Along the Highway of Tears

British Columbia's Provincial AutoRoute 16, more well-known as "The Highway of Tears," is both a trucking passage and the winding graveyard of up to 42 Aboriginal women. The RCMP, the chief police force investigating the murders, believes there have been a number of serial killers operating along the highway over the past four decades. However, the Mounties put the official number of women who have been murdered along the highway at only 18, a number far lower than the estimates from Aboriginal organizations... Ray Michalko, a former RCMP member who quit the force, is now looking into the disappearances and murders as a private investigator. He works directly with the families of missing or murdered Indigenous women on his own dime. Michalko took VICE on a tour of the Highway of Tears and connected us with the families who have turned to him after sometimes decades of stalled police investigations. Vice News

Rehtaeh Parsons report to prompt review of school polices on investigations

The province's education minister says school board policies on police investigations will be reviewed in the wake of a report that looked at how investigators and prosecutors handled the case of Rehtaeh Parsons. Last week's report by Murray Segal found officers were "thwarted" by school authorities when trying to interview students at Cole Harbour High School as they investigated allegations Parsons had been sexually assaulted and a photo of the incident was being circulated. CBC News; The Telegram

Gordon Stuckless n'est pas un délinquant dangereux selon un psychiatre

Le pédophile notoire Gordon Stuckless n'entre pas dans la catégorie des délinquants dangereux selon un rapport psychiatrique que la Couronne avait commandé en cour de l'Ontario. L'ancien placier du Maple Leaf Gardens de Toronto a plaidé coupable en avril 2014 à une centaine d'accusations de nature sexuelle contre 18 mineurs. Un texte de Jean-Philippe Nadeau Gordon Stuckless a déjà purgé cinq ans de prison pour une première série d'agressions contre 24 garçons qui se sont produites dans les années 1960 et 1970. La Couronne souhaite l'écrouer à vie en tant que délinquant dangereux depuis qu'il a plaidé coupable à une seconde série d'accusations semblables contre 18 autres mineurs pour des faits survenus dans les années 1970 et 1980. Radio-Canada

Procès SharQc: un contrat sur la tête du témoin Sylvain Boulanger

Les mesures de sécurité auraient été fortement augmentées au Centre de services judiciaires Gouin si le témoin-vedette Sylvain Boulanger avait témoigné, parce que l'ancien Hells Angels aurait un contrat sur sa tête. C'est ce que l'on apprend dans une décision rendue le six octobre dernier par le juge James L. Brunton de la Cour Supérieure dans laquelle le magistrat ordonne une série de mesures visant à resserrer la sécurité dans le petit palais de justice du boulevard Gouin. La Presse ; Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, Journal de Québec) ; Montreal Gazette

La Ville de Longueuil dévoile son plan pour la sécurité en milieu urbain

Près d'un an après le meurtre toujours non résolu de Jenique Dalcourt, la ville de Longueuil a dévoilé jeudi les grandes lignes de son plan visant à améliorer la sécurité sur son territoire. Ce plan d'action triennal d'un demi-million de dollars a été élaboré par la Ville à la suite d'une consultation de ses citoyens, qui visait à recenser les endroits où la sécurité doit être renforcée. Il comprend notamment des radars photo mobiles qui seront installés afin d'accroître la surveillance de la circulation routière dans certains secteurs. Le mobilier urbain sera également géolocalisé, dans le but de faciliter le travail des autorités dans les situations d'urgence, en leur donnant des points de repère plus précis. Radio-Canada

Missing, murdered indigenous women an election issue for all Canadians, advocates say

The need for a national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women is not just an aboriginal issue and should be on all Canadians' minds when they cast their ballots on Monday, the Native Women's Association of Canada says. "So long as there is any group of people in Canada who are not safe, we really cannot all consider ourselves safe," said the association's president Dawn Harvard in an interview with CBC News. "We need to make sure we are protecting and doing right by the most vulnerable members of our population." Calls for an inquiry have intensified since the release of several reports over the last year, including a 2014 RCMP report that found aboriginal women are "over-represented among Canada's murdered and missing women." CBC News

Discussing law as it pertains to aboriginal people

Is there a better role justice can play in the lives of First Nations people? That question is at the forefront of a three day conference being held at the Delta Bessborough in Saskatoon as leaders in the Canadian legal field say what we're doing now, is simply not working. Following opening remarks on Wednesday, Justice Murray Sinclair took the stage in front of the best and the brightest when it comes to the law. Nearly 300 people, including several judges and First Nations chiefs, gathered in one room to listen, learn and lead the country when it comes to aboriginal justice. Global News

Non-violent crime on decline in London

While non-violent crime continues to decrease in London, reports of sexual assault and robbery are up considerably this year, compared to the same period of 2014, according to police statistics. Since January, police have dealt with 139 reports of sexual assault, a 32% hike compared to the 105 reports they responded to between January and September of 2014. Weapons offences (258 so far this year) and robberies (183 so far this year) are up by even more, at 33% and 36% respectively. As has been previously reported, homicides in London for 2015 (6) have already doubled the number for all of 2014. London Free Press

Court freezes assets of Coquitlam man alleged to be high-level drug dealer and money launderer

The B.C. Supreme Court has frozen more than $3 million in assets of a Coquitlam man who the provincial director of civil forfeiture alleges is a high-level drug dealer and a money launderer. The director argued that the assets of Dennis Alexander Halstead - including a $1.6-million home in Coquitlam, the net proceeds of $1.2 million from the sale of a Downtown Eastside hotel and a 2014 Porsche Cayenne valued at $120,000 - were either the proceeds of unlawful activity or an instrument of unlawful activity, or both. The Province

Terrace man found guilty of murdering his pregnant teenage girlfriend

A B.C. Supreme Court jury needed barely five hours to reach its verdict in the case of a Terrace man charged with murdering his teenage girlfriend. Damien Taylor, 24, has been convicted of the second-degree murder of 16-year-old CJ Fowler, who learned she was pregnant just hours before she was found dead... Mounties initially interviewed Taylor as a witness and seized evidence from his hotel room, including a pair of socks with Fowler's blood on them. They also discovered the SD card from her cell phone in his backpack, and her phone atop the RCMP detachment's roof near the hotel. The Province

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Ken Taylor, former Canadian ambassador to Iran, dead at 81

Former Canadian ambassador to Iran Ken Taylor has died. He was 81 years old. Taylor sheltered a group of Americans who escaped capture when a mob of Iranians stormed the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took most people inside hostage in November 1979. His actions during the hostage crisis were portrayed in Ben Affleck's movie Argo. CBC News; Globe and Mail

Canada can and should do better on Syrian refugees

An opinion piece states, "While James Bissett and Martin Collacott argue that the Canadian government's current policy toward Syrian refugees is "realistic", it is certainly far from the best Canada can do - and has done in the recent past. The government has announced it plans to take in 10,000 Syrian refugees in the next 15 months (and another 10,000 by 2017, if it is re-elected). Let us recall that in 1979-80 Canadians welcomed over 60,000 Southeast Asian "Boat People" in a short period of time. We have also had special programs for thousands fleeing places like Kosovo and Uganda..." Montreal Gazette

INTERNATIONAL

US, Mexico announce air cargo pre-inspection program; pilot to begin in 3 border locations

The United States and Mexico on Thursday launched a pilot air cargo pre-inspection program that aims to facilitate trade between the two nations. Under the program, air cargo will be inspected just once in the exporting country by customs officials from both nations. Officials say it has the potential to ease shipping congestion by reducing wait times up to 80 per cent and lower storage costs and other expenses. U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said at a news conference in Mexico City that the program "represents a remarkable evolution" of the bilateral relationship. "The pre-inspection pilot program which this memorandum will enshrine opens the door for a 21st century approach to trade facilitation between our two countries," Johnson said. Associated Press (Canadian Business)

Obama says 5,500 troops to stay in Afghanistan as he leaves office

U.S. President Barack Obama announced plans Thursday to keep nearly 10,000 U.S. troops in Afghanistan through most of next year and 5,500 when he leaves office in 2017, casting aside his promise to end the war on his watch and instead ensuring he hands off the conflict to a successor. Obama called the new war plan a "modest but meaningful" extension of the U.S. military mission in Afghanistan, which he originally planned to end next year. He acknowledged America's weariness of the lengthy conflict but said he was "firmly convinced we should make this extra effort." Associated Press (Toronto Sun)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

nationalpost

Montreal mayor says Ottawa 'negligent' for halting raw sewage dump into St. Lawrence River natpo.st/1PjO0of pic.twitter.com/x9QQvQbC3Q

TheSpec

A baby saved, a mother swept away: Remembering Ontario's Hurricane Hazel bit.ly/1GllJhV pic.twitter.com/yDFTKvBNas

HeraldHeadlines

Christian evangelist Will Graham giving people hope for tough times dlvr.it/CSGkB6 pic.twitter.com/inw34m6uwl

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBC

A tragic story of a lost Canadian woman looking for meaning, on the #CBCFH premiere tonight: bit.ly/1VUD6UM pic.twitter.com/hmsH3Hg6SX

cbcdocs

"This was somebody who needed help." @TheCurrentCBC talks to director of 'Women Who Joined Taliban'. #CBCFH tonite. ow.ly/Trjb0

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBCCalgary

Calgary imam wanted in U.S. can appeal loss of refugee status, Federal Court says ift.tt/1NJR9xy pic.twitter.com/G380DPJKIA

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBCNS

RCMP and ombudsman in court over confidential agency files bit.ly/1LcpZM3 pic.twitter.com/2YNPRBFxeZ

CBCManitoba

RCMP look for man after police assaulted on Manitoba First Nation cbc.ca/news/canada/ma...

CBCNS

RCMP and ombudsman in court over confidential agency files bit.ly/1LcpZM3 pic.twitter.com/2YNPRBFxeZ

ctv_michele

Coquitlam RCMP announce charges including impaired driving after cyclist Bruce Rickman injured in July 2014 hit&run. @CTVVancouver

CTVVancouver

LIVE: Mounties announce charges in 2014 hit-and-run that left cyclist in Intensive Care Unit
<http://bc.ctvnews.ca/video?clipId=68597&playlistId=1.2611521&binId=1.1184694&playlistPageNum=1...>

Global BC

Watch live: RCMP to announce important development in Coquitlam hit-and-run investigation ow.ly/Ts7xR

ctv_michele

Coquitlam RCMP announce charges including impaired driving after cyclist Bruce Rickman injured in July 2014 hit&run. @CTVVancouver

fpblogs

From @legalpost Chambers Canada: Brian Greenspan makes short list of elite white-collar crime practitioners natpo.st/1X78KAY #law

Canoe

Blood spatter expert tells Oland trial he was called four days after crime cnews.canoe.com/CNEWS/Crime/20... pic.twitter.com/h56rVJyVur

iciacadie

La criminalité en baisse au N.-B. en 2014 rc.ca/CSG29K

Global NB

Declining crime rates highlighted in New Brunswick RCMP annual report globalnews.ca/news/2279154/d... by @heide_pearson

leaderpost

'You're definitely putting everyone at risk': RCMP nab drunk driver going 185 km/h near Prince Albert ow.ly/TsFMm

CBCNorth

Gunshots fired into Whitehorse home: RCMP cbc.ca/news/canada/no...

ATrepanier RC

DERNIÈRE HEURE - La GRC a arrêté Gilbert Thériault, 43 ans, en lien avec un enlèvement survenu le 5 octobre 2015 à Drummond au N.-B. #icinb

CBCNB

Drummond kidnapping suspect arrested in Plaster Rock cbc.ca/news/canada/ne...

mySteinbach

#news post: Steinbach RCMP make arrests in drug trafficking investigation dlvr.it/CSFRr1

VOCMNEWS

Two Arrested After Seizure of Cocaine in Marystown vocm.com/newsarticle.as...

Airdrie Echo

RCMP arrest two 20-year-olds in connection with #Airdrie arsons.

RedDeerExpress

#reddeer RCMP are investigating after a man approached a young girl on her way to school 41st St. Cresc. and West Park Cresc. this morning.

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

EndViolenceBC

Abused women with disabilities lack resources, advocates say cbc.ca/1.3267727 #EndVAW

EndViolenceBC

Thanks @LegalMomentum @MensStoryProj @HIPPYCanada @LR279 for following & helping spread msg+support efforts to #EndVAW #BeMoreThanABystander

cdnwomenfdn

The aftermath of #sexualassault costs #Canada about $4.8 billion per year bit.ly/1gfS5KE #VAW

CBCNS

Rehtaeh Parsons report to prompt review of school polices on investigations bit.ly/1NeRvIU pic.twitter.com/zzdW9cnpWT

icionario

Gordon Stuckless n'est pas un délinquant dangereux selon un rapport psychiatrique ici.radio-canada.ca/regions/ontari... pic.twitter.com/tkkPriBRCf

LP LaPresse

Procès SharQc: un contrat sur la tête du témoin Sylvain Boulanger bit.ly/1OGcMnK

mtlgazette

Bounty on ex-Hells had court security on high alert bit.ly/1X7fVco

vicecanada

An ex-cop's mission to solve the murders along BC's Highway of Tears. Watch the doc: bit.ly/1X7tzMM #MMIW

RadioCanadaInfo

La Ville de Longueuil dévoile son plan pour la sécurité en milieu urbain rc.ca/CSJFcY

CBCSaskatoon

Missing, murdered indigenous women an election issue for all Canadians, advocates say cbc.ca/1.3259466 pic.twitter.com/HID0fNPAVT

OTHER / AUTRES

globeandmail

In 2013, Ken Taylor set the record straight about Argo's take on the Canadian Caper. trib.al/9a7uEmd

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
October 20, 2015 / le 20 octobre 2015
14:00 – 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 14:00 p.m. and 20:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NIL

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

RCMP used 'closer' to finish undercover B.C. terror operation: senior Mountie

The RCMP brought in a new lead investigator in the 11th hour of an undercover terrorism operation because they knew he was a "closer" who could wrap up the elaborate plan, a senior Mountie has confirmed in B.C. Supreme Court. Insp. Stephen Corcoran testified on Tuesday that Staff Sgt. Vaz Kassam joined the operation in June 2013, one week before a couple was arrested for plotting to detonate three pressure-cooker bombs around the B.C. Legislature on Canada Day (...) "Did he ever tell you that he essentially wanted to bring in Kassam because he thought Kassam could close this thing down -- in other words, he would be his closer?" asked Korody's lawyer Mark Jette about the operation commander's decision. "I don't know in that sense, using those exact words," said Corcoran. "But in that spirit: yes." Jette suggested earlier in the hearing that Kassam had encouraged investigators to motivate the pair to leave their home and the distractions of drugs and video games to focus them on their bomb plot. Kassam disagreed with that notion, arguing that removing the two from their element would allow police to better assess their threat to public safety. Canadian Press (CTV News, Globe and Mail, The Province, St. John's Telegram, Prince Albert Daily Herald, Brandon Star, Western Sun)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Court rules immigration detainees can argue indefinite custody illegal

Ontario's top court has opened an avenue for long-term detainees from abroad to challenge the legality of their detentions in Superior Court rather than through the immigration process and Federal Court. In its ruling Tuesday, the Court of Appeal made it clear the idea wasn't to have the courts interfere in immigration decisions (...). The case involved four foreigners kept behind bars pending deportation or extradition for periods ranging from two years to more than eight years. They argued their detention had become illegal because of its length and the uncertainty of its duration. In March, Superior Court Justice Kenneth Campbell ruled he had no jurisdiction to hear the case. Their sole recourse under case law dating to 1989, Campbell ruled, was through the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, which says reviews must go through Federal Court. The four appealed, arguing the 1989 ruling did not apply because their detention appeared to be indefinite. The only issue on appeal was whether they did indeed have a right to turn to Superior Court for relief. Globe and Mail

Charges dropped against U.S. man accused in cancer-drug smuggling conspiracy

A federal judge on Tuesday dismissed a case against an Illinois man accused of participating in an international cancer-drug smuggling conspiracy, after the man reached a deal to defer his prosecution. The prosecutors who made the deal with Ram Kamath of Downers Grove asked U.S. District Judge Dana Christensen to drop the charge of conspiracy to smuggle goods into the United States against him. Kamath had been accused of conspiring with an online Canadian pharmacy to smuggle mislabeled, unapproved and counterfeit prescription drugs into the U.S. Associated Press (Toronto Star)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

How the NSA broke encryption on trillions of secure connections

Some Edward Snowden leaks have revealed that the NSA and other intelligence agencies can break encryption barriers for mass surveillance purposes. It has been theorized that a flaw in encryption used by many Internet services lets the spy agency decrypt HTTPS, SSH, and VPN traffic, and a new paper seems to prove that. Indeed, a massive effort comparable to the attempts of breaking the German Enigma coding machine during the World War II seems to have given the NSA the tools required to break trillions of secure connections. BGR (Yahoo! News)

Senate to consider controversial cyber security bill

The U.S. Senate is expected to begin considering as soon as Tuesday a long-delayed bill that would make it easier for corporations to share information about cyber attacks with each other or the government without concern about lawsuits. The House of Representatives passed its version of the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act (CISA) in April. A few lawmakers and several big tech companies, however, have come out against the measure, arguing that it fails to protect users' privacy and does too little to prevent cyber attacks. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

Sony settles employees' hacking lawsuit, to pay up to $8 million for loss, identity protection

Sony Pictures Entertainment has reached a settlement with current and former employees, agreeing to pay up to $8 million to reimburse them for identity-theft losses, preventative measures and legal fees related to the hack of its computers last year. The settlement was filed with the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles late Monday and still needs to be approved by a judge. Associated Press (The Province, Charlottetown Guardian, St. John's Telegram, Globe and Mail)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Lillooet band office attacker's death not linked to police response, IIO finds

B.C.'s civilian police watchdog (IIO) has found police were not connected to the death of a man who viciously attacked the Bridge River Indian Band office near Lillooet, B.C. earlier this month. David Allan Patrick James, 22, died after he allegedly entered the band office with weapons just before 8:30 a.m. PT on Oct. 14, and assaulted staff, sending 11 people to hospital. Lillooet RCMP officers who first arrived at the band office said they found James already restrained, unconscious and unresponsive. Attempts to resuscitate him were unsuccessful. CBC News; Canadian Press (CTV News)

RCMP officer found not guilty of assaulting man outside Kelowna pub

A Kelowna RCMP officer has been found not guilty of assault in an incident outside a downtown pub in June of 2014. Several members of the RCMP were in the Kelowna courtroom on Tuesday to hear the judge's decision and to show support for their colleague. Cst. Grant Jacobson was charged with one count of common assault after he threw John McCormick to the ground and punched him several times during an arrest at Roses Pub. Jacobson's lawyer, Norm Yates, says the decision will give his client and other officers some confidence. Global News

Police searching for man who left gun in taxi cab

Winnipeg police are looking for a man who left a loaded gun in a taxi more than eight months ago. A man got into a cab early in the morning of February 1 in the first 100 block of St. Anne's Road, and was driven to the 300 block of Blake Street, where he got out but left behind a loaded gun, police said. Investigators have now released photos of a man they believe is connected to the investigation. Winnipeg Free Press; CBC News

Death of man found on lawn deemed not suspicious

Halifax RCMP say the death of a man linked to a suspected break-in attempt on Oakhill Drive in Lower Sackville is not suspicious. When asked Tuesday afternoon whether the man died of natural causes, Halifax RCMP Cpl. D.L. Allen replied, "No, I wouldn't say that." "The investigation continues, but it's not suspicious," Allen said. He would not disclose any further information. Chronicle-Herald; Metro News; CBC News

Man arrested after police chase in southeast Saskatchewan

A 34-year-old man is facing 16 charges after a police chase in southeast Saskatchewan on Sunday. RCMP initially received a call about an assault involving a man and a woman on the side of the highway south of Weyburn, Sask. A few minutes later a second call, this time involving erratic driving, was reported from the same area. Callers in both incidents described a red Cadillac Escalade. CBC News

Enderby shooting victim in critical condition

A 55-year-old man remains in hospital with critical gunshot wounds after an attack near the north Okanagan community of Enderby. RCMP Const. Jocelyn Noseworthy said it happened at about 5:15 p.m. Monday on the outskirts of the town, about 35 kilometres north of Vernon. The name of the victim has not been released but Noseworthy said he knew his attacker and that the shooting was targeted. She said a 58-year-old man was arrested a short time later. Canadian Press (The Province)

Drug courier pleads guilty

He spent five weeks defending himself in court, but now Kurtis Donald Scott has admitted defeat and pleaded guilty to charges arising from a covert police sting. Scott, 43, pleaded guilty Monday to trafficking in cocaine and drug trafficking in benefit of a criminal organization, putting an end to a jury trial that wasn't scheduled to wrap up until late December. Scott was one of more than a dozen suspects arrested in March 2012 following a 10-month police operation dubbed Operation Flatlined, targeting illegal drug dealing by the Hells Angels and "support group" Redlined. Scott is not alleged to be a member of the Hells Angels or Redlined. According to an agreed statement of facts filed in court, Scott admitted to stashing and delivering bulk amounts of cocaine on behalf of then Manitoba Hells Angels president Dale Sweeney. Winnipeg Sun

Pasadena man charged after boys struck at bus stop

Police say a man who struck two boys at a bus stop in Pasadena last week didn't offer assistance or call the children's parents. Deer Lake RCMP have charged a man, 34, from the town with failing to make a report and driving without due care under the Highway Traffic Act. The boys, ages 12 and 14, were reportedly waiting for a school bus near Church Street Friday when a driver struck them while pulling into a driveway. CBC News

Woman charged in Bouctouche shooting

RCMP have charged a 45-year-old Bouctouche woman in connection with a shooting in Bouctouche Bay in May. Following a lengthy investigation, RCMP say the woman was arrested on Oct. 8 and held in custody following a bail hearing. She is charged with discharging a firearm with intent, unsafe storage of a firearm, careless use of a firearm and aggravated assault. CBC News

Toronto police's lethal force in Sammy Yatim death 'not reasonable': Crown

Sammy Yatim refused to comply with demands to drop his knife and mocked police during a confrontation on a Toronto streetcar in the early morning hours of July 27, 2013. Seconds later, he was fatally shot by Toronto police Constable James Forcillo, an Ontario Superior Court jury heard on Tuesday morning. Constable Forcillo is on trial on charges of second-degree murder and attempted murder in the death of the 18-year-old high school student. The trial began on Tuesday with opening arguments by lead Crown attorney Milan Rupic, who outlined to the jury the "road map" the prosecution intends to present at the trial. "The fundamental issue is whether it was necessary to fire nine shots, when Sammy Yatim was surrounded by armed officers," Mr. Rupic told the jury. The lethal force "was not reasonable," the prosecutor stated. Globe and Mail; Hamilton Spectator

Eric Amaral charged with 1st-degree murder in Kitchener, Ont., arrow death

Eric Amaral, the man accused of shooting a Waterloo Regional Police Service officer in the face with a pellet gun, has been charged with first-degree murder in the arrow shooting death of Michael Gibbon of Kitchener, Ont. Amaral, 29, appeared in a Kitchener court Tuesday afternoon to answer to the charge. CBC News; CTV News

Attempted murder, kidnapping charges in case that saw Peel officer shot

Two Toronto men have been charged with attempted murder and kidnapping in connection with Friday night's shooting of a Peel Regional Police officer and a civilian on a residential Brampton street. The hunt continues for one more suspect. Brampton Guardian

Youth arrested after online threat to Mississauga school

A "young person" has been taken into police custody after an investigation of an online threat against Our Lady of Mount Carmel Secondary School in Mississauga. The threat led to a hold and secure which has since been lifted, according to the Dufferin-Peel Catholic District School Board. Many parents were waiting outside the school for updates during the hold and secure. Toronto Star

Police union survey to give 'clear' sense of members' feelings about the service

The Hamilton Police Association is set to release a new survey sounding out members' opinions on the current state of affairs in the service and looking to the future. The survey, which is expected to be released imminently, arrives as the Hamilton Police Services Board is discussing whether to reappoint Police Chief Glenn De Caire for another three years. Clint Twolan, association president, says almost 58 per cent of the 1,200 members completed the survey. Hamilton Spectator

Toronto's billion-dollar police budget needs a re-write

An editorial states "Toronto's gold-plated police force wants more money than ever, with a proposed budget for next year totaling $1.015 billion (yes, billion). That represents a 3.7-per-cent increase over last year's budget, despite Mayor John Tory's request that all city agencies and divisions save at least 2 per cent. The Toronto Police Service typically answers such calls for restraint with a spending hike well in excess of inflation. And it's no different now. The money grab proposed for 2016 would add up to a 35-per-cent increase in the police operating budget since 2006. Over the same period, Toronto's crime rate fell by more than 27 per cent. There's an obvious disconnect here. It was with good reason that Toronto's police board sent the proposed billion-dollar budget back for a re-write. They instructed Chief Mark Saunders on Monday to "identify additional reductions and efficiencies" and submit a revised spending plan at a board meeting set for Nov. 12." Toronto Star

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Drugs intercepted at Millhaven Institution

A Millhaven Institution inmate was caught attempting to bring contraband into the institution, according to Canadian Correctional Service. On Oct. 15 at about 11:55 a.m., officers at the maximum-security federal institution intercepted an inmate who was attempting to smuggle in contraband. This seizure is the result of the combined efforts of Correctional Officers and Security Intelligence Officers. The contraband seized includes 88.1 grams of marijuana. The total institutional value of this seizure is estimated at $8,810. Kingston Whig-Standard

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Action needed on missing, murdered indigenous women: aboriginal leaders

Canada's indigenous people expect their votes to matter to the new Liberal majority, starting with an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal people, three of Manitoba's First Nations leaders said Tuesday. "I hope this shows when we do participate, we do make a difference," Assembly of Manitoba Chiefs Grand Chief Derek Nepinak said at a press conference to respond to the federal election that brought down the Conservative government. Indigenous voter turnout was up dramatically coast to coast and Manitoba's leaders said their people's votes helped give the Liberals a stunning majority. Winnipeg Free Press; Vancouver Sun

La légalisation soulève des questions

La légalisation de la marijuana promise par les libéraux fait des heureux au Québec, mais soulève aussi plusieurs questions quant à l'encadrement de la vente éventuelle du produit, surtout auprès des jeunes. «On est bien ravi! C'est ce qu'on souhaitait», a réagi Marc-Boris Saint-Maurice, un militant pour la légalisation du pot depuis plus d'une vingtaine d'années (...) Du côté de l'Association canadienne des chefs de police (ACCP), cette légalisation soulève plusieurs doutes. «Jusqu'ici, on n'a pas assez de recherches qui montrent quels impacts la légalisation aura sur la sécurité publique au pays», indique Timothy Smith, responsable des communications. Ce dernier ajoute que l'ACCP souhaite que les policiers aient plus de pouvoir de donner des contraventions pour la possession de petite quantité de cannabis. La Gendarmerie royale du Canada et le Service de police de la Ville de Montréal ont refusé de commenter le dossier. Le Journal de Québec (Le Journal de Montréal)

Our Drug Policy Shouldn't Be a Criminal Justice Issue

Finally, after decades of the failed "war on drugs" mentality (an unfortunate 1970s holdover), there could be light at the end of the tunnel. First, let's clear something up: drug use and dependence, which are not one and the same, are overwhelmingly public health -- not criminal justice -- issues. It now seems that Canadians, and a growing number of their would-be political representatives, largely understand this, and aren't interested in criminalizing every 19-year-old with a joint or a cannabis plant. Unfortunately, with the erroneously-named Safe Streets and Communities Act enacted in 2012, the Government of Canada made mandatory minimum sentences for various drug offences the law of the land, moving a public health matter even more squarely into the realm of criminal law. Huffington Post

Hamilton crisis team featured in documentary

A new documentary examining police shootings involving people in crisis features Hamilton's mobile crisis unit. "Hold Your Fire" premières on CBC Television's new documentary series "Firsthand" on Thursday at 9 p.m. It chronicles several high-profile police shootings, including the 2013 death of teenage Sammy Yatim on a Toronto streetcar, and the growing tide of public and police discourse about using de-escalation tactics instead of force. Filmmaker Helen Slinger said she hopes the documentary inspires a broader public and police discussion about lethal force. "I don't expect police officers to be perfect ... but there's got to be a better way," she said. There are no nationwide statistics about police shootings available in Canada, but a broad look at inquests between 2004 and 2014 uncovered 72 police shootings (42 per cent of all police shootings examined) involved people in mental crisis. Hamilton Spectator

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Liberal majority leaves Ottawa civil servants cautiously hopeful

After a decade of Stephen Harper holding the country's reins, public servants in Ottawa are voicing cautious optimism at the fact Justin Trudeau is poised to become Canada's next prime minister. Trudeau's Liberals won a solid majority Monday night, taking 184 seats — including all but one in the city of Ottawa — and ousting a Conservative government whose relationship with federal employees was often seen as adversarial. One of those federal employees, Statistics Canada economist Mesfin Mirotschie, told CBC News Tuesday morning that he's hoping the new Liberal government will forge a "constructive relationship" with civil servants. CBC News

L'AFPC se réjouit du «changement»

Du même coup, la présidente Robyn Benson n'a pas tardé à demander au gouvernement de Justin Trudeau de remplir «sans tarder» ses promesses faites pendant la campagne électorale «pour redresser les torts causés par les conservateurs et améliorer les relations de travail au sein de la fonction publique fédérale.» L'AFPC, le plus grand syndicat de la fonction publique fédérale avec un effectif de 175 000 membres, souhaite maintenant rencontrer le plus tôt possible les représentants du nouveau gouvernement pour discuter des mesures à prendre. «Le nouveau gouvernement libéral a maintenant un solide mandat pour changer les choses. Nous enjoignons donc aux libéraux d'oser une nouvelle façon de faire de la politique et de concert avec les députés démocrates et tous les autres élus progressistes, de travailler pour remettre le Canada sur les rails» a fait savoir la présidente Benson. La Presse; La Presse Canadienne (Le Devoir)

OTHER / AUTRES

Trudeau promises equal number of men, women in cabinet

Canada's prime minister-elect Justin Trudeau pledged Tuesday to announce his first cabinet in November, adding that it will include an equal number of men and women. During the campaign, the 43-year-old pledged parity in the gender composition of his cabinet, and on Tuesday he said he would keep that vow. "I'm very happy to be able to say that we will absolutely fulfill that promise," he told a press conference. The new cabinet will be announced on November 4 -- the same day Trudeau officially becomes prime minister after a transition from the previous administration. Agence France Presse (Yahoo! News); Newstalk 1010; CBC News; CTV News

INTERNATIONAL

US student arrested after threatening, attacking Muslim woman

A 19-year-old Indiana University student accused in a racially motivated attack on a Muslim woman says he had been drinking alcohol and had not taken his anti-anxiety medication prior to the incident. Court records show Triceten D. Bickford faces multiple felony charges including intimidation, strangulation and battery in the Saturday evening attack in a cafe in Bloomington, Indiana. He was released on $500 bond and returned to class Monday. Associated Press (Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Toronto Sun, Edmonton Sun)

Ex-federal agent sentenced to 6 1/2 years for stealing digital money from Silk Road drug website

A former undercover federal agent has been sentenced to 6 1/2 years in prison for using his position to steal more than $700,000 in digital currency from an online drug bazaar known as Silk Road. Federal prosecutors on Monday announced the sentence against former Drug Enforcement Administration Agent Carl M. Force, who pleaded guilty to extortion and other charges. Force was tasked with masquerading as a drug dealer who had connections to hit men and establishing communications with Ross Ulbricht, operator of the multimillion-dollar marketplace for illegal drugs and other contraband. After he infiltrated the website, Force sold Ulbricht information about the Silk Road investigation. Ulbricht has been sentenced to life in prison. Associated Press (The Telegram, The Province)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

ICLRCanada

Catastrophes naturelles : un spécialiste américain s'inquiète du manque de préparation au Canada journal-assurance.ca/article/catast...

RedCrossGCC

A reminder to all when you see flooded washings #turnaround don't drown.

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

HamiltonPolice

Honouring Corporal Nathan Cirillo. Thank you for standing guard for all of us. #Canada #Canadian

ForcesCanada

Nous honorons la mémoire de l'adjudant #PatriceVincent, mort à St-Jean-sur-Richelieu, il y a un an. #Nelesoubliezpas

CFRAOttawa

Memorial event for Cpl. Cirillo and Warrant Officer Vincent Thursday will see F-18 fly past around 11:20 a.m. over War Memorial. #ottnews

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

globeandmail

Court rules immigration detainees can argue indefinite custody illegal trib.al/1BsZTyQ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Habitat4HOME

#CopsDoingMore-RCMP is proud to be involved in Habitat for Humanity - Royal Canadian Mounted Police fb.me/6OSjASHhW

kelownajournal

RCMP officer not guilty: A Kelowna RCMP officer will stay on duty after being found not guilty in a Kelowna... dlvr.it/CVhzSY

TheStarPhoenix

Sask. RCMP officer recognized for act of bravery http://www.thestarphoenix.com/news/mountie+recognized+bravery/11452711/story.html ... #SPnews #news

EVYSTADIUM

Peel Police: Young suspect in custody after investigation of online threat at Mount Carmel SS. Hold and secure has been lifted.

MissiNewsRoom

BREAKING NEWS: Police reveal officer was shot during apparent kidnapping attempt http://www.bramptonguardian.com/news-story/5969146-attempted-murder-kidnapping-charges-in-case-that-saw-peel-officer-shot/...

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

APTNNews

Q: #MMIW when is it starting? A: Look'g forward to sitting w leaders. A nat'l inquiry is needed Q: so how long? A: We'll move on it quickly.

laura_payton

When will Trudeau call MMIW inquiry? Says he looks fwd to sitting down with AFN Chief Perry Bellegarde to discuss.
#parl42

EndViolenceBC

Please share: Kelowna sexual assaults prompt police warning cbc.ca/1.3275968 #EndVAW

cdnwomenfdn

"When we don't talk about #abuse, the stigma flourishes & we lock the door to safety & hope for other women" bit.ly/1UldJu4 #VAW

CRCVC

After a decade-long Conservative reign, what's on Trudeau's justice agenda? theglobeandmail.com/news/politics/

VictimsofViolen

This week on the show, a compelling documentary from the CBC's Yvonne Colbert about cold cases that retired...
fb.me/7xOelrR56

CKNW

Legalizing marijuana? @christyclarkbc says it's a federal issue and BC will work with feds.

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

a_silverman

Thank you to everyone at Public Safety Canada who volunteered in the soup kitchen last week. goo.gl/9IPEXT

CBCOttawa

Liberal majority leaves Ottawa civil servants cautiously hopeful cbc.ca/news/canada/ot...

psacnat

Our message to @JustinTrudeau: It's time to repair the damage to the public service psacunion.ca/canadians-vote...
#cdnpoli #goc #canlab #Elxn42

OTHER / AUTRES

PostmediaNews

Trudeau's cabinet to be named early next month ow.ly/TEng6 via @OttawaCitizen

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
November 1, 2015 / le 1 novembre 2015
9:00 – 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 9:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 9h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Whale-watching boat that capsized, drowning five off B.C. coast, towed away for investigation

A whale-watching vessel has been towed to a secure location days after it flipped in the water near Tofino, B.C., sending five people to their deaths. The Transportation Safety Board says the Leviathan II will be monitored by the RCMP and that another team of TSB experts will plan some detailed testing of the vessel in the coming days. The agency says the current investigation team has left Tofino after interviewing survivors and people who rescued passengers last Sunday. Those who died were British nationals, and an Australian man remains missing (...) The TSB says its next steps include verifying information about the vessel's stability, reviewing any modifications that were made and analyzing data from electronic equipment recovered from the ship. Transport Canada documents show the vessel was lengthened and an upper deck was added in 1996, but that it passed a stability test after the changes. Canadian Press (National Post, Vancouver Sun)

Marine safety plans should be mandatory: investigator

The recent capsizing of whale-watching boat in Tofino highlights the need for the federal government to require safety-management systems for all passenger vessels, says a former Transportation Safety Board investigator. A safety-management system is developed by an operator to assess everything done on a day-to-day basis, said Ken Potter, former manager of marine investigation operations for the Transportation Safety Board, on Saturday. Potter retired a year and a half ago from the TSB and heads Veritas Marine Ltd., a marine accident and prevention investigation firm. A company has to ask: "What could possibly go wrong? What could happen that could cause an accident?" A plan is then developed to identify and mitigate risks, Potter said. Times Colonist

N.B.'s whooping cough outbreak: Blame the anti-vaxxers or blame the vaccine?

The current whooping cough outbreak in New Brunswick continues to grow, with an increasing numbers of children and adolescents implicated in the current outbreak. According to Dr. Yves Leger, Medical Officer in the Eastern Region of New Brunswick, which is at the centre of this outbreak, most people who have whooping cough symptoms have immunity against the disease because they have been vaccinated. CTV News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

A Black American Is Seeking Refuge In Canada From Police Racism

An African-American U.S. citizen is seeking asylum in Canada to escape police mistreatment. Vice reported that Kyle Lydell Canty traveled to Canada in September as a tourist and decided to apply for protection as a refugee. Canty is facing criminal charges for a number of misdemeanors, including offenses as minor as jaywalking, which he claims are all unfounded and the result of racist policing. He also says he has been denied due process in his efforts to challenge the charges. Canty is under no illusions that Canada's criminal justice system is entirely free of racial bias, but he thinks it would be a marked improvement. Huffington Post

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP response to new witness in Catcheway case 'step in the right direction': Sheila North Wilson

One of Manitoba's grand chiefs says RCMP's response to a new witness in the Jennifer Catcheway case is a step in the right direction. In 2008, 17-year-old Catcheway disappeared and her family has been searching for her ever since. On the week of Oct. 25, the Catcheway family got a tip from a member of the Dakota Tipi First Nation and a witness came forward to RCMP to give a statement. MKO Grand Chief Sheila North Wilson said RCMP originally refused to take the statement, telling the person they would have to speak to the officers directly involved in the case. But, she said, officers called the witness back shortly after and took the statement. CBC News

Chief asks parents of missing daughter to bring RCMP for next search

Animosity is brewing in Manitoba between a mother and father desperate for clues into the disappearance of their missing daughter, and a First Nations chief who says band members have grown tired of searchers digging holes on their reserve. Bernice Catcheway, whose daughter, Jennifer, disappeared seven years ago, says she, her husband and other searchers are now barred from entering the Dakota Tipi reserve near Portage la Prairie after their latest search of the community's dump and other areas last week. The searchers brought a backhoe, and while they didn't find any physical evidence, Catcheway says a resident gave them another tip. Chief David L. Pashe says his community initially welcomed the searchers when they first came to the reserve several years ago. He said they offered the visitors the use of their community centre and cooked food for them. In the following years, they donated money. But Pashe says they've been digging holes, knocking down trees with their equipment and searching in places outside of the areas they said they'd be in, including near a cemetery. He says they can come back, but if they do, they should bring the RCMP. RCMP Sgt. Bert Paquet said in an email that there was insufficient information to request a warrant to search the landfill or other areas where the searchers looked last week. He says police recommended the family ask for permission to search themselves, which they did and subsequently received. Canadian Press (Waterloo Region Record)

Police in northern N.B. seize 13,000 cigarettes after search warrant

RCMP in New Brunswick arrested two people after finding more than 13,000 contraband cigarettes during a search of a home. Police conducted the search on Tuesday night in the community of New Jersey, roughly 30 kilometres northeast of Miramichi. Police say a 61-year-old man and a 49-year-old woman were arrested during the search. CTV News Atlantic

Whirlwind police chase ends with attempted car-jacking in Regina

A hunt for a truck spanned four hours on Saturday, involving three police services, two cities, two spike belts, and one attempted car-jacking. The whole thing started on Gordon Road near Lewvan Drive, in the south end of Regina, around 9 a.m. Police said they were called there to investigate a suspicious vehicle. When the officer got there he talked to the driver of the vehicle, and thought the driver was intoxicated. But the truck took off into traffic, refusing to stop for police. Officers didn't continue the chase because it was too dangerous. Police said the truck was seen heading west on Highway 1 out of Regina about 10 minutes later. They informed RCMP, but the Mounties called off a short chase because it got too dangerous. The truck was spotted again a little while later at a gas station in Moose Jaw. Again, the truck took off, officers didn't chase. A 21-year-old woman who was left at the gas station was arrested. It's alleged she had been in the truck. Shelby Donald is charged with possession of morphine, possession of meth, and 2 counts of flight while pursued by a peace officer. CJME News Talk 980

11 flown from Red Sucker Lake to Winnipeg hospital after drinking poison

Eleven adults from Manitoba's Red Sucker Lake First Nation were air lifted to a Winnipeg hospital on Thursday to be treated for chemical poisoning, band councilor Lester Harper told CBC News. Five of them were drinking an unknown chemical at a mining site near the dry first nation before they brought it back to the community. There, they shared it with six others. Harper said the adults were flown in as a pre-caution, and all have since been released. According to RCMP, investigators are aware of what happened but there is no evidence to support criminal intent or the need for an investigation. CBC News

14 people killed in collisions across Alberta in less than 48 hours

The end of October and first day of November have been deadly on rural Alberta roads. Between 8 p.m. Friday and noon Sunday, 14 people were killed in eight different collisions on rural roads in Alberta. Several more drivers and passengers were injured in the crashes. Global News; CTV News Edmonton; Edmonton Journal

Yorkton man faces 18 charges following high-speed pursuit between Moose Jaw and Regina

A 28-year-old male is charged with 18 offences including robbery, evade police, dangerous operation of a motor vehicle, unlawful possession of a controlled substance and obstruction of justice. As well, a 21-year-old female is also charged with evading police and unlawful possession of a controlled substance. The incident began at about 9 a.m. on Saturday, patrol members were dispatched to the 4500 block of Gordon Road to investigate a suspicious truck. Leader-Post

Police report quiet Halloween in Kings County

Police in Kings County reported a quiet Halloween night Oct. 31. Kings District RCMP reported "a lot of people out and about" on Halloween, but "not a lot of Halloween-related calls." Kings County News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Lockdowns climb at Ottawa jail, and AA, other programs suffer

The number of lockdowns at the Ottawa-Carleton Detention Centre continued to soar over the summer, with prisoners being fully locked down at the short-staffed jail nearly once every three days on average in July and August. The Ministry of Community Safety and Correctional Services said there were 19 full lockdowns during those two months. That was on top of 15 partial lockdowns that may have locked down a single unit or smaller area of the 525-bed jail. And according to inmates and correctional officers, the lockdowns are now affecting the programming available to prisoners. Programs such as Alcoholics Anonymous are routinely cancelled because volunteers can't access the facility or there are a lack of correctional officers to move the inmates. Ottawa Citizen

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PRIMEUR - PKP se rendra à Val-d'Or lundi pour rencontrer la communauté autochtone

Le chef de l'opposition officielle, Pierre Karl Péladeau, se rendra à Val-d'Or lundi, a appris Le Huffington Post Québec. Le leader péquiste souhaite rencontrer la communauté autochtone dans la foulée des allégations d'abus de pouvoir et d'agressions sexuelles qui auraient été commises par des policiers de la Sûreté du Québec. Huffington Post

'Large quantity' of prescription opioids stolen from Simcoe, Ont. Pharmacy

Provincial police are looking for a man who allegedly stole a "large quantity" of prescription opioids from a Shoppers Drug Mart in Simcoe, Ont. They say he approached a pharmacy employee and displayed a weapon on Saturday night. They say he stole fentanyl and hydromorphone. Canadian Press (CP24)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Sinai plane crash: Russian airliner 'broke up in mid-air'

A Russian airliner which crashed in Egypt's Sinai peninsula, killing all 224 people on board, broke up in mid-air, a Russian official says. Victor Sorochenko, the head of Russia's Interstate Aviation Committee, said it was too early to conclude what caused the crash on Saturday. He told reporters debris was found across a 20sq km-wide area of Sinai. So far 163 bodies have been found (...) Jihadists allied to so-called Islamic State in Sinai, where such groups are active, had made a claim on social media that they had brought down flight KGL9268. But Egyptian Prime Minister Sharif Ismail said experts had confirmed that a plane could not be downed at 9,450m (31,000ft), the altitude the Airbus 321 was flying at, by weapons the militants are known to possess. President Abdul Fattah al-Sisi also urged caution on Sunday, saying the investigation into the cause was a "complicated matter" that could take months. BBC News; Associated Press (CBC News); Reuters; The Telegraph; The Guardian; AFP (Yahoo! News); USA Today; NY Times; Bloomberg News

Rare cyclone strikes Yemen island, leaving 1 dead

A rare and rapidly intensifying cyclone killed one person and injured nine Sunday on the remote Yemeni island of Socotra as it moved toward the Yemeni mainland, local security officials said. The officials said Cyclone Chapala seriously damaged or destroyed at least 20 homes on the island, where trees have been uprooted and fishing boats sank. They said many residents living near the coast are taking shelter in caves or in schools. The island is being hit by heavy rain and strong winds, and rising waves are battering the coast. The officials said coastal areas are flooded. Authorities on the island have transported 9,000 people from their homes to other places to take refuge, mainly schools, said Socotra Deputy Governor Ramzi Mahfouz. But the evacuation was only carried out in the provincial capital, Hadibo, and residents elsewhere are facing more challenges. The situation is being compounded by a shortage of fuel on the island for more than 20 days, he said. In al-Mahra, Yemen's easternmost province, security officials said dark clouds are forming amid unusually strong winds, though no damage has been reported yet. Associated Press (CTV News); Weather Network

Iraq PM declares emergency in areas hit by heavy rain

Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi declared an emergency in areas overwhelmed by heavy rain that has caused widespread flooding and multiple deaths, his office said Sunday. Abadi ordered a "declaration of emergency in the areas affected by torrential rainwater that exceeded drainage capacity", his office said in a statement. And he announced the "mobilisation" of ministries, provinces, security forces, civil defence and civilian volunteers for rescue efforts in Baghdad and other provinces. Iraq was hit by multiple days of heavy rain that, when combined with the country's decrepit infrastructure, caused major flooding in Baghdad and other areas that resulted in deaths and health problems. AFP (Daily Star)

Turkish PM declares victory after preliminary election results show majority in parliament

Turkey's Prime Minister Ahmet Davutoglu has declared victory for his ruling party after preliminary election results showed it restoring its majority in parliament. State-run TRT television reports that with more than 97 per cent of the votes counted, the ruling Justice and Development Party, or AKP, has won just above 49 per cent, which would comfortably restore its ruling majority. Associated Press (CTV News, CBC News)

At least 12 killed as Shebab attack Somalia hotel

At least 12 people were killed in the Somali capital of Mogadishu on Sunday after Shebab gunmen used a vehicle packed with explosives to blast their way inside a hotel, police said. The Al-Qaeda-linked Shebab claimed responsibility for the dawn attack at the Sahafi hotel, popular with members of parliament, government employees and businessmen. After the car bomb ripped a hole in the hotel's fortified walls, gunmen stormed the building firing semi-automatic rifles and throwing grenades, witnesses said. AFP (Yahoo! News); Associated Press (Global News)

Britain to unveil new online spying laws

Britain's government gave the first details Sunday of contested plans to update Internet spying laws to keep pace with the digital age. The proposed law comes as intelligence agencies and police grapple with monitoring terrorist activity online amid a debate sparked by Edward Snowden over government access to personal data online. Home Secretary Theresa May told the BBC that the measures would not ban encryption and "will not be giving powers to go through people's browsing history". AFP (Yahoo! News)

Winston Salem State University: 1 dead, 1 injured in shooting, gunman still sought

One student was shot dead and another wounded after gunfire erupted Sunday near dormitories on the Winston-Salem State University campus. Authorities were searching for a suspected gunman, but police and university spokesman Aaron Singleton would provide no identifying details. The historically black school urged visitors to the campus to stay away, but said student services were operating normally and that classes will be held on regular schedules Monday. Associated Press (U.S. News & World Report)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Blogs

How Trudeau Can Improve Our National Security Policy-Making Process

When overhauling Bill C-51 in the coming months, the new Trudeau government should give serious consideration to revamping Canada's national security policy-making apparatus to ensure the adoption of well-informed and objective national security and foreign policies. In doing so, the process should include an executive-level whole-of-government approach for maximum policy effectiveness. This would tie-in nicely to the Liberal government's proposal to institute parliamentary oversight of national security affairs by essentially enhancing the policy process from beginning to end. Given the dynamic and complex issues faced with abroad, there is no time better than the present to rethink how Canada approaches national security and foreign policy. Huffington Post Blogs

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

richardzussman

Tofino whale-watching tragedy brings out the best in a small town cbc.ca/1.3295626

CTVNews

New Brunswick's whooping cough outbreak: Should we blame anti-vaxxers or blame the vaccine? Dr. Neil Rau explains: ow.ly/U6oQD

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

HuffPost Canada

How Trudeau can improve our national security policy-making process by @navidhassibi <http://huff.to/1k1TtDx>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBC Aboriginal

RCMP response to new witness in Catchway case 'step in the right direction': Sheila North... ift.tt/1M4Oysi

KelownaCapNews

#KelownaCapNews Mounties look for Halloween grouper: Kelowna RCMP looking for suspect in sexual touching case. bit.ly/1N4X5vh

HuffPostCanada

VICE News fighting RCMP order to hand over files on suspected Islamic State fighter huff.to/1N2itS0

calgarysun

11 people killed in 5 crashes on Northern Alberta highways in 13 hours calgarysun.com/2015/10/31/sto...

CTVAtlantic

Police in northern N.B. seize 13,000 cigarettes after search warrant: RCMP in New Brunswick arrested two peopl... bit.ly/1HIMavp

660NEWS

UPDATE: RCMP confirm 13 people have died in seven different crashes in the last 48 hours. #ABRoads

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

CP24

'Large quantity' of prescription opioids stolen from Simcoe, Ont. pharmacy cp24.com/news/large-qua...

nspector4

Basically, the purpose of the $40M #MMIW inquiry is to 'educate' us... thestar.com/news/canada/20...

HuffPostQuebec

PRIMEUR - #PKP se rendra à Val-d'Or pour rencontrer la communauté autochtone #Polqc #Assnat huff.to/1WpiU2S

HuffPostQuebec

Affaires #autochtones: Justin #Trudeau pourrait prendre une décision historique #Polcan huff.to/1HkUBak

HuffPostQuebec

Robert-Falcon Ouellette, celui qui veut changer le sort des #Autochtones (SRC) huff.to/1MAuV12

rabbleca

Walking With Our Sisters exhibit commemorates missing and murdered Indigenous women buff.ly/1GPISWb #MMIW

RadioCanadaInfo

Celui qui veut changer le sort des Autochtones rc.ca/CcfhGb

Radio-Canada Info

La ministre de la Sécurité publique Lise Thériault s'absentera pour six semaines pour des raisons de santé

HuffPostQuebec

PRIMEUR - #PKP se rendra à Val-d'Or pour rencontrer la communauté autochtone #Polqc #Assnat huff.to/1WpiU2S

OTHER / AUTRES

ctvgp

Pennie believes it is "technically possible" to get the 25,000 refugees to Canada by Dec 31 but doubtful that it's reasonable to do so.

CBCNews

Ontario to increase Syrian refugee targets to help meet Trudeau's goals cbc.ca/1.3296176 #cdnpoli

INTERNATIONAL

CTV News

Preliminary results suggest Turkish ruling party restores its majority in parliament <http://ow.ly/U6nTC>

CTV News

Rare cyclone strikes Yemen island, leaving one dead <http://ow.ly/U6n73>

MacleansMag

Sinai plane crash: 'Everything checked out' during pre-flight inspection: ow.ly/U5Xy8

GlobalNational

Wreckage believed to be El Faro cargo ship located: US authorities gln.ca/U5YEy

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
November 12, 2015 / le 12 novembre 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Trudeau's decision on national security file promising and risky, experts say

Justin Trudeau's decision to take charge of a new cabinet committee on Intelligence and Emergency Management was described by security experts as a bold but risky move that could put the prime minister on the hook if there is a security intelligence failure. Trudeau and Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale have a big to-do list to improve Canada's national security system as the Liberal campaign platform promised, however vaguely. But the Liberal government's first steps are promising, a panel discussion at the University of Ottawa heard Tuesday. Goodale, a past cabinet minister under former prime ministers Paul Martin and Jean Chrétien, chairs another cabinet committee on Canada in the World and Public Security, and Trudeau took charge of the even smaller group of trusted ministers to oversee intelligence matters. Law professors Craig Forcese and University of Toronto's Kent Roach, and Wesley Wark, a visiting professor from the University of Toronto, said Trudeau's decision signals that security is a priority but if all his committee does is meet once a year to rubber-stamp the national security agencies' priorities, "it will be useless," as were previous iterations of similar committees. (...)Roach said with the positioning of Trudeau and Goodale on the file, the government may actually be "inching towards" the kind of accountability envisaged by the Air India inquiry, which was that "at the end of the day, someone has to be in charge, and we can't exist in this environment of bureaucratic defensiveness and plausible deniability." (...)The latter inquiry recommended the federal government create a more powerful national security adviser to the prime minister to monitor and serve as a referee in disputes between federal agencies, principally CSIS and RCMP, on the exchange of intelligence - a recommendation the Conservatives dismissed as creating unnecessary bureaucracy. Toronto Star (2015-11-11)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

B.C. storm to bring heavy rain, gusty wind

Environment Canada weather warnings remain in place for much of B.C. as a cold front sweeps across the province Thursday morning, bringing strong winds, heavy rain and rising snow levels. After heavy rain and wind gusts over 90 km/h hit the North and Central Coast overnight Wednesday, the front will continue to track towards the South Coast today for one of our biggest storm so far this season. This system is known as an atmospheric river — also known as a pineapple express — a narrow weather system that directs concentrated moisture from sub-tropical regions to the South Coast in this case. Winds will begin to pick up and showers will become heavier through the morning hours for much of Metro Vancouver, Fraser Valley and the North Shore. But southern areas of the city will likely only see showers thanks to a rain shadow for places like Richmond, White Rock and Delta. CBC News; News 1130; Kelowna Now

Hydro crews preparing for outages as windstorms blow through southern Ontario

Ontario hydro crews are preparing for power outages as a powerful windstorm blows over the Great Lakes. Strong southwesterly winds with frequent gusts are expected as a sharp cold front blasts across southern Ontario, Environment Canada said Thursday. Gusts are expected to be strongest near the shore of eastern Lake Erie, as the wind picks up over the lake. The weather agency issued wind warnings for the Dunnville, Niagara and Simcoe areas, where gusts may reach speeds of up to 90 km/h. The warning said winds will be strong enough to cause tree damage, with power outages also possible. CTV News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Federal NDP names shadow cabinet

The NDP's new shadow cabinet will be fronted by parliamentary veterans with leader Tom Mulcair handling the contentious energy portfolio. All 44 New Democrat MPs have been given opposition critic responsibilities with a roughly 50-50 male-female ratio. As energy critic, Mulcair will almost certainly be drawn into the debate over the proposed Energy East pipeline, which is not popular in his home province of Quebec. During the recent election campaign, Mulcair was accused of waffling on the issue, saying he generally supported the pipeline but wants a tougher federal pipeline review process. Long-time MP David Christopherson, NDP deputy leader in the last Parliament, will serve as public safety critic as the new Liberal government overhauls the controversial Bill C-51 national security legislation, which the NDP vehemently opposes. Christopherson, a former Ontario minister of correctional services and solicitor-general, also will chair the party's priorities and planning committee. Ottawa Citizen; National Post

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

TSN and W5 Take a look at the Ease of Purchasing Illegal Steroids Online

In Cheating the Game, TSN Senior Correspondent Rick Westhead introduces viewers to former University of Waterloo football player Matt Socholotiuk, who explains why he turned to illegal steroids in order to gain an edge while pursuing his athletic dreams. Socholotiuk's hopes of playing professional football were shattered in 2010 after he tested positive for steroid use while playing for Waterloo. A widespread problem on Canadian campuses, eight Canadian university football players have tested positive for performance enhancing drugs (PEDs) in the past two years alone – with police seizing a record $10 million worth of illegal PEDs in one bust. Westhead visits the Canadian Border Services Agency (CBSA) to examine their effectiveness in stopping illegal drugs from being shipped into Canada, and then puts the CBSA's vigilance to the test. After easily finding and placing orders for a variety of substances banned by the World Anti-Doping Agency from three online sources, Westhead's packages arrive by express courier in about two weeks – completely evading customs detection. ChannelCanada

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Federal security officials eye 'big data analytics' in a bid to pinpoint threats

Federal security agencies risk being overwhelmed by threats - or failing to even foresee them - unless they embrace the digital-age phenomenon of big-data crunching, warns an internal Public Safety Canada presentation. With billions of people using mobile phones and surfing the Internet, security officials are preoccupied with getting timely access to valuable information. But the recent past is littered with challenges related to information sharing and privacy - including controversy over the Conservative omnibus bill known as C-51, the presentation notes. Officials acknowledge the public might not trust government to respect privacy in the process, pointing to revelations by former U.S. spy contractor Edward Snowden about widespread surveillance of communications. "Canadians are increasingly concerned about issues of crime and terrorism, but in the post-Snowden era, public concerns about government data use may stand as a barrier to the effective use of innovative data analytics by law enforcement and security organizations," the presentation says. Big data analytics generally refers to the process of gathering and systematically sifting through millions or even billions of pieces of data - numbers, text, graphics, videos and sensor information - to glean insights that can't be detected through standard methods. Given the pace of technological advancement and the exponential increase in the amount of data produced worldwide, there may be opportunities to do things more efficiently and identify patterns through innovative techniques, the presentation says. "In other words, once we have the information, how can we ensure that we are in a position to use it effectively?" The May 2015 presentation, Big Data Analytics in the World of Safety and Security, was prepared for Public Safety Canada's internal policy committee. The Canadian Press obtained a declassified version of the secret draft presentation under the Access to Information Act. Small portions were withheld due to their sensitivity. Canadian Press (CTV News)

Government requests for info on Canadian Facebook users up 47% from 2014

The Canadian government is requesting more information about Canadian Facebook users than ever. Government requests for Facebook account data jumped by almost 50 per cent in the first half of 2015 according to a report released Wednesday by the social media giant. In the first half of 2015 the company reported 410 requests from the Canadian government concerning 508 accounts relating to "valid requests relating to criminal cases." Facebook handed data over to the government 79 per cent of the time. This was a 47 per cent increase from 2014 when the government made 279 requests involving 355 accounts in the last half of 2014. During this period, Facebook complied with the requests 58 per cent of the time. Global News; iPolitics

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

In the first half of 2015, Ottawa asked for information about 500 Canadian accounts. Facebook says the vast majority of requests are regarding criminal cases. The government usually asks for basic user information, i.p. addresses and the content of some online posts. (CBC Vancouver, 6h10; CBC News, 11h25 ET)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

BC Ferries says Active Pass jumping stunt cost $40,000

A man who deployed a life raft and jumped overboard a ferry in Active Pass last week cost BC Ferries $40,000, according to a company spokeswoman. Deborah Marshall says the cost was greater than a typical search and rescue mission because the life raft was damaged and had to be repaired. She said BC Ferries is working with the RCMP, which is investigating the incident which happened last Wednesday night. Marshall says BC Ferries intends to implement a lifetime ban on the person who jumped from travelling on any B.C. ferry. Marshall said the total bill includes the cost of repairing the damaged life-raft, outfitting the ferry with a replacement raft, overtime pay for the crews of the Coastal Celebration and the Spirit of British Columbia and extra fuel for both vessels. A young man was arrested after he allegedly jumped off a ferry, swam to Galiano Island, and broke into a house while naked. The bizarre incident happened on the Coastal Celebration at about 9:30 p.m. The vessel had stopped in Active Pass, after a man, believed to be in his mid 20s, threw one of the boat's 100-person life rafts into the water and then jumped overboard. Vancouver Sun

Lawyers continue fight for documents in Michel Vienneau case

Court of Queens Bench Justice Larry Landry told the court Wednesday he couldn't make an immediate decision on whether to order the coroner's office and the RCMP to produce documents pertinent to Michel Vienneau's death. Vienneau's common-law partner, Annick Basque, and her lawyer, Charles Leblanc, made a motion to request that police and government submit documents to assist in their lawsuit against the City of Bathurst. Vienneau, 51, was shot and killed by a Bathurst police officer Jan. 12, 2015 after he was apprehended in his car outside the Bathurst Via Rail station. Basque was also in the car at the time of the shooting. She alleges Vienneau's death is a result of police negligence. CBC News

Union calls for new strategy to protect workers in wake of ER assault

The president of the Nova Scotia Nurses' Union wants a plan in place to protect her members after a nurse and security guards were assaulted in the Hants Community Hospital emergency room Tuesday night. Janet Hazelton says the occurrence, which resulted in minor injuries, is far from a rarity and needs to stop. There were 153 assaults on nurses by patients last year, she said. "When a violent patient comes into (a hospital) we should have a plan. We should have security that are actually able to restrain patients if they have to." Charges of assault and causing a disturbance are pending against a 40-year-old man who RCMP have not yet identified. The accused, who has no fixed address, is expected to appear in Kentville provincial court today and was a patient at the hospital. Chronicle Herald

Police arrest 49-year-old man in sexual assault cold case from 1990

Toronto Police have arrested a 49-year-old suspect in a sexual assault cold case that happened near Thorncliffe Park in July of 1990. Austin Wyclef Thomas was arrested in the United Kingdom and extradited to Canada to face charges on Tuesday. Police allege that on July 27, 1990 Thomas entered a ground floor apartment near Millwood Road and Overlea Boulevard through an open window and attacked a woman who was asleep inside. They say he then tried to choke the woman and sexually assaulted her. In 2002 the Sex Crimes unit was able to develop a DNA profile of a male suspect and it was added to the national DNA database in Ottawa. Then in 2013 the cold case was reviewed by Project Timeless and investigators identified Thomas as the male suspect. Since then police have worked with Interpol and British police to locate Thomas and bring him to Canada. He appeared in Toronto court this morning for a bail hearing. This is the second cold case Toronto police believe they've cracked this week. On Tuesday, a 61-year-old man was charged with first-degree murder in the 1990 slaying of a gas station attendant. CBC News

Northern Alberta man charged in wife's death

A man has been charged in the death of his common-law wife on a northern Alberta First Nation. Peter Noskey, 35, has been charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Vicky Cardinal, 35. Cardinal was transported from Peerless Lake, a community 235 kilometres east of Peace River, to hospital in Edmonton on Thursday. She died Sunday. An autopsy has been scheduled. Cardinal and Nosky lived together on Peerless Trout First Nation. Canadian Press (Edmonton Journal)

Students in Nanaimo, Ladysmith locked in schools after online threat

Students in Nanaimo and Ladysmith were locked inside their schools following a non-specific threat, according to the district. The schools were under hold and secure status, meaning all the doors to the buildings were been locked. Students remained in class while the schools were locked, the district said. The district has confirmed the threat was made online, prompting the order at around 9 a.m. The hold and secure status was lifted at 10:20 a.m. RCMP have yet to comment on the nature of the threat.

CTV News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

'It's a violent life;' Day by day, former gang member rebuilds

It was the first time in his life Brad Christianson truly feared going to jail. He was 23 years old on the cold January morning when he walked into court, knowing his fate was sealed. By that time in his young life, Christianson was no stranger to incarceration. He was first locked up when he was 12, after pulling a pocket knife on an older kid. This time around, he was truly frightened. This time, he wouldn't have the protection of his gang to see him through the hard days ahead. (...) For a gang member, he says, prison is not a scary place. If you wear the right colours and are "cliqued up" with the right gang, a five-year stint is nothing. Jail was a given — another part of the street life, where laws are flouted daily. Higher-ups in the gang exert their control behind bars, as well as on the outside. "When you are in the federal penitentiary, gangs are dominant. It's open population. You see when you go eat, when you go to the weight pit and the gym," he says. When Christianson was sentenced to five years for his role in a violent home invasion in 2010, he no longer had the backing of his gang. He had dropped his colours.

StarPhoenix

Lawyer appeals conviction of Christopher Falconer in murder of Nova Scotia woman

The lawyer for a Nova Scotia man appealing his first-degree murder conviction in the death of Amber Kirwan says the Crown and trial judge made errors in the way they described evidence to the jury. Lee Seshagiri argued today in the Appeal Court of Nova Scotia that the jury may have been confused on whether evidence had to be accepted as fact in the trial of Christopher Alexander Falconer last February. A panel of three judges heard his detailed legal arguments about what evidence was binding in the case. Falconer was given an automatic sentence of life in prison with no parole eligibility for 25 years after he was convicted by a jury in January. Canadian Press (The Guardian, The Telegram, Chronicle-Herald)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

Correctional Services of Canada has seized a significant amount of marijuana at the medium security Dorchester Penitentiary. (CFXY-FM Fredericton, 8h04)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Minister wants to get started on missing women inquiry 'as soon as we possibly can'

Carolyn Bennett, Canada's newly appointed minister of indigenous and northern affairs, says the Liberal government wants to announce a national inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women "as soon as we possibly can." Speaking with reporters ahead of a caucus meeting on Thursday, Bennett said she's hoping to announce a pre-inquiry consultation process within the next 100 days. In terms of an inquiry, she said it's "a matter of what's doable, but we need support to make sure that we get it right." CTV News

Waiting for Daleen; How a family never gave up their search for justice

How long would you wait for someone you love? If one day you wake up to find a loved one is missing, do you exhaust mind and body to recover what is lost or do you let obsessive hope give way to accepting an absence beyond your control? Daleen Kay Bosse disappeared one night in May 2004. Her family woke up knowing only that her absence worried them. They waited four years to find out what had happened to Daleen and they could have spent the rest of their lives searching for answers. Daleen, a 25-year-old married mother of a three-year-old girl, wasn't living what police call a "high-risk lifestyle." She had finished her third year of education at the University of Saskatchewan, aspiring to be a teacher like her parents, Pauline and Herb Muskego. They raised Daleen and her siblings as engaged citizens, culturally aware and responsible. Daleen, a Cree woman with roots in the Onion Lake Cree Nation, dabbled in photography, art and drama. She was only vulnerable because she was an aboriginal woman.

StarPhoenix

Searching for the line between free speech and cyber bullying

When does free speech become online bullying, or a negative review become slander? Those are the questions being asked after an incident on the review site Abbotsford Rants and Raves. (...) Someone posting a negative review about a business online isn't a unique circumstance, however, this situation prompts a question: When does a review site cross the line between exercising free speech and condoning cyber bullying? When animosity is displayed with such ferocity amongst strangers, it's referred to as a mob mentality. While in "real life," crowds of level-headed people would not gather to promote malicious behaviour, that exact scenario is somehow allowed and often encouraged online. In Abbotsford, a business owner felt threatened, a girl and her family felt wronged, and the online community wanted justice, armed with only one side of the story. The Abbotsford Police Department (APD) do not get involved in such matters for this reason. They are not in a position to regulate online activity or authorize what qualifies as cyber bullying. Ultimately, it is subjective, as anyone offended by a comment could claim they are being bullied and demand action by the police. VanCity Buzz

Residents put draft police business plan under the microscope

In its desire to ensure it is working with the right community-based partners, the Ottawa police have likely already found a good match. Police brass recently turned to the public for another round of input on potential gaps in its three-year business plan, which is now being developed to guide service delivery, provide for policing staffs and work with the right community partners. Following the first of two brainstorming sessions at the St. Elias Centre in the Riverview Park community on Nov. 5, residents made several suggestions, including rethinking the plan's language to ensure inclusivity for high-needs communities, more proactively engaging with immigrants and newcomers, more prominently including youth and schools and having officers more positively interact with residents. "We felt that the police might be a little bit too much for negative actions in terms of ... drug checks," said Sandy Hill resident Jan van Heuzen, one of 124 people at the meeting. "We'd like to see more positive actions where they use their community to engage in a positive way and sort of show police as a friend instead of police as a uniform." Ottawa Community News

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Cabinet expected to approve Syrian refugee resettlement plan

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau meets with his cabinet today and one of the top priorities is to approve a plan to resettle 25,000 refugees from Syria. The fast-track Liberal plan needs to work out the logistics of how to get them here before year's end, and where to house them once they arrive. The Canadian Armed Forces is expected to play a crucial role in the refugee resettlement process. Chief of Defence Staff, Gen. Jonathan Vance, is attending today's cabinet meeting. Arriving on Parliament Hill, Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan kept tight-lipped about the possibility of temporarily accommodating refugees at military bases and other facilities. "Still working on it," he said. It's expected refugees will be chosen from Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey, and Canada's representative at the United Nations High Commission for Refugees says U.N. staff are trying to keep expectations realistic. CBCNews

Refugees a long-term investment in the country

According to an opinion piece, "The deadline is probably unnecessarily tight and, to do it right, Canadians would probably give the new Trudeau government the breathing room needed to push the Jan. 1 deadline. But the government has the support of the UN Refugee Agency, provinces, cities, the military, airlines, labour organizations, churches and Canadians. It evokes memories of the last time this country opened its arms in such a compassionate embrace, and one Toronto man knows better than any the work involved in pulling off such a herculean task. Scott Mullin was 22 and barely out of Carleton University when the Toronto Star headlined a March 5, 1979, piece about him - "Viet refugees view Canadian as a god." Record

Peter Showler: Canada can rise to the refugee challenge

During the election, Justin Trudeau promised to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of the year. It was a well-intentioned and uninformed promise that under normal circumstances could not be kept. At the same time, there are many good reasons for trying to keep it. There are more than 4.5 million Syrian refugees in the neighbouring countries of Lebanon, Jordan and Turkey. Some have been there for as long as four years and most are in desperate circumstances. It's a situation so hopeless that over 600,000 refugees – men, women and children – have been driven to risk their lives in over-crowded boats to reach Europe where they face both humanitarian welcomes and barbed wire at some borders. Nearly 3,500 refugees did not complete that voyage. OttawaCitizen

Canadian Foodgrains Bank commits to helping Syrian refugees

The Canadian Foodgrains Bank has committed $4 million to help over 200,000 people in seven different countries. One project will respond to the needs of displaced people within Syria. As the Syrian conflict continues, millions of people have been forced from their homes to other parts of Syria and neighbouring countries. Even for those who have not been displaced, livelihoods have been disrupted, and households are hosting family members from other parts of the country. Many people are struggling to get by. As savings are depleted, families are becoming increasingly desperate. In response, through their partner Lebanese Society for Educational and Social Development, World Renew is providing 2,000 families (about 12,000 people) with emergency food baskets on a monthly basis for six months. The project total is $676,000. MyToba

An Antidote to Cynicism in Canada

According to an editorial, "It has become common to bemoan the sorry state of politics, what with all the big money, dirty tricks, image molding, partisan gridlock and general cynicism. Yet voters seem never to cease longing for a leader who can restore pride to high office and rekindle the national spirit. Sometimes it actually happens. John F. Kennedy will be remembered for his youth and his inspiring call for sacrifice in his Inaugural Address. For all the tribulations of his presidency, Barack Obama's election was a shining moment for Americans. Now Canada is having its moment with Justin Trudeau, the new prime minister." NYTimes

Refugee resettlement commitment doable, but not on time: expert

The Trudeau government's plan to welcome 25,000 Syrian refugees into Canada by the end of the year is commendable, says one immigration expert, but it is unrealistic to expect that so many can be settled by Jan. 1. Peter Showler, a former chair of the Immigration and Refugee Board, says resettlement is always complicated, but becomes even more so when the plan is to bring in tens of thousands of refugees at once. The first problem, he says, will be figuring out how to house that many newcomers. CTV News

How will Liberal cabinet handle Syrian refugee resettlement?

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau meets with his cabinet today to, among other things, review how Canada will keep its commitment to resettle 25,000 refugees from Syria. The Liberal plan has so far focused on the logistics of getting some of them here before year's end, but also on where to house them. It's expected refugees will be chosen from Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey, and Canada's representative at the United Nations High Commission for Refugees says UN staff are trying to keep expectations realistic. Unlike usual procedures, where refugee cases are processed individually, this program will likely involve the batching together of groups and the simplification of paperwork. Canadian Press (CBC News)

Federal cabinet to talk refugee logistics

The new federal cabinet meet today and will attempt to deal with the logistics of trying to bring 25-thousand Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of the year. It's expected refugees will be chosen from Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey. UN officials doing the assessment work overseas have suggests the process might be streamlined by fasttracking those considered a low security risk. Of the 4.2 million people registered as refugees from Syria's civil war, the UN wants to resettle a third of them. Earlier this week, Air Canada said it had a window of opportunity before the Christmas rush started to make some of its planes available to help the government transport refugees. Meanwhile there's still no plan in place for how Alberta will deal with an influx of Syrian refugees. Edmonton Mayor Don Iveson says there's no question some of the refugees will be coming here. He says the immediate issues will be finding accommodations and proper winter clothing. He says a number of agencies and organizations will have to step up to help the government make this a smooth transition. CHQR News Talk 770 AM

Canada Plans To Bring In 500 Syrian Refugees A Day Until Year's End

The Canadian government is forging ahead with its pledge to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of the year, honoring an audacious campaign promise made by newly-elected Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. Canada will need to take in refugees at a rate of around 500 people per day if it is to meet that mark, a pace that has resulted in some aid agencies questioning whether the government can accomplish the difficult feat without sacrificing care for refugees. The government has remained steadfast in its commitment, though, with Minister of Immigration John McCallum reaffirming this week that officials are doing all they can to ensure the government properly achieves its goal. "We're committed to do this fast, but we're also committed to do it right, to do it well," McCallum told the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The details of how Trudeau's administration aims to deal with the numerous practical concerns associated with resettlement will be revealed Thursday, when the prime minister and his cabinet review a roadmap for final approval. Huffington Post

As Liberals decide how to bring 25,000 Syrians to Canada, the choice is also who to accept

Somewhere right now, in a refugee camp in Amman or a rental apartment in Beirut or on a street in Istanbul, sits a Syrian hoping to be among the 25,000 people resettled to Canada, possibly by the end of the year. United Nations staff working with the Canadian government to figure out who will be on the planes or ships dispatched to the region in the coming weeks say they are trying to keep expectations realistic. "Rumours are already going in the refugee populations that there's a large program, that Canadians are coming," said Furio De Angelis, the Canadian representative of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. "We have to explain, present it as it is, an extraordinary effort but not everyone is eligible." The UN refugee agency, tasked with overseeing what's been called the greatest refugee crisis since the Second World War — is actually very specific when it comes to selecting people for resettlement. National Post

Surrey braces for influx of Syrian refugees

An estimated 2,700 Syrian refugees are expected to arrive in B.C. by the end of the year and it's likely more of them will settle in Surrey than any other municipality in the province. "The city has a history of welcoming refugees and my understanding is nearly 30 percent of refugees that come to British Columbia end up settling in Surrey," says Councillor Judy Villeneuve. "There's a reason for that. The housing in Surrey is less expensive than Vancouver, Richmond or Burnaby." CBC News

Finding housing for new refugees could pose problem: Manitoba agency

The head of a non-profit agency that helps newcomers find a place to live says it's wonderful Manitoba will be taking in more refugees — but finding homes for them will be a challenge. Sally Nelson is the interim executive director of New Journey Housing, which helps newcomers find affordable housing. It also educates them on how to be a good tenant and their rights and responsibilities. Newcomers include refugees, immigrants, international students and foreign workers. CBC News

L'ONU presse le Canada d'accueillir non pas 25 000 Syriens, mais 125 000!

Puisque le Canada « reçoit 280 000 résidents permanents et à peu près 200 000 travailleurs migrants temporaires annuellement », la cible de 25 000 nouveaux réfugiés syriens d'ici le mois de janvier que s'est fixé le nouveau gouvernement canadien n'apparaît pas « très grosse ». C'est ce qu'affirme le rapporteur spécial des Nations unies pour les droits de l'homme et des migrants, François Crépeau. Selon cet universitaire canadien, le Canada devrait ouvrir ses portes à 25 000 réfugiés syriens annuellement sur une période de cinq ans. Cela constituerait selon lui « un bel effort pour un petit pays de 36 millions d'habitants » en plus d'envoyer un « signal de solidarité ». « Le Canada reçoit 280 000 résidents permanents et à peu près 200 000 travailleurs migrants temporaires annuellement, donc presque un demi-million de personnes. Vingt-cinq mille réfugiés, ça ne me paraît pas un très gros chiffre par rapport à ces chiffres-là » a-t-il illustré. Radio-Canada International

Syrian refugees Summerside-bound

A Summerside church group has sponsored two Syrian refugee families, and expects them to arrive on P.E.I. in the new year. The sponsorship group at Trinity United Church says donations have been pouring in. The church committee agreed to put up $15,000 per family and get homes ready for those families. CBC News

2000 élèves réfugiés syriens attendus dans les écoles à Montréal

Une vague de quelque 2000 élèves réfugiés syriens, âgés de 4 à 17 ans, grossiront les rangs des écoles de l'île de Montréal dès janvier prochain. En entrevue à Radio-Canada, Catherine Harel-Bourdon, présidente de la Commission scolaire de Montréal (CSDM), a expliqué qu'elle travaillait avec les deux autres commissions scolaires francophones de l'île de Montréal sur les hypothèses d'accueil de ces élèves. À elle seule, la CSDM recevra la moitié des nouveaux élèves soit entre 600 et 900 enfants de plus. Il s'agit notamment de se préparer à leur offrir des cours de francisation et « à mettre toute en œuvre pour l'intégration des familles ». Radio-Canada

Refugee agencies lost federal money, now trying to ramp up

The anticipated influx to Canada of 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of the year has grassroots settlement agencies in Ottawa calling on the government to restore funding cut in recent years. Details about the Liberals' Syrian resettlement plan — as well as the money to go with it — could come as early as Thursday afternoon when the government is expected to make another announcement. Meanwhile, the umbrella group Refugee 613 has emerged to co-ordinate settlement agencies and community services. CBC News

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

In Calgary, private sponsors expect as many as 2,000 Syrians will arrive here over the next few months, and the local Syrian community is ready to help. (CFCN News (CTV Calgary), 6h45)

Au Québec, la Commission scolaire de Montréal se prépare à accueillir entre 600 et 900 enfants âgés entre 4 et 17 ans. Catherine Harel Bourdon, présidente, Commission scolaire de Montréal explique qu'il y a des enseignants formés expressément dans l'accueil et la francisation. La commission scolaire a un mandat de s'assurer que l'intégration se passe bien. Elle demande du financement de Québec. (RDI, 9h45 ET)

En scrum, la ministre de l'Immigration, de la Diversité et de l'Inclusion du Québec, Kathleen Weil, explique que la province se prépare à accueillir 2400 réfugiés qui viendraient dans les prochains mois. Transcription ébauche

CBC News reported live from the House of Commons where Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Minister John McCallum responded to reporters' questions regarding the government's plan to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees. Of note, the Minister stated that a detailed plan will be the laid out in the coming days. Rough Transcript

CBC News reported live from the House of Commons where Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale responded to reporters' questions regarding the government's plan to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees, among other topics. Rough Transcript

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

EU passport-free area under threat as nations take action to slow huge influx of migrants

European leaders scrambled Thursday to keep their passport-free travel zone from collapsing, after Germany, Sweden and Slovenia acted on their own to tighten borders or erect fences to slow the relentless influx of people marching into Europe. A two-day summit held on the Mediterranean island of Malta was meant to focus on how to send back to Africa those who don't qualify for asylum and discourage others from attempting the risky journey across the seas in search of a better life. But the gathering of European Union and African leaders quickly became overshadowed by fears that one of Europe's prized benefits the ease of travel through its Schengen passport-free area was unraveling. "Saving Schengen is a race against time," EU Council President Donald Tusk warned. Guardian

Turkey: 11 IS suspects reported detained in raids in Istanbul, days before G 20 summit

Turkey's state-run news agency says police have detained 11 people in a new security sweep in Istanbul against suspected Islamic State militants. The Anadolu Agency says the suspects, including seven foreign nationals, were detained Thursday during simultaneous raids on some 20 addresses in the city. The report said the suspects had arrived in Turkey to join the IS group. There was no information on their nationalities. Turkey has detained dozens of IS suspects in recent weeks, including some 20 in or near the city of Antalya, which will be hosting U.S. President Barack Obama and other G-20 leaders at a summit meeting Sunday and Monday. Associated Press (Today's Zaman)

37 killed in twin suicide bombing in Beirut

A twin suicide bombing struck the southern suburb of the Lebanese capital Beirut has killed at least 37 people, local media said. A Red Cross official was quoted Lebanese TV channels 37 people have been killed when two suicide bombing struck the Burj Al Barajneh area, a stronghold of the militant group Hezbollah, on Thursday evening. Al Jadeed TV quoted a health official as saying 181 have been injured in the two attacks which hit the Mosque road in the neighborhood. "A third suicide bomber failed to detonate his explosive belt but managed to escape. He is at large and we are looking for him," the channel quoted police sources as saying. No one immediately claimed responsibility for the bombings. Southern Beirut is a stronghold of Hezbollah that is fighting in Syria along with government forces there. The area has been hit in the past. Militant groups that fight the Syrian regime of Bashar Al Assad have threatened to carry out more such attacks. Gulf News Lebanon; Reuters; Sky News; Bloomberg News; Associated Press (Canada.com)

Around 25 dead in Boko Haram raid in Niger and clashes with army

Around 25 people were killed on Wednesday in a Boko Haram attack on a village in southern Niger and subsequent clashes between the Islamist militants and the army, Niger military officials said. Fighters from the Nigerian militant group killed five civilians in their initial attack on the village located in the West African nation's Bosso district. Niger soldiers drove back the militants, killing around 20 of them, the officers said. Reuters

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CTVNews

Hydro crews preparing for power outages as windstorms blow through southern Ontario <http://ow.ly/UyT1N>

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Global Montreal

Government requests for info on Canadian Facebook users up 47% from 2014 <http://gln.ca/UzkL7>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Edmonton Journal

Red Deer RCMP investigate following body found in woods <http://ow.ly/UzaRr>

iNews880

RCMP investigating discovery of body in Red Deer <http://bit.ly/1Mplnzl>. #yeg

iNews880

Charges laid in Peerless Trout First Nation death <http://bit.ly/1OGjo0u>. #yeg

KBulletin

Three Kimberley RCMP vehicles damaged in chase. http://www.dailybulletin.ca/breaking_news/346789382.html....

NancyHixt

Breaking: RCMP say no charges will be laid against Chad Pasloski, the man caught on tape verbally yelling racial slurs at a #yyc cab driver.

dannyzcbc

Alta RCMP drug expert Cpl Jeff Cain says fentanyl an epidemic there; 150 deaths by end of August, forecast 300 for the year.

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

CTVNews

Minister hopes to announce missing women pre-inquiry consultation within 100 days <http://ow.ly/Uzwar> #cdnpoli

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

CTVCalgary

Justin Trudeau will review Syrian refugee commitment in cabinet meeting <http://bit.ly/1kPpb6Q>

nationalpost

As Liberals decide how to bring 25,000 Syrians to Canada, the choice is also who to accept <http://natpo.st/1HDIHh6>

INTERNATIONAL

Reuters

Around 25 dead in Boko Haram raid in Niger and clashes with army: <http://reut.rs/1WTNmGc>

BBCBreaking

At least 17 killed in Beirut as blasts hit Hezbollah-dominated suburbs, Lebanese security sources tell BBC Arabic <http://bbc.in/1krDz5l>

AP

Lebanese official says death toll in twin blasts in southern Beirut's Shiite suburb reaches 16: <http://apne.ws/1MZIGHN>

Reuters

BREAKING: At least 20 people killed in suicide attacks in Beirut's southern suburbs, senior interior minister source says.

CBCAlerts

Death toll in twin #Beirut blasts said to rise to 23; more than 100 others wounded. Explosions took place in #Hezbollah-held #Shia district.

Reuters

BREAKING: At least 27 killed in Beirut explosions: Hezbollah medics

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
November 20, 2015 / le 20 novembre 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Kelly Block and Gerry Ritz are now part of the Conservative's new shadow cabinet

Two Saskatchewan MPs are now part of the Conservative's new shadow cabinet. Interim Conservative leader Rona Ambrose announced Friday that Carleton Trail-Eagle Creek MP Kelly Block will serve as the Conservative critic for Transport. Former minister of agriculture Gerry Ritz will serve as the Conservative critic for International Trade. Gerry Ritz, former agriculture minister, will serve as the Conservative critic for International Trade. "I believe the team we have assembled will be the strongest Official Opposition this country has ever seen," Ambrose said in a news release Friday morning. In the release, Ambros also took the opportunity to slam Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's plan to bring 25,000 new Syrian refugees into the country by the end of the year. "Today, I am asking Prime Minister Trudeau to be open and transparent on how he will safely and responsibly settle 25,000 Syrian in less than six weeks, which is over 500 people per day," Ambrose said in the release. Block was first elected in 2008 in the Saskatoon - Rosetown - Biggar riding. She was re-elected in the newly formed Carleton Trail - Eagle Creek riding last election. Ritz, who was agriculture minister since 2007 in Stephen Harper's government, was re-elected in his Battlefords - Lloydminster riding in Oct. Other Saskatchewan MPs received critic portfolios as well. David Anderson (Cypress Hills - Grasslands) will serve as the critic for Human Rights and Religious Freedom and Brad Trost (Saskatoon - University) will serve as the critic for Canada/US Relations. Regina-Wascana's Ralph Goodale is the only Saskatchewan MP to hold a cabinet position in Trudeau's Liberal government. StarPhoenix

Refugees to be temporarily housed at military sites in Quebec, Ontario

The Canadian Armed Forces are preparing to lodge hundreds of refugees at bases in Ontario and Quebec on a temporary basis as the government prepares to resettle 25,000 refugees by year's end. The government has yet to say how it intends to meet its goal of resettling thousands in a limited timeframe, but an announcement is expected soon. "The Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) is currently planning on providing interim lodging at bases in Quebec and Ontario as a priority," said Dominique Tessier, a media relations officer with the Department of National Defence, in an email to CBC News. "Other bases and locations may be used if requested by government of Canada planners." Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale was asked on Wednesday about plans to resettle 1,000 refugees at CFB Trenton in Ontario and 500 refugees at CFB Valcartier in Quebec as early as Dec. 1. "We recognize the urgency. We want to release the details as rapidly as possible," said Goodale, adding that the specifics would be announced by the immigration minister in the coming days. Goodale and Immigration Minister John McCallum met with two of Quebec's ministers today to discuss the government's "ambitious" plan. CBC News

Wall says Saskatchewan will set up a refugee settlement centre

Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall says the government will establish a refugee settlement centre to co-ordinate the arrival of Syrian refugees into the province. The announcement comes just days after Wall said the federal government should suspend its plan to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees by year's end because of safety concerns. "Notwithstanding our disagreement with the federal government, we want to be there for refugees, we want to move ahead in an effective way, and so I'm announcing today the creation of the refugee settlement centre," Wall said Thursday at the legislature in Regina. The centre will co-ordinate settlement groups, community-based organizations and school districts. For example, schools may need more support for English as a second language programs. The premier says it's important to ensure that refugees who come to Saskatchewan make a successful transition to life in Canada. However, Wall also says he remains concerned that a rushed political deadline could compromise the success of the refugee resettlement effort. "We don't think a deadline-driven process is the right thing to do. I still don't think that, but we're going to do our part. We're going to be ready, not just to do our part, but to do it well in the interest of effective settlement." The premier says many questions remain unanswered about the federal government's resettlement plan, but the province needs to be ready to welcome the refugees whenever they start to arrive. He estimates about 850 refugees could settle in Saskatchewan. Wall said in a letter to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau that the attacks in Paris are a grim reminder of the death and destruction even a small number of "malevolent individuals can inflict upon a peaceful country and its citizens." Gunmen and suicide bombers killed 129 people and injured about 300 in the French capital last Friday night. The premier said Canada should take in refugees, but security should be "first and foremost" the concern for the provincial and federal governments. Wall says he has since spoken to federal Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale and was given more information about the refugee screening process. Many questions remained unanswered, he added. The premier says he asked Goodale again to get rid of the deadline. "We'll be very supportive of as many as possible, as soon as possible, but let's just work to results, not a deadline," said Wall. Canadian Press (iPolitics)

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

Mort d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud: des questions en suspens

Né en 1987 dans la commune bruxelloise de Molenbeek, Abaaoud était devenu une vedette locale pour les jeunes radicalisés, notamment grâce à son utilisation des médias sociaux. Une vidéo où on le voyait en Syrie traîner des cadavres derrière un véhicule avait beaucoup circulé. Va-t-il être érigé en martyr en raison de sa mort au combat ? « Comme martyr, ils vont sûrement le vénérer comme étant mort pour une raison que certaines personnes admirent, oui », a expliqué Nasser Houdak, intervenant jeunesse à l'Association de la jeunesse molenbeekoise, dans un entretien avec La Presse hier. « Notre travail quotidien, c'est justement d'essayer que les jeunes ne soient pas récupérés de cette façon », dit-il. La Presse

France to keep border checks as long as 'terrorist threat' lasts

France will maintain controls along all its borders with fellow EU countries for as long as the imminent threat of attacks remains, French Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said on Friday. "France will maintain the border controls it established last Friday as long as the terrorist threat makes it necessary," Cazeneuve told a press conference after a crisis meeting with his EU counterparts following last week's deadly Paris attacks. The Paris attacks in which 129 people died have raised troubling questions about border security in the Schengen zone, where citizens of 22 EU countries, plus non-EU Norway, Switzerland, Iceland and Liechtenstein enjoy passport-free travel. "There is a high level of terrorist threat and it's our duty to protect the French people," Cazeneuve said, defending France's decision to re-establish borders within the zone. AFP (Yahoo! News)

Paris attacks: Police say 3rd body found from raid that killed alleged ringleader

The Paris prosecutor's office says that a third body was found overnight in an apartment raided by police searching for suspects in last week's Paris attacks. The office said in a statement Friday that the body is that of a woman but her identity is unclear. Prosecutors earlier identified one of the others killed in Wednesday's raid in Saint-Denis as suspected mastermind Abdelhamid Abaaoud. The development comes as European Union interior and justice ministers are gathering for an emergency meeting in Brussels on how best to respond to the threat of violent extremism. It is expected France and Belgium will push to tighten gun laws, toughen border security and choke off funds to extremist groups. But the ministers are not expected to order any new measures that could be immediately introduced to restore calm among countries rattled by the coordinated attacks in Paris, claimed by the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) organization, that killed 129 people. Documents prepared for the Friday meeting in Brussels and seen by The Associated Press indicate the ministers instead will try to push forward on priorities already identified, but not acted on, by EU leaders following an earlier round of deadly attacks in Paris on a satirical newspaper and a kosher grocery in January. CBC News; BBC News; Toronto Star; France24; Chicago Tribune; New York Times; Huffington Post; London Free Press; Wall Street Journal; Associated Press (Kingston Whig-Standard, Toronto Sun, Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun)

Tapped phone led Paris attack leader to his death

The top suspect behind last week's Paris attacks was watched by police being led into a building by a woman suicide bomber the evening before they both died there during a raid by special forces, a police source said on Friday. Police had been tapping the phone of Hasna Aitboulahcen as part of a drugs investigation and were able to track her down to the Saint-Denis suburb north of the French capital. They watched the 26-year-old take Abdelhamid Abaaoud, suspected mastermind of the Nov. 13 bombings and shootings that killed 130 people, into the building where both died early on Wednesday morning. She detonated a suicide belt during the seven-hour police assault on the building, where officials said a third unidentified person died with them. Aitboulahcen may be Abaaoud's cousin. Once they learnt Abaaoud was in France from Moroccan officials, French police focussed on Aitboulahcen, a woman with links to him whom they were already trailing. Reuters

Halifax International Security Forum to look at ISIS response

The first major international security conference since last week's attacks in Paris begins Friday in Halifax. Nearly 300 delegates from at least 60 countries are expected to discuss global security issues. The annual conference usually covers a broad range of international conflicts. But this year, the topics are more focused. "The agenda was written over the summer," said Peter Van Praagh, president of the Halifax International Security Forum. "But last week, tragically, the events in Paris have focused us on the challenges posed by what's called the Islamic State. That really will be a priority conversation for everybody in the room." The forum also marks the first major public event for Harjit Sajjan, Canada's new defence minister. He will join other international representatives to discuss possible responses to attacks by the Islamic State (ISIS), as well as responses to the Syrian refugee crisis. With so many important figures in one location, security has been ramped up. "The security services are world class, and they are taking every measure to ensure the safety not only of our participants who are coming from around the world, but of the community," said Van Praagh. While this annual conference offers an opportunity for leaders to meet and discuss defence strategies, there is rarely an action plan announced at the conclusion of the Halifax forum. "Getting leaders together to talk about the challenges and come up with solutions that make sense — that countries are actually capable of and feel comfortable with — is really an important part of the process," said Van Praagh. This weekend's conference in Halifax is designed to offer attendees a chance to meet in a relatively safe venue, away from major city centres. "It's really a cozy atmosphere and that really allows people to roll up their sleeves and have honest conversations," said Van Praagh. CBC News

Paris attacks a 'game changer' for security in the West, NATO official says

One of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's senior most officials says the November 13th Paris attacks are a "game changer" for security in the West as the ascendant Islamic State moves beyond its self-proclaimed caliphate in Iraq and Syria to wage al-Qaeda-style attacks on distant targets. General Petr Pavel, the chairman of NATO's military committee, said all western countries are at risk of not just Islamic State-inspired attacks but now also terrorism planned and executed directly by the Islamic State, also known as ISIL and ISIS. "Anyone who is not following the values of ISIL should be afraid." Recent examples include attacks organized by the Islamic State in Beirut, Turkey and Paris, where 129 people were killed and hundreds wounded by gunmen and bombers. "It is apparent that the Islamic State has reached the limits of geographical expansion and now they are even losing some so they [will] probably expand into our domain and one of them may be even hitting us on our own ground," Gen. Pavel said in an interview. He is in Halifax for the Halifax International Security Forum, an annual gathering of security and defence experts sponsored by the Canadian government. "We are most probably at the beginning of a new phase of ISIL activities that will affect us in our own countries and we will have to take appropriate measures," the general said. Globe and Mail

How Isis attack in Paris changed the landscape of militancy

The headline is brutally uncompromising. The letters, in red over an image of French firefighters treating a casualty, spell two words: "Just Horror". On the next page is a phrase attributed to Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, the Jordanian street thug turned militant who a decade ago in Iraq founded the group that was eventually to evolve into Islamic State. "The spark has been lit ... and its heat will continue to intensify ... until it burns the crusader armies in Dabiq," it reads. Dabiq is a village in northern Syria, currently under Isis control, where Islamic apocalyptic prophecies site the final battle between good and evil, belief and unbelief, the west and Islam. It is also the name of the Isis magazine, the 12th edition of which was published three days ago. Guardian

Paris Attacks: Who Was the Female Suicide Bomber?

The woman who blew herself up during an anti-terror police raid in suburban Paris on Wednesday has been identified as a 26-year-old daughter of a Moroccan immigrant. Hasna Aitboulahcen, 26, has described herself in the past as a cousin of Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the suspected ringleader of the Nov. 13 terror attacks in Paris, but her actual relationship to Abaaoud remains unclear. Friends described her to NBC News as a party girl who drank and had tried drugs. She detonated a suicide vest as police stormed an apartment in the suburb of Saint-Denis as part of the search for those responsible for planning and executing the attacks. In an audio recording of the raid an officer can be heard shouting, "Where is your boyfriend?" The woman replies, "He's not my boyfriend." NBC News; Hamilton Spectator

Police Scotland confirm spike in hate crime after Paris attacks

Police Scotland has confirmed a significant spike in hate crime since last Friday's terrorist attacks in Paris, as Muslim community leaders warn of a "fierce backlash". Iain Livingstone, deputy chief constable, said there had been 64 reports of racially or religiously motivated crimes across Scotland, including online and offline abuse. He was unable to say how many were directly linked to the Paris atrocities, but confirmed that suspects had been identified in 40 of these cases. There were 71 charges relating to Islamophobic hate crime in 2014-15, out of a total of 569 incidents of religiously aggravated offending in Scotland. Speaking at a gathering of faith leaders at Glasgow Central Mosque, Livingstone encouraged members of the Muslim community to continue reporting such incidents, insisting: "There is no place in Scottish life for such behaviour." He said: "We take a firm stance on dealing with all allegations of hate crime including those motivated by racial and religious intolerance. The increased police activity in responding to international terrorism is matched by the increased efforts of Police Scotland officers dealing with hate crime." The gathering, which included representatives from the Catholic church, and the Jewish and Sikh communities, was convened with the purpose of publicly expressing solidarity across faith groups. This follows a spate of crimes, including a gang attack on a takeaway outlet in Methil, Fife, on Sunday, which resulted in the owner needing treatment for a serious eye injury and has so far led to four arrests. On Monday morning, a mosque in Bishopbriggs, to the north of Glasgow, was the subject of a suspected arson attack. Death threats have been made to the Strathclyde University Muslim Students' Association. Jamil Moghul of Glasgow Central Mosque said: "Innocent Muslims are facing a fierce backlash, in part due to ignorance of Islam and in part due to Islamophobia. This has created a climate of fear and anxiety, such that school trips to this very mosque have been cancelled." Guardian; Guardian

Bombing Syria Won't Make Paris Safer

Bomb ISIS. Go ahead. They deserve it. It certainly satisfies the primal need for visible retaliation after the Paris attacks. It may even do some good in the struggle against terrorism in Europe. Some—but probably not very much. The enemy against which France and Europe are struggling is not centered in Syria. It receives examples and inspiration from Syria. It travels to Syria for practice and training. But it arises and is formed at home, inside Europe. It threatened Europe long before ISIS ever took shape. In 1995, for example, Khaled Kelkal, a young Algerian raised in France, played a central role in a campaign by members of Algeria's Armed Islamic Group to place bombs at commuter rail stations, at the Arc de Triomphe, and—in a familiar pattern—at a Jewish school. The bombing campaign killed eight people and wounded hundreds more. These "RER bombings"—so-called after the French commuter rail line they targeted—introduced France to indigenous terrorism in the name of Islam. But more, much more, was to come. Unlike the Hamburg, Germany cell that incubated the 9/11 hijackers, or the largely Moroccan authors of the 2004 Madrid train bombing that killed 191 and wounded almost 2,000, Islamist violence in Europe over the past decade has been predominantly the work of the European-born. And there's been considerable violence. This year alone, France has been struck seven times, beginning in January with the Charlie Hebdo killings and the attack on a kosher supermarket. These are only the attacks that succeeded: This week, British Prime Minister David Cameron revealed that U.K. intelligence services had prevented seven attacks within the past six months. The Atlantic; iPolitics; 1

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

L'Union Européenne annonce une série de nouvelles mesures pour renforcer la sécurité une semaine après les attentats de Paris. (RDI, 9h04 ET)

One week after the attacks in Paris, the death toll has risen to 130. (CBC News, 10h ET)

The Paris prosecutor's office says that a third body was found overnight in an apartment raided by police searching for suspects in last week's Paris attacks. (CBC News, 10h ET; RDI, 10h ET; CTV News, 10h ET)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Insurance industry aims to reduce huge losses from climate change extremes

This story is part of a package of special coverage of climate change issues by CBC News leading up to the United Nations climate change conference (COP21) being held in Paris from Nov. 30 to Dec. 11. The insurance industry has been hit by mounting claims from extreme weather, and for years now it has pointed out that the real costs associated with climate change are already with us. In the past decade, insurers have come to see that the only way to handle the changes ahead is to find ways to limit their costs, according to Craig Stewart, vice-president of federal affairs for the Insurance Bureau of Canada. "The property and casualty insurance industry has been on the front lines of this," Stewart told CBC News. "For the industry, climate change is a priority. We're working with every level of government to try to impress preparedness." The difference after 2013 - the year of catastrophic flooding along Alberta's rivers and a huge summer storm that flooded parts of Toronto - is that policy-makers actually started to listen. That's the year the federal government had to write a cheque to Alberta for $2.8 billion for flood damage, to partly compensate for damage of more than $6 billion. The property and casualty insurance industry paid out $1.7 billion in claims in Alberta alone that year - while claims in southern Ontario from severe weather totalled $1.1 billion - a total of $3.4 billion in claims from catastrophic weather events for the year. Previously the worst weather event was the 1998 ice storm, which resulted in $1.6 billion in claims. That contrasts with 1983, with total "catastrophic loss" claims of $82.8 million for the entire industry, 1993, with total claims of $328 million, and 2003, with claims of $519 million. Flooding from extreme weather Overwhelmingly, the costs of climate change come from flooding, as storms bring higher levels of rainfall and rivers overflow from sudden spring melts and heavy rain. Ice storms and fires also cause damage, but the main concern is floods. Public Safety Canada approached the Insurance Bureau of Canada (IBC) about addressing flood risk last year, and the result has been an effort to design a public-private insurance mechanism that would cover the 10 per cent of Canadian properties that are at risk of repeated flooding, Stewart said. CBC News

McKenzie Lake hillside eroding as city ponders plan to shore it up

Calgary city council will consider next month how to shore up a slumping hillside in the deep southeast part of Calgary. The edge keeps creeping closer to the backyards of people who live along Mt. Alberta View S.E. in the community of McKenzie Lake. The city has spent $4.4 million in recent years to stabilize the slope. It has recovered $3.8 million of that from the province's Disaster Recovery Program (DRP). CBC News

LRT up and running for Edmonton's Friday commute

The City of Edmonton says both LRT lines are operating normally this morning. Service was restored following a power outage on Wednesday night when a train pulled the overhead power wires off their supports at about 9:40 p.m. north of downtown, shutting service throughout the system just as nearly 17,000 Oilers fans were leaving the game. Continued service disruptions made for delays in the commute Thursday morning. Edmonton Transit officials are promising a full review of their public alert systems after passengers complained of chaos, disorder and confusion during the power outage. Edmonton Journal

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Muslim women feeling 'unsafe' : Manitoba Islamic Association

Manitoba's Muslim community feels threatened after recent acts of Islamophobia in Ontario. "Especially women now, they are feeling [threatened] after the attacks [in] Toronto, everyone is feeling sometimes unsafe," said Eptifam Esshaki, spokesperson for Manitoba Islamic Association. In Toronto, two women riding a subway on Wednesday were verbally assaulted and physically accosted, the Toronto Transit Commission reported. On a separate public transit system in the Greater Toronto Area, racist graffiti against Muslim girls was discovered in a train washroom. Last weekend, a mosque in Peterborough, Ont., was burned down, an act being treated as a hate crime. There are concerns around the world that recent attacks in Paris could spur anti Muslim violence. Recent instances of Islamophobia in Canada bring those threats closer to home, said Esshaki. "Especially when we hear the news, attacking Muslim women with hijab and pulling them, threatening them and beating them up. I think it's a big threat for us, yes," said Esshaki. She hopes that an open house this weekend will help prevent any assaults from arising in Winnipeg. "We are hoping to reach out to other communities and other faiths to understand [Islam]," said Esshaki. CBC News

Toronto says #IIRideWithYou to Muslims after racist attacks

Like many Toronto residents, Kelly Boaz said she "naively assumed" the backlash against Muslims, seen elsewhere in the wake of Friday's deadly attack in Paris, wouldn't occur in Toronto. But to date, at least four suspected anti-Muslim incidents, including an assault, have been reported: Two Muslim women were accosted and verbally harassed Wednesday night on a train at Sherbourne station.

Metrolinx discovered anti-Muslim graffiti Wednesday night on one of its trains. A Muslim mother was assaulted and robbed Monday afternoon by two men at a North York school. A Muslim U of T student says he was spat on and insulted on the weekend. "When I heard about the attack at the school in Toronto, my heart sank," said Boaz. Boaz is among the dozens of Toronto transit riders who are offering to accompany Muslim riders by using the hashtag #IIRideWithYou. CBC News

Young Muslim Canadians on edge after string of attacks

Students at one of the largest Islamic schools in the Greater Toronto Area say they are concerned for their safety because of string of reported hate crimes in the region following the Paris attacks. Youngsters attending the Islamic Foundation of Toronto in Scarborough — many of whom are second- and third-generation Canadians — say they are fearful of being the next victims of discrimination. "You don't know what's going to happen," Grade 12 student Ammaar Jan said. CBC News

Muslim women, children urged to walk in pairs after attack in Flemingdon Park

Children and young Muslim women are being told to walk in pairs by local community leaders in Flemingdon Park as Toronto police continue to investigate a brutal assault they believe was a hate crime. The director of the local mosque has encouraged children to use the buddy system after a woman was assaulted and called a terrorist when she went to pick up her two children from Grenoble Public School Monday. "Young kids, they are afraid and they cannot understand," Aleemuddin Syed said in an interview Wednesday. "They feel like if they're going out alone, they're not safe." CBC News

Muslim student allegedly spat on, insulted by stranger

A Muslim student at the University of Toronto claims he was spat on and insulted in what appears to have been a racially charged, attempted assault outside Robarts Library. Osama Omar, 21, says he was attacked while waiting for a streetcar near Spadina Avenue and College Street, after a weekend study session. "A man approached me, without saying anything at all, he just came up to me and spat directly in my face," he told CBC News. Toronto has seen a number of racist incidents in the wake of last week's deadly attacks in Paris, for which ISIS has claimed responsibility. CBC News

After Paris, there will be no stopping the surveillance state now

An old acquaintance who spent years in Canada's secret world, where he developed a you-don't-know-the-half-of-it smile, regularly sends me taunting emails and links. The general theme is that thanks to all the whinging in the mainstream media about civil liberties, and the cavilling by politicians who disagreed with Stephen Harper about the imminent danger posed by Islamic terrorism to Canadians everywhere, our security agencies are unnecessarily hobbled. After the mass murders in Paris this week, he passed on an article by the conservative writer Mark Steyn, who wrote that instead of meeting about climate change, "a problem that doesn't exist," Western leaders should be doing something about the millions of Muslims who now live in Europe, most of whom "at a certain level either wish or are indifferent to the death of the societies in which they live — modern, pluralist, Western societies." My friend the ex-spy — who, like a number of security professionals I've met over the years, holds an advanced degree — clearly believes the only sensible remedy is increased powers for state security organs. And that anyone who refuses to accept that premise, or who wants to debate root causes, is quite simply advocating self-destruction. John Brennan, the CIA director, used the Paris massacre to make essentially the same point this week, denouncing "a lot of hand-wringing over the government's role in the effort to try to uncover these terrorists." Brennan was referring to the backlash created by former CIA/NSA contractor Edward Snowden, who, after fleeing the U.S., provided reporters with proof that America's electronic eavesdroppers for years have been scooping up the "metadata" of just about every email and phone call in the country. This was being done without warrants and was determined to be illegal, and prompted remedial action by both the president and Congress. In the view of Brennan and his cohort in the secret world, that reaction was insane. To them, privacy concerns are nothing more than the clucking of utopian dilettantes when set against the requirements of security agencies, which are, after all, charged with protecting us in the real world. The New York Times replied to Brennan with an editorial titled "Mass Surveillance is Not the Answer," noting in the process that Brennan and other security chiefs have lied on several occasions to the American people, and have never proven that their saturation-level monitoring of the public has actually prevented any attack. But what Brennan didn't mention — and no doubt covets — are the tools European security agencies now have at their disposal. They would make any American or Canadian intelligence officer drool. CBC News (2015-11-19)

Halifax International Security Forum to look at ISIS response

The first major international security conference since last week's attacks in Paris begins Friday in Halifax. Nearly 300 delegates from at least 60 countries are expected to discuss global security issues. The annual conference usually covers a broad range of international conflicts. But this year, the topics are more focused. "The agenda was written over the summer," said Peter Van Praagh, president of the Halifax International Security Forum. "But last week, tragically, the events in Paris have focused us on the challenges posed by what's called the Islamic State. That really will be a priority conversation for everybody in the room." The forum also marks the first major public event for Harjit Sajjan, Canada's new defence minister. He will join other international representatives to discuss possible responses to attacks by the Islamic State (ISIS), as well as responses to the Syrian refugee crisis. With so many important figures in one location, security has been ramped up. "The security services are world class, and they are taking every measure to ensure the safety not only of our participants who are coming from around the world, but of the community," said Van Praagh. While this annual conference offers an opportunity for leaders to meet and discuss defence strategies, there is rarely an action plan announced at the conclusion of the Halifax forum. "Getting leaders together to talk about the challenges and come up with solutions that make sense — that countries are actually capable of and feel comfortable with — is really an important part of the process," said Van Praagh. This weekend's conference in Halifax is designed to offer attendees a chance to meet in a relatively safe venue, away from major city centres. "It's really a cozy atmosphere and that really allows people to roll up their sleeves and have honest conversations," said Van Praagh. CBC News

Reading between the lines of the cabinet mandate letters

Last week, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau sent each of the 30 members of his cabinet a letter, with messages of congratulations, encouragement and exhortation. The letters also contained the ministers' individual marching orders - the prime minister's expectations of where they will focus and what they will accomplish, at least in the opening years of their mandate. In this, Trudeau was following the practice of his predecessors dating back to his father's days in the PMO. Justin Trudeau has departed significantly (and no doubt irreversibly) from past practice by making these letters - once the closely-guarded preserve of a handful of politicians and senior officials - entirely public. In so doing he both underscored and raised the stakes in his commitment to more open and accountable government. The chances are fair that no newly minted Canadian prime minister has ever formally articulated a preference for closed and unaccountable government. It's not surprising then that commentators have spoken of the "cut and paste" quality of all but the specific ministerial commitments and of the "pious nostrums" that may be found in the shared generic text. Arguably, however, there is more to these letters than meets the eye. iPolitics

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

Halifax, Nova Scotia, will hold the annual International Security Forum. This year, the president of the forum said that the topics will likely be much more focused. The events in Paris have focused in on the challenges caused by what's called the Islamic State. Canada's new Defense Minister will open today's forum. He may offer more details about the refugees coming here to Canada. He may offer more details of exactly what Canada's role might be in that new expanded training mission. (CBC News, 10h30 ET)

Toronto residents are marching in solidarity after a Muslim woman was attacked on Monday by two men who pulled off her hijab and hurled racist comments at her. (CBC News, 12h45 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Montana Commercial Entry Port Cutting Back Hours

U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) has announced the reduction of operational hours from 24 hours per day to 16 hours per day at the Raymond, MT port of entry (POE), effective Dec. 27. The new hours will be from 8:00 a.m. to midnight, seven days per week. The port will close at midnight on Saturday, Dec. 26 and reopen at 8:00 a.m. on Sunday, Dec. 27. The Port of Raymond will maintain its designation as a commercial port of entry. The Port of Raymond is south of the Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) Port of Regway in Saskatchewan, five miles north of Plentywood, MT and 162 kilometers south of Regina, SK. CBP said it evaluated potential security implications, total annual operating costs, average annual crossing for commercial and passenger vehicles, and proximity to alternate ports of entry. Today's Trucking

BusinessView: Canadian retailers have opportunity to boost holiday sales as more Canadians prefer to shop local this Black Friday

Canada-U.S. border officials are set to see a marked drop in the volume of southbound traffic during the U.S. Thanksgiving weekend as Canadian consumers change their purchasing habits. UPS Canada's annual Black Friday survey conducted by Leger shows that fewer Canadians are taking their holiday shopping list cross-border for U.S. Black Friday deals. This U.S. Thanksgiving, the number of Canadians who are likely to buy goods from the U.S, either online or by cross border shopping, has dropped by 22 per cent since 2014 (37 per cent vs. 29 per cent in 2015). Shoppers are aware of the economy and among consumers unlikely to purchase from the U.S. during Black Friday, the unfavourable exchange rate (56 per cent) is listed as the top reason. On par with 2014, consumers unlikely to shop in the U.S., prefer to shop Canadian (39 per cent) and one quarter highlight that local retailers are offering Black Friday sales (26 per cent). "In the past, we've seen Canadian consumers flock across the border to take advantage of Black Friday deals, but this year 84 per cent are unlikely to cross-border shop," said Craig Calvert, director of customer solutions, UPS Canada. Northumberland View

Herb Gray Parkway completed, final stretch to open Saturday

After over four years of construction and traffic headaches, the final four-kilometre stretch of the $1.4-billion Herb Gray Parkway will open to traffic Saturday ending all road construction under the new Highway 401 extension. "We are pleased to have reached this major milestone with the completion of the Rt. Hon. Herb Gray Parkway," said Ontario Transportation Minister Steven Del Duca. "This project has created more than 12,000 jobs and helps improve the movement of goods and people in the region. (...)Once the final stretch opens this weekend, the parkway - or 401 extension - will dead end and force traffic to get off at the intersection of Ojibway Parkway and E.C. Row. Eventually, a bridge overpass will take traffic over top of Ojibway Parkway into the plaza of the new Gordie Howe International Bridge, which is scheduled to open in 2020. Windsor Star

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Computer outage shuts down key government websites, email

A significant equipment failure at the Aviation Parkway Data Centre on Montreal Road has brought down a number of federal government websites and left thousands of employees without email service, according to an insider familiar with the Centre. The precise nature of the equipment failure is not clear, but it's likely related to delays in the government's efforts to consolidate nearly 500 data centres into just seven. "They've spent years starving the older data centres," the source said, adding that the centres have become vulnerable to disruption as hardware becomes obsolete. Some of the software that's supposed to keep everything running smoothly is also obsolete. Phone and email queries at Public Works and Shared Services were not returned as of noon. The websites of both departments were down Friday morning. Attempts to fix the Aviation Centre data centre reportedly began Thursday evening and will likely continue for much of Friday, and possibly into the weekend. Ottawa Citizen

Starwood says some hotel systems hit by malware, no data compromised

Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide Inc said the point-of-sale systems at some hotels in North America had been infected with a malware designed to collect payment card data. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

A who's who of the Montreal underworld: The mafiosi, bikers and gangsters swept up in police raids

Some of the most well-known names in Montreal's underworld were arrested Tuesday in sweeping raids. Sûreté du Québec Chief Inspector Patrick Bélanger said the arrests targeted "very influential heads of organized crime who formed an alliance" between the Mafia, the Hells Angels and street gangs. Here is a description of some key people and places thrust into the spotlight by Projects Magot and Mastiff. Postmedia Network (National Post)

Murder plots and police projects - the allegations behind the raids

The alleged murder plot - The investigation uncovered a plot to murder Raynald Desjardins, 62, a longtime associate of Vito Rizzuto during the 1980s in particular. Desjardins is currently detained and awaiting his sentence after pleading guilty to taking part in a plot to murder Salvatore Montagna, who was a leading member of a group that tried to take control of the Mafia in Montreal until he was killed on Nov. 24, 2011. Maurice (Mom) Boucher, a former leader among the Hells Angels in Quebec who is serving a life sentence at a penitentiary in Ste-Anne-des-Plaines, is alleged to have issued the order to kill Desjardins. According to the indictment filed in connection with the murder plot, Boucher used his pregnant daughter, Alexandra Mongeau, 25, to relay messages Gregory Woolley, 43, a former underling in the Hells Angels who acted as Boucher's bodyguard during the 1990s. Woolley is alleged to have since risen among organized crime circles to the point where he was the key man in the alliance of organized crime groups uncovered by Project Magot and Mastiff. The alleged conspiracy to murder Desjardins began in July and ended on Nov. 9. According to the police, Boucher and his daughter used "coded language" when she visited him. "We worked with the prison authorities on that case," said Sûreté du Québec Lt-Det. Benoit Dubé. "Gregory Woolley was executing what Mom Boucher wanted to do." Montreal Gazette

Former cabinet minister swears legal oath about release of secret recording

A former Nova Scotia cabinet minister at the centre of a political skirmish has sworn a legal oath that he has released all of the recordings of a conversation he had with the premier's chief of staff. Andrew Younger made the claim in the provincial legislature today, where he was pressed to hand over the full recording between himself and Kirby McVicar. Younger insisted he did not have the remaining 20-minute portion of the secretly recorded conversation, of which 43 seconds were dropped off anonymously at the legislature. The recording and an enclosed letter have been handed over to the RCMP, which is investigating. Canadian Press (St. John's Telegram)

Politicians seek solution to low RCMP staffing levels

Community leaders met last week to brainstorm solutions to the recent spike in break-and-enters and thefts in Oliver. At the November 10 meeting, Mayor Ron Hovanes, Area C director Terry Schafer, MLA Linda Larson and Sgt. Blaine Gervais of the RCMP talked about ways to reduce the number of theft-related calls to the RCMP and the possibility of getting more officers in Oliver. "As local politicians we agreed that the RCMP are short staffed in relation to the recent [spike in crime], but understand they're doing the best they can under the circumstances," Schafer wrote in an email. Oliver Chronicle

Kamsack, Sask. RCMP warn of fake $100 bills

RCMP are warning the public about fake $100 bills that have surfaced in the Kamsack, Sask. area. Police say the counterfeit money has recently been passed or has been attempted to be used at area businesses. Although the bills closely resemble a true $100 bill from a distance, officers say there are several apparent anomalies upon closer inspection including poor paper quality and a difference in size from a real bill. There is tape over where the transparent strip is located and that the transparent window should feel smooth with the rest of the bill. Global News

Gryba to face child porn, voyeurism charges after double-jeopardy argument dismissed

Convicted sex offender Justin Gerard Gryba will face new child pornography charges after a Saskatoon judge ruled against a defence argument to dismiss the case under Canada's double-jeopardy laws. Saskatoon police first arrested Gryba in November 2011 after he used a file-sharing program to share his collection of illegal images with another user who turned out to be an undercover Toronto police investigator. Gryba was sentenced in January 2013 to two years less a day a jail after pleading guilty to possessing and distributing about 2,100 images of child pornography. During that sentencing, Crown prosecutor Michael Segu made a point to note that police found an online chat message in which Gryba said his collection contained more than 25,000 images and 800 videos of naked boys or sexually explicit scenes. If forensic investigators were able to crack the military-grade encryption, more charges could be coming, Segu said. After two and a half years, police got into the two external hard drives and laid charges of making and possessing child pornography, as well as two charges of voyeurism (on his hard drive were secretly-recorded videos of three young boys removing their clothes in a Saskatoon hotel pool change room). He entered the rarely-used pleas of "autrefois convict" and "autrefois acquit," or double jeopardy, meaning Canadian law won't allow the courts to try someone twice for the same crimes. Star-Phoenix

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Group battles human trafficking in Sudbury

A few eyes welled up with tears as former prostitute Billie Skevington shared her harrowing story of abuse Thursday with a group of Sudburians determined to combat sexual exploitation in the city. "I am a survivor of sexual abuse and human trafficking," Skevington related, via a written statement that was read aloud by Angels of Hope founder Cristina Scarpellini. Skevington, who is hearing impaired, stood beside Scarpellini as her words were conveyed to the group of about 16 people gathered at The Workplace in New Sudbury. (...)Scarpellini said she started the Angels of Hope advocacy group this summer because of the level of human trafficking in Sudbury and her sense that nothing was being done about it. "I found it was just getting brushed under the carpet," she said. "People think these kinds of things happen down south and in other countries, not here in Sudbury. Unfortunately that's not the case, and this is on the rise right now." About 10 people are now members of the citizen group, which aims to educate the public about human trafficking as well as support and empower those who are sexually exploited. Sudbury Star

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Cost of Syrian refugee plan pegged at $1.2B over 6 years

The cost of the Liberal government's plan to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees has been pegged at $1.2 billion over the next six years, The Canadian Press has learned. A government document obtained by The Canadian Press that lays out the proposed funding model says $876.7 million would be needed in 2015-2016 alone. Some of that will be covered this year by $16.6 million announced by the previous Conservative government during the election and $100 million coming out of an existing pool of funds to respond to international crises. The document, called "Responding to the Syrian Refugee Crisis: Rapid Resettlement of 25,000 Syrians Funding Table," says $1.1 billion in new money will be required between now and 2021. The document says six government departments will require funds to handle the program, including Immigration, which would need $528.4 million this year and Defence, which requires $98.7 million. What's not clear from the funding model is how much of the money is connected to the year-end target to bring in that many Syrians in total and how much to the Liberal promise that the government itself would settle that many over a longer time period. The Immigration department would not provide any detail. Canadian Press (CBC News, Maclean's), Radio Canada International

Canada's defence minister defends government's refugee plan

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan is defending the Liberal government's plan to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees by the new year. Speaking at the opening press conference of the Halifax International Security Forum, Sajjan says many of the refugees will bring skills to Canada that will ultimately benefit the country. He says the government will be mindful of the recent attacks in Paris and Beirut when screening applicants, and also acknowledged the hospitality and compassion of Canadians who have offered up their homes to refugees. A government document obtained by The Canadian Press pegs the cost of the resettlement plan at $1.2 billion over the next six years. The report says $876.7 million would be needed in 2015-2016 alone. Toronto Star, Radio-Canada, Canadian Press (The Guardian)

Most Canadians Reject Trudeau's Plan to Welcome Syrian Refugees

Canadian intelligence and security forces may be comfortable with the arrival of 25,000 Syrian refugees in the country, but a majority of Canadians, however, have rejected Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's idea of welcoming so many asylum seekers at once. According to an Agans Reid Institute poll, some 54 percent of Canadians oppose or strongly oppose the idea of bringing Syrian refugees to Canada. The heads of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) supported the government's plan to screen thousands of Syrian refugees escaping the war-torn region and bring them to the country by the end of the year. Provincial and municipal authorities, however, requested additional time to conduct the security screenings on the asylum seekers. PanAm Post

Le Québec et l'Ontario discutent de l'accueil de réfugiés syriens

L'accueil de milliers de réfugiés était au coeur de la rencontre, aujourd'hui à Ottawa, entre la première ministre de l'Ontario, Kathleen Wynne, et son homologue du Québec, Philippe Couillard. Cette « discussion informelle » s'inscrit en marge de la Conférence annuelle de l'organisme Canada 2020. Ce midi, Mme Wynne a prononcé une allocution à la mosquée principale d'Ottawa, en compagnie du député d'Ottawa-Centre et ministre de la Sécurité communautaire et des Services correctionnel, Yasir Naqvi. L'Ontario s'est engagé à en accueillir 10 000 réfugiés avant la fin de 2016. De son côté, le Québec prévoit recevoir 5500 réfugiés. Ces réfugiés pourraient être hébergés sur des bases militaires. Il n'y a toutefois que 12 000 logements sur ces dernières et la plupart sont déjà occupés par des militaires et leurs familles. Des mesures sont toutefois en cours. Ainsi, une directive de la Défense nationale, obtenue par Radio-Canada, a demandé que cinq bâtiments d'hébergement de la base de Valcartier soient libérés « le plus tôt possible ». Radio-Canada

Former Bécancour school offered as temporary lodgings for Syrian refugees

The owners of a former school in Bécancour near Trois-Rivières say the building could serve as temporary housing for around 100 Syrian refugees. The Mont-Bénilde building, which for years served as a private school and summer residence for Navy cadets, has furnished rooms, washrooms, a cafeteria, gym, classrooms and communal spaces. "We have bedrooms, all the necessary installations. It's a humanitarian gesture that would put part of the building to use," Jean-Guy Doucet, a representative of Mont-Bénilde's developers, told Radio-Canada. Mont-Bénilde's building and lands are in the process of being developed for business and residential uses. The owners have approached the federal and provincial immigration ministries with the offer and have advised the office of the Mayor of Bécancour, Jean-Guy Dubois. Dubois said the offer raises a number of questions that need to be answered. CBC News

Eric Hoskins says Ontario has will, capacity to resettle Syrian refugees

"We can get this job done," said Ontario's health minister about Canada's ambitious plan to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of this year. Eric Hoskins, speaking on Metro Morning Friday, said the province has the resources and capacity it needs to deal with the influx of refugees — even though it's still unclear exactly how many Syrians will be coming to this province; though Hoskins did say an estimate of 10,000 sounded plausible. "We've indicated that we're willing to take our fair share," Hoskins said, adding this is a "once in a generation" challenge for Canada. The federal government has yet to release detailed plans for the refugees, though some Canadian Forces bases in Ontario and Quebec are being modified to help house some of them. Hoskins, who co-chairs the ministers' ad hoc committee on refugees, also said most of the refugees will be arriving from United Nations camps in places like Lebanon. "We have a pretty good idea of the range of individuals that will be coming," he said. Hoskins has experience in the area. In 1999, he worked alongside Foreign Affairs Minister Lloyd Axworthy to resettle 5,000 refugees who were fleeing the violence in Kosovo. Before that, he worked as a doctor in refugee camps. CBC News

Syrian refugees should be in Windsor within a couple weeks

Windsor within the next couple weeks is likely to see the first of up to 1,000 Syrian refugees coming to this city. Immigration Minister John McCallum phoned mayors of cities across Canada on Friday morning, including Windsor Mayor Drew Dilkens, to brief them on the federal government's latest actions on its commitment to start moving up to 25,000 refugees into this county. "I was told that within a matter of days they will be making a more detailed announcement," Dilkens said. "The minister said this will be done fast, but they are going to make sure it's done right." Dilkens will be among a group of mayors and other key partners who are being summoned to attend a briefing in Ottawa within the next week, he said. "We don't have a firm number we can expect," Dilkens said. "Within a matter days we will have a more detailed plan." But Dilkens guessed the number of Syrian refugees directed to this city will be anywhere from 200 to 1,000. Windsor Star

Moved by moral imperative, Canadian synagogues sponsor Syrian refugees

Vancouver, British Columbia's Temple Shalom and Peterborough, Ontario's Beth Israel Synagogue couldn't be more different. One is the largest Jewish congregation in one of Canada's largest cities, while the other has a membership of only 35 families, employs no professional clergy, and attracts at most 100 worshippers for High Holiday services. Yet, these two disparate synagogues at opposite ends of the country are representative of the efforts being made by Jewish congregations across Canada to help Arabs affected by war far away in the Middle East and Muslims targeted by hate crimes close by. Unlike the United States, which has severely restricted the entrance of Syrian civil war refugees (just 1,854 have been absorbed since 2012), Canada has already resettled 23,000 Iraqi refugees and has announced a plan to accept 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of this year, after having absorbed several thousand already. Jewish congregations and community organizations are actively — alone or in concert with other Canadian groups — sponsoring Syrian refugee families. Times of Israel

Winnipeg woman asks Canada not 'repeat mistake' by denying refugees entry

While some question the Trudeau government's promise to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of 2015, one Winnipeg woman says Canada can't afford to repeat the mistake of denying entry to refugees again. Both of Belle Jarniewski's parents survived the Holocaust, but each endured tragedy because Canada refused to open its doors to Jews fleeing Nazis, she told CBC. She says her parents experienced "great difficulty" entering Canada, even when the war was over. "In Mackenzie King's government, the director of immigration was called Frederick Blair. When asked how many Jews Canada could accept, his infamous statement was, 'None is too many,'" she said. Jarniewski's father was taken to six concentration camps. He lost everything, she says, including his first wife and child. Her mother, whose parents died of starvation and disease in the Lodz ghetto, was a teenager when her young brother was taken away to be murdered with other children aged 10 and under. Rather than being able to settle in a new country after the horror of the Holocaust, they continued to struggle to enter Canada. Jarniewski does not want others to live under similar circumstances. CBC News

Letter: PM's promise on welcoming Syrian refugees commendable

A letter to the editor from the Richmond Multicultural Community Services states, "Dear Editor, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the Canadian government must be commended for opening Canada's doors to 25,000 Syrian refugees. This is a very desirable, noble and compassionate gesture to help those in need. Though the time line is bit tight yet, with all of the resources at the disposal of the government, it shouldn't be that much of a problem. Richmond is a very caring, inclusive and compassionate community. It is likely that we will be getting quite a few of the Syrian refugees. In this context, it may be appropriate to mention that Richmond Multicultural Community Services (RMCS) has been serving this community in the area of settlement and integration of newcomers and refugees for more than 30 years." Richmond News

Refugees will face a cultural cliff in Canada - and Canadians will be tested too

An opinion piece states, "At a guess, I spoke last week with a couple of hundred Syrian refugees who are among the four million registered with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. I asked everyone I talked to about what they knew about Canada. About half of them were aware that it was cold there. The same number knew that Christians lived there. Almost nobody could tell me where Canada was, except that it was far away. Mentioning the names of Justin Trudeau or Stephen Harper drew a total blank. So did any mention of hockey. Aside from a few of them who had relatives or friends who had emigrated to Canadian cities such as Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto, the refugees that Immigration Canada is considering for selection appear to be blissfully ignorant about where they are going. (...)Canada rightly decided it wanted no truck with those who were so obviously economic migrants, more than they were genuine refugees. Ottawa's priority is to take strong family groups that are still languishing in Lebanon, Jordan and Turkey because they could not afford the extortionate fees charged by human smugglers to get them to Europe. Canada's refugees are being drawn from a pool of the poorest of the poor. The prospective settlers whom I met in Lebanon and during previous visits to Jordan and Turkey overwhelmingly struck me as honest people who have lived through the twin hells of Bashar Al Assad's tyrannical regime and subjugation by ISIL and the other violent outfits which want to inherit his mantle. National Post

Les réfugiés syriens n'ont pas leur place au Canada... vraiment?

Un article d'opinion déclare, « Ce matin paraissait dans La Presse un sondage de la firme CROP affirmant que six Québécois sur dix disent non à l'accueil des réfugiés syriens tel que promis par notre Premier ministre. Un sondage semblable réalisé cette fois par la firme Léger avait été publié dans les médias de Québec un peu plus tôt cette semaine, montrant que la majorité des Québécois ne sont pas d'accord avec la décision du gouvernement libéral de faire venir 25.000 réfugiés syriens au Canada. À tous ceux qui refusent catégoriquement l'arrivée des réfugiés, j'aimerais expliquer quelque chose. Oui, il y a un risque. Oui, il va falloir qu'on s'adapte. Oui, cela va demander des efforts de notre bord. Oui, les réfugiés syriens ne sont pas parfait eux non plus. Oui, ils sont différents de nous, culturellement, religieusement, linguistiquement. Oui, certains d'entre nous vont trouver cela dérangement et vont être forcés d'aller hors de leur zone de confort aseptisée typiquement nord-américaine. Mais j'aimerais tout d'abord rappeler à tous quelques épisodes de notre histoire. Vous savez, ces parties de l'histoire dont on ne nous parle presque pas à l'école parce que ce n'est pas glorieux pour nous ou ne nous victimise pas face à un grand méchant oppresseur. » 45^e Nord

Refugee crisis gives voice to the Ugly America

Canadians who were discomfited by the unattractive tone of the Conservative election campaign can't help but be flatly appalled at the naked ugliness that has infected the U.S. debate on refugees and immigration. Using the term "debate" is a polite way of describing what's been happening across the United States. More accurate words might be "paranoia", "xenophobia," or "fear-mongering", with "ignorance" and "bigotry" thrown in. Though most pronounced within the extreme right wing of the Republican party, it is not confined to either party: a bill to halt the resettlement of Syrian and Iraqi refugees passed the House of Representatives on Thursday with the help of 47 Democratic votes. President Barack Obama has threatened to veto it, but the extent of Democrat support indicates the wave of fear flooding across the U.S. is not entirely partisan in nature. Republicans definitely hold the lead in volume, though. Donald Trump, the businessman/politician, declared he would "absolutely" require Muslims to register with a special database if he were president. Asked how that differed from the Nazi registration of Jews, he responded "You tell me." Rival candidate Ben Carson compared the need to control immigration to a neighbourhood dealing with a rabid dog. National Post

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

CTV News reports details from the 72-page plan named "Operation Syrian Refugees", explaining how Canada will bring in the refugees in order to meet their timeline of 25,000 by the end of the year. The majority will be coming from refugee camps in three separate countries. Lebanon, Jordan, and Turkey. The United Nations will be at the camps and will be responsible for identifying the refugees. CSIS will be on the ground, using several tools, including biometric data, to weed out potential threats. CBSA will also be present to determine who actually gets on the plane. The Canadian Press reports the operation will cost $1.2 billion over the next six years. (CTV News, 9h05 ET)

CBC News reports military bases will provide temporary housing with the first refugees set to arrive in two weeks. (CBC News, 9h30 ET)

Tout indique que la base de Valcartier va jouer un rôle majeur dans l'accueil de réfugiés Syriens. Un million et demi de dollars seront investis pour rénover et isoler une dizaine de maisons du camp des cadets. (Radio-Canada Première Chaîne, 10h03 ET)

CBC News interviewed Dr. Ashna Bowry. She provides primary care to refugees and helps in a Syrian refugee clinic in Toronto. She discusses the needs and concerns of health workers regarding the arrival of 25 000 Syrian refugees. Rough Transcript

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Canadian among hostages freed in Mali hotel attack

One Canadian was among the hostages freed after Islamic extremists armed with guns and throwing grenades stormed the Radisson Blu hotel in Mali's capital Friday morning, Malian state TV reported. At least three people were, authorities said. The Brussels-based Rezidor Hotel group that operates the hotel said early on that the assailants had "locked in" 140 guests and 30 employees. Malian troops reacted quickly. As people ran for their lives near the hotel along a dirt road, the soldiers in full combat gear pointed the way to safety. Within hours, local TV images showed heavily armed troops in what appeared to be a lobby area. Malian state TV reported that 80 people in the hotel when the assault began have been freed. At least one Canadian man was reportedly among them. Malian special forces were freeing hostages "floor by floor," Malian army commander Modibo Nama Traore told The Associated Press. Still, Rezidor Hotel group put out a new statement saying 125 guests and 13 employees were still in the hotel. Traore said at least one guest reported that the attackers instructed him to recite verses from the Qur'an before he was allowed to leave the hotel. It was not immediately clear which Muslim extremist groups might be behind the attack, which unfolded one week after the attacks on Paris that killed 129 people. A handful of jihadi groups seized the northern half of Mali -- a former French colony -- in 2012 and were ousted from cities and towns by a French military intervention. Associated Press (Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun, Whig-Standard); 1 (National Post); Toronto Sun

U.S ambassador to start calling ISIS 'Daesh' but DFATD holding firm - for now

Each time the group most commonly known as ISIS perpetrates a bloodbath, a discussion emerges among politicians and media about whether it's time to stop calling the militants by their preferred name. To be fair, there's no shortage of names to choose from: the group that started out as Islamic State in Iraq has been alternatively known in recent years as Islamic State in Iraq and al-Sham, Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS) and Islamic State in the Levant (ISIL). Recently, it dropped the geographic references and consolidated itself more simply - and controversially - as the more authoritative Islamic State (IS). But there's another name for the group, one it hates so much that it threatens to cut out the tongues of those who use it: Daesh. It's the acronym for the Arabic name of the group, al-dowla al-islamiyya fii-il-i'raaq wa-ash-shaam, but it never gained much traction and the group's branding tends to use the English translations. It's also very similar to the Arabic words daes and dahes, which refer to someone who crushes something underfoot and someone who sows discord, respectively. While Western politicians and media have tended towards using variations of ISIS/ISIL, there's been a gradual increase in the number of leaders referring to the group as Daesh. In the wake of deadly attacks by the group in Paris that left more than 120 dead, U.S. Ambassador to Canada Bruce Heyman is the latest to announce he will now be among those using the Arabic name. "I'm using the term 'Daesh' now, instead of ISIL," Bruce Heyman told the Canadian Press. "I think it's unfair to refer to Islam, and it's totally inappropriate to think of it as a state - so anything calling it the 'Islamic State' is wrong." Although former defence minister Jason Kenney frequently used the term to describe the group, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has not and the Department of Foreign Affairs says it currently has no plans to start using the name itself. "This terrorist group is referred to in various ways, including ISIS, ISIL and Daesh," said Foreign Affairs spokesperson

Today's News / Actualités
November 26, 2015 / le 26 novembre 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Heritage Minister nabs Google official as chief of staff

Ministers filling staff positions ahead of return of House of Commons business on Dec. 3. Ms. Joly, whose priorities include promoting the Canada 150 celebrations and increasing funding for CBC/Radio-Canada and other cultural organizations, has hired Leslie Church as her chief of staff, said people familiar with the move. Ms. Church, currently the head of communications and public affairs for Google's Canadian division, will start the new job in a couple of weeks. Ms. Church has been with Google since 2012 and previously served as director of communications to Liberal leader Michael Ignatieff while he was leader of the opposition. She also worked on Mr. Ignatieff's leadership campaign. It's important for the people at the top of the Heritage Department to recognize there's no longer a separation between digital culture and other culture, said Michael Hennessy, an independent media and communications consultant in Ottawa and former head of the Canadian Media Production Association. "Increasingly, all media that we're really consuming is digital or on digital platforms, so understanding the appropriate intersection of those two things is critical," he said. In other new hires, people familiar with staff moves said Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan has hired Brian Bohunicky as his most senior aide.

Also a former senior adviser to Mr. Ignatieff, Mr. Bohunicky previously worked as a director-general in the federal departments of Transport and Agriculture. Most recently, he had executive positions with companies Maple Pure Products Inc. and consulting firm Baker Group International, according to his LinkedIn page. Renée Filiatrault, a public relations professor at Algonquin College, has also moved into Mr. Sajjan's office as director of communications. Ms. Filiatrault is a former ministerial aide and worked on public diplomacy in Afghanistan with the government's Task Force Kandahar. Another confirmed hire is Rick Theis, who is serving as chief of staff to Indigenous Affairs Minister Carolyn Bennett. Mr. Theis worked on issues management for Mr. Trudeau's national campaign. Ms. Joly, a former consultant, writer, and journalist with CBC, has been one of several cabinet ministers stretched for aides. As of Wednesday, some cabinet offices remained without chiefs of staff, including that of Innovation Minister Navdeep Bains, whose portfolio covers the massive Industry Department. Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale was also without a permanent chief. GlobeandMail

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

On High Alert Since Paris Attacks, French Gear Up for Climate Talks

Just two weeks after the terrorist attacks in Paris, France is gearing up for an exceptional security challenge — the global mega-conference on climate change — that will test its ability to ensure the safety of nearly 50,000 visitors and 147 heads of state who will descend on the city beginning on Sunday. The coincidence of the start of the conference in the same month as the attacks has brought together in one place two issues of global importance — climate change and terrorist networks — that has made Paris a focus of intense international scrutiny at a time of deep trauma for the city. With just days to go before the start of the conference on Monday, and bomb alerts occurring regularly in the Métro, Parisians remain determined to carry on with daily life, if also jittery and downcast as newspapers publish photographs of the 130 mostly young victims of the Nov. 13 attacks. NewYorkTimes

Pope Francis delivers stern warning ahead of Paris climate conference

Pope Francis celebrated a historic Mass in Kenya on Thursday before delivering a stern environmental warning to the world, just days ahead of a potentially pivotal climate change conference in Paris. "It would be sad, and I dare say even catastrophic, were particular interests to prevail over the common good and lead to manipulating information in order to protect their own plans and projects," the Pope said, urging nations to reach agreement over curbing fossil fuel emissions. He said politicians must work together with the corporate and scientific worlds as well as civil society leaders in finding solutions to stop environmental degradation. No country, said the Pope, "can act independently of a common responsibility. If we truly desire positive change, we have to humbly accept our interdependence." Q13Fox.com

Paris attacks: Politicians failed the people of Brussels, says Vincent Kompany

The failure to deliver the "beauty of democracy" was one of the chief reasons behind the Paris attacks, says Belgian soccer star Vincent Kompany. The suicide bombings and shootings in the French capital killed 130 people and left hundreds wounded. It shocked the watching world and brought to the fore Europe's problem in dealing with terrorism. Attention quickly switched to the Belgian capital of Brussels, which remains at the center of investigations that an ISIS terrorist cell working in the area carried out the attacks. Kompany said Belgian politicians had failed to recognize the potential problems because of their lack of interaction with the local communities. "There's a sense of me that really believes that it was predictable, really predictable," Belgium's national captain, who grew up in a troubled Brussels neighborhood, told CNN's Amanda Davies.

"I think it was inevitable, because I only used to see politicians in our neighborhoods once every six years when they needed to come for votes," he said. "Then and now something would pop up out of the ground and somebody cut a red ribbon to say that we've done this for the community." CNN

Security steps in Paris, Brussels, may be spreading anxiety

At a Paris train station, the zap of a pigeon getting electrocuted on the tracks is enough to send some jittery people scurrying for cover. And in the aftermath of the devastating Nov. 13 attacks on Paris, the center of Brussels has often been deserted as armed soldiers patrol tourist sites amid repeated government warnings that a terrorist attack is "serious and imminent." Some experts say it will take months for Europeans to psychologically adapt to life after the Paris attacks and warn that some government measures intended to reassure people may backfire, creating instead the impression of cities under siege. "We go about our daily lives and every so often they're punctuated by something outrageous like a terrorist attack on an average Friday night," said Dr. David Purves of the British Psychological Society. "After that shock, something that is highly statistically unusual may suddenly feel much more likely to happen." YahooNews

Terrorism, more bark than bite

In an opinion piece, "By sheer coincidence, a book I wrote called "Don't Panic: Islamic State, Terrorism and Today's Middle East" was published just before the terrorist attacks in Paris. So naturally everybody interviewing me about the book asked me if it is time to panic now. They couldn't resist it. And of course I replied no, it is not time to panic. If a train derailed in the Paris Metro, killing 130 people and injuring over 300, the story would dominate the news in France for around 24 hours, 48 hours tops. In other countries it would definitely be only a one-day story: just one more transport accident, in a world where trains collide, planes crash and ships sink from time to time. But if it's not an accident - if human beings deliberately caused those deaths - then the media feeding frenzy starts. The story is 20 times as big, and it can dominate the news schedules for a week. Most people in Europe, North America and the Middle East have watched at least several hours of coverage of the Paris events and their aftermath - as long as a feature film - and even in more distant parts of the world it has been the event of the week." Postmedia Network (Red Deer Advocate, A4)

German police arrest suspected jihadists

Police in Berlin arrested two suspected extremists on Thursday during a series of raids targeting possible Islamists in the German capital. The police said they were also examining a "suspicious object" discovered during the operation in the Britz neighborhood of Berlin, prompting the evacuation of several nearby buildings as "precautionary" measure. The two suspects in custody were men aged 28 and 46, according to German news agency DPA. An Islamic cultural center in the district of Charlottenburg was also searched with police sniffer dogs, but the authorities later reported that no source for concern had been found. The "suspicious object," which the police did not elaborate on, was found in the mens' vehicle. Deutsche Welle; Associated Press (ABC News); Reuters

Bruxelles abaisse d'un cran son niveau de menace terroriste

Le niveau 4, le plus élevé, était de mise depuis samedi. Jeudi 26 novembre, Bruxelles est repassée au niveau 3 de menace terroriste, sur décision de l'Organe belge de coordination pour l'analyse de la menace (Ocam). Le niveau 3 correspond à une menace "possible et vraisemblable", alors que le niveau 4 représentait une menace "sérieuse et imminente". La capitale belge était placée en niveau 4 depuis samedi. Dimanche soir, la police avait mené des opérations antiterroristes d'envergure. Le métro et les écoles étaient restés fermés jusqu'à mardi. Ils avaient rouvert mercredi sous forte surveillance policière. RTL ; Associated Press (Metro News); Wall Street Journal

Suspicious powder found at Brussels Grand Mosque

Firefighters and decontamination teams have attended the oldest mosque in Brussels, located close to the European Union headquarters, after a suspicious powder was found there that was feared to be anthrax. About a dozen emergency and police vehicles were seen on Thursday outside the Grand Mosque of Brussels, which houses the Islamic and Cultural Centre of Belgium, the Reuters news agency reported. A spokeswoman for the fire service said it had taken a call from the mosque from a person saying they believed that they had found anthrax powder, prompting the deployment of specialist crews. Al Jazeera

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Hydro-Québec charged with violating environmental regulations in 2014 oil spill

Hydro-Québec has been charged with violating provincial environment regulations in connection with an oil spill on the Magdalen Islands in September last year. More than 100,000 litres of diesel from the power utility's pipeline poured into the water near the Cap-aux-Meules harbour. Hydro has been charged for allowing the spill to occur and for failing to notify the Environment Ministry about it immediately. The public utility is facing a minimum fine of $42,000. CBC News

Drone aids Renfrew paramedics in life-threatening situations

A drone is being used to help first responders in eastern Ontario deal with situations in which someone's life might be at risk, including a recent triple homicide in the town of Wilno, Ont. Michael Nolan, chief of the Renfrew County Paramedic Service, said he recently hired a consultant who operated an unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) for the Canadian Forces in Afghanistan. That man, James Power, now operates the UAV, commonly called a drone, in Renfrew County to improve the safety of the community and first responders, Nolan said. "James has the ability to fly a drone into a motor-vehicle collision and identify the chemicals or contaminants in a transport truck that's flipped over on the highway," Nolan told Robyn Bresnahan, host of CBC Radio's Ottawa Morning. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

It's time to restore sanity to Canadian policies

An opinion piece states, "The new Liberal government under Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is scheduled to convene Parliament on Dec. 3. For Canadians mulling over the attacks by ISIL terrorists in Paris, it's time to get down to business of governing. (...) None of these issues, however, are in greater need of urgent debate than those pertaining to the application of clauses in the anti-terrorism bill, C-51, and the Liberals' commitment to remove our CF-18s from Iraq. Minimizing the potential for terrorist threats in Canada is Ottawa's responsibility, and the Conservatives exploited this issue to an unprecedented extreme during the election campaign. Now, there's a vitriolic segment of our population that not only rejects the very idea of Canada accommodating refugees from war-torn regions of the Middle East, but sees all such individuals as potential terrorists, thus suitable targets upon whom to express their sentiments through violence. Within hours of the Paris attacks, this reactionary sentiment was expressed in setting fire to a mosque in Peterborough, Ont. Two grim points of irony emerged from this act of extremist stupidity. First, under Bill C-51, this incident is an act of terrorism. It will be interesting to see whether local authorities will C-51 to charge any perpetrators who are caught. The second point is more subtle: The Peterborough riding, once represented by disgraced Conservative Dean Del Maestro, is now held by Liberal MP Maryam Monsef, a Muslim and former refugee from Afghanistan. This lends credence to the proposition that the fire was a less-than-veiled reaction to the government's intentions to bring in so many Syrian refugees." Postmedia Network \(StarPhonenix\)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Airlines shouldn't have to pay to return passenger rejected at border, Air Canada says

Major Canadian airlines say they're unfairly shouldering the costs of removing from Canada people who arrive with a passport or other valid document only to be turned away by federal officials. There are "numerous scenarios" in which air carriers must pay the tab for returning such inadmissible arrivals to their home country, Air Canada says in a submission to a federal review panel studying transportation policy. These cases may involve people who arrive with proper documentation but are barred by Canadian authorities because they have a criminal record — something the airline would have no way of knowing — or their refugee claim is denied. "In extreme cases, should the passenger become ill and be hospitalized before they leave Canada, carriers are even expected to pick up the medical bills," Air Canada says in its submission to the review of the Canada Transportation Act. Canadian Press \(CBC News\)

Manitoba shoppers warned about longer wait times at border

If you're heading south of the border for a turkey dinner or a Black Friday deal, be prepared for heavier traffic. The U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CPB) is reminding travellers driving to North Dakota or Minnesota to anticipate longer waits at the border, during American Thanksgiving and Black Friday. Manitobans travelling around the American holiday can expect the usual delays due to unpredictable weather and heavier traffic on the highways. Global News

Con man Carr to face restrictions upon release

Lloyd Carr may be getting out of prison, but the convicted con man must obey a handful of court-ordered restrictions. Carr, 50, once a bogus mental-health counsellor in Flin Flon, will receive supervised release in December, a privilege afforded to most offenders who have served two-thirds of their sentence. As part of his release, Carr, who has said he had a gambling problem, must not gamble or visit a gambling establishment. He must also follow psychological counselling, receive approval from his parole supervisor before accepting a job or paid training, and provide full financial disclosure. The Parole Board of Canada, which set the restrictions, told Carr at an Oct. 10 hearing that he is considered a low risk to reoffend and has high reintegration potential. The Reminder

Thunder Bay Gladue report workshop aims to educate aboriginal youth

The Thunder Bay Indian Friendship Centre wants to make sure aboriginal youth know their rights, should they end up before the courts. It's hosting a workshop Thursday to teach students about Gladue services. Gladue reports inform the courts about an aboriginal person's background, including family history and any historical trauma. The Gladue services worker at the Friendship Centre told CBC News it's important for youth to know about the reports, especially in light of higher incarceration rates for indigenous people, and concerns about police street checks. CBC News

Will ISIS Enter US Through Canada? Amid Islamic State Fears, Border Worries Linger Ahead Of Resettling Syrian Refugees

The Canadian border with the United States has come under renewed scrutiny following Tuesday's announcement that Canada would slow down its ambitious plan to welcome 25,000 Syrian refugees. The plan, aimed at resettling the refugees by the end of the year, has been extended to February. Critics have argued that the border connecting the U.S. with Canada is a hotbed for illegal immigration and is much more of a threat to allow potential terrorists, such as the so-called Islamic State militant group, into the U.S. than the nation's southern borders with Mexico. "If somebody is set on doing it, there are plenty of opportunities to cross this border," U.S. Border Patrol agent Andrew Herdina told Reuters while standing in Havre, Montana, near that state's 500-mile border with Canada. The U.S. has said it will resettle up to 10,000 Syrian refugees by next year. InternationalBuisnessTimes (2015-11-25)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

David Fraser opposes warrantless access to internet users' information

A Halifax privacy lawyer has come out against recent comments made by Canada's top Mountie advocating direct access to internet users' subscriber information. "The Supreme Court of Canada says you and I have a right to anonymity online. We can choose to identify ourselves, we can choose not to identify ourselves," David Fraser said Thursday. "The Supreme Court of Canada said you have a reasonable expectation of privacy associated with your internet activity. And that's that." RCMP commissioner Bob Paulson said Wednesday a recent ruling by the court curtailing the flow of basic data about customers - such as name and address - has "put a chill on our ability to initiate investigations," into child predators and other online criminals. He told a security conference in Ottawa that police should have warrantless access to subscriber information, comparing it to using licence-plate data to find a vehicle owner's name. Fraser called the comments offensive. "What I find really frustrating about this is that is either ignorant or disingenuous. You can't be the chief of Canada's federal police service and not understand what the Supreme Court of Canada has said about the most important law that we have in Canada which is the Charter [of Rights and Freedoms]. "He said the Canadian Chiefs of Police have submitted a proposal containing the initiative to the Department of Justice and the Department of Public Safety, "which I've asked for and which they've refused to provide me." CBC News

Man acquitted of breaking terrorism-related peace bond conditions

A Montreal man who was accused of violating the terms of a terrorism-related peace bond was acquitted of the charge on Thursday. Merouane Ghalmi, a 23-year-old from Pierrefonds, had signed a peace bond in March after the RCMP expressed fear he would commit a terrorism offence. He was then arrested in May on suspicion that he violated one of the conditions he had agreed to abide by: to not access or consult terrorist material or material that promotes extremist or radical ideas. At the Montreal courthouse on Thursday, prosecutor Lyne Décarie said that new information provided by the defence led to a re-evaluation of the file, and new elements discovered resulted in the withdrawal of the charge. None of the evidence collected by the RCMP that called for the peace bond was ever made public. Ghalmi faced the possibility of a maximum two-year prison term if he had been found guilty. The dropped charge does not change the peace bond Ghalmi signed. Ghalmi must continue to respect the conditions that came with it. The 23-year-old will need to be on good behaviour for the duration of the bond, wear a tracking device and abstain from owning any firearms. He must provide police access to his computer and smartphones, including passwords, and not use social media to communicate with anyone in Syria, "or any other people who are linked to a terrorist group, as defined in the Criminal Code." Gazette; La Presse

Medical pot users given OK to use drug anywhere

Ontario is giving the green light to smoking or vaping medical marijuana anywhere, anytime - from booze-free restaurants to stores, movie theatres, at work or in cars with children. New regulations exempt medicinal pot users from a ban on using e-cigarettes in non-smoking areas and medical marijuana is not covered by the Smoke-Free Ontario Act, which places strict limits on puffing tobacco in public places. The controversial move, confirmed Wednesday by associate health minister Dipika Damerla, follows a push by patient groups to improve access to pain control and symptom management. But it also allows proprietors and bosses, for example, to refuse permission in a "balancing of rights." About 24,000 people in Canada use medical marijuana. "As an employer or a restaurant owner you can say, 'There's no vaping, no smoking of medical marijuana here,' " Damerla told reporters. If a person given a prescription for medical marijuana by a doctor were to continue smoking "they are breaking the law," she added. Toronto Star, A1

RCMP says 'no imminent threat' from men seen near Rogers Centre

The RCMP says there's no imminent threat to national security but they would like to know more about two men who were reportedly acting suspiciously near the Rogers Centre on Aug. 31. Supt. Lise Crouch declined to tell a news conference on Thursday in Milton exactly what was considered suspicious about their behaviour on the John St. bridge. Both of the men are described as between 20 and 30 years old, with medium builds and brown skin. "It has nothing to do with brown skin," Crouch said. She called them "persons of interest" and not suspects. "I don't think the public should be concerned at this time," Crouch said. "There is no imminent threat." The men's behaviour was reported by just one passerby, Crouch said. Nothing has been found to link the men to a visit by then-prime minister Stephen Harper, Crouch said. At the time the incident was reported, Harper was at Rogers Centre as the Toronto Blue Jays prepared to play the Cleveland Indians. Suspicions about the men's behaviour were reported to what Crouch called "private-sector partners," who told local police, who passed on a "suspicious incident report" to the RCMP in Ottawa. Toronto Star; CTV News; iNews880; Wall Street Journal ; City News; Toronto Sun; Global News; CBC News

Several horses perish after falling into icy slough

There's sadness for some horse owners in the Prince Albert, Sask., area after several of their animals went into an icy slough on Wednesday and perished. However, thanks to the efforts of a number of people, including members of the Prince Albert Fire Department, some horses survived. The department was called around 1:15 p.m. CST to a farm east of the city. Horses had fallen through the ice and were stuck in the slough. The firefighters used chain saws to cut away the ice to get the horses closer to the shore. "Ropes, manpower and a tow truck were used to get them on land," the fire department said on its

Facebook page. "Sadly some of the horses perished before they could be rescued." CBC News; Postmedia News (StarPhoenix)

Derek Saretzky's psych assessment says fit to stand trial: RCMP

RCMP say Derek Saretzky — the man accused of killing southern Alberta toddler Hailey Dunbar-Blanchette and her father — has been deemed psychologically fit to stand trial, although a judge has yet to rule on the matter. Saretzky is charged with first-degree murder in the September deaths of Hailey Dunbar-Blanchette and her father, Terry Blanchette. RCMP say the Alberta Crown informed police of the ruling on Wednesday. Saretzky was initially sent for a 30-day review of his mental health, but last month a judge was told doctors needed more time for their analysis. He was arrested in the Crownsnest Pass area after Blanchette's body was found in his Blairmore home. Saretzky made a brief court appearance via CCTV in Lethbridge court Thursday morning. But the matter was adjourned to February to give defence counsel time to review the fitness assessment. Canadian Press; AM980; Presse Canadienne (L'Actualité)

Two arrested after N.B. RCMP seize 1.5 million contraband cigarettes

A 63-year-old woman and a 35-year-old man have been arrested after the RCMP seized more than 1.5 million contraband cigarettes in northeastern New Brunswick. Police executed a search warrant at a home in Val-Doucet on Wednesday. Officers seized the contraband cigarettes, as well as nearly eight pounds of marijuana and a large quantity of alcohol and cash from the home during their search. The man and woman were both released from custody on a promise to appear in court at a later date. CTV News

Suspects rammed police cruiser, led chase across Metro Vancouver: RCMP

Mounties have arrested two suspects who allegedly rammed a police cruiser with a stolen car then led officers on a long chase across Metro Vancouver early Thursday morning. Sgt. Duane Honeyman said the incident started while Mounties were responding to a reported break-and-enter in Surrey around 1 a.m. "As a police dog unit was heading to the scene, a Honda Civic vehicle came toward them head-on and swerved into their path," Honeyman said. CTV News

Prince George defers decision to hire more police officers

City council in Prince George, B.C., has deferred a decision about hiring extra police officers, despite claims from the department that they're overworked. RCMP Supt. Warren Brown made the request for three additional RCMP officers for 2016 during budget meetings on Wednesday. Brown says the officers are needed, even though Prince George no longer holds the status of the most dangerous city in Canada. "We are a very violent community, and I'm not proud of that," said Brown. "High crime has been the status quo here. I don't accept that. However, some seem to." CBC News

Torture Victims Win Legal Battle in Fight Against Canadian Government

The fight to find out just why three men were detained and tortured in a Syrian prison cleared one roadblock on Wednesday, after a court rejected an appeal from the Canadian government. The men, Abdullah Almalki, Ahmad El Maati and Muayyed Nureddin, have been deadlocked in a legal battle with Ottawa for years, as they seek compensation for the time they spent in Syrian jail cells — where they were tortured and interrogated, with some involvement of Canadian agents — and answers for why they ended up there. Ottawa, meanwhile, is struggling to defend the identity of its intelligence agents and confidential informants who may have provided the information that led Syrian authorities to arrest the men, despite shaky evidence that they were ever involved in terrorism. Their lawsuit, however, had gone virtually nowhere over the past decade. That is, until they finally got a break — on Monday, a Canadian judge ruled that the federal government would not have the power to shield the confidential sources it used to gather evidence on the three men. For the three men, it could mean exposing the direct role play by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) in their interrogation and torture, and proving that their detention was the result of little more than post-9/11 hysteria. VICE News

La GRC souhaite accéder à l'information des internautes sans mandat

Le corps policier fédéral déplore le fait que les télécoms exigent l'approbation d'un tribunal pour tout type de demande de renseignements d'identification de base. Selon le commissaire de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada, Bob Paulson, la seule façon de traquer efficacement les prédateurs sexuels et autres criminels en ligne est d'avoir un accès plus rapide aux renseignements confidentiels des clients de fournisseurs d'accès Internet. Il s'est prononcé à ce sujet lors d'une conférence organisée par l'Association des industries canadiennes de défense et de sécurité cette semaine à Ottawa. Branchez Vous

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés:

CBC News presents a live press conference from the RCMP, in Milton, Ontario, regarding a "suspicious incident" that took place in Toronto in August. They say there is no imminent threat in Toronto. Rough Transcript

Broadcast media report the RCMP are looking for two men who may have been involved in a "suspicious incident" at the Rogers Centre last August. Investigators say there is no threat to the public. (CTV News, 10h30 ET; CBC News, 11h17 ET; CHCH News Hamilton, 10h30 ET; CP24, 11h ET; CHAS-FM Sault Ste. Marie, 12h03; CIXX-FM London, 12h02; CBC Radio Two Toronto, 12h)

The RCMP wants access to information on Internet users without a warrant. Commissioner Bob Paulson said police should be able to obtain names and home addresses without a warrant in order to keep pace with today's criminals. He claims a Supreme Court ruling last year that limits access to customer's data is hampering investigations. (CP24, 10h40 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Live at 2 p.m. ET: Ask us about our investigation into Canada's untold missing and murdered indigenous women

Hello, I'm Kathryn Blaze Baum, The Globe's beat reporter dedicated to covering the issue of Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women. (...) Our analysis revealed aboriginal women are roughly seven times more likely to die at the hands of a serial killer than non-aboriginal women. The investigation also found that at least 18 indigenous women were slain by convicted serial killers since 1980. To illuminate the human element of all this, we recently launched The Taken, a multimedia project that traces the lives of five indigenous women slain by different serial killers. Have questions for us? Head on over to Reddit today from 2-3 p.m. ET and we'll answer them. Globe and Mail

Une précommission à la commission d'enquête sur les femmes autochtones disparues

La commission d'enquête sur les femmes autochtones disparues ou assassinées pourrait avoir jusqu'à cinq volets régionaux, en plus de la commission nationale, selon les plans proposés à la ministre des Affaires autochtones. Carolyn Bennet doit d'ailleurs annoncer, dès la semaine prochaine, la première étape du projet : la mise sur pied d'une précommission d'enquête, afin de consulter les victimes, leur famille et les groupes autochtones. Radio-Canada

Investigating homicide rates - Manitoba highest among provinces in indigenous deaths: StatsCan

Of the 10 provinces, Manitoba had the highest homicide rate involving indigenous victims in 2014, a new study shows. For the first time, Statistics Canada tracked the number of Aboriginal Peoples who were victims of homicide. They are nine times more likely to be killed by homicide than non-indigenous Manitobans. In 2014, 29 aboriginals were victims of homicide in Manitoba, compared with 15 non-aboriginal victims. The homicide rate of aboriginal victims was 13.29 per 100,000 in Manitoba. Of all provinces, Manitoba had the highest homicide rate in Canada for the eighth consecutive year. The province reported 3.43 homicides per 100,000 residents, followed by Alberta (2.52 per 100,000) and Saskatchewan (2.13 per 100,000), Statistics Canada reported. One-third of those accused of homicide across Canada in 2014 were aboriginal. In Manitoba, 37 aboriginal people were accused of homicide last year, compared with eight non-aboriginal suspects. Winnipeg Free Press, A3; CBC News

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

A list of Canadian cities that will welcome Syrian refugees

Approximately 15,000 of the 25,000 Syrian refugees who will arrive in Canada in the coming weeks are being resettled by the federal government. Where they will go after arriving in Toronto or Montreal is linked to where there are organizations which can provide settlement services through contracts with the federal government. Here is a list of destination communities provided by the Immigration Department. Maclean's

Syrian refugees supported by furniture drive

Syrian Canadians on Prince Edward Island are hoping to make life easier for the hundreds of refugees coming from their homeland. While many of the 250 refugees expected on P.E.I. over the next few months will be mostly funded by government, about 100 are privately-sponsored family re-unifications. The Syrian Association of P.E.I. is working to make their arrival a little easier with a furniture drive. CBC News, The Guardian

Lifeline Syria-Cape Breton preps for refugee arrivals

Cape Bretoners have offered homes, rooms and medical help for the Syrian refugees on their way to the island. Amanda McDougall of Lifeline Syria-Cape Breton said more than 250 volunteers are eager to help bring 100 families. She expects them to come in groups of 10 over the next year. "People will call and say, 'I have this summer home. I never use it. It's winterized. Please, take it for the year.' People who have tourism-based businesses are offering rooms or cottages, that type of thing. Many people are saying, 'I have a house. There's only myself and my husband. Please, let me welcome in a family.'" McDougall said the organization must have "money in the bank" to proceed with helping the families. CBC News

Moins de Syriens à Québec

Le Québec devrait accueillir jusqu'à 9350 réfugiés syriens en 2015-2016, dont 3650 Syriens d'ici le Jour de l'an, la plupart à Montréal et dans les environs, mais beaucoup moins qu'attendus dans la capitale. L'opération devrait coûter au moins 29 M$ à la province cette année et vraisemblablement autant l'an prochain, puisque le Québec reconduira le même plan en 2016, avec la même cible de 3650 réfugiés syriens, pour un total de 7300 pour l'exercice 2015-2016, a annoncé hier le gouvernement Couillard. Pour ce qui est de la part additionnelle souhaitée par le gouvernement Trudeau, Québec est prêt à relever le défi, mais l'argent du fédéral devra être au rendez-vous. «C'est la condition», a signalé la ministre québécoise de l'Immigration, Kathleen Weil, puisque les coûts reliés à cet effort supplémentaire ne pourront être assumés par la province. Le plan dévoilé mardi par Ottawa vise l'accueil de 25 000 réfugiés syriens à travers le Canada d'ici la fin février, ce qui, pour le Québec, implique d'accueillir 2050 réfugiés de plus. Journal de Québec, 7 (Journal de Montréal)

Syrian refugee delay a 'relief'

Quebec is breathing a "deep sigh of relief" at the delay in Ottawa's plan to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees into the country. While Ontario is still working out its plan to resettle as many as 10,000 people from refugee camps in the Middle East and through private sponsorships, Quebec Immigration Minister Kathleen Weil said her government is ready to accept between 3,650 refugees and 5,750 Syrian refugees in both 2015 and 2016. Already, some 2,900 people have been picked and are being processed to come to 13 cities across the province starting in the coming days. But Quebec is also prepared to do more if required by the federal government and if the financial resources are made available, said Pierre Moreau, Quebec's municipal affairs and acting public safety minister. Toronto Star

Labeaume a été «écouté» par Ottawa

Critiqué après avoir déclaré qu'il ne voulait pas accueillir des «gars de 20 ans frustrés» parmi les réfugiés syriens, le maire de Québec estime, au final, qu'il a été entendu et se réjouit du plan d'Ottawa. «Visiblement, on n'avait pas tout faux», a laissé tomber Régis Labeaume au lendemain de l'annonce du plan du fédéral qui accordera la priorité aux familles, aux femmes et aux personnes de la communauté gaie. «Quelque part, on peut penser que le gouvernement fédéral nous a écoutés et a écouté d'autres personnes dans la société. Quand les gens disaient: "Ah, ça ne fonctionne pas comme ça". Ben oui, ça peut marcher comme ça. On peut faire des choix, on peut changer les choses et je suis très heureux si je peux avoir contribué à ces changements- là», a-t-il déclaré hier, se disant satisfait du report de l'échéance pour accueillir 25 000 réfugiés. Journal de Québec, 7

Accueil de réfugiés syriens : le SERY est prêt

Solidarité Ethnique Régionale de la Yamaska (SERY) devrait accueillir 30 réfugiés syriens d'ici le 31 décembre 2015 et 40 autres d'ici février 2016. À cela devrait s'ajouter une troisième cohorte, précise la directrice générale de l'organisme, Joanne Ouellette. «Ces 70 -là sont du plan régulier du gouvernement du Québec, précise Mme Ouellette. Sauf que le Québec va prendre une portion des 25 000 du fédéral, donc il va y avoir entre 2000 et 2500 personnes qui vont arriver par-dessus ces gens-là». Le SERY s'attend ainsi à recevoir 150 réfugiés syriens. Chose certaine, fort d'une expérience dans l'accueil de réfugiés depuis 1996, le SERY n'a pas froid aux yeux. «On est prêts, dit d'emblée Joanne Ouellette. Qu'ils soient Syriens, Colombiens ou Bosniaques, nous allons les recevoir comme tous les autres et c'est à bras ouverts», mentionne la directrice générale. Granby Express

Pétition pour que le HEC parraine des réfugiés

Un étudiant de HEC Montréal a lancé une pétition en ligne pour que son établissement parraine deux jeunes réfugiés syriens et leur permette d'y étudier gratuitement. Nader Daher souhaite que leurs frais de scolarité, de logement et de subsistance soient assumés par la communauté universitaire. Pour financer ce projet, il propose d'ajouter 5 $ à la facture des 13 000 étudiants de HEC. Il s'inspire d'une initiative similaire mise en oeuvre à l'Université Bishop's, où on parraine des réfugiés depuis des années. Fils d'un immigrant libanais qui a fui la guerre, Nader Daher est particulièrement touché par la réalité des réfugiés. Il croit que l'éducation joue un rôle central dans l'intégration des nouveaux arrivants. «En plus de mon père, six de ses frères et soeurs sont venus au Canada. Ils ont tous obtenu des diplômes d'études supérieures et ils contribuent largement à la société.» Journal de Montréal, 21

Province to reveal plan to welcome Syrian refugees to Manitoba

Manitoba Premier Greg Selinger is expected to reveal details on Thursday of the province's plan to welcome Syrian refugees to the province. Bequie Lake, director of the Manitoba Immigrant and Refugee Settlement Sector Association, Hani Alubeady, a counsellor at Welcome Place, and Shawn Feely, vice-president of the Canadian Red Cross in Manitoba, will join the premier in the rotunda at the legislative building at noon. The federal government announced Monday that Syrian refugees coming to Canada will be limited to women, children and families, gays and lesbians, and single men accompanying parents as part of a family. CBC News

Selinger wants refugee help from feds

Manitoba wants federal officials on the ground to help co-ordinate Syrian refugee settlement. Premier Greg Selinger says Ottawa must send staff to help co-ordinate refugee housing, regardless of whether Syrians arrive in the province through private sponsorships, public placements or a combination of both. "The federal government has to make its officials available in Manitoba to work with our officials," Selinger told an audience of municipal leaders Wednesday at an Association of Manitoba Municipalities gathering at the Keystone Centre in Brandon. "We want the federal government at that table, not in Calgary, not in Ottawa." Selinger said he expressed his concerns to Ottawa during the recent first ministers meeting, primarily because Ottawa now has control over settlement services. The premier said it isn't clear how much Ottawa is willing to pay for rents for refugee housing. He said it's Manitoba's preference to avoid the sort of barracks housing planned for Ontario and Quebec and said he has not heard of any such plans for this province. "We'd prefer to settle people in permanent locations, or at least semi-permanent locations as much as possible, close to schools, health and social services." Citizenship and Immigration Canada wouldn't say whether it's considering sending staff to cities to help with refugee settlement. Winnipeg Free Press, A16

Alberta pledges an additional $1 million for refugee resettlement

The Alberta government is setting aside an additional $1 million to help with the resettlement of Syrian refugees in five cities across the province. The province will help approximately 2,500 to 3,000 refugees resettle in Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary, Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, Labour Minister Lori Sigurdson said Wednesday. "We don't know specifically yet how many will be coming to Alberta, but we want to do our part." She said she doesn't know how many refugees will arrive in each of the five cities, but will meet next week with federal Immigration and Refugees Minister John McCallum to discuss details. "We've made it clear to the federal government that the cost of settling these newcomers to Alberta will require additional resources, which the federal government is responsible to provide," she said. Edmonton Journal

Syrian refugees to get help to overcome trauma

Edmonton settlement agencies are getting ready to support Syrian refugees facing mental health challenges. "We have been alerted that a significant number of the Syrian refugees will face some trauma issues," said Alice Colak, vice president of immigration and settlement service at Catholic Social Services. "We are trying to gear up and prepare for that, both internally as well as in the community and in discussions with Alberta Health and other colleague organizations who might have those supports." Alberta is welcoming up to 3,000 refugees in the next few months. About half are expected to settle in Edmonton as government-sponsored refugees. They are arriving from United Nations' refugee camps in Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey after fleeing the bloody civil war now in its fifth year. CBC News

No 'miss' in this mission

An editorial states, "The headline Wednesday read as though it were a mistake or a failure of sorts: "Liberals will miss target on refugees." It read as if our new government had blown it, reneging on its campaign pledge to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees before the end of this year. And indeed, Immigration Minister John McCallum was on the defensive as he told reporters they will resettle 10,000 Syrians by Dec. 31, and bring the rest in by the end of February. Well, we say bravo." Edmonton Journal

MP must challenge newcomers plan

An opinion piece states, "In light of what happened in Paris recently with the ISIS terrorist attacks, does anyone in their right mind think it is wise for the Justin Trudeau government to allow 25,000 Syrian refugees into our country? These radical 9-11 extremists posed as refugees in Paris. My point being is you can't properly vet each individual because Syria and every other Third World corrupt government has no database for its people of origin. They have no system like ours, Canada and the U.S. Terrorists can submit false documents and say who they are but let's not kid ourselves, we won't really know. And, why is it the higher percentage of refugees are in the age group of 18 to 40 years old? If you have been following U.S. news, as of Nov. 18, their Congress just voted to delay Barack Obama's request to allow these refugees into the U.S. due to safety concerns. I ask our new MP Tracey Ramsey if she'll take this up on the floor of the chamber? Challenge and ask Prime Minister Trudeau's party if they are willing to put Canadians at risk and be accountable. God forbid if just one person granted asylum commits an act of terror on our soil. God bless our troops." Postmedia Network (Windsor Star, A11)

Canadian PM Trudeau: Syrian refugees not security risk

A day after his government revealed its hotly debated plans for bringing 25,000 refugees to Canada from the devastating, years-long civil war in Syria, Trudeau made an impassioned and highly political appeal that plumbed numerous themes of the October election that vaulted his Liberals to power. The majority will come from Lebanon, Jordan and Turkey, though some may arrive from other places as well. These refugees will be admitted into Canada, in either Montreal or Toronto, and then continue directly on to their destination community. Tuesday's announcement could raise alarm in the US, where many Republican governors have said they don't want any Syrian refugees. Priority for government refugees will be given to complete families, women at risk, members of sexual minorities and single men only if they are identified as gay, bisexual or transgender or are travelling as part of a family. NewsTelegraph

Canada to Accept Gay Syrian Refugees

In an interview with Canada's CBC broadcaster, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said the delay stemmed from a desire to "get it right" when it came to refugee resettlement. Services like free tuition for 1,000 students at Khalsa School for one year, free meals, clothing and blankets for 2,000 refugees from many gurdwaras, transportation and medical services would be offered to the refugees. Canada has pledged up to $678 million (635 million euros) over six years toward resettling and integrating Syrian refugees into Canada, and 36 cities have been identified as "destinations". "So it's the whole system", McCallum said. As pressure mounts on Canadian officials over security concerns following the Paris attacks, Canada's Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said that there would be no compromises on that front. Newstelegraph

Turkey- Canada won't make Syrian refugee target by year's end

Canada announced Tuesday that 10000 of 25000 Syrian refugees will arrive by Dec. 31 with the rest coming by the end of February from Turkey Lebanon and Jordan. The government had originally promised to welcome 25000 in 2015. At a televised press conference in the capital of Ottawa Immigration and Refugees Minister John McCallum said the deadline was pushed back because of the intricacies involved – settlement housing medical services etc. "There are a lot of moving parts here" he told reporters. "That is why [the deadline is extended]. Canadians have said yes do this [but] do it right ... take the time." The government was to have sponsored the 25000 refugees but McCallum said the arrivals by the end of February would include private sponsors. He added that in 2016 the government will bring its refugee intake up to 25000 and with private sponsorship the figures will total more than 25000 although he did not put a number on it. MENAFN

Réfugiés syriens: à Montréal pour se rapprocher de la diaspora, dit Moreau

La grande majorité des réfugiés syriens prendront le chemin du Grand Montréal parce que c'est là que se trouve la diaspora qui les accueillera, a indiqué jeudi le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Pierre Moreau. Selon les projections rendues publiques par le gouvernement Couillard mercredi, 85% des Syriens qui arriveront au Québec d'ici la fin 2016 seront établis à Montréal, Laval ou Longueuil. Les 15% restants seront saupoudrés dans 10 autres municipalités. Pourquoi une telle concentration dans la métropole ? Parce que la grande majorité des réfugiés seront parrainés par des Québécois - souvent d'origine syrienne - plutôt que pris en charge par l'État, indique M. Moreau. La Presse

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

U.S. presidential envoy and Defence Minister Sajjan discuss ways to counter Islamic State

U.S. Special Presidential Envoy Brett McGurk visited Canada Wednesday at the invitation of Canadian Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan. In meetings with Sajjan and other senior Canadian government officials, McGurk expressed the United States' appreciation for Canada's "important and ongoing contributions as a member of the global coalition" to counter the Islamic State, according to a news release from the U.S. Embassy. The two also discussed how to increase pressure on the Islamic State and fight its global terror network, U.S. officials said. Ottawa Citizen

Canada's Miss World contestant denied entry to China

Canada's outspoken Miss World contestant said she was barred Thursday from entering China to take part in this year's pageant in the southern island province of Hainan. Chinese-born Anastasia Lin said she was unable to board her connecting flight from Hong Kong after a Chinese official told her by telephone that she would not be granted a visa on arrival. While she cleared customs in Hong Kong, she was not allowed to board her next flight to Hainan, according to a friend, Caylan Ford, who released a statement from Lin. "The Chinese government has barred me from the competition for political reasons. They are trying to punish me for my beliefs and prevent me from speaking out about human rights issues," Lin said in the statement, prepared before her departure. Al Jazeera America; Associated Press (CP24)

INTERNATIONAL

Trudeau won't 'point fingers' in Turkey-Russia crisis

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau doesn't want to "point fingers" at who's to blame after Turkish jets shot down a Russian warplane Tuesday, saying he wants to "de-escalate" the situation instead. Trudeau made the comments during a meeting with British Prime Minister David Cameron Wednesday on the first day of a six-day overseas trip to London, Malta and Paris. Both Russia and Turkey blame each other for the incident, the first time a NATO member jet has downed a Russian plane since the Korean War in the 1950s. Russian President Vladimir Putin vowed there will be "serious consequences" for what he calls a "stab in the back." NATO has called an emergency meeting, at the request of Turkey, to discuss the incident and how to respond. Trudeau said Canada will "absolutely" stand by NATO ally Turkey, but says it's still not entirely clear what contributed to the Turkish jets shooting down the Russian warplane near the border of Turkey and Syria. Ottawa Citizen

Russia 'plans sanctions' against Turkey over jet downing

Russia is preparing wide-ranging economic sanctions against Turkey over the downing of one of its jets on the Turkey-Syria border. Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev said the measures would be drafted within days, and could hit joint investment plans. Also on Thursday, Russia's military suspended all communication channels with the Turkish military, including a 'hot line' to help avoid air accidents. Turkey says the plane violated its airspace - charges Russia denies. BBC News

German interior minister calls for European refugee cap: newspaper

Europe should set a limit on the number of refugees it takes in and seek out those most clearly entitled to protection, German Interior Minister Thomas de Maiziere said in an interview with Austrian newspaper Der Standard. In remarks published a day after Chancellor Angela Merkel, a fellow conservative, pledged to stick to her open-door refugee policy, de Maiziere said Europe should commit to "a generous concluding intake of refugees", but did not provide a number. Reuters

Pakistan Taliban commander allegedly killed by drones

A senior commander of Tehreek-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) has been killed in US drone strikes in Afghanistan's Khost province, Pakistani intelligence officials told Al Jazeera. Khalid Mehsud - alias Khan Said Sajna - was killed with 12 fighters on Wednesday when four US drones carried out strikes in the Damma area of Afghanistan, close to Pakistan's North Waziristan province, the officials said on condition of anonymity. Al Jazeera

Suspected Boko Haram militants raid Niger village riding motorcycles, killing 16

Witnesses say suspected militants from the Boko Haram extremist group have killed 16 people in a Niger village not far from the border with Nigeria. Adam Boukarna, who runs a radio station in the town of Diffa, said the attack on took place Wednesday night, with the assailants arriving on motorbikes and firing on "anything that moved." He said the gunmen also raided local shops and that multiple people were injured in addition to those killed. Associated Press (Fox News, Metro News)

Moldovan police detain 13 suspected of plot to attack capital and city with Russian majority

Moldovan police have detained a total of 13 suspected members of a paramilitary group allegedly planning to attack the capital and a northern city with a majority Russian population, with the aim of creating a new separatist republic similar to the one in eastern Ukraine. The General Police Inspectorate said Thursday that the group wanted to assault state institutions in the capital, Chisinau, and in Balti, a city some 120 kilometres (75 miles) away — and seize the northern city. Associated Press (Metro News, Business Standard)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

AJE News

Suspicious powder found at Brussels Grand Mosque <http://aje.io/xjvn>

The Globe and Mail

German police arrest two in Berlin suspected of planning attack <http://trib.al/8gH001U>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

TorontoStar

Trudeau to talk terrorism in Malta at Commonwealth summit <http://on.thestar.com/1T7MXGt> #topstories

Montreal Gazette

Man acquitted of breaking terrorism-related peace bond conditions <http://bit.ly/1Nachac>

Justin Ling

Three men were arrested and tortured in Syria on CSIS' intelligence — their lawsuit has finally inched forward. <https://news.vice.com/article/torture-victims-win-legal-battle-in-fight-against-canadian-government> ...

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBC Newfoundland

Bell Island RCMP investigating vehicle fire near Freshwater. No one was injured. #nlcrime

Michael Geist

RT @privacylawyer: Once again RCMP calls for warrantless access to online info. Once again RCMP is wrong <http://bit.ly/1N9GRko>

Ray Boisvert

Consequences if we let Snowden hysteria hamper routine policing: RCMP need warrantless access to subscriber info <http://www.cbc.ca/1.3337028>

CBC News

RCMP need warrantless access to online subscriber info: Paulson

<http://www.cbc.ca/1.3337028>

CTV Calgary

RCMP apprehend Saad Osman, third Airdrie vehicle fire homicide suspect, in Surrey, BC <http://bit.ly/1lbD1ey> #yyc

CTV Vancouver

Suspects rammed police cruiser, led officers on chase across Metro Vancouver: RCMP <http://bc.ctvnews.ca/suspects-rammed-police-cruiser-led-chase-across-metro-vancouver-rcmp-1.2675377> ...

CTV Vancouver

Mounties have arrested 2 people after a high speed chase from Surrey to West Vancouver. More @CTVMorningLive

Globalnews.ca

RCMP asks for help identifying 2 men after 'suspicious behaviour' on Toronto bridge <http://glnb.ca/V6jTe>

CP24

LIVE NOW: RCMP to discuss investigation into suspicious incident near Rogers Centre <http://www.cp24.com/video?clipId=68596&binId=1.1127680&playlistPageNum=1> ...

Global Montreal

RCMP Boss wants personal info on internet subscribers available to police <http://glnb.ca/V5JBW>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

The Province

Vancouver police say "one-punch" attacks on the rise, leading to serious injuries and deaths <http://bit.ly/1IMeRNC>

CBC News Alerts

Status of Women Minister Patricia Hadju says 2014 homicide statistics 'reveal the need for an inquiry' into #MMIW.

Globalnews.ca

Where are Canadians being killed? Compare homicide rates across the country <http://glnb.ca/V4VNT> #cdnhealth #amp6

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

David Johnston

As Canada prepares to #WelcomeRefugees, I met with @MaurerICRC and @ConradSauve. @ICRC @redcrosscanada

Derek Stoffel

VIDEO: How @Refugees offers assistance to #SyrianRefugees in Beirut. <http://bit.ly/1Ik1Z0G> #CBC #Lebanon

Magazine L'actualité

Les réfugiés plus vulnérables aux problèmes de santé mentale <http://bit.ly/1lhrJ3d>

CTV Calgary

Up to 900 Syrian refugees a day to land in Toronto, Montreal: document <http://bit.ly/1OiwW/hw>

Kristy Kirkup

Some premiers raise refugee funding questions via @cdnpress <http://www.southwesternontario.ca/news-story/6135970-some-premiers-raise-refugee-funding-questions/> ... #cdnpoli

Magazine L'actualité

Les bases militaires se préparent à accueillir des milliers de réfugiés <http://bit.ly/1P9OnSN>

VICE Canada

Trudeau is disappointed by how US politicians are reacting to Syrian refugees: <http://bit.ly/1YuVfMd>

La Presse

Réfugiés syriens: à Montréal pour se rapprocher de la diaspora, dit Moreau <http://bit.ly/1IMhMGk>

OTHER / AUTRES

CBC Politics

Justin Trudeau not being asked to reconsider taking fighter jets out of ISIS battle, adviser says http://www.cbc.ca/news/politics/government-position-fighter-jets-1.3338186?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter ... #cdnpoli #hw

The Associated Press

Outspoken Miss World Canada Anastasia Lin denied entry to China to compete in pageant: <http://apne.ws/21hPSIG>

INTERNATIONAL

CNN Breaking News

Turkey won't apologize for downing Russian jet, Turkish President Erdogan tells @BeckyCNN. <http://cnn.it/1IcILVw>

The Associated Press

Thanksgiving Day Parade in New York City gets underway, with big crowds and record number of police: <http://apne.ws/1XthAaG>

CBC News Alerts_

Police report says 4 passengers removed from flight at #Baltimore airport on Nov. 17 after woman says she saw a text with word 'dynamite.'

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
December 6 2015 / le 6 décembre 2015
09:00 – 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 9:00 a.m. and 18:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 09h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE / DISCOURS DU TRÔNE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Parliamentary stand-offs: Let the sparring begin

No matter how much the federal parties insist they'll behave in the new House of Commons, expect some pitched battles between Liberal cabinet ministers and opposition critics. Here are a few matchups to watch during question period. Public Safety: Ralph Goodale versus Erin O'Toole (Con.) versus Randall Garrison (NDP): Goodale is unflappable, having served under three prime ministers (one of whom was Pierre Trudeau). He'll bring a firm hand to a hectic and high-profile portfolio, ranging from security services to refugee screening to the promised overhaul of the Conservatives' national security Bill C-51. Ottawa Citizen

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE / DISCOURS DU TRÔNE

Perry Bellegarde to Liberal government: Talk first, act later

Even as Justin Trudeau makes acting on First Nations' issues a priority for his new government, the National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations has a surprising warning for him: talk first, act later. Perry Bellegarde says he wants the new Prime Minister to consult with First Nations more broadly before he embarks on his ambitious agenda that was outlined in the Speech From the Throne on Friday. That agenda includes launching an inquiry into missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls. Maclean's

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NIL

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Des extrémistes pourraient infiltrer des manifestations pacifiques

Des hauts fonctionnaires craignent que des extrémistes se glissent dans des manifestations contre la construction de pipelines, l'exploitation des sables bitumineux ou le transport du pétrole par train afin d'encourager la violence, indique un rapport récemment dévoilé. Le document rédigé par le service du renseignement de sécurité de Transports Canada, qui porte sur une analyse des menaces contre les services ferroviaires voyageurs, donne une nouvelle tournure au débat concernant la surveillance dont font l'objet les manifestants écologistes par l'État en laissant entendre que des activistes pacifiques pourraient involontairement accueillir dans leurs rangs des terroristes. Cara Zwibel, directrice du programme des libertés fondamentales pour l'Association canadienne des libertés civiles, a toutefois remis cette affirmation en question, doutant que le ministère ait des preuves pour étayer ses dires. Selon elle, il est dangereux de présenter le militantisme actif comme une couverture potentielle pour des activités terroristes. La Presse Canadienne a obtenu copie du rapport de six pages datant de novembre 2014 en vertu de la Loi sur l'accès à l'information. La Presse Canadienne (Radio-Canada); Canadian Press (National Post)

Halifax mosque opens its doors for panel discussion on terrorism and national security

The Ummah Mosque in Halifax held an open house Sunday afternoon to invite the public to learn more about Islam and discuss "the elephant in the room." The event included food, art and displays featuring commonly-asked questions about the religion. There were also two panel discussions on the subjects of safety, national security and terrorism. The first panel included Halifax RCMP Superintendent Dennis Daley and Halifax Regional Police Chief Jean-Michel Blais, while the second panel featured several Halifax imams. Global News

NSA's shuttered program was 'a sacrificial lamb' in U.S. mass surveillance

The National Security Agency in the United States may have shuttered its controversial bulk phone record collection program, but that doesn't mean people living in that country suddenly have their communications free from government scrutiny... Snowden also revealed that Canada's electronic spy agency tracks millions of downloads daily by people around the world, including Canadians. While it's hard to know much about the Canadian Security Establishment because of the secrecy surrounding the agency, there is "evidence of the same kind of indiscriminate surveillance as the NSA engages in," says David Lyon, the director of Queen's University's surveillance studies centre and author of Surveillance after Snowden. CBC News

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Canada-wide warrant issued for escaped prisoner

A Canada-wide warrant has been issued for the New Brunswick prisoner who escaped from guards Friday afternoon at the Truro Justice Centre. Marc Joseph Pellerin ran off while being transferred from one Sheriff Services vehicle to another at about 5:45 p.m., on Friday and has not been seen since. Chronicle Herald

Cram the Cruiser overwhelming success in Lake Country

A fundraiser for the Lake Country Food Bank gets more successful every year. The 4th annual Cram the Cruiser event was held on yesterday, Dec. 5, raising over $3,700 in cash and gathering over 3,000 lbs. of non-perishable food and other items, according to a media release. Members of the Lake Country RCMP detachment and Lake Country Fire Department are behind the event. This year more than 30 people volunteers their time and several businesses were involved. InfoTel News

It's the time for Christmas parties and check stops

As the Christmas season approaches, members of the Airdrie RCMP are preparing for check stops to ensure everyone is being safe this holiday season. With Christmas comes company parties, which leads to individuals having a couple of drinks to celebrate with their fellow employees. While this is going on, RCMP will be ensuring that everyone is making it home safely by setting up check stops in various parts of the city. Discover Airdrie

RCMP trumpeting return

RCMP are hailing a man for allowing a West Kelowna musician to be reunited with his stolen trumpets after they were turned into the Vernon/North Okanagan RCMP. The instruments were stolen from the owners' vehicle while it was parked in the 2700 block of 32nd Street in Vernon, November 23, 2015. Castannet.net

RCMP investigate after seriously injured girl found south of Edmonton

Maskwacis RCMP are turning to the public for help after a seriously injured girl was found on a gravel road in the rural area of the Samson Cree Nation early Sunday morning. According to police, the unidentified girl, whose age is not known, was taken to hospital with unidentified injuries. No other details have been released. CTV News Edmonton; Edmonton Journal; Edmonton Sun

6 face 167 charges over string of rural Saskatchewan break-ins

Six people, including a youth, are facing a long list of charges — 167 altogether — for a rash of break and enters in the countryside around Yorkton, Sask. RCMP said Sunday that they had been working on a number of files, some of which go back to August. Among the allegations: break and enter, theft, mischief and dangerous operation of all-terrain vehicles. Officers from the Yorkton detachment of the RCMP laid charges against five adults and one youth after linking the suspects to multiple cases. CBC News

Mystery card giver offers holiday greetings to local police and fire

Ironically, the only month Windsor's mystery card lady is not actually writing out Christmas cards is December. For the third year in a row, Judy filled out 900 holiday cards for everyone in the Windsor Police Service and the Windsor Fire and Rescue Services. Not interested in the spotlight landing on her, she did not want her real name used or her photo taken. Windsor Star

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Justin Trudeau assistera à un événement commémoratif

La journée de dimanche sera consacrée à honorer la mémoire des 14 victimes de l'École Polytechnique de Montréal abattues il y a 26 ans parce qu'elles étaient des femmes. Une cérémonie à leur mémoire, à laquelle assistera le premier ministre du Canada, Justin Trudeau, est entre autres prévue sur le belvédère du Mont-Royal. Le Devoir; La Presse Canadienne (Radio-Canada); Global News; Canadian Press (Brampton Guardian)

La Saskatchewan se souvient du massacre de l'École Polytechnique de Montréal

Des cérémonies pour souligner la mémoire des 14 femmes qui ont été tuées à l'École polytechnique de Montréal, le 6 décembre 1989, ont lieu dimanche partout à travers le pays, notamment en Saskatchewan. À Regina, une veillée aux chandelles a eu lieu dimanche à 11 h 30 à la salle de spectacle Artesian. À Saskatoon, une commémoration se tiendra dans les locaux de l'Alliance de la fonction publique du Canada à 18 heures. Radio-Canada

Calgary landmarks will be lit red tonight to shed light on violence against women

Two Calgary landmarks will light up Sunday evening to remember women who have lost their lives to gender-based violence. Langevin Bridge and McMahon Stadium will shine red in recognition of the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women, established by the federal government to remember the 14 women killed at the Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal in 1989. Calgary Herald

Montreal Massacre 26th anniversary ceremonies set for GTA

Sunday marks the 26th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre, and ceremonies across Canada and here in the GTA are set to honour the victims of the mass shooting. On Dec. 6, 1989, Marc Lepine entered an engineering class at Ecole Polytechnique, opened fire, and killed 14 women before turning the gun on himself. The sixth of December has become known as the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. 680 News

Sheridan College remembers women killed in École Polytechnique massacre

Two long tables, covered with white cloth, were set up alongside one another in the main lobby of Sheridan College's Davis campus on Friday morning (Dec. 4). Fourteen framed portraits lined the conjoined furniture, each displaying the name and face of a woman killed in the Montreal Massacre 26 years ago at École Polytechnique. Brampton Guardian

Senate has no legitimacy, says BC Premier Christy Clark

British Columbia's premier says the idea of lending her province's support to a new process for selecting senators is "just wrong."... Clark was also asked on Sunday about the legalization of marijuana, something the Liberal government promised to do during the federal election campaign. On that point, Clark struck a far more cooperative tone. "We're happy to work with whatever the federal government decides on that," she said. "You know (the federal Liberals) were really clear ... about their position on this, and so we're prepared to move forward on it and I know lots of ideas about how we might regulate it." Global News

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News - Question Period interviewed Conservative leader Rona Ambrose regarding the settlement of Syrian refugees into Canada as well as missing and murdered aboriginal women.
Rough Transcript

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

What Canada will do to help Syrian refugees: Four key points

Canada is being both praised and criticized for its plans to bring Syrian refugees into the country. The liberal government highlighted its updated plans to see 10,000 admitted by December 31 and a 15,000 more by the end of February. The refugees will be a mixture of government and privately sponsored, with the Immigration Minister John McCallum reportedly saying that the total number could reach 50,000 by the end of 2016. So what do we know about what Canada is doing for Syrian refugees? Here are five key points. Al Bawaba

Edmonton area prepares for Syrian refugee influx

An Edmonton agency is setting up a volunteer hotline in preparation for the arrival of Syrian refugees in what's likely the largest influx since the arrival of Vietnamese 'boat people' in the late 1970s. The Mennonite Centre for Newcomers is receiving 30 to 40 calls a day offering to help, but some people are shuttled between groups as they narrow down where assistance is most needed, executive director Erick Ambtman says. Edmonton Journal

Former refugees say Canadian winters can be a shock for newcomers

It was a frigid February in 1985 when Getachew Woldeyesus arrived in Saskatchewan as a refugee. The young man from Ethiopia stayed inside for two months. "Because you don't know, is it slippery out there? Are you wearing the right shoes? It's freezing out there, so I was afraid to go out," Woldeyesus recalled in an interview with The Canadian Press. Canadian Press (Global News)

Here's how Canada is preparing refugees for the winter

It's expected that Canadians will welcome 25,000 Syrian refugees this winter before January 1, many of which who are unfamiliar with the season's harsh conditions. However, social agencies, church groups and private citizens across the country have been organizing donations and preparing programs to help ease the transition. Take Immigrant Services Association of Nova Scotia (ISANS) for example. The organization provides a wide range of services from refugee resettlement to family counselling and English in the workplace. The Weather Network's Nathan Coleman spoke with ISANS instructor Alex Atiol about how newcomers should prepare for a Canadian winter. Weather Network

Local communities pitch in on Syrian refugee efforts

Ottawa city has been pulling out all stops to welcome Syrian refugees to the city, but smaller surrounding communities are flinging open their own doors too. A Syrian family of six has a home waiting for them in Wakefield, Que., where a group of volunteers has been working to get everything lined up for a warm welcome. And the surrounding community has been pitching in too – in just two weeks since the fundraising efforts began, Wakefield for Refugees has raised more than $25,000 to help pay for food, clothing, and shelter for one year. Their fundraising goal is $50,000, with the hopes of welcoming a second family. Metro News

'In Syria, people faced us with live bullets'

Hany al Moulia, 22, described to Austin M. Davis what drove his family out of their country, the long journey to their new home and the challenges of resettlement. I had a normal life back home. I was born in a very middle-class family. I had my education and everything. I didn't have to do any jobs. I was just studying and trying to do a lot of things. I'm into acting and writing. Postmedia News (National Post)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News - Question Period interviewed Immigration Minister John McCallum regarding the settlement of Syrian refugees into Canada. Rough Transcript

CTV News - Question Period interviewed Conservative leader Rona Ambrose regarding the settlement of Syrian refugees into Canada as well as missing and murdered aboriginal women. Rough Transcript

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

U.S. expecting Canada to be part of the solution to defeat ISIS

Outgoing Canadian Ambassador to the U.S. Gary Doer says that while the Americans respect Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's decision to withdraw from the air war against ISIS, they expect Canada to continue contributing to the fight against the terror group. CTV News

Teen pleads for Liberals to help secure the release of her father, held in a U.A.E. jail without charges

An Ontario teen is calling on the new Liberal government to secure the release of her father, who has been languishing in a United Arab Emirates prison without charge for more than a year. Marwa Alaradi has written to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and every MP on Parliament Hill asking for Canada to intervene in her family's ordeal. Canadian Press (National Post)

INTERNATIONAL

San Bernardino: la femme pourrait avoir été l'instigatrice de l'attentat

Les enquêteurs tentent de déterminer si Tashfeen Malik a poussé son mari américain Syed Farook à se radicaliser et si elle était l'instigatrice de la fusillade de la semaine dernière à San Bernardino, en Californie, qui a fait 14 morts, ont indiqué deux responsables, dimanche. Cette hypothèse a émergé la semaine dernière, quand il a été révélé que cette femme née au Pakistan avait prêté allégeance au groupe armé État islamique dans un message sur Facebook publié à peu près au moment où l'attaque a commencé, mercredi, lors d'un banquet des employés des services de santé du comté. Pendant ce temps, les hommages aux victimes se poursuivaient dimanche, tandis que le président Barack Obama préparait un discours à la nation sur la sécurité et le terrorisme. La Presse Canadienne; Associated Press (The Province)

San Bernardino terrorism probe widens as Obama is set to speak

With President Obama set to deliver a rare prime-time address from the Oval Office on Sunday, the investigation into the San Bernardino massacre continued Sunday both in the United States and Pakistan, where one of the attackers once lived. The FBI on Saturday raided the home of one of the shooter's friends as agents searched for the source of the guns used in the attack. And in Pakistan on Sunday, the interior minister said the country has launched its own investigation and offered assistance to U.S. authorities. Obama's speech will provide an update on the federal investigation into Wednesday's attack that killed 14 people at a holiday party at a San Bernardino conference center and will "discuss the broader threat of terrorism — including the nature of the threat, how it has evolved, and how we will defeat it," according to the White House. The FBI is investigating the shooting as an act of terrorism apparently inspired by the extremist group Islamic State. U.S. Atty. Gen. Loretta Lynch urged the public Sunday not to jump to conclusions about the motive for the attack or the couple's ties to ISIS. She said Farook had made contact with some people the FBI was monitoring but again stressed the investigation is ongoing. LA Times; Associated Press (CBC News); Maclean's

The Latest: Saudi Spokesman Says No Sign of Radicalization

Saudi Interior Ministry spokesman Maj. Gen. Mansour Al-Turki tells AP that authorities there have received no indication Tashfeen Malik was radicalized in Saudi Arabia. Al-Turki said Saudi records show she was not a resident of Saudi Arabia and had been to the kingdom only twice in her life. On both trips, she came to visit her family, once in 2008 for several weeks and the second time in 2013 for four months. Associated Press (ABC News)

San Bernardino gunman obsessed with ISIS and Israel, dad says

San Bernardino gunman Syed Farook shared ISIS' ideology, wanted to see the establishment of an Islamic caliphate and was fixated with Israel, Farook's father told an Italian newspaper during an interview in which he also offered his own unusual ideas about Israel. "My son said that he shared [ISIS leader Abu Bakr] Al Baghdadi's ideology and supported the creation of the Islamic State," said Farook's dad, also named Syed Farook, who lives in Corona, Calif., with another son who is a Navy veteran. "He was also obsessed with Israel." FOX News

Lashkar-e-Taiba plot to attack PM Narendra Modi in Delhi foiled with 'arrests'

Blowing the lid off a sinister plot to target Prime Minister Narendra Modi's gatherings or assassinate other high-profile politicians in Delhi, Intelligence Bureau (IB) and Delhi Police's special cell sleuths are carrying out a joint operation to nab at least three to four hardcore Lashkar-e-Taiba militants, who have managed to sneak in to Jammu & Kashmir from across the border. At least four terrorists had infiltrated into the country last month and were in contact with Lashkar commander Abu Dujana for logistics and ground support, highly placed sources told TOI. J&K police has also been roped in for the counter-terror operation and at least two of the militants have been reportedly arrested in J&K. Times of India

Lufthansa passenger threatens to open plane door

A man aboard a Lufthansa flight from Frankfurt to Belgrade has been arrested Sunday after threatening to open a plane door during the flight, Serbian authorities said. Passengers quoted by Belgrade media said he banged on a cockpit door threatening to bring down the plane while it was flying over Austria if he was not allowed inside. Lufthansa said the cabin crew and passengers on Flight 1406 managed to restrain him for the rest of the journey, adding that the plane doors can't be opened during a flight anyway. Lufthansa spokesman Andreas Bartels said the plane landed safely in Belgrade and the passenger was handed over to local authorities. Belgrade Blic daily said the man is a Jordanian with an American passport. Police questioned him after the plane landed in Belgrade. Associated Press

Face of the threat

A new report, "ISIS in America: From Retweets to Raqqa," has been written by the George Washington University's Program on Extremism. It attempts to provide a profile of Islamic State recruits/sympathizers from the U.S., (I'm not aware of a similar study by Canadian researchers but if there is let me know). Here is what the U.S. researchers found after going through court records, social media accounts and other documents: Average age: 26. Eighty-six per cent are male. Twitter and other social media is the main venue they use to gather and spread information about the Islamic State. Ottawa Citizen

'#YouAintNoMuslimBruv' top UK Twitter trend after London stabbing

YouAintNoMuslimBruv became Britain's top trending Twitter hashtag Sunday after a passer-by shouted the dismissive remark at a knife-wielding man in a London Underground station. Police are treating Saturday's attack at Leytonstone Tube station in east London as a "terrorist incident". Agence France-Presse (Yahoo! News)

Yemen: Governor, 6 bodyguards killed; ISIS claims responsibility

The governor of the major Yemeni city of Aden and six bodyguards were killed in a car bombing Sunday - an attack ISIS said it committed. Gov. Jaafar Saad was at the branch of the Ministry of Telecommunication in the southern city of Aden when the blast occurred, local officials said. CNN

Commuter train slams into passenger bus in Indonesia; 18 dead

A commuter train slammed into a passenger minibus Sunday at a railroad crossing in Indonesia's capital, killing at least 18 people and seriously injuring six others. The bus driver allegedly ignored the warning signals when he crossed the rail tracks and was rammed by the train in western Jakarta, said Wirdhanto, the police chief in the neighbourhood of Tambora. Like many Indonesians, Wirdhanto uses only one name. Associated Press (CBC News)

Storm Desmond brings flooding and disruption to parts of UK

High-speed winds and heavy rain are causing severe disruption as Storm Desmond continues to batter the UK. People were evacuated from their homes as flash flooding swept through parts of Cumbria, and police in the area declared a "major incident". Dozens of train routes have been cancelled, and roads have been closed in Scotland, England and Wales. Scores of severe flood warnings are in place in England, with two more issued in south-west Scotland. BBC News

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PostmediaNews

Extremists could use peaceful pipeline protests in Canada as cover, intel report claims <http://ow.ly/VxVo8> via @nationalpost

RadioCanadaInfo

Des extrémistes pourraient infiltrer des manifestations pacifiques <http://rc.ca/CxFJRb>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

ctvqp

Going forward, Doer says that Canada-U.S. relations will be highly focused on security. #cdnpoli #cdnfp

ctvqp

Canadian Ambassador to U.S. Gary Doer says he & former PM Harper had a shared priority of reaching the Beyond the Border agreement #cdnpoli

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CastanetNews

RCMP trumpeting return <http://bit.ly/1SHevhv> #VernonBC

AIR1061FM

As the Christmas season approaches, members of the Airdrie RCMP are preparing for check stops to ensure everyone... <http://fb.me/2z9VdZfaA>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

ctvqp

@RonaAmbrose's message to the government on #MMIW: "Please do it fast." #cdnpoli

ctvqp

Assembly of First Nations National Chief @perrybellegarde hopes for an inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women by April 1.

TheWestBlock

On the legalization of marijuana, Clark is far more positive. "We're happy to work with whatever the federal government decides on that."

CBCCanada

Cards of Compassion support people living with mental illness <http://ift.tt/1XMahQL>

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

CBCPEI

Have no fear, past experience suggests Syrian refugees will only enrich Canada <http://www.cbc.ca>

mtlgazette

Quebec is ready to handle 3,000 Syrian refugees, ministers promise <http://bit.ly/21FLYDm>

ctvqp

@JohnMcCallumLPC says the Syrian refugee resettlement commitment is taking up every minute of his life, and is going "extremely well."

ctvqp

@JohnMcCallumLPC admits that housing is a challenge as Canada prepares to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees. #cdnpoli

ctvqp

@JohnMcCallumLPC says many "business people" have come forward to offer free or subsidized rental accommodation for Syrian refugees.

ctvqp

@JohnMcCallumLPC is hoping that many more business people and Canadians come forward to help with housing for Syrian refugees.

ctvqp

@RonaAmbrose would like to see new refugees integrated into communities, and not have to stay on military bases. #cdnpoli

ctvqp

@RonaAmbrose is glad to see that Trudeau backed off on the Jan. 1 deadline and hopes that he continues to take the refugee process slow.

OTHER / AUTRES

CTVNews

U.S. expecting Canada to be part of the solution to defeat ISIS <http://ow.ly/VxGP3>

INTERNATIONAL

theprovince

Tashfeen Malik may have been the driving force in the San Bernardino massacre plot: officials <http://theprovince.in/1NDa1IW>

GlobalNational

Woman behind California shooting became fervently devout in recent years <http://glnb.ca/Vxwv1>

PostmediaNews

Man reportedly shouts 'This is for Syria' before attacking people with a knife at London subway... <http://ow.ly/VxBnu> via @nationalpost

AP

VIDEO: Alleged attacker appears to wield a knife at a tube station in east London on Saturday: <http://apne.ws/1YRXXLY>

cnnbrk

ISIS claims responsibility for car bomb killing governor of major Yemeni city and six bodyguards. <http://cnn.it/21H7Dva>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
January 17, 2016 / le 17 janvier 2016
9:00 - 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 9:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 9h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Nova Scotia digging out after latest winter storm

Many Nova Scotians are waking up to snow-filled driveways today after the province was hammered by snow and wind last night and the storm's aftermath continues to pose some transportation problems. The province's Department of Transportation says many roads and highways across the province are snow-covered but passable. It will be a fairly nice day for clean-up work, Environment Canada is calling for a mix of sun and cloud for much of the province. Several flights into and out of Halifax's Stanfield International Airport have been cancelled this morning. The Marine Atlantic ferry service to Newfoundland is running on time as are the Bay Ferries between St. John and Digby Nova Scotia. All provincial ferries are also running today. Saturday night's storm brought whiteouts and blowing snow that caused crews some problems as they worked to clear roads. CBC News

Enbridge to increase security following recent cases of pipeline sabotage

In a field on the outskirts of Sarnia, Ont., there's a big blue wheel surrounded by a chain-link fence. Attached to the fence and nailed to a nearby wooden post is a warning: high pressure petroleum pipeline. Early one December morning, a trio of anti-pipeline activists managed to get to the other side of the fence. Photos show them smiling broadly as they turned the wheel, to which they then locked themselves. While the incident caused no injuries or significant service disruptions, the owner of the pipeline – the newly reversed and expanded Line 9 between southwestern Ontario and Montreal – said that incident and others have raised “serious concerns.” “Enbridge sites are locked, secured and monitored for the safety of people and the environment. As with any vital infrastructure or service, they can be made dangerous if tampered with or sabotaged,” said Graham White, a spokesman for Calgary-based firm Enbridge Inc. (TSX:ENB). “We are assessing and employing various additional, permanent measures to enhance our security and safety at these sites to help prevent these types of tampering activities in the future. As part of ensuring the effectiveness of these measures, we will not provide details or discuss them publicly.” Lindsay Gray, speaking on behalf of the “land defenders” in an interview on the day of the Sarnia protest, said there wasn't much stopping them. “Anyone could have done this,” she said. “Anyone.” Canadian Press (iPolitics, Chronicle-Herald, Hamilton Spectator)

'This will leave a terrible mark on all of us,' Nexen says after death of employee

Nexen Energy says it is “reeling” after an explosion Friday afternoon killed one employee and critically injured another at its oilsands plant south of Fort McMurray. “Yesterday marked one of the darkest days in Nexen's history,” Nexen CEO Fang Zhi said during a press conference Saturday in Calgary. “Standing here today to share this type of information is the worst thing a CEO ever wants to do. But no matter how badly we feel, it pales in comparison to the pain two of our employees families are experiencing.” The Calgary-based Nexen is a subsidiary of China's state-owned CNOOC Ltd., after being acquired by CNOOC more than two years ago. An explosion at Nexen's Long Lake oilsands facility in northern Alberta has ended with one fatality and a second person in hospital, the facility has been shutdown, on Jan. 16, 2016. Nexen and Alberta Occupational Health and Safety said the explosion occurred as two employees were changing valves on a compressor inside a building at Nexen's Long Lake facility about 3:20 p.m. Friday. Edmonton Journal

Risques d'inondation aux abords de la rivière des Outaouais

La formation de couvercles de glace et les forts débits ont créé une instabilité dans le couvercle, ce qui vient partiellement obstruer la rivière par endroits, notamment dans le secteur de Grenville et Hawkesbury. En raison de cette obstruction à la circulation, le niveau de l'eau augmente de façon importante tout au long de la rivière, jusqu'à Gatineau. La Commission estime qu'il existe un risque important de voir l'eau monter et venir inonder certaines zones riveraines. L'organisme de surveillance de la rivière des Outaouais rappelle également aux citoyens d'être prudent à l'approche du cours d'eau et qu'il existe des dangers associés à la présence de neige et de glace sur les rives lorsque le niveau d'eau est élevé. Le Comité de régularisation de la rivière des Outaouais, un organe de la Commission de planification de la régularisation de la rivière des Outaouais, est composé, notamment, de Travaux publics et Services gouvernementaux Canada, Ontario Power Generation, Hydro-Québec et du ministère du Développement durable, de l'Environnement et de la Lutte contre les changements climatiques du Québec. La Presse

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Trudeau visits Peterborough, Ont., mosque repaired after arson

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau was in Peterborough, Ont., today, where he spoke at a mosque that was damaged by arson last November. He toured Masjid al-Salaam, the city's only mosque, which reopened in late December after repairs were made, and attended its open house. “What happened to this place of worship just one day after the brutal terrorist attacks in Paris is reprehensible. I have not met a single Canadian who was not as profoundly disturbed as I was to see this kind of hate crime taking place,” Trudeau said. A firebomb was placed in one of the windows of the mosque one day after the Nov. 13 attacks in Paris, for which the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria claimed responsibility. The arson was one of a string of anti-Muslim assaults in Ontario that followed the bloodshed in the French capital. CBC News; Canadian Press (CKTB 610)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Task Force has been busy along the river

Cornwall's Regional Task Force continues to make a difference in this community. Between August and December, the RTF arrested 23 individuals and seized 13 pickup trucks, five boats, five outboard boat motors, 40.5 cases of cigarettes, one boat trailer and 7,693 kilograms of fine cut tobacco. On Oct. 22 the RCMP received information that there was someone at a cottage property in South Glengarry while owners were away. Members attended the scene and located nine garbage bags of fine cut tobacco on the property. There were no suspects in the area. A total of 142 kilograms of contraband tobacco was seized. The investigation is still ongoing. On Nov. 5 CRTF members were called to the Canada Border Services Agency port of entry for a female that was crossing through the border with contraband tobacco. Officers arrived on scene and observed a 2015 Dodge Ram pickup truck with several bags of tobacco in the box under the tonneau cover. Cornwall Standard-Freeholder; Seaway News

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP investigate suspicious death of Quesnel man

Police are investigating the suspicious death of a 67-year-old man in Quesnel. Officers were called to a home in the 100-block Brears road North just before noon Friday and found the man dead. He was surrounded by evidence that suggested foul play, police said. The RCMP's North District Major Crime Unit has been called to lead an investigation. The man's identity has not been released and his cause of death has not yet been determined. Police said they don't believe there is any risk to the public in connection to the ongoing investigation. Vancouver Province

Const. David Wynn's death leaves St. Albert, RCMP closer a year later - City, RCMP decline to mark one-year anniversary of shooting with special event or ceremony

St. Albert is a community more united following the shooting death of Const. David Wynn at Apex Casino one year ago, says Mayor Nolan Crouse. "The mark that it leaves, it brings the community closer together," Crouse said. "It shows the family and the RCMP just how supportive we are as a community, as a city." Aux. Const. Derek Bond and Wynn were shot at about 3 a.m. Saturday Jan. 17, 2015 while confronting a suspect about a stolen vehicle found near the casino. Wynn later died. Bond was shot in the arm and torso and released from hospital later the same day. Officers tracked the suspect, later identified as Shawn Rehn, to a nearby rural home. When they entered the house, they found him dead. CBC News

St. Albert MP pushes forward 'Dave Wynn's Law' one year after constable's murder

One year after RCMP Const. David Wynn was shot in the line of duty at a casino in St. Albert lawmakers are honouring the fallen officer by trying to prevent similar tragedies. On Jan. 17, 2015, Const. Wynn was investigating a stolen vehicle complaint with another constable when he was fatally shot by 34-year-old Shawn Maxwell Rehn at the Apex Casino in St. Albert. Rehn left the scene, leading to a nine-hour manhunt (...) St. Albert MP Michael Cooper believes Const. Wynn would still be alive if the judge who let the Rehn out on bail at the time of the shooting had known about his nearly 60 convictions and made a different decision. It's the reason Cooper is reintroducing "Dave Wynn's Law." "It is common sense legislation that would require the Crown to lead evidence of a bail applicants criminal convictions, outstanding charges and failures to appear," Cooper said. Global News

Province to name lake after murdered RCMP officer Dennis Strongquill

The late Dennis Strongquill will be the first law enforcement officer to have a geographic location named in his honour and memory. Attorney General Gord Mackintosh and Assistant RCMP Commissioner Kevin Brosseau, commanding officer, 'D' Division, and Strongquill's eldest daughter Theresa Strongquill will announce Monday morning that a lake about 45 kilometres north of Flin Flon will be named after Strongquill. Strongquill was a 52-year-old constable stationed in Waywayseecappo just before Christmas of 2001, when he was shot to death during a routine traffic stop just east of Russell. Winnipeg Free Press

Summerside police chief named municipal police force officer of the year

Summerside police Chief Dave Poirier picked up some hardware at this week's P.E.I. Crime Stoppers annual meeting. Each year Crime Stoppers recognizes exceptional work being done by Island police services by presenting awards to two officers, one municipal and one RCMP who go above and beyond their regular duties during the past year. This year's recipients were Poirier and RCMP Staff Sgt. Kevin Baillie from Kings District. Journal Pioneer

RCMP make pair of drug busts near Clarenville

The RCMP Clarenville detachment arrested two men Saturday night following two separate traffic stops. Police said they stopped vehicles in Hillview and George's Brook and seized an undisclosed quantity of marijuana and cash. A 22-year-old man from Sunnyside and a 41-year-old man from Clarenville both face charges of possession for the purpose of trafficking. CBC News

Iqaluit RCMP investigating after hit and run injures 7-year-old boy

RCMP in Iqaluit are searching for the driver of an all-terrain vehicle that hit a 7-year-old boy in the city's Legoland neighbourhood Sunday morning. Cpl. David Lawson said police are now looking for the driver of a green ATV who remains at large. He would not say if police suspect alcohol was a factor in the incident. He said the ATV also crashed into a nearby parked vehicle. CBC News

Traffic fatalities down on provincial roads

In a challenging year for RCMP in Alberta, traffic stands out as a positive. The number of fatalities, injury collisions and impaired drivers were all down in 2015 from 2014, something K-Division Deputy Commissioner Marianne Ryan chalks up to increased enforcement. "I think it will always be the number one for us because it takes so many lives every year, but interestingly enough, this past year, we actually saw a decrease in the total number of fatalities, the number of people killed on the highways," Ryan said. In 2014, 279 people died in collisions on the provincial roads, but the number dropped to 236 in 2015. "One fatality is too many, but the decrease is good to see," she said. Edmonton Sun

'Tower dumps' may tell police far too much

An editorial states "Has your private but more or less innocuous information been scooped up by a police force? It seems very likely. "Tower dumps," containing enormous amounts of personal data, are harvested by police from traffic on cellphone towers. The process is not basically different from the vast "bulk collection" of communications by the U.S. National Security Agency, as revealed by Edward Snowden, though Canadian police forces are more concerned with ordinary robberies than with international terrorism. "Production orders" have sometimes swept up 40,000 people's accounts from cell towers. Police officers find this convenient because a criminal gang is often in continuous cellphone contact while actually committing a crime. But the rest of us don't want our banking and credit-card information and whatever else to be broadcast to the world – which is much more than the mere "phone directory" information that some police forces speak of dismissively." Globe and Mail

Start studying pot sales: union to LCBO

Give them the green light. The union that represents LCBO workers wants the retailer to start studying how it could sell marijuana. Right now, the LCBO says it won't start researching marijuana sales until the drug is actually legalized. Despite public musings from several prominent politicians — including Premier Kathleen Wynne — that its stores would be the ideal place to sell weed, the LCBO has no data on whether that would be a good idea. In December, the Toronto Sun made a Freedom of Information request seeking access to documents on any studies done by the LCBO on marijuana sales at its stores. The agency says no documents exist and confirmed this week no studies have been done. LCBO spokesman Christine Bujold said despite that, the agency is monitoring the situation carefully. In addition to legalization at the federal level, Bujold said the LCBO would need specific instructions from the province to launch a study. Ottawa Sun (2016-01-16)

Sophisticated car theft ring targeting luxury vehicles

In the middle of the night, in a Hamilton suburb, a young man walks up a driveway, turns a key in the door of a parked Acura and quietly gets into the driver's seat. He doesn't start the car, instead reaching into his bag to pull out something that looks a bit like an oversized vintage Nintendo controller, 13-by-30 centimetres with a bright blue rubber border. With a USB cable, he plugs it into the car's diagnostic system and punches some buttons. Then, trying the key, he hears the engine come to life. He backs out and drives away. Before the sun rises, he does the same with four more cars - and in that way, in less than a year, 500 cars in and around the GTA worth $30-million are silently taken. "They never think they're going to get caught, because this isn't a violent crime," said Toronto police Staff Inspector Mike Earl, who helped bust the car-theft ring in the GTA last year - a more sophisticated scheme than police had seen before. "They're flying under the radar because they're doing these things at three, four o'clock in the morning." The cars, he said, are "already maybe in a shipping container before they're even reported stolen." Forget hot-wiring: It's a new day for the old crime of stealing cars. Today's thieves exploit the vulnerabilities of modern automotive technology, bypassing security systems in a matter of seconds. Globe and Mail

Brampton man suing police called 'author of his own misfortune'

A Brampton man acquitted of murder after a judge raised serious concerns about the police tactics used during the investigation "was entirely the author of his own misfortune," the Peel Police Services Board, former police chief and lead detectives allege in a statement of defence in a multimillion-dollar lawsuit. Eric Morgan is suing the board, former police chief Michael Metcalf and five Peel homicide detectives for about $25 million after he spent more than three years in pretrial custody before being acquitted of murder in 2013. His freedom came after Ontario Superior Court Justice Fletcher Dawson took the unusual step of instructing the jury to acquit Morgan after finding police had used "abusive" and "threatening" tactics against key witnesses and "manufactured" evidence incriminating Morgan. But in a statement of defence filed last month, the police board, Metcalf and the five detectives on the case claim Peel police were at all times acting "in the interest of public safety." Their defence claim emphasizes the results of a recent ruling by the Ontario Independent Police Review Director (OIPRD), which found there was insufficient evidence to lay any misconduct charges because the tactics officers used to pressure witnesses "were consistent with their training." Those tactics - aggressive interrogation often referred to as Reid technique - have been the subject of a growing chorus of concern over what some experts say is an elevated risk of false confessions and wrongful convictions. Hamilton Spectator

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Feminism missing from consultations on missing and murdered women's inquiry: advocates

A chairwoman of Vancouver's annual memorial march for missing and murdered aboriginal women says she's concerned a national inquiry will leave out a crucial issue - feminism. Fay Blaney, who co-chairs the February 14th Women's Memorial March Committee said the starting point of an inquiry must be the barriers indigenous women face in Canadian society. Indigenous Affairs Minister Carolyn Bennett is touring the country to meet with families, survivors and aboriginal representatives to hear what they want from an inquiry. Blaney attended an all-day meeting in Vancouver last Wednesday and wants to meet with Bennett to discuss the inquiry's parameters. "It needs to proceed from a feminist perspective. This is an issue of indigenous women's equality," she said. "I didn't hear that coming from them." Her fears are part of a broader concern among front-line workers and advocacy groups that they are being shut out of the process. Blaney said the consultations appear to be focused on families, and while it's important for them to have a voice, they're only one perspective. Canadian Press (iPolitics, The Province)

A good start to a long haul

The federal government has approved work on an inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women, which is great news, but now what? The federal Department of Indigenous and Northern Affairs will have to determine what the inquiry will look like and how it will investigate why indigenous women are so grossly over-represented in murder and missing persons statistics. This is where it gets complicated. The amount of success the government sees from this exercise correlates directly with how carefully it listens to the many people across Canada who are affected by this violence. After meeting with a group of indigenous Yellowknife women to glean some pre-inquiry advice last week, Indigenous and Northern Affairs minister Carolyn Bennett said she heard one of the most important things the commission will need to do is understand regional differences between Canadian First Nations and Inuit groups. News North

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Gay Syrian refugee relieved to be in Canada after facing dire threats at home

If it weren't for the castration threats, Rasheed might have believed Syrian police were only hounding him for his political views. He and his friends had begun receiving unwelcome attention from cops in his hometown of Damascus as early as 2012, and they were told that perceived opposition to Syria's extremist government was the reason for the increasingly tense encounters. But Rasheed, who requested not to have his full name used for this story because he hasn't told his family about his sexuality, believes the real motive came to the fore the day he and a few fellow gay men were carted off to a local jail. The police who blindfolded him and beat him with electrical cables made revealing comments after seizing his cell phone containing pictures and videos that made his sexual preferences plain. Amid derogatory taunts and homophobic slurs, he said the officers threatened him with much worse... The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has named single men identifying as gay, bisexual or transgender as among those who are most vulnerable in Syria and in need of urgent relocation to another country. Canada is following the commissioner's guidelines in identifying 25,000 refugees for government-assisted resettlement in the next few months, and has included gay men among priority candidates. They join complete families, women at risk and members of sexual minorities. Canadian Press (iPolitics, Edmonton Sun, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Vancouver Sun, Toronto Sun, Ottawa Citizen)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Religious freedom office faces uncertain future as Liberals consider wider human-rights proposals

The Liberal government is considering whether to scrap Canada's controversial Office of Religious Freedom - considered a signature achievement by the previous Conservative government - and instead focus on ways to champion a broader array of human rights abroad. Unless the new government intervenes, current Ambassador for Religious Freedom Andrew Bennett's three-year term will expire Feb. 18. The office's mandate and funding, about $5 million a year, will run out on March 31. Supporters of the office are urging the Liberals to save it. Others are calling for big changes, if not its outright abolition. The government is weighing its options. "Beyond March, the government has not made a decision with respect to the mandate and associated budget of the office," said Adam Barratt, a spokesman for Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion. "The minister is examining options and how best to build on the work that has been accomplished in the area of religious freedom while promoting human rights as a whole." The Office of Religious Freedom was the subject of controversy even before it was formally established on Feb. 19, 2013. It was promised by the Conservatives during the 2011 election, but some worried it would be used to selectively champion Christianity, woo certain ethnic voter groups and pursue pet projects of the government. Ottawa Citizen

OTHER / AUTRES

Terrorisme: les conservateurs interpellent le gouvernement Trudeau

Réagissant à l'attaque d'Ouagadougou, au Burkina Faso, au cours de laquelle six Québécois ont été tués, la chef intérimaire du Parti conservateur du Canada, Rona Ambrose, a pressé le gouvernement Trudeau de rassurer les Canadiens. Mme Ambrose estime qu'ils ont besoin de savoir qu'Ottawa prend toutes les mesures possibles pour combattre le terrorisme et assurer la sécurité de la population. Elle a incité notamment le gouvernement à revoir ses plans de retrait des CF-18 participant aux frappes contre l'État islamique. Sans surprise, le député conservateur de Louis-Saint-Laurent a répété le même message que Rona Ambrose lorsqu'il a accordé une entrevue à La Presse Canadienne dimanche matin. «Il faut maintenir la pression de toutes les manières possibles entre autres par le maintien des missions aériennes que nos aviateurs canadiens assument avec fierté et diligence», a déclaré Gérard Deltell. Il a poursuivi en faisant valoir qu'il était carrément impossible de «rester insensible» face à ce qui s'est produit au Burkina Faso. «Il est nécessaire de continuer la lutte aux terroristes de toutes les manières possibles pour éradiquer ces ennemis-là», a martelé M. Deltell. Presse canadienne (L'Actualité)

Canadian detained in UAE to go to trial on Monday

A Canadian man detained without charge in the United Arab Emirates for more than a year is expected to finally learn what he's accused of at a trial set to begin on Monday. Salim Alaradi, a 46-year-old Canadian of Libyan origin, was running a business in Dubai when he was abruptly arrested in August 2014. His family and lawyers have received no explanation from U.A.E. authorities for his continued detention and there have been allegations he has been tortured behind bars. Alaradi's trial will be held at the State Security Chamber of the U.A.E. Federal Supreme Court, a venue his Canadian lawyer said suggests he will be charged with terrorism-related offences. Canadian Press (Global News, Vancouver Sun)

Vancouver mayor apologizes to men in mall photos who were labelled 'suspicious'

The mayor of Vancouver has apologized to two men and a teenager singled out in an internal police bulletin for "suspicious behaviour" at a downtown shopping mall. Gregor Robertson says it was a mistake that a document containing unblurred photos of three men described as "Middle Eastern" was leaked and that an online media outlet published the pictures on Thursday. Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press)

Men wanted for taking pictures at Pacific Centre explain what they were doing and claim damage caused by media

On January 15, Vancouver police sent out a media release stating three men previously wanted for questioning in relation to an incident at Pacific Centre were "completely innocent" (...) Before the men were declared innocent, the media outlet that first reported they were of interest to police, VancityBuzz, published photographs that included all three men's faces. That led members of the public to repost those images on Reddit and other online forums, prompting many to search for further information about the men's identities. In another interview, Sharaz, told the Vancouver Sun the three men subsequently feared for their safety. "My son is registered blind, and now when he goes back to school and somebody looks at this picture, his face is clear as day," he said. "It's going to be very difficult for him to get on with the rest of his life. That's the only thing I'm concerned about." Sharaz added he did not fault the police. "I'm just blaming the news—the people who broadcast our pictures without blurring our faces," he said. Georgia Straight

INTERNATIONAL

Deux tornades tuent deux personnes en Floride

Deux adultes ont été tués et quatre enfants sont blessés après le passage de deux tornades dans le centre de l'État de la Floride. Les responsables du comté de Manatee ont déclaré à la chaîne télévisée WFLA-TV que plusieurs personnes avaient été blessées quand le mauvais temps s'est abattu sur Duetta et Siesta Key, dans les comtés de Sarasota et Manatee, tôt dimanche matin. Plusieurs maisons ont été endommagées près de Siesta Key, sur la côte ouest de la Floride. Au moins une demeure a été détruite et une femme a dû être extirpée des décombres par les premiers répondants. Associated Press (Journal Métro)

New York police say assailants chanted 'ISIS' while beating man

New York City police were investigating on Sunday an assault on a man who was pummeled by suspects shouting "ISIS, ISIS," leaving him with bruises on his head and face, authorities said. The 43-year-old man was attacked while walking with a nine-year-old girl in the Bronx around 5:30 p.m. on Friday, according to the New York City Police Department. He was punched several times in the head, knocked down and kicked, police said. The victim, whose name was not given, was treated for injuries at a hospital and released. He had been wearing a shalwar kameez, a traditional South Asian outfit featuring a long tunic, the New York Times reported. The attack comes amid increasing anxiety in the United States over the threat posed by Islamic State, also known as ISIS, which has claimed responsibility for militant attacks around the world. Reuters

Opinion: Muslim states need to stymie radicalism

An opinion piece states "Following the horrific attacks in Indonesia and Turkey carried out by ISIL extremists in the name of Islam, a fundamental question needs to be raised: Why is this group or other extremist Islamic groups able to recruit locals? Why do they find an audience in Islamic countries who are then manoeuvred to attack their own people? Is it possible that certain ideologies have crept into mainstream Islamic schools of thought that aid them? There is absolutely no doubt that the overwhelming majority of Muslims condemn terrorism and absolutely abhor all extremist groups. However, Pew Research recently showed that a tiny minority in many majority Muslim countries hold a favourable view of ISIL. While the percentage is low, these turn out to be alarmingly high numbers. Montreal Gazette

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

The Globe and Mail

How do we help the first responders who endure trauma when helping us? <http://trib.al/l208we>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

rabble.ca

Dear Liberals, We need to talk about Bill C-51 again. Particularly about how terrible it is. <3 rabble <http://buff.ly/234Vlb7> #c51 #cdnpoli

CBC News Alerts

PM is greeted by families of #SyrianRefugees outside #Ontario mosque. Mosque now open after fire.

CBC Canadian News

Trudeau visits Peterborough, Ont., mosque, repaired after arson <http://ift.tt/2081J4i>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

OttawaCitizen

Adami: Court gives man reprieve on deportation to Ukraine where he fears he will be killed <http://bit.ly/1SnXFvz>

HuffPost Canada

U.S. border agents find $1.6M worth of Xanax on Canadian's sled <http://huff.to/1NemUZe>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMPONT

#DYK you can talk to a recruiter at one of our many recruiting events? RCMPCareers.ca #recruitingONT ^TLC

theprovince

RCMP investigate suspicious death of Quesnel man <http://bit.ly/1QfMi7A>

TorontoStar

About 2,700 kg (roughly $28k worth) of lobster stolen from Nova Scotia fishermen <http://on.thestar.com/1PiGrc3>

The Globe and Mail

Sophisticated car theft ring targeting luxury vehicles <http://trib.al/xpFNf4t> From @GlobeToronto

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

OttawaCitizen

Studying, skiing, going to the mall: Omar Khadr settles into his new life <http://bit.ly/1PikFWb>

CSC SCC_en

CSC would like to thank CAC volunteers for their valuable contributions to #CSC public safety results.

COMMUNITY SAFETY AND PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

ipoliticsca

Feminism missing from consultations on missing and murdered women's inquiry: advocates | iPolitics http://ipolitics.ca/2016/01/17/feminism-missing-from-consultations-on-missing-and-murdered-womens-inquiry-advocates/ ...

The Province

Feminism missing from consultations on murdered women's inquiry: advocates <http://bit.ly/1Q7NNCU>

The Georgia Straight

Health Canada steps towards overdose antidote available without prescription <http://bit.ly/1OlmLqU>

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

ipoliticsca

Gay Syrian refugee relieved to be in Canada after facing dire threats at home | iPolitics http://ipolitics.ca/2016/01/17/gay-syrian-refugee-relieved-to-be-in-canada-after-facing-dire-threats-at-home/ ...

AdamScotti

.@JustinTrudeau @MaryamMonsef meet Syrian refugees and help reopen the Masjid Al-Salaam Mosque in #peterborough

Toronto Sun

Gay Syrian refugee relieved to be in Canada after facing threats at home. <http://bit.ly/1Jb4EoW>

Justin Trudeau

"Family 417" is safe in Peterborough - and had a special gift for me today. Welcome to Canada, Amal Alkhalaf.

Maclean's Magazine

A family of Syrian refugees, featured on our cover, meets Justin Trudeau—and brings a gift. <http://ow.ly/XbOLH>

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OttawaCitizen

Single federal public service email system delayed amidst continued glitches <http://bit.ly/1n8FAF8> #cdnpoli

OTHER / AUTRE

CanadaFP

Statement by Min Dion and Min Bibeau concerning the death of more than 20 civilians in Burkina Faso <http://ow.ly/XamUL>

nationalpost

Quebec family on humanitarian mission among six Canadians killed in Burkina Faso attack <http://natpo.st/1ZsdRek>

CBCAlerts

5 out of 6 Canadians killed in #BurkinaFaso identified. 5th person had accompanied family on humanitarian trip:
<http://cbc.ca/1.3407614>

Tony Clement

On @CBCNews to talk the terrorist attack in #BurkinaFaso and what Canada should do...

Lactualite

Terrorisme: les conservateurs interpellent le gouvernement Trudeau <http://bit.ly/2089t6o>

Global Montreal

Canadian detained in UAE to go to trial on Monday <http://gln.ca/Xb3eY>

The Georgia Straight

Men wanted for taking photos at #PacificCentre claim damage caused by media <http://bit.ly/1U58DE0> #Vancouver

Shannon Paterson

Mohammed Sharaz, his son and friend accept mayors apology. VPD have offered to show them the sites this week.

INTERNATIONAL

cyblesoleil

L'EI enlève 400 civils en Syrie après une tuerie <http://goo.gl/WPdlwE>

metromontreal

Deux tornades tuent deux personnes près de Sarasota en Floride - <http://bit.ly/2081O8b>

mtlgazette

Muslim states need to stymie radicalism <http://bit.ly/1Q7AWAt>

Reuters Top News

New York police say assailants chanted 'ISIS' while beating man <http://reut.rs/1Sq9OjH>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Sent to: !INTERNAL + CBSA Today's News + CSC Today's News + PS Today's News + RCMP Today's
News + RCMP Today's News 2

Today's News / Actualités
January 19, 2016 / le 19 janvier 2016
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Torture: la politique de partage de renseignements à l'étude par les libéraux

Les libéraux de Justin Trudeau vont réévaluer des directives controversées promulguées par le gouvernement Harper qui permettent le partage de renseignements même quand ceux-ci peuvent mener à la torture d'une personne, a déclaré le ministre de la Sécurité publique. Une "série de questions troublantes" soulevées par la politique de partage de renseignements avec des pays étrangers "seront abordées dans le cadre de nos consultations" sur la politique nationale globale du nouveau gouvernement, a indiqué Ralph Goodale lors d'une récente entrevue avec La Presse Canadienne. Cette nouvelle fait suite à la pression exercée par des défenseurs des droits humains et aussi du respect de la vie privée qui demandent que soient examinées les politiques de sécurité mises en place par les conservateurs, qui ont été évincés du pouvoir lors de l'élection d'octobre. La politique fédérale sur le partage de renseignements avec des pays étrangers a été critiquée pour avoir comme conséquence, dans les faits, de condamner des personnes à la torture dans des prisons outremer, contrairement au droit international et aux engagements du Canada envers les Nations unies. Presse canadienne (Le Devoir)

Successful settlement of Syrian refugees crucial, Goodale says

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale says it's vital that resettled Syrian refugees are successfully integrated into Canadian towns and cities, not just from a social and cultural perspective, but from a public safety perspective. "It's extremely important that they settle well and successfully and we and the settlement agencies and the provinces and the cities need to work at that to make sure that it is successful. If we, being Canada, are going to maintain our very successful efforts so far at pluralism, at diversity and inclusion . . . then we've got to be among the best in the world at counter-radicalization. "Because if we fail to detect the causes or the signs, or we don't have the capacity to intervene at the right point, and then don't make the intervention successful, then those values of openness and the plural nature of the country will be in jeopardy," he said. "And that's the very essence of Canada, so we've got to do outreach and counter radicalization very well." Three months into his job in charge of Canada's national security agencies, which have been intimately involved in the resettlement project, Goodale says one of the priorities set out in his ministerial mandate letter was to boost efforts to counter violent extremism. At this time, he will say only that "a lot more attention" must be paid to outreach efforts, and the question of increasing funding for such programs and research into what leads people to become radicalized will be answered "a ways down the road." Toronto Star

Canadian on no-fly list for over a decade still searching for answers

The return of Parliament later this month will also mean the return of Bill C-51. The legislation has been contentious from the start. It will expand the powers of Canada's civilian spy agency, streamline information sharing among government departments and allow police to hold people for longer before laying charges. And though Trudeau voted in favour of Bill C-51, he's vowed to amend some of its more controversial parts. Shahid Mahmood is all too familiar with one aspect of the anti-terror legislation — the part expanding the scope of Canada's no-fly list. He is an urban planner and part-time political cartoonist whose name is on a no-fly list... The Current did invite the Minister of Public Safety Ralph Goodale, but he was not available for this segment. CBC Radio – The Current

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Alberta snowmobilers rescued in Golden, B.C., face big bill and potential fines

Four snowmobilers face potential fines and a hefty rescue price tag after their machines were stuck over the weekend in Glacier National Park, where snowmobiling is forbidden. The four men - three from Alberta, one from Saskatchewan - became stranded in the national park near Golden, B.C. on Saturday and needed to be rescued, according to Parks Canada. RCMP said they were advised on Saturday that the group was stranded and required a helicopter to rescue them. Instead, a search and rescue team from Golden headed out on snowmobiles and found the group of four, who were uninjured and waiting at an area cabin. Const. Spencer Lainchbury said the group is believed to have crossed into Glacier National Park when they got stuck and were unable to get their snowmobiles out. CBC News; Canadian Press (Edmonton Sun)

Flood forecasters move into new facility

Manitoba's flood forecasters have left their cramped headquarters in west Winnipeg and moved into roomier digs on Broadway, equipped with the latest technology. "It's a state of the art facility and measures up with any facility that we've seen in North America," said Doug McMahon, an assistant deputy minister responsible for overseeing Manitoba's flood-fighting efforts. McMahon gave reporters - and Premier Greg Selinger - a tour on Tuesday, the final day before a 90-day blackout period on government announcements takes effect in advance of the April 19 provincial election. Improved technology and work space for flood forecasters were among the recommendations of the 2011 Flood Review Task Force report issued in 2013. Winnipeg Free Press

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

Nuclear Threat Initiative gives Canada high score on cyber security but much of world's weapons-grade material 'still to vulnerable to theft'

Much of the world's enriched uranium and plutonium is "too vulnerable to theft" and a cyber attack on a nuclear facility could "facilitate" either theft of nuclear material or sabotage, the Nuclear Threat Initiative warned in a recent report. "Nearly 2,000 metric tons of weapons-usable nuclear materials remain stored around the world, much of it still too vulnerable to theft," wrote Sam Nunn, Co-chairman and CEO of Washington, D.C.-based NTI, in a forward to the 2016 NTI Nuclear Security Index: Theft and Sabotage. "The risk is compounded by the fact that a terrorist group wouldn't need much nuclear material to make a nuclear bomb." Of the 24 nations with weapons-usable nuclear material, nine, including Canada, received the maximum score for cyber security. Seven scored zero. Countries were rated on a scale of 0 to 100, where 100 is the most favourable nuclear security conditions. For risk environment, Canada scored 79. In addition to cyber security, Canada scored 100 each in on-site physical protection, control and accounting procedures, response capabilities, international legal commitments, voluntary commitments, international assurances, domestic nuclear legislation, independent regulatory agency and pervasiveness of corruption. Canada scored 80 on its implementation of United Nations Security Council Resolution 154. That resolution requires all UN members to "have and enforce appropriate and effective measures against the proliferation" of nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons and their delivery systems, the U.S. State Department notes. In NTI's index, Canada scored above average but not 100 in insider threat prevention (67), political stability (85) and effective governance (88). Canada scored average (50) when rated by group (s) interested in committing acts of nuclear terrorism, and number of sites (60). Canadian Underwriter

Internet expert says Twitter outage shows it's important to have options

An Internet expert says sporadic Twitter outages that kept some from using the social media network Tuesday morning highlight the importance of having "other options" for sharing information. Elizabeth Dubois of the University of Ottawa says that while the disruption is "off-putting" for the average person, it can be a "substantial issue" for those who rely on Twitter for work, such as first responders and politicians. Dubois, whose research focuses on technology and communication, says social media users can't count on a one-stop shop given technology's fallible nature. Canadian Press (Toronto Star); Reuters

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Burkina Faso Attacks: RCMP Dispatched After 6 Canadians Killed

RCMP officers have been dispatched to Burkina Faso to help local authorities after more than two dozen people — including six Canadians — were killed in a terrorist attack. A government official, speaking on condition of anonymity, says the Mounties will assist officials with victim identification and paperwork so the bodies of Canadian victims can be returned home. Six Quebecers on a humanitarian mission were killed in Burkina Faso's capital of Ouagadougou last week during an attack carried out by al-Qaida. Canadian Press (Huffington Post); Québec Hebdo

RCMP searching for alleged attempted murder suspect

Police are still looking for a Grand Rapids man wanted for an alleged attempted murder last month. Manitoba RCMP say Alex Sanderson, 22, is considered armed and dangerous. He's wanted in connection with a Dec. 11 shooting and stabbing in Grand Rapids that left two victims with non-life-threatening injuries. Police believe Sanderson may be in Winnipeg, Brandon, Grand Rapids or Easterville and urge the public to call 911 or their local police if they see him. Winnipeg Free Press; CTV News

N.S. RCMP puppy recruit dies following surgery

Just a month after being introduced to the public, one of the Nova Scotia RCMP's newest puppy recruits has died due to complications following surgery. Police say it appears 14-week-old Helo ingested some rocks and rope earlier this month, which caused internal issues. They say Helo received medical care immediately and underwent three surgical procedures. However, he died Monday at the University of Prince Edward Island Atlantic Veterinary College. CTV News; CBC News

Missing Dawson Creek teen seen in Fort St. John area -RCMP

RCMP in Dawson Creek say they have received reports that a missing 15-year-old girl from the city has been spotted in Fort St. John. Alaska Highway News

Seven charged in Muskowekwan home invasion

Mounties are hunting for three men after a violent home invasion on a Saskatchewan First Nation. Police say it happened Monday night at a home on the Muskowekwan First Nation, about 140 kilometres northeast of Regina. RCMP say seven people in disguise forced their way into the home with steel bars, baseball bats and a firearm. The six adults and two children were in the home at the time. Leader-Post; CBC News

Nunavut RCMP investigate stabbing in Pangnirtung - 22-year-old man medevaced to Iqaluit

RCMP are looking for a suspect after a 22-year-old man was stabbed in Pangnirtung, Nunavut, on Saturday. Police say the man was outside his home when he was stabbed. He was medevaced to Iqaluit, where he's being treated for non-life-threatening injuries. CBC News

Wig-wearing suspected bank robber arrested: RCMP

A man wanted in Surrey, B.C., for wearing a unique disguise during a bank robbery is now in custody. RCMP say the 39-year-old Surrey resident has been identified and arrested. Police asked for public help identifying the man following the heist at a financial institution near the Guildford Town Centre on Dec. 29. The man was wearing a patterned dress, white wool sweater, a long blond, curly wig and a pink toque that partially obscured his face. In a release issued Tuesday, Mounties confirmed the man was in custody, but did not release his name or say what led them to him. Canadian Press (CTV News)

Toronto police to get military-style assault rifles – Toronto the last GTA police force to acquire high-powered rifles for its front-line officers

Dozens of front-line Toronto police officers will soon be equipped with semi-automatic assault rifles similar to those carried by Canadian Forces soldiers and specialized tactical units, CBC News has learned. The Toronto Police service is set to buy at least 50 C8 carbine assault rifles from Colt Canada, which is based in Kitchener, Ont. The rifles, which cost $2,000 each, will be carried in patrol cars in all of the city's 17 divisions beginning in May... Dozens of front-line Toronto police officers will soon be equipped with semi-automatic assault rifles similar to those carried by Canadian Forces soldiers and specialized tactical units, CBC News has learned. The Toronto Police service is set to buy at least 50 C8 carbine assault rifles from Colt Canada, which is based in Kitchener, Ont. The rifles, which cost $2,000 each, will be carried in patrol cars in all of the city's 17 divisions beginning in May. CBC News

Marijuana in Montreal: How legalization could affect the illicit drug trade

Philippe Paul spent 28 years with the Montreal Police force, most of that working on the drug and anti-gang squad. Paul is also an expert witness in narcotics trafficking cases and author of the book Coupable d'être policier. Here are key excerpts of his interview with Daybreak host Mike Finnerty. How big is the illicit sale of marijuana? It's quite significant. Quebec-grown marijuana is in demand, in Canada and elsewhere in the world. It's a very large part of organized crime. At least 50 per cent of the narcotics sold here in Quebec is marijuana. What might happen if we legalize marijuana in two years time? CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Lockdown at Ontario prison ends; some inmates had respiratory illness symptoms

A lockdown at a medium security prison in eastern Ontario has ended after two weeks. The lockdown at Warkworth Institution near Campbellford began on Jan. 5 as a precautionary measure after a number of prisoners showed symptoms associated with respiratory illness. The Correctional Service of Canada says it immediately began working with the Haliburton-Kawartha-Pine Ridge District Health Unit to resolve the situation. Regularly scheduled visits were affected and some programs were also suspended. Acting assistant warden Scott MacPherson says the prison has returned to normal operations, including visits to the institution. Canadian Press (News Talk 610 CKTB)

UPDATE: Convicted robber apprehended in Ottawa: OPP

A convicted robber who police say wanted to be paroled to his hometown of Ottawa rather than Kitchener, Ont., has been apprehended, according to the OPP. Ottawa police took Curtis Richard Clorey into custody the morning of Jan. 18, three days after the OPP's repeat offender parole enforcement squad issued a public appeal for help in locating the 22-year-old man. No further details on the arrest were immediately available, including where in Ottawa he was taken into custody... After being behind bars for more than four months at Collins Bay Institution in Kingston, Clorey was released and was to travel to Kitchener and stay in a halfway house and report to a parole officer. Clorey never showed up, breaching his parole, said Sermet. He was to have finished serving his sentence on Aug. 17, 2016. "He didn't want that (Kitchener parole location) at all but that's where (he was assigned by) Corrections Canada," Sermet said. "Corrections Canada wanted him to go there but he has friends and family in Ottawa. He wanted to stay in Ottawa – that's why he didn't report." A Canada-wide warrant was issued for his arrest. Ottawa Community News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Some Canadian refugees are more equal than others

Some refugees and asylum-seekers come to Canada saddled with debt and without full access to health care — and some don't. Which one you are depends on where you're from and when you got here. The federal government's highly publicized Syrian refugee resettlement initiative, a scaled-down version of a Liberal campaign promise, has made for teary airport reunions and galvanized Canadians across the country to help welcome more than 10,000 people making their new home here. But it's also created a stark disparity between different groups of refugees. Refugees who've come to Canada under the feds' Syrian refugee program get full coverage under the Interim Federal Health Program. All other refugees are still subject to cuts imposed by the Conservative government three years ago — cuts the Liberals pledged to reverse but haven't. Global News

Feds may consider forgiving flight costs for all Syrian refugees – McCallum

The federal government may consider forgiving the flight costs for Syrian refugees who came to Canada before the Liberals came to power, the federal immigration minister said Tuesday. Until Nov. 4, all refugees arriving under the government's resettlement programs were required to cover their own airfare, a long-standing policy dating back decades. But the Liberals decided to waive that requirement for Syrian refugees it was bringing to Canada as part of its program to bring 25,000 Syrians to Canada by the end of February and a further 10,000 by the end of 2016. "We only came to power on Nov. 4, so our policy affects post-Nov. 4 refugees," Immigration Minister John McCallum said outside a Liberal cabinet meeting taking place in New Brunswick. "But we will consider whether we should make a special case for the pre-Nov. 4 refugees. That is one of the things that we will be considering very soon." Canadian Press (Ottawa Sun)

Syrian families fill up Ottawa hotels as federal government pauses flow of refugees

Refugee settlement organizations in Ottawa and Vancouver have asked the federal government to stop sending Syrian refugees to their communities, because they have nowhere for them to live. It's a temporary pause of five days in Vancouver, and five-to-seven days in Ottawa. The problem is finding permanent housing for the Syrian families. Although 700 government-sponsored refugees have arrived so far in B.C., only seven families have found permanent housing... "We have received requests to slow down arrivals in some communities, including Ottawa and Vancouver," said a spokesperson for the Ministry of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship in an emailed statement Monday evening. "We are working with them to try to ease the strain they are currently experiencing, which includes pausing arrivals for a few days as we continue toward the goal of resettling 25,000 Syrian refugees across Canada by the end of February. We are redirecting refugees to other centres during this time." Global News

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Canada Wants Drones to Bomb Terrorists, Track Pirates, and Spy on Protesters

The Canadian Air Force is moving ahead with its weaponized drone program, and it's hoping to find a model that's good for everything from blowing up enemy convoys to helping drowning sailors. The government published the call-out to the defense industry on Friday, asking military contractors to spell out how they would build a Canadian drone fleet. The Joint Unmanned Surveillance and Target Acquisition System (JUSTAS), after years of trying to acquire non-weaponized drones, is now searching for a single type of unmanned aerial vehicle to do many different things, including dropping bombs. The Royal Canadian Air Force is hoping to get as many as 12 drones, and wants them to be a veritable Swiss Army knife — able to run top-of-the-line surveillance, but also capable of dropping precision missiles. VICE News

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan says anti-ISIS meetings held 'all the time' - Former Liberal foreign minister Lloyd Axworthy says Canada 'cannot afford to be sidelined' in ISIS fight Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan is rejecting any suggestion that Canada is being sidelined by its anti-ISIS coalition partners, after the minister was not invited to participate in a key meeting with allies in Paris this week. "Not at all," Sajjan told reporters at a cabinet retreat in New Brunswick today. "Meetings happen all the time. There's a number of other meetings that happen that you may not be actually aware of. "I have a meeting at Norad that's happening in a couple of days that's very important ... and I have a couple of meetings that are going to be coming up in the next few weeks to talk about [ISIS]." CBC News; UK Guardian

Can Canada's intelligence capability help in war on ISIL?

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan has been touting the potential for Canada's military to help gather intelligence in Iraq in the battle against Islamic extremists. But with no recent history of meaningful involvement in Iraq or Syria, a scarcity of Arabic speakers, and a lack of intelligence-gathering equipment such as drones, how much of a contribution can Canada's military make? In late December, Sajjan told journalists that the Liberal government is considering contributing an intelligence capability to the war against the Islamic State, including helping improve the abilities of Iraqi security forces to target extremists. He suggested the Canadian Forces have technology to play this role but didn't specify whether that would be equipment on the ground or in the air. In other interviews, the minister has stated that Canada's intelligence capabilities are second to none and the government was looking at how to increase that in the Iraq war. Ottawa Citizen

Burkina Faso: Quebec volunteer program 'intensifies' security measures

The director of a Quebec-based volunteer program in Burkina Faso says the group has no plans to leave their work in West Africa, but will strengthen its security policies following last weekend's attack on a hotel and café popular with foreigners. Uniterra, part of the International Centre for Studies and Cooperation in Montreal, has been working on development programs in Burkina Faso and other West African countries for several years. Director Odette McCarthy said volunteers based in Burkina Faso had noted increased security concerns on the border with Mali in recent years. However, the attack in Ougadougou, which left 29 people dead, came as a shock... "There were recommendations to avoid obviously public places, places where foreigners are to go, but that directive is definitely being intensified in terms of having a very clear list of places not to go," McCarthy said. "The rise of terrorist acts, randomly choosing targets in different countries across the world, is going to shape the way that we inform people, and we prepare them and the security measures we have in place. Our organization and many others are going to continue to adjust to this new reality."... Currently, the Canadian government has an advisory to "exercise a high degree of caution" in Burkina Faso with regional advisories about travel near the Mali border. Canada has a similar advisory for France and Belgium. CBC News

Aid workers 'deliberately targeted,' says head of Canadian Foodgrains Bank

The nature of their jobs used to keep foreign aid workers safe from attacks, but now they're facing greater risks, says the head of a Winnipeg-based charity. On Friday six aid workers from Quebec died when four fighters linked to al-Qaeda attacked the Burkina Faso luxury hotel where the Canadians were staying. "There used to be a sense in conflict zones that aid workers were protected, that no one would attack them. That in many places is gone," said Jim Cornelius, executive director of Canadian Foodgrains Bank in Winnipeg. The organization offers emergency food assistance to the developing world. "In fact, aid workers at times are deliberately targeted," he said, adding that isn't what happened in Burkina Faso. "What was being targeted was the bigger system of westerners, and those that were from outside in the country - so aid workers - become part of that bigger group." CBC News

John Ivison: How can the Liberals leave others to defend our national security?

An opinion piece states "Tuesday, October 7, 2014 will go down as a day of ignominy for the Liberal Party of Canada. For crass electoral reasons, the party voted that day against the Conservative motion to send CF-18 fighters to join the coalition arranged against the barbarians of the Islamic State, the militant group who, at the time, were knocking at the gates of Baghdad. Calculating that the war would become unpopular, particularly in Quebec, the Trudeau Liberals locked themselves into a position advocating a 'military role of a non-combat nature.' That they still haven't found a face-saving way to fix that blunder is now Canada's disgrace. Camille Carrier, the mother of Maude Carrier, who was killed in a terror attack by Islamic fundamentalists in Burkina Faso on Friday, said she is ashamed of Canada. "I have plenty of friends in France who are ashamed of us," she said, as she called for military action against jihadist forces.... It's still not clear what Canada's response will be. Sajjan said last week he is still assessing that role after a Christmas visit to Iraq. But it seems whatever we do, we will cling to the notion of a military, non-combat role. This, despite the unprovoked attack last week by jihadist zealots that left six Canadians dead for the crime of building a school in Burkina Faso. This, despite a UN Security Council resolution that calls for members to "take all necessary measures" to prevent and suppress terrorist acts committed by ISIL. This, despite this country's proud record in Afghanistan and beyond in defence of human rights and justice. We know that more attacks are being planned, here and abroad, whether we fight back or not." National Post

INTERNATIONAL

'Jihadi John' confirmed dead by ISIS-linked media outlet - U.S. military said in November it was 'reasonably certain' the combatant was killed in a drone strike

A magazine associated with ISIS released a eulogy on Tuesday for "Jihadi John", a member of the militant group who won global notoriety for his filmed executions of hostages, the monitoring organisation SITE reported. The militant, who was identified as Mohammed Emwazi, a British citizen of Arab origin, was described in Islamic State's Dabiq magazine by his nickname in the group of "Abu Muharib al-Muhajir". The U.S. military said in November it was "reasonably certain" it had killed Emwazi in a drone strike. Reuters (CBC News)

Une loi antiterroriste « incompatible » avec les droits de la personne

La législation antiterroriste britannique est « incompatible » avec la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme (CEDH), ont estimé mardi des juges britanniques en se penchant sur une affaire liée aux révélations d'Edward Snowden. La Cour d'appel de Londres avait été saisie par David Miranda, le compagnon de l'ex-journaliste du Guardian, Glenn Greenwald, qui contestait son arrestation à l'aéroport de Heathrow en 2013. David Miranda avait été arrêté à l'aéroport londonien alors qu'il était en transit entre l'Allemagne et le Brésil, où il réside avec Glenn Greenwald. Il était en possession de fichiers relatifs aux documents obtenus par l'ex-consultant de la NSA (Agence de sécurité américaine) Edward Snowden révélant l'ampleur des programmes de surveillance américain et britannique. Il avait passé neuf heures en détention et la police avait saisi son ordinateur portable, son téléphone et ses cartes mémoires. Les avocats du Brésilien avaient déploré une « atteinte disproportionnée à son droit à la liberté d'expression ». AFP (Le Devoir)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

TorontoStar

Successful settlement of Syrian refugees crucial, Goodale says <http://on.thestar.com/1Pfr1fb> #topstories

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

TheCurrentCBC

Canadian on no-fly list for 11 years shares his Kafkaesque tale, and thoughts on Bill C-51. <http://cbc.ca/1.3409941>

Lactualite

Torture: la politique de partage de renseignements à l'étude par les libéraux <http://bit.ly/1SuZu9W>

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

GetCyberSafe

Your password is the key to your personal info. Avoid getting hacked – don't write it down!
<http://www.getcybersafe.gc.ca/cnt/prtct-yrslf/prctcn-dntty/usng-psswrds-eng.aspx> ...

cyber securite

Votre mot de passe donne accès à vos renseignements personnels. Ne l'écrivez surtout pas!
<http://www.pensezcybersecurite.gc.ca/cnt/prtct-yrslf/prctcn-dntty/usng-psswrds-fr.aspx> ...

SCMagazine

Gatekeeper flaw opens #Apple systems to intrusion | <http://ow.ly/Xhsum>

CBCNews

Glitch disrupts Twitter service <http://www.cbc.ca/1.3409783>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

HuffPostCanada

RCMP sent to Burkina Faso after 6 Canadians killed in attack <http://huff.to/1PoALhb>

HuffPostCanada

RCMP puppy recruit dies from surgical complications <http://huff.to/1nwxHT2>

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

TheWestBlock

Syrian families fill up Ottawa hotels as federal government pauses flow of refugees <http://gln.ca/Xi4oz> #cdnpoli

globalnews

In its push to resettle Syrian #refugees, is Canada creating a 2-tier system? <http://gln.ca/XhS43> #cdnpoli @amp6

OTHER / AUTRE

vicenews

Canada wants drones to bomb terrorists, track terrorists, and spy on protesters: <http://bit.ly/1nj3Lkz>

OttawaCitizen

Can Canada's intelligence capability help in war on ISIL? #cdnpoli <http://ow.ly/XhZxV>

CBCNews

No invite to Paris anti-ISIS meeting? No problem, says Canada's defence minister <http://ift.tt/1Isvdu6>

guardian

Canada's Conservatives call Justin Trudeau 'incoherent' in fight against Isis <http://trib.al/EJzYRwC>

INTERNATIONAL

Ottawa Citizen

Wesley Wark: Canada increasing intelligence efforts against terrorism a good idea <http://ow.ly/XhIPz> #Cdnpoli

CBCNews

'Jihadi John' confirmed dead by ISIS-linked media outlet <http://ift.tt/1Pf5rHP>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Sent to: INTERNAL + CBSA Today's News + CSC Today's News + PS Today's News + RCMP Today's
News + RCMP Today's News 2

Today's News / Actualités
January 24, 2016 / le 24 janvier 2016
09:00 - 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 09:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.

Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 09h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

All of Canada is 'standing' with community of La Loche: Goodale

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale says all of Canada is standing with the community of La Loche, Sask., as it grieves for four residents who were killed in a mass shooting. Goodale is scheduled to travel to La Loche on Sunday, along with Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall and AFN Chief Perry Bellegarde, to meet with local residents and extend their condolences. "(The purpose of the visit) is to share the grief and the necessary healing in that community," Goodale told CTV News Channel in a phone interview on Sunday. "That's number one: to share in that horrible sense of loss and to make the point that the country is standing with them." Goodale also said it would be important for the visiting leaders to listen to the needs of the community. "This is a community that has had difficulties in the past, and they have a sense that governments haven't listened to them well enough," he said. "Solutions here need to be built from the community up, not from the top down." Police say a gunman shot and killed four people and injured seven others on Friday at two different locations in La Loche, a remote community of about 3,000 people... On Saturday, RCMP announced that they had charged a 17-year-old suspect with four counts of first-degree murder in the case... About 250 mourners gathered in a Roman Catholic church in the community on Sunday, where Archbishop Murray Chatlain offered encouraging words to attendees. CTV News

Tuerie à La Loche: la convalescence sera longue, dit un archevêque

Les gens de La Loche devraient se concentrer sur leur générosité en ces temps difficiles, a déclaré l'archevêque Murray Chatlain à l'occasion de l'office dominical dans une église catholique de la communauté autochtone du nord de la Saskatchewan. Mgr Chatlain a reconnu que la convalescence serait longue à la suite de la fusillade qui a fait quatre morts et sept blessés dans le village vendredi, mais a insisté sur le fait que cette tragédie ne définissait pas La Loche et ses habitants, qui sont des gens loyaux et bons. L'archevêque de Keewatin-Le Pas a révélé avoir rencontré les proches des victimes ainsi que la famille du garçon de 17 ans qui fait face à quatre chefs d'accusation de meurtre prémédité, sept chefs de tentative de meurtre et un chef de possession illégale d'une arme à feu... La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) de la Saskatchewan a indiqué que neuf personnes avaient été atteintes par balles durant une période de huit minutes à l'école communautaire La Loche vendredi après-midi... Le premier ministre de la province, Brad Wall, et le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, ont rencontré les leaders de la communauté à La Loche, dimanche soir, après que leur avion eut été retardé en raison des conditions météorologiques. Presse Canadienne (L'actualité) ;

Saskatchewan Premier's arrives in La Loche after travel delay

Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall has arrived in the community of La Loche – where a shooting involving a school claimed four lives – after his visit was initially delayed due to poor weather. Premier Wall, Minister of Public Safety Ralph Goodale and Assembly of First Nations National Chief Perry Bellegarde landed in La Loche on Sunday afternoon, after their flight was initially diverted to Fort McMurray, Alberta, due to fog. Globe & Mail

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News reported Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale's comments on the importance of supporting the community of La Loche, SK. Rough Transcript

CTV News reported Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale's comments on rebuilding in the aftermath of the shooting in La Loche, SK. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Snowmobiler dies in avalanche northeast of Prince George

An avalanche northeast of Prince George has claimed the life of a snowmobiler. According to Prince George Search and Rescue, five snowmobilers were riding in the Torpy area Saturday when one of the members of the group was caught up in an avalanche. The other four riders were uninjured and notified RCMP. Global News; CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

All eyes on the economy as Parliament returns

After spending most of last week in Switzerland with some of the world's biggest movers and shakers, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and his ministers get down to the nitty-gritty business of governing when Parliament resumes on Monday... Here are some of the matters the new government will be tackling during a busy winter... Bill C-51: The Liberals promised to repeal the problematic parts of the Conservatives' anti-terror bill and replace it with new legislation. The bill is one of several Conservative laws the new government will be reviewing. Metro News

Terrorism forum coming to the Lower Mainland

Attacks like those in Paris or San Bernardino, California can have a big impact on us, but can also leave us wondering how to respond. A local university is set to host an event that will focus in part, on answering that question. "Terrorism is, of course, something that is experienced locally. It happens in shopping malls, on buses, sporting events, someone's backyard, and of course, not just our backyard, but other folks' backyard as well," explains Ken Brealey with the University of the Fraser Valley... The forum, called "Towards Peace and Security: Putting Terrorism in its Place" will include speakers within and outside of, the university. It's happening at 6:00 Tuesday evening, in the Student Union Building. News 1130

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

Les voitures intelligentes sous la loupe du commissaire à la vie privée

Pendant que les constructeurs automobiles mettent au point des techniques de pointe pour emmagasiner les données personnelles des conducteurs, le commissariat à la protection de la vie privée tente de s'assurer qu'il n'y ait pas trop de dérapages sur cette autoroute technologique. On sait déjà que des systèmes de navigation routière peuvent déterminer où se trouve un véhicule et où il a été. Mais de nouvelles composantes électroniques permettent désormais de stocker et d'analyser des données sur les habitudes de ceux et celles qui utilisent une voiture et sur leur conduite. Presse Canadienne (Journal Métro) ; Canadian Press (Yahoo! News, Lethbridge Herald, Vancouver Sun)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Accused in La Loche shooting is related to two victims

The teenager accused of murdering four people and wounding seven others in La Loche, Saskatchewan, is related to two of the victims. The accused 17-year-old boy is a cousin to the 13-year-old and 17-year-old victims, according to Ronnie Lemaigre, a member of the community and heavily involved in the family's Catholic church. Archbishop Murray Chatlain said the same. The three were close, often referred to as brothers by people in this isolated Dene community, and their mothers are sisters. The three cannot be identified because of their age. Mr. Lemaigre believes one of the mothers dropped them off at school before flying to her job at a uranium mine Friday. Globe & Mail

Court appearance for 17 year old charged in La Loche shootings set for Monday

The 17 year old boy charged in Friday's mass shooting in La Loche will be in Meadow Lake court Monday for his first court appearance. The boy, who can't be named, faces four charges of first-degree murder and seven counts of attempted murder after going on a rampage at a home in the small northern Saskatchewan town of 3-thousand people and the community school. Two people were killed in a home with two teachers being killed at the school before the boy was brought into custody. 620 CKRM; Daily Herald

La Loche teen facing four first-degree murder counts in shooting spree

"It's scary, you know?" said Paula Montgrand as she served customers behind the counter at a fried chicken restaurant as a fine, wet snow fell on this tiny northern community. "You only see this stuff happening out there - you don't think of it happening in a small town." As the sun began to sink into the leaden sky late Saturday afternoon, RCMP officers were still present at a yellow clapboard house on Dene Crescent, its white picket fence draped in yellow police tape. Through a shattered front window, a member of the police forensic identification team could be seen moving through the house wearing a protective white suit. The horror that rocked La Loche to the core on Friday came to a "surreal" climax Saturday as a 17-year-old suspect, who can't be named under the Youth Criminal Justice Act, was officially charged with four counts of first-degree murder and seven counts of attempted murder (...)

At a news conference, RCMP Supt. Grant St. Germaine said, "There has never been a (secondary) school shooting of this magnitude in this country." He said police have no indication of the shooter's motive. Toronto Star; Globe and Mail

Family of alleged La Loche shooter are "good people"

Recent cuts to school supports and other services must be reviewed in light of Friday's shooting, the local archbishop said following a packed service at Our Lady of Visitation Roman Catholic Church Sunday morning. "There has been some cutting back of programs these last couple of years that has had a direct effect on our schools and people of La Loche. I think those things need to be revisited. Our cuts sometimes end up costing more," Diocese of Keewatin Le Pas Archbishop Murray Chatlain said. When asked if he thinks the cuts played a role in the tragedy, Chatlain said, "It's a possibility. There are many factors at play. That could be part of it." Canadian Press (Whig-Standard, London Free Press)

'They were my best friends': Emotional grandfather mourns teen boys slain in La Loche shooting

The grandfather of two boys killed in a shooting at a La Loche home Friday said he can't believe his "two babies" are dead. "They were my best friends," Norman Fontaine said of the boys. "Never again, I guess." Dayne Fontaine, 17, and Drayden Fontaine, 13, have been identified as the victims. Norman heard the news while driving out of La Loche Friday, and turned around his vehicle immediately. He said the news is particularly hard on the boys' grandmother. Norman said family members gathered at a La Loche home Friday evening, and more are expected to arrive today. Postmedia News (National Post)

La Loche, the Canadian Town Where 4 Were Killed, Has a Bleak History

Sudden deaths in La Loche, Saskatchewan, where shootings at two locations left four people dead and seven wounded on Friday, are an all too familiar event. But before Friday, suicide was the main cause of such deaths (...) La Loche is more than seven hours northwest of the nearest major city, Saskatoon. It is a community with high levels of unemployment and addiction to drugs and alcohol and a reputation as a tough town. In 2011, two Mounties were forced to barricade themselves into the local health clinic when a mob attacked them after incorrectly assuming that the officers had beaten a man who had been injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident. A police truck was also burned, and an ambulance badly damaged. When La Loche appears in the provincial news media, it is usually in connection with violence or drug arrests. New York Times (2016-01-23)

Taxes stables en 2016 à Clair

La taxe foncière et la facture annuelle d'aqueduc demeureront inchangées dans le Village de Clair en 2016. Dans un budget de 971 000 $ en 2016, la taxe foncière sera maintenue à 1,23 $ par 100 $ d'évaluation. La facture annuelle du service d'eau et d'égout demeurera à 432 $. Le maire Pierre Michaud reconnaît qu'il n'est pas facile pour les municipalités de réussir à équilibrer les budgets sans hausser les taxes... Le maire Michaud faisait allusion à la facture annuelle pour les services de la GRC qui sera en hausse de 13 000 $, pour atteindre 161 000 $. «Les coûts de la GRC sont passés de 112 000 $ à 161 000 $ depuis 2013 alors que nous avons la même population de 850 habitants. Un moment donné, il faut être logique avec les choses. Au niveau de la protection publique, notre brigade de pompiers volontaires en fait beaucoup également, notamment comme premiers répondants, mais nous ne sommes pas nécessairement en mesure de mieux l'outiller», a ajouté le maire Michaud en laissant entendre que la localité aimerait bien construire une nouvelle caserne d'incendie, mais qu'elle doit s'y résigner. Acadie Nouvelle

RCMP say it's too early to deem hunting death accidental

RCMP are saying it's too early to determine whether a hunting-related death in Saddle Hills County last week was an accident. Four people were hunting near Bonanza on Monday, Jan. 18, when one of the group's members, a 26-year-old man, died from a single gunshot wound, Alberta RCMP said in a media release Saturday. Alaska Highway News

Vol à main armée à Moncton: suspect recherché

L'unité des crimes sérieux du détachement Codioc de la GRC est à la recherche d'un homme à la suite d'un vol à main armée commis dans le dépanneur JJ's Convenience Store à Moncton, samedi matin. L'appel d'urgence a été fait à 7 h 43. Acadie Nouvelle

Rivière-Verte: des voleurs se servent dans les voitures non verrouillées

La GRC de Rivière-Verte a reçu plusieurs plaintes au cours de la dernière semaine concernant des vols dans les véhicules. Tous les vols ont été perpétrés dans des véhicules qui n'étaient pas fermés à clef. Acadie Nouvelle

Airdrie RCMP reportedly clock alleged impaired driver travelling at 202 km/h

A man from Carstairs faces dangerous driving and impaired driving charges following a Saturday evening traffic stop on a highway east of Crossfield. "Mixing alcohol with high speed in poor visibility is a recipe for disaster," said RCMP Constable Matt Gervais. "We are lucky the traffic unit was in the right place at the right time to prevent anything serious from occurring." CTV News

Airdrie RCMP use spike belt and gps to capture stolen truck

GPS tracking and a spike belt were deployed by the RCMP on Saturday in the pursuit of a stolen vehicle. On Jan. 23, near 8 p.m., Airdrie RCMP were advised that a stolen truck was entering their patrol area. It had been reported stolen from a Sylvan Lake business earlier and was being tracked by GPS. Metro News

Kelowna RCMP make dramatic takedown

A series of bizarre incidents led to a dramatic takedown on Sunset Drive in Kelowna Sunday morning. RCMP say they received multiple calls about a man acting violently and bleeding from the head. Residents of a townhome reported the man crashed through a large window and came into their home. When police arrived, the man was out on the street and being combative. Several RCMP vehicles were called to the scene to help with the takedown. "I do know that... a taser may have been used," said Sgt. Brad Swecera, "as well as other devices such as pepper spray." Global News

RCMP investigate fatal stabbing near Lytton

A 38-year-old man is dead after a stabbing near Lytton on Friday night. It happened on a rural property on Two Mile Road at about 7:45 p.m., according to Southeast District RCMP. Police said the victim was rushed to hospital, but couldn't be saved. A 19-year-old man has been arrested in connection to the death, RCMP said in a statement. Police have not released the names of the victim or the arrested man. CBC News

Ways to cut Toronto Police budget

An opinion piece by Norm Gardner, former chairman of the Toronto Police Services Board, states, "The Toronto Police budget is once again under scrutiny by critics who see it as bloated, and management is looking for efficiencies without compromising public safety. I would like to offer suggestions — some of which might require changes in provincial legislation — for consideration. Uniformed civilian employees could be trained to investigate traffic accidents, freeing up police officers to enhance other areas of enforcement. Traffic aides are used extensively by major U.S. law enforcement agencies..." Toronto Sun

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News interviewed former director of Health with Métis Nation Saskatchewan regarding the shooting in La Loche. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Sunday Scrum discussed the responses of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall and media to Friday's school shooting in La Loche, SK. Rough Transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Police hunting inmate after Kingston, Ont. Jailbreak

The Ontario Provincial Police are conducting a manhunt after an inmate escaped from Collins Bay Institution. A statement from the Correctional Service of Canada says inmate Marc Leroux was missing during the 11:15 a.m. head count at the minimum-security facility Saturday. The CSC notified the OPP's Joint Penitentiary Squad and a warrant was issued for his arrest. Global News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

On a 'good path,' away from drugs

Judge Ernie Quantz looked at the young woman sitting before him in provincial court. She had been there many times over the years. Natasha Day, a crystal meth addict living on the streets since she was 16, had a long criminal history of drug and property offences. But this court appearance would be different. Quantz accepted Day's guilty pleas for possession for the purpose of trafficking, possession of a controlled substance and possession of stolen property under $5,000. He also accepted a joint submission by the Crown and defence lawyers to keep her out of jail and place her on probation for three years, based on her "impressive efforts" at rehabilitation. "Ms. Day, I would never have predicted this," Quantz said Thursday. "What stands out in this case, and I think it's exceptional, you haven't just told me what you think I want to hear. You've essentially done everything that could be expected in a one-year period." Defence lawyer Michael Munro said the 29-year-old had undergone a transformation after entering a residential treatment program at Harte House in Surrey. Times Colonist

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Attentat terroriste au Burkina Faso: les corps des 6 Québécois rapatriés mardi

Les corps des six travailleurs humanitaires de la région de Québec qui ont été tués dans l'attaque terroriste du 15 janvier dernier au Burkina Faso devraient être rapatriés mardi. C'est ce qu'a indiqué Frédéric Carrier, qui a perdu son père et sa soeur dans l'attentat qui a fait au total 30 morts. M. Carrier se dit soulagé puisqu'il craignait que les dépouilles soient retenues au Burkina Faso pendant une longue période, pour les besoins de l'enquête. Les funérailles pourront maintenant être planifiées. Presse Canadienne \(L'Actualité\) ; Montreal Gazette; CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

Magnitude 6.8 earthquake hits Alaska, 1 home explodes

A magnitude-6.8 earthquake knocked items off shelves and walls in south-central Alaska and jolted the nerves of residents in this earthquake-prone region. But there were no immediate reports of injuries. One home was extensively damaged and an entire neighbourhood was evacuated after a gas leak was reported, Kenai Police Chief Gus Sandahl said Sunday morning. The earthquake struck about 1:30 a.m. Alaska time and was centred 53 miles west of Anchor Point in the Kenai Peninsula, which is about 160 miles southwest of Anchorage, according to the U.S. Geological Survey. About two hours later, a magnitude-4.3 aftershock hit the Cook Inlet, the agency said. A slightly stronger aftershock - magnitude-4.7 - hit the Cook Inlet at 5.29 a.m. Associated Press (Hamilton Spectator, Whig-Standard, Winnipeg Sun, Toronto Sun)

UK reports Zika cases

Three British travelers have been infected with the Zika virus, health officials revealed this week. "As of January 2016, three cases associated with travel to Colombia, Suriname and Guyana have been diagnosed in UK travelers," Public Health England said on its website. The government agency did not provide further details about the cases but added that the virus "does not occur naturally in the UK." Zika "is not spread directly from person to person," it said. CNN

Disquiet grows over French state of emergency

When a state of emergency was imposed in France after the November attacks, numb and terror-weary citizens welcomed the show of force. But a sense of creeping unease over civil liberties has turned to outright opposition in many quarters as French President Francois Hollande indicated this week he would seek to renew the measure for another three months. Digital Journal

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

WatchCTVNews

LIVE NOW: Sask. premier, AFN chief and Ralph Goodale to visit La Loche community. ow.ly/Xt9VN

CKOMNews

RT @BrynLevy: Premier Brad Wall, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale, other provincial ministers arrived in #LaLoche for meeting

CJMENews

MT @BrynLevy: Premier Brad Wall, Fed Minister Ralph Goodale, other provincial ministers have arrived in #LaLoche for meeting with community.

Devin_Heroux

Not far behind Premier, Chief @perrybellegarde and Minister of Public Safety @RalphGoodale in #LaLoche @CBCAlerts

CTVLethbridge

All of Canada is 'standing' with community of La Loche: Public Safety Minister Goodale bit.ly/20n8Aai

CTVMorningYYC

All of Canada is 'standing' with community of La Loche: Public Safety Minister Goodale bit.ly/20n8Aai

dbrunetv

L'avion de @PremierBradWall , @perrybellegarde et @RalphGoodale vient d'atterrir à La Loche. Vol a été retardé à cause du brouillard. #rcsk

CBC News Alerts

Saskatchewan @PremierBradWall's visit to #LaLoche, #Sask., delayed. He is flying to FortMcMurray, #Alberta.

Global Montreal

Public safety minister, Sask. premier head to La Loche after deadly shooting <http://gln.ca/XsZ3e>

CBC News Alerts

Teen boy accused in #LaLoche, Sask. shootings to appear in court in Meadow Lake on Monday: <http://cbc.ca/1.3416918>

Métro Montréal

Le ministre Ralph Goodale se rend à La Loche #Saskatchewan - <http://bit.ly/1QmtjGo>

News 1130

Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall, Federal Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale and several other ministers will travel to #LaLoche today.

HuffPost Québec

La Loche endeuillée, Ralph Goodale s'y rendra #Saskatchewan <http://huff.to/1VibrOc>

Sukh Dhaliwal

@fromnewton @RalphGoodale 75 officers already on the ground in #SurreyBC 10 likely arrived this month & 15 more by Apr. deadline #Cdnpoli

Philip Mai

A Good Start...but Only a Start: Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale on government plans for Bill C-51 <http://www.cbc.ca/radio>

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

HuffPost Canada

Privacy watchdog examining smart cars that can share driving info <http://huff.to/1S3OKQi>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

cyblesoleil

Fusillade en Saskatchewan: la convalescence sera longue, dit un archevêque goo.gl/9qSwNj pic.twitter.com/F733AVt2O3

TorontoStar

"I kind of feel like she's out there." Brother remembers #LaLoche victim Marie Janvier <http://on.thestar.com/1ZKIZG2>

The New York Times

La Loche, the Canadian Town Where 4 Were Killed, Has a Bleak History <http://nyti.ms/1OFMn1X>

Devin Heroux

An image that'll stick with me for a while. Don Herman stares at #LaLoche school remembering his 2 nephews killed.

Maclean's Magazine

In #LaLoche, hurt, grief and disbelief: @Markusoff reports <http://ow.ly/XstM7>

The National

The uncle of two teenagers killed in #LaLoche says the local graveyard is running out of room because of suicides in the community.

GlobalOkanagan

WATCH: Here's some of the footage from a police take down in downtown Kelowna this morning: globalnews.ca/news/2474208/k...

RightBrainNic

RCMP are now saying it's too early to determine if a Jan. 18 hunting related death in Saddle Hills County was an... fb.me/4tdXActSK

Savard Dacadie

Vol à main armée à Moncton: suspect recherché acadienouvelle.com/actualites/201... via @acadienouvelle

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

GlobalLeth

Police hunting inmate after Kingston, Ont. jailbreak gln.ca/XsMrV pic.twitter.com/uLBbeUubOd

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

The West Block

Should citizenship for refugees and immigrants be tied to residency? @TheWestBlock on Global TV at 11 am Est.

OTHER / AUTRES

Magazine L'actualité

Attentat terroriste au Burkina Faso: les corps des 6 Québécois rapatriés mardi <http://bit.ly/1RH8iJM>

CBC Montreal

Burkina Faso: Quebecers' bodies to be sent home <http://ift.tt/1nstois>

Blogs

Canada could be caught in privacy perfect storm due to the TPP

An opinion piece by Michael Geist states "The Trouble with the TPP has examined the barriers to data localization requirements an emerging policy choice for countries concerned with weak privacy protections once personal data is transferred outside the country. The TPP goes further in undermining potential privacy protections, however, as it also establishes a ban on data transfer restrictions. Data transfer restrictions are a key element of the European approach to privacy, which restricts data transfers to those countries with laws that meet the "adequacy" standard for protection. That approach is becoming increasingly popular, particularly in light of the Snowden revelations about governmental surveillance practices. Several TPP countries, including Malaysia, Singapore and Chile, are moving toward data transfer restrictions as are countries such as Brazil and Hong Kong. Rabble.ca

Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca.

Today's News / Actualités
January 25, 2016 / le 25 janvier 2016
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

House of Commons pauses for moment of silence for La Loche victims

There could be help for remote communities in the coming federal budget, Saskatchewan's lone cabinet minister hinted Monday as Parliament remembered the victims of last week's deadly shooting in La Loche. The remote northern town is just one of many isolated communities in need of help, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said after the first question period of 2016 — one that included MPs bowing their heads for a moment of silence. "The lessons from La Loche will have broader application than just this one community," Goodale said outside the Commons. "La Loche, obviously, has particular difficulties but you will find similar problems in other communities as well." Members from all sides of the Commons spoke of the loss that still echoes from the tragedy, in which four people were killed and seven others wounded in La Loche, a remote northern town populated predominantly by First Nations members. "The entire government and, indeed, the country, stands with the community of La Loche," said Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. "Our heartfelt condolences go out to the community, to the family members and we offer all our support." ... Goodale said he had also spoken with Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall about the lack of infrastructure in La Loche, in particular, as a possible reason why people may feel isolated, and said the tragic shooting has focused a light on problems in the community that need to be addressed. “We are going to listen to the messages from this community and work with them, and work with the province, and work with First Nations organizations to do what needs to get done.” Canadian Press (Blackburn News, Hamilton Spectator, Maclean's)

'Every one of us in La Loche has been victimized,' shooting victim's aunt says

Annette Montgrand, who had a family member shot on Friday afternoon in La Loche, Sask., says this is her third family member who has been shot in the past seven years in the northern Saskatchewan community. She carries a lot of pain as she waits at a hospital in Saskatoon to support her family member injured in the latest shooting... On the weekend, Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall and Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale arrived in La Loche and spoke about the need for change in the community of around 3,000. Montgrand said it's unfortunate it's taken this event to get promises of change. CBC News

Editorial: Tragedy in La Loche deserves Trudeau's presence

An editorial states “Prime Minister Justin Trudeau spent much of last week at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland. By all accounts, it was a successful tour on the world stage for the prime minister, with many of the attendees buzzing over the Trudeau team’s “Canada is back” message. He was also photographed having meetings, both official and casual, with a broad sampling of the global celebrityariat, including Bono, Melinda Gates, Sheryl Sandberg and Jack Ma. Then, in the last days of the Davos conference, tragedy struck in the First Nations community of La Loche, some 600 kilometres north of Saskatoon. Four people were left dead in a shooting rampage, and seven remain in critical condition. A 17-year-old has been charged with murder, attempted murder and other offences... Yes, Ralph Goodale, Trudeau's public safety minister, went. Brad Wall, the premier of Saskatchewan, has gone, too, as has Perry Bellegarde, national chief of the Assembly of First Nations. Trudeau made a lot of noise — rightly — on the campaign trail about First Nations, about a new relationship, about fixing problems, about righting historical wrongs. But then, sadly, he isn't present for the first major tragedy of his time in office... Trudeau, on the First Nations file as others, was positioning himself as the opposite of Harper — accountable and open. He was going to lead from the vanguard. This is why he should be in La Loche now, not just Goodale. There are a myriad of reasons why getting there would've been complicated. But the kind of guy Trudeau said he was to Canadians would've made it work. He should be there, spending time with the heartbroken people in a small town with two bars and a liquor store on Main Street, but no hotel and no family restaurant. Goodale has said Trudeau will visit as soon as possible. Good. His heart is clearly with the people of La Loche. The rest of him should be, too.” Ottawa Citizen

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News' Power & Politics interviewed Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale regarding the shooting in La Loche, Saskatchewan. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Power & Politics held a panel discussion with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Safety, Michel Picard, public safety Conservative critic, Erin O'Toole, and Charlie Angus, NDP critic for indigenous and northern affairs regarding the shooting in La Loche, Saskatchewan. Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale was mentioned during this segment. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Power & Politics interviewed former chief of the Clearwater River Dene Nation, Roy Cheecham, regarding the shooting in La Loche, Saskatchewan. Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale was mentioned during this segment. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Helicopter searchers find 2 snowmobilers missing north of Baie-Comeau

An RCAF search-and-rescue helicopter located a pair of snowmobilers Monday morning, after they got lost in a remote area about 330 kilometres north of Baie-Comeau. CBC News

Sunrise Propane hit with $5.3M in fines for 2008 blast

A fiery explosion at a Toronto propane plant that forced thousands out of their homes in the dead of night and claimed the life of an employee caused "unprecedented" devastation, an Ontario judge ruled in imposing $5.3 million in fines against the company and its directors. Sunrise Propane, which is no longer in operation, has two years to pay $5.1 million, while its directors Shay Ben-Moshe and Valery Belahov have three years to each pay $100,000, Justice Leslie Chapin said Monday... Though the disaster has since been eclipsed by the deadly train derailment in Lac-Mégantic, it remains significant enough to warrant serious fines, the judge said. Canadian Press (Winnipeg Sun,

Pioneer female firefighter loved her job

Cindy Maltman can remember every detail of her first "big fire" as a rookie firefighter. It was at an abandoned house in Burnaby and, luckily, no lives were in danger. "We pulled up, and flames were coming out of the roof," she said. "I'll never forget it. I can relive every moment - the chaos, the excitement." When Maltman talks about the job from which she retired last May after more than 21 years of service - nearly four of which she spent as a lieutenant - her eyes light up and a huge smile spreads across her face... by-the-numbers look at women in firefighting, in B.C. and Canada. 3.8 per cent: Percentage of Canadian firefighters that are female, according to the 2011 Census; 4.6 per cent: Percentage of B.C. firefighters that are female, according to the 2011 Census. The Province

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Doctor-assisted dying is 'time-sensitive issue' : P.E.I. premier

Physician-assisted dying was one of the topics on the table at a recent meeting of provincial justice and public safety ministers in Quebec City, attended by Premier Wade MacLauchlan... The ministers also heard presentations from Public Safety Canada on cybersecurity and the radicalization of Canadians going abroad to become involved in terrorism. CBC News

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Man wanted for homicide in New Jersey captured at Rainbow Bridge

A man wanted in New Jersey for homicide was captured at the Rainbow Bridge. U.S. Customs and Border Protection officers say they arrested Steven Segarra, 37 on Friday as he was trying to enter Canada. They found a warrant for his arrest during a secondary inspection. Segarra was turned over to Niagara Falls Police to begin the process of extradition. "CBP works closely with our state, local, federal and cross-border partners, especially when searching for fugitives that may attempt to flee the country," said Acting Port Director Cary Frieling. "Thanks to the efforts of our officers and CBSA, this fugitive was captured and the legal process can begin." From October 2014 to September 2015, Border Protection officers with the Buffalo Field Office made more than 400 arrests. at 16 ports of entry in the state. WIVB 4

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

'Artisanal spam' fashions emails in a new kind of cyberattack

Traditional spam email attacks follow a mass-market, "one-size-fits-all" approach: by sending the same message to as many targets as possible, a small number of people will be tricked into sharing their passwords or downloading a malicious program. But a new kind of attack, so-called "artisanal spam," targets smaller groups with painstakingly crafted messages, with the aim of breaking through spam-filtering algorithms and achieving a higher rate of success. CBC News

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Le contrôle des armes ne passe pas nécessairement par un registre, selon la CAQ

Le contrôle des armes à feu ne passe pas nécessairement par la mise en place d'un nouveau registre québécois, a déclaré lundi le député caquiste André Spénard, porte-parole du dossier de la sécurité publique pour son parti. M. Spénard a affirmé que le caucus de la Coalition avenir Québec est divisé sur l'opportunité du projet de loi 64, présenté en décembre par le gouvernement. «On est en train d'en discuter, comme dans toutes les formations politiques, il y en a des pour, il y en a des contre, alors on va analyser la situation», a-t-il dit. Cette initiative a été annoncée par Québec à la suite de la décision du gouvernement fédéral d'abolir le fichier national des armes d'épaule... «On a toujours été pour le contrôle des armes à feu mais ça ne veut pas dire que ce contrôle passe par un registre comme il en existait un avant au gouvernement fédéral, a-t-il dit dans un point de presse. Y aurait-il un meilleur moyen, tout en épargnant l'argent des contribuables?». La CAQ a affirmé que le chef péquiste contreviendrait à la loi électorale et à ses dispositions sur le financement politique en dotant personnellement l'institut, qui n'a pas encore été créé, des fonds nécessaires à ses activités. Presse Canadienne (L'actualité)

Évasion à Peace River : la GRC recherche un fugitif

La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) est à la recherche d'un fugitif suite à une évasion avec complices de la prison de Peace River, dans le nord-ouest de l'Alberta. Les forces de l'ordre ont lancé un avis de recherche pour Harley John Lay, évadé vers 10 h lundi. Elles demandent de ne pas approcher cette personne jugée dangereuse. Le fugitif s'est évadé grâce à la collaboration de deux complices, dont au moins l'un d'entre eux est armé. Les trois hommes se sont enfuis dans une fourgonnette beige de marque Dodge. La GRC peut être appelée au 780-624-6677 ou par l'intermédiaire d'un service de police régional. Radio-Canada ; Global News

Toronto cop found not guilty of murdering Sammy Yatim, but IS found guilty of attempted murder

A Toronto police officer has been found guilty of attempted murder in the shooting death of a teen on an empty streetcar. Const. James Forcillo was cleared of the more serious charge of second-degree murder in the death of 18-year-old Sammy Yatim in July 2013. Forcillo, 32, had pleaded not guilty to both charges in the shooting that was captured on cellphone videos and went viral online, sparking public outrage. Crown prosecutors had argued Forcillo's actions weren't necessary or reasonable, while his lawyer called those actions justified and carried out in self-defence. The trial heard that Yatim had consumed ecstasy at some point before boarding a streetcar where he exposed himself and pulled out a small knife, sparking a panicked exodus. Forcillo testified Yatim seemed completely unafraid and refused his commands to drop the knife. The officer told the court he believed the teen was about to come off the streetcar to attack him, which was why he fired his gun. The crux of the ruling is seemingly based around the jury finding the first round of bullets - which killed Yatim - were arguably justified while the second round of shots - which did not impact whether Yatim died or not - were not. Canadian Press (National Post)

School safety expert warns of La Loche copycats, urges compassion in days following shooting deaths

The threat of a copycat killer will remain high in the immediate future after four people were fatally shot in La Loche, a school safety expert says in a memo distributed to school staff across North America. "The tragedy in La Loche is the highest profile incident in a Canadian high school since the 1999 shooting in Taber, Alberta," Kevin Cameron said Monday in a memo sent to school divisions and principals in Canada and the United States after Friday's shooting in the northern Saskatchewan town. Four people - teacher Adam Wood, 35; teaching aide Marie Janvier, 21; Drayden Fontaine, 13; and Dayne Fontaine, 17 - were killed during the noon-hour shooting. Star-Phoenix

Cocaine, prescription narcotics seized in South River

A traffic stop early Saturday morning led to the seizure of cocaine, prescription narcotics and drug paraphernalia, according to a report from the Trinity Conception RCMP. A 24-year-old man from Holyrood was arrested in the traffic stop in South River. He was released from custody but will appear in Harbour Grace Provincial Court at a later date. He is facing two charges of possession of a controlled substance for the purpose of trafficking. The Telegram

Natuashish-bound marijuana, whisky intercepted by police

Bottles of whisky were found on an in-bound plane in the dry community of Natuashish Friday, police say. In a news release Monday, the RCMP said officers searched freight and cargo on a plane on the local airstrip and found 10 bottles of whisky. The street value of smuggled alcohol is significantly higher than prices in a liquor store. The Innu community of Natuashish on Labrador's northern coast banned the sale, purpose and possession of alcohol in 2008. CBC News

Les policiers de Rouyn-Noranda seront munis de « tasers »

Un projet pilote sur l'utilisation du pistolet à impulsion électrique, dit « taser », entrera en vigueur dans les prochaines semaines au sein poste de la Sûreté du Québec à Rouyn-Noranda. Selon la sergente Mélanie Dumaresq, le projet servira à tester l'utilisation du taser à la Sûreté du Québec. Actuellement, seuls le Groupe d'intervention tactique et les maîtres-chiens sont actuellement formés pour l'utiliser. Radio-Canada

Police board looks inside ranks for new Hamilton chief

The Hamilton police board is starting its search for a new chief within the service's own ranks. "We think we have a number of qualified candidates," said board chair Lloyd Ferguson on Thursday after the board met behind closed doors to decide how to proceed on selecting a new chief. Hamilton Spectator

Teen arrested in Rockland had replica handgun, police say

A 17-year-old arrested last week after a report of an armed teenager spurred lockdowns at schools in Rockland, east of Ontario, was carrying a replica revolver and not a real gun, Ontario Provincial Police say. The boy was arrested Thursday after police were told that a male carrying a firearm was walking along Giroux Street in Rockland. Area schools were alerted and implemented "safety protocols" as a precaution, police said. Ottawa Citizen

2 UN gang members charged with murder

Two men, who homicide investigators say are UN gang members, have been arrested and charged with first-degree murder in the deaths of Jonathan Barber and Kevin LeClair. The Integrated Homicide Investigation Team (IHIT) made the announcement at a news conference in Surrey this afternoon. CBC News

Structural rebuild of police needed

A letter to the editorial states, "Biggest transformation' facing force, Jan. 25. Deputy Chief Peter Sloly is correct in stating that savings in the police budget are possible. I don't necessarily agree with eliminating officers, but by using them more efficiently this would lessen the need to add more officers, and possibly free up some officers for foot-patrol duty. For example: when there is a fire, we usually see two or maybe three fire engines at the scene unless it is a multiple-alarm fire. On the other hand, when there is a crime scene we usually see multiple police cruisers..." Toronto Star

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Graham James' victims call granting of day parole a 'farce'

Two men, sexually assaulted by former junior hockey coach Graham James, say they are disappointed he was granted day parole from a halfway house under certain conditions. "Canada needs to wake-up," said Todd Holt, who played with James' team, the Swift Current Broncos, from 1989 to 1994. "Graham James raped us players," Holt said. "It's a farce ... If I was a pedophile out there today I'd be laughing at the justice system." Holt and Sheldon Kennedy, also assaulted by James, argue the amount of time James has served in prison pales next to the seriousness of his crime. James is currently serving a seven-year sentence for sexual abuse, in addition to a 3 ½-year term he served in the late-1990s. The man once named "Hockey Man of the Year" has been convicted of molesting a total of six children. "I believe enough time is when the system acknowledges and recognizes the impact of this crime," said Kennedy, who now leads the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre in Calgary, AB... James requested the federal parole board grant him full parole on Monday, but the board found he lacked sufficient empathy and instead limited him to day parole. According to the Correctional Service of Canada, offenders can be granted day parole to prepare them for full parole or release. James will be staying at a halfway house and is prohibited from being in the presence of anyone under 18 or having a job where he's in a position of authority over anyone under that age. CBC News

Nova Scotia prisoner escape caused by human error, faulty equipment - Report

An internal review says human error and equipment error allowed a prisoner to escape from custody last month in Nova Scotia. Marc Joseph Pellerin escaped from the sheriff's van in the parking lot of the Truro Justice Centre Dec. 4 as he was being transferred from New Brunswick to Halifax for a court appearance. Pellerin was recaptured Dec. 7 by the RCMP in Stewiacke, roughly 30 kilometres south of Truro. Canadian Press (Calgary Sun, Truro Daily, Winnipeg Sun); CBC News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

A look at how the Canadian courts handle young people charged with murder

A 17-year-old boy has been charged with four counts of first-degree murder and seven counts of attempted murder after a shooting in northern Saskatchewan. Because of his age, he falls under the Youth Criminal Justice Act. David Milward, a law professor at the University of Manitoba, explains how Canadian courts handle young people charged with murder: Can a youth be "tried as an adult?" Canada doesn't have that distinction at the trial stage, but if the charges are serious enough, the attorney general can direct the Crown to request that a youth be sentenced as an adult if convicted. Cape Breton Post

Doctor-assisted dying is 'time-sensitive issue' : P.E.I. premier

Physician-assisted dying was one of the topics on the table at a recent meeting of provincial justice and public safety ministers in Quebec City, attended by Premier Wade MacLauchlan... Pot low on list. While legalizing marijuana is a commitment MacLauchlan expects the government to followed through on, he said the ministers barely mentioned it in Quebec. "I would say it's a little further down the road in terms of how the federal ministers are looking at that," said MacLauchlan. CBC News

Hate crimes charges laid in graffiti case

Hate-crime charges have now been laid against one of two suspects accused of spraying racist graffiti at a northwest LRT station. A lawyer for Kyle Kames Mackenzie appeared in provincial court Monday where a new information charging him with publicly inciting hatred was put on the record. Calgary Sun

Update - Edmonton gore-site owner pleads guilty in Magnotta video case

An Edmonton webmaster who posted a video on his website of convicted killer Luka Magnotta murdering a Chinese student was put under house arrest Monday. Mark Marek, the 41-year-old owner operator of the bestgore.com website, was handed a six-month conditional sentence to be served in the community after pleading guilty to corrupting morals by publishing obscenities. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal)

First-time offender gets 35-month sentence for role in drug trafficking ring

A first-time offender caught with a kilogram of cocaine was sentenced Monday to nearly three years in jail for his role in a widespread drug trafficking ring. Frank Molle, 26, was sentenced to 35 months in jail after pleading guilty to trafficking marijuana, possession of cocaine for the purpose of trafficking and conspiring to traffic cocaine. Windsor Star

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Montréal crée un Bureau d'intégration des nouveaux arrivants

La métropole a créé il y a deux mois un Comité de coordination montréalais pour l'accueil des réfugiés syriens, réunissant plusieurs services municipaux et organismes communautaires. Après deux mois, le responsable embauché par la Ville pour coordonner ce groupe, Michel Dorais, en est venu à recommander à Montréal de mettre en place un bureau permanent. Dans un rapport remis à la Ville, il estime que «la nécessité d'être prêt à tout et d'avoir à réagir à très court terme requiert un niveau d'alerte qui est difficile à maintenir à moyen terme». Le Bureau qui sera créé s'inspire directement du Toronto Newcomer Office, dont le travail est de coordonner les services offerts aux nouveaux arrivants dans la métropole canadienne. Montréal attend d'ailleurs d'ici le 30 janvier un rapport détaillé sur le fonctionnement de ce bureau torontois. Pour le moment, peu de détails sont connus sur la forme que prendra le Bureau montréalais. Celui-ci comptera au «maximum» une dizaine de personnes. Son budget est encore indéterminé. Le Bureau ne sera pas destiné exclusivement aux réfugiés syriens, mais bien à tous les nouveaux arrivants. La Presse

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Brison promises PS unions he'll quickly repeal sick-leave measures

Treasury Board President Scott Brison has promised federal unions that steps to repeal Tory legislation that gave the government power to unilaterally impose a new sick-leave regime will begin when Parliament resumes this week. Treasury Board officials notified the unions in a letter that sections of Bill C-59, which allow the government to force a sick-leave deal, will be repealed as one of the "first orders of business." The move lifts a major threat hanging over bogged-down contract talks on sick-leave reforms and come as the largest union, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, gets ready for its first bargaining session with the Liberals on Feb. 1. "We are pleased that the new Liberal government has promised to repeal the labour law changes in Bill C-59 and given assurances that they will not unilaterally take away our negotiated sick leave provisions," said PSAC president Robyn Benson. But Brison isn't going as far with another Conservative omnibus bill, C-4, which completely changed the rules for collective bargaining in the public service. The unions also want those changes repealed for the rest of this round of bargaining. Ottawa Citizen

Top bureaucrat's past comments on 'brownshirts' spur protest

The Liberal government stood by its new head of the public service Monday after fresh objections arose over remarks he made last year equating a student protest with the actions of "Brownshirts and Maoists." Michael Wernick was appointed last week by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to be Clerk of the Privy Council. Monday was just his second day on the job. In the House of Commons, NDP leader Tom Mulcair demanded Trudeau ask Wernick to "apologize for these totally unacceptable remarks." But the prime minister, who appointed Wernick to replace Janice Charette, simply said he was "very pleased" to see the veteran bureaucrat assuming the new job. "Mr. Wernick has had a long career in the public service," Trudeau told MPs. "And we look forward to working with him to renew the professional and non-partisan public service." On Monday, the head of a students' group called on Trudeau to take a close look at the words Wernick used to describe the protesters – and to distance himself from those remarks. "I think at the very least we need to hear from the prime minister that Mr. Wernick's comments are not reflective of his own approach to governing," said Michael Bueckert, president of the Graduate Students' Association at Carleton University. Ottawa Citizen

OTHER / AUTRES

Liberal government warns both Israel and Palestinians

The Liberal government on Sunday put out its first statement on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, calling Israel a "steadfast friend and ally" but warning it against building more settlements on disputed land. Released by Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion as the wave of violence that has swept Israel and the West Bank reached its 100th day, the statement represents a shift in tone from the previous government's staunchly pro-Israel messaging. Ottawa Citizen

INTERNATIONAL

Les réseaux djihadistes communiquent avec un arsenal toujours plus perfectionné

De l'adresse cachée au jeu en ligne, les réseaux djihadistes utilisent de mieux en mieux les ressources d'internet pour recruter et communiquer, entraînant les services de sécurité dans une course-poursuite technologique pour les localiser et décrypter leurs messages. Peut-on agir impunément sur le web en restant anonyme ? Pas complètement, même si, selon des experts réunis au Forum international de la cybersécurité (FIC) à Lille, dans le nord de la France, les méthodes des cellules terroristes sont désormais les mêmes que celles des hackers. Pour rester discret sur internet, il faut d'abord se procurer une adresse IP (l'identification de l'appareil) exotique. Et, explique à l'AFP Thierry Karsenti chez l'éditeur d'antivirus israélien Check Point, ne jamais surfer depuis chez soi, en profitant au maximum du wifi public. Il faut ensuite utiliser des flux anonymisés, comme le réseau TOR. Et crypter ses communications. A cet égard, l'affaire Snowden a laissé des traces. Car la révélation, en 2013, d'un programme de surveillance massif des services américains et britanniques, a poussé le monde de l'internet à tout crypter, ou presque. Aux Etats-Unis, relève M. Karsenti, le tiers du trafic sur le net est désormais chiffré, contre 3 à 5% il y a deux ou trois ans. «Les prévisions, c'est que ça va doubler cette année», ajoute-t-il. AFP (Journal de Montréal)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

PnPCBC

Today on #pnpcbc: @RalphGoodale on La Loche, @RonaAmbrose makes pro-pipeline case, and MPs are back on the Hill - with lots of work to do.

PnPCBC

Now on #pnpcbc: @RalphGoodale responds to the La Loche tragedy. #cdnpoli

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: to say there is real agony in La Loche is an understatement. Msg from gov't is that we're in this together. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: decisions have to be from the community up, not imposed by the government. #LaLoche #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: there have been accumulating problems that haven't been adequately addressed. #LaLoche #pnpcbc

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CanBorder

Our officers seized 147 overcapacity magazines at #NorthPortal, Saskatchewan. <http://ow.ly/XwaR5>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

PnPCBC

Now on #pnpcbc: MPs @MPicardLiberal @ErinOTooleMP & @CharlieAngusNDP on the La Loche tragedy and what the government can do.

PnPCBC

@MPicardLiberal: the support we've provided so far will continue to be provided. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@MPicardLiberal: this is the first step, why @RalphGoodale went to La Loche, to listen. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@ErinOTooleMP: getting young people into the resource-based economy one place to start. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@CharlieAngusNDP: we're looking at a systemic issue. We talk about being there, but it's long-term problems we're facing. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@CharlieAngusNDP: these are communities where children are regularly denied access to quality education. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@ErinOTooleMP: I think all levels of govt need to talk about challenges of remote communities to health care access. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@CharlieAngusNDP: These young people could transform our country, yet they seem to be the last factored into government decisions. #cdnpoli

vicecanada

La Loche school shooting highlights systemic poverty and racism: <http://bit.ly/23oZUCJ>

TheTorontoSun

17-year-old charged in #LaLoche killings had been bullied relentlessly. <http://bit.ly/1njZUTG>

TorontoStar

#LaLoche shootings should be another reason for reform #editorial <http://on.thestar.com/1S78Hpr>

mrabson

I keep thinking, if a school shooting happened on many MB northern reserves, RCMP wouldn't arrive in 8 minutes. It could take hours.

tylerrdawson

Trudeau's heart is clearly with the people of La Loche. The rest of him should be, too." <http://ottawacitizen.com/>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

CTVAlesia

"Until we understand the true impact on victims we'll never have sentences to match" @ShelKenn on James day parole. pic.twitter.com/gxicC4FnAW

TheTorontoSun

Former junior hockey coach Graham James granted day parole. <http://bit.ly/1PgAnFN> karenpaulscbc

@ShelKenn says day parole for Graham James sends a bad message to those who want to come forward with their story.

CSC SCC en

More offenders are improving their education #WeAreProud <http://www.csc-scc.gc.ca/>

CSC SCC fr

Un plus grand nombre de délinquants augmentent leur niveau de scolarité #Nous sommes fiers <http://www.csc-scc.gc.ca/>

CSC SCC fr

Le RMR de 2014-2015 du SCC souligne nos réalisations du dernier exercice #Nous sommes fiers <http://www.csc-scc.gc.ca/>

CSC SCC en

CSC's 2014-15 DPR highlights our accomplishments during the past fiscal year #WeAreProud <http://www.csc-scc.gc.ca/>

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OttawaCitizen

Top bureaucrat's past comments on 'brownshirts' spur protest #Cdnpoli <http://ow.ly/XwFz7>

JasonFekete

Brison promises unions he'll quickly repeal sick-leave measures <http://ottawacitizen.com/>

OTHER / AUTRE

Murray Brewster

Experts wonder what "more robust" means as cabinet set to decide on ISIL mission <http://www.metronews.ca/> via @metrotoronto #cdnpoli #ISIL

Blogs

Top five digital issues MPs are facing as parliament resumes

Canada's Parliament is back in session after a long winter break, and MPs have no shortage of pressing digital rights issues to come to grips with... Bill C-51: This Saturday will mark the one-year anniversary of the introduction of Bill C-51 and its controversial spy powers, which were forced through Parliament last year by the previous government. So far, the Liberals have promised to repeal what they call the "problematic" parts of the bill, and Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale says he plans to hold public consultations on what changes should be made. We're still awaiting clarification on what these public consultations will look like, how the government will ensure that all Canadians will be engaged and whether they will really be open to all options, including the full repeal most Canadians want. Email your MP today, and let them know that C-51 is an issue you won't settle on... Spy Agency Oversight: Canada has long been one of a tiny handful of industrialized nations without any parliamentary oversight of government surveillance activities -- an issue all the more pressing given the passage of Bill C-51 and the RCMP's efforts to spy on Canadians without a warrant. Improved oversight was a top priority identified by the over 100,000 Canadians who took part in shaping our crowdsourced pro-privacy action plan last year. Check out the detailed recommendations we set forward based on your input. The good news is that Public Safety Minister Goodale has promised to strengthen oversight mechanisms, but we'll need to keep up the pressure to ensure Canada gets the world-class oversight system we deserve. Support the Protect Our Privacy Coalition at OurPrivacy.ca as we work for effective oversight of our spy agencies. Rabble.ca

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
January 18, 2016 / le 18 janvier 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Liberals introduce 'sea change' to Canada's refugee system

Canada's refugee system has undergone "a sea change" since the arrival of the new Liberal government, says a prominent refugee rights advocate. Mitchell Goldberg, president of the Canadian Association of Refugee Lawyers, says numbers speak for themselves as the government works to fulfil its promise to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of February. "In four years since Syria's civil war began, the previous government allowed only 3,000, in four years!" Goldberg said. "It's a sea change, a dramatic shift between before the (Oct 19, 2015) elections and after the elections with regards to refugees selected overseas."... McCallum was also mandated to work with the minister of justice and the minister of public safety and emergency preparedness to repeal provisions in the Citizenship Act that give the government the right to strip citizenship from dual nationals. Radio-Canada International

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Cargo Kathryn Spirit : une « catastrophe imminente » sur le fleuve Saint-Laurent

Un cargo immobilisé sur le lac Saint-Louis contenant de l'eau contaminée par des résidus pétroliers risque de se renverser de façon imminente, selon la Ville de Beauharnois. La municipalité a appris la semaine dernière que les opérations de pompage de l'eau souillée vont cesser. Ce vieux bateau rouillé de 150 mètres de long par 20 mètres de large est immobilisé sur le lac Saint-Louis depuis quatre ans. La Ville a appris la semaine dernière que l'entreprise mexicaine à qui appartient le navire, Reciclajes Ecologicos Maritimos, renonce à ses droits de propriété. Les opérations de pompage vont donc cesser. La Ville prévient que l'eau va s'infiltrer dans la carcasse rouillée du navire, accentuant son inclinaison et provoquant éventuellement son chavirement dans le lac Saint-Louis, un réservoir d'eau potable pour le Grand Montréal. Selon le maire de Beauharnois, Claude Haineault, c'est une question de semaines avant qu'une catastrophe ne survienne. Radio-Canada

Public Health Agency of Canada issues travel notice for Zika virus

The Public Health Agency of Canada has issued a travel notice for the Zika virus, which has been linked to a surge in miscarriages and birth defects in Brazil. In a notice posted to its website on Friday, the agency says pregnant women and women considering becoming pregnant should discuss travel plans with their doctors to assess their risk. It also recommends these women "consider postponing travel to areas where the Zika virus is circulating in the Americas. The Zika virus is spread by mosquitos, and while it has been native to parts of Africa and Asia for years, it was recently introduced into the Americas. While the virus is not normally considered worrisome, researchers have noticed a still-unproven link between Zika and a sudden rise in babies born in Brazil with microcephaly. The conditions of microcephaly include small heads and underdeveloped brains. CTV News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Burkina Faso attack shows need to boost information-gathering

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan says better intelligence capabilities, as well as co-operation with Canada's allies, are essential for preventing the types of terror attacks that have struck Burkina Faso and other parts of the world. Six Canadians were killed over the weekend when militants linked to al-Qaida stormed a hotel in Ouagadougou, the capital of Burkina Faso in West Africa. Days earlier, a Canadian was killed during an attack by Islamic State-inspired terrorists in Indonesia. Speaking on the sidelines of a three-day retreat between Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and his cabinet ministers, Sajjan said Canada has "to get better at our intelligence capabilities in other parts of the world so that we have a better chance of preventing attacks like this from happening. "This only happens if we start working in greater co-operation with our intelligence partners," he added. "Which means not just the military, but also the police forces as well." Intelligence co-operation between Canada and its allies has been the subject of massive controversy in recent years, particularly after U.S. whistleblower Edward Snowden revealed that American and Canadian spy agencies have been running massive intelligence-gathering operations. The previous Conservative government also enacted controversial anti-terror legislation, Bill C-51, that increased the scope and powers of Canada's intelligence operations. The Liberals promised during the election to amend the law, but haven't said how. Instead, they have promised broad consultations first. Sajjan, who is responsible for the ultra-secret Communications Security Establishment, which is Canada's electronic spy agency, said "the safety of Canadians will always be paramount," but also that there "has to be a balance." "There can be a fine balance with security, and when it comes to preventing these types of attacks and co-operation between agencies, it does not have to infringe on Canadian rights," Sajjan said. "We can actually do this better. It's just a matter of being better co-ordinated." Ottawa Citizen

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Why trade between Canada, U.S. is a hassle

One-third of domestic small businesses think twice about trading across the U.S. border, according to a new report by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Based on more than 8,000 responses from small business owners, the report looks at the performance of both the Canada Border Services Agency and the U.S. Customs and Border Protection Agency in facilitating cross-border trade. (...)“Eliminating unfair and costly rules at the Canada-U.S. border is an inexpensive way of supporting small businesses, who employ more than half of all working Canadians,” says Corinne Pohlmann, CFIB’s senior vice-president of national affairs. “Prime Minister Trudeau and President Obama [are] scheduled to meet this spring, [so] we hope they will take steps to improve cross-border trade.” Since 2010, the Canada Border Services Agency has shown some improvement in how they treat customers, says the CFIB report. But, it adds, the agency has showed little improvement in how it provides and communicates relevant information. In fact, small business owners gave the CBSA website a worse rating for user friendliness than in 2010. Advisor.ca, Canadian Plastics, Canadian Manufacturing

Loonie’s collapse leaves Canada tallying the high price of a low dollar

When completed, the Gordie Howe Bridge will help boost Canadian trade. The new crossing between Windsor and Detroit will relieve congestion on the aging Ambassador Bridge that currently carries trucks transporting more than a quarter of Canada’s exported goods. But for now – the bridge could be the latest victim of Canada’s battered loonie. With the dollar at its lowest level since the spring of 2003, construction and other costs for the bridge could nearly double to more than $4.8 billion, according to one estimate. Like the new bridge – the depressed loonie was supposed to kickstart Canada’s economy. But so far, it hasn’t worked out that way. BNN

Drug-addicted Brampton father jailed for life in shooting of wife in front of kids

A Brampton man who shot his wife in the head in front of their two young children has been sentenced to life in prison and will not be eligible to apply for parole until he has spent 13 years behind bars. And if Jatinder Dhaliwal, 44, ever does get out of prison on parole, he will be deported back to India because he is a permanent resident and not a Canadian citizen, court heard at his sentencing Thursday. Dhaliwal pleaded guilty last November to second-degree murder in the death of his wife of 12 years, Lakhvir Dhaliwal, 37. He shot her seven times in the bedroom of their Sled Dog Road home on May 28, 2012. He kicked her in the stomach and insulted her as she lay on the floor already mortally wounded, then delivered the final shot to her head even as their two sons, aged 8 and 9 years, begged him not to hurt her. He then threatened to kill the youngsters if they told the police what happened, court heard. Court heard Lakhvir Dhaliwal had hidden her drug-addicted husband’s heroin from him and he wanted it back, sparking that final, fatal confrontation between them. Hamilton Spectator

Failing infrastructure severs vital transportation link

An opinion piece by MP Carol Hughes states, “By now we have grown accustomed to the compelling arguments in favour of re-investing in Canada’s crumbling infrastructure, but what are we to make of the damage to the bridge over the Nipigon River which is new and not even fully constructed? In case you missed the story, the bridge failed recently when bolts holding the structure to the western abutment snapped. As a result the bridge was fully closed for a period of time and the initial repair has load restrictions. (...)While some vehicles can re-route through the United States, this is not so easy for truckers. Ever since the US tightened their borders over security concerns, it is more difficult for truckers to use the southern route around Lake Superior. According to the Ontario Trucking Association and the Canadian Trucking Alliance, $100 million worth of goods crosses the Nipigon River every day. An initial repair is allowing smaller trucks through but those carrying very large loads are not being allowed across which is why it is important for governments to look for a solution at the American border as quickly as they can.” Wawa News

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Gustafsen Lake standoff: protesters renew calls for an inquiry

Several First Nations protesters involved in the 1995 Gustafsen Lake standoff are calling for a national inquiry into the level of force used by the RCMP during the 31-day confrontation. Protest leader William Jones Ignace, known as Wolverine, and the Ts'Peten Defence Committee submitted a letter on Jan. 4 to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and Attorney General and Justice Minister Jody Wilson-Raybould, calling for an inquiry. "The brutal force that was leveled against the defenders, some of which were 14, 15, and 16 years old, [and] young pregnant women, is utterly abhorrent," said Anushka Azadi, a spokesperson for the committee. Wolverine, now 82, was too sick to provide comment to CBC News, but Azadi spoke on his behalf, saying he wants the following to come out of an inquiry: "A conversation specifically about his jail time, and why they were persecuted for crimes when what they were doing was enacting their own tribal, traditional laws. Additionally he says he wants the RCMP officially charged for treason. "Lastly, maybe the most important thing ... is a settlement of the land question, that is the question of unceded and unsurrendered territory. (...) In response the RCMP brought in 400 armed officers, backed by helicopters and armoured personnel carriers, blew up a supply pick-up truck with buried explosives, and fired thousands of rounds of ammunition. Both sides exchanged gunfire and one person was injured but no one was killed in the confrontation. CBC

Over 1,000 needles found in Prince George drug house bust

For the second time in two months, Prince George RCMP say they've busted a downtown drug house full of dirty needles. A 40-year-old man and 22-year-old woman, both known to police, were arrested Friday morning at the duplex located in the 2100 block of Oak Street. "Inside they located an abundance of suspected stolen property - some of it has been confirmed stolen - a small quantity of cocaine and over 1,000 needles," said RCMP Constable Sonja Blom. Police are recommending charges of being unlawfully in a dwelling house and mischief against the pair. "It's a problem house that's well known to police," said Blom. In November, Prince George RCMP busted a drug house nearby where officers discovered 10,000 dirty needles. CBC

Strongquill Lake named in honour of gunned-down Manitoba Mountie

Manitoba has named a lake near Flin Flon after RCMP Const. Dennis Strongquill - the first time a geographic location in the province has been named after a law enforcement officer. "All Manitobans remember the tragic loss of Const. Strongquill, and it is truly our honour to permanently create a place that will recognize his life and ultimate sacrifice," Conservation and Water Stewardship Minister Tom Nevakshonoff said Monday during the announcement at the RCMP headquarters in Winnipeg. The lake is about 45 kilometres north of Flin Flon in northern Manitoba. "Const. Strongquill dedicated his life to protecting the people of Manitoba and making our communities safer. The naming of Lake Strongquill is a humbling honour and will ensure that his sacrifice is never forgotten," said RCMP Assistant Commissioner Kevin Brosseau. Killed in line of duty. A 20-year veteran of the police force, Strongquill was shot dead after a traffic stop outside Russell, Man. Strongquill, 52, and his partner, Const. Brian Auger, were heading for a coffee just after midnight on Dec. 21, 2001, when they spotted a truck driving on the highway with its high beams on. They pulled it over simply to caution the driver to turn down the headlights. But as they approached the truck, one of the people inside opened fire. The officers ran back to their vehicle and were chased into the town of Russell by the truck. As the RCMP cruiser pulled up to the detachment office, it was rammed by the truck. CBC

Calgary police arrest 3, seize drugs and guns after Red Deer trafficking probe

Police have seized guns, drugs and ammunition after a months-long drug trafficking investigation that started in Red Deer and ended in Calgary with the arrest of three suspects. "The suspects were active in drug trafficking and violent crimes in the Red Deer area," police said. In addition to nine guns, 12,159 rounds of ammunition, $14,400 in cash and almost 400 grams of drugs were seized, police said. The men were arrested in a "high-risk takedown" in Calgary as they fled an attempted pawn shop robbery in a stolen vehicle, Calgary police said in a statement. The break in the case has put a "significant dent" in an organized crime group that was active across Alberta and had ties to B.C., police said. They will release more details at a news conference in Red Deer later today. More charges may be laid in the coming weeks as the investigation continues. CBC

Fatal Nexen explosion puts focus on oilpatch safety

There's a universal pledge from companies across the oilpatch that everyone goes home safely every day. The message - fundamental to the idea that safety is essential to workplace culture - is reinforced constantly, but it didn't happen Friday for two workers at Nexen Energy's Long Lake oilsands plant. An explosion tore through a building that housed a natural gas compressor, killing one maintenance employee and sending another to hospital in Edmonton in critical condition with severe burns. "Every day we strive to send our employees home safe to their families, and yesterday we did not live up to that," Ron Bailey, the senior vice-president of Canadian operations for Nexen, told a subdued news conference in Calgary on Saturday. "This will leave a terrible mark on all of us at Nexen." The explosion occurred in the hydrocracker unit at the 70,000-barrel-a-day facility about 75 kilometres south of Fort McMurray at about 3:20 p.m. Investigators from the Alberta Energy Regulator and Occupational Health and Safety are on site. The names of the two employees, who OHS officials have said were changing a valve on a compressor before the blast, were not released as of Sunday. Nexen officials said the Long Lake operation, which was producing about 50,000 barrels a day of bitumen, has effectively been shut down while authorities investigate the cause of the explosion. RCMP said Friday it didn't appear suspicious. Nexen wouldn't speculate about the fatal explosion but Fang Zhi, chief executive of Nexen Energy, a subsidiary of the Chinese state-owned oil company CNOOC, called it "one of the darkest days in Nexen's history." He expressed his "deepest sympathies" to the families of the two workers. "Our motto is that nothing is so important it can't be done safely. Yesterday we did not live up to that standard," Fang said, "and I deeply regret it." Brad Grainger, deputy fire chief for the Regional Municipality of Wood Buffalo, called it "a major explosion," noting that Nexen crews quickly got the fire "under control and extinguished." Nexen said there was no danger to neighbouring communities. Calgary Herald

Ontario man to appear in Saskatoon court facing second degree murder charge

An Ontario man living in Saskatoon is facing a second degree murder charge. John Glen MacAulay, 46, of North Bay, Ont., was charged in relation to the death of Norman Playter in May 2014. RCMP said that Playter was reported missing to the Calgary Police but the investigation showed that the man had been visiting the Saskatoon area in the days leading up to his death. A lengthy investigation by the RCMP Major Crime Unit also found that MacAulay was living in Saskatoon at that same time and the two men were known to each other. MacAulay will be in Saskatoon provincial court later this morning. CBC

Hamilton police want to honour their fallen

Hamilton police want to see their fallen remembered on local overpasses. The Hamilton Police Service is asking the City of Hamilton to pass legislation allowing some of the bridges that cross the Lincoln Alexander Parkway to be named after officers who died in the line of duty. The request was submitted by former police Chief Glenn De Caire before he announced his retirement last month. It will come before council Jan. 20. Seven police officers in Hamilton have died in the line of duty, including Const. James Barron, County Const. Albert Springstead, Const. Reginald Pryer, Const. Fredrick Raynes, Det. William Clark, Const. David R. Gregory and Acting Sgt. John (Cam) McMurrich. The police service is asking that the Mohawk Road/Golf Links, Garth, West 5th, Upper James, Upper Wellington, Upper Wentworth and Upper Gage street overpasses be named after these officers, who died between 1903 and 1968. Ontario passed an act in 2002 allowing the province to name bridges and other structures on the King's Highway in memory of officers who died in the line of duty. According to the request, Hamilton police considered this route, but decided the Linc would be more fitting because it runs through the middle of the city and is named after Lincoln Alexander, an honorary chief of police in Hamilton. Hamilton Spectator

4 raisons pourquoi les chasseurs sont fâchés

La relation entre les 400 000 chasseurs et le gouvernement du Québec s'est détériorée dans la dernière année à la suite de hausses de coûts. Voici quatre raisons pourquoi 2016 sera une année difficile pour les chasseurs. 1- Hausse des coûts pour les camps de chasse. Si votre camp de chasse est situé sur une terre de la Couronne, attendez-vous à des hausses salées des coûts de location. D'ici 2019, le coût moyen pour un bail de villégiature augmentera de 167% au Québec. Dans la région de Québec, la hausse sera de 244%. Par exemple, dans la région de Québec-Portneuf-Charlevoix, un propriétaire qui payait 1015$ par année pour louer un terrain verra sa facture passer à 2185$. Journal Montréal

Chilliwack senior hit by phone tax scam

It is a new year but an old scam. There are fraudsters posing as Canada Revenue Agency reps over the phone, and a Chilliwack senior was targeted recently by one of them, said Coletta Holmes of the Chilliwack & District Seniors' Resources Society. The local senior was contacted by someone claiming to be from the CRA, who told her there was a problem with her income tax return. The local Seniors' Resources Society offers an income tax service run by volunteers, in conjunction with CRA, and that is how they found out about a Chilliwack resident being hit by a scammer. "We know the CRA doesn't contact people that way," Holmes said. "We tell them to hang up and call the CRA's 1-800 number to check their account." She said sometimes an elder will hear that the "taxman" is on the phone, and they'll panic, and do whatever they say. They tried to call back the fake 1-613 number, and the way it was answered just sounded wrong, so they reported the attempted fraud to RCMP, who told them to report it to the Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre. Progress

Accused murderer, victim both members of Outlaws Motorcycle Club

The victim and the accused in a May 2014 homicide were both members of the Outlaws Motorcycle Club, say police. John Glen MacAulay, 46, of North Bay, Ont., is charged with second-degree murder in the May 2014 death of Norman Playter. MacAulay appeared Monday in Saskatoon provincial court, where RCMP said that both he and Playter were members of the club. The death of Playter, however, had nothing to do with Outlaws business or membership, said police. MacAulay was remanded until his next scheduled appearance on Jan. 25. When asked by the court if he would be hiring a lawyer, MacAulay said, "Most definitely." Playter had been reported missing to the Calgary Police Service, although an investigation by RCMP revealed he had been visiting the Saskatoon area in the days leading up to his death, RCMP said last week in a news release. MacAulay was residing in Saskatoon in May 2014. He and Playter were known to one another. StarPhoenix

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

Le bilan des morts canadiens dans l'attentat d'Ouagadougou était toujours à six, hier, tandis qu'une demi-douzaine de corps restaient encore à identifier. Le gouvernement fédéral a dépêché des membres de la GRC pour aider les autorités du Burkina Faso à mener l'enquête sur l'attaque revendiquée par Al-Qaida au Maghreb et qui a fait une trentaine de morts dans la capitale, vendredi. (TVA, 9h04 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

More than sunny ways needed to address mandatory minimums

An opinion piece states, "Sunny ways. This is the promise of Justin Trudeau and his newly elected Liberal government. If there is one dark vestige of the Conservative government that could benefit from the light it is criminal justice policy. Over the last 10 years, our Criminal Code has been radically altered. The changes did not happen all at once but slowly as evidence-based police gave way to partisan ideology. The death was one of a thousand cuts. The Conservatives were wicked smart in implementing their crime agenda. Major legislative changes were buried in massive omnibus bills. Small but problematic amendments were hurried through Parliament and shielded from constitutional scrutiny in private members bills, and the parliamentary review process was gamed to suppress evidence that contradicted the government's agenda. We are living with the sad results: overcrowded jails, massive costs, reduced public safety, and law after law ruled to be unconstitutional. And there is no better example of the Conservatives' disdain for evidence-based criminal justice policy than mandatory minimum sentences. The Harper government promoted mandatory minimum sentences as a tough-on-crime elixir. However, the reality is that mandatory minimum sentences are simply poor policy. They are not supported by the evidence." Canadian Lawyer Magazine

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Toughest part of Syrian resettlement still ahead

An opinion piece states, "... Of the political and national conversation on the Trudeau government's ambitious Syrian refugee program has revolved around targets and timelines. But that has obscured a larger truth. As the country's 10,000th Syrian refugee arrives in Canada, the toughest part of this project for the Liberal government lies ahead. For the first time, government-sponsored refugees have topped the numbers of privately sponsored refugees, and another 15,000 displaced Syrians—a mix of both programs—will arrive by the end of February. Military bases are standing by to potentially house government-sponsored refugees in the dead of a Canadian winter and this is a much more vulnerable, at-risk group than those that have the privately-sponsored support system awaiting their arrival. This country, because of geography, some prudent planning despite the rush and the ability to pick and choose its new arrivals, can legitimately look on our effort with pride. We are now standing virtually alone in not having to face down some type of refugee backlash. But as their numbers swell, it will not take much to spark one. There can be no perception that housing, schooling or job queues are jumped and the resettlement effort has to continue relatively seamlessly so that anxieties are not heightened on either side. There are those who want this government project to fail and they are lurking, on social media and email inboxes, waiting with matches to ignite that spark." The Hill Times

Liberals introduce 'sea change' to Canada's refugee system

Canada's refugee system has undergone "a sea change" since the arrival of the new Liberal government, says a prominent refugee rights advocate. Mitchell Goldberg, president of the Canadian Association of Refugee Lawyers, says numbers speak for themselves as the government works to fulfil its promise to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of February. "In four years since Syria's civil war began, the previous government allowed only 3,000, in four years!" Goldberg said. "It's a sea change, a dramatic shift between before the (Oct 19, 2015) elections and after the elections with regards to refugees selected overseas." Radio Canada International

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Deaths of Quebecers strengthen resolve in terrorism fight: Couillard

Quebec Premier Philippe Couillard says nothing can explain attacks on people who work to build a better world. Couillard paid tribute today to seven Quebecers who died in terrorist attacks abroad late last week in Indonesia and Burkina Faso. A Laval resident died Thursday in Jakarta while six people from the Quebec City area were killed during a siege in Ouagadougou late Friday. The premier said in a statement at the legislature in Quebec City that the fight against terrorists must continue. Canadian Press (MacLean's, iPolitics)

'It's a tragedy'

Officials at a Quebec City area school board are struggling to deal with the tragic deaths of six locals killed in the terrorist attack in Burkina Faso. Four of the six Canadians were current or former employees of the board, which cancelled classes today for students at both Jean-de-Brebeuf and Cardinal Roy high schools. The Canadian victims are Yves Carrier, his wife Gladys Chamberland, their adult son Charlelie

Carrier and Yves' adult daughter, Maude Carrier. The family members, along with the two other Quebecers who were killed -- Louis Chabot and Suzanne Bernier -- had been on a humanitarian mission in Burkina Faso. They were among at least 28 people killed when terrorists linked to al-Qaida stormed a hotel and cafe in the African country's capital of Ouagadougou late Friday. Canadian Press (Kingston Whig Standard, London Free Press)

Un cri du coeur à Justin Trudeau

La mère de Maude Carrier, l'une des victimes de l'attentat terroriste survenu vendredi à Ouagadougou, lance un cri du coeur directement adressé au premier ministre, Justin Trudeau. «J'aimerais ça que Justin Trudeau, au lieu de condamner seulement avec les mots et sa petite bouche, j'aimerais ça que ses CF-18, ses avions... Qu'il combatte lui aussi. J'ai honte, j'ai honte», a affirmé Camille Carrier sur les ondes du FM 93, lundi matin. C'est le message que la femme, ex-conjointe d'Yves Carrier et mère de Maude Carrier, deux des six victimes québécoises, a voulu lancer à l'attention du premier ministre canadien, alors que ce dernier prévoit depuis son arrivée au pouvoir l'arrêt des frappes aériennes contre l'État islamique. Journal de Montréal

British Men With Visual Impairment Mistaken for Potential Terrorists Because They Took Pictures of a Canadian Mall

A British family on vacation in Vancouver were mistaken for potential terrorists by social media and local police last week when pictures were published of them photographing the inside of a shopping mall. Mohammed Kareem and Salahuddin Sharaz were taking pictures inside Pacific Centre Mall last Tuesday when security cam photos of them were leaked by Vancity Buzz, later validated by the Vancouver Police Department as part of an investigation into a "suspicious incident." Shortly after the official press release, their images were circulated widely on social media and media websites, with much speculation around whether the men were potential terrorists. Not long after, the two men and one of their fathers came forward to dispel rumours—noting that both Kareem and Sharaz have visual impairments and that they were taking photos in order to see the mall better. VICE News

Le Québec n'est pas à l'abri de la barbarie, dit Philippe Couillard

Les attentats djihadistes de Ouagadougou et Jakarta, où sept Québécois ont récemment perdu la vie, montrent que le Québec n'est pas à l'abri de la barbarie, a déclaré lundi le premier ministre Philippe Couillard. Dans une déclaration, M. Couillard a affirmé que l'attaque de vendredi dans la capitale du Burkina Faso avait ciblé les valeurs de démocratie et de solidarité de la société québécoise. Le premier ministre a estimé que ces attentats montrent la nécessité de combattre le terrorisme aux côtés des pays alliés contre les groupes djihadistes. Lundi, M. Couillard est intervenu publiquement à la suite du décès d'un résident de Laval dans la capitale de l'Indonésie, et de six résidents de la région de Québec au Burkina Faso, où ils étaient allés faire de la coopération internationale. À l'Assemblée nationale, le drapeau québécois était en berne, lundi, alors que le réseau scolaire de la capitale était ébranlé par le décès de deux enseignants et de deux cadres retraités qui sont morts à Ouagadougou, vendredi. M. Couillard a affirmé que la douleur des familles éprouvées était partagée par l'ensemble du Québec. La Presse Canadienne (L'actualité); Radio-Canada; Canadian Press (Metro News)

Burkina Faso attack shows need to boost information-gathering: Sajjan

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan says better intelligence capabilities, as well as co-operation with Canada's allies, are essential for preventing the types of terror attacks that have struck Burkina Faso and other parts of the world. Six Canadians were killed over the weekend when militants linked to al-Qaida stormed a hotel in Ouagadougou, the capital of Burkina Faso in West Africa. Days earlier, a Canadian was killed during an attack by Islamic State-inspired terrorists in Indonesia. Speaking on the sidelines of a three-day retreat between Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and his cabinet ministers, Sajjan said Canada has "to get better at our intelligence capabilities in other parts of the world so that we have a better chance of preventing attacks like this from happening. "This only happens if we start working in greater co-operation with our intelligence partners," he added. "Which means not just the military, but also the police forces as well." Ottawa Citizen

INTERNATIONAL

L'enquête suit son cours au Burkina Faso

Militaires et policiers burkinabés sont toujours à pied d'œuvre lundi dans la capitale Ouagadougou près du café Cappuccino et de l'hôtel Splendid, visés vendredi par une attaque terroriste qui a fauché la vie de 29 personnes, dont 6 Canadiens. Le site demeure bouclé par un périmètre de sécurité, à l'intérieur duquel des enquêteurs, vêtus de blouses blanches et de gants pour la plupart, s'affairent à collecter tout ce qui pourrait permettre de jeter un éclairage sur ce qui s'est produit. Dix-huit enquêteurs français sont notamment sur place pour épauler la police scientifique, le parquet antiterroriste de Paris ayant ouvert une enquête sur cette attaque, la première d'une telle ampleur à secouer le pays. Selon le ministre de l'Intérieur, Simon Compaoré, trois djihadistes ont été identifiés. Les autorités tentent toujours cependant de déterminer si d'autres assaillants ont participé à l'attaque, des témoins ayant évoqué qu'il y en avait plus de trois, ou encore si les assaillants ont bénéficié de complicités. AFP/Radio-Canada; Associated Press (ABC News)

Le Canada veut maintenir ses liens avec le Burkina Faso

Trois jours après l'attaque djihadiste de Ouagadougou, au Burkina Faso, la consternation demeure au Canada. Six Québécois ont perdu la vie lors de cet attentat qui a fait 23 autres victimes et de nombreux blessés. Trois djihadistes ont été identifiés jusqu'à présent et les autorités tentent de déterminer si d'autres assaillants ont participé à cette attaque ou s'ils ont bénéficié de complicités. Au Canada, pendant ce temps, la communauté de Lac-Beauport, dans la région de Québec, est toujours sous le choc. C'est là que vivait la majorité des victimes, soit une famille de quatre personnes. Radio Canada International

Al-Qaeda names Burkina hotel attackers

Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) Monday named three gunmen who killed at least 29 people in an attack on a top hotel in Burkina Faso, including several foreigners. AQIM said the hotel attacked Friday night, the four-star Splendid Hotel, was "one of the most dangerous dens of global espionage in the west of the African continent," according to a statement carried by U.S.-based monitoring group SITE. The three gunmen were identified in the statement as Battar al-Ansari, Abu Muhammad al-Buqali al-Ansari and Ahmed al-Fulani al-Ansari. AFP (Daily Star)

Arrestation au Maroc d'un Belge lié aux attentats de Paris

Les autorités de Rabat ont annoncé lundi l'arrestation au Maroc d'un Belge d'origine marocaine directement lié aux auteurs des attentats du 13 novembre dernier à Paris et Saint-Denis, qui ont fait 130 morts. Le ministère de l'Intérieur s'est contenté de donner les initiales du nom en arabe de l'activiste et a indiqué qu'il avait combattu en Syrie dans les rangs du Front Al-Nosra, la branche syrienne du réseau Al-Qaïda, avant de rejoindre le groupe armé État islamique (EI). Le suspect, dont les initiales pourraient être traduites par J.A. (ou G.A.) a été appréhendé le 15 janvier dans la ville de Mohammédia, près de Casablanca. « Il s'était rendu en Syrie avec l'un des kamikazes de Saint-Denis », indique le ministère dans son communiqué. Abdelhamid Abaaoud, un Belge de 28 ans qui selon les autorités a dirigé le groupe des auteurs des attentats du 13 novembre, est mort, ainsi que deux autres personnes, le 18 novembre lors de l'assaut donné par la police à l'appartement dans lequel ils se trouvaient, à Saint-Denis. Reuters (Radio-Canada); Reuters (Daily Mail); Associated Press (SF Gate); Le 360; The Guardian; Wall Street Journal

Boko Haram attacks mosque in northern Cameroon, kills 5 worshippers

At least five Muslim worshippers were killed Monday morning when a suicide bomber attacked a mosque in northern Cameroon. The attacker had joined an early prayer session at the mosque in the locality of Guetchewe in Cameroon's Far North Region, regional governor Midjiyawa Bakary told German Press Agency (DPA) by phone. A similar suicide attack in a mosque in the Fotokol district of northern Cameroon left 13 people dead on January 13. Cameroon's far north has been hit by suicide bombings since July of last year. All the attacks have been blamed on terrorists from Boko Haram. Daily Sabah

4 in UK accused of IS linked plot to kill soldier or police

Four British men inspired by a call by the Islamic State group to kill "disbelievers" plotted drive-by shootings to murder police officers, soldiers or civilians on the streets of London, a prosecutor said Monday. The men, aged between 21 and 26, are accused of acquiring a pistol, a silencer and ammunition as part of plans thwarted by their arrest in late 2014. The four went on trial Monday charged with conspiracy to murder and preparation of terrorist acts. They deny the charges. Associated Press (Business Standard)

Islamic State seizes new areas from troops in eastern Syria

Islamic State militants launched a fresh offensive Monday, taking advantage of a sandstorm that sharply reduced visibility in eastern Syria and capturing new areas from government forces near the city of Deir el-Zour, opposition activists said. The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said the militants captured areas just north of the city, including an army base known as the "Saiqa Camp" and parts of arms depots in the village of Ayash. Opposition activist Omar Abu Leila reported that IS fighters had in fact captured the entire Ayash village, which is just north of another town that IS captured over the weekend. Associated Press (Washington Times)

Baby born in Hawaii with brain damage confirmed to have Zika infection

A baby born with brain damage at a hospital in Oahu, Hawaii, has been confirmed to have been infected by the Zika virus, that state's department of health said, in what appears to be the first U.S. case of the mosquito-borne virus. The Hawaii State Department of Health said in a written statement that the mother was believed to have had a Zika infection while living in Brazil in May 2015 and that the baby was likely infected in the womb. Reuters (FOX News); CBS News

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

RadioCanadaInfo

Cargo Kathryn Spirit : une « catastrophe imminente » sur le fleuve Saint-Laurent <http://bit.ly/1V21WTm>

CTVNews

Public Health Agency of Canada issues travel notice for Zika virus <http://ow.ly/XeqkS>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

TondaMacC

Asked what he tells the Carrier family, & when will Cdns see anti-terror plan, #PMJT expresses sympathy...

TondaMacC

..& Trudeau says govt w work w/ int'l allies to fight terror in "responsible and effective manner." No direct answer on when plan to come.

EmbassyNews

ICYMI: Warnings against clickbait permeate Canadian spy agency's reports <http://bit.ly/1PqFi2L>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CanBorder

Introducing Jan 25: changes to how importers, brokers and the CBSA will work together. #cdntrade <http://ow.ly/XehuS>

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

GetCyberSafe

#DYK that what your child shares online could have legal consequences? Learn more: getcybersafe.gc.ca/cnt/cbrblng/p...

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

TimesTranscript

ICYMI: RCMP receive 100 complaints of phone tax scam in last month ow.ly/XdyN1

chsnews

A noticeable RCMP presence here in Saint Andrew's for the Trudeau gov't cabinet meeting.

grc RCMP police

Ce n'est pas un simple uniforme, c'est un symbole de fierté. #carrieresgrc grc.ca/-dAR pic.twitter.com/9Uq9iCLHRD

rcmpgrcpolice

It's not just a uniform; it's a symbol of pride. #rcmpcareers rcmp.ca/-dAR

ctwinnipeg

'Strongquill Lake' to honour slain Manitoba RCMP officer: bit.ly/1V1JRx #ctwvpg

CBCNL

RCMP make pair of drug busts near Clarendville cbc.ca/1.3407797 #nlcrime

metrocalgary

Red Deer RCMP and CPS investigation results in massive drug, gun bust ow.ly/XerKW #yyccrime

680CJOB

Manitoba lake named after RCMP officer who died in the line of duty in 2001. bit.ly/1OB4S5j

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

HuffPostCanada

Saskatoon inmate's death report will remain unsealed: judge <http://huff.to/209SYa1>

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

CBCPolitics

John McCallum says more Syrian refugees could settle in francophone areas http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/new-brunswick/john-mccallum-syrian-refugees-francophone-1.3408321?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter... #cdnpoli #hw

MacleansMag

Ottawa will seek to settle more Syrians in French communities, says @JohnMcCallumLPC: <http://ow.ly/XeAvu>

TheHillTimes

'I've never done anything like this before': @JohnMcCallumLPC on helping Syrian refugees bit.ly/1PbdDc5 pic.twitter.com/sEMscqQaV6

alisoncrawford5

Immigration Minister @JohnMcCallumLPC says govt on track to hit target of 25K refugees in Canada by end of Feb. #cdnpoli #hw

alisoncrawford5

Challenge now, says @JohnMcCallumLPC is to find homes, jobs, language training for refugees in order to settle them well in Canada #hw

ctwinnipeg

'Strongquill Lake' to honour slain Manitoba RCMP officer: #ctvwpg

CBCPolitics

Ottawa agencies overwhelmed by fast pace of refugee arrivals #cdnpoli #hw

OTHER / AUTRE

vicecanada

British men with visual impairment mistaken for potential terrorists because they took pictures of a Canadian mall: <http://bit.ly/1PbmNp3>

Lactualite

Le Québec n'est pas à l'abri de la barbarie, dit Philippe Couillard <http://bit.ly/209T7dB>

globeandmail

Premier Couillard says Quebecers died at the hands of 'barbarians' <http://trib.al/hELHxNb>

mtlgazette

Premier Couillard says terror attacks on Quebecers the act of cowards <http://bit.ly/1Q9L4J4>

INTERNATIONAL

CBCAlerts

Premier #PhilippeCouillard says all #Quebeckers share the pain of the families of #BurkinaFaso victims. 6 killed in Friday's terror attack.

ctvwinnipeg

'Strongquill Lake' to honour slain Manitoba RCMP officer: #ctvwpg

RadioCanadaInfo

L'enquête suit son cours au Burkina Faso <http://ici.radio-canada.ca/nouvelles/international/2016/01/18/002-enquete-burkina-faso-ouagadougou-attaque-cafe-hotel.shtml> ...

RadioCanadaInfo

Arrestation au Maroc d'un Belge lié aux attentats de Paris <http://rc.ca/DJnhQF>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
January 28, 2016 / le 28 janvier 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Electronic spy agency stops sharing information with partners over privacy concerns

Canada's electronic spy agency breached privacy rules by sharing certain types of information with its Five Eyes partners, a federal watchdog says. In his annual report released Thursday, Jean-Pierre Plouffe said the Communications Security Establishment passed on "certain types of metadata containing Canadian identity information" to counterparts in the United States, Britain, Australia and New Zealand, which make up the Five Eyes network. The report says that information contained in the metadata was "not being minimized properly" before it was shared (...)Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said Thursday that the new government is undertaking a "complete review" of Canada's security intelligence framework, which will include the creation of a "parliamentary mechanism" to keep spy agencies in check. He said the objective is to "keep Canadians safe" while protecting their privacy. CTV News

CSIS repeatedly obtained confidential taxpayer data without warrants, watchdog says

Canada's spy agency CSIS improperly obtained taxpayer information from the Canada Revenue Agency without a warrant. And it happened more than once. That's according to the annual report of the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC), the independent office that oversees the activities of CSIS. The report, tabled Thursday morning in the House of Commons, outlines how, during an application for a warrant from the federal court, a judge raised questions about a regional CSIS intelligence officer's access to confidential taxpayer information. In August 2014, Canadian Security Intelligence Service director Michel Coulombe asked SIRC to investigate, after determining that the officer accessed the information improperly. Coulombe asked SIRC to figure out what happened and make recommendations about how to stop employees from doing it again (...) Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale released a statement Thursday in response to the tabling of the SIRC report. "We believe more can be done to strengthen scrutiny, and the government is currently developing legislation that will strengthen our system of accountability for national security." CBC News

Canada's electronic spy agency stops sharing some metadata with partners

Canada's electronic spy agency, the Communications Security Establishment, has stopped sharing certain metadata with its international partners after discovering that the information wasn't being sufficiently protected before the data was shared. Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan says the sharing won't resume until he is satisfied that the proper protections are in place. The issue is disclosed in the annual report of CSE commissioner Jean Pierre Plouffe, which was tabled in the House of Commons Thursday morning (...) Appearing alongside Sajjan, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale noted that the federal government is in the process of reviewing its security intelligence operations and is committed to introducing new parliamentary oversight of intelligence agencies. CBC News; iPolitics

Trudeau to visit La Loche on Friday

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau will travel to La Loche one week after the school shooting that plunged the northern First Nations community into shock. The Prime Minister's Office announced Thursday morning that Trudeau will travel to the town of about 3,000 people on Friday. The visit had been expected since federal Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale visited La Loche on Sunday and told reporters that Trudeau intended to make the trip. The prime minister has been in Ottawa this week for the first session of Parliament of the new year. Trudeau is usually followed by many staffers and media, and his visit to the tiny Dene community comes as some residents have grown wary of the outside attention turned on their town in the wake of the shooting. Many in the tight-knit community had relatives injured in last Friday's violence, which killed four people and wounded seven others. Toronto Star (Huffington Post); CKOM 650

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

CBC News provides live coverage of a press conference by Minister of Public Safety Ralph Goodale and Minister of National Defence Harjit Sajjan. Rough Transcript

CBC News reported on the release of SIRC Annual Report. There are concerns regarding the protection and sharing of personal information between agencies. The Minister of Public Safety was mentioned in this report. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

UPDATED: Get Ready. Another winter storm bears down on N.S.

Nova Scotians are hunkering down for another winter storm that could bring as much as 25 cm of snow to central and northern parts of the province on Friday. Environment Canada says the storm will start as rain along the Atlantic coast, turning to snow in the afternoon. The heaviest snow will hit in the late afternoon and evening and could make travel difficult. Frankie MacDonald says to expect a massive storm. Chronicle-Herald

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Canada's electronic spy agency broke privacy law by sharing info: watchdog

A federal watchdog says Canada's electronic spy agency broke privacy laws by sharing information about Canadians with foreign partners. In his annual report, Jean-Pierre Plouffe says the Communications Security Establishment passed along the information known as metadata to counterparts in the United States, Britain, Australia and New Zealand. Metadata is information associated with a communication such as a telephone number or email address but not the message itself. The Ottawa-based CSE uses highly advanced technology to intercept, sort and analyze foreign communications for information of intelligence interest to the federal government. Documents leaked in 2013 by former American spy contractor Edward Snowden revealed the U.S. National Security Agency a close CSE ally had quietly obtained access to a huge volume of emails, chat logs and other information from major Internet companies, as well as massive amounts of data about telephone calls. As a result, civil libertarians, privacy advocates and opposition politicians demanded assurances the CSE was not using its extraordinary powers to snoop on Canadians. Telegram (Prince Albert Daily Herald, Western Star, Truro Daily, Brandon Sun); Mississauga News; Radio-Canada

Canada's electronic spy agency stops sharing some metadata with partners

Canada's electronic spy agency, the Communications Security Establishment, has stopped sharing certain metadata with its international partners after discovering that identifying information wasn't being sufficiently protected before the data was shared. Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan says the sharing won't resume until he is satisfied that the proper protections are in place. The issue is disclosed in the annual report of CSE commissioner Jean Pierre Plouffe, which was tabled in the House of Commons Thursday morning. "While I was conducting this current comprehensive review, CSE discovered on its own that certain metadata was not being minimized properly," Plouffe explained in the report. CBC News; Canadian Press (Huffington Post, Mississauga News); Telegram (Prince Albert Daily Herald, Western Star, Truro Daily, Brandon Sun)

Watchdogs report lapses in CSIS, CSE intelligence practices

Both of Canada's spy agencies took serious hits to their credibility Thursday in a pair of reports that slammed the Communications Security Establishment for breaking the law and sharing Canadians' metadata, and slapped the Canadian Security Intelligence Service with an accusation that it is not adequately dealing with insider threats. A review by the Security Intelligence Review Committee, the board tasked with after-the-fact review of CSIS's activities, suggested that the domestic spy agency had significant shortfalls in how it assesses insider threats and tracks and investigates breaches of secure information. The report flagged multiple issues with how CSIS conducts internal investigations, particularly that employees are insufficiently trained to conduct investigations into the breach of secure information and how to conduct sensitive investigations, and stressed that there is a "haphazard application" of how the agency tracks who accesses sensitive information. But since modern intelligence agencies are less siloed than those in the past, that could be a big problem, said one former spy. iPolitics

Spy watchdog says Ottawa not properly policing 'insider threats'

Canada's watchdog for domestic spies is complaining that the Canadian government is not being kept abreast of "insider threats." The Security Intelligence Review Committee said in an annual report released Thursday that it has found problems with the way the Canadian Security Intelligence Service screens the federal bureaucracy for potential spies and people with divided loyalties. The watchdog said that it launched a probe that "revealed a number of deficiencies, and in one situation in particular, SIRC found that CSIS had failed to give a case the appropriate level of attention and to take follow-up action." The most famous "insider threat" Canada has lately faced comes from the case of former Canadian Forces naval sublieutenant Jeffrey Delisle. In 2013, he was criminally convicted of selling Canadian, U.S., and U.K. military secrets to Russia's military spy service. CSIS is a secretive domestic intelligence agency that is best known for trying to track terrorism suspects in Canada. But it also plays other important security roles. Globe and Mail

Canadian volunteers fighting with Kurds in Iraq might violate anti-terror law

The notion that Canadian volunteers fighting with Kurdish forces in northern Iraq and Syria could face prosecution under the former Conservative government's tough anti-terror laws has one human rights group calling for stricter supervision of the country's military training mission in the war-torn region. A secret "Canadian Eyes Only" analysis of the Kurdish peshmerga, prepared by Transport Canada's intelligence branch, warns there are some factions of the militia group that are designated as terrorist entities under federal law. "Any Canadians claiming to have links to organizations such as the People's Worker Party (PKK) are likely to become the subject of Canada's anti-terror legislation," says the report to the department, one of many federal agencies with a security assessment branch. The assessment comes to light following an Amnesty International report last week that accused peshmerga forces of bulldozing, burning and blowing up Arab villages in apparent retaliation for supporting the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant. Canadian special forces are training Kurdish fighters, and the Trudeau government is preparing to significantly increase the size of that commitment - a mission that Alex Neve of Amnesty International Canada says requires careful human-rights monitoring. Canadian Press (Ipolitics, Toronto Sun, Whig-Standard, London Free Press, Sault Star, Cornwall Standard)

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

Broadcast media mention the release of the annual report by the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC). In their report this year, they raised concerns about two situations; the first one has to do with how internal threats of the agency are treated. They're also looking at how CSIS gets along with other departments. The Communications Security Establishment may have broken Canadian privacy laws. (CTV News, 12h10 ET; CBC News, 13h06 ET; CBC Radio One, 12h ET; CFX-AM Victoria, 8h47)

CTV News reports on the release of the SIRC Annual Report. Rough Transcript

Les médias rapportent que le nouveau ministre de la Sécurité publique du Québec est Martin Coiteux. (RDI, 10h38 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Deepan Budlakoti's appeal to be declared Canadian citizen dismissed by Supreme Court

Canada's top court on Thursday dismissed, with costs, the case of a twice-convicted Ottawa man who was born in Canada but was never granted Canadian citizenship. Under Canadian law, citizenship by birth doesn't apply to people whose parents were in Canada as diplomats or representatives of a foreign government, or whose parents were employed by such a person, at the time of their birth. When Deepan Budlakoti was born in Ottawa in 1989, his parents were both Indian nationals working for the Indian High Commission. In 1992, Budlakoti's parents were granted permanent resident status. They applied for citizenship for themselves but not for their son. Their application was accepted. According to court documents, Budlakoti was convicted in 2009 of breaking and entering and sentenced to four months in jail. He was considered a permanent resident of Canada at that time. In 2010, he was convicted of weapons trafficking, possession of a firearm and drug trafficking and was sentenced to three years in jail. (...) When his sentence was complete, Budlakoti was transferred to the Canada Border Services Agency, where he was to be detained pending his removal from Canada. In 2013, India's High Commission said it didn't recognize Budlakoti. He was later released from CBSA custody with certain conditions, including that he not leave the Ottawa area and check in with the agency regularly. Some of those conditions were later eased. CBC News

CBSA 2015 year in review for southern Manitoba

In their continued commitment to keeping our borders safe and secure, Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) officers in southern Manitoba executed 172 seizure actions of various goods, including weapons, drugs, and child pornography last year. They also refused entry to those with criminal histories and those seeking entry to Canada for illegitimate reasons. Officers arrested ten people for suspicion for impaired driving and 23 others on outstanding warrants. (...) A Wisconsin man was sentenced to 18 months incarceration for unlawful possession and attempted smuggling of child pornography in December following a seizure at the port of Sprague in May. Sprague officers also uncovered a mobile methamphetamine laboratory in June containing 85 g of the drug. A 35 year-old Minnesota man was arrested and turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. MySteinbach, Winnipeg Free Press, Global News, Estevan Mercury

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

U.S. utilities worry about cyber cover after Ukraine grid attack

U.S. utilities are looking hard at their cyber vulnerabilities and whether they can get insurance to cover what could be a multi-billion dollar loss after hackers cut electric power to more than 80,000 Ukrainians last month. The Dec. 23 incident in Ukraine was the first cyber attack to cause a power outage, and is one of just a handful of incidents in which computer hacking has caused physical effects on infrastructure rather than the loss or theft of electronic data. A similar attack in the United States could cripple utilities and leave millions of people in the dark, costing the economy more than $200 billion, an insurance study estimated last year. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Red Deer drug bust nets cocaine, methamphetamine and $35K

Three men face charges after a drug trafficking sting in Red Deer turned up stashes of cocaine and methamphetamine and over $35,000 in cash. RCMP carried out a search warrant at a house on Clearview Ridge on Jan. 22, finding 217 grams of cocaine, about 50 grams of methamphetamine and almost $2,100 cash. Two men who were in the house were arrested without incident, police say. A third man was arrested entering the house as police were searching it. Police allege he was carrying another 111 grams of cocaine and more than $33,000 in cash. Red Deer RCMP began their investigation into the suspected trafficking operation on Jan. 14. A 22-year-old man from Red Deer, a 23-year-old man from Blackfalds and a 32-year-old man from Lloydminster all face numerous drug trafficking and stolen property charges. The first two suspects are set to appear in court in Red Deer on Jan. 28. CBC; Global; Calgary Herald

Kamloops Mountie back at work 13 months after being shot

The Kamloops Mountie who was shot during a traffic stop more than a year ago has returned to work. RCMP Supt. Brad Mueller said Jean-Rene Michaud is back on the job — but not back on patrol. “All I can comment on is that he’s started back at the detachment, obviously working in an admin capacity and graduated hours at this point,” he said. “It’s a very positive step and we’re certainly glad to have him back.” Mueller said he couldn’t comment on if or when Michaud would resume full-time hours. Earlier this month, a lawyer representing Kenneth Knutson, the man charged with attempted murder stemming from the shooting, said a guilty plea will be entered in March. Michaud was shot in the early-morning hours of Dec. 3, 2014, while conducting a traffic stop in Batchelor Heights. Knutson was arrested following a 12-hour manhunt. He is slated to enter a guilty plea on March 17. MerritHerald

Charges still being laid against those caught with pot, say police

The federal government may have intentions to legalize marijuana but Thompson RCMP are following the letter of the law and continuing to make arrests for possession of the drug, most recently in Burntwood Jan. 26. Thompson RCMP executed a Controlled Drugs and Substances Act search warrant at a Burntwood area residence Tuesday and seized a small amount of marijuana and cocaine, with three adults charged with possessing controlled substances as a result. “The Thompson RCMP want to remind residents that while possession of cocaine is always illegal, possession of marijuana is also still illegal in Canada,” said a press release from Thompson RCMP police community relations officer Const. Sandra Deibert. Thompson Citizen

Firearms, butterfly knives and a crossbow among items seized at Manitoba border in 2015

Firearms, tasers and a mobile meth lab were among the seizures made by the Canada Border Service Agency at the Manitoba border in 2015. Officers at the Manitoba border crossing made 172 seizures — including weapons, drugs and child pornography — while processing more than 1.6 million travellers in the year, the CBSA said. On August 1, Emerson officers seized five undeclared guns and 62 prohibited large-capacity magazines from a 36-year-old Alaska man towing a trailer. The man was arrested, and later released on bail with a promise to appear. On November 23, a 55-year-old U.S. man received a $12,000 fine for attempting to smuggle a firearm at the Sprague border crossing in September. And a Wisconsin man was sentenced to 18 months in prison for unlawful possession and attempted smuggling of child pornography in December following a seizure at the Sprague Border Crossing. Global; Winnipeg Free Press

Alleged pedophiles to be arraigned in Montreal

Some or all of the 13 men arrested for allegedly exchanging tips on ways to sexually abuse children are expected to be arraigned in Montreal today. They were nabbed in Quebec and Toronto on Wednesday after a three-year investigation by Quebec provincial police and the RCMP. About 150 officers from different forces took part in the raids. Those arrested are aged between 27 and 74. It is not clear whether the arraignments will take place in the morning or the afternoon. A Quebec police spokeswoman said the accused allegedly used online discussion forums to exchange information about their sexual experiences with children and to talk about what tactics to use and where to go to sexually abuse them. AVTimes

No charges after gun taken to school

An incident that forced a Vernon high school into lockdown won't result in criminal charges. Police converged on Vernon Secondary School after 9 a.m. Wednesday after receiving a report of an individual entering the school with what appeared to be a weapon. "We will not be proceeding with charges," said Const. Jocelyn Noseworthy, with the Vernon RCMP, adding that it was determined that a student had an air soft pistol. The student was interviewed by police but Noseworthy could not say why the student brought the pistol to school. "There was no criminal intent," she said. "The student will be dealt with by the school board." As a result of the incident, the school district will initiate a threat assessment protocol. "We will look at all of the issues that led to it," said Joe Rogers, superintendent. The process will include the student and parents. "It could also involve the Interior Health Authority if there is a need for counselling," said Rogers. Rogers would not speculate on any potential punishment, such as suspension. "We need to find out all of the background first. We need to find out what was going through the student's thinking at the time," he said. Students and staff were in the midst of exams when they were told to initiate lockdown measures. "She (my daughter) was scared. It was a level one lockdown so no lights and they had to hide for over 30 minutes before they were told all was OK," said a parent. VernonMorningStar

Whitehorse RCMP trying to fix digital fingerprint machine 'ASAP'

The Whitehorse RCMP is asking for the public's patience while it gets its fingerprinting machine up and running. The Live Scan machine, used to digitally scan and send prints to Ottawa, has been broken for about a week. Const. Julia Fox says police are using the old paper and ink method to fingerprint people with criminal charges. Fox is asking those requiring fingerprinting for a criminal record check to hold off for now. "If people can continue to be patient just for a little while longer, we are actively working on this and trying to get it repaired as soon as possible," she said. Criminal record checks are mandatory for many people working or volunteering with youth. The executive director of Sport Yukon said a small number also require fingerprinting. "Sometimes there's people across Canada that have a similar name or may have a record and, all of a sudden, those people need to have fingerprints done," said Tracy Bilsky. She hopes the machine is fixed soon, especially with the Arctic Winter Games around the corner. "The amount of volunteers who may be affected by this would probably be about - I would estimate - 20 or 30," she said. The RCMP installed the Live Scan fingerprint machine in 2011, to speed up the time it takes to process criminal record checks. Fox says it can take as little as three days to process a check with the machine. Without it, the wait can jump to four months. For people under a time crunch, there is another machine in Watson Lake, five hours east of Whitehorse. CBC

Bomb threat at Come by? Chance refinery

Second bomb threat for the facility, support called in. The RCMP is responding to a bomb threat at the North Atlantic Refinery Ltd. facility in Come By Chance. In a statement issued at roughly 9:30 a.m., the RCMP noted support was called in for investigators out of the Clarendville detachment and "speciality assistance" was on route. The facility's first bomb threat came in October 2015. Telegram

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Trudeau launches inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women

In a stark contrast to his predecessor, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has announced an inquiry into the disappearance of an estimated 1200 indigenous women and girls across Canada. The announcement came on December 8, following a meeting with Assembly of First Nations Special Chiefs in Gatineau, Quebec. The assembly's national chief, Perry Bellegrade, called the announcement "a long time coming." "After years of denial and deflection, it is my hope we can make real strides in achieving justice for families and achieving safety and security for all our people," Bellegrade said in a written statement to the CBC. Canadian Justice Minister Jody Wilson-Raybould said that the government will consult the families of victims on how to proceed. Wilson-Raybould is the first indigenous person to serve in the position. (...) According to the RCMP, aboriginal women account for roughly 16 percent of all female homicides while they represent only 4.3 percent of Canada's overall female population. The findings corroborated similar rates reported by the Native Women's Association of Canada, Between 1908 and 2013, 1,181 aboriginal women went missing or were murdered. Among those, 1,017 were killed. Coast Mountain News

Une sénatrice dépose un projet de loi pour protéger les femmes autochtones

La sénatrice saskatchewanaise Lillian Eva Dyck propose un projet de loi pour aider à protéger les femmes autochtones, qui sont plus à risque de violence. Le projet de loi S-215, dont la sénatrice a parlé en deuxième lecture à Ottawa mercredi, modifierait le Code criminel pour faire en sorte que le fait d'être une victime autochtone de sexe féminin constitue une circonstance aggravante dans les cas d'homicides, de voies de fait et d'agression sexuelle. Dans un communiqué, le bureau de la sénatrice cite comme justification des études qui démontrent que les femmes et les filles autochtones courent plus de risques d'être victimes de violence que les autres Canadiennes. Elles sont de trois à quatre fois plus à risque d'homicide ou de disparition au Canada, rapporte la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC). Radio-Canada

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Les citoyens de Rimouski sont ambivalents quant à l'accueil de réfugiés syriens

Une vingtaine de citoyens ont participé à une rencontre d'information sur l'accueil de réfugiés syriens, mercredi soir, à l'invitation d'Accueil et intégration Bas-Saint-Laurent. Cette rencontre visait à expliquer le processus de parrainage privé de réfugiés, puisqu'il s'agit, pour l'instant, de la seule façon pour Rimouski d'accueillir des réfugiés syriens. Rappelons que Québec n'a pas ajouté la capitale du Bas-Saint-Laurent à la liste des 13 villes québécoises qui recevront des réfugiés parrainés par l'État, parce que la capacité d'accueil des villes déjà désignées est suffisante pour l'instant. (...) D'autres citoyens ont soulevé des inquiétudes sur la capacité de Rimouski d'intégrer ces éventuels nouveaux arrivants et sur la possibilité que des intégristes se glissent parmi les réfugiés. C'est le cas d'Antoine Deschênes, qui tient à souligner d'abord qu'il n'est pas antireligieux ni antimusulman. « Il y a peut-être lieu d'être inquiets. Parce que le but de l'intégrisme islamique, c'est de détruire des démocraties pour imposer la théocratie. Et avec la théocratie apparaît la charia », souligne M. Deschênes. Radio-Canada

New Justin Trudeau poll

After 100 days in office, young Quebecers age 18-24, women, and Montrealers give Prime Minister Justin Trudeau high marks, while men, older people and Quebec City residents are unsatisfied, a new poll shows. Trudeau was elected Oct. 19. The survey of 8,053 Quebecers was conducted Jan. 22-25 by the SOM polling firm for Cogeco Nouvelles. (...) Only a third of those polled said his government has been firm enough in the fight against ISIS. Men, older people and Quebec City residents were most likely to say he has been soft. Even among those who tend to support Trudeau - young people and Montrealers - less than half said he has been firm enough. Just under half - 48 per cent - said they support Trudeau's decision to withdraw Canadian planes from the bombing campaign in Syria and Iraq. The biggest supporters: young people, women, Montrealers and Gatineau residents. Just over half (48 per cent) of those polled support Trudeau's pledge to accept 50,000 Syrians as refugees. Montreal Gazette

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Canadian charged with spying, stealing secrets in China

China's official news agency says a Canadian has been accused of spying and stealing China's state secrets. Xinhua says Kevin Garratt has been indicted by prosecutors in Dandong city in northeast China's Liaoning province. The report said that during an investigation Chinese authorities found evidence that implicates Garratt in accepting tasks from "Canadian espionage agencies to gather intelligence in China." Garratt has been detained since August 2014 by Chinese authorities. He was arrested along with his wife, Julia, who was released on bail in February 2015. Canadian Press (Toronto Star); Yahoo News; Globe and Mail

INTERNATIONAL

Zika virus outbreak emergency meeting called for Feb. 1, WHO chief says

Declaring that the Zika virus is "spreading explosively," the chief of the World Health Organization announced that it will hold an emergency meeting of independent experts on Monday to decide if the virus outbreak should be declared an international health emergency. At a special meeting Thursday in Geneva, WHO Director-General Dr. Margaret Chan said the virus — which has been linked to birth defects and neurological problems — is becoming more of a threat. Chan said although there was no definitive proof that the Zika virus was responsible for a spike in the number of babies being born with abnormally small heads in Brazil, "the level of alarm is extremely high." She also noted a possible relationship between Zika infection and Guillain-Barre syndrome, which can cause temporary paralysis. Associated Press (CBC News)

Nominated commander for Afghanistan will re-evaluate counter-terrorism efforts

The general chosen by Barack Obama to command the Afghanistan war through the end of his presidency has signaled an intention to intensify counter-terrorism efforts and re-evaluate the schedule for troop reductions. Army Lieutenant General John Nicholson told the Senate armed services committee on Thursday that stopping the growth of the Islamic State and the re-emergence of al-Qaida in the theater of America's longest war will be his "first and foremost" priority. "We need to have an adequate counter-terrorist force in place," Nicholson told a panel that bluntly expressed skepticism, on a bipartisan basis, at the wisdom of Obama's plans to bequeath a force of 5,500 troops in Afghanistan to his successor. Guardian

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

The World Health Organization says it expects that the Zika virus could infect 3 million to 4 million people in the Americas. There are cases now of travellers from other countries, including Canada, contracting the Zika virus after they have been to affected countries. Canada's Health Minister said yesterday, Canada has seen three cases. (CBC News, 10h ET)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Safety Canada

Minister Goodale tabled the Security Intelligence Review Committee annual report on CSIS activities <http://ow.ly/XDSAQ>.

Securite Canada

Le ministre Goodale a déposé le rapport annuel du CSARS sur les activités du SCRS. <http://ow.ly/XDSNk>.

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Safety Canada

Security reviews help strengthen our national security and provide accountability and transparency to Canadians.

Securite Canada

Les examens de sécurité aident à renforcer notre sécurité nationale et assurent la transparence des activités pour les Canadiens.

pdmcleod

Canada's Foreign Spy Agency Accidentally Gave Your Information To Other Countries #cdnpoli <http://www.buzzfeed.com/paulmcleod/csec-shared-your-info-overseas>

althiaraj

Canadian spy agency busted for breaking privacy laws and sharing info on Canadians with foreign partners #cdnpoli
<http://fb.me/4hMiBh>

Colinfreeze

Nothing in the OSCEC report speaks to scale of ("incidental") Cdn metadata collection by CSE. Scale would be really nice to know.

Colinfreeze

(2) But in general, the bigger the better from a collection standpoint. Metadata is only revealing if done in bulk.

Colinfreeze

(3) That's why US NSA (via FBI) asked Verizon for all customer phone bills on an ongoing basis. Metadata, metadata, metadata.

Colinfreeze

(4) For positive take on Cdn metadata collection see @geoffreyyork in Burkina Faso. But where did the set come from? <http://www.theglobeandmail.com/news/world/rcmp-using-cellphone-data-in-bid-to-track-down-burkina-faso-attackers/article28367071/>

Colinfreeze

From 2013: "Metadata" collection program got green light from MacKay in 2011 <http://fw.to/ezSYZbj> with raw doc <http://www.theglobeandmail.com/news/national/raw-documents-canadas-top-secret-data-mining-program/article12446852/?from=12444909>

Colinfreeze

Better link for Metadata ministerial directive <https://assets.documentcloud.org/documents/711481/freedom-of-information-request-on-canadas-top.pdf>.....

amandacconn

This is the first time in history that the CSE has given a technical briefing, Sajjan points out

alisoncrawford5

CSIS repeatedly obtained confidential taxpayer data without warrants: watchdog
<http://www.cbc.ca/1.3423666> #cdnpoli #hw

BORDER SERVICES / SERVICES FRONTALIERS

CanBorder

CBSA 2015 year in review for southern Manitoba <http://ow.ly/XE8lf>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMPNB

Video appeal to find woman wanted for first-degree murder <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ufiGqXBxQho>.....
#Moncton

HuffPostCanada

Documentary about #LaLoche resurfaces after school shooting <http://huff.to/20vbfyM>

OTHER / AUTRE

TheWestBlock

Canada could reap as much as $5 billion in tax revenues from the sale of legal marijuana. <http://qlbn.ca/XDMFz>

CdnPress

BREAKING: Canadian in China charged with stealing secrets: Xinhua <http://bit.ly/1SINK8r>

CanadaFP

Minister Dion to travel to Ukraine and to meeting of Global Coalition to Counter #ISIS <http://ow.ly/XE8r3>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
January 29, 2016 / le 29 janvier 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via
InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

PM Trudeau travels to La Loche after 'heartbreaking and devastating' school shootings

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau says he has travelled to La Loche, the scene one week ago of one of the worst school shootings in Canadian history, "to personally express the country's shock and sadness." Trudeau is visiting the northern Saskatchewan community on Friday, seven days after four people were killed and seven injured in the town of around 3,000 people, approximately six hours northern Saskatoon. Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall is joining the prime minister as he meets with locals from the remote community Friday morning. Trudeau is then scheduled to speak publicly around 4 p.m. (...) Among those joining Trudeau and Wall in La Loche on Friday were Georgina Jolibois, the former mayor of La Loche and now NDP MP for the Desnethé-Missinippi-Churchill River riding; Justice Minister Jody Wilson-Raybould; Liberal MP Ralph Goodale; Health Minister Jane Philpott; Assembly of First Nations (AFN) Chief Perry Bellegarde; Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations (FSIN) Chief Bobby Cameron; and acting Mayor Janvier. StarPhoenix; Chronicle Herald; Saskatoon Homepage; CKOM 650; Toronto Star; CKOM News

Discussing PTSD at the University of Regina

A national roundtable discussion is happening at the University of Regina on Friday, to highlight the effects of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Ralph Goodale attended the event via skype and spoke on how serious the issue is across Canada. Dr. Nicholas Carleton with the University of Regina says the meeting provides a good starting point for developing better supports. The full day event is bringing in representatives from various government groups and organizations as well as mental health care professionals. CKRM 620

Deported refugee fears for his life in Liberia

Canada knew when it began deportation proceedings against Cindor Reeves in 2011 that it might have been sending him to his death. Late last year in Liberia, where Reeves returned after being forced from Canada, seven men tried to kill him. They almost succeeded. The aspiring assassins came for Reeves because of the role he played in bringing to justice Charles Taylor, a former warlord and president of Liberia who is now serving a 50-year sentence for aiding and abetting war crimes and crimes against humanity (...) Canadian officials also knew that in the opinion of those at the Special Court who deeply probed the crimes committed during the civil wars in Sierra Leone and Liberia, Reeves's personal culpability was limited. While Reeves never denied he participated in running guns and diamonds, Brenda Hollis, then-prosecutor for the Special Court, in a 2010 letter told Victor Toews, then Canada's minister of public safety: "According to our information, at no time was Reeves in a high position within the Taylor regime." (...) The decision to deny Reeves refugee protection did not solely come down to Canada's immigration and refugee bureaucracy. Canada's then-Conservative government, through the minister of public safety, intervened directly in the case to argue against Canada accepting Reeves as a refugee. MacLean's

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Ouverture officielle du Bureau de reconstruction du centre-ville de Lac-Mégantic

Le Bureau de reconstruction du centre-ville de Lac-Mégantic procédera à l'ouverture officielle de ses locaux demain après-midi. La population est conviée à la Gare patrimoniale de Lac-Mégantic pour une présentation du Bureau et de ses partenaires, et pour en savoir davantage à propos du plan de reconstruction et des projets en cheminement. L'honorable Marc Garneau, ministre des Transports du Canada, au nom de l'honorable Navdeep Singh Bains, ministre de l'Innovation, des Sciences et du Développement économique, sera l'un des intervenants présents. La présentation du Bureau sera suivie d'une conférence d'inspiration de Michel Angers, maire de Shawinigan, à 14h30. Le thème sera «<Shawinigan se relève. Quelles leçons pour Lac-Mégantic? >». O 97.3

Cape Breton to be hardest hit by storm

A winter storm could dump as much as 40 cm of snow on parts of northern Nova Scotia Friday afternoon. Environment Canada has most of the province under a snowfall and winter storm warning, with the exception of southwestern counties. The storm will start as rain late in the morning changing to snow in the afternoon. Central parts of the mainland can expect 15 to 20 cm of snow, while northern parts and Cape Breton could get as much as 25 to 40 cm. Gusty winds and heavy snow could cause whiteout conditions, making travel difficult. Chronicle-Herald; CBC News

Three Canadians infected with Zika virus after travel

Three Canadians who are infected with the Zika virus travelled to Colombia and El Salvador before their illness, a government health spokeswoman said on Friday. Two are from the province of British Columbia and one is an Alberta resident, said Rebecca Gilman of the Canadian health department. Gilman could not say when the people travelled or returned to Canada, nor confirm further details about them. Canadian Health Minister Jane Philpott told reporters on Thursday that none of the cases were caused by transmission of the virus in Canada, and that local transmission should not be of concern to Canadians. The mosquito-transmitted virus has been linked to brain damage in thousands of babies in Brazil. There is no proven vaccine or treatment. Philpott said the virus has spread through 21 countries. Reuters (Globe and Mail)

Zika virus risk low on P.E.I., says chief health officer

The risk of contracting the Zika virus on P.E.I. is very low, says the province's chief public health officer. The mosquito-borne Zika virus is drawing global attention due to its rapid spread and possible connection to a rare neurological birth defect. It is spread by mosquitoes not native to Canada. "It's really important for the public to know this is not something that is transmitted from me to you, from person to person. That's not how you get ill," said Dr. Heather Morrison. "It's from the mosquito, an infected mosquito that bites you and that's when you can get the virus. And the only transmission really that can occur is a mother to a child if you are pregnant." Morrison advises pregnant women to rethink traveling to countries where the virus is prevalent, such as those in Central and South America and the Caribbean. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Alleged Somali war criminal first exposed by the fifth estate now in landmark U.S. case

An alleged war criminal from Somalia, first exposed by the fifth estate in 1992, now finds himself in the middle of a landmark human rights lawsuit in the U.S. Yusuf Abdi Ali, also known as Colonel Tukeh, was first investigated by the fifth estate in 1992 for allegations that he executed, tortured and maimed countless people during Somalia's civil war. He was living in Toronto at the time of the original broadcast. Just days after the fifth estate's story aired, Ali was deported back to the U.S. — his original port of entry. (...) Almost a quarter-century later, it turns out that Ali is still living in the U.S., working in the Washington area. He is at the heart of a lawsuit in the U.S. where he is being sued for war crimes in Somalia, specifically for allegations brought forward by Farhan Warfaa, who says he was the target of a brutal interrogation by Ali in December 1987. CBC News

U.S. border has special rules

Q. The U.S. has inland Border Patrol checkpoints up to 160 kilometres from the border (usually with Mexico rather than Canada). Despite having broken no laws and being far from the actual border, all highway traffic is stopped and everyone inside each vehicle is detained to determine their immigration status. In Ontario, I believe, only the driver must provide identification if stopped by police. Passengers need not identify unless suspected of a crime. Is this correct, or do we lose freedoms near the border here, too? A. Apparently, special rules do apply near our border with the U.S. (...) Ajay Woozageer of the Ontario Ministry of Transportation added: Section 154.2 HTA was enacted in 2006. The Canadian and U.S. border authorities offer pre-border security clearance for registered commercial and passenger vehicles under the "FAST" and "NEXUS" border-crossing programs. It's an offence for unauthorized drivers to use FAST/NEXUS lanes, and all occupants in the vehicle using a border-approach lane must demonstrate that they are eligible by providing police with the appropriate documentation. Toronto Star

North American ministers meet in Quebec as U.S. actions in TPP casts shadow

North America's three foreign ministers will be all smiles when they meet Friday to discuss the upcoming Canadian-hosted leaders' summit, but Canada and Mexico may bring some lingering resentment towards their American amigo on trade. (...) Foreign Affairs Minister Stephane Dion said Thursday he was looking forward to hosting Friday's meeting in Quebec City with U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Mexican Foreign Minister Claudia Ruiz Massieu. Dion's office said they would hold a day of talks on the environment and clean energy co-operation, as well as security issues. The meeting will set the stage for the full-fledged Three Amigos leaders' summit, featuring Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, U.S. President Barack Obama and Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto, somewhere in Canada later this spring. A report by the Centre for International Governance Innovation released Thursday called for greater bilateral co-operation between Mexico and Canada as the key towards building greater prosperity across the North America. "A good example of that are the recent TPP negotiations on autos, where Canada and Mexico co-operation was important in getting modifications to that accord, as well as the co-operation in the WTO on U.S. country-of-origin labelling," Fen Hampson, the report's author, said in a speech to the Canada2020 think tank in Ottawa. (...) Meanwhile, the visa that the previous Conservative government imposed on Mexican travellers—a major irritant in the relationship—remains unresolved. Trudeau has said he wants to see the visa lifted, but sources say there will be no major announcement on that at Friday's foreign ministers' meeting. Canadian Manufacturing; 580 CFRA Radio

Phone Scam Reported To OPP - Jan. 29, 2016

The Wellington County Ontario Provincial Police would like to warn the public about, yet another phone scam that occurred in a neighbouring County recently. The complainant received a telephone call from a male who was described as having an East Indian accent. The complainant initially spoke to a male and was later transferred to a female. The complainant was provided a case number and advised that there was a warrant for her arrest. He also left a phone number; (613) 946-6059 which returns to the Government of Canada Case Processing Centre in Ottawa for Temporary Resident Visa Applications. (this number has been linked to other fraud related incidents) She was advised that she had two options; either attend her local RCMP detachment immediately, or do nothing and get arrested on an Immigration warrant. The complainant advised that she would attend her local detachment and was then told that she needed to do so immediately. Fountain Pen

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

Airstrike on British hacker working for Isis also killed three civilians, US admits

The airstrike that killed a British hacker for the Islamic State (Isis) also killed three civilians and wounded five more, the US military has announced. A US drone strike killed Junaid Hussain near the militant group's Syrian capital of Raqqa on 13 August, but US Central Command, the military command overseeing the war against the jihadist army, had not until Friday acknowledged killing any civilians in the process. Guardian UK

'Murdered' Silk Road Employee Sentenced to Time Served

On Friday, the notorious former Silk Road employee Curtis Green was sentenced to time served—two days, and four years of supervised release—by Chief US District Judge Catherine C. Blake in a Baltimore court. Green had pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute and possess with intent to distribute cocaine. Motherboard

HSBC fights off denial of service attack on its internet banking systems

HSBC has confirmed that it fought off a denial of service attack on its internet banking systems this morning. A spokesperson for HSBC said: "HSBC internet banking came under a denial of service attack this morning, which affected personal banking websites in the UK. "HSBC has successfully defended against the attack, and customer transactions were not affected. We are working hard to restore services, and normal service is now being resumed. We apologise for any inconvenience this incident may have caused." HSBC's online banking login page currently displays a notice which says "We'd like to apologise to all our customers for Online Banking being unavailable. We know how inconvenient this is and we are doing everything we can to rectify the problem. Please try later." A denial of service attack floods a site with junk traffic so it cannot respond to legitimate requests for access - like stuffing a letterbox with junkmail so that genuine letters can't be received. ZDNet

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP testify in trial of youth charged in death of Charlotte Lafferty

The first days of the trial of a Fort Good Hope youth accused in a brutal murder have focused on the RCMP's initial investigation of the crime. The jury has heard from two of the four R.C.M.P. officers stationed in Fort Good Hope the morning the bloodied body of young mom Charlotte Lafferty was found near the community's seniors complex, on March 22, 2014. A young man from Fort Good Hope, aged 17 at the time, is facing trial on a charge of first-degree murder. His name cannot be published under the Youth Criminal Justice Act. On the witness stand in the N.W.T. Supreme Court the detachment commander, now Staff Sergeant in Inuvik, Kent Pike said he got called at 7:45 a.m. Two officers were at the scene of the murder near the seniors complex. Pike called another officer, Const. Adam Wood (now stationed in Tuktoyaktuk), and told him to meet him at the crime scene. Pike and Wood arrived within 20 minutes. Pike said his main concern was preserving the crime scene until investigators from the Major Crimes Unit in Yellowknife arrived. When he arrived, one of the two other officers on duty told him the body had been moved from where it was found during a desperate attempt to get the person to the health centre. Officer never suspected Lafferty was the victim. Wood took the first photos of the crime scene then cordoned off the area. He testified that other officers at the scene told him the accused youth was responsible for the murder. He spent much of the day in his cruiser stationed outside the youth's home. At 10:30 a.m. Pike called Louisa Lafferty, Charlotte's mother, after getting a call from dispatch in Yellowknife. Lafferty told Pike her daughter was missing. He told Lafferty he would look around town for Charlotte. CBC

Legal weed would take government revenues higher, with CIBC estimating a $5 billion boost per year

A new report from CIBC World Markets says Canada's federal and provincial governments could reap as much as $5 billion annually in tax revenues from the sale of legal marijuana. CIBC economist Avery Shenfeld crunched the numbers using current estimates of Canadian recreational pot consumption, the revenue experience in U.S. states that have legalized, and other factors - such as prevailing "sin tax" rates on alcohol and tobacco. "The bottom line is that federal (and) provincial governments might reap as much as $5 billion from legalization, but only if all the underground sales are effectively curtailed," writes Shenfeld. "That's on the order of 0.25 per cent of GDP, no barnburner." The Liberal government has promised to legalize, tax and regulate marijuana and has made MP Bill Blair, the former Toronto police chief, the lead on investigating a new regulatory model. Trudeau maintains that legalized pot will not be a cash cow, and that all revenues will be used to address mental health and addictions issues. National Post

Gander beefs up enforcement after bold break-ins

The town of Gander is hiring another full time enforcement officer after a rash of break-ins that left residents feeling uneasy. The move comes after some argued that the town wasn't doing enough to deter thieves. "Everybody in town is concerned about these break-ins, it puts fear into everybody," said Coun. Rob Anstey, who chairs the public works and services committee. "In Gander years ago, you never even locked your house, and it's sad that it's come to this," he said. "People are now afraid to be in their homes, afraid of what's going to happen. It's a serious problem and we're trying to work through it the best we can." Anstey said the town has changed the shifts of its three municipal enforcement officers and worked with the RCMP to provide round-the-clock coverage. It has also decided to replace a part time enforcement officer who worked 16 weeks a year with another full time position. CBC

RCMP finishes investigation into Don Dunphy's death

The RCMP has completed its final report in the investigation into the shooting death of Don Dunphy by a Royal Newfoundland Constabulary officer. According to the RCMP, arrangements are now being made to have an external investigation service complete an independent review of the file. The RCMP has completed its final report in the investigation into the shooting death of Don Dunphy by a Royal Newfoundland Constabulary officer. According to the RCMP, arrangements are now being made to have an external investigation service complete an independent review of the file said RCMP spokesperson Laura Hepditch in a statement. The RCMP said it cannot provide any further details on the investigation until it receives the results of the independent review and completes any required follow-up. "We continue to be in regular contact with the Dunphy family and understand and respect that they, as well as the general public, are anxious to learn the results of our investigation," Hepditch said. Dunphy was shot and killed by RNC officer Joe Smyth last April. Smyth, a member of former premier Paul Davis's security detail, went to Dunphy's house to investigate tweets made by Dunphy about Davis and other politicians. The RCMP said that Dunphy pointed a loaded gun at Smyth, which was why the officer fired his weapon. Justice and Public Safety Minister Andrew Parsons had said the government will proceed with a public inquiry into the shooting, but that it cannot do so until the police investigation is complete. CBC

Guns finally go silent at Chilliwack's RCMP open-air gun range

Conspicuous in their absence, volleys of gunfire no longer ring out near the Vedder Bridge as regular weekday Rotary Trail users and University of the Fraser Valley (UFV) staff and students have noticed. It was April 2014 when those behind the RCMP's Pacific Regional Training Centre (PRTC) announced $19 million in federal dollars to build the new indoor firing range to replace the open-air range, long the bane of UFV students and faculty, Vedder Crossing residential neighbours and Rotary Trail users. Chilliwacktimes (2016-01-28)

Peel police board picks Ahluwalia as chair

Amrik Singh Ahluwalia is the new chair of the Peel Police Services Board and will now lead the oversight body for the country's third-largest municipal police force. "My first thoughts are, what a wonderful country we live in," he said, after immediately taking the chair's seat following Friday morning's unanimous vote. Ahluwalia briefly described arriving in Canada decades ago, "with $7 in my pocket." He said, at the time, he couldn't have fathomed one day being bestowed with the "honour" and responsibility of what was just bestowed upon him. The board was recently in a fight with the force's chief, Jennifer Evans, who in September ignored a request from the board to stop the controversial practice of police carding, known as street checks in Peel. Ahluwalia, along with Brampton Mayor Linda Jeffrey and Mississauga Mayor Bonnie Crombie, pushed to stop carding. Outgoing chair Laurie Williamson voted to keep carding in place. On Friday Ahluwalia said the board and the force would work to improve things, "collaboratively". "I will do my best to serve the public and serve the police force . . . the men and women in the force who day in and day out do such an exemplary job." ILLUS: Amrik Singh Ahluwalia is the new chair of the Peel Police Services Board. Toronto Star

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

The RCMP is reviewing an incident in the town of Cumberland, B.C. that some are claiming is police brutality. The incident started when a 14-year-old was stopped for riding on the sidewalk and not wearing a bicycle helmet. Cellphone video shows the officer restraining the teen. The RCMP say situations like this can be very challenging for the officer when he is alone among a group of people. (CP24, 10h47 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Social media workshop for parents attracts a packed crowd in New Westminster

A workshop for parents to learn about the risks inherent with their kids' social media and online lives drew a sold-out crowd in New Westminster on Thursday night. The seminar was put on at the Justice Institute of B.C. by New Westminster police, along with school and parents groups. "Ask yourself: what would my adolescence, my youth, my adulthood look like if I could Google it today," social media expert Jesse Miller asked the eager crowd. "Right there you stop and say, 'Thank goodness the internet did not exist.'" One of Miller's key pieces of advice to parents was to join their kids on social media and get involved. (...) Carol Todd, the mother of B.C. cyberbullying victim Amanda Todd, also spoke at the workshop. She tried to share the lessons she learned from her daughter's tragic death. CBC News

Family members gather in Iqaluit for MMIW pre-inquiry

Families from across Nunavut are in Iqaluit today to take part in the pre-inquiry meetings into missing and murdered indigenous women with Indigenous and Northern Affairs Minister Carolyn Bennett. "We were affected by this tragedy 11 years ago and it's still hard 'til this day to just think back," said Danielle Cormier, who traveled from Moncton, N.B., to take part, along with four of her siblings. Her mother, Sylvia

Lyall Ritchie, was strangled to death by her common law spouse in Iqaluit in 2004. "She was murdered by her common law and it's something that is actually really hard to bear, it's very tough," said Jayko Ritchie, Cormier's brother. Even after more than a decade, Lyall Ritchie's children are still haunted by her death. "It's not just the indigenous women who are being affected, it's also everybody that they have around them, their entire families," said Ritchie. "When a woman, mainly a mother, gets hurt in any way, it doesn't just affect her, it affects everybody else in the most drastic ways, it hurts," he added, holding back tears. All the siblings say they are taking part in the pre-inquiry because they want to get people talking about violence against indigenous women. CBC News

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Include Canada in missile shield

The United Nations recently lifted sanctions against Iran after inspectors concluded that the Islamic Republic is complying with the terms of a controversial international nuclear agreement. However, the rogue regime continues to develop and test missiles that could destabilize both the Middle East and the broader international system. In response to Iran's recent provocative missile tests, the United States imposed new sanctions on the regime. Canada has also expressed concern about Iran's missile program. Canada should also be concerned that North Korea is developing weapons of mass destruction. It's clear that North Korea, a nuclear weapons state, is attempting to develop intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs) capable of striking distant lands. According to a 2014 report produced by Canada's Standing Senate Committee on National Security and Defence, North Korea's Unha-3 rocket could possibly deliver "a 700-kilogram payload over 8,000 kilometres, thus placing continental North America within its striking range." The Senate committee also expressed wariness of the bellicose Iranian regime. "Iran may, at present, have neither the capability nor the intention to strike North America," stated the report, "but it continues to develop a means to this end." The report, entitled Canada and Ballistic Missile Defence: Responding to the evolving threat, warned that Iran could one day "pose a serious threat to North America." The Senate committee pointed out that America's key allies are partners in building ballistic missiles defences (BMD). "NATO has embraced BMD as part of its new strategic concept and allies such as Australia, South Korea and Japan are also participating in what will become a global network of regional BMD systems," the report stated. Earlier this month, the North Korean regime claimed to have successfully test-detonated a hydrogen bomb. Although there is reason to question the Communist regime's claim, there is no doubt that North Korea test-detonated atomic weapons four times over the last decade. Kingston Whig-Standard

A peaceful world needs more Canada as 'honest broker': ex-UN refugee chief

A former United Nations refugee chief says Canada's new foreign policy makes it perfectly suited to play a major role in bringing peace to a world facing a dramatic shortage of it. Antonio Guterres said Canada is now perceived as an honest broker and can play a leading role in bringing together warring factions to negotiate peace. It's just one of many countries that must help negotiate peaceful solutions to the ongoing wars across the globe and their ensuing — and escalating — refugee crises, Guterres said Friday at a foreign policy conference hosted by the Canada2020 think tank. "It is my deep belief that Canada is in a privileged position to play an important role in this regard," he said, citing the country's membership in the G7, G20 and NATO as advantages. "But at the same time with your new foreign policy, I believe Canada has all the conditions to be perceived as an honest broker." Guterres, who stepped down last year after a decade as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, said Canada can play a major role in helping resettle the world's record number of displaced citizens. Canadian Press (Metro News)

INTERNATIONAL

U.S., U.K reportedly spied on Israeli drones for 20 years, according to leaked documents

U.S and British intelligence cracked the codes of Israeli drones operating in the Middle East and monitored their surveillance feeds for almost 20 years, according to documents leaked by an American whistleblower and published in international media on Friday. Reports by the German daily Der Spiegel and the investigative website The Intercept said the details emerged from documents leaked by Edward Snowden, the former National Security Agency contractor who leaked millions of documents about U.S. government surveillance in 2013. The reports said the intelligence agencies were able to watch information that the drones and other aircraft broadcast back to their handlers. The project codenamed "Anarchist" has operated since 1998 and was based near the highest point in Cyprus. Israel was the focus of the program but it also hacked into systems in Egypt, Turkey, Iran and Syria, the reports said. Associated Press (National Post); CBC News

'The level of alarm is extremely high': Millions at risk as Zika virus 'spreading explosively' in the Americas

The Zika virus is "spreading explosively" and could affect as many as four million people in the Americas, the World Health Organisation said Thursday. After almost 4,000 infections were recorded in Brazil, Dr Margaret Chan, the WHO director-general, said the virus posed a threat of "alarming proportions", with new cases reported in 23 countries in South America and elsewhere. "It is now spreading explosively," she said. "The level of alarm is extremely high." UK Telegraph (National Post)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

RalphGoodale

Retour à #LaLoche aujourd'hui avec le PM @JustinTrudeau, mes collègues @janephillpott (Santé) + @Puglaas (Justice), et le @PremierBradWall.

RalphGoodale

Nous partageons le chagrin de cette communauté blessée. #LaLoche a besoin de l'amour et du soutien de tous les Canadiens.

RalphGoodale

Travelling back to #LaLoche today w/ PM @JustinTrudeau, Cab colleagues @janephillpott (Health) + @Puglaas (Justice), + @PremierBradWall.

RalphGoodale

Sharing the grief of this wounded community. #LaLoche needs the love and support of all Canadians.

davidakin

#NewsNOW in Regina: Public Safety Minister @RalphGoodale and #LPC MP @MPicardLiberal speak about PTSD and public safety officers.

StevePCanada

Minister @RalphGoodale asks for a coordinated action plan from the National Roundtable on #PTSD @Safety_Canada <http://ow.ly/i/qinNx>

EAdamsPolicy

Representing @CdnFireChiefs/Fire Service @National Roundtable of PTSD. TY @RalphGoodale for opportunity @sparky1156

CCJSSK

Minister @RalphGoodale asks for a coordinated action plan from the National Roundtable on #PTSD @Safety_Canada <http://ow.ly/i/ginNx>

TEMATrust

Humbled to be attending the National #PTSD Roundtable discussion in Regina. @RalphGoodale @ToddDohertyMP @MPPKevinFlynn

CanadaInstitute

Public Safety Minister Goodale rejects US security concerns regarding refugee fast-track resettlement program. <http://ow.ly/XEF0J>

oncivlib

OCLA writes to Minister @RalphGoodale asking for end to expulsion procedures against @HarkatUpdates: <http://ocla.ca/ocla-letter-canadas-threatened-expulsion-of-refugee-mohamed-harkat/> ... #secretrials

canadaCJFE

@RalphGoodale we don't like being watched, do you? Let's talk #BillC51, because #MyPrivacy matters.

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

globalnews

WATCH: Chief Public Health Officer stresses #ZikaVirus threat to Canada is low, would like to avoid fear-mongering snpy.tv/1JMyiFi

PeterAkmanCTV

Government asking ppl to wait 1 month before giving blood after coming back from #ZikaVirus hotspots @CanadianBloodSe @CTVNews

CBCAlerts

Health officials: #ZikaVirus a low risk to public health in Cda, but pregnant women should avoid travel to areas where present. #cdnhealth

CKNW

#ZikaVirus Public Health Agency update: All confirmed cases in #Canada from travellers. 2 in BC & 1 each in Alberta and Quebec

CKNW

.@HealthCanada "No case of local transmission in #Canada" because the type of mosquito carrying #ZikaVirus doesn't exist in Canada.

CKNW

.@HealthCanada won't say which countries the 4 infected Canadians were in. #ZikaVirus

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBCNews

Alleged Somali war criminal first exposed by the fifth estate now in landmark U.S. case <http://ift.tt/1KKa8SE>

ipoliticsca

North American ministers meet in Quebec as U.S. actions in TPP casts shadow | iPolitics <http://ift.tt/1NDUurV>

CJOYMagicNews

Wellington OPP warning of immigration scam. Learn more here--> <http://goo.gl/UjUKoK> #Guelph #News

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

guardian

Airstrike on British hacker working for Isis also killed three civilians, US admits trib.al/sBTV2zz

motherboard

BREAKING: "Murdered" Silk Road employee sentenced to time served bit.ly/1P23VU5

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

PBouchardRC

Médias de retour à La Loche pour la visite de Justin Trudeau. PM attendu à 11h30. GRC sur place #rcsk ctvsaskatoon

'We are still here,' teachers say ahead of Trudeau visit to La Loche <http://saskatoon.ctvnews.ca/we-are-still-here-teachers-say-ahead-of-trudeau-to-visit-la-loche-1.2757357> ...

theprovince

PM Trudeau travels to La Loche after 'heartbreaking and devastating' school... <http://bit.ly/1PYDWwp> #Canada

CKOMNews

Trudeau, Wall, Bellegarde hold meeting in La Loche today #LaLoche #cdnpoli #FirstNations <http://ow.ly/XGHtg>

SarahNKraus

Here's the RCMP plane landing in #LaLoche. @GlobalEdmonton @GlobalRegina @GlobalSaskatoon

_chamilton

Increased RCMP presence in La Loche in advance of Prime Minister Trudeau's visit

VancouverSun

B.C. Mounties describe harrowing recapture of escaped Alberta prisoner ow.ly/3alHOj

MCSCanada

RCMP searching for #missing 15 y/o Kelsey Muir last seen in #PrinceAlbert #SK RT! <http://thestarphoenix.com> #Humboldt

CBCSask

ICYMI: RCMP search for suspects after bank robbery in Imperial, Sask. <http://www.cbc.ca/1.3424921>

vicecanada

RCMP release video of young woman wanted in brutal murder, say she could be anywhere: <http://bit.ly/1PJSiKS>

globalhalifax

Video from @RCMPNB pleads for help locating murder suspect Marissa Shephard. Watch here: <http://glbn.ca/XEDqg>

919TheBendNews

#NB Students To Benefit From Cops, Kids and Computers Program - See more at: <http://www.919thebend.ca> #rcmp #computers

CBTribune

ICYMI @RCMPNB seek info on #Dawsonville homicide, but are saying little themselves <http://ow.ly/XEISs>

CBCNL

#TBT yesterday: that time a Trepassey RCMP officer was on The Price is Right <http://cbc.ca/1.3424067>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Thomjanis

#Corrections Edmonton corrections officer shows support for Peace River officers vf.to/5tiVVxWD5qd

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

CKRMnews

Discussing PTSD at the University of Regina. Details at bit.ly/1Qxk2LO pic.twitter.com/LvaRKYfMia

CCJSSK

A Fire Serve Perspective for the National Roundtable on #PTSD by @CdnFireChiefs includes Operational Stress Injury ow.ly/i/gisoj

StevePCanada

A Fire Serve Perspective for the National Roundtable on #PTSD by @CdnFireChiefs includes Operational Stress Injury ow.ly/i/gisoj

CIMVHR_ICRSMV

RT @alice_aiken: In Regina @ National Roundtable on PTSD. Focus on public safety personnel. Representing @CIMVHR_ICRSMV and @queensu

StoonEOC

#YXE EMO is pleased to be participating in a National Roundtable on #PTSD. pic.twitter.com/YWXr5rjYq8

cbcnewsbc

Social media workshop for parents attracts a packed crowd in New Westminster <http://ift.tt/1RQXity>

CBC_Aboriginal

Family members gather in Iqaluit for MMIW pre-inquiry <http://ift.tt/1Pn6zXS>

TheTye

'Scared' and Spied On Under Harper, Why Child Advocate Didn't Give Up thetye.ca/News/2016/01/2... #cdnpoli

OTHER / AUTRE

MacleansMag

When Cindor Reeves was deported, he worried assassins would try to kill him. They are: ow.ly/XFlwp pic.twitter.com/wlCeSQ3c1K

jkenney

ISIS's only grievance is that the world does not succumb to its fanatical effort to create a pre-medieval Caliphate.

CTVMontreal

North American foreign ministers meeting: What's at stake? <http://dlvr.it/KLvdZI>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
February 21, 2016 / le 21 février 2016
9:00 - 18:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 9:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 09h00 et 18h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

RCMP association calls for overhaul

A group vying to become the Mounties' first bargaining unit is using new allegations of sex harassment and bullying to try to make its case for a group to represent rank and file officers. A representative for the Mounted Police Professional Association said the RCMP is mismanaged, and higher-ups turn a blind eye to allegations of harassment and assault in the workplace. Rob Creasser points to a CBC report last week detailing allegations of unwanted sexual touching, bullying and rampant nudity in the workplace at the explosives training unit of the Canadian Police College in Ottawa. The report prompted a sharp reaction from Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale. He said he told RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson he expects a comprehensive, transparent investigation, strong discipline, support for victims and a plan to end what he calls "this toxic workplace behaviour." Creasser said the allegations show RCMP officers need an association to encourage transparency and accountability in the force. Canadian Press (Blackburn News)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Multiple patients rushed to hospital following another avalanche near Golden

Emergency crews and search and rescue teams are dealing with more than a dozen potential patients caught in an avalanche near Golden. It's the second slide in the area in as many days. While exact injuries in this latest incident aren't yet known, the first — a slide Saturday that caught up a group of snowmobilers — was deadly. Late Sunday morning ground and air ambulances as well as search rescue teams were sent to the Chatter Creek area following reports of an avalanche, BC Emergency Health Services confirmed. There they discovered 13 people were involved in the incident, about 30 km northwest of Golden. BC Emergency Health Services says seven people were rushed to hospital straight away and the scene is still an active one. Vancouver Province; Canadian Press (CTV News)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés

CTV News' Question Period interviewed Public Safety Minister, Ralph Goodale on national security issues including radicalization of youth, changes to the Passenger Protect Program, collaboration with Five Eyes partners and the creation of a parliamentary oversight committee on national security. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

Common Software Would Have Let FBI Unlock Shooter's iPhone

The county government that owned the iPhone in a high-profile legal battle between Apple Inc. and the Justice Department paid for but never installed a feature that would have allowed the FBI to easily and immediately unlock the phone as part of the terrorism investigation into the shootings that killed 14 people in San Bernardino, California. If the technology, known as mobile device management, had been installed, San Bernardino officials would have been able to remotely unlock the iPhone for the FBI without the theatrics of a court battle that is now pitting digital privacy rights against national security concerns. Associated Press

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP officers build bridges with Kwanlin Dün First Nation

There are a couple of new faces at the Kwanlin Dün First Nation in Whitehorse — RCMP constables whose primary assignment is to police the community, and hopefully build trust while they're at it. "I know the relationship between the Kwanlin Dün First Nation and the police isn't great right now," said Const. Kerry Jury, one of the new officers. "Just hoping to improve that a little bit." Jury, along with Const. Jordan Booth, have been stationed in the community since the start of the year. They work out of a small office at the First Nation's administrative building. CBC News

RCMP looking for Kamloops man

RCMP are asking for the public's help to find a Kamloops man. Police say they are urgently trying to locate Matthew (Matt) Cloutier, 29, to deliver important information to him. He also goes by the name Stephen Cloutier, according to a RCMP media release. Infotel.ca

Brooks woman dead, man in custody charged with aggravated assault - Tanya Campbell-Losier was taken to a Calgary hospital but died of her injuries on Sunday

A 19-year-old Brooks woman is dead and a 26-year-old Brooks man is in custody following an alleged assault on Friday. RCMP and EMS were called to a Brooks residence at 3:55 a.m. on Feb. 19 and found Tanya Campbell-Losier with severe injuries. She was taken to a Calgary hospital and died on Feb. 21. Police charged Jesse Dick with aggravated assault and said they are not seeking any other suspects in the case. The investigation continues and involves the Brooks RCMP as well as the RCMP Major Crimes Unit and Forensic Identification Services Unit. CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Parole Board of Canada imposes conditions on Chase James Roper

Roper, 25, involved in a violent robbery of a drug dealer, is serving a four-year sentence. A P.E.I. man who was involved in a violent robbery of a drug dealer was recently granted full parole. Chase James Roper, 25, is serving a four-year sentence for several offences, including armed robbery, assault with a weapon and drug trafficking. In a recent report, the Parole Board of Canada said it was satisfied releasing Roper wouldn't result in an undue risk to the community and would help with his reintegration as a law-abiding citizen. Roper has been on day parole since last summer and the board's report said he successfully completed a substance abuse program. Charlottetown Guardian

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

La Loche School To Reopen One Month After Deadly Shooting

The doors of a northern Saskatchewan high school that was the site of a deadly shooting are reopening. Teachers will be back at the La Loche high school Monday and classes are to resume shortly after that for students. The community is organizing a "Reclaiming Our School" walk for Wednesday. The school has been closed since a teacher and an aide were killed and seven other people were wounded Jan 22; two teenage brothers were also found dead in a nearby home. Betsy Kelly, executive director of North Sask Victim Services, has been in La Loche offering support to victims and the community. Kelly says it can take a while for a community to work through the grief, but she described La Loche as "a very strong community." "I always compare it to a person's grief," says Kelly. "As an individual, you don't get over grief in a month or two, it can take years. And similarly a community, it will take many years to be able to move forward." Canadian Press (Huffington Post)

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUETE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINEES

Opinion - Plight of indigenous women rooted in systemic inequality

An opinion piece by NDP leader Tom Mulcair states "Just a few days before we learned that the number of missing and murdered Indigenous women in Canada could be much higher than RCMP estimates, I visited the epicentre of this violent epidemic - Vancouver's Downtown Eastside. Standing in the pouring rain, on the corner of Main and Hastings, hundreds gathered in one of the poorest neighbourhoods in the country to call for justice... These women and girls are not statistics - they are their sisters, mothers, and daughters. Despite adversity and pain of such profound loss, I saw such strength in a community standing together and speaking out. It's the same strong determination I've seen in communities and at Sisters in Spirit Vigils all across Canada. This national crisis is rooted in deep inequality faced by Indigenous women - inequality that goes beyond the wealth disparity that has seen the gap between the rich and everyone else grow wider and faster in Canada than most of the rest of the developed world. An Indigenous woman living in the Downtown Eastside can't escape the fact that she is three times more likely to face violence and seven times more likely to be killed than non-Indigenous women. At the same time, she is more likely to struggle just to find a safe and affordable place to call home, and more likely to be driven onto the streets and an unending cycle of poverty and violence. This is systemic racism and injustice, pure and simple." Vancouver Sun

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

'Real Canadians hate Syrians': Calgary school vandalized once again with hateful messages

Calgary police are investigating after the walls of a southeast junior high were once again sprayed with hateful messages directed at Syrians and Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. Officers were called just before 9:30 a.m. Saturday to Wilma Hansen junior high school in the community of Queensland after someone in the neighbourhood reported the vandalism to police. "We are still doing neighbourhood inquiries," said Sgt. Kelly Todd, adding the incident could potentially be investigated as a hate crime. On the walls of the school, in black spray-paint, someone wrote messages including "Syrians are animals" and "real Canadians hate Syrians" as well as "burn all mosques." Postmedia News (National Post)

Business groups fear refugees and immigrant families will crowd out spaces for foreign workers in Canada

Provinces and businesses are waiting nervously to see if the federal government will cut back on the number of foreign workers admitted into Canada this year to make room for Syrian refugees and immigrant families. The government admits a set number of immigrants each year. In 2015, for example, the Conservative government planned to admit up to 285,000 immigrants. Of those slots, 66 per cent were reserved for economic immigrants; 24 per cent of the slots were for the family members of immigrants; and the remaining 10 per cent were for refugees and other humanitarian entrants. The federal government is supposed to provide its immigration admission numbers by Oct. 31 each year. Because of last fall's federal election, the numbers for 2016 haven't yet been published. The government now has until March 9 to come up with its plan. Ottawa Citizen (National Post)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

Provisional agreement reached on Syrian ceasefire, car bombs kill 46 in city of Homs

Secretary of State John Kerry said Sunday that a "provisional agreement" has been reached on a Syrian ceasefire that could begin in the next few days, but he acknowledged that it's not finalized and all parties might not automatically comply. Explosions meanwhile ripped through the central Syrian city of Homs and a Damascus suburb, killing dozens of people, and government forces backed by Russian warplanes pressed a major offensive north of Aleppo that has undermined previous efforts to halt the fighting.

Kerry said he discussed the terms with Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov and said the two must now reach out to the opposing forces in the conflict. He declined to go into the details of the agreement, saying it "is not yet done." Associated Press (Montreal Gazette, Vancouver Province)

Australia warns of possible terror attacks in Kuala Lumpur

Australia has warned that terrorists may be plotting attacks in and around Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia's largest city. The Australian High Commission in Malaysia says there's an ongoing terrorism threat in Malaysia, noting that Malaysian authorities have arrested a number of people allegedly involved in planning attacks. It warned in a travel advisory posted on its website Sunday that attacks could be indiscriminate and may target Western interests or locations frequented by Westerners. Associated Press (Yahoo! News)

Snowden willing to return to U.S. with guarantee of fair trial

Speaking via Skype from Russia, Edward Snowden told an audience of supporters in New Hampshire on Saturday that he is willing to be extradited to the United States if the federal government would guarantee he would get a fair trial. The former National Security Agency contractor in 2013 leaked details of a secret government eavesdropping program and left the country. He faces U.S. charges that could land him in prison for up to 30 years. Snowden spoke Saturday at the New Hampshire Liberty Forum, heavily attended by libertarians. WMUR reported that forum organizers did not allow the media to video record his remarks. "I've told the government I would return if they would guarantee a fair trial where I can make a public interest defence of why this was done and allow a jury to decide," Snowden told his audience. Associated Press (Toronto Star)

Protests planned to back Apple in battle with FBI

Protesters are preparing to assemble in more than 30 cities to lash out at the FBI for obtaining a court order that requires Apple to make it easier to unlock an encrypted iPhone used by a gunman in December's mass shootings in Southern California. The protests organized by the Internet rights group Fight for the Future are scheduled to occur Tuesday outside Apple stores in the U.S., the U.K., Hong Kong and Germany. The U.S. protests will be in cities scattered across more than 20 states, including in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Washington, where protesters plan to express their discontent outside the FBI's headquarters. Associated Press

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale notes that Canada is the only Five Eyes member that doesn't have Parliamentary oversight of their security apparatus #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale confirms the review of no-fly list policies will look to add additional info to help reduce false positives. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale says the info airline employees can currently see is only a name when someone is flagged on the no-fly list. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale says the Departments of Public Safety and Transport are working together to review no-fly list policies. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale says the CDN office of counter-radicalization will be a separate department, but will draw resources from across the gov.

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale confirms that the Liberals will create a new national office of counter-radicalization this calendar year. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

"We need to find ways to combat the negative messages that lead people to radicalization," says @RalphGoodale. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale says DND and CSIS will be "engaged in appropriate activity within the region" to combat ISIS. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

@RalphGoodale says Canada has increased its security and intelligence activity in relation to ISIS. #cdnpoli

CTV's Question Period

After the break, Public Safety Minister @RalphGoodale. #cdnpoli

Robert Fife

On CTV Question Period today, Public Safety Minister @RalphGoodale talks no fly list, anti-radicalization & Cdn spying vs ISIL. #cdnpoli

Robert Fife

On CTV Question Period Sunday, Alberta Premier @RachelNotley & Public Safety Minister @RalphGoodale Hope you will tune in. #cdnpoli

Chris Hall

@markesaube @RalphGoodale @CBCTheHouse we talked at length about Parl oversight, expanding role of SIRC.. both civilian agencies

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Toronto Star

Avalanche near Golden, B.C. kills one, injures another <http://on.thestar.com/21iGVHU> #topstories

CTV Calgary

Size three avalanche near Golden, B.C. claims snowmobiler from Calgary <http://bit.ly/1Qu9hgl> #yyc

theprovince

Multiple patients rushed to hospital following another avalanche near Golden <http://bit.ly/1mRikur> #Canada

CTVNews

13 people involved in B.C. avalanche near area where fatal slide happened Saturday <http://ow.ly/YzXnC>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

SC Magazine

New Xbot trojan phishes, steals data, and uses ransomware | <http://ow.ly/Yxslm>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

metromontreal

Une association blâme les dirigeants de la GRC <http://bit.ly/20OhMCR>

HuffPostCanada

Group says RCMP turns a blind eye to harassment, assault allegations <http://huff.to/1Q3iYRX>

Global News

Five Mounties sue RCMP in alleged medical privacy breach <http://on.gln.ca/6oOjY6>

Brennan Leffler

ICYMI last night's @GlobalTV16x9 story from me & @VassyKapelos on medical privacy breaches in the #RCMP. #cdnpoli <http://youtu.be/1mSfVVLkukQ>

CBC Aboriginal

RCMP officers build bridges with Kwanlin Dün First Nation <http://ift.tt/1Q2ANMR>

Althia Raj

La Loche school set to reopen one month after deadly shooting http://www.huffingtonpost.ca/2016/02/21/la-loche-school-reopen_n_9285056.html ... via @huffpostalberta

HuffPost

#LaLoche school set to reopen one month after deadly shooting <http://huff.to/24kb7H> via @huffpostalberta

HuffPostCanada

RCMP hope to track down owner of stolen WW2 letters <http://huff.to/1TxjrxB>

HuffPostCanada

The last of the Stanley Cup rioters are being jailed <http://huff.to/1Ug8Fep>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

CTV Vancouver

Online illusion: Social media used to lure into prostitution
<http://bc.ctvnews.ca/video?clipId=813113&playlistId=1.2786408&binId=1.1184694&playlistPageNum=1> ...

VancouverSun

La Loche school to reopen after deadly shooting, as community copes with grief <http://ow.ly/3bzEIP>

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

Joanna Smith

Minister Carolyn Bennett looking at how to include #Indigenous law in #MMIW national inquiry
<http://m.thestar.com/#/article/news/canada/2016/02/20/inquiry-into-missing-aboriginal-women-must-not-ignore-indigenous-law-advocates-say.html> ... via @TorontoStar

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

The Province

Business groups fear refugees and immigrant families will crowd out spaces for... <http://bit.ly/1mR9T2e> #Canada

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

The Province

Provisional agreement reached on Syrian ceasefire, car bombs kill 46 in city of Homs <http://bit.ly/1mQMKNf>

CBC News Alerts

#ISIS claims responsibility for triple blast in #Damascus suburb that killed at least 22 people: @AP

New Straits Times

Australia warns of possible terror attacks in Kuala Lumpur

Mirror Politics

PM warns of terror threat saying EU has "strength in numbers in a dangerous world" <http://www.mirror.co.uk/news/uk-news/david-cameron-begs-boris-johnson-7410699?clearcache=1> ...

The Province

Nearly all of Fiji without power after country hit with monstrous cyclone, killing at least... <http://bit.ly/1L3p2sD>

Reuters

Fiji super cyclone kills 10 and raises fears of health crisis <http://reut.rs/20OwOJ0>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca).*

Sent to: !!INTERNAL + CBSA Today's News + CSC & PBC Today's News + PS Today's News + RCMP
Today's News + RCMP Today's News 2

Today's News / Actualités
February 2, 2016 / le 2 février 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Canada's recently elected prime minister, Justin Trudeau, has promised to ratify a United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples

After the meeting, Wall said the community will get the support it needs from the province to help people who are struggling after Friday's tragedy, as well as in the longer term on its infrastructure, education and health-care needs. "So sad I don't have no more babies". LeBlanc said improving the lot of the First Nations was "a huge challenge". Police also said they still don't know the minor suspect's motive and did not also disclose the gun use on the incident. "I'm not going to make any comments about that, other than it will be something the Crown will be considering". "It is a slow process". RCMP announced on Saturday that they had charged a 17-year-old suspect with four counts of first-degree murder, seven counts of attempted murder and unauthorized possession of a firearm. He can't be named under the Youth Criminal Justice Act. Royal Canadian Mounted Police Supt. In a statement to the media on Friday, RCMP Chief Superintendent Maureen Levy said, "members attended the La Loche Community School at the Dene Highschool". A gunman shot 11 people, killing four, at a school and home in La Loche, Saskatchewan, an impoverished northern community with high rates of suicide, addiction and unemployment. La Loche student Noel Desjarlais told the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that he heard multiple shots fired at the school, which has about 900 students. As per the school's Facebook's page, La Loche community school is from pre- kindergarten to Grade 12, and it houses not less than 900 students in two buildings. He is due in court next week. The isolated town of La Loche, in the western province of Saskatchewan, and its neighboring Clearwater River Dene Indian reserve, six hours away from the nearest airport, embody the dire prospects for Canada's Aboriginals, also known as First Nations. "This is a significant event for Canada", said Supt. "It is a huge tragedy, one that reaches far beyond this community", Goodale said of the shooting. "I think it's part of changing times"

NanoNews

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Ouverture du bureau de reconstruction

Le ministre des Transports du Canada, Marc Garneau, a annoncé samedi une subvention de 1,965 million de dollars pour la mise en place et le fonctionnement du Bureau de reconstruction du centre-ville de Lac-Mégantic pour les trois prochaines années Q 97.3

3.7 magnitude earthquake registers near St. Andrews

A 3.7 magnitude earthquake hit New Brunswick on Tuesday, at 7:56 a.m., about 27 kilometres southeast of Saint Andrews according to Earthquakes Canada. At least 18 reports came in to the Natural Resources Canada internet intensity map, with one report describing the earthquake as feeling moderate with very light damage, and the rest reporting it as weak or light. Jana Sutherland, who lives on the waterfront in Eastport, Maine, says the earthquake hit with surprising intensity. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Where privacy and security intersect, will police and intelligence (finally) work together?

An opinion piece by David Ormond, member of CIGI-Chatham House Global Commission on Internet Governance, states, "Concerns that two of Canada's intelligence agencies, the Canadian Security Establishment (CSE) and the Canadian Security Intelligence Services (CSIS), broke the rules by sharing intercepted data with Canada's allies, will further spur public debate about how to strengthen public oversight and accountability mechanisms for Canada's intelligence gathering agencies. Since the revelations of Edward Snowden that authorities can access personal communications from mobile devices and computers, the public the world over has become sensitized to issues of online privacy. At the same time, terrorist atrocities have continued. The murder in Burkino Faso of six Quebeckers along with many others follows the 2015 Paris attack on journalists working for Charlie Hebdo, on a Jewish synagogue, on British and other European tourists murdered on a Tunisian beach, the downing of a Russian airliner, the Bataclan theatre massacre in Paris, and the San Bernardino killings. The Internet is filled with ultra-violent jihadi images from Syria. Criminal activities of human traffickers result in refugees being drowned trying to reach Europe. Every week brings new cyber attacks on our financial system and infrastructure. Presidents Assad and Putin remind us of the dangers that authoritarian regimes can pose. The year 2016 must be one of reconciliation in which democracies work out a social compact to allow their authorities lawfully to obtain the digital intelligence needed to keep us safe and secure, but under strong safeguarding norms of proper behaviour towards information on the Internet that ensure respect for our rights to privacy and free speech. One norm should be to have independent judicial and parliamentary oversight of intelligence activity towards which Canada seems to be moving under the leadership of Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety. Another norm should be commitment by nations to do nothing that might weaken the security of the systems upon which the Internet relies and might reduce our confidence in it as a secure medium to do business. Globe and Mail

CSIS compares ISIS to Uber, says it's reshaping the jihadist movement

The rise of the so-called Islamic State could reshape the modern jihadist movement - and unless allies fighting the militants get past their regional rivalries, things are going to get worse before they get better, a new report published by Canada's spy agency argues. "The fight against ISIL is not the first priority for most regional state actors; they may agree on opposing the group, but only as a secondary priority, while they often oppose each other on their first objectives," reads the report - The Foreign Fighters Phenomenon and Related Security Trends in the Middle East. "Economic grievances, resentment at stagnant and repressive political systems, as well as violence are also in other countries of the region, including Yemen, Egypt and Libya. This underpins the conditions favouring the emergence of additional safe havens for foreign fighters." The report focuses on concerns raised during a workshop held by CSIS on October 28 and 29 as part of its academic outreach program. Its assessments are not the formal position of CSIS, nor do they count as an analysis by CSIS of the foreign fighter threat. Conducted under the Chatham House rule - meaning none of what was said can be attributed to the person who said it - the event brought people from the intelligence field together with specialists to discuss papers submitted by researchers from the Middle East, Europe and North America. The goal was to examine "the dynamics underpinning the conflict in Syria and Iraq and related security consequences," the report says. Attendees focused on four themes during their discussions: the main drivers of instability in the Middle East; how those drivers have contributed to the rise of ISIL and the phenomenon of foreign fighters; the nature and level of the threat posed by foreign fighters, and; the tools and programs needed to counter this threat. They also assessed how ISIS is changing the structure of the modern jihadist movement and, in doing so, challenging security agencies to adapt their counterterrorism policies to cope with a more fluid, dynamic foe than traditional jihadist power structures like al Qaeda. "If Al-Qaeda evoked the 'franchise' metaphor, ISIL is more akin to UBER: digitally empowered entrepreneurship with a low-maintenance framework and an unusual ability to absorb pre-existing networks such as residual state bureaucracies, Baath Party remnants and rogue tribes," the report said. iPolitics

Canada Revenue Agency doesn't know the contents of files it improperly gave to CSIS

The federal revenue agency says it doesn't know what sort of taxpayer information a rogue employee improperly shared with the Canadian Security Intelligence Service because CSIS has wiped the files from its database. The Canada Revenue Agency told The Canadian Press that the employee who handed over the sensitive data - doing so even though CSIS lacked a judicial warrant - is no longer with the department. The agency refused to disclose whether the person was fired or left voluntarily, citing privacy reasons. And it is not clear if the taxpayers whose information was compromised were ever notified of the improper sharing. The CRA is unable to determine the details of the information that was shared with CSIS as it was removed permanently and in its entirety from CSIS systems. The Security Intelligence Review Committee, the watchdog that keeps an eye on CSIS, revealed last week in its annual report that the spy and revenue agencies repeatedly breached the rules. Questions were first raised by the Federal Court, prompting CSIS to ask the review committee to look into the matter. After concerns emerged, there were assurances the sensitive revenue agency information had been purged from a CSIS database when, in fact, it was still there, the review committee's report says. CSIS spokeswoman Tahera Mufti says the information is now "deleted from CSIS databases." "It should be noted that none of the information received from the CRA was shared beyond CSIS," she added. National Post

Motive a mystery in apparent targeted shooting of cousins

A 22-year-old man who was ordered not to be in contact with an alleged terror recruiter and financier was shot in the chest inside a Somali restaurant Sunday evening. His cousin took a bullet to his head and died almost instantly. Ayyub Arab, 22, was shot alongside his mortally wounded cousin Marwan Arab, 20, inside the Shifa Restaurant at the corner of Cobden Road and Iris Street in the Pinecrest neighbourhood. When police arrived, they found two victims, one dead and another "very seriously injured," said Insp. Sean McDade. Both young men attended Algonquin College. Ayyub, in stable condition at The Ottawa Hospital as of Monday afternoon, continues to be listed as a secretary on the executive of the Muslim Students' Association. It was in that role that he is believed to have met Awso Peshdary, 25, who almost a year ago was charged by RCMP with participating in the activity of a terrorist group, facilitating an activity for a terrorist group, and conspiring to participate or to contribute in an activity of a terrorist group. Ottawa Citizen

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBSA not examining nearly one in five high-risk exports: AG report

At one Canadian port, a border services officer went on vacation and export control examinations took a break in their absence. At another, rail shipments once went over a month without the required targetting of cargo because of "staffing fluctuations." One Canada Post parcel centre was ignored altogether. In the Auditor General's 2015 fall report, staffing issues are just one of several reasons why 17 per cent of goods shipments deemed "high-risk" were allowed to leave the country without being examined. "The agency has missed opportunities to stop some goods that did not comply with Canada's export control laws from leaving the country," Auditor General Michael Ferguson said in prepared remarks. Canadian goods exports totalled $529 billion in 2014, but the Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) had less than one per cent of its full-time equivalents dedicated to export control activities, the Auditor General estimates. There were too few people with too much to do. The agency relied on export declarations to identify high-risk shipments, for example, but wasn't able to review all of them. And too many of those it did flag went unchecked. "We found that the agency had implemented processes to select high-risk shipments for counter-proliferation and stolen vehicles," the report notes. "These processes were effective on some measures, but we found that about one in five high-risk shipments identified by the agency's centralized targeting units was not examined at the port of exit, for a variety of reasons." When it came to stolen vehicles, there was some good news: a combination of local and centralized targeting resulted in the agency finding approximately 700 stolen cars between April 2013 and December 2014. As with counter-proliferation targets, however - think military goods and technologies - the fact that so many goods shipments went unexamined suggests a significant amount of goods were exported that shouldn't have been. (...) "We found that capacity and control practices varied among (ports of exit). In addition, under the Customs Act, border services officers could examine such shipments only if they identified signs of non-compliance," the report said. "They could not simply open parcels at random." Those limitations on their examination authorities, CBSA officials told their auditors, "reduced their effectiveness in preventing the export of illegal drugs." iPolitics; Toronto Star; CBC News; CTV News; Maclean's; La Presse; Journal de Montréal

Lax border checks allow illegal drugs, stolen cars to slip out of Canada

The Canada Border Services Agency is not keeping a close enough eye on exports, causing high-risk shipments - including illegal drugs and stolen cars - to leave the country undetected, auditor general Michael Ferguson says. In his latest series of reports examining the efficiencies and failings of various government departments, the federal watchdog finds the border agency is not reviewing all export declarations and not examining many shipments flagged by its own internal system - or by warnings from other departments. Up to 20 per cent of high-risk exports identified by the agency's centralized targeting units were allowed to pass without inspection. Much of the breakdown relates to staff levels; in some locations, inspections cease entirely if a single staff member goes away on vacation. "We also found that the agency did not always conduct targeting and examinations during all hours and days when export shipments move," the audit said. "This meant that non-compliant shipments were exported undetected." The audit found that when the agency did detain shipments, it was holding on to legitimate goods far too long and - in some cases - costing businesses their contracts. Hamilton Spectator; Huffington Post; Radio Canada International

Weapons of Mass Destruction May Be Slipping Through Canada's Ports

Short-staffing and outdated technology at Canada's borders could be helping groups abroad build weapons of mass destruction. The findings of a new audit, tabled Tuesday, found almost a fifth of high-risk exports are not being screened, while gaps in screening could mean exporters are gaming the system. Things slipping through the northern border could include nuclear materials, chemical and biological agents, and even types of missiles. Following the audit, the Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) has promised to draw up plans "to reduce the proportion of targeted high-risk shipments [that are] not examined." The agency, which is charged with counter-proliferation of dangerous weapons at the border, works with intelligence agencies to determine which exports should be checked before leaving Canada. During the 21-month audit, 29 per cent of shipments deemed high-risk had not complied with the agency's rules during the audit. While most of the issues were minor, the CBSA thwarted "several shipments that were cause for national security concern." VICE News; Ottawa Citizen

Roosh V and his views not welcome in Ottawa, Mayor Jim Watson tweets

The views of a U.S. blogger known to preach pro-rape and misogynistic behaviour are not welcome in Ottawa, Mayor Jim Watson tweeted today in response to reports of a meeting of the blogger's supporters. Roosh V, whose real name is Daryush Valizadeh, has attracted outrage through his blog posts, including one advocating that rape be made legal inside a private home, and another suggesting that men seek out women with eating disorders. (...) Last summer, Toronto Mayor John Tory and city Coun. Norm Kelly both tweeted at Roosh V, telling him he was not welcome in the Ontario capital. An appearance in Montreal last August also drew protests and a petition of more than 40,000 signatures arguing that Roosh V should not be allowed to cross the border into Canada. CBC News

Windsor council denies Ambassador Bridge request to tear down Indian Road home

City council denied a request Monday by the Ambassador Bridge company to tear down a dilapidated, abandoned house located at 446 Indian Road, in the Sandwich Heritage Conservation District. An administrative report recommended against the demolition pending the outcome of long-standing litigation between the city and Canadian Transit Company that is bound for the Supreme Court of Canada. "The Building Inspector has determined that the property, while damaged by fire, does not threaten public safety," says a city report. Stan Korosec, the director of security with the CTC, disagreed with that assessment. "There is a safety issue here, not to the people walking down the street but obviously these homes are being entered and I just don't want to see anybody get hurt," said Korosec Monday night. "At some point they're going to have to come down anyway. If people don't like they way they look and everything then let's tear them down now and put some grass." Windsor Star; CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

The Auditor General is tabling his latest report in the House of Commons. Michael Ferguson's role is to aid accountability by conducting independent audits of the government. The report finds that illegal exports are getting out of Canada because of an inability by the Canada Border Services Agency to check or willingness to check all of these shipments, and it says things like illegal drugs and stolen cars could be among the items that are making it across the border. (CTV News Channel, 10:10, 11:30, CBC News Network, 10:06, CHQR-AM, 8:30, CKFR-AM, 8:04, 8:33, CFAX-AM, 8:34, CKNW-AM, 9:04, CBC R1 Ottawa, 9:02, CKGL-AM, 10:32, CIWW-AM, 10:24, CHML-AM, 10:33, CJAD-AM, 11:03, CFMJ-AM, 11:02, CHOK-AM, 12:07)

CBC News presented Auditor General Michael Ferguson's press conference in which he discussed his office's Fall 2015 reports. Rough Transcript

Canada Border Services Agency has arrested a man wanted for alleged sexual assault over three decades ago. Jeffrey Martin was taken on January twenty first at the Woodstock border crossing. CBSA says officers had determined Martin was wanted by the Toronto Police for two counts of sexual assault dating back to 1980. (CJCJ-FM, 6:01, 7:01)

Two people are facing multiple charges in connection with alleged immigration fraud in Regina. Canada Border Services Agency alleges the men acted as immigration consultants but weren't licensed. The agency says the pair provided false job offer documents to foreign nationals between 2007 and 2013. (CJWW-AM, 7:32, Global News Regina, 6:02, 7:02)

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

EU to step up checks on Bitcoin, prepaid cards to fight terrorism

The European Commission will propose by the end of June stricter rules on prepaid cards and virtual currencies in a bid to reduce anonymous payments and curb the financing of terrorism, documents released on Tuesday showed. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

EU plans to coordinate a key mobile spectrum in Europe

European Union regulators proposed on Tuesday to roll out a key mobile spectrum across the 28-nation bloc to improve access to internet services and technologies, including in remote areas. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

Fisher-Price smart bear allowed hacking of children's biographical data

In September, Mattel's Fisher-Price brand announced it had partnered with a tech company to make Smart Toy, a stuffed bear that can learn a three-year-old's name. Naturally, it's hackable. Researchers at Rapid7, a Boston-based security company, found that the app connected to the Fisher-Price toy had several security flaws that would allow a hacker to steal a child's name, birthdate and gender, along with other data. The toymaker encourages parents to use the app so that the toy can better interact with children. Guardian UK

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

No proof that massive IT system overhaul is saving money: AG

The federal government's plan to save money by consolidating computer systems is behind schedule and its record keeping is so incomplete that it is impossible to know whether it is actually saving money, says Auditor General Michael Ferguson. In his audit made public Tuesday, Ferguson found that Shared Services Canada (SSC) is also not counting the costs for individual government departments in transforming things like e-mail systems and data centres. "Without consistent practices to determine savings, including structured governance and oversight responsibilities, total savings generated from SSC's investments and activities for the government as a whole will remain largely unknown," Ferguson wrote. While Shared Services Canada maintains that it is saving the government money, it can't prove it, he added. "Although SSC has reported that it is generating savings, it does not have consistent practices in place to demonstrate that government-wide savings are being achieved or to recognize that there are partner costs involved in all transformation projects." For example, Shared Services Canada's Email Transformation Initiative (ETI) to combine 63 different government e-mail systems into one is supposed to cost $72 million a year and save the government $56 million. However, implementation of the project is running behind schedule, Ferguson wrote (...) Ferguson also detailed how lack of communication between Shared Services Canada and RCMP led to a 40 minute outage of emergency radio services in Saskatchewan in 2014. "The outage was caused when SSC accidentally rendered a critical feature of the radio network unavailable while making changes to the network to conform to its shared services network standard," Ferguson wrote. "Had SSC followed an adequate change management process, which would have included proper testing and user acceptance, the RCMP could have ensured that SSC took the necessary steps to avoid the outage." iPolitics

«Club social» de pédophiles: plusieurs des accusés pourraient être libérés aujourd'hui

Plusieurs des 13 présumés pédophiles arrêtés la semaine passée lors d'une vaste rafle de la Sûreté du Québec pourraient être libérés dès aujourd'hui, sans même avoir d'enquête sur remise en liberté. «Ça va être selon les garanties qu'ils ont à offrir», a expliqué à la Cour Me Cynthia Gyenizse de la Couronne ce mardi au palais de justice de Montréal. Les autres accusés, devront subir leur enquête sur remise en liberté, prévue pour se dérouler ce mardi. En tout, la police provinciale a arrêté 13 individus la semaine passée, qui auraient fait partie d'un véritable « club social » de pédophiles. Ils auraient échangé entre eux sur comment se rapprocher d'enfants, et plusieurs des accusés avaient occupé des postes les mettant en contact avec des mineurs. La semaine passée, Le Journal révélait que jusqu'à leur arrestation, Dave Turcotte, 36 ans, et Claude Paquette, 31 ans, étaient assistants pour l'Association des aventuriers de Baden-Powell (AABP), respectivement à Beloeil et à Outremont, auprès de jeunes de 9 à 12 ans. Paquette a également été enseignant au primaire. Un autre accusé, Didier Chetelat, enseignait à HEC jusqu'à ce qu'il soit suspendu avec salaire à la suite des accusations. Le groupe des 13 font face à des accusations diverses, allant de la possession de pornographie juvénile à la production de ce matériel illégal. Certains sont aussi accusés d'avoir conseillé autrui à commettre des contacts sexuels sur des mineurs. Les faits reprochés, dans leur ensemble, remontent à 2003 et se seraient déroulés jusqu'à tout récemment. Journal de Montréal (Journal de Quebec)

Peace bond will limit activity of Aaron Driver, terrorist planning suspect

Aaron Driver, a man accused of being involved in terrorist activity, says he had no choice but to agree to a peace bond, which limits his activity. "If I fought it, they would have added even more conditions than I'm already under," Driver told CBC News outside the Winnipeg courthouse following a hearing on Tuesday morning. Driver will not be going to trial. He is not facing criminal charges, but his lawyer and the Crown agreed to a peace bond to limit his activities (...)Driver will be bound by the peace bond for 10 months, expiring on Dec. 1. He is subject to the following conditions: Keeping the peace and being of good behaviour. Appearing before court when required. Carrying a copy of the peace bond on him at all times and producing it when a peace officer asks for it. Living at a specified address in Strathroy, Ont., and notifying a specified RCMP sergeant of any changes in address. Reporting twice a month to the specified RCMP sergeant. Not possessing or acquiring any firearms, ammunition, prohibited devices or explosive substances. Not applying for any passport from Canada or any other country. When he was released on bail in June, he was ordered to surrender any passports he had at the time. Not possessing any cellular phones, computers, laptops, tablets or similar electronic devices "unless permitted in advance in writing from specified RCMP officer." This condition expires on Aug. 31. CBC News

Saint John man wanted on Canada-wide warrant for child luring

A Saint John man is being sought on a Canada-wide warrant in connection to an investigation dealing with online child sexual exploitation. RCMP have released a photograph of Richard (Ricky) Michael Michaelson, who is charged with child luring and extortion. Michaelson is accused of extorting images of a sexual nature from an underage girl and threatening to distribute the images online. RCMP said the incidents are alleged to have taken place between July and October 2014. CBC News

Ontario man who taped up dog, left it to die gets two years in federal prison and 25-year ban on having pets

A man who taped a dog's muzzle shut, bound its legs and left it to die in a field will spend the next two years in a federal penitentiary. Michael Earl Hill, 32, entered a surprise guilty plea Monday to a charge of causing unnecessary suffering to an animal. Hill had been scheduled for a closed door meeting about his case, but insisted on pleading guilty instead, said lawyer Ahmad Ammar. After his release, Hill will be on probation for three years and is banned from having a pet for 25 years (...) Rawlins ordered Hill to get psychological counselling. "People who become serial killers begin with small animals," she said. Hill is also prohibited from possessing weapons during his probation and he must provide a blood sample for the national DNA databank police use to solve crime. Postmedia News (National Post)

New Brunswick man whose daughter fatally shot wants gun registry debate reopened

A New Brunswick man whose young daughter was gunned down in a robbery 29 years ago is calling for a renewed debate on the federal long-gun registry. Ron Davis of Riverview says he's concerned about military-style guns winding up in the hands of the wrong people on city streets. He decided to speak out after a two-page ad from a gun shop featuring mostly military-style firearms appeared in a local newspaper in December. Davis says he has nothing against hunting rifles, but he questions the need for the types of powerful firearms seen in mass shootings in the United States and Canada, including the June 2014 murders of three Mounties in Moncton. Davis's 16-year-old daughter, Laura, was shot and killed with a handgun in a convenience store holdup in Moncton in 1987. The 74-year-old says he and his family will attend a parole hearing in Quebec in April for the man convicted in his daughter's shooting. Guardian

Who killed Mary Ann? Yarmouth County 1990 Lamrock murder still a mystery

There's a saying: No news is good news. If you're Linda Lloyd, however, no news is agony. Lloyd is the sister of Mary Ann Lamrock and continues to hold out hope that there will be justice for her sister - a Yarmouth County woman who was murdered in 1990. But that hope fades as each year goes by. Jan. 29 marked 24 years since Lamrock's skeletal remains were found in woods by hunters off Highway 103 near the intersection of the Scott Road and Oak Park Road... Over time, many different RCMP members have investigated or revisited the case. Usually tips that have come in are ones the RCMP have already heard. People have been ruled out as suspects during the past two decades. Police wondered if they had caught a break when a serial killer named Michael Wayne McGray, who is from Yarmouth County, confessed to several killings in Canada - including one in Digby County of a teenaged girl named Elizabeth Gayle Tucker. But he was ruled out as a suspect in the Lamrock case since he was in jail at the time of her death. The Lamrock case is one of many files being handled by the South West Nova Major Crime Unit. Asked whether the case has been revisited over the past couple of years, Const. Mark Skinner provided the following response from the RCMP: "Each unsolved homicide or missing person case is considered 'open' but given the complex nature of the investigation they may be at different stages. Due to privacy concerns it would not be appropriate to comment on the specific stage of the Lamrock investigation." Cape Breton Post

Dog recovering after being shot with arrow near Regina

A dog is on the mend after somebody shot it with an arrow on the weekend. It happened Sunday northeast of Regina. Some homeowners found the injured dog on their property with the arrow still stuck in its body. A Regina animal rescue organization, CC RezQs, took the dog, an adult female, to veterinarians in Lumsden for x-rays and emergency treatment. "Dr. K at TM'z Vet Clinic says she is the luckiest dog in the world," the group said on its Facebook page. "The arrow shot through her missed her spinal cord by millimetres!! She is staying over night to have her wound flushed. The entry and exit wounds are very disturbing to see, but we are so thankful she was able to be rescued in time." The dog, dubbed Arrow, may need surgery to remove fragments of vertebrae, the group said. The Facebook page notes many people have come forward offering to help or donate money to cover vet bills. "Pretty inspired by the huge amount of offers of help for this beautiful dog," Lynne Sheldon said on Facebook. "To me, that goes to show that while there are some terrible people who do things like this, there are more wonderful ones who want to make it right." The group says it believes the dog is a stray, but has found a foster home to care for her while she recovers. Members have reported the incident to the RCMP. CBC News

Winnipeg police seize $508K in marijuana from 3 West End grow ops

Winnipeg police say they've seized over half a million dollars' worth of marijuana plants from three addresses in the West End this week. Officers seized between 95 and 199 marijuana plants, along with thousands of dollars in grow operation equipment, from the following locations on Monday. CBC News

Police hand out students' art with $196 speeding tickets

Children are using art to remind speeding motorists to slow down near Lauwelnew Tribal School on West Saanich Road. The busy thoroughfare runs directly in front of the Tsartlip First Nation's school, and has long caused concern for the community. So in a campaign launched Monday called "Think of Me," police officers began handing out student-made pictures with road-safety messages, along with tickets for speeding in a school zone. The students did "an amazing job" with their warnings to drivers, said Sidney/North Saanich RCMP Const. Rob Figueiredo. "I think it really hits home to drivers where the students take the time say: 'You know what, we'd like you to slow down. Please make us safe.'" Speeding in the school zone is the top complaint from the Tsartlip area, said Sidney/North Saanich RCMP Const. Dan Steffes, who is in charge of First Nation policing. Central Saanich police are also involved in the campaign, which Steffes said will continue through the end of the school year. Times Colonist

Opération Magot-Mastiff: un important accusé collabore avec la police

Patrick Corbeil, 43 ans, soupçonné d'avoir dirigé un réseau très actif dans le quartier Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, à Montréal, aurait retourné sa veste dans les heures qui ont suivi son arrestation ainsi que l'arrestation de ceux qu'on croit être ses complices, le 19 novembre. Selon nos informations, même si le suspect collabore avec la police, il n'aurait pas encore signé de contrat de témoin repentin en bonne et due forme. Dans l'enquête Mastiff, la police comptait déjà sur le travail effectué durant plusieurs mois par un agent civil d'infiltration, dont on doit taire le nom en vertu d'un interdit de publication, qui était très proche de Corbeil dans l'organisation de ce dernier. L'individu, qui transportait l'argent de l'organisation et effectuait les payes, aurait permis aux policiers d'amasser une preuve accablante. L'annonce de la collaboration de Corbeil, alias Bart, est un autre pavé lancé dans la mare des accusés, parmi lesquels on retrouve notamment l'influent membre des Hells Angels Salvatore Cazzetta, un membre des Nomads de l'Ontario, Carlos Fernandez, et un membre des Red Devils, club supporteur des Hells Angels, Dominique Gauthier. La Presse

Rocco Zito 'had few superiors' in Mafia, retired RCMP investigator says

He lived in a modest home in north Toronto, drove a Chevy Malibu and listed his occupation as a ceramic tile salesman. But Rocco Zito — who was shot dead Friday in his house — was a violent member of the Mafia with "few superiors," according to an RCMP officer who investigated him (...). Larry Tronstad is a retired RCMP staff-sergeant who investigated Zito as a member of the Mounties' Combined Forces Special Enforcement Unit, a team that worked with a handful of police forces to investigate organized crime. Tronstad, who now works as a private investigator, told Metro Morning that despite his unassuming appearance, Zito was a high-ranking organized crime leader with connections to the Calabrian Mafia. CBC News

RCMP treat Moncton woman's death as suspicious

Codiac RCMP say the body of a 30-year-old Moncton woman was discovered in a residence on King Street early Tuesday morning. RCMP are treating the woman's death as suspicious. Police were called to the residence shortly after 1 a.m. An autopsy is scheduled to be performed to determine the woman's cause of death. The investigation continues. CBC News; CTV News

N.S. woman arrested after RCMP seize stolen items, dismantle grow-op

A 63-year-old woman is facing charges after the RCMP recovered a number of stolen items and dismantled a marijuana grow operation in Mahone Bay, N.S. Police searched a home on Highway 325 on Thursday. Officers seized over $20,000 worth of stolen property, including two utility trailers, several empty beer kegs, concrete forms and lumber, from the home. Police also discovered and dismantled a grow-op and seized 25 marijuana plants. The RCMP discovered and dismantled a grow-op and seized 25 marijuana plants from a Mahone Bay home. (RCMP) "This investigation was significant in that we solved four separate theft files from the past two months," said Lunenburg RCMP District Commander S/Sgt. Jean-Guy Richard. "Police regularly locate and recover stolen property during drug investigations as it can become a form of currency in exchange for drugs." CTV News; Global News; Chronicle Herald

Commander Noémie comme on commande une pizza

En ce samedi matin, Martine a mis le cap sur le centre commercial Place Versailles, dans l'est de Montréal, mais pas pour aller faire des emplettes. Pour aller à la police. L'unité des enquêtes du SPVM s'y trouve. Pas mal de bandits savent ça. Tous les flics savent ça. Bien des journalistes savent ça. Mais les mères de famille de la Rive-Sud ne savent généralement pas ça...- Comment tu savais, Martine ?- Je sais pas comment je savais. Je savais que je n'allais pas juste aller porter plainte dans un poste de quartier. Mais l'unité était fermée, c'était un samedi matin, après tout. Martine a décroché le téléphone de la porte d'entrée, une voix préenregistrée a dit : « Si vous vous rapportez pour votre probation, faites le 1... » Martine a appuyé sur le 1, même si elle n'était pas une détenue fraîchement relâchée. Dring, dring. Une policière a répondu. Martine a annoncé qu'elle n'était pas en probation, mais qu'elle voulait voir un enquêteur là, tout de suite, maintenant, ça presse...- Êtes-vous en danger, madame ?- Non, non. Je viens pour ma fille.- Est-elle en danger, votre fille ? Et c'est là que Martine a craqué, qu'elle a tout lâché dans un déluge de larmes... Noémie qui tombe amoureuse d'un gars, qui déménage avec ce chum qu'elle fréquentait depuis quelques mois. Noémie qui s'habille soudainement de plus en plus sexy. Noémie qui met des photos d'elle sur Instagram, sur Facebook, des photos super sexy. Les doutes, les soupçons, les recherches, les « mais voyons donc, pas Noémie, pas nous », puis les preuves, la certitude...- Ma fille se prostitue, madame l'agente. La Presse

Legalization of Marijuana: Good drug policy

A letter to the editor states "Marijuana clone plants that are used to grow medical marijuana are displayed under a light in this Canadian Press file photo. I am writing in response to the recent article about the petition to stop the legalization of marijuana (also known as cannabis). Mitch Reid states that he is very concerned about legalization, which he believes will make things worse when it comes to addiction in our society. Cannabis is not a benign substance so Mr. Reid is right to be concerned about how it is handled. In an effort to raise awareness on this important topic, and to perhaps put Mr. Reid's mind at ease, I will share the views of a few respected organizations that are in support of legalization, starting with the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health (CAMH). CAMH is Canada's largest mental health and addiction teaching hospital, and one of the world's leading research centres in its field (...) The organization Law Enforcement Against Prohibition (LEAP), which is made up of current and former members of the law enforcement and criminal justice communities, among others, also advocates for legalization. LEAP states that existing drug policies "have failed, and continue to fail, to effectively address the problems of drug abuse, especially the problems of juvenile drug use, the problems of addiction, and the problems of crime created by criminal control of illegal drug sales." Canadian Press (Guardian)

Auditor slams delays, arduous, outdated paperwork process for disability appeals

Canadians with terminal illnesses are waiting too long for disability pension benefits from the federal government, and those with grave conditions are being snowed under with paperwork, Canada's auditor general says. In his latest twice-annual assessment of various federal government departments, agencies and programs, Michael Ferguson's most eyebrow-raising findings came from his examination of how Ottawa parcels out Canada Pension Plan disability benefits and deals with disputed denials (...) Had Shared Services checked with the RCMP and local responders about the network upgrade, auditors said the outage could have been avoided. Ferguson also found that 20 years after vowing to assess how legislation and programs affect men and women, the federal government had made limited progress on that front. Ferguson's auditors found gender-based analyses were not always complete or consistent across departments. Calgary herald; Huffington POst; CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

RCMP officers and local business owners in Surrey are sitting down to breakfast with the members of the public. Public safety and crime are on the menu. Some believe the time for talking has passed.

A spokesperson for the Newton Community Association, Doug Alfred doesn't think much of politicians and police officers getting together to discuss surrey's crime problem. The meeting is part of a series taking place in multiple neighbourhoods across Surrey this year. (CBC TV Vancouver, 6:30)

The RCMP investigation into the shooting of Don Dunphy by former Premier Paul Davis' RCMP security detail has been turned over to an independent body. The justice minister has called in a civilian led agency in Alberta to review how the Mounties handled the case. (City TV Edmonton, 8:20)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Minimum sentencing needs a second look

An opinion piece states, "The federal government has not decided what it plans to do about Canada's controversial approach to mandatory minimum sentences. But Justice Minister Jody Wilson-Raybould has said this will be an important conversation. She's right. Mandatory minimum sentences violate two key elements of sentencing in Canada: individualization and proportionality. Individualization is important because offenders are individuals, not groups. Every offender is entitled to have a judge consider his own particular circumstances — not just slap on one sentence for all cases of the same crime. Proportionality — making the sentence fit the crime and the offender — is even more important. Twenty years ago, Parliament legislated the fundamental principle of sentencing: a sentence must be proportionate to the seriousness of the crime and the offender's responsibility for that offence. For a court to craft a proportionate sentence, it must consider the specific crime and the circumstances of the offender. Parliament cannot know in advance how serious a particular crime is, or how much blame should attach to this specific offender. So a mandatory sentence, or a mandatory sentence presumed to apply to all offenders, undermines proportionality in sentencing. Every time Parliament creates a new mandatory sentence, it undermines the very principle it made fundamental back in 1996." Times Colonist

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Daughter of Anna Mae Pictou-Aquash upset with Halifax MMIW pre-inquiry meeting

The daughter of a Mi'kmaw activist who was murdered on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota in 1975 is criticizing the way the pre-inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women was organized in Halifax. Denise Maloney-Pictou, the daughter of Mi'kmaw activist Anna Mae Pictou-Aquash, wrote about her experience attending the pre-inquiry that was held at a downtown Halifax hotel January 20. She posted her note on the wall of a Facebook group dedicated to her mother's memory on January 27. Federal ministers for Indigenous and Northern Affairs and the Status of Women met with approximately 100 people in Halifax to get input on how a public inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women should be conducted. The meeting was the only one held in Atlantic Canada. In her Facebook post, Maloney-Pictou described how many family members of missing and murdered indigenous women were confused about the format of the two-day meeting. (...) Maloney-Pictou wrote that organizers should have had local facilitators as well as properly trained trauma and grief counsellors on hand to help the family members during the pre-inquiry. Kukukwes

Tk'emlúps woman gets rare opportunity to interview Prime Minister one-on-one

Nikki Fraser didn't start off with a plan to interview Justin Trudeau, but last night, Jan. 31, she met with Canada's Prime Minister for a one-on-one discussion. "It never started with did you want to meet the prime minister," she says. "It started with my story." As a Tk'emlúps te Secwepemc member who has lost an aunt and a cousin, missing and murdered indigenous women and girls is an issue that directly affects her and her family. Fraser is the Native Women's Association of Canada western youth representative and involved with the B.C. Native Women's Association. She got involved when she heard about the associations' involvement with missing indigenous women. That was the topic she discussed with the Trudeau. InfoTel

Police violence in Ontario has reached a crisis level and we should be very upset

An opinion piece states, "In 1989, the Royal Commission on the Donald Marshall Jr., Prosecution found that the criminal justice system failed Marshall "at virtually every turn" due "to the fact that Donald Marshall, Jr., is a Native. Donald Marshall Jr., was a Mi'kmaw man who spent over a decade in prison after being wrongfully convicted of murder. In 1999, The Aboriginal Justice Inquiry of Manitoba concluded that: "The justice system has failed Manitoba's Aboriginal people on a massive scale." Again in 2004, the Saskatchewan Commission on First Nations and Metis Peoples and Justice Reform noted we still have the same problem: "racism is a major obstacle to healthy relations with the First Nations and...police organizations." After the shooting death of unarmed land defender, Dudley George, the Ipperwash Inquiry concluded in 2007 that: "cultural insensitivity and racism was not restricted to a few 'bad apples' with the OPP but was more widespread." It's 2016, and we still have the same problem and it looks like police racism and violence against Indigenous peoples has spread to women and racialized minorities everywhere." Rabble.ca

Report: cyber-bullying creates a vicious cycle

A McCreary Centre Society report has found cyber-bullying creates a vicious cycle. Executive Director Anne Smith says the linkage was pretty clear. "They were ten times more likely to have bullied someone else online if they had been the victim of cyber-bullying themselves. We didn't see many young people at all who were bullying others who hadn't been the victim." Smith says the key to disrupting the cycle is education for parents and their children about online behaviour. "When we have taken these results back we have had young people not really thinking about some of the stuff they have posted and some of the stuff they have said." The report also found children who sext, had been cyber bullied, or met someone 'unsafe' online were more likely to suffer anxiety and depression. CKNW

Advocates, governments look for answers to worsening fentanyl crisis

The federal Liberal government must employ an expansive multidisciplinary response leveraging pivotal relationships with stakeholders and expediting concrete policy actions to address Canada's increasingly urgent opioid abuse situation, healthcare advocates say. Most proponents, though, acknowledge that Ottawa has limited tools at its disposal to tackle an ever-evolving challenge that transcends jurisdictional boundaries and societal cleavages, and has even evoked debate about the sorts of drugs prescribed by healthcare professionals. Despite these challenges, the Canadian Pharmacists Association is calling on the federal government to establish a national narcotic strategy in hopes that directing resources and attention will help spur broader action on the file. "We've been very vocal in the last few years. This problem with prescription drug abuse, especially opioids, has been really gaining motivating, and we've been very vocal in addressing the risks of abuse and misuse," said Phil Emberley, the advocacy association's director of pharmacy innovation, in a phone interview with The Lobby Monitor. "We are really trying to highlight the significance of it. When we engage with stakeholders, such as the federal government, we want to be really solution-driven," he said. Abuse of prescription opioids has emerged as a major public health challenge in recent decades, with Canadians increasingly turning to the notoriously addictive pain-relievers in rates among the highest in the world, according to a 2012 article from the Canadian Medical Association Journal, which also cites concerns about the creation of medical dependent addicts. This is in reference to how many opioid abusers first encounter the drugs after being prescribed one of them by their physicians, rather than recreational experimentation. The journal article references an estimate pegging the number of Canadians currently addicted to painkillers at about 200,000. Synthetic opiate Fentanyl, specifically, has become a major concern for healthcare providers and first responders as overdose deaths linked to the powerful drug -which is occasionally mixed with other illicit drugs - surged in several Canadian jurisdictions in 2015. According to the B.C. government, fentanyl was detected in 30 per cent of the province's 465 illicit drug overdose deaths last year, up 27 per cent from 2014. Lobby Monitor

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Au-delà des égoportraits

Je me suis posé la question après ce reportage à Toronto sur les traces d'Abdul, un réfugié syrien dont ma collègue Michèle Ouimet avait raconté l'histoire à Beyrouth. En discutant avec Abdul et les familles hébergées dans le même hôtel que lui, j'ai vu ce que les images officielles et les beaux chiffres ronds ne montrent pas : des gens vulnérables qui, devant des services d'accueil débordés, peinaient à obtenir l'aide et l'information de base dont ils avaient besoin. Certains voient dans ces difficultés de nouvelles raisons de remettre en cause la politique d'accueil du gouvernement Trudeau. L'État n'a pas les moyens d'accueillir autant de réfugiés syriens, disent-ils. Ce n'est pas ma vision des choses. Je ne suis pas de ceux qui croient que 25 000 réfugiés au Canada, c'est trop. En fait, 25 000, c'est très peu. (...) Cela ne veut pas dire qu'il n'y a pas quelques ratés ici et là et des ajustements qui s'imposent. Bien accueillir des milliers de réfugiés en si peu de temps comporte son lot de défis. Tous ces égoportraits du premier ministre Trudeau avec des réfugiés syriens sont peut-être bien touchants, mais ils ne racontent qu'une partie de l'histoire. Ils ne nous disent rien sur le sous-financement des organismes qui viennent en aide aux réfugiés pris en charge par l'État. Rien sur la difficulté de trouver un logement abordable dans une grande ville comme Toronto. Rien sur le manque de soins en santé mentale pour des survivants hantés par des images d'horreur. Rien sur le vertige de celui qui se retrouve exilé dans un pays enneigé où il ne connaît personne. En fait, l'accueil des réfugiés agit comme une loupe qui nous montre à la fois le meilleur et le pire chez ce pays. La Presse

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Highlights from the federal auditor general's latest report

Key findings from the fall report of the federal auditor general. Key findings from the fall report of the federal auditor general, released Tuesday: Employment and Social Development Canada was inconsistent in making decisions on whether to grant Canada Pension Plan disability benefits, and often failed to meet guidelines for deciding more quickly in cases of terminal illness (late-stage cancer) or grave conditions (Alzheimer's, liver cancer, Parkinson's disease). (...) Goods that violate Canada's export control laws, such as stolen property, have been allowed to leave the country because the Canada Border Services Agency lacks the necessary resources _ weaknesses in export authorities, information, practices and controls _ to properly carry out its enforcement duties. (...) Shared Services Canada, established in 2012 to update, consolidate and manage the federal government's information technology infrastructure, does not adequately measure, track or report on its costs, progress or savings, or on the expectations and satisfaction levels of its department and agency partners, making it impossible to determine whether it is actually saving taxpayer dollars. In March 2014, SSC-managed radio communications for 9,000 police officers, paramedics, firefighters and other first responders failed for a full 40 minutes, an outage that was linked to the agency's failure to establish service expectations with the RCMP; affected personnel were forced to rely on spotty cellphone service in the interim. (...) Some 20 years after gender-based analysis was first adopted, only a relative handful of federal departments and agencies use the tool to analyze how policy decisions might impact women and men differently; for those that do, the analyses are often incomplete or inconsistent. Canadian Press (Maclean's)

Shared Services Canada's Email Transformation Initiative could cost feds millions more than planned

The consolidation of the 63 government of Canada's email systems to the streamlined your.email@canada.ca format could end up costing the government millions more than budgeted for. The initial plan to implement Shared Services Canada's transformation initiative and maintain its existing services was projected to cost $82-million to complete, but the cost from each department to migrate their email systems—more than 600,000 mailboxes in total—was not accounted for, according to the Auditor General's report on Shared Services Canada's progress. The seven departments the auditor general consulted in the course of this study—Canada Revenue Agency, Employment and Social Development Canada, Environment Canada, Foreign Affairs, Trade and Development Canada, Industry Canada, Public Service Commission of Canada, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police—reported costs ranging from $170,000, to $7-million to fund the migration. According to the report, "A recent independent review in July 2014 of the ETI that was commissioned by SSC found that the unaccounted costs incurred by partners to implement the ETI could range from $500,000 to $5-million each." HillTimes; Globe and Mail

Michael Ferguson to reveal audit of troubled Shared Services Canada

Auditor General Michael Ferguson's latest report is set to lay bare the operations of the federal government's troubled information technology services at Shared Services Canada. CBC News will carry Ferguson's news conference live starting at 11:30 a.m. ET, followed by political reaction. - ITAC posts revised report on federal contracting. Last month, Shared Services Canada revealed efforts to create a single email system for the government were put on hold indefinitely amid technical problems, characterized as hardware issues that could have jeopardized the agency's ability to keep email up and running. The email migration began just over a year ago. Twelve of the 43 organizations have moved 51,700 email accounts and 12,100 BlackBerry users to the new system. Some 375,000 email accounts in 43 of the heaviest information technology users in the government are supposed to be on the new system by September. The original deadline was last March. The billion-dollar upgrade was expected to result in better service and annual savings of $60 million. Reports suggest morale is poor among employees of Shared Services Canada, which was created in 2011 to streamline and modernize federal IT services by finding ways to share systems and technology across departments and agencies. Instead, problems have reportedly created frustration among employees working with outdated software and compromised abilities to communicate. Other reports to be released Tuesday include: A study of whether selected departments implemented gender-based analysis to inform government decisions. An examination of whether the Canada Border Services Agency has the necessary information, practices, and controls to prevent the export of illegal goods and facilitate legitimate trade. CBC

CPP disability claims delayed by massive backlog, auditor finds

Auditor General Michael Ferguson's latest report lays bare massive delays processing Canada Pension Plan disability payments that have left some of the most vulnerable Canadians waiting years for benefits. "These are Canadian workers. These are people who have worked in the Canadian workforce and they made their contributions to the CPP, and this is one of the benefits that they expect to be there when they need it," Ferguson said Tuesday. "The department needs to treat it as a service for people and make the whole system better." In his annual fall report, the auditor general also found Shared Services Canada is also unable to demonstrate any cost savings from its much-delayed streamlining of government information technology services. CBC

Bureaucrats who secretly investigated health and safety officer must prove they have no 'anti-union animus'

Bureaucrats at Canada's labour program will have to prove they harboured no "anti-union animus" when they teamed up with Parks Canada to unlawfully investigate and discipline the health and safety officer who had issued a controversial order to arm Canada's park wardens with handguns. Robert Grundie, the health and safety officer who directed Parks Canada to arm park wardens 15 years ago, is proceeding with an unfair labour practices complaint against Employment and Social Development Canada. He alleges the department joined Parks Canada on a "witch hunt" to get him fired for colluding with the union that represents the wardens. Grundie's safety investigation and the subsequent fallout dominated 15 years of his working life. He is seeking costs and unspecified compensation for losses he faced, mental distress, continued loss of employment and an "affront to his dignity" during the seven years the government's allegations of wrongdoing hung over his head. The complaint comes on the heels of a Public Service Labour Relations and Employment Board ruling that gave the two departments a drubbing for wrongly reprimanding Grundie for doing his job in enforcing the provisions of the Canada Labour Code. Ted Jacob / Postmedia NewsMike Henderson, a warden with Parks Canada, posts notices at a trailhead leading to the area of a bear attack near Banff. The adjudicator concluded Parks Canada wanted "retribution" against Grundie for directing that park wardens be armed over the fierce objections of senior management. In the complaint, Grundie claims his union involvement partly motivated a behind-the-scenes probe into his conduct while investigating a park warden's safety complaint about the risks of the job. He said he was "intimidated, threatened, and disciplined" because he was a union member and an officer of an Alberta local, as president and vice-president. Grundie filed the two complaints when he learned the departments had done a "behind-the-scenes" probe into his conduct eight years after he delivered his final report on park warden safety. The parties agreed to set aside the unfair labour practices complaint until the main "unlawful reprisal" case was resolved. The arming of park wardens was a highly controversial issue that divided Parks Canada employees, including many wardens at the time. Management did not want wardens armed for handling law enforcement. National Post; Ottawa Citizen

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Explosion rocks school building in Sweden

A "powerful explosion" rocked a school building in the Swedish town of Karlstad Tuesday and could be heard throughout the city, emergency officials said. "We are on site now and are trying to ascertain what has exploded," Ola Akesson of Karlstad's emergency services told the Expressen newspaper. There have been no reports of casualties or injuries. Akesson said the blast at the Tingvallagymnasiet school was a "powerful explosion" that could be heard in other parts of the city. Plumes of smoke could be seen rising from the site of the blast. Fox News; Express UK; Breitbart; RT

Two injured as explosion forces plane to turn back in Somalia

Two passengers were injured in an explosion that blew a hole in the fuselage of a commercial plane taking off from the Mogadishu on Tuesday, an airline representative said. There was no immediate explanation of the explosion from the airline or Somali government officials. "Daalo airline was enroute to Djibouti but it landed shortly after it took off. A fire exploded and two passengers were slightly wounded," Mohamed Hussein, an agent for Daallo Airlines, the operator of the flight, told Reuters. Reuters

French schools cite terrorism as reason to lift smoking ban

French high schools say students should be allowed to smoke on school grounds so that they don't become terrorist targets when they gather for cigarette breaks on the street outside. French high schools say students should be allowed to smoke on school grounds so that they don't become targets for extremists when they gather for cigarette breaks on the street outside. A leading union of school administrators first made the request five days after the Nov. 13 attacks in Paris that left 130 people dead and 350 wounded. Following a refusal by the Health Ministry, the SNPDEN union last week renewed its call for a loosening of the school smoking ban as long as France remains under a state of emergency. Around one-third of French teens between the ages of 15 and 19 smoke, according to government statistics. In its letter dated Nov. 18, the SNPDEN union said "During each recess, in more than 2,000 schools in France, dozens of youth or even hundreds at the largest establishments form static and compact groups in a predictable way for 15 to 20 minutes." Associated Press (Toronto Star)

Canada won't act in Libya until single government in place, Dion says

Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion says Canada has 'an obligation to help,' but stable government required for intervention. Canada has an obligation to help Libya, which is under threat by Islamic State fighters, but will not play a role until a single government recognized by the West is in place, Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion says. "We certainly have an obligation to help the people of Libya," he said Tuesday on the sidelines of the Rome meeting of the U.S-led coalition against Islamic State extremists. "The way to do is something we need to consider with our allies, not alone, and the first step is to have a government that will be our interlocutor." The Americans have been putting pressure on the coalition fighting the self-styled Islamic State (also known as ISIS, ISIL or Daesh) to prevent IS from forming a caliphate in oil-rich Libya, whose Mediterranean border is only an hour-long flight or less from the southern frontier of the European Union. IS has already threatened to set "Rome on fire" and was behind the terrorist attacks in Paris in November that killed 130. U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry used the Rome meeting to lobby the 25 coalition countries that have a military role in fighting IS in Syria and Iraq to prevent it from gaining a "stranglehold" in Libya. "We're still not at the victory that we want to achieve, and will achieve, in either Syria or Iraq, and we have seen Daesh playing a game of metastasizing out to other countries, particularly Libya," Mr. Kerry told reporters in Rome. He added that, in Libya, "the last thing in the world you want is a false caliphate with access to billions of dollars of oil revenue." Globe and Mail

'They don't want to see it anymore'

Refugees drown off the coast of a now apathetic Europe. Five months ago, a 3-year-old Syrian boy's corpse on a Turkish beach galvanized public action for refugees. Now, strikingly similar images are generating little more than a collective shrug. It's partly about timing, circumstance and the exceptional power of last September's photos of Aylan Kurdi. But it's also because sensitivities are growing dull. Boats arrive on Europe's shores daily, or sink on the way - like the one that capsized off Turkey's coast on Saturday, killing at least 37 people including babies and other young children. Images from the latest tragedy, including the bodies of children, failed to generate the same level of shock. Fears - that refugees will stage extremist attacks or molest women - threaten to displace compassion. And Europe has yet to find the magic solution to its migrant dilemma. National Post

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

RalphGoodale

BLOG is up: A Credible Regulatory System Paves the Way for Exports ralphgoodale.ca/?p=4990 #cdnpoli #liberal

RalphGoodale

BLOGUE: UN SYSTÈME RÉGLEMENTAIRE CRÉDIBLE OUVRE LA VOIE AUX EXPORTATIONS #cdnpoli ralphgoodale.parl.liberal.ca/?p=499

Public Safety Canada

Happy #GroundHogday! Whether winter is shorter or stays long (boo), follow @Get_Prepared for tips to stay safe during all kinds of weather.

Sécurité publique

Joyeux #jourdelamarmotte! Hiver court ou non, suivez @Preparez_Vous pour des conseils pour vous protéger durant toutes les conditions météo

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

cbcnewsbc

Fire chief putting public safety at risk, claim #Vancouver firefighters bit.ly/1NNBMOx

VancouverSun

B.C.'s earthquake preparedness progressing slowly but surely: expert ow.ly/3aR4bz

CBCNS

Power outages persist in dozens of small communities bit.ly/1SVD02d pic.twitter.com/lp5hwUeNgm

CBCKW891

Beware of flooding with Tuesday afternoon rain, GRCA warns ift.tt/1SB6D7x pic.twitter.com/7PaZYAZ957

globalnews

Zika virus overshadows buildup to Rio de Janeiro Olympics gln.ca/XRlrc

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PostmediaNew

Canada Revenue Agency doesn't know the contents of files it improperly gave to CSIS ow.ly/XR0IW via @nationalpost

nationalpost

Canada Revenue Agency doesn't know the contents of files it improperly gave to CSIS natpo.st/1QXKWi8

Colinfreeze

CBC's @alisoncrawford5 reports a taxman (or taxwoman) got fired after sharing data with spies cbc.ca/1.3428855

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

vicenews

Weapons of mass destruction may be slipping through Canada's ports bit.ly/1mayizo pic.twitter.com/Eg7aA0sn44

KatieSimpsonCTV

Auditor General discussing his latest audit. Concerns with CPPD, CBSA, & CSS, raised.

HuffPostCanada

CBSA letting illegal drugs leave Canada undetected: auditor general #cdnpoli huff.to/1SVRVcw

ipoliticsca

CBSA not examining nearly one in five high-risk exports: AG report | iPolitics ift.tt/1nKx4wp

OttawaCitizen

Auditor General: Border agency not catching illegal exports ow.ly/XQJLe #cdnpoli

Globalnews.ca

WATCH LIVE: Results of Auditor General Michael Ferguson's report released <http://gln.ca/XR39y>

HuffPostCanada

Highlights from the auditor general's fall report huff.to/1PwKYNO

TorontoStar

Stolen vehicles and drugs are slipping past Canada's border guards: Auditor General. on.thestar.com/1X0a48r

MacleansMag

Highlights from the federal auditor general's latest report: ow.ly/XQKbX #cdnpoli

JimWatsonOttawa

Jim Watson Retweeted Xtra Toronto

#TurnAwayReturnOfKings @JohnTory @norm @nenshi @doniveson @MayorGregor @Mayor_Bowman @lisahelps @DenisCoderre

AndreaHorwath

@returnofkings hate speech & misogyny has no place in our city, province, or Queen's Park

#TurnAwayReturnofKings <http://www.dailyxtra.com>

OCTEVAW

Thank you for the strong stance denouncing rape culture and gender-based violence @JimWatsonOttawa

#turnawayreturnofkings #MANifestchange

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBC Aboriginal

Murder trial in death of Charlotte Lafferty hears elder's frustrated calls for help to RCMP ift.tt/1JVJECQ

Global NB

Body of woman found in Moncton home, RCMP say death is suspicious > glnb.ca/XR0o6 pic.twitter.com/YYS8mgHkpW

CBCNB

Codiac RCMP say the body of a 30yroid Moncton woman was discovered in a residence on King Street early

Tuesday am. cbc.ca/1.3430176

CBCToronto

Rocco Zito 'had few superiors' in Mafia, retired RCMP investigator says ift.tt/1nDqQ0F

XM1053FM

2 more in Whitecourt charged with trafficking cocaine. Rene Papineau, Noemy Charest. RCMP looking for the public's help in locating them.

AIR1061FM

The Airdrie Rural RCMP Crime Reduction Unit have arrested and charged an Airdrie man following a lengthy drug...

fb.me/4poSbsYMq

CTVAtlantic

N.S. woman arrested after RCMP seize stolen items, dismantle grow-op: A 63-year-old woman is facing charges af...

bit.ly/1SC8l3b

wctpress

Whitecourt RCMP continues to target the distribution of Illicit street drugs In the community and surrounding...

fb.me/74KTueKJP

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

AFN

Help inform the national inquiry on #MMWG #MMIW Join #AFN Feb 4 in #Edmonton for our Pre-Inquiry Forum

<http://www.afn.ca/en/the-assembly-of-first-nations-afn-missing-and-murdered-indigenous-wome...> #ourinquiry

JusticeCanadaEN

RT @AANDCanada: #MMIW Inquiry design meeting on February 8 in Winnipeg, Manitoba. See full schedule here:

ow.ly/XO4FM

AmnistieCA

RT @BeaVaugrante: Femmes autochtones: l'ONU appelle Ottawa à s'attaquer aux racines de la violence | #MMIW
ICI.Radio-Canada.ca https://m.radio-canada.ca/nouvelles/soci...

WISHWellness

#MMIW #inquiry must be grounded in intl human rights norms & Canadian legal frameworks.#canpoli
#IndigenousWomen ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/...

HuffPostCaLiv

RT @CSORG: ► This poet's words on indigenous women will stir your soul #mmiw huffingtonpost.ca/2016/02/02/mar... via @HuffPostCaLiv

janfromthebruce

Every day I am going to tweet this. Will you join me? 1186+ Missing & Murdered Indigenous Women
#MMIW #cndpoli pic.twitter.com/77E8hA5aRC

artipatel

This poet's words on indigenous women will stir your soul #mmiw huffingtonpost.ca/2016/02/02/mar... via @HuffPostCaLiv

INTERNATIONAL

CTVNews

North Korea plans satellite launch this month: International Maritime Organization ow.ly/XQJZZ

theprovince

Woman wearing burka denied service in Edmonton shop because of 'no-mask policy' theprovince.com/1nCZoiP #Canada

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
February 5, 2016 / le 5 février 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MP urges feds to ease customs duty for northwestern B.C. LNG project

SKEENA BULKLEY NDP MP Nathan Cullen says he doesn't understand why federal customs authorities want to place a $100 million duty on a floating platform which would contain a liquefied natural gas (LNG) plant planned for the Kitimat area. Attempts to find answers have so far met with silence, Cullen said this week. The floating platform which would be moored offshore in the Douglas Channel is part of the planned Douglas Channel LNG being promoted by Calgary energy company AltaGas and partners. (...)

SKEENA BULKLEY NDP MP Nathan Cullen says he doesn't understand why federal customs authorities want to place a $100 million duty on a floating platform which would contain a liquefied natural gas (LNG) plant planned for the Kitimat area. Attempts to find answers have so far met with silence, Cullen said this week. The floating platform which would be moored offshore in the Douglas Channel is part of the planned Douglas Channel LNG being promoted by Calgary energy company AltaGas and partners. (...) In a letter sent last December to federal public safety minister Ralph Goodale, Cullen noted that the duty would add to the cost of the project. "This represents a tremendous barrier for this small-scale but important project, which has strong support from local communities and First Nations," wrote Cullen to Goodale who is responsible for the Canadian Border Services Agency. Terrace Standard

UN Secretary-General to visit McGill

As part of his three-day working visit to Ottawa and Montreal, the United Nations Secretary-General, His Excellency Ban Ki-moon, will be on McGill's downtown campus on Friday, February 12, 2016. Ban will speak to a group of political science, law and international students from McGill and other Montreal universities. His speech will be on "Threats and Opportunities: The Power of Young People to Shape a New Future." The event will be webcast beginning at 2:30 p.m. "We are honoured that Mr. Ban has accepted our invitation to visit Canada so early in the government's mandate," Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, who will be meeting with Ban in Ottawa, said in a statement. Trudeau has expressed his pride in Canada's involvement in UN human-rights and peacekeeping initiatives, and his wish to "restore Canada's voice and leadership role" within the organization. McGill

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NIL

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Robert Somerville, Canadian who claims he fought ISIS, says he will be deported from Australia

A Canadian who says he fought alongside Kurdish forces against ISIS in Syria tells CBC News that he will be deported from Australia, where he was detained earlier this week as he was trying to enter the country. Robert Somerville, who is originally from Sooke, B.C., is a Canadian veteran who fought in Afghanistan. He says he spent six months fighting ISIS alongside the YPG, a Syrian Kurdish militant group. Upon arrival in Australia, he said he was detained and border services questioned him. Somerville said the reason they gave him for his deportation to Canada was that he had failed to disclose a Kurdish nickname he had received. He said he was not going to fight the deportation and would likely be leaving within a few hours for the airport. CBC News

Texan caught with gun at border

A Texas man caught lying to border officers about a handgun was fined $8,000 in Sarnia court. A Toronto lawyer representing Robert Glass, 48, of Sweetwater, Texas entered a plea to the June 18, 2015 attempt to evade Customs Act compliance. Glass was not present. On June 18 Glass entered Canada at the Blue Water Bridge for work. He told a Canada Border Services Agency officer he had no weapons, as he was not permitted to carry guns in a work vehicle. But a search of the vehicle found a 9mm handgun and two loaded ammunition magazines in a golf bag. Glass also had nine tins of chewing tobacco. Sarnia Observer

Guilty plea for hiring foreign nationals

An Edmonton woman has pleaded guilty to Immigration related charges following a five-year Canada Border Services investigation into foreign nationals working in Canada. The agency says 68 people were alleged to be working without authorization in the country between 2007 and 2010. They were in Canada as visitors or with work permits for other employers. In three cases, people from the Philippines were induced to Canada, and then not paid what was promised for their labour. Jennilyn Morris pleaded guilty to two counts under the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act. A sentencing hearing will be on May 16th. CHQR News Talk 770 AM

Without mandated safeguards, Canadian exporters face unbalanced border measures

The day after Canada signed the TPP (and a Leger poll found huge opposition to the agreement's IP and ISDS provisions), the shift toward consultation and study can continue in earnest. Chrystia Freeland, Canada's Minister of International Trade, used the signing to emphasize once again that signing is not the same as ratifying and that the government is committed to a robust Parliamentary and public review of the agreement. The Trouble with the TPP series continues today with another example of the lack of balance in the text. An earlier post noted how in the TPP rights holders' provision are often mandatory, while those for users are treated as optional. The lopsided approach is also evident in the border measures rules. This week I discussed the expansion of border measures provisions without court oversight, which could lead to customs officials being asked to make difficult legal assessments on whether to detain goods entering the country. Canadian law currently includes several safeguards to mitigate the risk of detention for importers and other businesses. Given the possibility that detention can be used by competitors to delay entry of legitimate goods into the country, limitations are an important part of any legislative package. Rabble; Rabble

Canadian man sentenced in Syracuse for smuggling 12 people into US

A 39-year-old Canadian man has been sentenced to five years in an American federal prison for illegally smuggling 12 people across the border into the United States. The U.S. Attorney's office in Syracuse says Renaldo Reyes of Quebec was sentenced this week in federal court. He was found guilty last September of smuggling offenses after a three-day trial in Albany. Associated Press (Auburn Pub)

Edmonton woman pleads guilty to illegally employing foreign nationals

After a five-year investigation by Canada Border Services into foreign nationals working in the country, an Edmonton woman has pleaded guilty to two counts under the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act. Jennilyn Morris was charged in connection with close to 70 people working improperly in Canada. Between 2007 and 2010, Canada Border Services says Morris employed at least 68 foreign nationals who were not authorized to work in Canada. The foreign nationals were in Canada as visitors or with work permits for other employers. Canadian Press (Global News)

Québec sommé d'interdire la venue du blogueur Roosh V

Le gouvernement Couillard est sommé d'agir pour interdire la venue du blogueur américain Roosh V en sol québécois ce week-end. Le controversé personnage est connu pour ses propos misogynes banalisant le viol. Une pétition ayant récolté plus de 8000 signatures circule sur le Web, alors que l'une des instigatrices du mouvement pour empêcher sa venue se dit elle-même victime de menaces de mort et de viol. « Roosh V tient des propos clairement haineux envers les femmes, a dénoncé la députée péquiste d'Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, Carole Poirier, mardi. La ministre responsable de la Condition féminine doit l'empêcher d'obtenir une tribune, à Montréal ou ailleurs au Québec. C'est son devoir de lancer le message que les propos banalisant le viol ou faisant la promotion de toute autre forme de violence contre les femmes sont non seulement inacceptables, mais criminels. » Carole Poirier réagissait à l'article du Journal de Montréal, qui rapportait certains propos du blogueur américain Daryush Valizadeh. Entre autres choses, celui-ci estime que le viol doit être légalisé « si c'est fait dans une propriété privée ». Il décrit les conditions nécessaires à « une bonne scène de viol » et soutient que « le féminisme abaisse la qualité des femmes en leur permettant d'être laides et d'avoir des relations sexuelles quand bon leur semble et avec qui elles le désirent ». Dans le cadre de sa « tournée mondiale », rapportait l'article, il conseille aux hommes de choisir des femmes saoules et ayant des troubles alimentaires pour avoir des relations sexuelles. Plusieurs organismes se sont insurgés contre ces propos, faisant ainsi écho à un petit groupe de femmes qui a lancé une pétition pour demander aux services frontaliers canadiens de l'empêcher de séjour au Canada. Le Devoir

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

Deception technology enhances honeypots for cyber defence

Intellectual property can be as valuable as gold for some companies. And for those firms leading-edge cyber security can also be as valuable as a precious metal. Which is why Altera Corp., a California maker of programmable logic chips used in a wide range of electronic equipment turned to a old idea — a honeypot to lure online attackers — with a new spin. IT World Canada

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

8 deaths so far in 2016: Canada's first responder PTSD crisis

At least four paramedics and four police officers have killed themselves this year across Canada. And those are just the ones we know about. "These are the suicides that have been reported to us that we are able to confirm," says Vince Savoia, founder and executive director of The Tema Conter Memorial Trust. Toronto Police Const. Darius Garda's body was pulled from Lake Ontario Thursday, the third death of an Ontario first responder over five days. Global News

Vague de vols d'armes à feu dans la région de Moncton

Une vingtaine d'armes à feu ont été volées ces dernières semaines dans la région de Moncton signale la GRC qui invite au passage les propriétaires à faire preuve de prudence. Depuis la mi-décembre, le Service régional de Codiac de la GRC a reçu plusieurs plaintes au sujet d'introductions par effraction dans des résidences de Moncton, de Dieppe, de Riverview et de la région avoisinante. Dans plusieurs cas, des armes à feu ont été volées. Un total de 22 armes à feu ont été volées lors de ces incidents, dont dix dans une même résidence, où elles étaient entreposées de façon sécuritaire. La majorité des armes étaient des fusil de chasse, mais une reproduction de pistolet et un revolver ont aussi été volés. Dans certains cas, le ou les voleurs sont aussi partis avec des appareils électroniques, des bijoux, de l'alcool et de la nourriture. Le Service régional de Codiac rappelle aux membres du public qu'ils peuvent prendre des mesures pour diminuer la probabilité que leur résidence soit ciblée par des voleurs. L'Acadie Nouvelle; CBC News

BC RCMP on high alert after powerful drug W-18 found in Alberta

Police forces across B.C. are on alert after a drug that is 100 times more potent than fentanyl was found in Alberta. It is called W-18. Calgary Police discovered it in three of 100 fentanyl pills they recently seized. RCMP here in B.C. say they're aware and warn it's only a matter of time before the new drug shows up here. More than 450 people died of drug overdoses in B.C. in 2015. Fentanyl was responsible for just under one-third of those deaths. Global News

RCMP request thousands of DNA samples in Manitoba murder case

RCMP are asking men in a remote Manitoba First Nation to provide police with DNA samples in an effort to solve the murder of an 11-year-old girl. Teresa Robinson never returned home after leaving a birthday party in May, 2015. Her body was found days later, and the investigation has remained active ever since. In a move that police say is unprecedented in the community, this week investigators began collecting DNA samples in Garden Hill First Nation, from up to 2,000 men between the ages of 15 and 66. All DNA samples are being provided on a voluntary basis. CTV News

Canada Seized a Hells Angels Bar Over Crimes That Haven't Happened Yet

The Hells Angels want their clubhouse back, but the government of British Columbia won't fork it over because it thinks the building might be the venue for crimes — in the future. While it may sound like a very Canadian sequel of Minority Report, this precrime is an integral part of the B.C. government's civil forfeiture program. And a Vancouver judge had to side with the government on Wednesday. The B.C. Supreme Court decision was the latest installment of a nine-year "tortured history" between three chapters of the Hells Angels and the provincial government, which the judge called a series of "unending...skirmishes." It began with Operation Halo, in 2003, when the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) raided three Hells Angels clubhouses — in Vancouver, Nanaimo, and Kelowna. Halo did not lead to criminal charges, but that didn't stop the government from trying to get its hands on tens of thousands of dollars worth of biker stuff. VICE News

Surrey Mounties investigating stabbing

Mounties in Surrey are investigating after a man was stabbed overnight in front of a business. The RCMP was called at around 10 p.m. Thursday to the 8200-block of 120th Street. When they arrived, officers found a 36-year-old man suffering from a stab wound. He was transported to hospital in stable condition with non-life threatening injuries, according to RCMP. Vancouver Sun; Surrey Now

Masked suspect still at large after armed bank robbery

Codiac RCMP are still searching for the suspect after an armed robbery at a Caisse Populaire bank this morning. RCMP responded to the call around 10:45 this morning at the Caisse Populaire Acadienne on Churchill street. They say a single man armed with a handgun and wearing a ski mask entered the bank demanding money. Global News; Acadie Nouvelle

4 charged in Sheshatshiu drug bust, marijuana seized

Four people from Sheshatshiu have been charged after a drug bust in the Labrador community Thursday. RCMP in Sheshatshiu used a police dog to search a home. Marijuana, cash and drug trafficking paraphernalia were found, police said in a news release Friday. CBC News

Shellbrook, Sask., RCMP arrest Manitoba man on theft charges for $25K

A 19-year-old Manitoba man has been arrested and charged, again, with theft and possession of stolen property over $5,000 after RCMP arrested him for the second time, near Shellbrook, Sask. He was arrested on Wednesday after police saw a pickup truck in the area towing a 20-foot snowmobile trailer, which was stolen from Brandon, Man., on Tuesday. The trailer also had a large amount of brand new heavy truck tires also stolen from a business in Brandon, according to the RCMP. The total value of the tires and the trailer is more than $25,000. CBC News; CKRM

Mailbox theft a growing concern for RCMP

Kilpatrick and Jameson. To most Nanaimo residents, it is a rural intersection west of the city, just past the B.C. Hydro substation on Jingle Pot Road, home to single-family homes on large, secluded lots. To the community's criminal underbelly, however, it is ground zero. Seven times in the past 13 months, the corner's small collection of community mailboxes has been ransacked by thieves hot for money and personal information. According to the RCMP, it is a poster child for a rash of community mailbox crime afflicting not only Nanaimo, but the entire Island and beyond. Nanaimo News

New deputy joins Delta police from RCMP

A high-ranking RCMP officer has joined the Delta Police Department. Chief Neil Dubord announced Monday that Norm Lipinski is joining the department as deputy chief beginning March 14. "It gives me great pleasure to announce that Norm Lipinski has been selected as our new deputy chief constable," said Mayor Lois Jackson, who also heads the Delta police board. Lipinski served with the Edmonton Police Service, attaining the rank of deputy chief there before accepting a position as assistant commissioner with the RCMP. He has been the district officer in the Lower Mainland and the criminal operations officer in E-Division for the last five years. "Norm is an accomplished police leader who has built a strong reputation as a credible and collaborative leader who is grounded in the philosophies of community policing and service to the public," Dubord said. Delta Optimist

Why is marijuana legal in Vancouver and not Saskatoon?

An opinion piece states "Canada is a country, right? Canadian law is supposed to apply equally, everywhere, to all of us, right? So why is marijuana openly for sale by retailers all over Vancouver and Victoria, while elsewhere in the country, people still are getting busted for a lousy joint? That's more like two different countries than one country. In Vancouver and Victoria, the retail business operates under the rubric of medical marijuana. Hardly anyone takes this medical aspect seriously. To buy a sack of weed, you need only present a prescription or facsimile thereof. It doesn't even have to be a prescription for medical marijuana. Show a prescription for anything - an antibiotic for a sinus infection, an anti-inflammatory for a sprained ankle, ointment for a rash ... anything - and they will sell you a sack of weed. You can show them an old prescription pill bottle or even a picture on your iPhone of an old pill bottle and they will sell you a sack of weed." StarPhoenix

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports the RCMP in Nova Scotia are launching an educational campaign tonight, live tweeting 9-1-1 calls. Rough Transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Inquest scheduled in inmate death

An inquest will be held into the death of an inmate at a former maximum security prison in Kingston, Ont. Twenty-seven-year-old Andrew Townsend died on December 17, 2012 while in custody at Kingston Penitentiary, which closed the following year. An inquest is mandatory under the Coroners Act. Dr. Paul Dungey, the regional supervising coroner, says the inquest will examine the circumstances surrounding Townsend's death, and the jury may make recommendations aimed at preventing similar deaths. The inquest is set to begin March 3 in Napanee, Ont. and last two days. Simcoe, Kelowna Daily Courier, Canadian Press (CTV News)

How to adopt prison-based needle and syringe programs

A research study has concluded that prison-based needle and syringe programs (PNSPs), which provide sterile injection equipment to prisoners who inject drugs and help prevent the spread of HIV and hepatitis C virus (HCV), are indisputably feasible in Canada and should be implemented in Canadian prisons without delay. "The most significant finding was that all research participants expressed a high level of support for PNSPs," said Professor Emily van der Meulen of the Department of Criminology at Ryerson University, lead author of the study. "Research participants emphasized the need for PNSPs to be accessible, confidential and complemented by ongoing education in order to tackle HIV and HCV transmission behind bars." In Canada, the estimated HIV and HCV prevalence among federal prisoners is, respectively, 10 and 30 times higher than in the general population. A recent report outlined the findings of the two-year study, which involved unprecedented consultation with a broad array of stakeholders, including former prisoners, Canadian and international researchers, health-care providers, and representatives from HIV, indigenous, women's health, harm reduction and prisoners' rights organizations, as well as prison site visits in Switzerland. Medical Xpress

Trent University student Jessica Reid says Canada is ignoring children with incarcerated parents leads to more problems

Kelly remembers drawing pictures for her father. She recalls seeing him the orange prison jump suit. She was just four years old in 1989 when her father was sentenced to a year in behind bars for stabbing a family member. "It is really hard to understand as a kid," says the now 30-year-old who wished to remain anonymous to protect the identity of her father. (...) Trent University psychology master's student Jessica Reid says Kelly isn't alone. Ms. Reid recently received a prestigious $17,500 national scholarship (that honours Nelson Mandela) for her research into the support of children affected by parental incarceration. She estimates that 350,000 children in Canada are affected by parental incarceration. (...) Ms Reid is the co-founder and executive director of Fostering Empowering Advocating Together (FEAT) for Children of Incarcerated Parents, the only non-profit Canadian organization dedicated to providing supportive programs that foster self-esteem and security for children when their parents go to jail. My Kawartha

Male worker at Okimaw Ohci Healing Lodge charged with sexual assault

A male worker at the Okimaw Ohci Healing Lodge in Maple Creek is facing a charge of sexual assault. The lodge houses female aboriginal offenders. The 49-year-old accused is now on leave because of the charge, according to Kim Pate, national director Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies. "The individual male staff member who is implicated is on leave at this time," Pate told CBC News. She said it is a "very good thing" that the allegation has been taken seriously by the administration. Sources tell CBC News that other inmates at the lodge are being interviewed as part of the ongoing investigation. CBC News

Inquest scheduled in death of inmate at Kingston Penitentiary

An inquest will be held into the death of an inmate at a former maximum security prison in Kingston, Ont. Twenty-seven-year-old Andrew Townsend died on December 17, 2012 while in custody at Kingston Penitentiary, which closed the following year. An inquest is mandatory under the Coroners Act. Canadian Press (CTV News)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Mentally ill in Durham remain in criminal justice system longer

The path through the criminal justice system can be long for those who are declared not criminally responsible for their actions. During a symposium designed to raise awareness of the forensic mental health system, Dr. Karen DeFreitas, medical director of the forensic program at Ontario Shores Centre for Mental Health Sciences in Whitby, outlined the process as it unfolds for someone suffering from mental illness who is charged with a crime. "People who have committed some act and been charged for that, but who don't understand the court system well enough to navigate it, they would come to the hospital and we would attempt to treat them until they are fit to stand trial," she explained, noting the process is different for those who are deemed Not Criminally Responsible (NCR) for their actions. "If you're charged with an offence and you committed that offence but because of an illness that person didn't understand what they were doing or that what they were doing was wrong, they would be sent to our facility for treatment." (...) Once in the forensic system it is a long road to rehabilitation, with an individual's fate decided by the Ontario Review Board (ORB), which operates independently of the criminal system and is given great deference. Any appeal of an ORB decision goes straight to the Court of Appeal. Durham Region (2016-02-04)

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Toronto lawyer outlines security risks of Syrian refugees to U.S. lawmakers

This week a U.S. Senate committee took a closer look at Canada's plan to fast-track Syrian refugees, and whether it comes at a cost to American security. (...) Three Canadians spoke at Wednesday's senate hearing, including Guidy Mamann, a Toronto immigration lawyer who has raised some concerns about the refugee plan. "I'm pretty concerned," he said. "I think the pace at which we're going might be a bit too much, which causes unique challenges for us." (...) Mamann argued to the U.S. lawmakers that there are risks Canada was taking with accepting so many refugees so fast. One of his arguments is that it's very difficult to vet the Syrian refugees for potential security risks. "We have no Canadian personnel in Syrian who can confirm these things," he said. "The information we have access to is old and unreliable." He said many of the refugees in the world share Canadian values, and don't have opposition to role of women or gay, lesbian or transsexual people in society. He suggested refugees from the Middle East have that opposition. He also agreed there is a threat of terrorism with Syrian refugees. "When compared to other large groups of refugees, one could easily argue that this group represents a relatively higher-risk demographic. Syria is widely considered to be a major hotbed of international terror," he said. CBC News

L'accueil des réfugiés au Québec

Les attentats de Paris, le vendredi 13 novembre dernier, ont fait 150 morts et 351 blessés. (...) Aussi, comme vous le savez probablement, beaucoup de Syriens vont bientôt s'installer au Québec et plusieurs d'entre nous sont en désaccord ou craintifs face à leur venue prochaine. Plusieurs craignent que des terroristes envahissent nos terres, ils ont peur pour leur vie, leur famille et c'est compréhensible d'une certaine manière. Cependant, savent-ils que parmi les réfugiés, ces femmes, ces enfants et ces hommes sont majoritairement innocents et avant tout des victimes dans leur propre pays? Ces gens fuient la guerre, les images atroces qu'ils ont vues, les explosions dont ils ont été témoins et les souffrances qu'ils ont ressenties. Le gouvernement a déclaré qu'environ 7300 réfugiés vont être accueillis au Québec. Certains pensent que parmi ces gens, il y a de potentiels terroristes. (...) J'ai confiance que les personnes de l'immigration ne choisiront pas n'importe qui. Ils ont un rôle important à jouer dans la sélection des personnes qui peuvent entrer dans notre pays. De plus, le Canada est un pays pacifique, je ne vois pas pourquoi nous serions victimes d'un attentat. C'est probablement pour ces raisons que le Canada est ouvert à accueillir des réfugiés. L'Étudiant Outaouais

Justin Trudeau meets Big City Mayors' Caucus in Ottawa

Talks between the mayors of Canada's largest cities and federal representatives continue today in Ottawa. The group's chair, Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson, and Prime Minister Justin Trudeau are holding a news conference starting at 10:30 a.m. ET. The consultations and lobbying by the Big City Mayors' Caucus (BCMC) come as Trudeau's government prepares its first budget, expected late next month. (...) Several ministers, including Finance Minister Bill Morneau, Immigration Minister John McCallum and Environment Minister Catherine McKenna, are meeting separately with the mayors later Friday to discuss issues of particular concern to their portfolios, including housing issues related to Canada's efforts to help Syrian refugees. CBC News

Some refugees turning down housing options in Ottawa, centre says

A lack of affordable housing and desires to be settled close to other refugees and mosques are complicating the search for permanent homes for incoming families, according to Carl Nicholson, executive director of the Catholic Centre for Immigrants. Only half of the more than 600 government sponsored refugees who have arrived in Ottawa since Dec. 31 have found homes. Nicholson said it's a slow process because in some cases, families are turning down the housing that's being offered. Refugees are often given two choices when it comes to their new housing arrangements, but families also have their own expectations about where they want to live. CBC News

U.S. Senate hearing once again calls on Canada to help settle an argument

It's almost a tradition now. From time to time our esteemed neighbours to the south will say they'd love to see us again, and Canada will say "Sure!" But then we get there – it's just awkward. Sometimes it feels as if the U.S. has us over to their place only when the two sides of the House are fighting, and one side, left or right, thinks Canada will back it up. It happened again this week at the U.S. Senate's Homeland Security meeting, leadingly entitled "Canada's Fast-Track Refugee Plan: Unanswered Questions and Implications for U.S. National Security." One imagines "Peril From the North: Attack of the Abominable Snow Refugees" was at least considered. Our government sensibly declined to attend this show-inquiry, choosing instead to send a letter outlining our exhaustive refugee-screening process, but needless to say our nation, as a notion, was very much present. There sat Canada, metaphorically pushing its food around the plate while arguments flew from both sides of the table, basically all of them ending with: "You're with me on this, right, Canada?" Globe and Mail

Refugees' needs expose Canada's housing crisis

An editorial by Sharad Kerur states, "Canadians are a generous people. In the late 1970s, we welcomed 50,000 Vietnamese "boat people" who were fleeing the horrific aftermath of the Vietnam War. Community groups and non-profit organizations played a key role in helping to settle these refugee families and easing their transition to a new life. More than 25 years later, Canadians want to be generous again. Last October, we elected a federal government committed to bringing 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada. But a lack of affordable housing has left hundreds of refugees stuck in hostels and hotels, delaying their opportunity to settle into Canadian life. Earlier this month, settlement agencies in Toronto, Vancouver and Ottawa asked for a break in the arrival of refugees until permanent housing could be found for the refugees who had already arrived. The shortage of affordable homes isn't just a problem for newcomers.

The urgent need of Syrian refugees shines a light on a much larger housing crisis. Across Canada, 40 per cent of renter households spend much more than they can afford on housing. Families struggle to pay rent and put food on the table. Even in a country as wealthy as ours, 235,000 people experience homelessness each year. The private sector hasn't built the homes needed by low and moderate-income Canadians. Since 2001, rental housing has accounted for only 10 per cent of annual housing starts in Canadian cities. At the same time, the few rental units that are built may not be appropriate for families. For incoming refugee families of up to 10 people, for example, finding a home that is affordable and a decent size is especially challenging. When the private market doesn't respond, it's the government's job to step in and help families find a safe and secure place to live. But over the past 25 years, the federal government has decreased funding for affordable housing by 46 per cent. The result: in Ontario alone, more than 168,000 households are on waiting lists for affordable housing. Many of these families will wait as long as 10 years." Toronto Star

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Liberal government will unveil 'holistic' new plan to fight ISIL in Syria and Iraq within days

The Liberal government will unveil its new plan for fighting the Islamic State in days. International Development Minister Marie-Claude Bibeau confirmed the pending announcement in a telephone call with reporters from London Thursday. She said Prime Minister Justin Trudeau will present the plan with her, Foreign Minister Stephane Dion and Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan. National Post

Khadr's detention and torture shows West's disregard for its own principles, lawyer tells B.C. conference

The lawyer who represented Omar Khadr told a law conference in Kamloops Thursday his client endured systematic physical and mental torture for a decade, and in the process became a living example of the Western world's disregard for its own principles. Dennis Edney was speaking at Thompson Rivers University as the keynote speaker at a student law conference on civil liberties. Kamloops This Week (The Province)

UN secretary general to visit Ottawa as PM stresses closer ties with world body

The Prime Minister's Office says UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon will visit Ottawa and Montreal next week. He and Prime Minister Justin Trudeau are scheduled to discuss a number of topics, including climate change and the Syrian refugee crisis. The PMO says Trudeau will use the meeting to reaffirm Canada's commitment to the UN and to greater co-operation on the world stage. The meeting is another step in Trudeau's effort to reinvigorate Canada's relationship with the UN. Canadian Press (News Talk 610 CKTB)

Funeral services Saturday for Quebecers killed in Burkina Faso

Prime minister Justin Trudeau will be in Quebec City Saturday to attend the funerals of six people who were killed in terrorist attacks in Burkina Faso. A funeral service takes place at 11 a.m. for Suzanne Bernier, and in the afternoon a mass service will take place for Yves Carrier, Gladys Chamberland, Charlélie Carrier, Maude Carrier, and Louis Chabot. Trudeau was criticized for how he first handled Canada's reaction to the deaths. CTV News

Khadr's detention and torture shows West's disregard for its own principles, lawyer tells B.C. conference

The lawyer who represented Omar Khadr told a law conference in Kamloops Thursday his client endured systematic physical and mental torture for a decade, and in the process became a living example of the Western world's disregard for its own principles. Dennis Edney was speaking at Thompson Rivers University as the keynote speaker at a student law conference on civil liberties. "Over the years, many Western democracies have exploited the climate of insecurity and used a climate of fear to limit civil liberties," Edney told several hundred students. The Province

INTERNATIONAL

U.N. police base under attack in Mali's Timbuktu - United Nations

Unknown assailants attacked and withdrew inside a U.N. police base in the Malian city of Timbuktu on Friday morning, the United Nations said, while security sources said a Malian army checkpoint in the city had also come under fire. The attackers drove up to the entrance of the U.N. base in the former Hotel Palmeraie at around 6:30 a.m. (0630 GMT) and then detonated their vehicle, said Olivier Salgado, spokesman for the U.N. peacekeeping mission in Mali, MINUSMA. "An unknown number of assailants have withdrawn inside the camp. An operation is currently under way with Malian and MINUSMA forces," he said, adding that an injured police officer had been evacuated. A military source in Timbuktu said the site, near the entrance to the city, had been taken over exclusively by a Nigerian police contingent, and there were no other residents as the hotel was no longer operational. He could not say whether there were any U.N. personnel inside the site with the attackers. Salgado said it had been empty at the time of the attack, barring a few guards. Reuters

ISIS Using Migrant Crisis to Smuggle In Terrorists, Germany Says

The Islamic State is using the influx of migrants into Europe to smuggle in terrorists "camouflaged as refugees," the chief of Germany's domestic intelligence said on Friday after the arrest of a 35-year-old Algerian man. The man, who was said to have trained with the Islamic State in Syria and was suspected of planning an attack in Germany after crossing into the country at the Bavarian border at the height of the refugee inflow last fall, was detained with a woman described in media reports as his wife at a shelter for asylum applicants in North Rhine Westphalia early Thursday. The comments from Hans-Georg Maassen, the head of Germany's domestic intelligence service, reflected a concern that has been intensifying after it was revealed that several of those involved in the Nov. 13 attacks in Paris entered Europe by disguising themselves as migrants, and the raids on Thursday were part of a broader police operation intended to prevent a terrorist attack. NY Times

Germany: Suspect in attack plot registered as Syrian refugee

German police say one of four Algerian men suspected of plotting an attack in Berlin had registered in Germany as a Syrian refugee and another had contacts in Belgium. Police, who suspect the four had ties to the Islamic State group, conducted raids Thursday in Berlin and western Germany. One of the Algerians and his wife were arrested at a refugee home because they were sought by Algerian authorities for belonging to the extremist group. Berlin police said Friday the man arrived in Germany at the end of last year and sought asylum under a Syrian identity. They said they established that another of the Algerians, who wasn't arrested, had contacts with Belgium. They didn't elaborate, but the country has a strong Islamic extremist scene. Associated Press (San Francisco Chronicle)

Tonga declares Zika epidemic after 5 confirmed cases

The tiny South Pacific kingdom of Tonga said Friday it has a Zika epidemic after five people tested positive for the virus and another 265 are suspected of having it. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said in addition to Tonga, the Pacific islands of American Samoa and Samoa have also reported Zika outbreaks and it is warning Pacific travellers to protect themselves from mosquitoes, which spread the virus. Tonga Health Minister Dr. Saia Piukala told The Associated Press on Friday the Zika outbreak is the island's first and it is awaiting the results of more blood tests that have been sent overseas. He said many people aren't being tested because of the cost, but are being diagnosed anyway because of their symptoms. Associated Press (Castanet)

Zika virus: Brazilian health institute discovers Zika in saliva, urine

Zika has been identified in the saliva and urine of two patients infected by the virus, a leading Brazilian health institute said on Friday, adding that further studies are needed to determine if those fluids could transmit the infection. Reuters (CBC News); CNN

Belgium to hire 1,000 more police to combat radicalism

The Belgian government has approved a plan to combat Islamic radicalism and the threat of extremist violence by hiring 1,000 new police officers over the next four years. The plan, presented Friday to reporters by Interior Minister Jan Jambon, calls for adding 300 officers this year, and more than 500 by 2017. Jambon says 300 new officers will be added in Molenbeek and other neighbourhoods with a history of radical Islamist activity. Ninety-six police investigators will be hired, and 260 TV cameras positioned to monitor movements on the highways. Earlier reports spoke of just 100 new officers being hired. Associated Press (Belfast Telegraph)

Gang armed with machine-gun shoot dead man at Dublin hotel

One man is dead and two others are in hospital after a gang of armed men opened fire at a boxing match weigh-in at a Dublin hotel this afternoon. Witnesses said three gunmen, one of whom was armed with what gardaí believe was an AK47 assault rifle, entered the Regency Hotel at around 2.30pm. They started shooting at a group of people attending a weigh-in ahead of a planned boxing event on Saturday. Gardaí believe the gunmen targeted this group. Three people were injured during the shooting, one of whom, later died from his injuries. The injured have been taken to the Mater and Beaumont hospitals. One line of inquiry being examined by gardaí is whether the shooting is linked to a growing feud between a large criminal gang in Dublin and an Irish-led crime cartel based in the south of Spain. The dead man is aged in his twenties, from west Dublin, and well-known to gardaí for involvement for organised crime. Irish Times; Associated Press (U.S. News); Dublin People; The Mirror; The Guardian

Official say 19 killed in hotel fire in Irbil, Iraq

Nineteen people have died and several others have been injured in a fire at a hotel in Irbil, capital of the Kurdistan region of Iraq. The governor of Irbil, Nawzad Hadi, said that a large fire broke out at Hotel Capitol in Irbil at 4pm on Friday afternoon. He says that 14 of the victims have been identified as citizens of the Philippines, three were Iraqis and one was Palestinian. The cause of the fire, which started at the hotel and then spread to a nearby massage centre, is still unknown. There have been no early indications that the incident was a terrorist attack. Associated Press (Yahoo! News)

Radicalisme : La Belgique embauchera 1000 policiers de plus d'ici quatre ans

Le gouvernement belge a autorisé un plan de lutte à l'islam radical et à la violence extrémiste qui prévoit notamment l'embauche d'un millier de nouveaux policiers d'ici quatre ans. Le plan a été présenté aux journalistes vendredi par le ministre de l'Intérieur Jan Jambon. Trois cents policiers seront ajoutés dès cette année et plus de 500 d'ici la fin de 2017. M. Jambon a dit que 300 nouveaux officiers seront déployés à Molenbeek et dans d'autres quartiers où le radicalisme semble bien implanté. Près d'une centaine d'enquêteurs seront aussi embauchés et 260 caméras de surveillance installées pour filmer les autoroutes. Associated Press

French PM defends state of emergency extension, new powers

French politicians appeared split over government plans to extend emergency powers until May and to amend the constitution to strip French citizenship from those convicted of terrorism. The lower house of parliament debated the controversial plans on Friday in the wake of the deadly terror attacks in Paris that left 130 people dead in November. Under the proposals, those convicted of crimes constituting a "serious attack on the life of the nation" could be stripped of their French citizenship. Most of the attackers in the November 13 coordinated assaults held French or Belgian citizenship, and some also Moroccan nationals. Deutsche Welle

US government jet lay in wait for Snowden in Copenhagen

US government jet was lying in wait in Copenhagen to extradite the whistleblower Edward Snowden if he had come to Scandinavia after fleeing to Moscow in June 2013, the Danish government has revealed. The twin-engined Gulfstream aircraft, which had previously been used to fly Abu Hamza to the US from the UK, landed shortly before the FBI called on Scandinavian police forces to arrest Snowden and hand him over for extradition. Søren Pind, the justice minister, wrote to Danish MPs (pdf): "The purpose of the aircraft's presence in Copenhagen airport is most likely to have been to have the opportunity to transport Edward Snowden to the United States if he had been handed over from Russia or another country." This week, Pind confirmed to the Danish parliament that the aircraft had been given high-level permission to land in Copenhagen, but said he did not know the purpose of its visit. "I must note that my answer was not adequate at this point," he wrote in the letter, dated Thursday 4 February and revealed by MPs on Friday. "Usually, information of this nature is confidential because of Denmark's relations with foreign states. In view of the impression that my earlier answer may have created, I think it proper to inform parliament thereof. The US authorities have also been informed." Guardian; China Post; Europe Online Magazine

Sweden, U.K. slam 'frankly ridiculous' UN claim that Julian Assange has been 'arbitrarily detained'

A United Nations human rights panel has sided with WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange in his long-running battle with Swedish and British authorities, saying he should be freed immediately and compensated for the years he has lost. The U.N. Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, which falls under the offices of the U.N. human rights chief, said Assange has been "arbitrarily detained" by Britain and Sweden since December 2010, when he was first sought for questioning on allegations of sexual misconduct. Ecuadorian embassy considered sneaking Julian Assange out dressed in 'fancy dress' The panel's recommendation was immediately rejected by Swedish and British officials who said Assange's legal situation is unchanged. He remains in the Embassy of Ecuador in London, where he sought refuge more than three years ago. Speaking by video link from the embassy, Assange told a news conference the finding that he has been unlawfully detained is a significant victory that completely vindicates him. He said it brought a smile to his face. His lawyers said Assange must be freed immediately and given protection from possible extradition to the United States. National Post; La Presse Canadienne \(Le Devoir\); Metroland Media \(Hamilton Spectator\); Associated Press \(Washington Post\); CBC

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Global Montreal

#LacMégantic residents show signs of post-traumatic stress disorder: survey <http://glnb.ca/XZEor>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

calgarysun

RCMP's portrayal of Islam in terror sting 'eyebrow-raising': Expert ow.ly/XZJqD

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

AD_Humphreys

There has been a significant drug seizure at the Canada-US border between #Alberta and #Montana. CBSA and RCMP not released details yet.

MelissaVHerald

CBSA and RCMP officers have intercepted a large quantity of drugs at the Canada - USA border. Media conference at 11 at Raymond RCMP.

StewartBellNP

CBSA v. serial liars. decisions.fct-cf.gc.ca/fc-cf/decision... pic.twitter.com/aewSLKHm2E

CanBorder

Now hiring bilingual, English essential, and French essential officer trainee positions. Find out more today!

<http://ow.ly/XZGot>

NewsTalk770

#yeg woman pleads guilty in foreign nationals hiring. #cbsa #immigration #crime<http://bit.ly/1nMd1NI>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CTVCalgary

RCMP request thousands of DNA samples in Manitoba murder case: <http://bit.ly/23NBmn9>

CBCManitoba

Manitoba grand chief defends RCMP collection of DNA from 2,000 men, boys on First Nation cbc.ca/news/canada/ma...

GlobalNational

8 deaths so far in 2016: Canada's first responder #PTSD crisis <http://glnb.ca/XZAKI>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

CBCSaskatoon

Male worker at Maple Creek healing lodge for aboriginal women charged with sexual assault cbc.ca/1.3435570 #yxe ctvottawa

Inquest scheduled in death of inmate at Kingston Penitentiary #ottnews <http://ctv.news/qLbp4gl>

OTHER / AUTRES

RichardMadan

UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon makes Canadian stops in Ottawa & Montreal next week. #cdnpoli

INTERNATIONAL

nationalpost

Liberal government will unveil new plan to fight ISIL in Syria and Iraq within days <http://natpo.st/20LyO6v>

cmaconthehill

Prime Minister won't confirm reports the new ISIS mission will be announced next week #cdnpoli

CanadaFP

Global Affairs Canada is aware of reports of attacks in Timbuktu, #Mali. No reports of Canadians being affected to date 1/2

CanadaFP

2/2 Global Affairs Canada is gathering additional information and stands ready to provide consular assistance as required.

TravelGoC

#Japan: #volcano alert level raised to 3 for mount #Sakurajima. Follow the advice of local authorities

<http://ow.ly/XZz6V>

cnnbrk

Active Zika virus detected in saliva and urine, Brazilian public health institute says. <http://cnn.it/1S5cT8U>

metromontreal

Le virus #Zika est détecté dans la salive et l'urine - <http://bit.ly/1T2D2VT> #ZikaVirus

AP

Brazilian health official warns pregnant women to be cautious with kissing as concern grows over the Zika virus:

<http://apne.ws/1SPtnkm>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
March 30, 2016 / le 30 mars 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

ATTACKS IN BRUSSELS / ATTENTATS A BRUXELLES

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS |
ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET
ASSASSINÉES

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale responded to suggestions that his government is barely increasing funding for counterterrorism, saying last week's federal budget actually includes about a billion dollars that will help the country's police and security agencies. (CBC Radio, The Current, 9h49 ET)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Fire kills 9 at Pikangikum First Nation in Ont.: local MP

The member of Parliament for the riding that includes Pikangikum First Nation says he has been told nine people died in a house fire in the northwestern Ontario community. "We're being told nine, including three kids -- that's what I was told this morning," Robert Nault said in an interview from Ottawa. All are believed to be members of the same family, Nault said. Ontario Provincial Police Const. Diana Cole said the fire broke out shortly before midnight in the remote community near the Manitoba-Ontario border that's been plagued by suicides. Canadian Press (CTV News, Canada.com, National Post); News 880 AM; Global News

L'enquête du BST se met en branle

Une équipe d'enquêteurs du Bureau de la sécurité des transports du Canada (BST) était attendue aujourd'hui aux Îles-de-la-Madeleine, à l'endroit où un avion nolisé s'est écrasé mardi, causant la mort de sept personnes, dont le chroniqueur politique Jean Lapierre. «Le BST fera une collecte d'informations et évaluera l'événement», a écrit l'organisme par communiqué. Les enquêteurs n'avaient pas pu se rendre sur place mardi, car les conditions météorologiques ne leur permettaient pas d'atterrir. D'ailleurs, tous les vols en direction et en partance des Îles-de-la-Madeleine avaient été annulés à la suite de l'écrasement. TVA Nouvelles; CTV News; Radio-Canada (Huffington Post); 98.5 FM

Les Madelinots consternés par la tragédie qui a fauché sept vies

« Pour nous, c'est une immense tragédie. » C'est en ces mots que le maire des Îles-de-la-Madeleine, Jonathan Lapierre, a décrit ses sentiments au lendemain du drame. Mardi, il s'est rendu rapidement sur les lieux de l'écrasement. Il restera marqué par la scène. « Avec la température qu'il y avait - la brume, la neige, les forts vents et les conditions météorologiques très difficiles - et de voir l'appareil abîmé en plusieurs sections dans un champ non loin d'une maison résidentielle, c'est une scène carrément surréaliste. » se rappelle-t-il. Radio-Canada

A call for more volunteers as search continues for missing Nunavut MLA

Search and rescue teams are calling for more volunteers to assist in the ground search for Uqqummiut MLA Pauloosie Keyootak and two other missing travellers on Baffin Island. Keyootak, his 17-year-old son and another adult were expected in Pangnirtung last Wednesday, but didn't arrive. A search was triggered on Sunday morning after the territorial government was made aware that the group was missing on Saturday night. The search now includes parties from Pangnirtung, Qikiqtarjuaq and Iqaluit, as well as Canadian Forces aircraft. CBC News

Missing Roddickton man located, being airlifted for medical attention

A 71-year-old man reported missing in the Roddickton area on the Northern Peninsula has been located. The RCMP said in a news release, the man's snowmobile had been spotted earlier by a Cormorant helicopter from 9 Wing Gander. Search efforts were then concentrated in that location. The man was located near the snowmobile. He is being transported by the Cormorant for medical attention. St. John's Telegram

Missing boarder on Mount Seymour found

It took them 8 hours, but members of North Shore Rescue have found a missing snowboarder on Mount Seymour. Team leader Don Jardine says a secondary team located the man at about 3:30am Wednesday. CKNW; CBC News

Fracking triggers 90% of large quakes in B.C., Alberta oil and gas patch

There's bad news and good news when it comes to fracking and earthquakes in Western Canada, according to new research from a paper co-authored by a Geological Survey of Canada scientist. The new research confirms a definitive link between hydraulic fracturing and almost every large induced earthquake recorded in B.C. and Alberta's oil and gas patches since 1985. In other words, scientists now have evidence that 90 per cent of seismic events over magnitude 3.0 that shook the region were triggered by crews fracking for oil and gas underground. But with so many fracking wells in operation, the evidence also shows only a tiny fraction of them - less than one percent - directly triggered earthquakes. Now, scientists say, they need to determine what factors caused 39 wells to trigger quakes. CBC News; Radio-Canada

P.E.I. 911 call routed to N.B. causes confusion for Wellington firefighters

An apparent communications mixup combined with howling winds conspired to ensure that there was little the volunteers could do but watch a large, detached garage in Cape Egmont burn and try to save the nearby home from the intense heat of the blaze. No one was injured and the home was not seriously damaged, but the case is unusual, said Desmond Arsenaault, president of the Wellington Volunteer Fire Department. "Unreal – I'm not even really sure how to describe this. It was a just a number of circumstances that led to this." Telegram

Environment Canada issues rainfall warning, special weather statement

Environment Canada has issued a rainfall warning for parts of the region. According to the national weather office, the rain will start Wednesday night and will continue into Thursday. The rain will be heavy at times with the total rainfall amounts of 25 to 50 mm expected. Forecasters say there is also a risk of an isolated thunderstorm late Wednesday evening or overnight. CTV News; CFRA

Hikers warned to keep out of Grand River conservation areas

Parks, trails and conservation areas under the Grand River Conservation Authority will remain closed until further notice due to flooding and ice storm damage. Signs warning hikers and outdoor enthusiasts to keep out of affected areas were stapled to trees and fences on Friday after a winter storm pelted the region with between 10 to 20 mm of ice. CBC News

Yamaska river floods in Brigham, Que. following heavy rain

Backyards and farm fields were flooded in Brigham, Que. following heavy rain on Monday. The flooding occurred near Choinière Road and Decelles Street after the Yamaska River spilled its banks sometime Tuesday morning. At its worst, the flood water was a metre and a half deep. Still, in a written statement, the municipality described the situation as "minor." "Residents of this area often have more than one flood per year," wrote village spokesman Jean-François Grandmont. CBC News (2016-03-29)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports a house fire in the Pikangikum First Nation in northwestern Ontario has claimed the lives of 9 people. Rough Transcript

CBC News reports a house fire has claimed the lives of several people at the Pikangikum First Nation, 500 kilometers northwest of Thunder Bay. Rough Transcript

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

RCMP feared Canadian al-Qaida suspect 'may commit' three terrorist offences

A court document released Wednesday in the Kevin Omar Mohamed case hints at broader police concerns about the Canadian, who was charged with terrorism after allegedly traveling to Turkey to join al-Qaida in Syria. In a sworn statement, RCMP Sgt. Adam MacIntosh wrote that he had reasonable grounds to fear the 23-year-old former engineering student arrested in Waterloo last Friday "may commit" three terrorist offences. He said police were concerned Mohamed would travel to participate in the activity of a terrorist group, advocate or promote terrorist offences and "facilitate a terrorist activity," and asked a judge to impose conditions on him for one year. The "fear of terrorism" peace bond was withdrawn by federal prosecutors on Tuesday, after Mohamed was charged with a single count of participating in the activities of a terrorist group. He also faces two charges over a hunting knife. But while the peace bond was dropped, it sheds some light on the police concerns about Mohamed. His lawyer said Mohamed had been willing to consent to the peace bond but now that he faces a terrorism charge he is being held in custody awaiting a bail hearing scheduled to begin on April 19. The case was the latest of about a dozen in which police had sought peace bonds in terrorism cases, many of them directed at ISIL supporters. The law allowing peace bonds to be issued against those police fear may commit terrorism is controversial. ... About 180 people "with a nexus to Canada" are active in overseas terrorism - including 100 in Syria and Iraq alone, according to the director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Another 60 have returned to Canada after engaging in terrorist activity, while 90 to 100 have not left Canada but want to, Michel Coulombe testified during a March 7 appearance before the Senate Committee on National Security and Defence. National Post

Ayanle Hassan Ali, accused in Toronto military stabbing case, to appear in court

A man charged in a double stabbing at an armed forces recruiting centre in Toronto will appear in court today. Ayanle Hassan Ali, 27, is facing nine charges, including three counts of attempted murder, for the March 14 incident. Two soldiers were injured when a man with a knife attacked them. Police say the man said afterward that Allah told him to do it. The attack took place at the Joseph Shepard Building at 4900 Yonge St., which is located just north of Sheppard Avenue in the northern part of the city. The building also houses Passport Canada and Service Canada offices. Police Chief Mark Saunders says there does not appear to be any connection to terrorist groups, but says it seems the suspect deliberately targeted military personnel. Ali's lawyer has said that the accused will be seeking bail. CBC News

Getting religion

An opinion piece by Evan Solomon states "In the age of terror, some deaths appear more equal than others. The horrific terror attacks in Paris, Brussels and the Easter attack in Lahore, Pakistan, rightly shocked the world, but just three days after Brussels, 29 people were slaughtered at a soccer match near Baghdad. It hardly registered a hashtag. Back in January, 86 people were massacred in Nigeria by Boko Haram. Do you recall a march? Do you even recall an image? What about recent attacks in Ankara or Damascus? It is tragically hard just to keep up, let alone calibrate an appropriate reaction. But a condemnation of our collective empathy deficit is cheap self-righteousness. The more important question remains: what's driving so much of this terror and what is the proper response? The questions are urgent not only because of the noxious bromides Donald Trump passes off as a coherent response to security issues, but because here in Canada, the Liberals have confirmed their intention to shutter the Office of Religious Freedom. Is that the right call? ... Conflicts of the future will have twin threats: terror, and the danger of giving in to a xenophobic response. Winning both sides will mean being unafraid to talk about religion, and engaging with religious communities. Without an office to do that, how does this become a government priority?" Macleans

Europe's crisis of competence

An opinion piece by Terry Galvin states "The jihadi mayhem that killed at least 35 people and injured more than 300 in Brussels on March 22 just might signal the moment that Europe at long last musters the resolve to get itself sorted and abolish the terrorist safe havens that have established themselves across the subcontinent, from Denmark to the Dardanelles. Putting it off any longer certainly won't do. "The world's wealthiest failed state," as it has come to be known, Belgium endured 589 days without a functioning elected government between June 2010 and December 2011, and remains a dysfunctional, linguistically divided waxworks of one federal and five regional-cultural parliaments. With two scandalously under-resourced intelligence agencies, an army of only two brigades and six battalions and a public security patchwork so fragmented that Brussels alone is patrolled by six separate police forces, Belgium is like Waziristan, except mainly Flemish and Walloon. ... While only about 130 Canadians and 250 Americans are believed to have succumbed to the Islamic State's sociopathology, Belgium has contributed 470 Islamic State fighters to the genocides under way in Syria and Iraq, all by itself." Macleans

ATTACKS IN BRUSSELS / ATTENTATS A BRUXELLES

Europe's jihadi HQ

An opinion piece states "The predominantly Muslim district of Molenbeek in Brussels is like a separate city state, spread across six square kilometres, and with a population of close to 100,000, it is nearly twice as dense as the average Brussels neighbourhood. Twenty-four hours after the recent terrorist attack in which at least 35 people were killed, the area is bustling where other parts of Brussels are deserted. Groups of young men hang around on the street and shoppers go about their business. As I stand around talking with locals about the bombing, a car full of young men slows down and begins to shout at us angrily in Arabic. When I ask my companion, a 45-year-old Belgian-Moroccan father of two named Samir Benelcaid, what his friends are saying he shrugs irritably and says he's never met them before. "They think I shouldn't talk to the press," he says. "Because they think you are Islamophobic and will twist everything we say." It's a common sentiment in this increasingly divided country, in which roughly six per cent of the population is Muslim and youth unemployment is at a staggering 22 per cent. After the arrest of Salah Abdeslam, one of the suspected Paris attackers, on this very street earlier this month, Belgian police clashed with locals who were angry that one of their own had been apprehended. In the days since the Brussels attacks, Belgium has been widely characterized as the weak link in Europe when it comes to cracking down on terror networks. Illegal gun running is a serious issue here-the Charlie Hebdo attackers obtained their weapons in Brussels. And according to the International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and Political Violence, more Belgians have gone to fight for Islamic State than any other European country, per capita. About 470 Belgians have left to fight in Syria and Iraq." Macleans

Laptop belonging to Brussels terrorist contained file with floor plan, photographs of Belgian PM's office

A file with the floor plan and photographs of the office of the Belgian prime minister was found on a laptop computer discarded in a garbage can last week by one of the terrorists linked to the Brussels attacks, a government official said Wednesday. The computer was found during a raid on Rue Max Roos in the Schaerbeek section of Brussels several hours after the attacks on March 22. The toll from the attacks at Brussels Airport and the Maelbeek subway station was revised downward Tuesday, to 32 from 35, as the authorities finished identifying the victims. Several Belgian newspapers, including L'Écho, De Tijd and De Morgen, reported Wednesday that the information about the prime minister's office, in Rue de la Loi, the site of regular meetings by Cabinet ministers, had been found on the laptop. Telegraph UK (National Post)

Le projet d'attentat déjoué en France au coeur d'une vaste enquête européenne

Le projet d'attentat déjoué en France était mercredi au coeur d'une vaste enquête dans trois pays européens, mettant en lumière les ramifications des réseaux jihadistes après les attentats du 22 mars à Bruxelles. Dans la capitale belge, siège des institutions européennes, l'aéroport international, dont le hall des départs a été dévasté par une double attaque-suicide, est resté fermé mercredi. Une décision est attendue dans la journée sur sa réouverture très partielle, repoussée de jour en jour. Mais une reprise totale prendra « des mois », a prévenu la société gestionnaire Brussels Airport. Nouvelle illustration du difficile retour à la normale, la circulation dans le métro bruxellois également frappé par un kamikaze, censée reprendre complètement mercredi, est finalement toujours limitée: le Conseil national de sécurité a jugé que tout changement était prématuré. Les attentats, les plus meurtriers depuis 1945 en Belgique, ont fait 32 morts et 340 blessés, dont 94 toujours hospitalisés. Quarante-neuf blessés étaient encore aux soins intensifs mardi soir. Toutes les personnes décédées ont été identifiées. Parmi elles, 17 Belges mais aussi, dans cette ville cosmopolite au coeur de l'Europe, de nombreux expatriés et voyageurs de 13 nationalités différentes. L'enquête sur les attentats à Bruxelles, perpétrés par le même réseau du groupe jihadiste Etat islamique (EI) qui a tué 130 personnes le 13 novembre à Paris, se concentre toujours sur le principal suspect en fuite. La police recherche « l'homme au chapeau », repéré sur des images de vidéosurveillance à côté des deux kamikazes de l'aéroport et qui a abandonné sa valise piégée avant de prendre la fuite. Les enquêteurs disposent aussi d'un nom, ou plutôt d'un faux nom: les empreintes d'un homme connu sous la fausse identité de Naïm Al Hamed ont été retrouvées dans l'appartement de Bruxelles d'où étaient partis les assaillants de l'aéroport, et où des explosifs ont notamment été retrouvés. Les enquêteurs se demandent si ce suspect mystérieux est le troisième assaillant de l'aéroport, ou un autre fuyard. AFP (Journal de Québec, Journal de Montréal)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Canada making new promises to refugees

Canada is making new promises to refugees today at a UN conference in Geneva exploring the next steps in finding millions of Syrians safe homes. Immigration Minister John McCallum is set to make three main commitments during his address to a meeting that includes the UN secretary general, the high commissioner for refugees and representatives of 91 other countries. Canada will not be pledging more spots for Syrians at the meeting; that commitment -- if one is made -- would come closer to this fall's announcement of the federal immigration plan for 2017. But McCallum told The Canadian Press in an interview that in the meantime, there are other things Canada wants to do. He says the Liberals will commit in Geneva to exploring ways to expand the number of refugees who could come to Canada as post-secondary students to continue their education. "We already do that, but we would like to do that more," he said from Geneva. The government is also pledging to get the private sector more engaged in the economic integration of refugees. A third pledge is to provide technical training and support to other countries in a bid to open up more spaces for the estimated 4.2 million Syrians fleeing the five-year-old civil war in that country. The UN is hoping to find over 400,000 more resettlement spots for Syrians by 2018. Canadian Press (Kingston Whig-Standard, Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Calgary Sun, Edmonton Sun, Ottawa Sun, National Post, iPolitics)

Kevin Lacey says EI reforms can end reliance on temporary foreign workers

The Atlantic director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation says temporary foreign workers would not be needed if Ottawa reformed the Employment Insurance system. Kevin Lacey said if fish plant owners and other employers fought for changes to EI and paid workers a proper living wage, there wouldn't be a need to bring in workers from abroad. Lacey is critical of the Trudeau government for loosening restrictions on temporary foreign workers. One of the changes allows temporary foreign workers to work in fish plants for six months instead of four. He called the situation absurd. "We have areas of very, very high unemployment and yet, at the same time, we are hiring thousands of people from foreign countries to come in and temporarily work here," he said. On average, more than 32,000 people in New Brunswick collected regular Employment Insurance benefits each month in 2015, said Lacey. "We can't afford, in this [economic] climate, to not be able to take advantage of jobs that are available. Our businesses need those workers and we cannot grow our economy without those workers into the work force." (...) But Lacey challenges the notion that plants can't find local workers. He says a temporary foreign worker does not have the rights of citizens or immigrants who can decide where they want to work and for how much. "They have only one choice. They either get up in the morning and go to the job that they've been brought in to do or they go home," he said. Lacey said that makes it easier for companies to bring in temporary foreign workers than hire Canadians who may not stay at the job. But he also said the foreign workers get paid less, and suggested it's hard to get Canadians to take the jobs when foreign workers drive down the wages. "You combine that with the fact you're competing against an EI system that will pay as much or more than that," he added. CBC News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Canada urged to fight ISIS online

ISIS is using the internet as a weapon of war and Canada needs to fight back online, say digital security experts. "If we really want to defeat the group, if we want to weaken its ability to attract new foreign fighters to Iraq and Syria or to stop it from having lone wolf attacks carried out in the west or in Brussels or wherever, then we need to have a cyber strategy to counter it online," says Kyle Matthews, founder of the Digital Mass Atrocity Prevention Lab at Concordia University in Montreal. Radio-Canada (2016-03-29)

Apple versus FBI - it's just begun

The Justice Department has called off a high-profile legal battle with Apple after it was able to unlock an iPhone used by one of the San Bernardino shooters without the company's help. But rather than resolve the fight, this latest development is likely to motivate Apple and other companies to strengthen the security of their devices even more and force the government to keep up with any new security measures, technology executives and security analysts said. "They're in an arms race," said Matthew Blaze, a cryptography researcher and professor at the University of Pennsylvania. "The FBI is trying to find new ways in and Apple is trying to find new ways to defend against that." Apple isn't the only company that is aiming to install greater encryption around products. The FBI case appears to have intensified efforts among tech companies such as Snapchat and Facebook to employ better encryption - a trend that began after Edward Snowden's revelations of government spying in 2013 and a massive wave of cyber-hacking in recent years. Toronto Sun

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Massive raids of contraband and drugs involve 700 cops worldwide, including a big role for Quebec police

The Sûreté du Québec announced Wednesday morning they are involved in worldwide raids targeting contraband tobacco, drug trafficking and money laundering. Arrests were being made and searches conducted in Montreal, Kahnawake and Ontario. The SQ expected to make about 60 arrests. Operation Mygale started in the fall of 2014. They said the operation is the largest to be conducted in North America. Seven hundred police are involved in the operation, which is taking place on three continents, the SQ tweeted. Media reports said those continents were North America, South America, and Europe. Opération en cours: ce projet d'enquête est le plus important réalisé à ce jour en Amérique en matière de #contrebandetabac March 30, 2016. Opération en cours visant un réseau de d'importation de tabac, de trafic de stupéfiants et blanchiment d'argent à l'échelle internationale. National Post; Radio-Canada; Gazette; La Presse; Radio-Canada; CTV; Turtle Island News, AFP \(Euro News\), L'Éveil, Zone 911

Guilty pleas scuttle hearing that risked revealing RCMP surveillance technology

Murder case outcome ends possibility of Quebec Court of Appeal hearing on controversial 'mobile device identifier'. Prosecutors resolved a Montreal mafia murder case on Wednesday with 11th-hour guilty pleas that scuttled a same-day appellate court hearing that risked revealing sensitive RCMP surveillance technology. The outcome of the case means there will be no binding Quebec Court of Appeal hearing related to a "mobile device identifier" technology that police had used to keep tabs on alleged mafia members. What the Crown refers to as "MDI" technology bears similarities to controversial devices more generally known as "IMSI catchers" that essentially impersonate cellphone towers and pull data off all phones in a given radius. Police use of such devices has never been officially acknowledged in Canada. But as The Globe reported earlier this month, the so-called RCMP "MDI" technology had been used in an investigation dubbed Project Clemenza. The technology had helped lead to the arrests of seven people after a reputed mobster was shot dead on the streets of Montreal, in 2011. In recent years, lawyers for some accused had been fighting for revelations about the technology and Crown prosecutors had been resisting claiming it fell under "police investigative techniques privilege." Globe and Mail

Human remains found in Mission

Homicide investigators were called to Mission Wednesday morning after human remains were found in the area. Mission RCMP say a person driving along a local forest service road reported seeing the remains in the evening March 29. The Integrated Homicide Investigation Team and RCMP are gathering evidence at the scene and will release further information later. Postmedia News \(Vancouver Sun\)

'It's child abuse until the day my kids die'

When a Saskatoon mother learned that photos would be shown in court at the sentencing of a man who pleaded guilty to child pornography charges, she couldn't stop crying for two weeks. The woman's two sons are among the victims of Justin Gerard Gryba, a 27-year-old Saskatoon man scheduled to be in court on Thursday for sentencing on the second set of child pornography charges that arose out of a police investigation in 2011. Knowing the images of her boys exist and were surreptitiously taken by someone for his own pleasure is "unbearable," said the mother, who can't be named to protect her sons' identities. "People getting off on my kids' pictures is just the worst imaginable thought that a mother can have ... It's sick. It's just totally wrong," she said. "It's child abuse until the day my kids die." Her sons, were both preteens when they came into contact with Gryba through the Big Brothers Big Sisters of Saskatoon mentoring program, one of Gryba's many volunteer roles before his criminal activities came to light. In January 2013, Gryba was sentenced to two years less a day in jail, plus three years of probation, after pleading guilty to possessing and distributing child pornography in relation to the 2011 investigation. StarPhoenix

Police warn about three scams that have cost Calgarians millions

As a variety of scams circulate in Calgary, bilking millions of dollars from unsuspecting citizens, authorities are reminding people to take the proper steps to protect their financial and personal information from fraudsters. Police say the Canada Revenue Agency scam, the employment or secret shopper scam, and the contractor scam are currently the three most common schemes in the city, and con artists are constantly tweaking the ploys to trick their victims. Anyone who has lost money in a scam should report the incident by calling the Calgary Police Service's non-emergency line at 403-266-1234. Anyone who has received a call from scammers is encouraged to report it to the Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre. How the scam works: Fake job ads are posted online and those who are "hired" are sent a fraudulent cheque in the mail, with instructions to purchase office equipment, keep a percentage of the money and deposit the rest in a specific bank account. "By the time it's all done, the bank says the cheque you deposited is fraudulent and you're out the funds," said Staff Sgt. Kristie Verheul with the Calgary Police Service's economic crimes unit, adding it's possible the scam is making the rounds now due to the high number of unemployed Calgarians searching for work. How much money has been lost: According to Calgary Police Service figures, 693 people lost $23 million in 2014. That rose to 915 victims and $29 million lost in 2015. And so far this year, there have been 231 victims identified and more than $6 million lost. Verheul said the same scam will sometimes use bitcoin currency instead of cheques, a tactic that is "growing exponentially." There was one victim identified who lost $1,000 in 2014. That jumped to five victims and $31,000 in 2015. And so far this year, there are already 11 victims identified who have been defrauded of $46,000. Calgary Herald

Saguenay : envoi suspect au Centre de données fiscales

Les pompiers et les policiers de Saguenay se sont rendus au Centre de données fiscales de l'arrondissement de Jonquière, mercredi matin, pour un envoi suspect. C'est un employé de l'Agence de revenu du Canada qui a contacté les services d'urgence. À l'intérieur d'une enveloppe, il a trouvé une lettre contenant des menaces et des propos incohérents. Les policiers sont intervenus immédiatement, mais ils n'ont pas eu à évacuer le bâtiment. Des enquêteurs de la Sécurité publique de Saguenay sont sur place pour en apprendre davantage et tenter de retracer l'auteur de cet envoi. Radio Canada

Windsor police seize Taser and $50,000 worth of narcotics

Windsor police seized $50,000 worth of drugs Tuesday after pulling over the suspect in an ongoing narcotics probe. The drugs and guns unit had obtained a search warrant for a house in the 700 block of Assumption Street. Around 4:30 p.m., the tactical unit stopped a suspect who was driving a short distance from the house. They searched him and allegedly found 617 oxycodone pills, 11 fentanyl patches and $1,310 in cash. Police said the drugs are worth about $50,000. Officers then executed the search warrant at the house around 6:45 p.m. Police said they found a Taser. A 39-year-old Windsor man is charged with possession of oxycodone for trafficking, possession of fentanyl for trafficking and possession of a prohibited weapon. There were two more men in the house but police released them with no charges. Windsor Star

Les Taser Guns: à utiliser davantage au Québec?

L'utilisation de pistolets à impulsion électrique pourrait être utilisée davantage au Québec, selon un expert en emploi de la force de l'École nationale de police de Nicolet. Une étude sur les enquêtes indépendantes dévoilée mercredi révèle que dans 41 % des agressions ou menaces d'agression envers les policiers au Québec, les sujets sont armés d'une arme blanche ou d'un objet contondant. La distance des tirs policiers dans ces contextes est en moyenne est de 2,7 mètres pour une arme blanche et de 1,5 mètre pour un objet contondant. «L'étude est un argument pour l'utilisation des armes à impulsion électrique», dit l'expert-conseil en utilisation de la force de l'École nationale de police de Nicolet, Bruno Poulin. Il explique qu'une arme électrique, communément appelé Taser Gun, peut être utilisée quand les sujets menaçant ne sont pas en contrôle d'armes à feu. Les policiers ont plus de marge de manoeuvre avec des armes blanches ou objets contondants, c'est ce qui explique qu'ils attendent à la dernière minute pour tirer, qu'il y a peu de distance entre le sujet menaçant et l'arme à feu. L'étude révèle aussi que les tirs policiers blessent plus qu'ils ne tuent lors d'interventions policières au Québec. Journal de Montreal (Journal de Quebec)

Son of Fred Sasakamoose, former NHL player, prime suspect in fatal Sask. reserve shooting

The prime suspect in a fatal shooting on a Saskatchewan First Nation is related to well-known former

NHL hockey player Fred Sasakamoose. Sources tell CBC that 59-year-old Elgin "Chucky" Sasakamoose was the suspected shooter in the death a 56-year-old man yesterday. RCMP found Sasakamoose on the Ahtahkakoop Cree Nation at approximately 5 p.m. CST, when a gunshot went off. He was taken to hospital where he was pronounced dead. Police officers said they did not fire their weapons. His father was the NHL's first aboriginal player, and played for the Chicago Blackhawks in 1953-54. CBC News

Saskatchewan shooting suspect dead after police track him down

The suspect in a fatal shooting on Tuesday in the Canadian province of Saskatchewan is dead after apparently turning his gun on himself once police tracked him down. Saskatchewan Royal Canadian Mounted Police said late on Tuesday that officers had found a 59-year-old man in the Ahtahkakoop Cree Nation, an aboriginal community. A gun was fired, and the man, whom police did not name, was pronounced dead at a local hospital. Police would not confirm that the suspect had shot himself. They said, however, that the officers did not fire their guns and there was no indication of any other shooter in the area. Another police service is investigating circumstances around the suspect's death. The shooting was Saskatchewan's second in slightly more than two months, following the January killings of four people at a high school and home in remote La Loche, Saskatchewan. A 17-year-old boy faces charges in connection with those deaths. Reuters

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

The SQ, Ontario provincial police working with Canadian Border Services Agency descended on 70 different locations in Quebec and Ontario, including Kahnawake and the Six Nations reserve in Ontario, armed with arrest warrants for 60 people. All of them were allegedly involved with this massive operation that saw tens of thousands of kilograms of smuggled tobacco worth $13.5 million into Canada between 2014 and today. (CTV-Montreal, 12h16 ET)

CBC News reports on what police are calling the largest contraband tobacco raids in North American history. Raids are happening in Montreal. There are links to organized crime such as the U.S. mafia and also the Hells Angels. Rough Transcript

RDI rapporte que la Sûreté du Québec annonce le déploiement d'une très vaste opération de neutralisation de trafiquants illégaux qui auraient oeuvré à l'échelle internationale. On fait des perquisitions dans des résidences de personnes liées aux bandes de motards criminalisés et au crime organisé autochtone. Transcription ébauche

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Christopher Falconer appeal denied after murder conviction in Amber Kirwan slaying

The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal has dismissed an appeal by Christopher Alexander Falconer. Falconer was convicted of first-degree murder on Jan. 28, 2015 in Pictou Supreme Court by a 12-member jury. He received an automatic life sentence. The appeal was filed by Falconer on the grounds that the trial judge erred in his instructions to the jury about the admissions parties tendered. Falconer appealed claiming that the agreements of the admissibility of evidence should not have been included in the agreed statement of facts. The appeal claimed this caused the jury to be inappropriately informed about the voluntariness of the appellant's statements and that the judge's failure to intervene led to the jury being confused about the admissions. In its written decision, the Court of Appeal said that no error took place and the appeal is dismissed. Metro News

Justice system examined at First Nations conference

Called the first gathering of its kind, leaders and community members from the Robinson Superior Treaty Territory have gathered to identify legal issues effecting First Nation people. One of the biggest issues is tied to mental health and addictions issues," stated Michelle Solomon, a councillor from Fort William First Nation. "We have people who have untreated mental health issues, people with untreated addictions issues and they seem to circulate through the system." "And there are barriers to the treatment system who have legal issues that are pending before the courts." Solomon said the forum is a way to brainstorm and look for solutions for the communities and set some priorities. In 2012, the Nokiiwin board of directors in consultation with leadership identified the need in communities for assistance in accessing legal services. "The justice system is a huge apparatus and trying to navigate through that is pretty important," Chief Wilfred King of the Gull Bay First Nation. (...) King also added the high incarceration of First Nations who represent only four per cent of the population in Canada, "but our jails are full of aboriginal people." "If you look at federal prisons I think we represent 25 per cent of the population . . . we think there has to be a systemic change to the whole system in terms of First Nations people and access to justice," explained King. Chronicle Journal

No political activity for Reyat: parole board

Air India bomb-maker and former Duncan resident Inderjit Singh Reyat is prohibited from taking part in any political activities as one of various conditions of his mandatory parole, a decision maintained by the Parole Board of Canada in response to a request from Reyat's lawyer to change the condition. In the Parole Board of Canada's newly released Feb. 29 decision, spokesman G. McRae noted that "after a thorough file review and consideration of your lawyer's comments about your rights under the Charter to participate in political matters, the Board finds that your political views and your associations with others of a similar mindset were directly risk related and led to the murders of many innocent people." Reyat, who was convicted in connection with a bombing in Japan and the bombing of Air India Flight 182 which killed 331 people, was granted mandatory parole after serving two-thirds of a nine-year sentence in a parole board decision dated Jan. 14 of this year. Reyat was required to be released to serve out the remaining third of his sentence until August, 2018 at a halfway house in an undisclosed location. There were a number of conditions attached to the mandatory parole, including that Reyat not take part in any political activities and not access or possess any extremist propaganda. Cowichan Valley Citizen

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

The Correctional Service of Canada says an inmate is in hospital after being assaulted at the Atlantic Institution on Monday night. The RCMP is investigating. (CKOE-FM Moncton, 12h01)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Somali-Canadian's death sparks call to end gun violence, solve cases

At the end of his latest video, rapper and poet Cannon2x hauntingly calls out the names of Somali-Canadians killed by gun violence over the past decade. "This poem is for Abdi Yusef, Omar, it's for Nooredin, it's for Sharmarke and Natasha" But a week after posting the video, the Ottawa-based Somali-Canadian poet is mourning another childhood friend. Family members have identified 30-year-old Amin Mohammed Abdullahi, known to friends as Hamza Tyme, as the man who died in Edmonton after a shooting outside a Whyte Avenue nightclub last Sunday. (...) "There's a crisis, a state of emergency right now," said Cannon2x, a core member of an Ontario-based campaign called Canadian-Somali Youth Matters (CSYM). "We have to recognize it as that, and I think that's the first step." Indeed, as shock, grief and outrage ripple through Somali Canadian communities in Edmonton, Calgary, Toronto and Ottawa where Abdullahi grew up, those feelings are also fuelling growing calls to tackle gun violence and solve outstanding homicide cases. "More than 100 have died! "It's estimated since 2005, more than 100 have died," said Sadiq Alihashii, CSYM organizing committee chair. "And what's so tragic is some of these cases are not resolved yet. It's concerning to us as citizens of this country." Earlier this month, Edmonton police renewed rewards for information about 11 unsolved homicides. Most of the victims are from the Somali-Canadian community. CBC News

Panel working to spread awareness of cyber abuse

Two mothers who lost their young daughters to suicide made it clear cyber bullying should actually be called cyber abuse during a panel discussion at Laurier Brantford. Assistant professor of youth and child studies and psychology Danielle Law brought the panel together to discuss the issue in front of her students last Wednesday. The panel included Brook Gardner of Woodview Mental Health and Autism

Services, youth representative Dylan Stewart, youth probation officer Frank Casale, social worker Marc Laferriere, mother Janie Jamieson of Six Nations and mother Carol Todd of British Columbia. Todd has been touring the world speaking about how her 15-year-old daughter Amanda was continually abused, bullied and hounded online for flashing her chest on a web camera. Amanda took her life after suffering many months of abuse. Jamieson's 13-year-old daughter Jewel Monture committed suicide after dealing with constant ridicule and shaming for being a successful performer. "We really need to work hard to bring awareness to how we should speak to children about bullying and what we can do to help," Law said. Todd said she has learned cyber abuse is a problem all around the world that doesn't change from country to country. "Kids tell me they don't want to be talked at," she said. "They want to be talked with." Todd said she has often found, more in Canada than the U.S., that some schools have turned her down as a guest speaker because the topic of suicide is such a big part of her story. Brant News

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

Pink Feather Society supports MMIW survivors

The Pink Feather Society would like to congratulate Wonda Jamieson for being the recipient of the first Pink Feather Society's Bursary. Jamieson was given the $1,000 bursary on Mar. 29, along with a Pink Feather Society pin. The bursary is given to a survivor of a murdered or missing Indigenous woman who is currently seeking to further their education. The Pink Feather Society was created by students in the Social Service Worker program at Six Nations Polytechnic and students in the Honours Bachelor of Social Work program at Wilfrid Laurier University Brantford. Their mission is to help the children of Murdered and Missing Indigenous Women (MMIW) with post-secondary educational support. Two Row Times

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

1st Medical Marijuana Clinic in Calgary Nears its One Year Anniversary

420 Clinic, the first marijuana clinic in Calgary, is about to celebrate its first anniversary in just a few days. In an interview with the media, the company, through its spokesperson Thomas Wells, took the opportunity to talk about the clinic's products and services and what the future holds. "As we approach our first year anniversary, all we can say is we're thankful for the support we have received," Wells says. "We understand and are aware of the need for medical marijuana services in Calgary, and that's the reason we opened up shop, so to speak." The anecdotal evidence for the medical benefits of marijuana is voluminous, but now the same thing can be said for the scientific and medical data in support of it. In countries around the world, medical marijuana is being accepted in the mainstream. However, before 420 Clinic, there were no marijuana clinics in Calgary, but the company took a major decision to open one. Digital Journal

Medical Marijuana Plant Opens

A seven acre medical marijuana growing site in Tiverton is getting down to the business of growing marijuana after three-years of development. Advanced Medical Marijuana Canada or AMMCan, a division of Supreme Pharmaceuticals, showed off their facilities in the Bruce Energy Centre to a group of dignitaries and media. The President and CEO of Supreme, John Fowler says before the week is out, they'll start growing 10 varieties of medical marijuana. The growing process needs to be approved by the federal government as well before they get their licence to actually sell the product. Bayshore News Centre

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Nuclear terrorism threat will be focus of summit drawing Trudeau, world leaders to Washington

The world has yet to experience an act of nuclear terrorism. High-level discussions this week in Washington will resolve to keep things that way as fresh attacks in Brussels loom over the talks. Leaders from more than 50 countries, including Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, meet Thursday and Friday in the U.S. capital for the fourth and final Nuclear Security Summit, a conference dedicated to ensuring the most devastating weapons remain out of the reach of would-be attackers. The summit, an initiative led by U.S. President Barack Obama, confronts the growing menace of ISIS and how best to address nuclear smuggling and transnational intelligence-sharing. It will take place against an alarming backdrop. Security analysts fear that ISIS has been seeking radioactive material to build a "dirty bomb," noting that iridium capsules were stolen from a storage facility in Basra, Iraq, in February. At least four groups, including Al-Qaeda and the Japanese doomsday cult Aum Shinyriko, have for years harboured nuclear ambitions, according to reports. And just days after the massacre that killed 130 people in Paris last November, Belgian authorities made an eye-opening find: Evidence of spying on a top nuclear official in Belgium by a suspected Islamic State conspirator. "What we know is that an ISIS associate had this footage seized from a videotape showing the comings and goings of a nuclear scientist and his family," said Carl Robichaud, an expert in strengthening nuclear security with the Carnegie Corporation of New York. "That suggests that there was an interest in nuclear and radiological material." CBC News

John McCallum touts education, integration at UN refugee conference

Canada is making new promises to refugees today at a UN conference in Geneva exploring the next steps in finding millions of Syrians safe homes. Immigration Minister John McCallum made three main commitments at a meeting that includes the UN secretary general, the high commissioner for refugees and representatives of 91 other countries. Canada will not be pledging more spots for Syrians at the meeting; that commitment — if one is made — would come closer to this fall's announcement of the federal immigration plan for 2017. CBC News; Canadian Press (Maclean's, National Post, iPolitics)

A look at Syrian refugee resettlement by the numbers

The United Nations is seeking to find permanent homes in other countries for about 480,000 Syrian refugees in the next two years. At a high-level ministerial conference in Geneva on Wednesday, some countries did pledge new spots but most didn't. The meeting was the first of several planned for this year to address new solutions to the Syrian refugee crisis and future pledges are expected. Europe is currently striving to halt the unchecked flow of migrants across the Mediterranean through the continent's porous borders and the UN hopes that direct humanitarian admission and other legal immigration programs targeting Syrians could help address that issue. A total of 179,147 places have been made available since 2013. Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press)

Safety versus privacy

When the FBI in the United States went to court last month to force Apple Inc. to help it break into the iPhone of San Bernardino terrorist, Syed Farook, it touched off an important debate: Is it possible to have both safety and privacy? The American Founding Father, Benjamin Franklin, once wrote, "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety." That pretty much sums up my opinion. If hacking into terrorists' phones opens all of us to hacking by criminals or surveillance by the government, then even if it saves lives the vulnerability of our privacy and personal data just isn't worth it. Surely, though, there must be a third way, I thought? Postmedia Network (Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun, Ottawa Sun, Winnipeg Sun)

INTERNATIONAL

Hollande Abandons Plan To Strip Convicted Terrorists Of French Citizenship

French President Francois Hollande is abandoning a proposed constitutional amendment that would have allowed the government to strip convicted terrorists of their French citizenship. "A compromise appears out of reach on the stripping of terrorists' nationality," Hollande told reporters, according to AFP. "I also note that a section of the opposition is hostile to any constitutional revision. I deeply regret this attitude." NPR's Eleanor Beardsley told our Newscast unit that the proposal also would have enshrined the state of emergency in France's constitution. A state of emergency has been in effect since the November terrorist attacks in Paris, and was extended to May 26. The measure has sharply divided France since it was proposed three days after the November attacks. It seems to have provoked soul-searching about the nature of citizenship and the protections that entails, while also underscoring the challenges authorities face in the wake of increasingly sophisticated militant attacks. WAMU 88.5

Reda Kriket, suspect dans un projet d'attentat avorté en France, est mis en examen

Ces sources ont précisé que Reda Kriket a été mis en examen pour association de malfaiteurs, en lien avec une entreprise terroriste criminelle. Cet homme de 34 ans, soupçonné d'appartenir à un réseau djihadiste, avait été arrêté en banlieue parisienne jeudi dernier. Reda Kriket est le principal suspect dans une affaire d'attentat que les autorités françaises sont parvenues à déjouer. Lors de son arrestation, le ministre français de l'Intérieur, Bernard Cazeneuve, avait parlé de la mise « en échec [d']un projet d'attentat en France conduit à un stade avancé ». Une perquisition effectuée dans l'appartement du suspect avait permis la découverte d'armes et d'explosifs. Reda Kriket est en garde à vue depuis son arrestation. Radio Canada

German train operator introduced women-only carriages in aftermath of mass sexual assaults

A German train operator has decided to introduce a women-only carriage in the aftermath of mass sexual assaults blamed on migrants from the Middle East and North Africa. Mitteldeutsche Regiobahn will reserve a carriage for female passengers on the Leipzig to Chemnitz line, positioned beside the train conductor for maximum safety. Boys aged 10 and under will also be admitted. Germany accepted more than one million migrants last year and their arrival has coincided with a series of sexual assaults. In Cologne, a crowd of about 1,000 men described as being "of North African or Arab appearance" massed around the railway station on New Year's Eve, with roving gangs allegedly attacking at least 200 women. Markus Boehm / Associated Press In this Dec. 31, 2015 picture, persons gather at the Cologne, Germany, main station. In Leipzig in eastern Germany - where the women-only service will begin - the city's mayor warned in January of "terror on the streets" after far-Right thugs protested against migrants by looting shops and burning cars. Last week saw the first sexual assault charge arising from the Cologne violence. A 26-year-old Algerian was accused of groping a woman while he and about 10 other men surrounded her. However, a spokesman for Mitteldeutsche Regiobahn said the decision to reserve a carriage for women was prompted solely by "passengers who want more privacy." The company added: "It has nothing to do with sexual harassment." The introduction of the carriages has sparked debate on German social media, with women giving examples on Twitter of when they have felt harassed on trains. National Post

Cyprus court orders Egyptian hijack suspect held for 8 days

A Cypriot court on Wednesday ordered an Egyptian man to be detained for eight days after authorities said he admitted hijacking a domestic EgyptAir flight and diverting it to the Mediterranean island by threatening to blow it up with a fake explosives belt. Cyprus police prosecutor Andreas Lambrianou said the suspect, whom authorities had identified as 59-year-old Seif Eddin Mustafa, faces preliminary charges including hijacking, illegal possession of explosives, kidnapping and threats to commit violence. The allegation regarding explosives could be dropped if the liquid found with Mustafa is not explosive material. Judge Maria Loizou said she found the police request for the maximum eight-day detention necessary because of fears the suspect might flee and the fact that he admitted to the hijacking in a voluntary statement to police. Egypt's General Prosecutor Nabil Sadek, meanwhile, has officially asked Cyprus to extradite Mustafa in order to start an investigation, his office said. Tuesday's hijacking, which started when authorities said Mustafa claimed to have explosives and forced a flight from Alexandria to Cairo to land in Cyprus, ended peacefully about six hours later. Most of the 72 passengers and crew aboard the Airbus A320 were released soon after the plane landed, although a handful were held for longer. All were let go before Mustafa surrendered. Hamilton Spectator

Suspect in foiled attack on Paris charged with terrorism

The main suspect in a foiled French attack plot was charged Wednesday with membership of a terrorist group, sources close to the investigation said. French national Reda Kriket, 34, was arrested near Paris last week and found to have assault rifles and homemade explosives at his home. His arrest came just four months after the jihadist carnage that claimed 130 lives in Paris, and investigators said another major attack had been in an "advanced stage" of planning. Agence France-Presse (France 24)

Car blast in Russia's Dagestan kills policeman after IS claims earlier attack

One policeman was killed and another injured when a car exploded at a checkpoint in Russia's volatile region of Dagestan Wednesday, local police said, hours after another officer died in a bombing claimed by Islamic State jihadists. "As police were trying to stop a car, the driver drove past and the car exploded," local police spokeswoman Fatina Ubaydatova told AFP. "As a result one policeman was killed and one was injured, according to preliminary information." Ubaydatova said the identity and fate of the people in the vehicle remained unknown. Agence-France Presse (Yahoo! News)

Obama commutes sentences of 61 federal prisoners

President Barack Obama on Wednesday commuted the sentences of 61 federal prisoners, more than a third of whom were serving life sentences, bringing his total commutations to 248 individuals, the White House said. "Throughout the remainder of his time in office, the president is committed to continuing to issue more grants of clemency as well as to strengthening rehabilitation programs," White House Counsel Neil Eggleston said in a blog post. Reuters

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

AFN Updates

@RalphGoodale blanketed by #AFN @chief09385527 & Women'sCouncilChair at #IndigenousPublicSafety&PolicingForum pic.twitter.com/zxityRd1M7

AFN Updates

@RalphGoodale at #IndigenousPublicSafety&PolicingForum:We can lookback&say this is where we started to makeprogress pic.twitter.com/5SbltdjMmj

Public Safety Canada

Min. Goodale delivers opening remarks at the first Indigenous Public Safety and Policy Forum. #IPSPF #AFN

CyrJeff

Honoured to hear Minister Goodale at the AFN Indigenous Public Safety Forum. Important work and happy to partner.

Meaghan Willis

@RalphGoodale says the government will fund the long awaited National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women. #sask #yqr

Meaghan Willis

Minister of Public Safety @RalphGoodale says the federal government values Indigenous people, reflected in budget.

Meaghan Willis

Minister of Public Safety Ralph Goodale & Assembly of First Nations National Chief Perry Bellegarde will both speak at today's event. #yqr

RalphGoodale

Forum nat. à Régina auj. sur les enjeux de sécurité publique autochtone-content d'y assister & travailler ensemble

Ralph Goodale

National forum on Indigenous Public Safety issues in Regina today - happy to attend, listen + work together.

AFN Comms

#AFN MediaAdvisory NC @perrybellegarde & Min @RalphGoodale at #Indigenous Public Safety & Policing Forum #Regina Wed <http://www.newswire.ca/news-releases/media-advisory---assembly-of-first-nations-convenes-indigenous-public-safety-and-policing-forum-march-30-in-regina-sk-573842861.html> ...

Ralph Goodale

Attristé par le décès de Jean Lapierre. Un grand ami et collègue – une énorme perte pour le Québec et tout le Canada.

Ralph Goodale

Saddened at the death of Jean Lapierre. A great friend and colleague – an enormous loss for Québec and all of Canada.

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Kathleen Wynne

My thoughts are with the First Nations community of #Pikangikum and those who lost loved ones in last night's devastating house fire.

Postmedia News

Fire engulfs house on remote First Nation in Ontario, killing nine people, including three children <http://ow.ly/3d0hSS>

CTV News

Fatal house fire kills nine people in Pikangikum First Nation in Ont. <http://ow.ly/105Msz>

Global News

UPDATE: Nine people, including 3 children, dead after fire in Northern Ontario community of Pikangikum gln.ca/K1mODT

CBCAlerts

More details: Fire was at 3-bedroom house, all victims related, according to Chief Dean Owen. Story will be updated: cbc.ca/1.3512105

Pascal Poinlane

#ilesdelamadeleine enquêteurs du @BSTCanada viennent d'atterrir #rcqc

Radio-Canada

Ecrasement aux Îles-de-la-Madeleine : les enquêteurs de la SQ arrivés sur les lieux <http://bit.ly/1Smu6pl>

Globe and Mail

Study confirms link between fracking, earthquakes in Western Canada <http://trib.al/jwDs7BT> From @GlobeBC

Motherboard

Even fracking fans wonder why the feds would allow drilling under this lake <http://bit.ly/1pXmIKK>

HuffPost

Yes, fracking caused Canadian earthquakes: study <http://huff.to/1PETfTi> via @huffpostalberta

TranBC

Avalanche control today. #BHwy1 to be closed 43-52km east of #Revelstoke 1-2 pm bit.ly/1RKVEEg

The Province

Avalanche Canada issues special avalanche warning for all of Western Canada <http://bit.ly/1RJeLLQ>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

National Post

RCMP feared Canadian al-Qaida suspect 'may commit' three terrorist offences: document natpo.st/1ZKPgTU

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBC Saskatchewan

ICYMI: 36 criminals stopped at Sask.-U.S. border in February <http://www.cbc.ca/1.3510726> #yqr #sask #crime

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Get Cyber Safe

Our Twitter chat in French #EntrepriseCybersecuritaire is tomorrow at 7pm EDT Join us 4 tips on protecting your biz!

Pensez cybersécurité

Notre discussion sur Twitter au sujet #EntrepriseCybersecuritaire aura lieu demain à 19h (HAE).

Public Safety Canada

"We're at a turning point in our #cybersecurity efforts where we can revolutionize our approach"- Colleen Merchant

Public Safety Canada

Our Nat'l Cyber Security Directorate DG Colleen Merchant is speaking abt #cybersecurity @uOttawa's "Canada in Global Affairs" conference

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Radio-Canada

La SQ confirme avoir arrêté 60 individus liés aux motards et au crime organisé autochtone <http://ici.radio-canada.ca/breve/50447/sq-confirme-arrestation-60-individus...>

620 CKRM

UPDATE: RCMP confirm suspect dead in Ahtahkakoop Cree Nation shooting #SK #yqr #yxe <http://bit.ly/1SwwBba>

CBC Saskatchewan

ICYMI: Shootings on Ahtahkakoop Cree Nation leave 2 men dead <http://www.cbc.ca/1.3510890> #Ahtahkakoop #yqr #sask #crime

RCMP Saskatchewan

Thank you to the public for staying away from the area so RCMP members could conduct their work safely. #Ahtahkakoop ^mm

globalnews

Quebec, U.S. police, RCMP bust drug, illegal tobacco ring with ties to bikers, reserves glnb.ca/MWw2LF

CBCAlerts

700 Que. police involved in raids targeting illegal tobacco networks across 3 continents; Arrests in Ont., Kahnawake cbc.ca/1.3511876

TVA Nouvelles

L'opération de la SQ baptisée Mygale vise les motards et le crime organisé autochtone. bit.ly/1RldrPx

The Province

IHIT called out after body found in Mission bit.ly/1RjhzPu

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

AFN Updates

Some guest speakers at today's #Indigenous PublicSafety&Policing Forum in #Regina Watch LIVE livestream.com/afn/policingfo... pic.twitter.com/OIEr0FmCsQ

AFN Updates

#AFN NC @perrybellegarde addressing #Indigenous PublicSafety&Policing Forum in #Regina Watch LIVE now livestream.com/afn/policingfo...

AFN Updates

@perrybellegarde "Safety&security for our ppl means we must #CloseTheGap" #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum pic.twitter.com/YewtSoaLHX

Meaghan Willis

AFN National Chief @perrybellegarde hopes this meeting will help in making communities safe. #yqr #sask

AFN

For more info on #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum on now in #Regina pls visit <http://www.afn.ca/en/indigenous-public-safety-and-policing-forum-15...> #MMIW #pledgeendviolence

AFN

Former #AFN Reg Chief Cameron Alexis speaks to 20 yrs with #RCMP #AFN #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum

AFN

#FSIN Vice Chief Dutch Lerat: "We know the problems,we need solutions" #AFN #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum

AFN

@MNC tweets Muriel Stanley Venne: "Now is the time to act. Things are in place for change" #AFN #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum

AFN

CheyenneFineDay on need for youthparticipation in creating safe communities #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum

AFN

Former #AFN Reg Chief Cameron Alexis speaks to 20 yrs with #RCMP #AFN #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum

AFN

ChargingBearDrumGroup opens #AFN #Indigenous PublicSafety&PolicingForum LIVE webcast <http://livestream.com/afn/policingforum...> #Regina

Meaghan Willis

Traditional drums at the Indigenous Public Safety and Policing Forum put on by the Assembly of First Nations. #yqr

Public Safety Canada

In Regina: Charging Bear Drum opens the Indigenous Public Safety and Policy Forum #IPSPF

Sécurité publique

À Regina: Le Charging Bear Drum ouvre la cérémonie du Forum sécurité publique et services police autochtones #IPSPF

Sécurité publique

Regardez en direct maintenant: Forum sur la sécurité publique et les services de police autochtones #IPSPF

Public Safety Canada

Watch live now: Indigenous Public Safety & Policy Forum. #IPSPF

AFN

Watch LIVE webcast of #AFN #Indigenous Public Safety & Policing Forum <http://livestream.com/afn/policingforum...> from #Regina now #MMIW #pledgeendviolence

Sécurité publique

Aujourd'hui à Regina: forum sur initiatives/enjeux autochtones liés aux services police/correctionnels
#IPSPF #APN

Public Safety Canada

In Regina today: a forum on Indigenous initiatives and issues related to policing and corrections. #IPSPF #AFN

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

AANDC

Read summaries of what we heard at #MMIW inquiry design meetings, including Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton & Calgary: <http://ow.ly/102PWX>

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

Georgia Straight

City gives #marijuana dispensaries new deadline to come onsite or close their doors ow.ly/104m9X #vanpoli

OTHER / AUTRES

CBC Politics

Canada's Syrian refugee effort hailed at Geneva talks but no new number yet #cdnpoli

National Post

Immigration minister to pledge Canada will expand and export Liberal refugee programs at UN <http://natpo.st/1ZKIHAV>

ipoliticsca

McCallum pledges Canada will expand and help export refugee programs | iPolitics ift.tt/1q2d0a5

INTERNATIONAL

AFP

#BREAKING Main suspect charged in foiled France attack plot: investigation source

AFP news agency

#UPDATE Car blast in Russia's Dagestan kills policeman after IS claims earlier attack <http://u.afp.com/ZXdG>

National Post

Laptop belonging to Brussels terrorist contained file with floor plan, photographs of Belgian PM's office
<http://natpo.st/1ROEV9k>

globeandmail

Why Belgium is ground zero for jihadi terrorism trib.al/9vGPcCs @GlobeDebate

Reuters

Exclusive: Most Americans support torture against terror suspects according to poll: reut.rs/1V4dlnD

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
April 6, 2016 / le 6 avril 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS |
ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET
ASSASSINÉES

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Public Safety, RCMP saying little about WhatsApp encryption

The Liberal government and the RCMP are saying little about whether they are concerned by the move by social messenger WhatsApp to encrypt its full spectrum of communication services, and how they think that will affect the ability of Canadian security agencies to monitor plots. WhatsApp, which has roughly one billion users around the world, announced Tuesday it is switching on end-to-end encryption for every single text, photo, video, phone call and file its users send. The company had partially encrypted its services in 2014 but the move towards full spectrum encryption is being touted as a major step forward for those who argue that only the person who sent the message and the intended recipient should be able to read it, and that law enforcement officials should not be able to access communications through so-called back door channels. Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale's office did not comment specifically on the issue, instead emailing the same statement it released when the FBI asked Apple to unlock the iPhone of one of the San Bernardino shooters. iPolitics

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Search underway in western Labrador for missing snowmobiler

A ground search is underway in western Labrador for an overdue snowmobiler. The Royal Newfoundland Constabulary issued a news release Wednesday, saying Edward Power, 39, failed to return from a trip to the Shabogamo area Tuesday evening. Police and the Labrador West Ground Search and Rescue team are involved in the search. CBC News

Warm spring forecast not good news for N.W.T. firefighters

Environment Canada is predicting a warmer-than-average spring for the Northwest Territories, and that coming on the heels of a warm winter could mean yet another bad fire season this summer - the territory's third in a row. Senior Climatologist David Phillips says the territory is coming off a warm winter thanks to El Niño, and moisture levels in the soil are low. "Our models are suggesting across the Northwest Territories, for the last part of April and into May and then following it, we look like warmer-than-normal conditions. Which is probably not good news for forest firefighters," he said. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

EU-Canada deal to share air travelers' data raises privacy fears

An agreement between the European Union and Canada to share airline passenger data that they say is key to fighting terrorism drew tough scrutiny at an EU court hearing on Tuesday because of privacy concerns. The dispute over the retention and sharing of passenger name records (PNR) has become a shibboleth in Brussels for the debate over balancing people's privacy with the need to protect against terrorism. The agreement with Canada foresees the retention and sharing with Canadian authorities of airline passenger data by carriers operating flights between the EU and Canada. The Luxembourg-based Court of Justice of the European Union (ECJ) heard arguments for and against the agreement at a six-hour proceeding. "We ... know that these crimes do not respect borders," said D. Fennelly, a lawyer for Ireland. "The European Union cannot and should not act in splendid isolation. "Islamist militant attacks in Paris last year and last month's attacks in Brussels have stoked calls for law enforcement agencies to have easier access to people's data. Ireland, France, Britain, Spain and Estonia, who intervened in the case, emphasized that PNR do not allow investigators to paint a detailed picture of someone's private life. But the European Parliament and privacy advocates cast doubt on that assertion. Business News Network (Reuters Canada)

Montreal teen gets three-year sentence for terror-related offences

A Montreal teen convicted on two terrorism-related charges has been handed a three-year sentence. He was found guilty in December on two charges: committing a robbery in association with a terror organization and planning to leave Canada to participate in the activities of a terrorist group abroad – the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant. Despite some concerns, youth court Judge Dominique Wilhelmy agreed to a joint suggestion of 24 months of supervised detention, comprised of 16 months behind bars and eight months in the community. That is to be followed by 12 months probation. The case stems from an October 2014 convenience store robbery linked to the accused's plan to go to Syria to take part in the conflict there. Reports filed by experts suggest the teen, who cannot be named, has made strides to break free of radical thought. His father told the court his son has changed a lot in the past year. Globe and Mail; CBC News; CTV News; Journal de Montreal

The danger of preventive counter-terrorism powers

Kevin Omar Mohamed was arrested as a terrorist last month — but not, as one might expect, for an act of terrorism already committed. Instead, the arrest was initially described by police as “preventive,” based on a “fear” that Mohamed might engage in terrorism abroad; according to the police's own statement, “there was no indication of any plans for a domestic attack.” Even before being charged with any terrorism offence (as he eventually was), Mohamed was publicly branded a terrorist. His name and his face were broadcast on prime-time news as a "terror arrest," all on the strength of a "fear." In the Kafkaesque world of preventive counter-terrorism, one can be treated like a criminal without actually being accused of any crime. Canadian law criminalizes a sweeping range of actions as terrorism offences, including preliminary steps only remotely connected to actual violence. But even those who have not been charged with any crime may be arrested and detained, their freedom abrogated not for what they have done in the past but for what the state thinks they might do in the future. Canada's already-problematic regime of preventive arrest and detention was exacerbated by Bill C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015. Bill C-51 more than doubled the maximum time permitted for preventive detention (from three days to seven), while lowering the threshold for preventive arrest. Individuals may now be arrested if police believe that a terrorist activity may (not will) be carried out, and that arrest is likely (not necessary) to prevent it. Daily News

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Canada Border Services agent arrested for sexual assault, extortion

A Canadian border agent arrested in Montreal last week has been charged with sexual assault, breach of trust and extortion related to his work in Dartmouth, N.S., more than a decade ago. The man, 55, is accused of using his position as a Canada Border Services Agency employee to extort a woman facing deportation. The accusations date to 2003, but the complaint was made to Halifax police in November 2014. Halifax Regional Police Cst. Dianne Woodworth said police started investigating then. "Based on the investigation, it's alleged the CBSA employee used his position of authority as an immigration officer over a then 26-year-old woman, who was scheduled to be deported in June 2003, by extorting and sexually assaulting her on more than one occasion in Dartmouth that same year," she said in a news release. CBC News, Global News, CTV News, Canadian Press (Times Colonist, Metro News, 680 News), The Coast, Presse canadienne (La Presse), Kelowna Now

Battle Creek man was following GPS instructions

An American who crossed the international border at Sarnia in a stolen vehicle while under the influence of alcohol was fined in Sarnia court Tuesday. Timothy Crane, 23, of Battle Creek, Mich., pleaded guilty to the March 30 charge of drunk driving, along with possession of a stolen car, electronics and a wallet. Court was told that at approximately seven o'clock that morning Crane inadvertently entered Canada at the Blue Water Bridge while following GPS instructions. Crane failed a roadside breath test by a Canada Border Services Agency officer, who was alerted by an odour of alcohol. Subsequent breath tests showed the American's blood alcohol level was one-and-a-quarter times the legal limit. It was also found that Crane was driving a car reported as stolen in Battle Creek. Stolen property, including a tablet, a laptop, a GPS and the vehicle owner's wallet, were in the car. It seems to be fairly common for Americans to find themselves unknowingly on the Blue Water Bridge, said Justice Jonathon George. Sarnia Observer

City of Vancouver considers access without fear

A plan to offer sanctuary to Vancouver residents who are afraid of detention or deportation on the basis of their immigration status is slated for public hearing Wednesday morning. Staff have asked councillors to approve their plan to provide "Access to City Services Without Fear," and to encourage police, library services and the park board to follow suit. As previously reported by Postmedia, the proposed policy would mean that city staff would not ask for the immigration status of residents or provide it to other public institutions unless required by law. The policy would only apply to services provided by the city, and not to civic services provided by police, parks and libraries, which are all governed by individual boards. It would also not cover the agencies of other governments that are active in the city. For that reason, the city has shied away from the term "sanctuary city," which is used by dozens of municipalities around North America with similar policies already in place. The push to offer sanctuary in Vancouver to undocumented individuals and those with uncertain immigration status came after the 2013 death of Mexican national Lucia Vega Jiménez. Jiménez had been picked up by TransLink police for a transit violation and later hung herself in a Canada Border Services Agency holding cell at Vancouver International Airport while awaiting deportation. Vancouver Sun (The Province)

Estranged wife: Rupeka, girlfriend dead in Tijuana motel

Self-styled police watchdog Adam Rupeka and his girlfriend Jennifer Ogburn, who both faced misdemeanor sex abuse charges, died of apparent drug overdoses in a motel room in Mexico, Rupeka's estranged wife told the Times Union Wednesday morning. Rebecca Rupeka said she was called by U.S. consulate officials on Monday who told her that Rupeka died Sunday at the motel and Ogburn died Monday in a Tijuana hospital. (...)The couple had said on social media that they had fled to Canada. Each posted $5,000 bail to get out of the Rensselaer County Jail on March 26 after Troy police charged them with misdemeanor counts of endangering the welfare of a child, sexual abuse and forcible touching. (...)A day later, Rupeka posted a video showing snow and a body of water and spoke about crossing the Canadian border. Rupeka did not appear in that video, and it was unclear where and when the video was made. Times Union

Dans ma valise, un drone

Pour un nombre grandissant de voyageurs, le drone est devenu un compagnon d'exploration essentiel : c'est grâce à lui qu'ils captent toutes ces photos et vidéos aériennes, nouvelles coqueluches des médias sociaux. Survol du phénomène, de vidéos à faire rêver et de conseils de pros, à l'heure où la réglementation des divers pays est en pleine mutation. (...) Premier écueil qui guette les dronistes touristes : peuvent-ils emporter leur drone à bord d'un avion ? La réponse est oui, en général, « mais il vaut mieux s'informer chaque fois au préalable auprès de la compagnie aérienne », explique Maxime Contour, blogueur français spécialisé en vidéos de voyage. (...) Maxime Contour ajoute : « Pour éviter toute confusion aux douanes, j'ai toujours en main une copie imprimée des règles de l'IATA (International Air Transport Association) concernant le transport des batteries. » Air Canada, Air France et Air Transat se conforment à cette réglementation : les batteries doivent accompagner le passager en cabine et ne doivent pas dépasser 2 g de lithium. Si leur énergie se situe en deçà de 100 Wh, aucune permission ne doit être demandée au préalable. La Presse

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

A Canadian border agent arrested in Montreal last week has been charged with sexual assault, breach of trust and extortion related to his work in Dartmouth, N.S., more than a decade ago. (CBC Radio One, 13h02 ET)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Canadian law firms a 'sweet spot' for attack, says intelligence expert

Canadian lawyers are among those in the global legal community who may be looking closer at their information security procedures after the revelation of a massive hack of international documents from a Panamanian law firm. They ought to, according to an Ontario cybersecurity lawyer (...) Because they hold sensitive corporate and personal information law firms are logical targets of attackers. However Ray Boisvert, a former assistant director of intelligence at the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) and now president of the advisory firm I-Sec Integrated Strategies, said in an interview they may not appreciate what they hold. "Sometimes organizations, law firms, some government relations firms and lobbyists and others don't always recognize how valuable their information assets are," he said. "I think they see their role and quality and value as provisioners of advice — and that's true — but they also have great repositories for stuff." In this country attention on cybersecurity has mainly been focused on organizations related to critical infrastructure — banks, utilities, governments and law enforcement agencies, and transportation companies. IT World Canada

Why WhatsApp's Encryption Embrace Is a Landmark Event

The news that Facebook's WhatsApp now supports encryption across all its apps is nothing short of seismic. There have always been those who were keen on using encrypted communications — politicians trying to avoid the gaze of their rivals and foreign spies, corporate executives trying to protect their trade secrets, activists trying to organize opposition to oppressive regimes and, yes, criminals trying to evade law enforcement. But, in the big picture, these are fringe cases. Before Edward Snowden told the world about the extent of state surveillance in 2013, few "normal" people were interested in adding heavy protections to their communications. Soon, over a billion of them will be using this facility without even trying. Fortune; Washington Post (Toronto Star)

Locky Ransomware Morphs as Spam Attacks Spike

Locky, an emerging ransomware threat that first burst on the scene in February, has already started to mutate and morph into new variants. The changes come just as researchers observe a fresh spike in propagation. Locky is distributed via email attachments, specifically Word documents disguised as invoices. The docs contain macros which download and install the ransomware. When originally discovered, the botnet behind the spam mail was found to be the same as that which delivers the majority of emails containing the infamous Dridex trojan. Locky is also spread via exploit kits. Infosecurity Magazine

Nest disables smart home device, triggers IoT security concerns

Internet of Things (IoT) thermostat company Nest will disable the company's smart home product Revolv on May 15, sparking concerns over the future security of the IoT devices. The decision to disable the $299 device was announced by Revolv founders Tim Enwall and Mike Soucie on Revolv's website. The founders will re-focus on building Works with Nest, a platform of compatible devices that integrate into the Nest system. "Unfortunately, that means we can't allocate resources to Revolv anymore and we have to shut down the service." SC Magazine; CBC News

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Condolences for Mountie Sarah Beckett pouring in

As condolences pour in for the Mountie killed in a collision yesterday near Victoria, the RCMP says it is talking with her family about plans for a possible public memorial. Const. Sarah Beckett died early Tuesday morning when her police cruiser was in a collision with a pick-up truck in the Victoria suburb of Langford. Beckett, an 11-year member of the force who spent her entire career on Vancouver Island, is survived by her husband and two young children. The popular officer's death has triggered an outpouring of condolences on social media, including a message from the prime minister. CBC News; Vancouver Sun

'They treated him worse than an animal': RCMP allegedly beat man while he was naked and handcuffed

Police continued to beat Christian Duckchief long after he was on the floor and handcuffed, his fiancée says — until his orbital bone, cheek and nose were all fractured. Chantel Stonechild said Duckchief, 23, was dragged from the house, naked. "They treated him worse than an animal," she said. Duckchief and Stonechild were asleep, in bed in her Siksika Nation home, when Gleichen RCMP came for him Friday morning — Stonechild believes their eight-year-old daughter let the Mounties in. She woke up to Duckchief struggling with an officer on top of him. Duckchief's lawyer said his client didn't know what was happening. "Somebody jumped him on the bed and woke him up out of his sleep, grabbing his arms," Dale Fedorchuk said. Postmedia News (National Post)

Surrey RCMP station hit by bullet, say police

The Guildford Community Police Station may have been hit by a bullet. Mounties say a maintenance worker discovered a hole in a window on the north side of the station located at 10395 148 St. on Tuesday. "Police are currently examining the area and have found evidence consistent with a bullet causing the damage. The hole is about the size of a quarter," said a statement released by police "The damage does not appear recent and it is not known when this incident occurred. There are no witnesses or suspects at this point." CBC News; Times Colonist

Kamloops RCMP introduces new media relations officer

The Kamloops RCMP introduced a new media relations officer on Wednesday morning. Cpl. Jodi Shelkie will officially take over the role on Monday, April 11. "With 19 years of service in the RCMP, we are very fortunate to have Cpl. Shelkie's experience and background," said Supt. Brad Mueller. Prior to coming to Kamloops, Shelkie worked as a media relations officer in Fort St. John. Current media relations officer.

Cpl. Cheryl Bush, will be working alongside Shelkie throughout the remainder of this week before returning to general duties in a supervisory capacity. Kamloops BC Now; CFJC Today

Family of beaten N.W.T. woman upset she flew solo to Edmonton for treatment

The mother of a woman who was brutally attacked in Tuktoyaktuk, N.W.T., last week says health staff allowed her daughter to fly unescorted to Edmonton for medical treatment. Crystal Kudlak's family says she was beaten in the head by someone she knows and was flown out for medical treatment last week. Now they're trying to raise money so Kudlak's mother can be by her side in an Edmonton hospital, as she undergoes plastic surgery to repair her face. "I was so upset," Emma Green, Kudlak's mother said from her home in Paulatuk. "I couldn't believe what was happening to her."... RCMP say they won't comment about the case, but confirm an incident happened with a woman in the community early in the morning on March 31. They said the woman was medevaced out of the community, but they did not know where. Police also confirm a man was arrested, but say he has not been charged. RCMP would not say if the incident on March 31 was related to the fundraising efforts by Kudlak's family. CBC News

Fraud Case Takes Grim Turn

A Fort McMurray woman under investigation after thousands of dollars were stolen from a memorial fund for a widow and her two children has been found murdered in British Columbia. Discovered last month The burned body of Vikki Heppner, 28, was found near a service road by Stave Lake, located approximately 40 kilometers north of Mission, B.C., on March 29. Heppner's body was discovered by someone driving through the area. Police are not releasing the woman's identity pending an autopsy, but CTV Vancouver has identified Heppner as the victim. Heppner's mother in Clifton, Ill., confirmed to the station that police had identified her daughter as the victim. Her mother said Heppner had left Fort McMurray after the alleged theft was made public last fall. Police have charged Ryan Jack Armstrong, 29, with second-degree murder and indignity to a body. Investigators say the two knew each other at the time of the murder. "Our early investigative theory supports this as a targeted homicide and it is believed that the victim and suspect were known to each other," police in B.C. said. "An important piece to this investigation was the support of the public who came forward with information that has aided in the rapid progression from initial investigation to charge approval." Last fall, Wood Buffalo RCMP began investigating Heppner after money for the family of Roger Belanger was withdrawn from an online fundraiser. Belanger, a 29-year-old man from Sudbury, Ont., died in a car crash near London, Ont. on July 28, 2015. Edmonton Sun, A3

4e fusillade à Surrey en 4 jours

La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) a ouvert une enquête après une nouvelle fusillade ciblée survenue à Surrey mardi soir vers 23 h 10, la quatrième en quatre jours. À leur arrivée sur place, les policiers ont pris en charge un homme blessé par balle qui a été transporté à l'hôpital dans un état de santé stable. Un autre homme, décrit comme ayant la peau foncée et conduisant un VUS, a été vu quittant les lieux rapidement après l'incident. La police a également remorqué une berline blanche qui se trouvait à l'endroit des tirs. La zone a été fermée plusieurs heures, tôt mercredi matin, pour que la police puisse poser des questions aux résidents du quartier. Il s'agit de la 32e fusillade à Surrey depuis le début de l'année 2016. Radio-Canada; Vancouver Sun

Toronto family doctor among arrests in fentanyl trafficking ring

A doctor who runs a family practice in Toronto is among several people who've been arrested in what police allege was a fentanyl trafficking ring. York region police said they began an investigation in October when fentanyl patches were being illegally obtained and transported to the Sudbury area to be sold. Investigators allege that two individuals, one of whom is Dr. George Otto, who runs a practice in Toronto, were working with street-level fentanyl dealers to obtain and distribute the fentanyl patches. Police allege the patches were sold at a street value of about $400 to $500 per patch. As a result of the investigation, police have seized nearly 300 fentanyl patches, more than $50,000 in cash, as well as prescription notes and documents. CTV News; Metro News

Detainees from Toronto G20 summit win right to sue via class actions

More than 1,000 people detained during the chaotic G20 summit almost six years ago won the right Wednesday to go the class-action route in lawsuits against police and others. In approving the class-action process, Ontario's top court said various reports on the events to date had made only non-binding recommendations. "The remedies sought by the plaintiffs, which include a declaration that class members' charter rights have been violated and an award of damages, would be stronger instruments of behaviour modification," the Court of Appeal said in its decision. The G20 summit over a weekend in June 2010 _ marred by vandalism from several dozen protesters _ saw more than 1,000 people arrested or detained in what was later described as one of the worst violations of civil liberties in Canadian history. Many were kept in appalling conditions at a makeshift detention centre. Almost all were released without charge within 24 hours. Canadian Press \(Global News\)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reported on allegations of police brutality during an RCMP-led arrest on the Siksika First Nation south of Calgary. Rough Transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Heroin, marijuana seized at Millhaven Institution

On March 29 at about 5:30 p.m., correctional officers at Millhaven Institution, a maximum-security federal institution, intercepted an inmate who was attempting to bring contraband into the institution. The seizure is the result of the combined efforts of correction officers, the detector-dog team and security intelligence officers. The contraband seized includes 6.2 grams of heroin and 15.7 grams of marijuana. The total institutional value is estimated at $7,000. Police have been notified and the institution is investigating. CSC say they use a number of tools to prevent drugs from entering institutions, including ion scanners and drug-detector dogs to search buildings, personal property, inmates and visitors. CSC has set up a telephone tip line for all federal institutions to receive additional information about activities relating to security at CSC institutions. These activities may be related to drug use or trafficking that may threaten the safety and security of visitors, inmates and staff members working at CSC institutions. Kingston Region

Appeal decision for convicted killer expected today

An appeal decision is expected to come down today on the second-degree murder conviction of a Medicine Hat woman found guilty of the 2011 homicide of Casey Armstrong. Armstrong was found dead from stab wounds in his Southview Drive home on May 22, 2011. In January 2012, city police announced that two women were charged with first-degree murder in connection with the Armstrong homicide. (...) The second woman, Connie Oakes, was convicted by a city jury following a two-week second-degree murder trial in November 2013 and was subsequently sentenced in 2014 to life in prison with no eligibility for parole for 14 years. Oakes's appeal was filed within the 30-day appeal period following her sentencing. Medicine Hat News

Mafia murder suspected

Laval Multisports parking lot was the scene of a deadly shooting, at around 7:40 a.m., March 1. Sûreté du Québec took over the investigation, suspecting that the murder could be linked to organized crime. The victim, a 52-year-old man, could be Lorenzo Giordano, a high-profile member of the Rizzuto clan. Doctors pronounced him dead upon arrival at the hospital. Giordano was arrested during the Colisée investigation in 2006, which targeted the Mafia. He was sent to jail for 15 years and had been out on parole in a transition house since last December, after serving two-thirds of his sentence. The Suburban

My friend Kinew

A letter to the editor from Nicole Kish, an inmate currently serving a life sentence, states, "You recently published an article about systemic discrimination against Indigenous people in Canada. The article touched my heart and the hearts of many of the women at the Grand Valley Institution for Women, where I am imprisoned. The words resonated with us as truths we are not allowed to understand. When I read the comparison of prisons to "new residential schools," I felt validated. We make this comparison inside all the time. We feel deeply concerned with many of the current practices in Canadian judicial and prison systems. We know they represent horrors because we experience those horrors. (...) I had the feeling that Kinew wouldn't get out of here alive, but when I said it, it was not because I wanted it to happen. I wondered how human beings could be so callous to one another, how the guards could not see the violence that they were enacting in their positions. I was witnessing the dynamics and effects of imprisonment on First Nations people and people with mental illness from a maximum security unit, the units where the most harm in the Canadian prison system occur. I have wondered, over the years, when harming people and abandoning them to prisons became okay. I wonder why so little is known about our prison system and I wonder when it stopped being about rehabilitation. It is such a cold and violent system, with intense potential for irreversible harm." Maclean's

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Injecting common painkiller an alternative to heroin, Vancouver study finds

Drug addicts who inject themselves with a commonly prescribed painkiller can't tell the difference between it and medically prescribed heroin, a Vancouver-based study released today has found. The finding, published in the Journal of the American Medical Association's JAMA Psychiatry, could open the way to prescribing hydromorphone to people who have been unable to quit street drugs by using methadone or suboxone, the only two legal opiate substitutes in Canada. Addictions researcher Eugenia Oviedo-Joekes headed SALOME - the Study to Assess Longer-term Opioid Medication Effectiveness - at Providence Health Care's Crosstown Clinic on Hastings Street in the heart of the Downtown Eastside. While methadone taken daily in liquid form is effective for most people who want to quit opioids, it doesn't work for at least 10 per cent of the chronically addicted, she says. "There is an important minority of people who we have nothing to offer," said Oviedo-Joekes in a telephone interview. "The majority of them have been injecting for 15 to 20 years. These are people with very few resources in any area of their lives." SALOME recruited 202 heroin users who had a documented drug addiction for at least five years. Participants were randomly divided into two groups and given syringes filled with pharmaceutically prepared hydromorphone, the opioid pain medication sold under the brand name Dilaudid, or diacetylmorphine, the active ingredient in heroin. Neither the patient nor the health care worker handing out the syringes knew which drug they contained. Vancouver Sun

Woodstock and Brantford Police Services partner on human trafficking investigation

Woodstock and Brantford Police Services recently partnered on a joint investigation into human trafficking. Nine women in the sex trade in both communities were contacted by police and offered assistance at the end of last month, Woodstock Police said in a media release. All of these women "appeared to be working independently and not being controlled," police said. None of them wished to accept police help at that time. But investigators believe that one of the women they spoke with was a victim of human trafficking and an investigation is ongoing. Woodstock Sentinel Review (2016-04-05)

Overall crime down again in Cornwall in 2015, says police chief

Crime is down overall in the Seaway City. That's according to Cornwall Community Police Service Chief Dan Parkinson, who presented year-end statistics for 2015 to the Cornwall Police Services Board at city hall Wednesday (April 6). "The numbers reflect an ongoing trend going downwards in the total amount of crime happening in this city," Parkinson told Seaway News in an interview. According to the report, drug violations were down 26.73 per cent (27 incidents) in 2015 compared to the same time period in 2014, while violent crimes were down 5.8 per cent (48 incidents), and the offence type category 'other crimes' dropped 3.6 per cent (28 incidents). He said the lower crime rate is the result of a number of factors. Cornwall Seaway News

Measure of Harm for Crime Needs to Be Adopted

A "menu of harm" that measures crime according to the price of damage inflicted on victims – rather than counting crimes as if they are all of equal seriousness – needs to be adopted worldwide to focus police resources on the worst criminal acts, say leading University of Cambridge criminologists. "Not all crimes are created equal. Counting them as if they are fosters distortion of risk and accountability," said Professor Sherman, Director of the Cambridge Institute and Honorary President of the 2,000-member Society of Evidence-Based Policing. "If shoplifting drops while murder triples, crime is reported as 'down'

– yet any common sense view of public safety cries out for some adjustment for seriousness.”
(...) Sherman, Neyroud and colleagues have devised the Cambridge Crime Harm Index (CHI), which they describe as essentially a crime version of the cost-of-living index – a classification system weighted by, in this case, the likely impact of an offence on victims. (...) Sherman believes that adoption of the Cambridge CHI would help make optimal use of scarce resources through more targeted policing, which could, in turn, reduce prison populations. Net News Ledger

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

Someone knows something, says author of book on northwestern B.C. murders

Ray Michalko would never have predicted that putting an ad in a northern B.C. paper in 2006 would end up with him writing a book 10 years later. Obstruction of Justice details the private investigator's probing into the numbers of the missing and murdered women along the Highway of Tears, a name given to the 722 km stretch of Hwy 16 between Prince Rupert and Prince George. "I think it's going to make people aware about a lot of things and I've tried not to be judgemental but present the information or facts and let readers make up their minds about the whole thing," he says about what he hopes the book will accomplish. "I'm sure it'll generate more calls for me," said the former police officer who lives on the Lower Mainland. When Michalko began his search way back in early 2006, seven women were missing or had been found murdered along the highway, which grew to nine – the number Michalko talks about in his book – then jumped to 18 when the RCMP decided to add more cases, some from Alberta and some from further south in B.C., saying they were related. Terrace Standard

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

How to do drugs right: go Dutch?

Should you find yourself in Amsterdam, cycling along the city's complex latticework of bike paths, be wary along the canals. It is not uncommon for reckless cyclists to accidentally veer into the water. By the city's estimates, between 12,000 and 15,000 bicycles are dredged out of the canals each year. It would seem that installing some rudimentary barrier or guardrail along all the canals may prevent such wanton loss of property. But such modest precautions seem antithetical to Amsterdam's spirit—they're patronizing and nanny-ish in a city where it's the individual's duty conduct him- or herself non-moronically, and not the duty of civic leaders to prevent anyone from doing so. It's a notion also at work in Amsterdam's tourist-heavy Centrum neighbourhood, with its famous coffeeshops (read: cannabis cafés) and their twinkling, visibly toasted customers, and shops selling knockoff Bob Marley posters and hand-blown glassware. In the Netherlands, the sale of cannabis is technically illegal "but not punishable." Despite being something of a pot mecca, cannabis is only decriminalized de facto. That should soon put the country behind Canada when it comes to marijuana laws. Already, the changes to medical marijuana laws have seen a proliferation of not-quite-illegal dispensaries in Toronto, Vancouver and cities coast to coast, all of which seem to operate on the assumption that the cops won't bother to shut them down with pot legalization seeming imminent. While ostensibly dispensing only medical marijuana, many sport the aesthetic of the head shops of old, suggesting they might want to appeal to more than people struggling with, say, glaucoma or chronic pain; a few are part of a breed of designer stores selling marijuana in apothecary-chic settings. With a change coming in the law for recreational use, some leaders, including Tom Mulcair, have called for an end to marijuana arrests in the meantime. Maclean's

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Europe Under Siege

As the list of deadly attacks grows longer, Europe's great cities have had to improvise an iconography of grief and wariness. A visitor arriving in Brussels last week, days after bombs at the airport and in the metro killed 32 people, was struck not so much by fear as by déjà vu. It was so much like Paris after the Charlie Hebdo murders. These things have a shape and a rhythm to them now. At the Bourse, the Belgian capital's stately old stock exchange, crowds of tourists were still laying flowers and hanging banners. Chalk inscriptions on sidewalks and on the building itself bore messages of hope or sadness or helpless banality. "Just smile," said one. "It will make them angry." "Diversity is Brussels and they won't take it away from us," said another. The subways were running for only 12 hours a day, from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., under heavy security. As a train on the main line sped through Maelbeek station without stopping, floor-to-ceiling screens hid any view of the platforms. It was at Maelbeek that 14 people died in the second attack of March 22, an hour and 13 minutes after the bombs at the airport detonated. There were soldiers everywhere, usually working in pairs and carrying assault rifles. I passed two Belgian army regulars as I entered the Canadian Embassy on a cold spring afternoon, and it wasn't until later that I learned they were stationed there well before the latest attacks. "They've been there since the Thalys incident," Dan Costello, Canada's ambassador to the European Union, told me. "Oh, no-since the Verviers Ring was taken apart." It can be hard to keep up with the mayhem. Let's recap. The Thalys is a high-speed rail network that serves Brussels. On Aug. 21, 2015, a 25-year-old Moroccan, Ayoub El-Khazzani, was arrested after a man boarded the train at Brussels and began shooting and stabbing its occupants, none fatally. Four passengers, including two off-duty members of the U.S. armed forces, overpowered the assailant. Seven months earlier, on Jan. 15, 2015, Belgian police killed two men in a series of raids on houses in Verviers, in eastern Belgium, and across Brussels. The Verviers raids came eight days after gunmen in Paris killed 12 people at the Paris offices of the satirical newspaper Charlie Hebdo. Police said the suspects in the raids were connected to the so-called Islamic State terror cult and that they were on the verge of planning new attacks. Investigators later said the Verviers group's ringleader, relaying orders by telephone from Athens, was Abdelhamid Abaaoud. Abaaoud remained free long enough to help organize the massive coordinated terror attack on Paris restaurants, bars and the city's main sports stadium on Nov. 11. He died in a bloody police raid in a Paris suburb a week later. Investigators believe the driver for the November Paris attacks was Salah Abdeslam, born in 1989 in Brussels to Moroccan parents. He escaped the dragnet around Paris last autumn. Police finally caught him in Molenbeek, an inner-city Brussels neighbourhood that is home to many Moroccan and Turkish immigrants. A manhunt across two countries ended on March 18 when police, alerted by a suspiciously large pizza order, raided Abdeslam's Molenbeek flat. His capture probably spurred his associates to carry out the Brussels airport and metro bombings four days later. Maclean's

Liberal budget makes it tougher to scrutinize fate of public purse: PBO

The federal budget watchdog says the Liberal government's inaugural budget has made it more difficult for people to scrutinize public finances. The parliamentary budget office says in a new report that last month's budget failed to separate purely discretionary decisions, like new measures and changes in planning assumptions, from shifts in economic conditions, as past governments did. Budget officer Jean-Denis Frechette's report also says the Liberal decision to introduce a risk adjustment that lowered the projected budgetary balance by $6 billion a year was excessive and eroded the independence of using private-sector forecasts. CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

Brussels attacks a security failure, but Belgium not a failed state: PM

The March 22 Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS) attacks in Brussels signalled a security "failure", Belgian Prime Minister Charles Michel admitted on Wednesday (April 6), but he rejected the notion that his country was a "failed state". "When there is an attack like that of course that's a failure and nobody can deny this," he told reporters in Brussels. But, he added, "I cannot accept the idea that we're a failed state." Agence France-Presse (Straits Times)

One of Brussels bombers had worked in EU Parliament: spokesman

One of the Islamic State suicide bombers who killed 32 people in Brussels on March 22 had worked as a cleaner for a short period in the European Parliament six years earlier, a spokesman for the EU assembly said on Thursday. In 2009 and 2010, "one of the perpetrators of the Brussels terrorist attacks worked for a period of one month for a cleaning company which was contracted by the European Parliament at the time," spokesman Jaume Duch Guillot said in a statement which did not name the individual. An EU official said the person was Najim Laachraoui, a 25-year-old Belgian who prosecutors said blew himself up in the airport attack and is also suspected of making suicide vests for last November's Paris attacks in which 130 people died. Reuters

Border force warns terrorists could enter EU by abusing asylum checks

The EU's border force has warned that terrorists may have infiltrated Europe by hiding among asylum seekers, noting that two of the bombers in last November's Paris attacks arrived on the continent in a smuggling boat from Turkey. Frontex's annual risk analysis released on Tuesday, said: "The Paris attacks in November 2015 clearly demonstrated that irregular migratory flows could be used by terrorists to enter the EU." Echoing observations made five months ago, the report added: "Two of the terrorists involved in the attacks had previously irregularly entered through Leros and had been registered by the Greek authorities. They presented fraudulent Syrian documents to speed up their registration process. Guardian UK

Spying on Friends? Atmosphere of Distrust Hinders EU Anti-Terror Cooperation

The man who wants to explain the psyche of Germany's foreign intelligence service sips a cappuccino and talks about the abduction of German tourists in the Sahara Desert a few years ago (...) The French intelligence services had good sources in the region, but they had been unwilling to share their information with the Germans, so the BND decided to spy on the French to get it. This was how it came to be that the Germans spied on a government agency in a friendly country, one they treated as being among of their closest political allies. Friendly? Allied? (...) It took only a few hours after three bombs had exploded in Brussels and 35 people had been killed for politicians and experts to begin calling for better cooperation among intelligence services in Europe (...) The argument makes sense: If terrorists are forming cross-border networks, then governments must do the same to fight terrorists. Nevertheless, cooperation among security agencies in Europe remains rudimentary. Spiegel

Cyber Command Gets 'First Wartime Assignment' in Fight against ISIS

The U.S. Defense Department's relatively new Cyber Command has received its "first wartime assignment" in the fight against the Islamic State, the Pentagon's top civilian said. Defense Secretary Ashton Carter made the statement during a question-and-answer session after a speech Tuesday at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a defense think tank in Washington, D.C. (...) His remarks about Cyber Command, which was created in 2009 and is based at Fort Meade in Maryland, came in response to a question posed by John Hamre, the president and chief executive officer of the center and a former Pentagon comptroller and deputy defense secretary. Hamre said, "Any future war we fight will probably begin in the cyber space, really. How do you see that we integrate the physical fight that's kind of led and planned and coordinated by regional combatant commanders with a Cyber Command? How is that going to work?" Military.com

FBI: It's 'simply too early' to say whether anything valuable is on the San Bernardino iPhone

After a protracted and very public dispute between the FBI and Apple, federal authorities said last week that investigators were able to access a locked iPhone used by one of the San Bernardino attackers. So what have they actually found? It's too soon to say, according to the FBI's top lawyer (...) Baker said investigators had obtained data from the phone. He also hinted it was possible that the bureau may never reveal the phone's contents, saying that the FBI will make a decision on what to disclose only after they finish analyzing the iPhone's data. Washington Post

Boston Marathon Security: 5,000 Cops, No Drones or Backpacks

Public safety officials have outlined a tight security plan for the Boston Marathon three years after two bombs inside backpacks exploded near the finish line. Authorities said during a news conference Wednesday that there will be up to 5,000 law enforcement officers, enhanced checkpoints and dozens of surveillance cameras along the 26.2-mile route on April 18. The special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston division says officials aren't aware of specific threat against the marathon. Special agent Hank Shaw says officials are incorporating lessons learned from attacks in Paris, Brussels and San Bernardino, California, into the marathon security plan. Associated Press (ABC News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Stewart Bell

Montreal youth gets 2 years for terrorism.

La Presse

Peine maximale pour un ado montréalais qui voulait rejoindre l'EI <http://bit.ly/23hy8Hm>

CBC News Alerts

#Montreal teen gets 2 yrs custody, 1 yr probation for 2 terror-related offences. Robbed store to raise money to go to Mideast to join #ISIS.

CBC News Alerts

#Montreal teen gets 2 yrs custody, 1 yr probation for 2 terror-related offences. Robbed store to raise money to go to Mideast to join #ISIS.

Ray Boisvert ISECIS

New era in war fighting begins, as the next war will indeed "begin in cyber", see how Cyber Command takes on ISIS: <http://www.military.com/daily-news/2016/04/05/cyber-command-gets-first-wartime-assignment-in-fight-isis.html> ...

Ray Boisvert ISECIS

Important work by our DRDC: Canada Is Experimenting on Intelligence Analysts to Beat 'Information Overload' http://motherboard.vice.com/en_ca/read/canada-is-experimenting-on-intelligence-analysts-to-beat-information-overload ...

CBC News Alerts

#JustinTrudeau avoids direct answer on whether bank fined $1.1M by anti-#moneylaundering agency should be named. <http://cbc.ca/1.3522013>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

La Presse

Agence des services frontaliers: un employé québécois arrêté <http://bit.ly/1UW4lxq>

Halifax Police

CBSA employee Carie Willis charged w/ sex assault/breach of trust/extortion re 2003 incidents as immigration officer <http://ow.ly/10m2qd>

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

iPolitics

Public Safety, RCMP saying little about WhatsApp encryption | iPolitics <http://ift.tt/1Wcys8e>

Amanda Connolly

Public Safety, RCMP saying little about WhatsApp encryption #cdnpoli #encryption <http://ipolitics.ca/2016/04/06/public-safety-rcmp-saying-little-about-whatsapp-encryption/> ...

TorontoStar

#@&5!? WhatsApp launches full encryption on all platforms. on.thestar.com/1qrrSyT

CBC Canadian News

Companies can — and may — brick your connected devices at any time <http://ift.tt/23gd0Bc>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Toronto Star

Detainees from Toronto G20 summit win right to sue via class actions <http://on.thestar.com/1oCqLBI> #topstories

CBC Canadian News

Court to rule on G20 'kettling' class action against Toronto police <http://ift.tt/1SApWdl>

Kim Bolan

The violence continues in Surrey <http://vancouversun.com/news/staff-blogs/the-violence-continues-in-surrey/> ...

CBC News Alerts

#Alberta #RCMP accused of breaking facial bones of First Nations man during arrest: <http://cbc.ca/1.3521620>
#Siksika

CKNW

#NorthVancouver RCMP investigating fatal house fire, 2000-BI Wembley Dr, 61yr man, 1030am Tuesday. Arson not ruled out.

CTV News

Criminal investigation underway after RCMP officer killed in B.C. crash <http://ow.ly/10kTpb>

CBC News Alerts

B.C. #RCMP say driver in custody after Mountie killed near #Victoria in early morning crash: <http://cbc.ca/1.3521471>

NYPD In Memoriam

The #NYPD sends condolences to the members of @bcRCMP and to the friends and family of Constable Sarah Beckett #RCMP

RCMP Nova Scotia

charges being laid in weapons incident near Millwood High yesterday #RCMPNS @HfxRegPolice <http://ow.ly/10mISD>

Natasha Pace

#RCMP say having extra police at #Millwood High is meant to provide reassurance to students, staff & parents

Connie Walker

RCMP release new images of missing woman Lorlene Bone in an attempt to help find her <http://ctv.news/88vSane>
#MMIW

La Presse

Cannabis: un employé de la GRC voit son licenciement annulé <http://bit.ly/23geH1G>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

EVA BC

Sexual-assault task force calling for anon reporting system on campuses <http://fw.to/Y02wYfl> EVA BC's excited to be a part of this work!

Jessica Prince

Shout-out to Heidi @CRCVC for telling Min. @Puglaas about Caber, a BC dog helping victims of crime: <http://deltapolice.ca/media-releases/2015/05/delta-police-trauma-k9-caber-makes-courthouse-history-b-c/> ...
@DPVictimService

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

UN Women

Racism & colonialism are root causes of violence agnst Indigenous women in Canada- @Melina_MLM <http://ow.ly/10fYBC> @WomenintheWorld #mmiw

OTHER / AUTRES

Craig Forcese

Arms deal by Canadian firm violated international embargo: UN report <http://fw.to/QOB4IzC>

INTERNATIONAL

AFP News Agency

Brussels attacks a security failure, but Belgium not a failed state: PM <http://u.afp.com/ZBSK>

CBC News Alerts

One of #ISIS #suicidebombers who killed 32 in #Brussels March 22 worked as a cleaner in the European Parliament 6 years earlier, EU says.

CBC News Alerts

#WhiteHouse to redirect $589M in unused funds to fight/protect against #ZikaVirus. Urges Congress to authorize $1.8B in emergency spending.

Washington Post

White House to spend $589M in Ebola funds to fight Zika <http://wapo.st/1N8NAMA>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
April 6, 2016 / le 6 avril 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS |
ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET
ASSASSINÉES

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Public Safety, RCMP saying little about WhatsApp encryption

The Liberal government and the RCMP are saying little about whether they are concerned by the move by social messenger WhatsApp to encrypt its full spectrum of communication services, and how they think that will affect the ability of Canadian security agencies to monitor plots. WhatsApp, which has roughly one billion users around the world, announced Tuesday it is switching on end-to-end encryption for every single text, photo, video, phone call and file its users send. The company had partially encrypted its services in 2014 but the move towards full spectrum encryption is being touted as a major step forward for those who argue that only the person who sent the message and the intended recipient should be able to read it, and that law enforcement officials should not be able to access communications through so-called back door channels. Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale's office did not comment specifically on the issue, instead emailing the same statement it released when the FBI asked Apple to unlock the iPhone of one of the San Bernardino shooters. iPolitics

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Search underway in western Labrador for missing snowmobiler

A ground search is underway in western Labrador for an overdue snowmobiler. The Royal Newfoundland Constabulary issued a news release Wednesday, saying Edward Power, 39, failed to return from a trip to the Shabogamo area Tuesday evening. Police and the Labrador West Ground Search and Rescue team are involved in the search. CBC News

Warm spring forecast not good news for N.W.T. firefighters

Environment Canada is predicting a warmer-than-average spring for the Northwest Territories, and that coming on the heels of a warm winter could mean yet another bad fire season this summer - the territory's third in a row. Senior Climatologist David Phillips says the territory is coming off a warm winter thanks to El Niño, and moisture levels in the soil are low. "Our models are suggesting across the Northwest Territories, for the last part of April and into May and then following it, we look like warmer-than-normal conditions. Which is probably not good news for forest firefighters," he said. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

EU-Canada deal to share air travelers' data raises privacy fears

An agreement between the European Union and Canada to share airline passenger data that they say is key to fighting terrorism drew tough scrutiny at an EU court hearing on Tuesday because of privacy concerns. The dispute over the retention and sharing of passenger name records (PNR) has become a shibboleth in Brussels for the debate over balancing people's privacy with the need to protect against terrorism. The agreement with Canada foresees the retention and sharing with Canadian authorities of airline passenger data by carriers operating flights between the EU and Canada. The Luxembourg-based Court of Justice of the European Union (ECJ) heard arguments for and against the agreement at a six-hour proceeding. "We ... know that these crimes do not respect borders," said D. Fennelly, a lawyer for Ireland. "The European Union cannot and should not act in splendid isolation. "Islamist militant attacks in Paris last year and last month's attacks in Brussels have stoked calls for law enforcement agencies to have easier access to people's data. Ireland, France, Britain, Spain and Estonia, who intervened in the case, emphasized that PNR do not allow investigators to paint a detailed picture of someone's private life. But the European Parliament and privacy advocates cast doubt on that assertion. Business News Network (Reuters Canada)

Montreal teen gets three-year sentence for terror-related offences

A Montreal teen convicted on two terrorism-related charges has been handed a three-year sentence. He was found guilty in December on two charges: committing a robbery in association with a terror organization and planning to leave Canada to participate in the activities of a terrorist group abroad – the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant. Despite some concerns, youth court Judge Dominique Wilhelmy agreed to a joint suggestion of 24 months of supervised detention, comprised of 16 months behind bars and eight months in the community. That is to be followed by 12 months probation. The case stems from an October 2014 convenience store robbery linked to the accused's plan to go to Syria to take part in the conflict there. Reports filed by experts suggest the teen, who cannot be named, has made strides to break free of radical thought. His father told the court his son has changed a lot in the past year. Globe and Mail; CBC News; CTV News; Journal de Montreal

The danger of preventive counter-terrorism powers

Kevin Omar Mohamed was arrested as a terrorist last month — but not, as one might expect, for an act of terrorism already committed. Instead, the arrest was initially described by police as “preventive,” based on a “fear” that Mohamed might engage in terrorism abroad; according to the police's own statement, “there was no indication of any plans for a domestic attack.” Even before being charged with any terrorism offence (as he eventually was), Mohamed was publicly branded a terrorist. His name and his face were broadcast on prime-time news as a "terror arrest," all on the strength of a "fear." In the Kafkaesque world of preventive counter-terrorism, one can be treated like a criminal without actually being accused of any crime. Canadian law criminalizes a sweeping range of actions as terrorism offences, including preliminary steps only remotely connected to actual violence. But even those who have not been charged with any crime may be arrested and detained, their freedom abrogated not for what they have done in the past but for what the state thinks they might do in the future. Canada's already-problematic regime of preventive arrest and detention was exacerbated by Bill C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015. Bill C-51 more than doubled the maximum time permitted for preventive detention (from three days to seven), while lowering the threshold for preventive arrest. Individuals may now be arrested if police believe that a terrorist activity may (not will) be carried out, and that arrest is likely (not necessary) to prevent it. Daily News

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Canada Border Services agent arrested for sexual assault, extortion

A Canadian border agent arrested in Montreal last week has been charged with sexual assault, breach of trust and extortion related to his work in Dartmouth, N.S., more than a decade ago. The man, 55, is accused of using his position as a Canada Border Services Agency employee to extort a woman facing deportation. The accusations date to 2003, but the complaint was made to Halifax police in November 2014. Halifax Regional Police Cst. Dianne Woodworth said police started investigating then. "Based on the investigation, it's alleged the CBSA employee used his position of authority as an immigration officer over a then 26-year-old woman, who was scheduled to be deported in June 2003, by extorting and sexually assaulting her on more than one occasion in Dartmouth that same year," she said in a news release. CBC News, Global News, CTV News, Canadian Press (Times Colonist, Metro News, 680 News), The Coast, Presse canadienne (La Presse), Kelowna Now

Battle Creek man was following GPS instructions

An American who crossed the international border at Sarnia in a stolen vehicle while under the influence of alcohol was fined in Sarnia court Tuesday. Timothy Crane, 23, of Battle Creek, Mich., pleaded guilty to the March 30 charge of drunk driving, along with possession of a stolen car, electronics and a wallet. Court was told that at approximately seven o'clock that morning Crane inadvertently entered Canada at the Blue Water Bridge while following GPS instructions. Crane failed a roadside breath test by a Canada Border Services Agency officer, who was alerted by an odour of alcohol. Subsequent breath tests showed the American's blood alcohol level was one-and-a-quarter times the legal limit. It was also found that Crane was driving a car reported as stolen in Battle Creek. Stolen property, including a tablet, a laptop, a GPS and the vehicle owner's wallet, were in the car. It seems to be fairly common for Americans to find themselves unknowingly on the Blue Water Bridge, said Justice Jonathon George. Sarnia Observer

City of Vancouver considers access without fear

A plan to offer sanctuary to Vancouver residents who are afraid of detention or deportation on the basis of their immigration status is slated for public hearing Wednesday morning. Staff have asked councillors to approve their plan to provide "Access to City Services Without Fear," and to encourage police, library services and the park board to follow suit. As previously reported by Postmedia, the proposed policy would mean that city staff would not ask for the immigration status of residents or provide it to other public institutions unless required by law. The policy would only apply to services provided by the city, and not to civic services provided by police, parks and libraries, which are all governed by individual boards. It would also not cover the agencies of other governments that are active in the city. For that reason, the city has shied away from the term "sanctuary city," which is used by dozens of municipalities around North America with similar policies already in place. The push to offer sanctuary in Vancouver to undocumented individuals and those with uncertain immigration status came after the 2013 death of Mexican national Lucia Vega Jiménez. Jiménez had been picked up by TransLink police for a transit violation and later hung herself in a Canada Border Services Agency holding cell at Vancouver International Airport while awaiting deportation. Vancouver Sun (The Province)

Estranged wife: Rupeka, girlfriend dead in Tijuana motel

Self-styled police watchdog Adam Rupeka and his girlfriend Jennifer Ogburn, who both faced misdemeanor sex abuse charges, died of apparent drug overdoses in a motel room in Mexico, Rupeka's estranged wife told the Times Union Wednesday morning. Rebecca Rupeka said she was called by U.S. consulate officials on Monday who told her that Rupeka died Sunday at the motel and Ogburn died Monday in a Tijuana hospital. (...)The couple had said on social media that they had fled to Canada. Each posted $5,000 bail to get out of the Rensselaer County Jail on March 26 after Troy police charged them with misdemeanor counts of endangering the welfare of a child, sexual abuse and forcible touching. (...)A day later, Rupeka posted a video showing snow and a body of water and spoke about crossing the Canadian border. Rupeka did not appear in that video, and it was unclear where and when the video was made. Times Union

Dans ma valise, un drone

Pour un nombre grandissant de voyageurs, le drone est devenu un compagnon d'exploration essentiel : c'est grâce à lui qu'ils captent toutes ces photos et vidéos aériennes, nouvelles coqueluches des médias sociaux. Survol du phénomène, de vidéos à faire rêver et de conseils de pros, à l'heure où la réglementation des divers pays est en pleine mutation. (...) Premier écueil qui guette les dronistes touristes : peuvent-ils emporter leur drone à bord d'un avion ? La réponse est oui, en général, « mais il vaut mieux s'informer chaque fois au préalable auprès de la compagnie aérienne », explique Maxime Contour, blogueur français spécialisé en vidéos de voyage. (...) Maxime Contour ajoute : « Pour éviter toute confusion aux douanes, j'ai toujours en main une copie imprimée des règles de l'IATA (International Air Transport Association) concernant le transport des batteries. » Air Canada, Air France et Air Transat se conforment à cette réglementation : les batteries doivent accompagner le passager en cabine et ne doivent pas dépasser 2 g de lithium. Si leur énergie se situe en deçà de 100 Wh, aucune permission ne doit être demandée au préalable. La Presse

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

A Canadian border agent arrested in Montreal last week has been charged with sexual assault, breach of trust and extortion related to his work in Dartmouth, N.S., more than a decade ago. (CBC Radio One, 13h02 ET)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Canadian law firms a 'sweet spot' for attack, says intelligence expert

Canadian lawyers are among those in the global legal community who may be looking closer at their information security procedures after the revelation of a massive hack of international documents from a Panamanian law firm. They ought to, according to an Ontario cybersecurity lawyer (...) Because they hold sensitive corporate and personal information law firms are logical targets of attackers. However Ray Boisvert, a former assistant director of intelligence at the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) and now president of the advisory firm I-Sec Integrated Strategies, said in an interview they may not appreciate what they hold. "Sometimes organizations, law firms, some government relations firms and lobbyists and others don't always recognize how valuable their information assets are," he said. "I think they see their role and quality and value as provisioners of advice — and that's true — but they also have great repositories for stuff." In this country attention on cybersecurity has mainly been focused on organizations related to critical infrastructure — banks, utilities, governments and law enforcement agencies, and transportation companies. IT World Canada

Why WhatsApp's Encryption Embrace Is a Landmark Event

The news that Facebook's WhatsApp now supports encryption across all its apps is nothing short of seismic. There have always been those who were keen on using encrypted communications — politicians trying to avoid the gaze of their rivals and foreign spies, corporate executives trying to protect their trade secrets, activists trying to organize opposition to oppressive regimes and, yes, criminals trying to evade law enforcement. But, in the big picture, these are fringe cases. Before Edward Snowden told the world about the extent of state surveillance in 2013, few "normal" people were interested in adding heavy protections to their communications. Soon, over a billion of them will be using this facility without even trying. Fortune; Washington Post (Toronto Star)

Locky Ransomware Morphs as Spam Attacks Spike

Locky, an emerging ransomware threat that first burst on the scene in February, has already started to mutate and morph into new variants. The changes come just as researchers observe a fresh spike in propagation. Locky is distributed via email attachments, specifically Word documents disguised as invoices. The docs contain macros which download and install the ransomware. When originally discovered, the botnet behind the spam mail was found to be the same as that which delivers the majority of emails containing the infamous Dridex trojan. Locky is also spread via exploit kits. Infosecurity Magazine

Nest disables smart home device, triggers IoT security concerns

Internet of Things (IoT) thermostat company Nest will disable the company's smart home product Revolv on May 15, sparking concerns over the future security of the IoT devices. The decision to disable the $299 device was announced by Revolv founders Tim Enwall and Mike Soucie on Revolv's website. The founders will re-focus on building Works with Nest, a platform of compatible devices that integrate into the Nest system. "Unfortunately, that means we can't allocate resources to Revolv anymore and we have to shut down the service." SC Magazine; CBC News

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Condolences for Mountie Sarah Beckett pouring in

As condolences pour in for the Mountie killed in a collision yesterday near Victoria, the RCMP says it is talking with her family about plans for a possible public memorial. Const. Sarah Beckett died early Tuesday morning when her police cruiser was in a collision with a pick-up truck in the Victoria suburb of Langford. Beckett, an 11-year member of the force who spent her entire career on Vancouver Island, is survived by her husband and two young children. The popular officer's death has triggered an outpouring of condolences on social media, including a message from the prime minister. CBC News; Vancouver Sun

'They treated him worse than an animal': RCMP allegedly beat man while he was naked and handcuffed

Police continued to beat Christian Duckchief long after he was on the floor and handcuffed, his fiancée says — until his orbital bone, cheek and nose were all fractured. Chantel Stonechild said Duckchief, 23, was dragged from the house, naked. "They treated him worse than an animal," she said. Duckchief and Stonechild were asleep, in bed in her Siksika Nation home, when Gleichen RCMP came for him Friday morning — Stonechild believes their eight-year-old daughter let the Mounties in. She woke up to Duckchief struggling with an officer on top of him. Duckchief's lawyer said his client didn't know what was happening. "Somebody jumped him on the bed and woke him up out of his sleep, grabbing his arms," Dale Fedorchuk said. Postmedia News (National Post)

Surrey RCMP station hit by bullet, say police

The Guildford Community Police Station may have been hit by a bullet. Mounties say a maintenance worker discovered a hole in a window on the north side of the station located at 10395 148 St. on Tuesday. "Police are currently examining the area and have found evidence consistent with a bullet causing the damage. The hole is about the size of a quarter," said a statement released by police "The damage does not appear recent and it is not known when this incident occurred. There are no witnesses or suspects at this point." CBC News; Times Colonist

Kamloops RCMP introduces new media relations officer

The Kamloops RCMP introduced a new media relations officer on Wednesday morning. Cpl. Jodi Shelkie will officially take over the role on Monday, April 11. "With 19 years of service in the RCMP, we are very fortunate to have Cpl. Shelkie's experience and background," said Supt. Brad Mueller. Prior to coming to Kamloops, Shelkie worked as a media relations officer in Fort St. John. Current media relations officer.

Cpl. Cheryl Bush, will be working alongside Shelkie throughout the remainder of this week before returning to general duties in a supervisory capacity. Kamloops BC Now; CFJC Today

Family of beaten N.W.T. woman upset she flew solo to Edmonton for treatment

The mother of a woman who was brutally attacked in Tuktoyaktuk, N.W.T., last week says health staff allowed her daughter to fly unescorted to Edmonton for medical treatment. Crystal Kudlak's family says she was beaten in the head by someone she knows and was flown out for medical treatment last week. Now they're trying to raise money so Kudlak's mother can be by her side in an Edmonton hospital, as she undergoes plastic surgery to repair her face. "I was so upset," Emma Green, Kudlak's mother said from her home in Paulatuk. "I couldn't believe what was happening to her."... RCMP say they won't comment about the case, but confirm an incident happened with a woman in the community early in the morning on March 31. They said the woman was medevaced out of the community, but they did not know where. Police also confirm a man was arrested, but say he has not been charged. RCMP would not say if the incident on March 31 was related to the fundraising efforts by Kudlak's family. CBC News

Fraud Case Takes Grim Turn

A Fort McMurray woman under investigation after thousands of dollars were stolen from a memorial fund for a widow and her two children has been found murdered in British Columbia. Discovered last month The burned body of Vikki Heppner, 28, was found near a service road by Stave Lake, located approximately 40 kilometers north of Mission, B.C., on March 29. Heppner's body was discovered by someone driving through the area. Police are not releasing the woman's identity pending an autopsy, but CTV Vancouver has identified Heppner as the victim. Heppner's mother in Clifton, Ill., confirmed to the station that police had identified her daughter as the victim. Her mother said Heppner had left Fort McMurray after the alleged theft was made public last fall.

Police have charged Ryan Jack Armstrong, 29, with second-degree murder and indignity to a body. Investigators say the two knew each other at the time of the murder. "Our early investigative theory supports this as a targeted homicide and it is believed that the victim and suspect were known to each other," police in B.C. said. "An important piece to this investigation was the support of the public who came forward with information that has aided in the rapid progression from initial investigation to charge approval." Last fall, Wood Buffalo RCMP began investigating Heppner after money for the family of Roger Belanger was withdrawn from an online fundraiser. Belanger, a 29-year-old man from Sudbury, Ont., died in a car crash near London, Ont. on July 28, 2015. Edmonton Sun, A3

4e fusillade à Surrey en 4 jours

La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) a ouvert une enquête après une nouvelle fusillade ciblée survenue à Surrey mardi soir vers 23 h 10, la quatrième en quatre jours. À leur arrivée sur place, les policiers ont pris en charge un homme blessé par balle qui a été transporté à l'hôpital dans un état de santé stable. Un autre homme, décrit comme ayant la peau foncée et conduisant un VUS, a été vu quittant les lieux rapidement après l'incident. La police a également remorqué une berline blanche qui se trouvait à l'endroit des tirs. La zone a été fermée plusieurs heures, tôt mercredi matin, pour que la police puisse poser des questions aux résidents du quartier. Il s'agit de la 32e fusillade à Surrey depuis le début de l'année 2016. Radio-Canada; Vancouver Sun

Toronto family doctor among arrests in fentanyl trafficking ring

A doctor who runs a family practice in Toronto is among several people who've been arrested in what police allege was a fentanyl trafficking ring. York region police said they began an investigation in October when fentanyl patches were being illegally obtained and transported to the Sudbury area to be sold. Investigators allege that two individuals, one of whom is Dr. George Otto, who runs a practice in Toronto, were working with street-level fentanyl dealers to obtain and distribute the fentanyl patches. Police allege the patches were sold at a street value of about $400 to $500 per patch. As a result of the investigation, police have seized nearly 300 fentanyl patches, more than $50,000 in cash, as well as prescription notes and documents. CTV News; Metro News

Detainees from Toronto G20 summit win right to sue via class actions

More than 1,000 people detained during the chaotic G20 summit almost six years ago won the right Wednesday to go the class-action route in lawsuits against police and others. In approving the class-action process, Ontario's top court said various reports on the events to date had made only non-binding recommendations. "The remedies sought by the plaintiffs, which include a declaration that class members' charter rights have been violated and an award of damages, would be stronger instruments of behaviour modification," the Court of Appeal said in its decision. The G20 summit over a weekend in June 2010 _ marred by vandalism from several dozen protesters _ saw more than 1,000 people arrested or detained in what was later described as one of the worst violations of civil liberties in Canadian history. Many were kept in appalling conditions at a makeshift detention centre. Almost all were released without charge within 24 hours. Canadian Press \(Global News\)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reported on allegations of police brutality during an RCMP-led arrest on the Siksika First Nation south of Calgary. Rough Transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Heroin, marijuana seized at Millhaven Institution

On March 29 at about 5:30 p.m., correctional officers at Millhaven Institution, a maximum-security federal institution, intercepted an inmate who was attempting to bring contraband into the institution. The seizure is the result of the combined efforts of correction officers, the detector-dog team and security intelligence officers. The contraband seized includes 6.2 grams of heroin and 15.7 grams of marijuana. The total institutional value is estimated at $7,000. Police have been notified and the institution is investigating. CSC say they use a number of tools to prevent drugs from entering institutions, including ion scanners and drug-detector dogs to search buildings, personal property, inmates and visitors. CSC has set up a telephone tip line for all federal institutions to receive additional information about activities relating to security at CSC institutions. These activities may be related to drug use or trafficking that may threaten the safety and security of visitors, inmates and staff members working at CSC institutions. Kingston Region

Appeal decision for convicted killer expected today

An appeal decision is expected to come down today on the second-degree murder conviction of a Medicine Hat woman found guilty of the 2011 homicide of Casey Armstrong. Armstrong was found dead from stab wounds in his Southview Drive home on May 22, 2011. In January 2012, city police announced that two women were charged with first-degree murder in connection with the Armstrong homicide. (...) The second woman, Connie Oakes, was convicted by a city jury following a two-week second-degree murder trial in November 2013 and was subsequently sentenced in 2014 to life in prison with no eligibility for parole for 14 years. Oakes's appeal was filed within the 30-day appeal period following her sentencing. Medicine Hat News

Mafia murder suspected

Laval Multisports parking lot was the scene of a deadly shooting, at around 7:40 a.m., March 1. Sûreté du Québec took over the investigation, suspecting that the murder could be linked to organized crime. The victim, a 52-year-old man, could be Lorenzo Giordano, a high-profile member of the Rizzuto clan. Doctors pronounced him dead upon arrival at the hospital. Giordano was arrested during the Colisée investigation in 2006, which targeted the Mafia. He was sent to jail for 15 years and had been out on parole in a transition house since last December, after serving two-thirds of his sentence. The Suburban

My friend Kinew

A letter to the editor from Nicole Kish, an inmate currently serving a life sentence, states, "You recently published an article about systemic discrimination against Indigenous people in Canada. The article touched my heart and the hearts of many of the women at the Grand Valley Institution for Women, where I am imprisoned. The words resonated with us as truths we are not allowed to understand. When I read the comparison of prisons to "new residential schools," I felt validated. We make this comparison inside all the time. We feel deeply concerned with many of the current practices in Canadian judicial and prison systems. We know they represent horrors because we experience those horrors. (...) I had the feeling that Kinew wouldn't get out of here alive, but when I said it, it was not because I wanted it to happen. I wondered how human beings could be so callous to one another, how the guards could not see the violence that they were enacting in their positions. I was witnessing the dynamics and effects of imprisonment on First Nations people and people with mental illness from a maximum security unit, the units where the most harm in the Canadian prison system occur. I have wondered, over the years, when harming people and abandoning them to prisons became okay. I wonder why so little is known about our prison system and I wonder when it stopped being about rehabilitation. It is such a cold and violent system, with intense potential for irreversible harm." Maclean's

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Injecting common painkiller an alternative to heroin, Vancouver study finds

Drug addicts who inject themselves with a commonly prescribed painkiller can't tell the difference between it and medically prescribed heroin, a Vancouver-based study released today has found. The finding, published in the Journal of the American Medical Association's JAMA Psychiatry, could open the way to prescribing hydromorphone to people who have been unable to quit street drugs by using methadone or suboxone, the only two legal opiate substitutes in Canada. Addictions researcher Eugenia Oviedo-Joekes headed SALOME - the Study to Assess Longer-term Opioid Medication Effectiveness - at Providence Health Care's Crosstown Clinic on Hastings Street in the heart of the Downtown Eastside. While methadone taken daily in liquid form is effective for most people who want to quit opioids, it doesn't work for at least 10 per cent of the chronically addicted, she says. "There is an important minority of people who we have nothing to offer," said Oviedo-Joekes in a telephone interview. "The majority of them have been injecting for 15 to 20 years. These are people with very few resources in any area of their lives." SALOME recruited 202 heroin users who had a documented drug addiction for at least five years. Participants were randomly divided into two groups and given syringes filled with pharmaceutically prepared hydromorphone, the opioid pain medication sold under the brand name Dilaudid, or diacetylmorphine, the active ingredient in heroin. Neither the patient nor the health care worker handing out the syringes knew which drug they contained. Vancouver Sun

Woodstock and Brantford Police Services partner on human trafficking investigation

Woodstock and Brantford Police Services recently partnered on a joint investigation into human trafficking. Nine women in the sex trade in both communities were contacted by police and offered assistance at the end of last month, Woodstock Police said in a media release. All of these women "appeared to be working independently and not being controlled," police said. None of them wished to accept police help at that time. But investigators believe that one of the women they spoke with was a victim of human trafficking and an investigation is ongoing. Woodstock Sentinel Review (2016-04-05)

Overall crime down again in Cornwall in 2015, says police chief

Crime is down overall in the Seaway City. That's according to Cornwall Community Police Service Chief Dan Parkinson, who presented year-end statistics for 2015 to the Cornwall Police Services Board at city hall Wednesday (April 6). "The numbers reflect an ongoing trend going downwards in the total amount of crime happening in this city," Parkinson told Seaway News in an interview. According to the report, drug violations were down 26.73 per cent (27 incidents) in 2015 compared to the same time period in 2014, while violent crimes were down 5.8 per cent (48 incidents), and the offence type category 'other crimes' dropped 3.6 per cent (28 incidents). He said the lower crime rate is the result of a number of factors. Cornwall Seaway News

Measure of Harm for Crime Needs to Be Adopted

A "menu of harm" that measures crime according to the price of damage inflicted on victims – rather than counting crimes as if they are all of equal seriousness – needs to be adopted worldwide to focus police resources on the worst criminal acts, say leading University of Cambridge criminologists. "Not all crimes are created equal. Counting them as if they are fosters distortion of risk and accountability," said Professor Sherman, Director of the Cambridge Institute and Honorary President of the 2,000-member Society of Evidence-Based Policing. "If shoplifting drops while murder triples, crime is reported as 'down'

– yet any common sense view of public safety cries out for some adjustment for seriousness.”
(...) Sherman, Neyroud and colleagues have devised the Cambridge Crime Harm Index (CHI), which they describe as essentially a crime version of the cost-of-living index – a classification system weighted by, in this case, the likely impact of an offence on victims. (...) Sherman believes that adoption of the Cambridge CHI would help make optimal use of scarce resources through more targeted policing, which could, in turn, reduce prison populations. Net News Ledger

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

Someone knows something, says author of book on northwestern B.C. murders

Ray Michalko would never have predicted that putting an ad in a northern B.C. paper in 2006 would end up with him writing a book 10 years later. Obstruction of Justice details the private investigator's probing into the numbers of the missing and murdered women along the Highway of Tears, a name given to the 722 km stretch of Hwy 16 between Prince Rupert and Prince George. "I think it's going to make people aware about a lot of things and I've tried not to be judgemental but present the information or facts and let readers make up their minds about the whole thing," he says about what he hopes the book will accomplish. "I'm sure it'll generate more calls for me," said the former police officer who lives on the Lower Mainland. When Michalko began his search way back in early 2006, seven women were missing or had been found murdered along the highway, which grew to nine – the number Michalko talks about in his book – then jumped to 18 when the RCMP decided to add more cases, some from Alberta and some from further south in B.C., saying they were related. Terrace Standard

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

How to do drugs right: go Dutch?

Should you find yourself in Amsterdam, cycling along the city's complex latticework of bike paths, be wary along the canals. It is not uncommon for reckless cyclists to accidentally veer into the water. By the city's estimates, between 12,000 and 15,000 bicycles are dredged out of the canals each year. It would seem that installing some rudimentary barrier or guardrail along all the canals may prevent such wanton loss of property. But such modest precautions seem antithetical to Amsterdam's spirit—they're patronizing and nanny-ish in a city where it's the individual's duty conduct him- or herself non-moronically, and not the duty of civic leaders to prevent anyone from doing so. It's a notion also at work in Amsterdam's tourist-heavy Centrum neighbourhood, with its famous coffeeshops (read: cannabis cafés) and their twinkling, visibly toasted customers, and shops selling knockoff Bob Marley posters and hand-blown glassware. In the Netherlands, the sale of cannabis is technically illegal "but not punishable." Despite being something of a pot mecca, cannabis is only decriminalized de facto. That should soon put the country behind Canada when it comes to marijuana laws. Already, the changes to medical marijuana laws have seen a proliferation of not-quite-illegal dispensaries in Toronto, Vancouver and cities coast to coast, all of which seem to operate on the assumption that the cops won't bother to shut them down with pot legalization seeming imminent. While ostensibly dispensing only medical marijuana, many sport the aesthetic of the head shops of old, suggesting they might want to appeal to more than people struggling with, say, glaucoma or chronic pain; a few are part of a breed of designer stores selling marijuana in apothecary-chic settings. With a change coming in the law for recreational use, some leaders, including Tom Mulcair, have called for an end to marijuana arrests in the meantime. Maclean's

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Europe Under Siege

As the list of deadly attacks grows longer, Europe's great cities have had to improvise an iconography of grief and wariness. A visitor arriving in Brussels last week, days after bombs at the airport and in the metro killed 32 people, was struck not so much by fear as by déjà vu. It was so much like Paris after the Charlie Hebdo murders. These things have a shape and a rhythm to them now. At the Bourse, the Belgian capital's stately old stock exchange, crowds of tourists were still laying flowers and hanging banners. Chalk inscriptions on sidewalks and on the building itself bore messages of hope or sadness or helpless banality. "Just smile," said one. "It will make them angry." "Diversity is Brussels and they won't take it away from us," said another. The subways were running for only 12 hours a day, from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., under heavy security. As a train on the main line sped through Maelbeek station without stopping, floor-to-ceiling screens hid any view of the platforms. It was at Maelbeek that 14 people died in the second attack of March 22, an hour and 13 minutes after the bombs at the airport detonated. There were soldiers everywhere, usually working in pairs and carrying assault rifles. I passed two Belgian army regulars as I entered the Canadian Embassy on a cold spring afternoon, and it wasn't until later that I learned they were stationed there well before the latest attacks. "They've been there since the Thalys incident," Dan Costello, Canada's ambassador to the European Union, told me. "Oh, no-since the Verviers Ring was taken apart." It can be hard to keep up with the mayhem. Let's recap. The Thalys is a high-speed rail network that serves Brussels. On Aug. 21, 2015, a 25-year-old Moroccan, Ayoub El-Khazzani, was arrested after a man boarded the train at Brussels and began shooting and stabbing its occupants, none fatally. Four passengers, including two off-duty members of the U.S. armed forces, overpowered the assailant. Seven months earlier, on Jan. 15, 2015, Belgian police killed two men in a series of raids on houses in Verviers, in eastern Belgium, and across Brussels. The Verviers raids came eight days after gunmen in Paris killed 12 people at the Paris offices of the satirical newspaper Charlie Hebdo. Police said the suspects in the raids were connected to the so-called Islamic State terror cult and that they were on the verge of planning new attacks. Investigators later said the Verviers group's ringleader, relaying orders by telephone from Athens, was Abdelhamid Abaaoud. Abaaoud remained free long enough to help organize the massive coordinated terror attack on Paris restaurants, bars and the city's main sports stadium on Nov. 11. He died in a bloody police raid in a Paris suburb a week later. Investigators believe the driver for the November Paris attacks was Salah Abdeslam, born in 1989 in Brussels to Moroccan parents. He escaped the dragnet around Paris last autumn. Police finally caught him in Molenbeek, an inner-city Brussels neighbourhood that is home to many Moroccan and Turkish immigrants. A manhunt across two countries ended on March 18 when police, alerted by a suspiciously large pizza order, raided Abdeslam's Molenbeek flat. His capture probably spurred his associates to carry out the Brussels airport and metro bombings four days later. Maclean's

Liberal budget makes it tougher to scrutinize fate of public purse: PBO

The federal budget watchdog says the Liberal government's inaugural budget has made it more difficult for people to scrutinize public finances. The parliamentary budget office says in a new report that last month's budget failed to separate purely discretionary decisions, like new measures and changes in planning assumptions, from shifts in economic conditions, as past governments did. Budget officer Jean-Denis Frechette's report also says the Liberal decision to introduce a risk adjustment that lowered the projected budgetary balance by $6 billion a year was excessive and eroded the independence of using private-sector forecasts. CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

Brussels attacks a security failure, but Belgium not a failed state: PM

The March 22 Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS) attacks in Brussels signalled a security "failure", Belgian Prime Minister Charles Michel admitted on Wednesday (April 6), but he rejected the notion that his country was a "failed state". "When there is an attack like that of course that's a failure and nobody can deny this," he told reporters in Brussels. But, he added, "I cannot accept the idea that we're a failed state." Agence France-Presse (Straits Times)

One of Brussels bombers had worked in EU Parliament: spokesman

One of the Islamic State suicide bombers who killed 32 people in Brussels on March 22 had worked as a cleaner for a short period in the European Parliament six years earlier, a spokesman for the EU assembly said on Thursday. In 2009 and 2010, "one of the perpetrators of the Brussels terrorist attacks worked for a period of one month for a cleaning company which was contracted by the European Parliament at the time," spokesman Jaume Duch Guillot said in a statement which did not name the individual. An EU official said the person was Najim Laachraoui, a 25-year-old Belgian who prosecutors said blew himself up in the airport attack and is also suspected of making suicide vests for last November's Paris attacks in which 130 people died. Reuters

Border force warns terrorists could enter EU by abusing asylum checks

The EU's border force has warned that terrorists may have infiltrated Europe by hiding among asylum seekers, noting that two of the bombers in last November's Paris attacks arrived on the continent in a smuggling boat from Turkey. Frontex's annual risk analysis released on Tuesday, said: "The Paris attacks in November 2015 clearly demonstrated that irregular migratory flows could be used by terrorists to enter the EU." Echoing observations made five months ago, the report added: "Two of the terrorists involved in the attacks had previously irregularly entered through Leros and had been registered by the Greek authorities. They presented fraudulent Syrian documents to speed up their registration process. Guardian UK

Spying on Friends? Atmosphere of Distrust Hinders EU Anti-Terror Cooperation

The man who wants to explain the psyche of Germany's foreign intelligence service sips a cappuccino and talks about the abduction of German tourists in the Sahara Desert a few years ago (...) The French intelligence services had good sources in the region, but they had been unwilling to share their information with the Germans, so the BND decided to spy on the French to get it. This was how it came to be that the Germans spied on a government agency in a friendly country, one they treated as being among of their closest political allies. Friendly? Allied? (...) It took only a few hours after three bombs had exploded in Brussels and 35 people had been killed for politicians and experts to begin calling for better cooperation among intelligence services in Europe (...) The argument makes sense: If terrorists are forming cross-border networks, then governments must do the same to fight terrorists. Nevertheless, cooperation among security agencies in Europe remains rudimentary. Spiegel

Cyber Command Gets 'First Wartime Assignment' in Fight against ISIS

The U.S. Defense Department's relatively new Cyber Command has received its "first wartime assignment" in the fight against the Islamic State, the Pentagon's top civilian said. Defense Secretary Ashton Carter made the statement during a question-and-answer session after a speech Tuesday at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a defense think tank in Washington, D.C. (...) His remarks about Cyber Command, which was created in 2009 and is based at Fort Meade in Maryland, came in response to a question posed by John Hamre, the president and chief executive officer of the center and a former Pentagon comptroller and deputy defense secretary. Hamre said, "Any future war we fight will probably begin in the cyber space, really. How do you see that we integrate the physical fight that's kind of led and planned and coordinated by regional combatant commanders with a Cyber Command? How is that going to work?" Military.com

FBI: It's 'simply too early' to say whether anything valuable is on the San Bernardino iPhone

After a protracted and very public dispute between the FBI and Apple, federal authorities said last week that investigators were able to access a locked iPhone used by one of the San Bernardino attackers. So what have they actually found? It's too soon to say, according to the FBI's top lawyer (...) Baker said investigators had obtained data from the phone. He also hinted it was possible that the bureau may never reveal the phone's contents, saying that the FBI will make a decision on what to disclose only after they finish analyzing the iPhone's data. Washington Post

Boston Marathon Security: 5,000 Cops, No Drones or Backpacks

Public safety officials have outlined a tight security plan for the Boston Marathon three years after two bombs inside backpacks exploded near the finish line. Authorities said during a news conference Wednesday that there will be up to 5,000 law enforcement officers, enhanced checkpoints and dozens of surveillance cameras along the 26.2-mile route on April 18. The special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston division says officials aren't aware of specific threat against the marathon. Special agent Hank Shaw says officials are incorporating lessons learned from attacks in Paris, Brussels and San Bernardino, California, into the marathon security plan. Associated Press (ABC News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Stewart Bell

Montreal youth gets 2 years for terrorism.

La Presse

Peine maximale pour un ado montréalais qui voulait rejoindre l'EI <http://bit.ly/23hy8Hm>

CBC News Alerts

#Montreal teen gets 2 yrs custody, 1 yr probation for 2 terror-related offences. Robbed store to raise money to go to Mideast to join #ISIS.

CBC News Alerts

#Montreal teen gets 2 yrs custody, 1 yr probation for 2 terror-related offences. Robbed store to raise money to go to Mideast to join #ISIS.

Ray Boisvert ISECIS

New era in war fighting begins, as the next war will indeed "begin in cyber", see how Cyber Command takes on ISIS: <http://www.military.com/daily-news/2016/04/05/cyber-command-gets-first-wartime-assignment-in-fight-isis.html> ...

Ray Boisvert ISECIS

Important work by our DRDC: Canada Is Experimenting on Intelligence Analysts to Beat 'Information Overload' http://motherboard.vice.com/en_ca/read/canada-is-experimenting-on-intelligence-analysts-to-beat-information-overload ...

CBC News Alerts

#JustinTrudeau avoids direct answer on whether bank fined $1.1M by anti-#moneylaundering agency should be named. <http://cbc.ca/1.3522013>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

La Presse

Agence des services frontaliers: un employé québécois arrêté <http://bit.ly/1UW4lxq>

Halifax Police

CBSA employee Carie Willis charged w/ sex assault/breach of trust/extortion re 2003 incidents as immigration officer <http://ow.ly/10m2qd>

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

iPolitics

Public Safety, RCMP saying little about WhatsApp encryption | iPolitics <http://ift.tt/1Wcys8e>

Amanda Connolly

Public Safety, RCMP saying little about WhatsApp encryption #cdnpoli #encryption <http://ipolitics.ca/2016/04/06/public-safety-rcmp-saying-little-about-whatsapp-encryption/> ...

TorontoStar

#@&5!? WhatsApp launches full encryption on all platforms. on.thestar.com/1qrrSyT

CBC Canadian News

Companies can — and may — brick your connected devices at any time <http://ift.tt/23gd0Bc>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Toronto Star

Detainees from Toronto G20 summit win right to sue via class actions <http://on.thestar.com/1oCqLBI> #topstories

CBC Canadian News

Court to rule on G20 'kettling' class action against Toronto police <http://ift.tt/1SApWdl>

Kim Bolan

The violence continues in Surrey <http://vancouversun.com/news/staff-blogs/the-violence-continues-in-surrey/> ...

CBC News Alerts

#Alberta #RCMP accused of breaking facial bones of First Nations man during arrest: <http://cbc.ca/1.3521620>
#Siksika

CKNW

#NorthVancouver RCMP investigating fatal house fire, 2000-BI Wembley Dr, 61yr man, 1030am Tuesday. Arson not ruled out.

CTV News

Criminal investigation underway after RCMP officer killed in B.C. crash <http://ow.ly/10kTpb>

CBC News Alerts

B.C. #RCMP say driver in custody after Mountie killed near #Victoria in early morning crash: <http://cbc.ca/1.3521471>

NYPD In Memoriam

The #NYPD sends condolences to the members of @bcRCMP and to the friends and family of Constable Sarah Beckett #RCMP

RCMP Nova Scotia

charges being laid in weapons incident near Millwood High yesterday #RCMPNS @HfxRegPolice <http://ow.ly/10mISD>

Natasha Pace

#RCMP say having extra police at #Millwood High is meant to provide reassurance to students, staff & parents

Connie Walker

RCMP release new images of missing woman Lorlene Bone in an attempt to help find her <http://ctv.news/88vSane>
#MMIW

La Presse

Cannabis: un employé de la GRC voit son licenciement annulé <http://bit.ly/23geH1G>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

EVA BC

Sexual-assault task force calling for anon reporting system on campuses <http://fw.to/Y02wYfl> EVA BC's excited to be a part of this work!

Jessica Prince

Shout-out to Heidi @CRCVC for telling Min. @Puglaas about Caber, a BC dog helping victims of crime: <http://deltapolice.ca/media-releases/2015/05/delta-police-trauma-k9-caber-makes-courthouse-history-b-c/> ...
@DPVictimService

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

UN Women

Racism & colonialism are root causes of violence agnst Indigenous women in Canada- @Melina_MLM <http://ow.ly/10fYBC> @WomenintheWorld #mmiw

OTHER / AUTRES

Craig Forcese

Arms deal by Canadian firm violated international embargo: UN report <http://fw.to/QOB4lzC>

INTERNATIONAL

AFP News Agency

Brussels attacks a security failure, but Belgium not a failed state: PM <http://u.afp.com/ZBSK>

CBC News Alerts

One of #ISIS #suicidebombers who killed 32 in #Brussels March 22 worked as a cleaner in the European Parliament 6 years earlier, EU says.

CBC News Alerts

#WhiteHouse to redirect $589M in unused funds to fight/protect against #ZikaVirus. Urges Congress to authorize $1.8B in emergency spending.

Washington Post

White House to spend $589M in Ebola funds to fight Zika <http://wapo.st/1N8NAMA>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Sent to:

Today's News / Actualités
April 8, 2016 / le 8 avril 2016
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS |
ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET
ASSASSINÉES

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Freight train crashes into car in Brampton, killing one and critically injuring an elderly man

One person is dead and an 80-year-old man has been airlifted to hospital after a freight train crashed into a car at a railway crossing in Brampton, Ont. CBC News reports the elderly man who received life-threatening injuries was in the vehicle at the time of the crash. A spokesman with Peel Regional Police says the train was not carrying any hazardous materials when the collision took place just before 10:30 a.m. Canadian Press (Vancouver Province)

Nova Scotia Power crews working to fix thousands of outages after high winds - The utility says high winds and heavy rain are pushing trees onto power lines

Up to 11,000 homes and businesses started Friday without electricity due to power outages stretching from the Annapolis Valley to parts of Cape Breton. Nova Scotia Power says it is investigating the cause of the outages, which range from Coldbrook, Tatamagouche, Antigonish and Cheticamp. By 11:00 a.m., the number of outages was down to about 5,050. "We have very strong winds across the province and in some areas we also have pockets of very heavy rain," said Bev Ware, a spokeswoman for Nova Scotia Power. "The wind and a number of areas, combined with the rain, is causing trees and branches to come down onto the lines." The outages have led to some cancelled schools. The Strait Regional School Board sent students at Cape Breton Highlands Education Centre/Academy home at 9:30 a.m. Gaspereau Valley Elementary School planned to dismiss classes at 11:15 a.m. CBC News; Chronicle-Herald

Winnipeg Children's Hospital declares emergency over flu - Manitoba Nurses Union president says hospital is at 'critical capacity'

The Children's Hospital of Winnipeg is in a state of emergency as its nurses work around the clock to care for kids with the flu, Winnipeg Regional Health Authority officials say. The Manitoba Nurses Union president Sandi Mowat said the hospital, including the pediatric and neonatal units, is at "critical capacity." Nurses at the hospital have been working extra shifts, extra hours on those shifts and some have even given up their vacations to care for sick children, Mowat said. CBC News

Énergie Est: les prises d'eau potable menacées

Les prises d'eau de près de 3,2 millions de Québécois sont concernées par le projet de pipeline Énergie Est, selon un rapport de groupes écologistes publié mercredi et intitulé Énergie Est : une menace à l'eau potable. Pour arriver à ce chiffre, les environmentalistes ont analysé les 4600 km du tracé envisagé par l'entreprise TransCanada, les quelques 3000 plans d'eau traversés et les municipalités qui pourraient être touchées en cas de fuite majeure dans un cours d'eau. Sachant que lors de la fuite de la rivière Kalamazoo, en juillet 2010, la rivière a été polluée sur près de 60 km, le rapport conclut que l'eau potable de 5 millions de Canadiens (dont 3,2 millions de Québécois) est à risque. «À Kalamazoo, six ans plus tard, on trouve encore du pétrole lourd qui a coulé dans le fond de la rivière. Si ce scénario se répétait dans la région de Montréal, les prises d'eau potable qui sont dans les rivières et le fleuve pourraient être inutilisables pendant des mois, voire des années», lance Patrick Bonin de Greenpeace Canada qui a participé à l'élaboration du rapport. «Les conséquences économiques et écologiques associées à une dégradation de la qualité de l'eau dans cette région ne s'arrêteraient pas là. Les activités de plaisance et le trafic commercial sur le Saint-Laurent pourraient être touchés, voire interrompus. Les entreprises agricoles et les industries qui dépendent de l'eau provenant d'une de ces rivières pourraient aussi en souffrir», mentionne le rapport. Le Peuple Lévis

Canadian researcher's mosquito trap offers hope in fight against Zika spread

A new mosquito trap designed by a Canadian researcher is almost seven times more effective than conventional devices, according to a new study conducted in northern Guatemala, providing hope that the spread of mosquito-borne viruses such as Zika can be better controlled. Laurentian University researcher Dr. Gerardo Ulibarri has been crafting and testing mosquito traps for years. His latest is called "ovillanta." The low-cost trap, made from discarded tires and other recycled materials, has proven to be highly successful in Sayaxche, Guatemala, a region deemed at risk for viruses such as dengue, chikungunya and now Zika – all diseases carried by mosquitoes. The target is Aedes aegypti, which is known commonly as the yellow fever mosquito and is suspected of transmitting Zika, a disease attributed to rising rates of microcephaly (children born with abnormally small heads) and other serious neurological disorders, such as Guillain-Barré syndrome, which can affect anyone. The study, released Thursday, was conducted in seven neighbourhoods in Sayaxche during a 10-month period in 2015 and pitted 84 ovillantas against 84 ovitraps – one-litre bucket contraptions filled with water. During the study, ovillantas captured and destroyed 181,336 mosquito eggs, compared with 27,053 eggs eliminated by the more conventional traps, according to the study. Globe and Mail

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports a train collided with a car, killing one person, in Brampton, Ontario. Rough Transcript

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

NIL

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Windham man gets day in jail for illegally crossing US border

A Windham man was sentenced Thursday in U.S. District Court to serve one day in jail and ordered to pay a $3,000 fine for crossing from Canada into Maine illegally, according to the U.S. attorney's office. Bruce Mayberry, 55, pleaded guilty Nov. 19, 2015, to one count of failure to present himself at a border crossing, a federal misdemeanor, according to Assistant U.S. Attorney James Moore. Mayberry was stopped Oct. 29, 2015, after his red Saturn sedan triggered sensors and was seen by a U.S. Border Patrol agent driving on a field road from New Brunswick, Canada, into Maine, according to a news release issued by the U.S. attorney's office. When stopped by the agent, Mayberry admitted that he had been in a Canada a few days and had seen a dentist in the province. An officer employed by the Canadian Border Services Agency reported that Mayberry had been refused entry into Canada in 2005 as result of his criminal history, according to the release. Mayberry's criminal history was not immediately available but his previous convictions are reportedly more than 20 years old. In addition to the jail time, which he already has served, Mayberry also paid a civil penalty and a $500 fee associated with impoundment of his sedan. Bangor Daily News, Keep Me Current

New Peace Bridge customs building aims to speed truck inspections

A new $24 million U.S. Customs office and truck inspection facility on the Peace Bridge plaza should speed up processing times and help ease air pollution in the surrounding neighborhood, officials said Friday. The extensive renovations and expansion to the 65-year-old office building next to Front Park, coupled with an upgraded cargo bays that should speed up truck inspections, are part of a broader five-year improvement plan costing $186 million that now is underway at the Peace Bridge plaza. "Welcome to the 21st Century," said Sam Hoyt, the chairman of the Peace Bridge Authority during a ceremony to mark the official opening of the U.S. Customs Commercial Building. "For too long, we've been living in the previous century." The renovation work, carried out in phases over the past two years, increased the size of the building by more than 50 percent to more than 67,000 square feet of space. The high-efficiency building, which is eligible for LEED certification, is expected to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions associated with its operations by 86 percent, Hoyt said. The new building also will make it more efficient for customs officers to carry out inspections on some of the 940,000 trucks that cross the Peace Bridge each year, said Rose Hilmey, acting director of the Buffalo field office of the Customs and Border Protection Service. Buffalo News, Buffalo Business First

EU visa standoff strains allies Canada needs to pass trade deal

Could Canadians soon require a visa to travel to the European Union? It may sound crazy, but unless the Canada's visa requirements are dropped for Romanians and Bulgarians by April 12, the European Union is required to reciprocate with visa requirements of its own. Even if brinkmanship subsides and a visa war is averted, the hard feelings come at a bad time for Canada, as it tries to rally votes needed to ratify its trade deal later this year. Next Tuesday in Strasbourg, France, the EU's College of Commissioners - roughly equivalent to its executive, or cabinet, representing all 28 member states - is expected to proceed with a "delegated act," imposing a visa requirement for Canadians and Americans visiting Europe. The Europeans believe they are obligated to reciprocate when unwarranted visas are imposed on citizens of member countries. The EU set April 12 as the deadline for all countries to comply with a visa reciprocity mechanism adopted in 2014. That means Canada needs to lift its visa requirement for Romanian and Bulgarian citizens by Tuesday. The U.S. currently requires visas for citizens from five EU member states and is part of the same dispute. The issue has dragged on for years, originating with fears that as some central and eastern European countries with vulnerable migrant populations, such as the Roma, joined the EU, too many could overstay visits in North America or claim asylum. An earlier dispute between Canada and the Czech Republic was resolved in 2013. But for Romanians and Bulgarians, visa requirements remain in place. CBC News

Detroit Tigers home opener: Everything you need to know

Planning on heading to Detroit for the home opener against the New York Yankees? Here is everything you need to know before you leave. (...)Early Friday morning, there were no delays reported at the Ambassador Bridge or the Windsor-Detroit Tunnel, though that should change as the day progresses. If you're planning on crossing, leave yourself plenty of extra time. CBC News

Grey market milk substitutes could see crackdown at Canada-U.S. border

The federal government is promising the dairy industry a crackdown on surging milk substitute imports. NAFTA regulations exempt U.S. dairy producers from tariff rate quotas (TRQs) on milk protein products, giving them nearly unfettered access to the Canadian market for these products. They're used mainly to make cheese, and the dairy industry says the U.S. industry has become adept at finding and exploiting loopholes, creating a grey market that's unfair to Canadian producers. One of the most controversial issues is the use of "diafiltered" milk in cheese making. Diafiltered milk is produced when water is added to milk and then ultrafiltered, causing soluble materials such as milk sugars to be removed and non-soluble material such as milk fat to be retained, resulting in a product that's more than 85 per cent protein, and thus exempt from any import restrictions when coming from the U.S. What it is subject to are restrictions on its use in cheese making, something the Canadian dairy industry says is happening more and more, and something the federal agriculture minister conceded to the Commons agriculture committee is a growing issue. Manitoba Cooperator

Les producteurs de lait se mobilisent contre le lait diafiltré

Les Producteurs de lait de Chaudière-Appalaches ont réclamé au gouvernement fédéral qu'il règle rapidement et définitivement le problème des importations de lait diafiltré lors d'un point de presse hier à la fromagerie la Pépite d'or. Cette problématique vient du fait que le lait diafiltré provenant des États-Unis est considéré comme un ingrédient laitier lorsqu'il traverse la frontière, ce qui fait en sorte qu'aucun tarif n'est demandé à la compagnie exportatrice tandis que l'Agence canadienne d'inspection des aliments (ACIA) le considère comme du lait. Ce faisant, son utilisation pour remplacer le lait dans la fabrication de fromage n'est pas contrôlée. (...)En effet, l'importation des produits laitiers au Canada est limitée par des tarifs douaniers, un contrôle essentiel au bon fonctionnement de la gestion de l'offre, le moyen par lequel les producteurs de lait établissent le meilleur équilibre possible entre l'offre et la demande de leurs produits et qui leur permet de tirer leur revenu entièrement du marché, sans subventions. En Beauce

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Anonymous Has Lost Its Touch

An opinion piece states "This April 7 will be remembered as another sad day in the annals of hacking. Anonymous, once thought of as a sophisticated band of anarchist hackers, established its Annual Hack Israel Day, aka OPISRAEL. The yearly Cyberattack-palooza, which began in 2013, coincides with Holocaust Memorial Day. This group of loosely linked hackers who try to wreak havoc against people, corporations and nations that it deems evil is so warped in its analysis of good and evil that it chose what it considered the perfect day to inflict the most pain on Israel. Kick them while they are down, so to speak... on Holocaust Memorial Day." Observer

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP regimental funeral planned for Const. Sarah Beckett

Plans are underway for an RCMP regimental funeral for Const. Sarah Beckett, the RCMP officer who died this week in a collision in Langford, B.C. The funeral for Beckett will be held on Tuesday at the Q Centre in Colwood, according to information released by the Capital Regional District. The arena seats about 3,100 people. Yesterday, hundred of Victoria area residents lined the streets as police escorted Beckett's body to the airport so it could be flown to Vernon for tests. The return flight is due back this afternoon. There will be a second procession to escort the casket from the airport to Sands Funeral Home in Colwood home starting around 2:30 p.m. PT today. Const. Sarah Beckett died early Tuesday morning when her police cruiser was in a collision with a pick-up truck in the Victoria suburb of Langford. Beckett, an 11-year member of the force who spent her entire career on Vancouver Island, is survived by her husband and two young children. The driver of the other vehicle was arrested at the scene and released Wednesday. No charges have been laid, but police said the investigation is ongoing. CBC; Mississauga News

Winnipeg man accused of sending letter bombs faces more charges

A Winnipeg man accused of targeting his former wife and two lawyers with potentially lethal letter bombs is facing more charges in an explosion two years earlier. RCMP say Guido Amsel is accused in the detonation of an explosive device outside a home in the Rural Municipality of St. Clements northeast of Winnipeg in April 2013. Police say Amsel faces two counts of attempted murder as well as several explosives and weapons-related charges. He is already in custody waiting for a bail hearing on attempted murder and weapons charges from last summer. Telegram \(Guardian\); Winnipeg Free Press; CBC News; Global News; Brandon Sun; CTV News; Radio-Canada

Comox Valley RCMP hunt for suspect in attempted sex assault

Comox Valley RCMP are on the hunt for a man who shoved a woman to the ground early Thursday morning in an attempted sexual assault. Comox Valley RCMP Const. Rob Gardner said at about 2 a.m. on Thursday a woman was walking near the corner of Centennial Drive and Back Road when a man grabbed her and shoved her to the ground. The woman fought back causing the man to run off, police said. The man is described as Caucasian, standing 5 feet 10 inches tall, with a slight build, and pale skin. The man had dark scruffy hair, bad teeth and bad breath. At the time he was wearing jeans and a black or dark grey hoodie. Times Colonist

Brandon man faces child porn charges, police say

A Brandon man has been charged with accessing and possessing child pornography as a result of an investigation that started late last year, police said Friday. The 58-year-old was arrested on Thursday. The investigation started in October of 2015 and police executed a search warrant at the man's residence in February, Brandon police said. Officers seized computers during the raid, according to police. The man has been released on conditions and is scheduled to appear in court in June, police said. CBC

UBC warns students after man attempts to break into residence lounge

The University of British Columbia has sent a warning email to students who live on campus after a man attempted to break into a residence lounge where a female resident was studying. The incident happened Friday at 2 a.m. outside the Marine Drive Building 5 lounge, where a male was seen pressing himself against the exterior window. The man tried to enter the building but was unsuccessful, and the resident fled, said Andrew Parr, managing director of student housing and hospitality services. "She looked up from her studies, saw this individual doing what he was doing, quickly packed up and left," he said in a phone interview Saturday. RCMP and campus security were called and arrived quickly, but were unable to apprehend the man. The resident wasn't able to provide a strong description of the suspect, Parr said. "I think she was more focused on her own safety and obviously was a bit traumatized by the situation, and wanted to leave the area as quickly as possible." It's unclear whether the incident is connected to a recent series of "night prowler events" where a man was seen lurking in bathrooms and bedrooms at UBC residences, Parr said. Times Colonist, A6

RCMP post video of Saint-Quentin jewelry heist in bid to ID suspect

Surveillance video of a suspect in an armed robbery at a jewelry store in Kedgwick earlier this week is being circulated by RCMP in Saint-Quentin in the hopes someone may recognize the man. At about 10:15 a.m. on Tuesday, a man walked into the Boutique Or-Déco at 64 Notre-Dame St. The man then left with jewels worth several thousand dollars, said RCMP. The man got into the rear seat of a white, four-door sedan. There were two people in the front seat. RCMP say the suspect is between five feet, eight inches and six feet tall. The man is of average build and spoke French. The suspect was wearing jeans and either a black and grey or white plaid jacket, or a sweater with a hood. CBC

Brampton man, woman accused in sex-crime investigation

A Brampton man and woman have been accused of forcing an 18-year-old woman into prostitution, following a lengthy investigation by the Toronto police Human Trafficking Enforcement Team. Police allege the victim was lured into prostitution by a man and forced to provide sexual services. She was then "given" to another man and woman who also forced her into prostitution. In November, the woman managed to escape and contacted police. One man was arrested, and that launched the investigation, which resulted in two search warrants that were executed Wednesday, and the arrest of the two Brampton residents. Police allege photographs were taken of the victim in various stages of undress, and those photographs were posted on backpages.com, and sexual services advertised. She was allegedly forced to provide sexual services for clients in several hotels and residences in the GTA, according to police. Mississauga News

Montreal cops to investigate police shooting in Lac-Simon

Two brothers from northwestern Quebec. Two eerily similar deaths. Sandy Tarzan Michel, 25, was shot by police during an altercation on a small Algonquin reserve in Lac-Simon on Wednesday evening and later died of his injuries. Provincial police Sgt. Benoit Coutu said officers from the Lac-Simon force were responding to reports of a man allegedly brandishing a knife as he was walking in public at about 7:30 p.m. Michel was struck by a police cruiser and later shot several times for reasons that are still unclear. In 2014, the Montreal Gazette published an in-depth report on policing in the aboriginal community of Opitciwan, about three hours' drive west of Roberval, exploring the challenges of maintaining security on a reserve with a painful history and complicated relationships with its police force. Click here to read the report, which was nominated for a National Newspaper Award. As friends and relatives paid tribute to Michel on social media, they pointed to a tragic coincidence also highlighted in local media reports Thursday: the deceased's brother died in January 2009 after being shot by police in Lac-Simon as he allegedly held a knife. Gazette

Police recover gun after closing down Vimy Avenue over 'suspicious activity'

A firearm has been recovered during an ongoing investigation that had police close a St. John's street to traffic and pedestrians Friday morning. Police have closed off Vimy Avenue in St. John's after police dog services tracked two suspects to the area. The males are believed to have been carrying a gun. Several Royal Newfoundland Constabulary (RNC) cruisers were on Vimy Avenue, off Cashin Avenue, where "suspicious activity" was reported Friday morning. The RNC said in a tweet that around 10:20 a.m., police received a report of two suspicious males in the area of Ropewalk Lane who were possibly carrying a firearm. "Police Dog Services tracked the males to the area of Vimy Ave where a search is underway," the RNC wrote. A resident of the street said they saw what appeared to be a pistol. Telegram

Three Calgarians charged with use of counterfeit currency in Cochrane

Three Calgarians have been charged in connection with the recent use of counterfeit currency at local businesses in Cochrane. Mounties received multiple complaints Thursday from local businesses in the town west of Calgary of three people using fake bills. RCMP say the bills are of "poor quality" and the businesses were specifically targeted on the belief the fake money would be more easily accepted than at businesses in Calgary. When police arrived, they stopped a vehicle matching the description provided by witnesses outside a local Shoppers Drug Mart, and arrested the three occupants. A search of the vehicle turned up a counterfeit Canadian $100 bill, several counterfeit Canadian $50 bills, and three counterfeit American $20 bills. Police also seized a small amount of methamphetamine. Jason Soroichinski, 31, Gina Soroichinski, 33, and Teri Machinskini, 19, all of Calgary, were charged with possession and uttering counterfeit currency, and possession of methamphetamine. RCMP in other jurisdictions have been warning citizens to be on the lookout for counterfeit currency. Calgary Herald; Cochrane Times; Calgary Sun

More drug seizures for Her Majesty's Canadian Ships Saskatoon and Edmonton

Further to the drug seizures of March 7 and March 19, Her Majesty's Canadian Ships Saskatoon and Edmonton assisted in separate cocaine shipment "disruptions" while on patrol in the eastern Pacific Ocean on March 25, the Royal Canadian Navy says. HMCS Edmonton and its embarked United States Coast Guard Law Enforcement Detachment were assisted by United States Ship (USS) Lassen in intercepting a vessel of interest in international waters off the coast of Central America, the RCN noted. The vessel intercepted, a "panga"-style fishing boat, was identified by a maritime patrol aircraft while on routine patrol. With the help of USS Lassen's helicopter, the vessel was hailed to stop, after which it began to jettison its cargo, the navy noted. HMCS Edmonton assisted the U.S. Coast Guard detachment which seized control of the vessel and retrieved 27 bales of cocaine from the water. The bales weighed a total of 650 kilograms. The interception involving HMCS Saskatoon and its U.S. Coast Guard team began the evening of March 25 when a maritime patrol aircraft conducting a routine patrol located a target of interest in international waters off the coast of Central America. The fishing boat jettisoned its cargo and fled the scene. After several hours of searching, HMCS Saskatoon found the jettisoned cargo in the early morning of March 26. Sixteen bales of cocaine were retrieved from the water; there was an estimated 640 kilograms of coke. Ottawa Citizen

Cop punished for 'disgraceful manner' four years after incident former Terrace RCMP officer has been given a reprimand and docked two days pay for using excessive force to subdue a man inside a detachment jail cell in April 2012. Const. Brian Heideman appeared at the South East District RCMP headquarters in Kelowna before a three-person RCMP adjudication panel hearing via video conference with Ottawa. The panel found his actions in the Terrace incident carried out in a disgraceful manner that brings discredit to the RCMP. Heideman, joined in the hearing by his Kelowna lawyer Norm Yates, chose this particular process because the facts surrounding the incident were not in dispute and he wanted a resolution to the disciplinary actions he was facing. BC Local News (2016-04-07)

Enquête sur la SQ à Val-d'Or: 30 victimes potentielles

Depuis qu'il a pris en charge l'enquête sur les allégations d'inconduite de policiers de la Sûreté du Québec (SQ) à l'encontre de femmes autochtones de la région de Val-d'Or, le Service de police de la Ville de Montréal (SPVM) a identifié 30 victimes potentielles qui racontent avoir été enlevées, séquestrées, avoir subi des voies de fait ou des agressions sexuelles, révèlent des documents judiciaires obtenus par La Presse. (...) Les documents d'enquête énumèrent les nombreuses techniques d'enquête utilisées dans ce dossier afin d'étayer et de valider les témoignages des plaignantes et des témoins. De nombreuses entrevues ont été réalisées, des registres ont été demandés chez des fournisseurs afin d'essayer de déterminer la position de personnes à certains moments. Des albums photo ont été montrés aux victimes alléguées pour voir si elles reconnaissaient un agresseur. Le SPVM a même demandé une ordonnance judiciaire afin que la SQ lui fournisse l'historique de géolocalisation d'une voiture de patrouille mise en cause dans l'un des cas qui font l'objet d'une enquête. La Presse

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

Crowds of people lined the streets to offer their support and condolences as officers from police departments across southern Vancouver Island solemnly escorted the body of Const. Sarah Beckett, an 11-year member of the West Shore RCMP, killed in a two-vehicle crash in Langford early Tuesday. (CTV News, 9h09 ET)

CBC News reports on the current situation in Lac-Simon following the death of a man during an altercation with the police. The community reacted. Police were attacked and three men were arrested. Rough Transcript

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Man convicted of Kentville attempted murder sentenced for assaulting sheriff

A man who was handed a 10-year federal sentence for attempted murder and two counts of aggravated assault in March has been sentenced for assaulting a Department of Justice sheriff. Paul Eldon Lake, 55, formerly of Kentville, was present in Kentville provincial court in custody April 6. He pleaded not guilty in September 2014 to an original charge of assaulting a Department of Justice sheriff engaged in the execution of his duty. Lake was scheduled to stand trial April 6 but pleaded guilty to the included offence of assault. (...) Judge Patrick Duncan sentenced Lake to 10 years in prison March 18, less 935 days credit for time spent remanded in custody. The court imposed a lifetime firearm prohibition against Lake, granted a forfeiture order for weapons and granted a DNA order. Lake was ordered to have no contact with the three victims. Yarmouth County Vanguard (Nova News Now)

La Commission des libérations conditionnelles révoque un pardon accordé à Bernard Gauthier

La Commission des libérations conditionnelles du Canada révoque un pardon accordé au représentant syndical de la FTQ-Construction sur la Côte-Nord, Bernard « Rambo » Gauthier. Bernard Gauthier a reçu un pardon en 2007 pour deux condamnations qui remontent à la fin des années 1990. Dans sa décision, la Commission reproche au représentant syndical d'avoir eu des démêlées avec la justice au cours des dernières années, notamment pour des affaires d'intimidation. Bernard Gauthier pourra toutefois continuer d'exercer ses fonctions de représentant syndical. Il envisage contester cette révocation devant la Cour fédérale. Pour sa part, la FTQ-Construction compte appuyer son représentant syndical dans ses démarches devant la justice. Radio-Canada

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Dramatic decline in Hamilton Police street checks

The new provincial rules for police street checks, or carding, aren't in effect yet, but the latest figures show there's already been a dramatic decline in the number of checks being carried out by Hamilton Police. The CBC says Hamilton officers did 30 checks last year, down from nearly 200 in 2014. No reason is being given for the drop. Last summer, former Chief Glenn De Caire warned the province there would be "unintended consequences to limiting the investigative aid." Starting January 1, police must inform any citizens who voluntarily stop for them on the street that they have a right not to give any identifying information. That additional protection, along with the appointment of an independent reviewer, were announced by Community Safety Minister Yasir Naqvi following consultations held since draft rules to clamp down on controversial practice of racially biased street checks were released in October. AM 900 News; CBC News

Criminalité à Ottawa : outiller les communautés pour évacuer les traumatismes

Une conférence intitulée « Traumatismes et voisinages » se tient à Ottawa de 8 h à midi, vendredi, au Confederation Education Centre, qui est situé au 1645, avenue Woodroffe. Cet événement est organisé par Prévention du crime Ottawa. Les participants pourront en apprendre plus sur la nature des traumatismes que les nombreuses fusillades survenues ces derniers mois à Ottawa peuvent avoir infligés aux communautés. Ils assisteront aussi à des présentations portant sur la façon d'introduire des réseaux de soutien post-traumatique dans les quartiers et le type de soins à prodiguer. « Nous avons constaté que quand il y a des événements violents, tels que des fusillades, des meurtres, ce ne sont pas juste les victimes directes qui seront affectées. C'est tout le voisinage, le quartier », soutient la directrice générale de Prévention du crime Ottawa, Nancy Worsfold. Cette triste réalité a été documentée lors d'une étude réalisée auprès de quatre communautés de logement communautaire d'Ottawa, qui sont situées au cœur de quartiers réputés difficiles dans la capitale nationale. Afin d'aider les différents intervenants, un cadre de mise en œuvre d'une stratégie d'action a été développé. Elle consiste à s'assurer d'avoir les bons mécanismes pour orienter les citoyens ébranlés vers les services appropriés, et ce, tout de suite après un événement violent. Radio-Canada

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MISSING AND MURDERED INDIGENOUS WOMEN AND GIRLS / ENQUÊTE NATIONALE SUR LES FEMMES ET LES FILLES AUTOCHTONES DISPARUES ET ASSASSINÉES

NIL

REGULATION OF MARIJUANA / RÉGLEMENTATION DE LA MARIJUANA

How to legalize marijuana? Go Dutch

Should you find yourself in Amsterdam, cycling along the city's complex latticework of bike paths, be wary along the canals. It is not uncommon for reckless cyclists to accidentally veer into the water. (...) In the Netherlands, the sale of cannabis is technically illegal "but not punishable." Despite being something of a pot mecca, cannabis is only decriminalized de facto. That should soon put the country behind Canada when it comes to marijuana laws. Already, the changes to medical marijuana laws have seen a proliferation of not-quite-illegal dispensaries in Toronto, Vancouver and cities coast to coast, all of which seem to operate on the assumption that the cops won't bother to shut them down with pot legalization seeming imminent. Maclean's

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to visit Thunder Bay today

Justin Trudeau is scheduled to be at the Thunder Bay Transit Bus barn on Fort William Road at 1:30 p.m. No other details have been given about that stop. But before arriving in Thunder Bay, Trudeau will stop at the Sault Ste. Marie bus barn in the morning. The government has been making funding announcements for public transit as part of its infrastructure investments. He was in Sudbury yesterday, where he made a $27 million infrastructure funding announcement. The Prime Minister is expected to meet later with First Nations leaders, including Nishnawbe Aski Nation Grand Chief Alvin Fiddler and Ontario Regional Chief Isadore Day. Grand Chief Fiddler said he's looking forward to talking about Pikangikum and other NAN priorities. CBC

OTHER / AUTRES

Trudeau says he has no money in offshore accounts

You won't find the name Justin Trudeau in the leaked documents that sparked an international furor over tax avoidance, the prime minister insisted Thursday during a brief stop in northern Ontario. Trudeau, in Sudbury, Ont., to make an infrastructure announcement, said he has been fully open with Canadians about the investments he holds. The prime minister was unequivocal when asked directly whether he or any of his family members hold cash or investments in offshore accounts. "No, we do not," Trudeau said as some in the audience chuckled. "I have been entirely and completely transparent about my and my family's finances." Trudeau said the Panama Papers have highlighted the concerns that people around the world have about political leaders and other powerful corporate figures using offshore accounts and tax havens to avoid paying taxes. CTV News

INTERNATIONAL

Paris attacks suspect Abrini Mohamed arrested

Mohamed Abrini, wanted over November's ISIS attacks in Paris, has been arrested in Brussels, Belgium's public broadcasters said on Friday, adding that he was probably involved in last month's Brussels bombings. Public prosecutors confirmed in a brief statement only that police had made several arrests related to the Brussels attacks. Abrini, a 31-year-old Belgian, was "more than likely" the "man in the hat" seen on security camera footage at Brussels airport on March 22 with two suicide bombers, VRT and RTBF said on their websites, citing unidentified sources. If confirmed, the arrests could mark a success for Belgian security services, which have faced fierce criticism at home and abroad since Brussels-based militants organized the attacks that killed 130 in Paris on Nov. 13. They took place a day after police issued new images and detail on the "man in the hat" and follow the arrest in Brussels three weeks ago of the prime surviving suspect in those attacks. Reuters (CBC News); Presse canadienne (Le Soleil); Toronto Star; La Presse

Edward Snowden urges British public to rise up and force David Cameron to resign over offshore fund

The British Prime Minister has admitted benefitting from an offshore trust. Fugitive whistleblower Edward Snowden has put further pressure on David Cameron following the release of the Panama Papers by urging the British public to force his resignation. Mr. Cameron faced a difficult week of questions before he admitted on Thursday to profiting from the sale of shares in an offshore fund. Mr Snowden, who resides in Russia – whose leadership has been linked with the Panama Papers revelations – sought to ratchet up the pressure on the PM on social media. Independent; Mirror; Washington Post

San Francisco police fatally shoot man carrying knife

San Francisco Police officers shot and killed a homeless man carrying a knife, the third fatal shooting of a minority suspect without a gun over the last two years. The shooting Thursday morning in the city's Mission District neighbourhood comes amid the department's attempt to reform its "use-of-force" policies and repair an image battered by two separate incidents of officers exchanging racist and homophobic text messages. San Francisco Police Chief Greg Suhr says two officers shot the unidentified Latino man after he refused demands to drop a knife and after the suspect was shot four times with nonlethal beanbags. The incident was the second fatal shooting of a knife-wielding suspect since December. The previous shooting of knife-wielding black man along with the fatal shooting of a Latino man carrying a stun gun in March 2014 and the recent texting scandals has led to several protests, calls for the chief's firing and wrongful death lawsuits. The U.S. Department of Justice recently agreed to requests from Suhr and Mayor Ed Lee to review the department's procedures and policies. Suhr has called in outside law enforcement experts to help the department develop less lethal responses to suspects not carrying guns. The latest incident began Thursday morning when city homeless outreach officials checking on residents living in tents called police to report a man carrying a knife, Suhr said. Suhr didn't identify the man, who officers reported charging at them before firing. Seven bullets casings were found and the kitchen knife recovered, Suhr said. The blade was 10 inches to 12 inches long, and witnesses described it as a chef's knife, he said. Cape Breton Post (Guardian)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

PostmediaNews

Freight train crashes into car in Brampton, killing one and critically injuring an elderly man <http://ow.ly/3dkPwE>

nationalpost

Two people airlifted to hospital after freight train crashes into car in Brampton <http://natpo.st/1S7I4RT>

globeandmail

Canadian researcher's mosquito trap offers hope in fight against Zika <http://trib.al/JtqS2vl> @JulienGignac

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

SCMagazine

#Pentagon unclear on who will defend the U.S. against a cyberattack | <http://ow.ly/10n9d2>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

TorontoStar

10 years ago today, an 'execution assembly line' wiped out an entire Toronto biker gang called the Bandidos.

HuffPostCanada

Winnipeg man accused of sending letter bombs facing more charges <http://huff.to/1MZhacJ>

RCMP SK

Come see @sassjordan at this year's RCMP Charity Ball. For more info go to: <http://www.kidshelpphone.ca/rcmpcharityball> ^bz

CBCNews

Lac-Simon victim's brother also fatally shot by police <http://ift.tt/1SjGm9V>

Surrey RCMP

Working together to reduce crime in downtown core with Community Cooperation Committee @TransitPolice @dtsurreybia

bcRCMP

#Surrey - One male in custody following assault with a weapon <http://bit.ly/1YjgAau>

CTVNewsVI

Public gets another chance to pay respects to Const. Sarah Beckett today <http://ctv.news/k0xoPzk>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

rabbleca

Our obligation to Omar Khadr <http://buff.ly/1TGllvx> @AafPost #OmarKhadr

INTERNATIONAL

FoxNews

Suspected terror accomplice known as 'Man in the Hat' reportedly among several arrested: <http://fxn.ws/1S7JKea>

cyblesoleil

Un suspect-clé des attentats de Paris interpellé en Belgique <http://goo.gl/DMHZrq>

SkyNews

Last suspect still at large following #ParisAttacks has been arrested <http://trib.al/gRI5MpW>

Blogs

Our obligation to Omar Khadr

The federal government recently announced they would not proceed with the Conservative government's appeal of Omar Khadr's release on bail. There was a collective sigh of relief from those who have followed his tragic case. Although Omar is no longer in prison, Canadians cannot be complacent. We must question how we allowed such a gross travesty of justice to occur; how, for over a decade, we sanctioned or acquiesced to the most serious violation of a citizen's rights and to the torture and abuse of a child. A letter writing campaign launched by the Free Omar Khadr Committee calls on the Canadian government to finally address our obligation to Omar. Our individual liberties and equality before the law depend on the universal enforcement of rights and remedies for violations. Violations of those rights must be remedied; otherwise rights protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and international treaties are meaningless. In 2004 a civil claim was filed against the Canadian government seeking compensation for the violations of Omar's protected rights due to the actions of Canadian authorities and the participation of Canadian officials in his torture and abuse in the U.S. military prison in Guantánamo Bay, Cuba. Rather than accepting the conclusion of the Supreme Court that Canadian officials were complicit in the human rights violations suffered while Omar was detained in Guantánamo, the Canadian government, at taxpayer's expense, persistently has fought Omar's legal team at every level of court -- only to lose each and every time. Rabble.ca

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Sent to:

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Friday, June 12, 2015 9:24 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: AP: Officials: Second hack exposed sensitive military and intelligence officer data

Officials: Second hack exposed sensitive military and intelligence officer data

The Associated Press
Ken Dilanian and Ted Bridis
June 12 2015, 18h47 ET

Hackers linked to China have gained access to the sensitive background information submitted by intelligence and military personnel for security clearances, U.S. officials said Friday, describing a cyberbreach of federal records dramatically worse than first acknowledged.

The forms authorities believed may have been stolen en masse, known as Standard Form 86, require applicants to fill out deeply personal information about mental illnesses, drug and alcohol use, past arrests and bankruptcies. They also require the listing of contacts and relatives, potentially exposing any foreign relatives of U.S. intelligence employees to coercion. Both the applicant's Social Security number and that of his or her cohabitant is required.

In a statement, the White House said that on June 8, investigators concluded there was "a high degree of confidence that ... systems containing information related to the background investigations of current, former and prospective federal government employees, and those for whom a federal background investigation was conducted, may have been exfiltrated."

"This tells the Chinese the identities of almost everybody who has got a United States security clearance," said Joel Brenner, a former top U.S. counterintelligence official. "That makes it very hard for any of those people to function as an intelligence officer. The database also tells the Chinese an enormous amount of information about almost everyone with a security clearance. That's a gold mine. It helps you approach and recruit spies."

The Office of Personnel Management, which was the target of the hack, did not respond to requests for comment. OPM spokesman Samuel Schumach and Jackie Koszczuk, the director of communications, have consistently said there was no evidence that security clearance information had been compromised.

The White House statement said the hack into the security clearance database was separate from the breach of federal personnel data announced last week — a breach that is itself appearing far worse than first believed. It could not be learned whether the security database breach happened when an OPM contractor was hacked in 2013, an attack that was discovered last year. Members of Congress received classified briefings about that breach in September, but there was no public mention of security clearance information being exposed.

Nearly all of the millions of security clearance holders, including some CIA, National Security Agency and military special operations personnel, are potentially exposed in the security clearance breach, the officials said. More than 4 million people had been investigated for a security clearance as of October 2014, according to government records.

Regarding the hack of standard personnel records announced last week, two people briefed on the investigation disclosed Friday that as many as 14 million current and former civilian U.S. government employees have had their information exposed to hackers, a far higher figure than the 4 million the Obama administration initially disclosed.

American officials have said that cybertheft originated in China and that they suspect espionage by the Chinese government, which has denied any involvement.

The newer estimate puts the number of compromised records between 9 million and 14 million going back to the 1980s, said one congressional official and one former U.S. official, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because information disclosed in the confidential briefings includes classified details of the investigation.

There are about 2.6 million executive branch civilians, so the majority of the records exposed relate to former employees. Contractor information also has been stolen, officials said. The data in the hack revealed last week include the records of most federal civilian employees, though not members of Congress and their staffs, members of the military or staff of the intelligence agencies.

On Thursday, a major union said it believes the hackers stole Social Security numbers, military records and veterans' status information, addresses, birth dates, job and pay histories; health insurance, life insurance and pension information; and age, gender and race data.

The personnel records would provide a foreign government an extraordinary roadmap to blackmail, impersonate or otherwise exploit federal employees in an effort to gain access to U.S. secrets _ or entry into government computer networks.

Outside experts were pointing to the breaches as a blistering indictment of the U.S. government's ability to secure its own data two years after a National Security Agency contractor, Edward Snowden, was able to steal tens of thousands of the agency's most sensitive documents.

After the Snowden revelations about government surveillance, it became more difficult for the federal government to hire talented younger people into sensitive jobs, particularly at intelligence agencies, said Evan Lesser, managing director of ClearanceJobs.com, a website that matches security-clearance holders to available slots.

"Now, if you get a job with the government, your own personal information may not be secure," he said. "This is going to multiply the government's hiring problems many times."

The Social Security numbers were not encrypted, the American Federation of Government Employees said, calling that "an abysmal failure on the part of the agency to guard data that has been entrusted to it by the federal workforce."

"Unencrypted information of this kind this is disgraceful _ it really is disgraceful," Brenner said. "We've had wakeup calls now for 20 years or more, and we keep hitting the snooze button."

The OPM's Schumach would not address how the data was protected or specifics of the information that might have been compromised, but said, "Today's adversaries are sophisticated enough that encryption alone does not guarantee protection." OPM is nonetheless increasing its use of encryption, he said.

The Obama administration had acknowledged that up to 4.2 million current and former employees whose information resides in the Office of Personnel Management server are affected by the December cyberbreach, but it had been vague about exactly what was taken.

J. David Cox, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, said in a letter Thursday to OPM director Katherine Archuleta that based on incomplete information OPM provided to the union, "the hackers are now in possession of all personnel data for every federal employee, every federal retiree and up to 1 million former federal employees."

Another federal employee group, the National Active and Retired Federal Employees Association, said Friday that "at this point, we believe AFGE's assessment of the breach is overstated." It called on the OPM to provide more information.

Former Rep. Mike Rogers, one-time chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, said last week that he believes China will use the recently stolen information for "the mother of all spear-phishing attacks."

Spear-phishing is a technique under which hackers send emails designed to appear legitimate so that users open them and load spyware onto their networks.

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Saturday, November 05, 2016 10:08 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: BBC News: CSIS under scrutiny for programme that illegally kept metadata (Minister Mention)

CSIS under scrutiny for programme that illegally kept metadata

BBC News
Jessica Murphy
2016-11-05

Canada's spy agency is under scrutiny itself after a scathing court ruling said it was illegally keeping data on Canadians who posed no threat national security threat.

The programme had been going on since 2006.

Ottawa says it will ensure the spy agency is in is full compliance with Thursday's Federal Court decision.

The news came in the wake of revelations that police in Quebec had been spying on journalists.

The Federal Court ruling said that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) had been illegally keeping and analysing so-called "associated data", more commonly known as metadata, from third party communications.

That metadata, which could include the date, time, and telephone number linked to a phone conversation or an email address, was collected legally.

But it could only be retained if it was related to national security threats or of use to an investigation or prosecution.

It could also be kept if it was related to national defence or international affairs.

The court found CSIS was holding onto data from an unknown number of Canadians unrelated to threats or to the target of the warrants and that did not fall under any of those categories.

The spy service also failed to inform the court about that programme for a decade.

CSIS said it has suspended all access to and analysis of that metadata while it determined the its next steps .

Canadian Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said on Friday that CSIS's compliance with the judgement will be supervised by Canada's security intelligence review committee.

Opposition New Democrat MP Murray Rankin called the retention of the metadata "a gross abuse of power and an unjustifiable intrusion into the privacy of Canadians" and said that Canadian spy agencies lacked oversight.

The court judgment added to an ongoing debate in Canada over police powers, press freedom and privacy following revelations that Quebec police had spied on at least seven journalists.

Quebec announced it will hold an inquiry into the surveillance of journalists by police forces in the province.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau called the surveillance "troubling" and said nothing similar was happening at the federal police force level.

Two of the province's police forces admitted they had obtained court warrants to monitor phones owned by journalists in order to track sources linked to leaks.

NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden spoke out on the revelations, calling police actions a "radical attack on the operations of the free press".

Sent to: !!INTERNAL; !!INTERNAL 2; RCMP Breaking News

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Monday, February 02, 2015 10:01 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CBC News: Edward Snowden tells students mass data collection can hamper attempts to foil attacks (Minister Mentioned)

Edward Snowden tells students mass data collection can hamper attempts to foil attacks

CBC News
Feb 2 2015, 21h41 ET

U.S. National Security Agency whistleblower and international fugitive Edward Snowden told students at Upper Canada College that the mass collection of data by government spy agencies can get in the way of foiling terrorist plots.

Such programs can sometimes take resources away from targeted data collection of specific threats, Snowden, told students at the private school in Toronto, where he was invited to speak.

The problem with mass surveillance is when you collect everything, you understand nothing," he said during the video conference Monday evening.

Snowden, who exposed the NSA's domestic spying program in 2013, was the keynote speaker at the World Affairs Conference, which is co-organized by Upper Canada College, where he also took questions from students.

The title of the talk, which also included journalist Glenn Greenwald, was "Privacy vs. Security: A Discussion of Personal Privacy in the Digital Age."

He told students that electronic spying programs constitute a threat to democracy and ought to be subject to more public debate about limits on how information is collected and used.

"This fundamentally changes the balance of power between the citizen and the state," he said.

Project Levitation

Snowden remains a controversial figure. The documents he leaked in 2013 revealed the U.S. government has programs in place to spy on almost everything that hundreds of millions of people do online, including emails, social networking posts, online chat histories, phone calls and texts.

Some of the documents revealed that other intelligence agencies, including the U.K.'s GCHQ, engage in the same kind of domestic spying.

Snowden mentioned the Levitation program, which sifts through millions of videos and documents downloaded online every day by people around the world, over the course of the 90-minute talk.

Details of the Communications Security Establishment project were revealed last week in a document obtained by Snowden and released to CBC News.

He also mentioned Canada's new anti-terror legislation that was introduced on Friday and includes a range of measures that would allow suspects to be detained based on less evidence and let CSIS actively interfere with suspects' travel plans and finances.

Snowden said it was important to be cautious when expanding such powers, particularly during what he called times of fear and panic.

"Once we let these powers get rolling, it's very difficult to stop that boulder," he said.

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney has said he believes the Security Intelligence Review Committee has the expertise to keep an eye on CSIS.

'Mother Teresa or Adolf Hitler'

Snowden fled to Hong Kong and later Russia after illegally releasing documents that exposed widespread collection of citizens' phone and internet metadata by U.S. and other intelligence agencies.

Some have praised Snowden for exposing the breadth of government spying. Others feel his actions are treasonous.

Snowden told students that sometimes media coverage has focused too heavily on himself and not enough on the issues raised by the revelations of mass data collection.

"Whether or not I'm Mother Teresa or Adolf Hitler, that has bearing no whatsoever on the content of the reporting," he said.

Conor Healy, the student who arranged to have Snowden speak, said the decision prompted a fierce debate at his school.

"Our goal is to expose the student delegates to issues that are globally significant to them," Healy said Monday in an interview on CBC Radio's Metro Morning. "Snowden is undoubtedly one of the foremost perspectives on one side of an essential debate about our relationship with the government as it relates to personal privacy."

Link

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Friday, September 02, 2016 7:58 AM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CBC News: Turning security flaws into cyberweapons endangers Canadians, experts warn (Public Safety, CCIRC mentioned)

Turning security flaws into cyberweapons endangers Canadians, experts warn

CBC News

J.M. Porup

2016-09-02, 5:00 ET

Apple's decision to issue emergency security updates to iPhone users and the recent news that a hacking group apparently stole NSA cyberweapons and posted them online is prompting security experts to question whether the use of security flaws as weapons by intelligence agencies puts citizens in danger.

Spyware or malware that exploits previously unknown security flaws, such as the three fixed by Apple, can enable a hacker to take control of a device and spy on calls and messages, turn on the microphone and camera to eavesdrop on nearby conversations and even modify, delete or add information.

While Apple and other companies have issued patches to protect users after security flaws are discovered, security experts are concerned that intelligence agencies are withholding knowledge of flaws so they can exploit them. In the meantime, those same flaws could be exploited by others, too.

The iPhone security flaws were discovered after they were used in an attempt to hack a human rights activist in the UAE and a journalist in Mexico.

An investigation by Citizen Lab and mobile security firm Lookout linked the attack to Israel-based cyber outfit NSO Group, which sells spyware to governments.

Intelligence agencies like the NSA and Canada's Communications Security Establishment (CSE) treasure security flaws because they make it easy to hack into computers around the world to engage in espionage, or even sabotage.

The documents leaked by NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden in 2013 revealed close ties between the NSA and CSE.

'Exploit it all'

At a 2011 meeting of the Five Eyes intelligence agencies, the NSA described its "collection posture" as "Collect it All," "Process it All," "Exploit it All," "Partner it All" and "Know it All," according to a slide leaked by Snowden.

"Five Eyes work in lockstep on all of this," said security expert Bruce Schneier, a fellow at the Berkman-Klein Center at Harvard University, referring to the partnership involving the security agencies of the U.S., U.K., Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

"The Snowden docs demonstrate that CSE is active in identifying vulnerabilities," Christopher Parsons, a post-doctoral fellow at Citizen Lab, told CBC.

"The fact that CSE identifies vulnerabilities and is not reporting them means users are not receiving patches in order to secure their networks."

Parsons said this "creates a really dangerous scenario."

"Canadians need to have a discussion about this. Do we want to live in a world in which we're protecting our own citizens? Or should the priority of Canadian government organizations [like CSE] be first and foremost hacking foreign systems?"

Weaponized security flaws can have destructive powers, as was seen with the Stuxnet worm.

Discovered in 2010, the joint U.S./Israeli operation used the cyberweapon to destroy centrifuges at Iran's Nantaz nuclear enrichment facility.

Using a browser flaw

An investigation by CBC last year revealed that CSE exploited security flaws in one of the world's most popular browsers and planned to hack into smartphones using links to Google and Samsung app stores.

If CSE can find a security flaw, then Russia or China or a criminal might find the same flaw. A foreign intelligence agency could also steal the flaws CSE decides to weaponize, Schneier said, pointing to the theft of the NSA's cyberweapons.

The NSA's weapons were posted online by a group going by the name of Shadow Brokers, ostensibly as a teaser for an "auction" of more weapons: "!!! Attention government sponsors of cyber warfare and those who profit from it !!!! How much you pay for enemies cyber weapons?"

The stolen weapons date from 2013, and contain numerous security flaws in popular routers.

"Russians hacked the NSA and stole security vulnerabilities and they're going to use them against us," Schneier said.

If the NSA - the most powerful spy agency in the world - can get hacked, CSE can also get hacked, critics said.

"Hoarding vulnerabilities harms our security," Schneier said, "and if Canada is complicit in it happening, then Canada is at fault."

The Shadow Brokers leak highlights the tension between a government's desire to use security flaws for intelligence gathering and law enforcement purposes and the need to fix security flaws to prevent foreign spies and criminals from exploiting them.

Conflicting interests

Snowden himself chimed into the debate after the Shadow Brokers leak via Twitter.

The U.S. government has tried to balance these conflicting interests with the Vulnerabilities Equity Process (VEP), which evaluates security flaws discovered by the U.S. government and decides which to fix and which to use.

The VEP is a good start to the conversation, Parsons said, but a terrible end result from a policy perspective.

"There's widespread acknowledgment among experts that the VEP is a farce," Chris Soghoian, principal technologist at the American Civil Liberties Union in Washington, told CBC. He criticized the process for weighing too heavily in favour of weaponizing security flaws.

"On the other hand," he added, "even though it's a farce, it's still better than anything any other country has."

Canada lacks such a process.

CSE declined to comment on how it evaluates security flaws.

'Toxic' secrecy

Public Safety Canada noted in a statement that the Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre (CCIRC) "works to protect organizations from cyber threats in part by sharing timely and accurate information regarding vulnerabilities."

Public Safety Canada also recently announced an eight-week public consultation on cybersecurity that ends in mid-October.

However, there is no evidence that the CCIRC has any decision-making role in the CSE's evaluation process, which remains secret.

"The secrecy is toxic," Schneier said, "and [also] the fact that we are prioritizing surveillance over security."

"We are choosing insecurity," he added. "We are choosing surveillance. If we do the right things the process will work. If we do the wrong things the process will fail."

Canadian politicians, judges, journalists and business leaders use smartphones vulnerable to the flaws now fixed by Apple - and to flaws still unknown. The country's infrastructure is increasingly networked and vulnerable to sabotage by a foreign intelligence agency.

In such a world, Parsons wondered, does national security mean using security flaws against potential enemies? Or disclosing and fixing them?

"We haven't had that debate in this country," he said.

Sent to: !!INTERNAL; !!INTERNAL 2; RCMP Breaking News; CCIRC / CCRIC (PS/SP)

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Canada Border Services Agency / Agence des services frontaliers du Canada
January 20, 2016 / le 20 janvier 2016

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

TOP STORIES / ACTUALITÉS

ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

SECURITY & LAW ENFORCEMENT / SÉCURITÉ ET EXÉCUTION DE LA LOI

PROGRAMS & POLICIES / PROGRAM ET POLITIQUES

BORDER ISSUES / ENJEUX FRONTALIERS

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

OTHER / AUTRES

TOP STORIES / ACTUALITÉS

NIL

ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

NIL

SECURITY & LAW ENFORCEMENT / SÉCURITÉ ET EXÉCUTION DE LA LOI

Lawyer lands discharge for angler caught with pot at border

A New Jersey man avoided a criminal record on Tuesday for entering Canada with 14 grams of marijuana in his vehicle last year. However, Matthew Simonelli has likely earned himself trouble crossing the border, Judge Henrik Tønning noted in Saint John provincial court. The judge accepted the arguments from defence counsel Charles Bryant to grant the 30-year-old, Toms River, N.J., native an absolute discharge for possession of marijuana at St. Stephen on Sept. 9. (...) Federal Crown prosecutor Peter Thorn related in court that Simonelli and his wife crossed the border at St. Stephen and declared two expensive bamboo fishing rods. The Canada Border Services Agency officer discovered that one Ryan Mockler tried to bring these same rods into the country earlier but he was deemed inadmissible to Canada, Thorn said. Border agents searched Simonelli's vehicle and found the marijuana plus $600 U.S. in a black shoulder bag, the prosecutor said. The agents investigated further and found messages on Simonelli's cellphone "that made a reference to other drugs and pills being contained in a container or cooler," Thorn said. The border guards searched the vehicle but found nothing, Thorn said. The agents issued a civil penalty of $250 and turned the matter over to the RCMP. Telegraph-Journal, B2

Charges won't affect citizenship bid, says lawyer

The lawyer of a stateless man who has again been charged with drug crimes says the new charges will not affect Deepan Budlakoti's efforts to be declared a Canadian citizen. Yavar Hameed said he is waiting to hear back on his application to the Supreme Court of Canada for review of a Federal Court of Appeal decision "relating to the factual and legal question of whether or not (Budlakoti) is a Canadian citizen." The Citizen reported Monday that Budlakoti was charged Dec. 18 with possessing drugs for the purpose of trafficking and possessing property obtained by crime. He was arrested at his Gatineau apartment by the Gatineau police anti-gang squad in a raid that turned up nearly $10,000 worth of cocaine, a semi-automatic handgun and ammunition. "These charges have no bearing on that application," Hameed said in a statement to the Citizen. "In terms of removal prospects under immigration law, the new charges do not make him a citizen of India or any other country, so his removal is still unenforceable in law." (...) Budlakoti learned of his unusual citizenship status in 2010 when he was sentenced to three years in prison for weapons and drug trafficking. Officials said the serious nature of those convictions necessitated deportation, but Indian authorities refused to take him. Ottawa Citizen, A4

Deadly Montrose hit-and-run suspect arrested at US-Canada border

A man accused in a deadly hit-and-run accident in Montrose earlier this month is now behind bars in North Dakota. Matthew Alan Putterman is charged with failure to stop and render aid. He was arrested by border agents while trying to cross into Canada. Police say Putterman is responsible for the January 8 death of 23-year-old Michael Alexander Hill. Hill was struck and killed by a red-light runner as he tried to cross Westheimer at an intersection near Taft. The driver sped off. Officials say Canadian border patrol officials noticed the damage to his vehicle and found text messages between him and his sister talking about the accident and ways to fix his damaged car. KTRK-TV (2016-01-19)

PROGRAMS & POLICIES / PROGRAM ET POLITIQUES

And the red tape award goes to ...

We have a winner. Stewardship Ontario, Halifax Regional Municipality and Canada Border Services have each received a Paperweight Award from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB). The CFIB's annual list, provided exclusively to the Toronto Sun, gives top "honours" a municipal, a provincial and a federal agency that creates the most red tape for small business owners. CFIB vice-president Satinder Chera said he hopes the recognition helps spur change. (...) The federal award goes to Canada Border Services Agency for its website. With no warning, the CFIB says the federal agency dropped a section on its website which included call centre numbers for small business owners. No timeline has been given for its replacement. Toronto Sun, A12 (Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun)

Dozens of families with no-fly list stories contact Ontario boy's mother

It turns out the little Ontario boy who's been having trouble boarding airplanes is far from alone. The whirlwind of publicity about six-year-old Syed Adam Ahmed's difficulty at the airport has prompted dozens of other families with similar stories to contact Khadija Cajee, the boy's mother. Twenty-one of them agreed to be mentioned in a letter that Cajee has sent to federal cabinet ministers involved in the high-profile issue. (...) Tales of other children with the same sorts of travel challenges soon emerged. And now Adam's mother has become an unofficial liaison with the Liberal government on behalf of many families. "When they saw this in the media, they contacted us," said Cajee, who lives in Markham, Ont. "Because I guess they were surprised and happy to know they were not the only ones." The 21 cases Cajee is sharing in confidence with Goodale and other ministers involve Canadian-born children ranging in age from six months to 17 years. "They've never been denied boarding, but they've all had some level of delay and inconvenience," Cajee said. "Some of them have actually missed flights because of this." After Adam's case hit the headlines, Goodale said his officials had reminded airlines they don't need to vet children against Canada's no-fly list. His department is also exploring possible changes to the Secure Air Travel Regulations that would help identify those who have similar or the same names as people on the no-fly list, but are not the intended targets. In addition, Goodale indicated the no-fly regime - officially known as the Passenger Protect Program - would be examined during broad public consultations on Canada's overall security framework. (...) However, it's difficult to understand exactly why he and the other young travellers have been stopped at the airport, in part due to the quiet use of U.S. air-security lists in Canada. Other countries are at liberty to develop their own rules for their own purposes, Goodale said in a recent interview with The Canadian Press. "But it can have a spillover effect that is very difficult to manage. We'll obviously look at that in the process of the consultation that we're going to undertake with the airlines and with the general public. It's just critically important to get this balance right." CTV News

Des impacts pour la région

Les besoins des Canadiens en produits laitiers ont augmenté de 18 % en 2015. La vente de crème et de beurre a connu une hausse marquée, mais celle du lait ne cesse de diminuer depuis quelques années. Et même si le Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean a connu une bonne année au niveau de la production, la baisse mondiale du prix du lait a eu des conséquences sur les agriculteurs. (...)« Nous voulions dresser un portrait de la situation et discuter des perspectives pour l'année 2016 avec les producteurs de la région. Évidemment, nous parlons des ventes, des quotas, mais aussi des différents accords et du contrôle des frontières. Mais je dois dire que depuis l'élection fédérale de l'automne dernier, nos producteurs ont une bonne compréhension du Partenariat transpacifique et de la gestion de l'offre, qui sont devenus des enjeux électoraux. En 2016, notre regard sera surtout tourné vers l'accord entre le Canada et l'Europe et vers le contrôle des frontières. Le Partenariat transpacifique nous fera moins mal que l'accord Canada-Europe, qui n'a toujours pas été conclu. On peut dire que ce sera encore une fois une année très politique », a indiqué Daniel Côté, le président régional des Producteurs du lait. Le Quotidien, 16 (La Presse)

Lametti on CETA: 'We'll get this deal to work'

Canada's new government is keeping an "open mind" when it comes to the controversial investor-state arbitration clauses in its proposed Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement with the European Union, says David Lametti, the Liberal parliamentary secretary for Trade Minister Chrystia Freeland. (...) Heading off another dispute with the United States over softwood lumber is another priority for the government, as is exploring free trade with China and pursuing Canada's stalled free trade talks with India, said Mr. Lametti. "A trade agreement with China, could it be reached, would be a good thing" if it was "done right," he said, adding the government has already begun to explore the possibility of trade talks with China in "very concrete ways." (...)The government's consultation process for the Trans-Pacific Partnership is another priority, said Mr. Lametti. Ms. Freeland has already spoken with at least 80 groups and individuals about the deal, and other ministers have also discussed the deal with stakeholders, including Finance Minister Bill Morneau and Agriculture Minister Lawrence MacAulay, he said. Mr. Lametti downplayed the importance of the signing ceremony for the deal, expected to take place Feb. 4 in New Zealand. The government still has not decided whether it will sign or ratify the agreement, he said. Whether or not to ratify the TPP is the key decision, he said, adding, "signing really isn't all that important." The TPP and CETA cover many of the same issues, with chapters ranging from competition policy to telecommunications and tariffs. The government is taking a more cautious approach to the TPP primarily because the Liberal politicians now in power have not had as much time to examine the deal, the text for which was only revealed to them during this summer's election campaign. Embassy

SI eyes Canada's labour mobility opportunities

FOREIGN Affairs Minister Milner Tozaka has confirmed Solomon Islands Government's interest to engage in Labour Mobility opportunities with Canada. And to further strengthen relationship between Government and people of both countries, the Mr Tozaka said that plans are underway for the Solomon Islands Prime Minister, Manasseh Sogavare to make a historical visit to Canada and hold discussions on a number of important bilateral issues including labour mobility arrangements, clean energy and to also seek export opportunities for the people of Solomon Islands. These commitments were expressed by Minister Tozaka during his meeting in Honiara last week with the visiting Chairman of Canadian International Training & Education (CITREC) and Solomon Islands Honorary Consul General Mr. Ashwant Dwivedi. (...) "Canada has significant job opportunity which Solomon Islanders can be engaged into as temporary foreign workers. There is no doubt Hon. Minister that almost 80 per cent of Solomon Islands youth population is unemployed and this is an opportunity which can with proper training and education help see Solomon Islands nationals being employed by a Canadian employer," Chairman Dwivedi said. Soloman Star

Canada – New Electronic Travel Authorisation effective 15 March 2016

On 15 March 2016 the Canadian government will enforce the new Electronic Travel Authorisation (eTA) program. The eTA process went into effect in August 2015 but will not be mandatory until 15 March. The eTA is an online registration system that travellers access online. eTAs are valid for five years, or until the expiration date of a passport, whichever comes first. The eTA requirement applies to travelers who do not need a visa to enter Canada and who are planning to arrive by air. Visa exempt countries include the UK, Japan, Australia, Korea, countries in the European Union and more. The eTA requirement does not apply to citizens of the US and it is not required if a person is entering at a land or sea port of entry. Nationals of certain visa-required countries (Brazil, Bulgaria, Mexico or Romania) who hold a current US non-immigrant visa, or who have held a Canadian visa in the past ten years, will be allowed to enter Canada with an eTA instead of a visa. This special visa exemption may not, however, be in place by 15 March 2016. Relocate Magazine

BORDER ISSUES / ENJEUX FRONTALIERS

Stabbed in the back

Stabbed in the back, resident Patrick Mullin concluded bluntly. Yes, you were, Olde Sandwich Towne. By the very people you elected to represent you. The stately and historic John L. Forster Secondary School, once a hub on Windsor's vulnerable west side, now belongs to Matty Moroun, block-busting, neighbourhood-destroying owner of the Ambassador Bridge. It's not like the public school board didn't know the bridge company wanted - needed - this property. "There was an awareness the bridge company would be a potential buyer," board spokesman Scott Scantlebury admitted to the Windsor Star's Dave Battagello. The company has been hovering, waiting to snatch it, for more than a decade. The school's playing field off Felix Avenue is next to the site of a proposed new truck inspection plaza that the company needs for its planned twin span. (...) It's not like the trustees didn't know the bridge company. Everyone in Windsor knows the bridge company. It's the company that bought more than 100 houses on Indian Road, Edison Street, Bloomfield Road and elsewhere, boarded them up and left them to rot, creating a swath of blight, the scene of fires and rodents, that scars the west side. All for a new span that it doesn't have permission to build. Windsor Star, A2

Plaza upgrades approved for Lewiston-Queenston Bridge

The plaza on the U.S. side of the Lewiston-Queenston Bridge is scheduled for a $50 million modernization project. U.S. Sen. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., announced Tuesday afternoon that U.S. Customs and Border Protection and the U.S. General Services Administration have signed off on funding for the effort. (...) "The Lewiston-Queenston Bridge is a critical artery to cross-border commerce and is the lifeblood of Western New York's regional economy – but the U.S. plaza has needed a major upgrade for years. CBP and GSA have heeded our call and finally approved this $50 million expansion to the plaza is great news for Buffalo and Western New York," Schumer said. (...) Niagara Falls Bridge Commission Chairwoman Kathleen Neville praised Schumer's efforts. "The funding of the Lewiston Plaza project is an important regional trade and transportation priority that will have immense economic benefits for both Western New York and Southern Ontario," she said. Lockport Union-Sun & Journal; Glens Falls Post-Star

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

Population issues symposium topic

An editorial states, "Islanders are encouraged to attend a public symposium Thursday that will discuss Amish settlers to P.E.I. and the Temporary Foreign Worker Program. (...) Population change has always been at the core of the development of small islands - and it is no different on P.E.I. Every day the public media deliver news about some aspect of population: youth outmigration, rural depopulation, an aging workforce, temporary foreign workers, refugees, wealthy immigrant investors. The symposium will provide an opportunity for the public to hear about and contribute to the debate on several of the salient population issues that are crucial to the future of P.E.I." Guardian, A6

Weighing our privacy against security

A letter to the editor states, "Re: Thousands flagged for scrutiny by Canada's air screening system, Jan. 15. With a spike in terrorism over the past 15 years, governments around the world have moved to enhance border security. At first it was seen in more flight security and stricter travel laws but with advances in computer technologies security agencies have turned their attention toward spying on their own citizens. Agencies like the NSA have inserted themselves into the homes of almost every U.S. family, and even share data with other countries. In light of revelations into just how widespread government surveillance is, thanks to whistleblowers like Edward Snowden, a global debate has erupted on the ethical implications. Do governments have the right to collect data on their own citizens without their consent? And should personal freedoms like privacy be sacrificed in the name of security?" Toronto Star, A12

Sunny ways won't cure economic woes

An opinion piece states, "Some questions are awkward to ask. Those who raise them risk being accused of hateful intentions. News this week that several Ottawa agencies are calling for a pause in this city's refugee flow has to raise the question of whether we have tried to do too much, too quickly, to meet a target founded in politics and hope, not realism and numbers. More than 11,300 Syrian refugees have arrived in Canada since November, including more than 500 here in the capital. The bulk of the initial wave has been privately sponsored. Local aid agencies say they are already experiencing a service bottleneck, though temporary, for those refugees. What's coming next is a larger, government-assisted wave. That is also expected to challenge language and other support services. The assistance to Syrians that Canada and, more locally Ottawans, are offering is admirable and heartfelt. It has been good to see. But to bring families into a new life, to have them properly acclimate to our city and country, takes resources and support. Strained services and inadequate supports won't serve Syrian families and newcomers who are desperate not only for a safe haven, but for place where they can prosper and thrive. Let us make sure that we, as a city, get this right." Ottawa Sun, A12

Canada should look after poor, not refugees

A letter to the editor states, "In response to Liz Wall's letter to the editor Jan. 13, about blasting the prime minister on his refugee policies; Ms. Wall, if we people don't speak up against unwise or unfair policies made by government, who will? The prime minister promised to have 25,000 refugees from Syria in Canada by Jan. 1, 2016, and backtracked when it was said it couldn't/shouldn't be done so quickly, especially if security was to be maintained. It has also been reported that not a single applicant who has been screened to come to Canada has been refused refugee status. Canadians were right and the prime minister was wrong." Times & Transcript, A8

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Goodale calls refugee integration crucial

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale says it's vital that resettled Syrian refugees are successfully integrated into Canadian towns and cities, not just from a social and cultural perspective, but from a public safety perspective. "It's extremely important that they settle well and successfully and we and the settlement agencies and the provinces and the cities need to work at that to make sure that it is successful. If we, being Canada, are going to maintain our very successful efforts so far at pluralism, at diversity and inclusion ... then we've got to be among the best in the world at counter-radicalization. "Because if we fail to detect the causes or the signs, or we don't have the capacity to intervene at the right point and then don't make the intervention successful, then those values of openness and the plural nature of the country will be in jeopardy," he said. "And that's the very essence of Canada, so we've got to do outreach and counter-radicalization very well." Three months into his job in charge of Canada's national security agencies, which have been intimately involved in the resettlement project, Goodale says one of the priorities set out in his ministerial mandate letter was to boost efforts to counter violent extremism. At this time, he will say only that "a lot more attention" must be paid to outreach efforts, and the question of increasing funding for such programs and research into what leads people to become radicalized will be answered "a ways down the road." (...) Goodale stressed the importance of outreach, and research efforts "to identify what contributes to radicalization, how the process works." He said a national cross-cultural roundtable is a useful forum for different faith leaders, police agencies and social service agencies to work together. But he said there is a definite need for more such groups on a local level. There are some scattered across Canada, often led by local Muslim leaders, he said. But it's a "massive project," he admitted. Toronto Star, A10

'We are ready'

As some cities take a breather from resettling government-assisted Syrian refugees, others say their doors are open - if the federal government asks and also offers to pay. While the home communities for refugees with private sponsors is dictated by where those sponsors are, refugees whose costs are covered entirely by the federal government are sent to just 36 cities. Not included is Victoria - the lone provincial capital that isn't an official reception centre for government assisted refugees. The only Syrians arriving there as part of the Liberals' Syrian program are those whose costs are split between the government and private sponsors, as well as those coming thanks to private sponsors alone. Victoria Mayor Lisa Helps said she told the federal immigration minister even before the Liberal program was unveiled that her city was interested in taking in Syrians but is still waiting. "We are ready. The church, the school board, the credit union, private donors, private families, we're ready," she said. Canadian Press (Edmonton Sun, A34, Ottawa Sun, Times & Transcript, Daily Gleaner, Times Colonist)

Soldiers prove they're up for any task thrown their way

There were tears, laughter, hugs and enough happiness to spread over this part of the world. It was a scene that could easily have been taken from the cover of a Hallmark greeting card. Early on Jan. 12 approximately 60 infantry soldiers, mostly from The Second Battalion, The Royal Canadian Regiment (2RCR) returned home from deployment in the Middle East - everyone was safe and sound. The unusual part of it all was what the kind of deployment they were coming back from. Usually, when infantry soldiers depart on a mission, they are heading into combat or peacekeeping scenarios. But not this group. They were in Lebanon and Jordan as part of Operation Provision, the federal government's initiative to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees in Canada by the end of February. They left Canada on Nov. 26 and Nov. 28. An Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada (IRCC) initiative, the ongoing mission sees Forces personnel provide assistance for data entry and biometric screening. (...) Base Gaagetown commander Col. Dan MacIsaac said he was "very proud" of the returning soldiers. "It's a fantastic demonstration of the professionalism and agility that we have in the Canadian military and the fact that we are always ready for any missions," he said. Daily Gleaner, A7

OTHER / AUTRE

NIL

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@canada.ca*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Canada Border Services Agency / Agence des services frontaliers du Canada
April 18, 2016 / le 18 avril 2016

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne
peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

TOP STORIES / ACTUALITÉS

ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

SECURITY & LAW ENFORCEMENT / SÉCURITÉ ET EXÉCUTION DE LA LOI

PROGRAMS & POLICIES / PROGRAM ET POLITIQUES

BORDER ISSUES / ENJEUX FRONTALIERS

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

OTHER / AUTRES

TOP STORIES / ACTUALITÉS

Nil

ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

Canadian border service has gaps in rail security

An internal audit has uncovered numerous gaps in the federal border agency's efforts to prevent dangerous cargo and people from entering Canada aboard freight trains. The Canada Border Services Agency review found inadequate managerial oversight, a lack of timely information on which to base decisions and shoddy targeting of incoming rail shipments for scrutiny. The auditors made several recommendations to remedy the shortcomings, all of which were accepted by the border services agency. "Improved strategic direction, infrastructure, information for decision-makers and targeting would help reduce the risk of non-compliant goods and/or inadmissible individuals from entering Canada through the commercial rail mode," says the newly released audit report, completed in December. Rail shipments worth tens of billions of dollars - everything from auto parts to fertilizer - arrive annually through 27 entry points. (...) While the border agency provides mandatory health and safety training to all employees, it had not developed training programs specific to rail yard examinations or health and safety awareness in this mode, the report says. The Railway Association of Canada, which represents more than 50 freight and passenger railway companies, has no comment on the audit findings, said spokesman Alex Paterson. Esme Bailey, a border agency spokeswoman, said the agency was taking steps to implement the audit recommendations by: Renewing its focus on rail through internal committees and outside forums where it engages with rail industry partners; Identifying the highest risks to the commercial rail mode by early summer; Developing management controls, to be fully in place by December of next year, to address risk assessment and targeting, examination processes, security and regular monitoring. Canadian Press (Times & Transcript, B3, iPolitics, Global News, Montreal Gazette, Chronicle-Herald, Waterloo Region Record, Globe and Mail, Daily Courier), Presse canadienne (Voix de l'Est, La Presse, Le Droit, Le Devoir) (2016-04-17)

SECURITY & LAW ENFORCEMENT / SÉCURITÉ ET EXÉCUTION DE LA LOI

Rwandan jailed for life for 'inciting' genocide

A Rwandan court on Friday sentenced former politician Leon Mugesera to life in prison for inciting the 1994 genocide. (...) Mugesera, 63, the former head of the party of assassinated President Juvenal Habyarimana, denied all charges and appealed the verdict. He said he was in Canada when the killings began in Rwanda in 1994. The prosecution said that Mugesera, a linguist, called Tutsis "cockroaches" and "scum", and encouraged his fellow Hutus to kill them in a 1992 speech. Lawyers argued the speech helped trigger the Rwandan genocide two years later in which an estimated 800,000 people, mainly Tutsis, died. Mugesera, however, challenged the authenticity of the recording of the speech. Canada deported him in January 2012 after 15 years of court battles. Chronicle

PROGRAMS & POLICIES / PROGRAM ET POLITIQUES

Federal spending spiked during final scramble to meet Syrian refugee deadline

The Liberal government spent $30 million on commercial flights and another $4 million on other expenses as it scrambled to meet its end-of-February deadline to bring 25,000 Syrians to Canada, CBC News has learned. Half of that money was spent in February alone, as the government dramatically ramped up its effort to meet its revised deadline. Those costs to transport, house and process the refugees amounted to about $1,360 per refugee. (...) Groups involved in resettling Syrian refugees across Canada are in Ottawa for a two-day debrief with the government starting April 18. They are expected to talk about what went wrong and how to improve the process. "There were some hiccups in terms of how things went. But it was good to have a shake-up," said Janet Dench, the executive director of the Canadian Council for Refugees, about the government's tight deadline. "I think it helped to make sure the way that refugees were processed changed radically. I think we'll maybe see the benefit of that in the months and years to come, because Canada unfortunately has gotten into the habit of doing extremely slow processing for refugees, which is really problematic." CBC News

Nova Scotia beekeepers importing thousands of international bees

Joe Goetz is unpacking some precious cargo, introducing tens of thousands of Australian honey bees to new living quarters at his farm in Windsor Forks. Goetz, who owns Scotian Bee Honey, imported about 300 1.5 kilogram packages of bees from Tasmania, at an estimated cost of $68,000. He's one of the many beekeepers in Nova Scotia hoping to populate new hives with the help of international bees, shipped in packages with at least one queen bee and thousands of female worker bees. "Winters here are sometimes a little hard and we can experience fairly high losses and what we want to do is be built up in the spring, when the fruit trees flower ... right when we need it the most," he said. Don't be confused by a sign at the border. Imported bees from approved regions are allowed in Nova Scotia with a permit. This year thousands packages of bees will be shipped into the province, part of efforts to strengthen the local population. CBC News

BORDER ISSUES / ENJEUX FRONTALIERS

Is the absence of Liberal MPPs hurting Windsor?

Windsor was one man's decision away from having Sandra Pupatello become the new premier of Ontario. On that January 2013 day, Pupatello went into the Liberal leadership convention as the frontrunner only to lose on the final ballot to Kathleen Wynne after being "double-crossed" by fellow MPP Eric Hoskins who switched his allegiance to Wynne at the last minute. Since that moment — which soon after was followed by the resignation of finance minister and long-time Liberal MPP Dwight Duncan — the Windsor area has moved away from years having a strong government voice in Queen's Park to today having three MPPs across Windsor and Essex County from the third-party NDP. Funding announcements locally have dried up in the minds of many local leaders who increasingly are speaking up with each perceived snub. (...) Windsor officials were upset last week on being shut out of a provincial government fund designed to fix roads near border crossings. Windsor had applied for $2 million under the $20-million Connecting Links program through Ontario's transportation ministry to renew Huron Church Road between Tecumseh Road and E.C. Row Expressway. But the money went to 23 other municipalities. (...) Windsor Mayor Drew Dilkens said Thursday it is difficult to believe other communities stepped in front of Windsor for the Connecting Links funds. "It is very disappointing to see the route leading to the nation's busiest border crossing was ignored this round," he said. "Clearly something else is in play when you look at our connection leading to the border versus what is happening for instance in Barrie." Windsor Star (2016-04-17)

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

Many migrants still treated as dangerous 'invaders' Many migrants are still treated as dangerous

An opinion piece states, "On May 23, 1914, the Komagata Maru arrived in Vancouver harbour from Hong Kong, bearing 376 Indian subjects of the British Empire. But those on board were not allowed to come on land. A 1908 amendment to the Immigration Act required that all immigrants arrive by "continuous journey" from their country of origin. It was neutral on the face of things, but effectively excluded migrants from India, who had no way of travelling directly to Canada. And so, the Komagata Maru's passengers were detained on the ship for two months, and then forced to return to India. (...) Migrants are the only population in Canada that can be incarcerated for long periods of time, without being charged or convicted of any crime; thousands are detained every year, including hundreds of children. The Immigration and Refugee Protection Act gives the Canadian Border Services Agency broad powers to detain migrants if they believe they are a flight risk, a danger to public safety, inadmissible to Canada on security grounds, or inadequately identified. The vast majority, 94.2 per cent, are detained on grounds other than posing a security threat. Since 2012, the Protecting Canada's Immigration System Act has also imposed mandatory arrest and detention for all migrants designated as "irregular arrivals," including children as young as 16. The law may appear neutral, but effectively attaches punishment to circumstances commonly connected with migration and asylum-seeking, particularly for the most vulnerable: "irregular arrival" using smugglers; lack of identity documents; fear of deportation to the country one has fled, leading to application of the "flight risk" label. The most recent data made available by the government shows 7,300 were detained in 2013." Toronto Star, A13

OTHER / AUTRE

Houses Privacy Committee needs to make Canada's weak privacy protection legislation relevant

A little-known parliamentary review of Canada's antiquated 1982 Privacy Act is underway. Their task is daunting: just how do you combat or at least slow down widespread "legal" and illegal sharing of and access to personal data, mitigate against "big data" mining, and restrict data profiling? Canadians are increasingly looking for more access to and control over their own personal information. Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien's recommendations (posted on his office's web) are the first in: some have merit, but others simply reinforce the status quo. They are bound to disappoint those challenging the intrusive nature of Bill C-51 who would want to go further. There is not much there for instance that puts a stop to online snooping and mining, biometric identity matching, that restricts the growing use of secretive, newer surveillance technologies like the Stingray cellphone listening devices, or that prevents the increasing sharing of Canadians personal data with foreign authorities. Nor is there much in the way of remedies proposed against what Edward Snowden revealed in the way of over-the-top secretive mass surveillance trolling, or any regulatory suggestions on how to handle the increasing amount of personal data housed or transmitted via the United States captured under its Patriotic Act or the personal data held by international intelligence gathering groups to which Canada belongs, particularly the Five Eyes group. Therrien is a former senior Justice Canada lawyer who handled public safety files including at Canada Border Services. Since his controversial appointment over a-year-and-a-half ago, he has maintained a fairly low profile. Hill Times

Le gouverneur de la Banque du Canada défend le libre-échange

Le gouverneur de la Banque du Canada affirme que les décideurs ont le devoir d'expliquer à la population les avantages du libre-échange en cette époque où le sentiment antimondialiste se propage à travers la planète. Stephen Poloz prononcera un discours dans deux semaines à New York sur l'importance de renforcer le commerce mondial, dont la croissance a été ralentie par divers facteurs, incluant la chute des prix des matières premières et la crise économique qui touche de nombreux pays. Dans un échange avec les reporters après une rencontre financière internationale samedi, le gouverneur a révélé que le protectionnisme était aussi une source d'inquiétude, sans toutefois donner d'exemple. (...) Tous les candidats importants à la course présidentielle aux États-Unis s'opposent au Partenariat transpacifique. Donald Trump et Bernie Sanders vont même plus loin en proposant d'abolir les ententes existantes comme l'Accord de libre-échange nord-américain (ALÉNA). Interrogé au sujet des tendances économiques internationales, M. Poloz a répondu que le fait que le commerce devienne impopulaire, ou moins populaire, représentait un risque pour l'économie. Il a ajouté que les décideurs avaient la responsabilité de parler des effets bénéfiques du commerce, du fait qu'il crée des gains et des pertes mais qu'ultimement, le positif l'emporte sur le négatif. Acadie Nouvelle, 14

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Canada Border Services Agency / Agence des services frontaliers du Canada
August 16, 2016 / le 16 août 2016

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne
peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

TOP STORIES / ACTUALITÉS

ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

SECURITY & LAW ENFORCEMENT / SÉCURITÉ ET EXÉCUTION DE LA LOI

PROGRAMS & POLICIES / PROGRAM ET POLITIQUES

BORDER ISSUES / ENJEUX FRONTALIERS

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

OTHER / AUTRES

TOP STORIES / ACTUALITÉS

Government to rebuild immigration detention facilities

Immigration holding facilities in Vancouver and Laval, Que., will be replaced as part of a $138-million overhaul intended to improve detention conditions for newcomers to Canada. The federal government will also move ahead with plans to expand the range of alternatives to locking up immigrants, with the aim of making detention a last resort, said Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale. In addition, a community supervision program will be developed for released detainees. Goodale announced the details Monday during a visit to the aging Laval facility. The Canada Border Services Agency holds people who are considered a flight risk or a danger to the public and those whose identities cannot be confirmed. The Canadian Red Cross Society has found numerous shortcomings at facilities for immigrant detainees, including overcrowding and lack of mental health care. Newcomers are often held in provincial jails or police facilities alongside suspected gang members and violent offenders. There are three federal immigration holding centres and the government has flagged the Vancouver and Laval facilities as most in need of attention. One in Toronto is considered to be in better shape. The planned improvements are designed to reduce reliance on provincial facilities. Some of the new money will go to mental health and medical services for detainees in federal holding centres. Canadian Press (Guardian, A5, Red Deer Advocate, Cape Breton Post, Chronicle Herald)

ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

La détention des immigrants remise en question

L'annonce de la réfection des centres de détention canadiens doit relancer la réflexion, jugent des groupes. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, a annoncé lundi des investissements de 138 millions de dollars, principalement pour moderniser les centres de détention d'immigrants à Laval et en banlieue de Vancouver. Des voix s'élèvent pour réclamer la fin de cette pratique, digne d'un traitement réservé aux criminels dans certains cas. En mai dernier, Carmelo Monge s'est présenté aux bureaux de Citoyenneté et immigration Canada 1010 à Montréal, croyant qu'il repartirait avec un permis de travail renouvelé. Il a plutôt été arrêté. " Ils m'ont mis les menottes et alors je me suis senti comme si j'avais fait quelque chose de très grave ", relate-t-il, encore sous le choc. " Je ne suis pas un criminel, je suis ici pour travailler, pour aider ma famille restée au Mexique ", dit l'homme de 45 ans. Il est au Canada depuis huit ans, en attente d'une demande de résidence permanente fondée sur des considérations humanitaires, après avoir vu sa demande d'asile déboutée. A son arrivée au centre de détention de Laval, des bâtiments entourés de barbelés, c'est la surveillance constante qui l'a marqué. " J'ai vu une femme du Pakistan avec son enfant à l'entrée, avec des gardes autour d'eux ", rapporte M. Monge. Circonstances : En 2014-2015, l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada (ASFC) a détenu 6800 personnes. Si un agent de l'ASFC doute de l'identité d'un ressortissant étranger, s'il croit que celui-ci se soustraira aux procédures d'immigration ou encore s'il considère que sa demande est inadmissible, il a le pouvoir de le détenir. Le Devoir, A1, A8; Presse Canadienne (Acadie Nouvelle, 14, Quotidien, Voix de l'Est, Tribune, Soleil)

SECURITY & LAW ENFORCEMENT / SÉCURITÉ ET EXÉCUTION DE LA LOI

Plea ends potential test of privacy rights

A Quebec man arrested last year at the Halifax airport for refusing to provide border officers with the password for his cellphone pleaded guilty Monday and was ordered to pay a $500 fine. Alain Philippon's plea on the eve of a scheduled trial brought an abrupt end to a case that was being watched closely as a test of the line between privacy rights and the state's power to control its borders. Robert Currie, director of Dalhousie University's Law and Technology Institute, said the plea deal represents a "missed opportunity" to explore an emerging legal question. "We've got case law around the Customs Act, going back in time, which says essentially that you have next to no privacy at the border," Currie said in an interview. "On the other hand, we've got very recent case law from the Supreme Court of Canada, starting in about 2010, that says you've got an intense amount of privacy in your electronic devices. "What we have not seen to date is a case where a court has really wrestled with all of this and tried to put it all together." Philippon, 39, was returning to Canada from the Dominican Republic in March 2015 when he was pulled aside by the Canada Border Services Agency and as part of a search asked to provide access to his BlackBerry. He refused to give the password and was charged under the federal Customs Act with hindering or preventing an officer from doing his job. Postmedia Network (Ottawa Citizen, N1, Edmonton Journal, London Free Press, StarPhoenix, Windsor Star, Leader-Post, Montreal Gazette, National Post, Vancouver Sun, Calgary Herald); Radio-Canada (2016-08-15)

Un véritable arsenal confisqué

Un couteau format carte de crédit, des arbalètes miniatures, des poings américains, des pistolets paralyseurs et des vaporisateurs de gaz irritants ne sont là que quelques exemples d'armes prohibées saisies par les agents des services frontaliers du Canada à trois points d'entrée de la région d'Ottawa au cours des 18 derniers mois. Une liste des armes illégales interceptées par les douaniers canadiens à Prescott, à Cornwall et à l'aéroport international Macdonald-Cartier d'Ottawa en 2015 et jusqu'à présent en 2016 fait état d'une variété d'articles saisis. C'est le cas à Prescott, un petit poste douanier situé à une soixantaine de minutes de voiture au sud d'Ottawa. (...) Les douaniers de Prescott ont aussi mis la main depuis janvier 2015 sur deux arbalètes miniatures, deux pistolets paralyseurs, quatre vaporisateurs de gaz poivré, deux pistolets à impulsion électrique (Taser), deux nunchakus, huit armes de poing et trois couteaux à ouverture automatique. Une interception menée le 16 juin 2015 a d'ailleurs permis aux douaniers de mettre la main sur 33 armes prohibées, dont des poings américains et des poings américains munis d'un canif. Du côté de Cornwall, les agents de l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada (ASFC) ont saisi une dague à pousser (poignard), huit couteaux à ouverture automatique, une arme de poing, une sarbacane avec des fléchettes, un Taser, deux vaporisateurs de gaz poivré, une réplique d'une arme à poing et une matraque rigide à ressort. A l'aéroport international Macdonald-Cartier, seul un vaporisateur de poivre a été intercepté par les douaniers depuis le début de 2015, selon les données fournies par l'ASFC. Le Droit, 2

Police appeal for help after four shootings

In three decades of policing in Ottawa, Supt. Don Sweet says he doesn't think he's seen any other day quite like Sunday: four shootings in the city in just 13 hours, including the nightclub killing of a known gang member. Police say they're mobilizing every available resource to investigate the killing and the gun violence, but they are also turning to the public for help. Potential links between the shootings are being investigated and police are asking anyone with information to come forward - while promising to protect them from any retaliation - and reassuring all Ottawans that the city remains safe. Within hours on Sunday, police rallied officers from forensics, guns and gangs, general investigations and patrol over multiple scenes with lots of evidence and witnesses, Sweet said. He said he's confident there will be an arrest soon in the slaying of Omar Rashid-Ghader, 33, who was shot multiple times inside the Sentral nightclub in the ByWard Market at about 3:20 a.m. Sunday. (...) Chief Charles Bordeleau said that while he understands residents are concerned, the incidents were targeted shootings involving criminal activity and gang members. "They are not random," Bordeleau said at the Shaw Centre, where the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police is holding its national meeting. Bordeleau said that Ottawa is not alone as urban police forces see an increase in gang-related shootings. Ottawa police are working with the RCMP and border forces to stem the flow of smuggled handguns, such as a recent arrest of someone bringing the illegal guns through Cornwall to Ottawa. Bordeleau urged witnesses to come forward despite what he called legitimate concerns about retribution for going to police. Ottawa Citizen, A3 (Ottawa Sun)

Passenger denied boarding over travelling with only a Nexus card

A Washington state man was recently denied boarding for a flight from Newark to Toronto after only presenting his Nexus card, thinking it was the only documentation he needed. Justin Thompson is a U.S. citizen and was travelling on Porter Airlines from Newark Airport to Billy Bishop Airport in Toronto in July. Thompson was travelling with his Nexus card and did not have his passport. When he tried to board the flight, the Porter Airlines gate agent refused to allow him on. (...) There are eight designated Canadian cities with Nexus kiosks. While Billy Bishop Airport isn't on the list, CBSA's website says there is a "trusted traveller kiosk" for Nexus members at that airport for incoming flights. In a statement to CTV News, Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) said that a Nexus card can be used in lieu of a passport for "Canadian and American citizens who are Nexus members entering Canada from the U.S." (...) Porter Airlines told CTV News that it's in the "best interest of all international travellers to carry a valid passport" and "the language on our website and flight reminder is explicit noting the requirement for a passport, which is supported by CBSA indicating that an airline may do so." CBSA's website also states that a passport may be required by an airline or alternative transportation authority. CTV News (2016-08-15)

Deportation overturned

Media attention, including a recent Vancouver Sun column, has helped a man thrown out of Canada because of a wrongful sexual assault conviction obtain a permit to return and seek redress. Vancouver lawyer Jason Gratl said his client, Gurdev Dhillon, was ecstatic after the immigration department did an about-face late Friday afternoon and said the subsistence farmer in Punjab could come back. He was wrongly convicted in October 2005 of participating in a July 2004 Surrey gang rape at his apartment and served four years in prison before deportation. The convictions were set aside in December, 2014. Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun, A6); Voice Online (2016-08-15)

PROGRAMS & POLICIES / PROGRAM ET POLITIQUES

Cimenterie

La Caisse de dépôt et placement du Québec (CDPQ) ne croit pas que la nouvelle ronde de financement réalisée pour compléter le projet de cimenterie de Port-Daniel ravivera les menaces de barrières tarifaires aux États-Unis. Son président et chef de la direction, Michael Sabia, a voulu se montrer clair vendredi, en marge de la mise à jour semestrielle, en affirmant qu'il ne s'agissait pas de fonds publics. Le projet de cimenterie, dont le principal marché d'exportation sera les États-Unis, a fait l'objet de critiques au sud de la frontière, où des membres de l'industrie et certains élus crient à la concurrence déloyale. Questionné à ce sujet, M. Sabia a affirmé que la CDPQ était un investisseur privé qui a pris une décision d'affaires afin de générer du «rendement pour ses clients». Il n'a pas semblé craindre que le dossier puisse prendre une ampleur similaire à celui du bois d'oeuvre canadien, qui a fait l'objet de barrières tarifaires à la frontière étant donné que les Américains estimaient que l'industrie était subventionnée. Selon M. Sabia, il n'y a «pas un soupçon» de subvention dans le financement de 250 millions $ auquel contribue la CDPQ dans une proportion de 125 millions $. Le dossier de la cimenterie, qui fait face à des dépassements de coûts de l'ordre de 450 millions $. La Presse Canadienne (Le Soleil, 37, La Tribune, La Voix de L'est)

BORDER ISSUES / ENJEUX FRONTALIERS

Halifax port boom tops all across North America

Container traffic at the Port of Halifax is spiking this year as it grabs a growing share of the market due to its newfound ability to receive bigger cargo ships coming through the new Suez and Panama Canals. (...) And while there has been growth at some ports, like Miami which saw an increase of 5.5 per cent, the biggest percentage jump so far this year has been in Halifax. Industry insiders are chalking it up to three things: a low Canadian dollar; fast and efficient turnaround of container cargo in Halifax; and the port being ready to handle the new, big ships coming from Asia through the newly-widened and lengthened Suez and Panama canals. (...) When the Canadian Border Services Agency needs to inspect a container, that extra space makes things easier for the Port of Halifax where these inspections are done more quickly than in Vancouver, said Snowden. The executive director of the national freight forwarders thinks the time lost at the Port of Vancouver, compared with Halifax, may be encouraging companies to use the Atlantic seaport. Chronicle Herald, B1

Windsor's weather, traffic and gas price for Tuesday

Weather It is currently 23 C (74 F) in Windsor. A special weather statement is in effect. (...) At the border: Ambassador Bridge - Traffic is heavy for Canada-bound trucks. Windsor-Detroit Tunnel- No unusual delays. CBC News

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

 Masse politicizes Ambassador Bridge debate

An opinion piece by Doug Sartori states, "I find it neither "troubling" or "alarming" that Dwight Duncan is diligently pursuing all options with respect to the current and future crossing. Government ownership of the Ambassador Bridge would address many issues faced by residents of Windsor West, particularly the residents of Sandwich Town who have been caught in the crossfire between the City of Windsor and the Ambassador Bridge Company. It's absurd to suggest that it is not in the best interests of our community to explore this option. I find it troubling that the Windsor West Member of Parliament has chosen a needlessly aggressive approach in requesting answers from the government. Surely, if Mr. Masse was sincere about his concerns, he would see that over-the-top accusations are a counter-productive way to engage with the government." Windsor Star

OTHER / AUTRE

NIL

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Tuesday, December 06, 2016 4:48 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: Transcript: Privacy Commissioner, Ontario Information & Privacy Commissioner, & Commission d'accès à l'information du Québec hold news conf. to discuss privacy issues & federal government's national security consultation - 2016-12-06 - 11h00 ET

DATE/DATE:

December 6, 2016; 11:00 a.m. ET

LOCATION/ENDROIT:

NPT

PRINCIPAL(S)/PRINCIPAUX:

Privacy Commissioner of Canada Daniel Therrien;
Ontario Information and Privacy Commissioner Brian Beamish; Commission d'accès à l'information du Québec President Jean Chartier

SUBJECT/SUJET:

Privacy Commissioner of Canada Daniel Therrien, Ontario Information and Privacy Commissioner Brian Beamish and Commission d'accès à l'information du Québec President Jean Chartier, hold a news conference to discuss privacy issues and the federal government's national consultation on modernizing Canada's national security Framework, following the release of a submission to the ongoing public consultation.

Moderator: Alors bonjour et bienvenue à cette conférence de presse des commissaires à la vie privée. Nous avons ici à ma droite M. Brian Beamish qui est Commissaire à l'information et à la protection de la vie privée de l'Ontario, M. Daniel Therrien qui est Commissaire à la vie privée – à la protection de la vie privée du Canada et M. Jean Chartier qui est président de la Commission d'accès à l'information du Québec.

Thank you very much for being at this press conference regarding privacy issues. We have to my – to my right Brian Beamish from the Ontario Information and Privacy who is the Ontario Information Privacy Commissioner, Daniel Therrien Privacy Commissioner of Canada and M. Jean Chartier de la Commission d'accès à l'information du Québec. There will be short statements and after we will take questions.

Daniel Therrien: So good morning everyone. Bonjour et merci de vous être déplacés. Je ferai une brève déclaration et puis mes collègues, le Commissaire Beamish et Me Chartier diront quelques mots, et enfin nous serons heureux de répondre aux questions sur notre mémoire qui a été endossé par tous les ombudsmans et les commissaires à la protection de la vie privée au Canada. Ma déclaration d'ouverture sera brève et à un niveau général, mais je discuterai volontiers par la suite des questions de détail.

Dans son Livre vert sur la sécurité nationale et les pouvoirs policiers, le gouvernement suggère que les forces de l'ordre ne sont plus en mesure d'assurer notre protection à l'ère numérique. Je pense que tous seront d'accord pour dire que les forces policières et les services de renseignements doivent avoir les outils nécessaires pour assurer notre protection, et que ces outils doivent être bien adaptés au monde numérique. Mais ces agences ont vu leur pouvoir augmenter de façon très considérable ces dernières années particulièrement en vertu des Projets de loi C-51 et C-13.

Everyone can agree that police and national security agencies require adequate tools to fulfil their key role in keeping Canadians safe and that these tools need to be adapted to the digital world. However, the powers of police and national security agencies have already been significantly increased in particular with the passage of Bills C-51 and C-13. Remember as well that post-9-11 we had seen too many cases of inappropriate and sometimes illegal conduct by State officials that impacted on the rise of ordinary people who are not suspected of criminal or terrorist activities.

In my view, these serious incidents were caused by deficient legal standards that failed to set appropriate limits on government actions. Key lessons from history, from the Arar inquiry to the Snowden revelation about mass surveillance to more recent cases involving metadata collection by the CSE, by CSIS and by police in Québec remind us that clear safeguards are needed to protect rights and prevent abuse that national security agencies must be subject to effective review and that any new State powers must be justified on the basis of evidence.

The government should only propose and Parliament should only approve new State powers if they are demonstrated to be necessary and proportionate not merely convenient. In my view, this is not the time to further expand State powers and reduce individual rights. Rather, this is the time to enhance both legal standards and oversight to ensure that we do not repeat past mistakes and that we achieve real balance between security and respect for basic individual rights.

Nous devons tirer de l'histoire des révélations d'Edward Snowden aux cas plus récents de la surveillance des journalistes, des enseignements clés. L'histoire nous a montré que des garanties juridiques claires sont nécessaires pour protéger les droits que les organismes de sécurité nationale doivent faire l'objet d'un contrôle efficace et que l'octroi de nouveaux pouvoirs à l'État doit être justifié par des faits réels. Le gouvernement ne devrait proposer et le Parlement approuver l'octroi de nouveaux pouvoirs à l'État que s'il est prouvé qu'ils sont nécessaires et proportionnés et non simplement pratiques.

À mon avis, pour l'avenir, nous n'avons pas besoin comme société de donner encore plus de pouvoirs à l'État et de réduire encore plus nos droits et libertés. Le temps est plutôt venu de renforcer les protections juridiques et le contrôle des agences de sécurité nationale afin d'éviter de répéter les erreurs des dernières années et de rétablir un meilleur équilibre entre la sécurité et le respect de nos droits.

Brian Beamish: Good morning everyone. I'd like to start by thanking Commissioner Therrien for the invitation to participate today. I also want to commend the Commissioner for his leadership on this really important issue and indicate my support for his submission. The need for a national security framework that respects the fundamental values of Canadians, including privacy, is paramount. And because of that I'm pleased to add my support to his submission along with Commissioner Chartier and our provincial and territorial colleagues from across the country.

There are a couple of specific privacy issues I'd like to very briefly touch upon, starting with the need for effective oversight. The government's plan to create a national security and intelligence committee comprised of Parliamentarians is a very good start. However, as the submission indicates it's crucial that the committee's work be supported by those with expertise in the activities of our national security agencies. The democratic accountability of Parliamentarians needs to be balanced and supported by expert accountability.

The second issue of concern to me is the proposal to further enable police services to access and collect communications data, for example subscribers data, metadata and other private information. Again, as the submission indicates any plans to weaken or eliminate a judge's role in supervising police access to communications information poses a really significant risk to the privacy of all Canadians. Here in Ontario as in other provinces we already have concerns around the potential use of surveillance technology by police. For example, Stingray technology that has the possibility of collecting large amounts of information about the communications activity of innocent Ontarians and other Canadians. As a result, the need for transparency and accountability can't be overstated.

So let me close by saying I'm pleased to stand with my counterparts from across the country in support of Commissioner Therrien's submission.

Jean Chartier: Bonjour à tous. Je vous dirai d'entrée de jeu que c'est sans hésitation que la Commission québécoise a signé le document préparé par le Commissaire à la vie privée du Canada, mon collègue Therrien. Des modifications envisagées par le gouvernement fédéral sont préoccupantes en ce qui nous concerne parce qu'elles auraient pour effet de permettre de collecter plus rapidement, plus facilement des métadonnées générées par les appareils de communication des citoyens du Québec.

Les pouvoirs actuels nous semblent suffisants et leur encadrement par le pouvoir judiciaire nous semble essentiel et cela même si parfois il y a lieu de se questionner sur la façon dont ces mêmes pouvoirs judiciaires ont été utilisés. La protection des renseignements personnels et de la vie privée des citoyens devrait aussi être une préoccupation des agences de sécurité et des corps policiers. Mais les révélations récentes relatives à la surveillance de certains journalistes au Québec nous permettent de conclure autrement.

Des cas récents de collecte de métadonnées par exemple par le Centre de sécurité des télécommunications, le SCRS, la Gendarmerie royale du Canada, la Sûreté du Québec et du Service de police de la Ville de Montréal montrent qu'il faudrait en fait resserrer les normes existantes et renforcer les mesures de protection de la vie privée. Dans de nombreux cas la collecte de métadonnées, y compris après l'obtention d'un mandat, visait des personnes innocentes qui n'étaient soupçonnées d'aucune espèce d'activité criminelle. C'est pourquoi nous croyons qu'un meilleur encadrement de ces pouvoirs nous semble de loin préférable à leur élargissement. Nous appuyons donc sans réserve le document déposé ce jour par mon collègue, le Commissaire à la vie privée du Canada. Merci.

Moderator: Alors on va maintenant passer aux questions. We'll take questions. Alex Bouthillier (ph) from the Toronto Star.

Question: Monsieur Therrien, I imagine in your submission that an encryption the government should explore discrete technical solutions to the problem for a wide sort of legislative approach. But isn't that sort of the crux of the problem that discrete technical solutions to encryption are in fact very hard to come to – to find them in that same entire debate around this. So what are you specifically suggesting the government do when it comes to these technical solutions that you referenced?

Daniel Therrien: Encryption is – is a real dilemma in this regard. We know, we agree that encryption can be an obstacle to the enforcement of judicially obtained warrants by the police. So that's a real issue, but the encryption is also bringing essential benefits to not only privacy but to the security of data, and frankly to the digital economy as a whole. The digital economy depends on encryption and if it was not for encryption, the digital economy would suffer greatly. So encryption is a benefit for the population at large. Yet, it may be in some cases an obstacle to the enforcement of judicially authorized warrants. So there is a real dilemma.

How to address that dilemma? The – currently, the law – there are some legal provisions to address this. Bill C-13 for instance, which came into force last year, authorized judges to issue a system's order so that if there is a search warrant or a production order and the police face the problem that the data in question is encrypted, a judge can issue an assistance order to require either a company or even a suspect to facilitate and give effect to the warrant. So that's an existing provision.

There are some solutions. There are some technical requirements under the then Solicitor General so now Public Safety Rules which address the technological issue. Our point about – about discrete solutions versus other types of solutions is that the Green Paper refers to the possibility of legislating in that area and we know that some other countries have legislated in that area, and one could envisage so-called back doors so systemic access to law enforcement that would give access to law enforcement despite encryption. And the difficulty there is that if you create back doors, you cannot create a back door only for law enforcement or for national security. If you do that, you also put at risk the data of ordinary citizens, of consumers who rely on encryption.

So that's the dilemma. Faced with that dilemma, we say rather than to legislate broadly for systemic solutions, it would be better for government to consider technological solutions that would focus on individual devices for instance, as opposed to putting at risk the data of everyone. It still remains a dilemma. It still remains difficult, but if solutions are to be found we suggest that solutions of that kind would be less harmful for the population at large.

Moderator: (inaudible – off microphone)

Question: Subnational police forces using surveillance technology. We focus a lot on the RCMP, on CSIS, on CSE but comparatively little attention is paid to the OPP or the Toronto Police. And in fact, they don't even acknowledge some of the technologies and methods that they have. Do you think that it's time for either Queen's Park or frankly the federal government to issue some kind of requirements for subnational police forces to be a little bit more up front about what they're doing with any of these data?

Brian Beamish: You're right. There is almost a trickle-down effect. There is a focus on the national security context sometimes forgetting that there is on-the-ground policing happening across Canada. I think for the most part – I can only speak for Ontario. The police in Ontario are subject to privacy legislation in that province, and for the most part that has worked pretty successfully even with technology, body-worn cameras, automated licence plate recognition systems, that type of thing.

Something like Stingray technology though does pose an additional threat potentially. And I think you'll see in the paper itself there is the suggestion that not only should judges remain involved, but there may be a need to underpin judges' work in issuing orders by setting out a framework. If you are collecting large amounts of data, how do you protect the vast majority of that which is the innocent data of citizens?

So that type of intrusive technology perhaps should be left as a – to a last resort. There needs to be a way to ensure that the data of innocent people is deleted once the analysis has been done and it's not retained, those kinds of protection. So they may need to be – to be put into legislation to ensure that's effective.

Moderator: Daniel LeBlanc (ph), Globe and Mail.

Question: You've recently seen – you can answer en français ou en anglais. I'll ask in English. That will avoid translating back, but you've seen the RCMP asking for new tools, new powers. I guess you were not swayed by those calls and the kind of the clear description that they've provided to the CBC and The Star of investigations in which they were harmed by encryption, for example.

Daniel Therrien: So I would start by saying, as I said in my statement, that we agree that the police and national security agencies require adequate tools in the digital age to protect us all. So in terms of the overall objective we agree. The question is which tools are required to achieve that end in the digital age and Bill C-13 and Bill C-51 have significantly enhanced their powers. So to be precise when the Green Paper says that the police are having difficulty adding access to basic subscriber information, metadata, that would be very useful for them from an investigative perspective. We do not put it down that metadata is useful for investigative purposes, but Bill C-13 to take that – that piece of legislation as an example has reduced legal standards, thresholds, for access to metadata such that the police can get access to metadata what is called transmission data in the legislation based on reasonable grounds to suspect that this will be useful to an investigation.

It used to be reasonable grounds to believe that it will be useful for investigation. So that's the current law as of 2015. So we agree that they need tools, but reasonable grounds to suspect that this will be useful. I cannot conceive of a lower test than reasonable grounds to suspect. Does the police really need access to information without reasonable suspicion that it will be useful? So perhaps in years past there was a need to amend legislation, but as of today that is the legislation in place and that is the exercise that I think needs to occur, not at the level of objective, yes the police needs to have adequate tools.

But let's look at what the current tools are and I think it is incumbent on the government and on police to explain how these new laws are insufficient to allow them to do their work.

Question: So la question de la surveillance des journalistes – on parle ici de la sécurité nationale, mais qu'est-ce que ça vous fait dire sur – est-ce que ça l'a augmenté vos préoccupations de voir la facilité avec laquelle les journalistes ont été épiés au Québec, potentiellement ailleurs? Qu'est-ce que ça vous fait craindre cette surveillance-là, cette mesure-là où les policiers pour des raisons – des causes peut-être criminelles, peut-être non – même pas criminelles, aient pu utiliser des outils de surveillance comme ça.

Daniel Therrien: Comme le disait mon collègue, Me Chartier, il est important pour ce qui est de l'accès par la police aux données des citoyens en général, y compris des journalistes. Le rôle judiciaire est essentiel parce que seulement les juges peuvent assurer l'indépendance du processus qui nous donne un système plus juste. Et je vous rappellerai que le Livre vert du gouvernement fédéral suggère qu'une des options à envisager est que plutôt que de demander la permission à un juge, les policiers pourraient demander la permission à un supérieur de la police ou un procureur de la Couronne pour avoir accès aux métadonnées.

Alors nous on dit, premier point, il est essentiel que les juges continuent à avoir un rôle parce que seulement les juges ont l'indépendance nécessaire pour faire ce travail-là. Point un. Deuxièmement, ce que les incidents autour de la surveillance des journalistes nous révèle, je pense, c'est que d'avoir l'indépendance que donnent les juges est un élément important mais il n'est pas suffisant. Ce serait à notre avis aussi important de mieux encadrer les conditions en vertu desquelles les juges se prononcent sur l'émission de ces mandats-là de sorte que – et on revient à la question des normes et des seuils – de sorte que les juges aient en tête le caractère sensible des données demandées avant de donner une autorisation en question.

Le Livre vert laisse entendre que les métadonnées sont moins sensibles que le contenu des communications et en fait une chose que le public doit comprendre très bien c'est que les métadonnées peuvent en fait révéler plus sur les activités, sur des opinions, sur le caractère d'une personne que le contenu des renseignements. Le service secret britannique a même dit publiquement que les métadonnées étaient plus utiles que le contenu des communications pour des fins de renseignements. Alors les juges doivent avoir un rôle mais il est à notre avis nécessaire entre autres à cause de ce qu'on a appris suite à la surveillance des journalistes d'avoir certaines règles qui viennent rehausser les conditions d'accès aux métadonnées.

Jean Chartier: Si vous me permettez de compléter, je dirais que les incidents qui ont été révélés – en fait, les événements qui ont été révélés au Québec nous portent à penser que même le processus judiciaire lui-même qui est actuellement en force tel que je l'ai mentionné nous porte à penser que même celui-là reste à parfaire et – et mérite peut-être d'être mieux encadré. Comme mon collègue l'a dit, autant chez les journalistes, autant chez la population en général les métadonnées c'est plus ou moins bien connues. Les gens se disent, ah, c'est l'adresse IP) d'un ordinateur. C'est le numéro de téléphone. Il n'y a rien de personnel là-dedans.

Mais les métadonnées comme mon collègue Therrien l'a mentionné ça peut révéler le – les croyances religieuses, l'orientation sexuelle. Ça peut révéler des problèmes de santé, et au surplus évidemment ça peut révéler l'ensemble des appels ou des communications que la personne qui est actuellement ou qui pourrait être actuellement suivie a reçus ou va donner. Alors évidemment c'est hautement préoccupant. Évidemment, en ce qui concerne les événements relatifs aux journalistes, le gouvernement québécois a institué une commission d'enquête, là, qui je l'espère entendra la Commission sur ces questions et qui rendra des – et qui rendra des recommandations sur ce sujet.

Mais au-delà des journalistes, la collecte de métadonnée, au-delà du simple problème relatif à la – je dirais à l'écoute ou au suivi des conversations des journalistes, il y a – il y a – et pour nous c'est ce qu'il y a de plus important, il y a l'ensemble des métadonnées de nos concitoyens québécois. Et dernière chose sur laquelle je veux insister c'est que les pouvoirs policiers qui réclament à grands renforts de tambours l'augmentation de leurs pouvoirs et qui se retrouvent finalement et qui ont trouvé une oreille attentive de la part du gouvernement fédéral dans le Livre vert n'ont jamais fait la preuve qu'ils ont besoin d'obtenir ce genre d'autorisation administrative.

Ils n'ont jamais fait la preuve que le système actuel judiciaire, avec autorisation préalable judiciaire ne fonctionnait pas et ne leur permettait pas de traquer évidemment ce pourquoi nous sommes tous d'accord, c'est-à-dire les véritables personnes qui sont à la source des actes criminels ou des actes terroristes. L'ensemble des concitoyens, des Québécois sur lesquels les métadonnées sont collectées sont – et c'est sur quoi nous insistons tous les trois – sont des citoyens sur lesquels et contre lesquels nous n'avons – les services policiers n'ont absolument rien à reprocher.

Moderator: Hélène Busetier (ph), (inaudible).

Question: Je voudrais juste revenir à la charge – c'est une question de l'encadrement judiciaire. Donc vous semblez dire essentiellement que ce n'est pas parce qu'un juge doit avaliser une collecte d'information qu'il le fait nécessairement de manière correcte. Vous dites qu'il y a besoin d'encadrement. Est-ce que vous pouvez être plus précis dans les mesures d'encadrement que vous envisagez pour peut-être mieux contrôler les juges? Est-ce que vous avez des recommandations spécifiques là-dessus?

Daniel Therrien: J'appellerais pas ça le contrôle des juges, mais je dirais dans – on revient – la différence quant au caractère sensible des métadonnées par rapport au contenu des communications. Il existe des règles de tout temps qui font en sorte que les juges ont un rôle pour donner – pour émettre un mandat pour avoir accès au contenu des communications et ces pouvoirs d'émission de mandat-là font l'objet de certains critères juridiques.

Le Livre vert laisse entendre que les métadonnées ayant un moindre caractère de sensibilité, les règles peuvent être plus libérales et effectivement elles le sont présentement comme je l'ai expliqué tantôt. Mais en fait les métadonnées peuvent avoir un caractère aussi sensible et parfois plus sensible. Alors en gros ce qu'on dit c'est que les critères juridiques pour avoir accès aux métadonnées lorsqu'il s'agit de caractère sensible devraient faire l'objet de conditions semblables à l'accès au contenu.

Et de façon concrète ce qu'on dit par exemple c'est que comme pour ce qui est d'avoir accès au contenu, il serait utile que les juges aient à se demander ou à demander aux policiers est-ce que l'accès aux métadonnées est une mesure de dernier ressort? Quelles sont les autres méthodes d'enquête qui ont été utilisées avant de faire ce genre de demande-là? Possiblement on pourrait limiter l'accès aux métadonnées aux crimes les plus graves de sorte que l'équilibre entre la gravité du crime et l'importance du risque à la sécurité publique de par la définition d'un crime grave deviendrait plus important que des atteintes possibles à la vie privée. L'équilibre doit être différent si on parle de crimes contre la propriété de moindre importance, par exemple.

Alors il y a des conditions qui iraient à l'accès pis ensuite même si l'accès est accordé, les juges pourraient être habilités – je pense que ce serait important et utile – pourraient être habilités à assortir leur autorisation de certaines conditions. Par exemple, comme le mentionnait mon collègue Beamish, si l'accès est accordé et que dans la collecte de renseignements de métadonnées il y a des métadonnées de personnes innocentes qui communiquaient avec un criminel ou avec un terroriste pour des fins toutes autres qui n'ont rien à voir avec des activités de criminalité, une fois que cette analyse-là a été faite, que les données doivent être détruites à ce moment-là. Alors il y aurait des conditions juridiques quant à l'accès et ensuite lorsque l'accès est accordé des conditions qui viennent protéger la vie privée des citoyens ordinaires.

Question: Une deuxième question qui n'a absolument aucun lien. Dans votre mémoire vous faites référence à quelques reprises au Comité de surveillance, là, parlementaire qui serait mis sur pied. Pis vous dites, bon, vous l'accueillez d'un bon œil mais vous semblez quand même assez critique lorsque vous dites qu'on vous – que vous estimez toutefois qu'un examen par des experts ayant une connaissance approfondie des activités de renseignements doit s'imposer aussi. Est-ce qu'on doit comprendre par là que vous n'avez pas beaucoup de confiance dans la capacité des élus qui ne savent pas nécessairement de quoi on parle?

Daniel Therrien: Pas du tout, pas du tout.

Question: De faire de la surveillance.

Daniel Therrien: Je pense – ce qu'on dit c'est qu'un système de contrôle efficace des activités des – des services de renseignements doit se faire à plusieurs niveaux. Il y a les tribunaux judiciaires qui ont un rôle. Il y a des experts comme le CSARS pour ce qui est du SCRS nous – etc., des gens qui ont une connaissance du droit plus pointue, et le Comité parlementaire en devenir a aussi un rôle ce qui n'est pas un rôle moindre, qui est simplement – il y a plusieurs briques à l'édifice. Et la brique parlementaire offre un avantage de légitimité démocratique que d'autres institutions n'ont pas. Alors chacun joue son rôle et ce qu'on dit c'est que pour avoir un système de contrôle efficace et complet ça prend le rôle de plusieurs joueurs institutionnels dont les parlementaires.

Question: Canada's intelligence agency, CSIS, is basically saying the laws are quite old. They need to be updated to deal with the kinds of things you're talking about metadata and such. What do you say to that that it's – to that notion that it's just a matter of updating the law so they can do the things they want to do with the kinds of information that's out there in the cyber sphere net?

Daniel Therrien: Hum, so we do not dispute at all that police or national security agencies need adequate tools that are modern and that reflect the digital age in which we live. So as a matter of objective we're in agreement with that. The question is whether they need additional tools to the tools that were recently, very recently, enhanced to legislation such as Bill C-51 and Bill C-13. So it's not as though there is an absence of tools for the police and national security agencies. They do need the tools. We say with C-51 and C-13 they already have very formidable tools and it's not theoretically inconceivable that they may need additional tools, but we haven't seen the demonstration of that.

And so the exercise requires once you agree with the objective they need tools to do their job correctly, it needs a very robust and rigorous look at what are the tools that they have and why are these tools insufficient? And it is on that part of the analysis that we remain to be convinced, that we do not think that they have made their case.

Question: Commissioner Beamish, you mentioned the notion of expert review in addition to the parliamentary committee that will be created. Do you mean to support it or other agencies, civilian type agencies to bolster the ones that exist?

Brian Beamish: Well, you'll see in the submission it doesn't come down to say here's exactly what it should be. I think the point is that the – the review par parliamentarians is important. It adds democratic legitimacy to the process but there needs to be expert advice and expert support as well. I think that it's – it might be unfair to expect parliamentarians to understand exactly how a lot of this technology works and what the meaning of that is, what the possibilities are. So I think it needs – you need the combination of both.

And I should add that the – the involvement of Commissioner Therrien's office is an important element of that as well. I think the office of the federal Privacy Commissioner should also continue to have oversight in this area.

Question: I want to go back to the issue of individual devices versus technological solutions for individual (ph) legislation. Where does then that become – does that not just become ignored if you have perhaps one device then you have got the means to – to crack (ph) them all and is that not putting it on the same level as – as someone else said?

Daniel Therrien: I'm not a technologist but I'm told that there is – this is not an easy task. So even to propose that raises issues as to technological feasibility, but I am advised that it may be possible in some circumstances to get access to individual devices without creating the kind of systemic risk that everyone fears. And there is more of a risk in creating risk for the population at large if you try to create systemic back doors to systems as opposed to look at situations on a case-by-case basis. But it is – we do not deny that this is a real dilemma, but the stakes are extremely high and I think that the police knows, the government knows or should know that back doors create risks for the population in general and it is in everyone's interest to ensure that encryption remains.

Encryption is not only used by criminals and terrorists. Encryption is a benefit for the population at large. We rely on it to do banking online in a safe way and for all kinds of commercial or other online activities. It is essential for the privacy and the security of our information each and every one of us. So we urge extreme caution in developing solutions that would put at risk the data of the population at large.

Question: Where do you feel that the discrepancy lies right now? Because in the Green Paper it talks about these companies are already wired to have the technical capability for interception and surveillance – I'm sorry, sorry. The Green Paper said they don't – they're not complying with that, but your submission says that they – the requirements already exist. So where – where's that? Where do you think that discrepancy is coming from or they're – it's simply just not being enforced and maybe we should be enforcing them?

Daniel Therrien: Hum, so a few things on that point. They – the Green Paper says there is no law on that subject and if you look at the Statute Book it is correct. But there are licensing requirements that were issued in the '90s when public safety was the Solicitor General's department which enact (ph) certain rules. They don't have – they're not statutes but they are licensing requirements, real rules that apply to telcos. So there're existing rules. The government says there should be a law. Perhaps, but what would the law do that the current licensing requirements do not do? Point one. Point two, what is it in substance in these licensing requirements that is deficient and that needs to be enhanced? I don't know that.

The Green Paper doesn't explain that and it's one of the things that we would like the government to explain further. What is it in substance in these licensing requirements that need to be enhanced to give the police and national security agencies the tools they need?

Question: In a less – this is more of a broader picture question. When Canadians, you know, will hear this tonight and they're going to see your plea to ensure the privacy protections, safeguards are in place, do you think Canadians – the average Canadian understands why privacy, why their privacy needs to be protected? Do you think that, you know, with the recent event with CSIS admitting to collecting innocent people's data, holding on to that data, while it shouldn't have been there, do you think there is an understanding in Canada that this is a concern? Can you explain why you feel it should be?

Daniel Therrien: There is – there is more knowledge to be gained by Canadians on these issues. There is no question about that. Canadians of course want to be protected and want the police and intelligence services to have the tools to protect them. I understand that perfectly well. But we have seen since 9-11, but also very recently with the Quebec journalist cases, with the CSIS case that the data of ordinary Canadians is being handled inappropriately, sometimes illegally. So let's just take the CSIS example for a second.

So CSIS in a judgment of the Federal Court was found to have retained the metadata of ordinary Canadians, people not suspected of threats and keeping them for a long while, about ten years, for – to be able to analyze and cross check with data banks and identify terrorists. So I'm all for detecting terrorism. Cross checking data banks if it's with the right information that protects privacy is fine. But here we have a court saying that CSIS was holding on for ten years information about people who are not suspected threats.

Now, think of how we collectively thought of countries in Eastern Europe that retained files on ordinary citizens for long periods of time because it may be helpful, useful for intelligence purposes. I'm not comparing CSIS to the intelligence agencies of these countries before the Cold War, but objectively we're talking about the retention of large amounts of data about ordinary citizens for the purpose of detecting terrorists. I don't think this is the kind of society we want to live in, and I don't think Canadians if they think about just that scenario, for example – there are many others – will conclude that their desire – their legitimate desire to be protected means that they have to allow the secret service to have access to that amount of data for that long, even though they constitute no threat to national security.

Question: And my follow-up is about the journalism that – the surveillance in journalism cases. Have you heard anything from authorities to reassure you that surveillance of journalists in the way it was conducted is not continuing? Michel Coulombe was here about a month ago and although he said of the top he would not comment, later in the news conference we kept pressing him and he said he won't comment on this because it's operational. So do you – have you heard any reassuring words from whether it be CSIS whether it be authorities in Quebec that this practice is not continuing?

Daniel Therrien: We have not received nor did we ask for that kind of information.

Jean Chartier: C'est la même chose pour le Québec. Nous n'avons pas demandé et nous n'avons pas eu d'assurance de la part des corps policiers qu'ils soient municipaux ou provinciaux à l'effet que ce genre de comportement, de filature, de – de collecte de métadonnées ou de – ne se poursuivait pas. Et la raison pour laquelle nous n'en avons pas – nous n'avons pas fait cette demande-là c'est évidemment que pour le moment ce que nous savons c'est que les collectes et les analyses qui ont été faites à partir des données ont été faites à la suite de mandats autorisés par le système judiciaire.

Alors évidemment la Commission n'a pas de juridiction sur le système judiciaire lui-même. On attend la Commission d'enquête pour vérifier de quelle façon ç'a pu être fait, où est-ce que – et à quel endroit le – les manques ont pu apparaître. Est-ce que par exemple tout à l'heure mon collègue Therrien mentionnait que il n'est pas question de ne pas avoir confiance dans le système judiciaire. Au contraire, on dit justement que ce système judiciaire là nous apparaît comme étant un rempart nécessaire. Mais peut-être que même chez les gens du système judiciaire – et je le dis en tout respect pour les gens qui exercent ces fonctions – il y a peut-être un minimum de de formation. Il y a peut-être de l'information qu'ils ne possèdent pas encore sur le – ce que révèlent les métadonnées, à quoi servent les métadonnées, de quelles façons elles sont collectées.

Et vous savez, j'ajouterais une dernière chose. Dans nos lois respectives au Canada et dans toutes les provinces – et la loi fédérale est la même en matière de protection des renseignements personnels – pour pouvoir collecter des renseignements personnels, le critère doit être la nécessité et ça s'applique même aux corps policiers. Un corps policier qui veut collecter des métadonnées, qui veut collecter des renseignements personnels sur des individus, le critère est la nécessité. Et ça s'applique même à eux.

Et je le répète, nous n'avons pas eu de la part du gouvernement fédéral, et surtout de la part des corps policiers qui demandent plus de pouvoirs, la démonstration que c'est nécessaire, que les pouvoirs qu'ils demandent en plus demeurent nécessaires.

Question: Hi, Amela Connelly (ph) with iPolitics (ph). You – just to go back to your points on more of a device-focused approach to (inaudible) encryption and that. The FBI in the San Bernardino case paid close to a million dollars to break the lock on that iPhone. Is it practical, I guess, to expect law enforcement here and taxpayers as well to shoulder the cost of that rather than creating more of a one-size-fits-all approach?

Daniel Therrien: It perhaps could be theoretically if it were not for the fact that the – what you call the one-size-fits-all approach is exactly the approach that puts at risk the data of everyone in this room and – and in the world. So, yes, to require device specific or case specific solutions may present difficulties, but if the alternative is to create through back doors or systemic access risks for the population at large, I think that's too high a price to pay.

Question: And just as a follow-up here, a slightly – slightly different topic here but Michael Geist put up a blog post this morning basically being – he was critical of the government's democratic reform survey saying the profile section of that – the information that you had to submit is part of that to have your voice heard through it could potentially identify people in small towns based on the questions that they're asking there. Do you – what are your thoughts on that? And do you share his concerns with the information being collected in that survey?

Daniel Therrien: We haven't been consulted by the government before that process started and we haven't looked at the details, but we certainly will have a look. But I don't have anything to say at this point because we've not analyzed the situation.

Moderator: Alex Bouthillier (ph).

Question: If I may. They're asking for income levels –

Moderator: Oh, I'm sorry, Shirley.

Question: No, no, go ahead.

Question: They're asking for income levels, education levels, postal codes. I forget what else – age –

Question: Age, gender, what occupation area are you working in. So it's kind of – yeah, the kind of information you could kind of piece together that (inaudible).

Question: So it's – it's almost census like in terms of the information that's required. Does that raise any concerns for you that people may not –

Daniel Therrien: Enough to probably give a call to the relevant department.

Question: Just to pick up on Jim's question. On the balance between State powers and citizens' rights, you say that you don't dispute that police need their job – police say that the balance is tipped towards personal rights at the expense of law enforcement, but here I just want to be clear that you're saying that it's actually already tipped towards law enforcement and not citizens' rights. You write: ... this is not the time to further expand further state powers and reduce individual rights. Rather, it is time to enhance both legal safeguards” yadi-yadi-ya “ultimately achieve the real balance between security. So it seems that you’re already saying that police have more powers in this balance structure.

Daniel Therrien: That’s a question of more – more powers, but the – with the greater activities against terrorism since 9-11 with legislation with C-51 and C-13, we have seen real concrete examples of violations of human rights generally, and privacy in particular. So these are not invented. These are real cases. I wouldn’t put the question as do the police have too much powers? What we’re saying is that in giving these powers not enough attention has been given to ensure at the same time that there are appropriate legal safeguards, things like standards required of the police to have access to data, etc. or the relevance test for information sharing under Bill C-51. So legal safeguards are, in our view, deficient which has led – which is the cause in part of the problems that we have seen.

And oversight is also insufficient. That is being corrected in part through Bill C-22, but we need more than that. We need broader oversight, expert review for all departments involved in national security. So there are deficient rights protecting safeguards is our point given the sum total of legislation adopted in the past few years.

Question: I’ll just toss this out to whomever wants to respond to it, but when we talk about breaking encryption are we really talking about breaking citizens’ encryption because law enforcement, nation, states, government departments they’re not going to give up their top secret networks. They’re not going to give up their protected communications. So when we – when police talk about weakening encryption, are we really talking about setting up two tiers of security? State and law enforcement deserve security but citizens don’t?

Daniel Therrien: I’ll answer your question this way and it’s very important for the purpose of the Green Paper. Yes, the suggestions made in the Green Paper would affect the encryption therefore the protection given to the general population, to citizens. Is that a distinction with the State? Perhaps, but what people need to understand is that encryption is available everywhere in the world. It’s produced everywhere in the world and criminals and terrorists know that.

So laws that would diminish the protection of encryption for ordinary citizens, law-abiding citizens would probably do nothing at all as a measure against the people that the police and national security agencies actually care about, i.e. the criminals and the terrorists, because the latter can find a way through encryption obtained outside Canada. They can do it themselves. So reduction of the benefits of encryption for the population would have very little impact on the people that we should all care about the terrorists and the criminals in terms of getting the data that police need to do their job.

So that’s a fundamental issue. So when you put all of that together should the police be able to decrypt information? I think that perhaps everything else being equal, but if you do that you reduce the protection of ordinary citizens and you probably do nothing to the protection of criminals and terrorists. So it’s not a very – it’s not a very effective means of getting at the problem.

Question: You talked about the limitations of the Canadian law when it comes to foreign threats to our privacy and I want to ask you specifically about the incoming administration in the United States. Donald Trump talked about closing down parts of the Internet that he perceived were a threat to national security. Some believe some of his rhetorics suggest a disregard for cyber privacy. So I’m wondering if you’re concerned at all about the implications for Canadians given that borders online are quite blurry and some of those policies could inevitably end up infringing on our privacy.

Daniel Therrien: That obviously moves across borders and there are many rules and safeguards that are – that exist in one country that have an effect on the other. So, yes, rules to be adopted in the US could have an impact on Canada which in part, I think, reinforces our recommendation that in Canada legal safeguards and oversight should be enhanced so that there is a better guarantee that the data of Canadians will be sufficiently protected.

It’s all always a question of balancing security interests and human rights and privacy, and we think that with enhanced safeguards and oversight we will have a better balance, including in a world where in the US certain measures may be taken to reduce privacy safeguards. So it’s important to have a robust made-in-Canada regime to increase the possibility that our data will be sufficiently protected.

Question: What are some of the limitations of our regime given that obviously there are issues of national security? There’s agreements between intelligence agencies, information sharing. What are some of the potential threats to Canadian privacy should a Trump administration pursue some of these more aggressive measures that could infringe upon privacy? I mean inevitably our laws will have limits, will they not?

Daniel Therrien: Yes, and so Canada can control what happens within its State but when data moves across border and data does move every day across borders, there is a loss of control which is why one of our recommendations is to require that when data is shared internationally between States, that there should be agreements with certain guarantees within these agreements on how the data will be handled. It’s not an absolute guarantee. And does that mean that Canada has absolute control over what the US will do? No, but agreements would enhance the level of protection given to the data of Canadians.

Question: Is your office pursuing this at all in an active way, engaging with your national counterpart and doing any preparatory work?

Daniel Therrien: Not – not in light of the election of Mr. Trump per say but we have recommended to Parliament in the context of potential amendments to The Privacy Act that this requirement for information sharing agreements with minimum contents and safeguards become part of federal law.

Moderator: Merci beaucoup. Thank you very much.

-30-

NOTE: TRANSCRIPTS CANNOT BE SHARED OR TRANSFERRED OUTSIDE OF YOUR DEPARTMENT WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF MEDIA Q INC.

Questions? Please contact us at ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca Questions? Veuillez communiquer avec nous au ps.pspmediacentre-centredesmediaspsp.sp@canada.ca

Sent to: !INTERNAL; !INTERNAL 2; RCMP Breaking News; CBSA Breaking News

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, February 18, 2016 5:12 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CP: Canada's electronic spies at the centre of beefed up ISIL intelligence effort (Minister mentioned)

Follow Up Flag: Follow up
Flag Status: Completed

Canada's electronic spies at the centre of beefed up ISIL intelligence effort

February 18, 2016, 17:01 ET
Canadian Press, By: Murray Brewster

OTTAWA - The Communications Security Establishment, Canada's electronic spy service, is set to play a more prominent role in the war against the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, The Canadian Press has learned.

Multiple sources familiar with the plans, speaking on condition of anonymity owing to the sensitivity of the matter, say the government is deploying a capability that only a "handful of countries" in the world can provide.

CSE is part of the so-called "Five Eyes" community, along with the U.S. National Security Agency _ the NSA.

CSE spokesman Ryan Foreman acknowledged the agency is helping the Canadian Armed Forces under the umbrella of Operation Impact, the name of Canada's anti-ISIL mission in the Middle East, but refused to discuss specifics.

"While we are proud of our contributions to CAF's missions, CSE is obligated to respect the Security of Information Act, and cannot address specific operational questions," Foreman said.

Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan has for weeks been signalling that the military will introduce a "more robust" intelligence-gathering regime, one that allies _ chastened by the withdrawal of the six CF-18s _ are happy to be bring to the fight.

Separately, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale confirmed Thursday that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service will also play a stepped-up role in the fight against the Islamic State, but he also refused to be specific.

"We are providing new and additional intelligence capabilities in the region and while by its very nature I cannot elaborate, CSIS will have a role to play," Goodale said.

"It will certainly be an increased role to accomplish larger objectives."

The defence conference where Goodale and Sajjan were speaking heard Thursday about how CSIS agents cultivated human sources in Afghanistan.

But CSE played a pivotal role alongside the Canadian Army during the Afghan war, providing by its own admission half of the crucial battlefield intelligence on Taliban militants, their movements and the locations of key commanders.

The information was used to plan military operations and for targeted capture or kill missions by special forces. But one official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Canadians would provide targeting only and not take part in any "direct action."

Although he's been eager to trumpet the "doubling" of the intelligence effort, Sajjan has been decidedly opaque about what that means, even last week when he announced the retooled mission.

"Enhanced intelligence capability will help protect our forces in theatre as well as those of our coalition and host nation partners," Sajjan said.

"Therefore, we will significantly increase the resources we dedicate to intelligence, both in northern Iraq and theatre-wide. Our intelligence capabilities will help the coalition and Iraqi security forces develop a more sophisticated picture of the threat and improve our ability to target, degrade and defeat ISIL."

What that likely means in practical terms, according to sources and intelligence experts, is the involvement of the secretive CSE and specialists from the 21st Electronic Warfare Regiment.

It also means deploying Canadian intelligence officers into the highly secure all-source intelligence centre in Kuwait, and potentially hacking ISIL computers and smartphones.

When pressed, Sajjan refused to discuss the details.

"Unfortunately, I'm not going to talk (about it) in public for operational security reasons," he said.

"The last thing you want to be able to do is show your hand to (ISIL) and let them know what type of capability you are bringing in, but we have very unique capabilities for the coalition, and what I will say is capabilities for theatre-wide for the entire coalition and then we have very specific capabilities for our troops in the north as well."

Paul Robinson, a blogger and expert on signals intelligence, said it is a matter of public record that the military and CSE have an integrated operational model for field operations, which proved highly successful in Afghanistan.

"It was a pretty substantial contribution on the intelligence side," said Robinson, who noted that signals kept watch over not only the movement of Taliban units and commanders, but also provided early warning of threats _ such as the planting of roadside bombs _ and even kept tabs on local Afghan government officials.

Deploying a similar capability to northern Iraq would, in Robinson's estimation, be a significant step-up in terms of the fight.

"It's a plausible argument that this is a contribution that would be valued just as much as the fighter-bombers," he said. "Increasingly, I think this kind of warfare is down to intelligence."

It is likely filling a gap that the Americans are unable to cover themselves, Robinson added.

Throughout the war against the Islamic State, U.S. commanders have repeatedly called for more intelligence data, mostly in the form of extra drone flights. Washington was forced to strip the remote-controlled aircraft from operations in Afghanistan, according to published reports.

Documents leaked by former NSA contractor Edward Snowden indicate "that in the Horn of Africa and Afghanistan, they were not getting all the signal intelligence they wanted," Robinson said.

That's one of the reasons Canada deployed its own capability to Kandahar during the war, he added.

The game could be upped even further with the purchase of special tactical intelligence surveillance planes, similar to the King Air turboprop aircraft used by special forces in Afghanistan under a contract with the U.S. Army. The federal government quietly floated a letter of interest in September to see if defence contractors could deliver three aircraft.

In addition, Robinson says Canadian intelligence officers are highly valued in multi-national intelligence hubs like the one in Kuwait, because they "are cleared into the Five Eyes community."

Sent to: !INTERNAL

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Wednesday, July 20, 2016 5:58 AM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CP: Canada's electronic spy agency won't reveal if shared info leads to torture overseas

Follow Up Flag: Follow up
Flag Status: Flagged

Canada's electronic spy agency won't reveal if shared info leads to torture overseas

Canadian Press (Global News), by Jim Bronskill
2016-07-20, 5:26 ET

Canada's electronic spy agency won't say how often it shares information that could lead to someone being tortured in an overseas prison.

The Communications Security Establishment – which monitors threats from foreign terrorists and spies – has censored documents that spell out the figures, even though the RCMP and Canadian Security Intelligence Service have revealed such numbers in the past.

The reticence prompted Amnesty International Canada to say “much greater transparency” is needed from the Ottawa-based CSE.

“At stake is Canada's compliance with crucial international human rights obligations to prevent torture and ill-treatment,” said Alex Neve, Amnesty's Canadian secretary general.

The secretive CSE has been thrust into the national spotlight in recent years due to leaks by Edward Snowden, the former spy contractor who worked for the National Security Agency, CSE's American counterpart.

It is also among a handful of Canadian agencies, including the RCMP, CSIS, the Canada Border Services Agency and National Defence, bound by a government instruction that allows it to share information with foreign partners – even when it means someone could be abused as a result of that exchange.

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said earlier this year the Liberals will review the “troubling set of issues” raised by the foreign-sharing policy, enacted by the previous Conservative government.

A four-page 2010 federal framework document says when there is a “substantial risk” that sending information to – or soliciting information from – a foreign agency would result in torture, the matter should be referred to the responsible deputy minister or agency head.

In deciding what to do, the agency head will consider factors including the threat to Canada's national security and the nature and imminence of the threat; the status of Canada's relationship with – and the human rights record of – the foreign agency; and the rationale for believing that sharing the information would lead to torture.

Records obtained by The Canadian Press under the Access to Information Act offer a glimpse into how the CSE handled such cases in the first three months of 2015.

The quarterly report to CSE Chief Greta Bossenmaier, labelled Top Secret and for Canadian Eyes Only, told her the number of cases that required a “mistreatment risk assessment” and the level of risk associated with passing the information to others.

But those details were deleted from the publicly released version of the document.

Under the rules for deciding whether to share, the greater the risk, the higher the level of approval required. When the risk of mistreatment is low, a manager can decide. When the risk is substantial and cannot be managed – for instance, by seeking assurances from the foreign agency that someone will not be harmed – then the CSE chief or the defence minister must make the call.

The report says there were “no known instances” of a recipient country’s non-compliance with conditions attached to information-sharing during the three months. But little else was disclosed.

The CSE faces “unique considerations” it must weigh when discussing details of assessments, said Christopher Williams, a senior spokesman for the intelligence agency. “With this in mind, we are not able to release the specific number you have requested without risking revealing insight into our capabilities.”

However, the number and content of such assessments are reviewed by the independent watchdog who keeps an eye on the CSE, said Williams.

In addition, none of the requests in the three-month period involved a Canadian, all green-lighted information-sharing requests got the nod “to help mitigate foreign security threats,” and requests are approved only after a thorough review, he added.

Amnesty’s Neve said that when Canada shares intelligence information, there is a very real risk of contributing to torture.

The assessments are the safeguard meant to ensure that does not happen, he said.

“For Canadians to have any confidence that is the case we do, at a minimum, need details of how many assessments are being conducted, the breakdown of requests that are approved and denied, and some general information that conveys the basis for the decisions that have been reached.”

Sent to: !!INTERNAL; CBSA Breaking News; RCMP Breaking News

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, January 28, 2016 6:13 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CP: CSIS obtained taxpayer info from Canada Revenue Agency without warrant (Minister mentioned)

CSIS obtained taxpayer info from Canada Revenue Agency without warrant

Jim Bronskill
Canadian Press
January 28, 2016, 17h58 ET

OTTAWA - The Canadian Security Intelligence Service repeatedly obtained taxpayer information from the Canada Revenue Agency without presenting a court-approved warrant for the data.

That revelation was among several concerns raised in the latest annual report of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, which monitors CSIS compliance with law and policy.

The report tabled Thursday said the spy service must do more to ensure insiders don't pilfer secret material. It also urged CSIS to inform the Federal Court how it uses metadata — the telltale digital trails that accompany messages and phone calls — collected from cyberspace.

The findings came the same day the watchdog over the Communications Security Establishment, Canada's electronic spy agency, found the CSE had improperly shared metadata about Canadians with key foreign allies.

The reports prompted the NDP to express concern about erosion of civil liberties.

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale stressed the Liberal government was embarking on a comprehensive review of Canada's national security and intelligence framework with the twin aims of effective security and respect for rights.

Far from being an isolated incident, there were "multiple instances" of a CSIS regional office getting warrantless access to taxpayer data from the federal revenue agency, the review committee said in its report for 2014-15.

Questions about the practice were first raised by the Federal Court, prompting CSIS to ask the review committee to look into the matter.

Following the incident, there were assurances the sensitive revenue agency information had been purged from a CSIS database when, in fact, it was still there, the review committee's report says.

Spy service management issued a "stern reminder" to employees of the need for a warrant to collect taxpayer information, but the review committee says that may not be sufficient.

The committee made several recommendations, calling on CSIS to assess its own handling of the incident after it became clear information had been improperly collected. The spy service complied with that request.

Review committee chairman Pierre Blais said CSIS had made "a mistake" but he expressed confidence the committee would not "see that in the future."

The Canada Revenue Agency had no immediate explanation as to why it gave CSIS the data.

The review committee says it also found shortcomings in the spy service's training, investigation and record-keeping practices intended to manage so-called insider threats.

Concern about such threats has grown due to recent breaches by intelligence employees in the United States and Canada, the committee noted.

Former U.S. spy contractor Edward Snowden leaked a trove of files revealing widespread surveillance by the U.S. National Security Agency, while Jeffrey Paul Delisle, a Canadian naval intelligence officer, sold sensitive secrets to the Russians.

The review committee found insufficient training, gaps in policy and procedures, and a lack of managerial feedback for those at CSIS working on internal security investigations.

It also concluded procedures governing internal probes were unclear. In addition, the committee found CSIS did not properly document decision-making about investigations.

The review committee singled out one particular internal investigation, finding CSIS "had failed to give the case the appropriate level of attention and scrutiny, and to take followup action."

The committee recommended CSIS re-examine the case due to concerns about internal policy violations and "possible information breaches."

Though CSIS agreed with some aspects of the committee's recommendations, it refused to reopen the case in question, saying it was satisfied there were no lingering security concerns.

Link

Sent to: !!INTERNAL

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Wednesday, January 28, 2015 3:07 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CP: Electronic spy agency defends its role in Internet hunt for terrorists

Electronic spy agency defends its role in Internet hunt for terrorists

January 28, 2015, 14:57 ET
Canadian Press, By: Jim Bronskill

OTTAWA _ Canada's electronic spy agency is defending its role in the search for extremists following a report that says it sifts through millions of videos and documents downloaded globally every day through file-sharing services.

Details of the Communications Security Establishment project, called Levitation, are revealed in a 2012 PowerPoint presentation obtained by former U.S. intelligence contractor Edward Snowden, CBC News says.

CBC analyzed the document with U.S. news website The Intercept, which obtained it from Snowden. It also posted the presentation online, with some of the information blacked out.

The Ottawa-based CSE employs mathematicians, codebreakers, linguists and software experts with the aim of both collecting foreign secrets and shielding Canada's confidences from prying eyes.

The document says that under Levitation, CSE analysts can access information on about 10 to 15 million uploads and downloads of files from free websites each day.

Extremists generally use free file-uploading sites to distribute training materials, while al-Qaida uses them to spread jihadist propaganda, the document says.

It notes CSE finds about 350 "interesting download events" per month, citing one on how to make a gas bomb.

The document also makes a light-hearted reference to filtering out Glee TV episodes, with a schematic of how its supercomputers track down the small number of files of concern.

One privacy advocate expressed alarm at the CBC report.

"CSE is clearly spying on the private online activities of millions of innocent people, including Canadians, despite repeated government assurances to the contrary," said OpenMedia.ca spokesman David Christopher.

"Law-abiding Internet users who use popular file hosting services are now finding themselves under the government's microscope."

CSE stood by its methods, saying they have helped counter terrorism.

"CSE's foreign signals intelligence has played a vital role in uncovering foreign-based extremists' efforts to attract, radicalize, and train individuals to carry out attacks in Canada and abroad," agency spokesman Ryan Foreman said in an emailed statement Wednesday.

It noted that CSE is legally authorized to collect and analyze metadata _ data trails about messages and calls, though not the actual content.

Privacy advocates have stressed that metadata is far from innocuous, as it can reveal much about a person's online behaviour.

CSE said it takes strict measures to protect the privacy of Canadians when it comes across their information.

"In collecting and analyzing metadata, CSE does not direct its activities at Canadians or anyone in Canada, and, in accordance with our legislation, has a range of measures in place to protect the privacy of Canadians incidentally encountered in the course of these foreign intelligence operations," the CSE statement said.

The agency said it could not comment further on "operations, methods or capabilities," as that would constitute a breach of the federal secrets law.

"Furthermore, we regret that the publication of techniques and methods, based on stolen documents, renders those techniques and methods less effective when addressing threats to Canada and Canadians."

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, November 12, 2015 10:07 AM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: CP: Federal security officials eye 'big data analytics' in a bid to pinpoint threats (Department mentioned)

Federal security officials eye 'big data analytics' in a bid to pinpoint threats

November 12, 2015
Canadian Press, By: Jim Bronskill

OTTAWA _ Federal security agencies risk being overwhelmed by threats _ or failing to even foresee them _ unless they embrace the digital-age phenomenon of big-data crunching, warns an internal Public Safety Canada presentation.

With billions of people using mobile phones and surfing the Internet, security officials are preoccupied with getting timely access to valuable information. But the recent past is littered with challenges related to information sharing and privacy _ including controversy over the Conservative omnibus bill known as C-51, the presentation notes.

Officials acknowledge the public might not trust government to respect privacy in the process, pointing to revelations by former U.S. spy contractor Edward Snowden about widespread surveillance of communications.

"Canadians are increasingly concerned about issues of crime and terrorism, but in the post-Snowden era, public concerns about government data use may stand as a barrier to the effective use of innovative data analytics by law enforcement and security organizations," the presentation says.

Big data analytics generally refers to the process of gathering and systematically sifting through millions or even billions of pieces of data _ numbers, text, graphics, videos and sensor information _ to glean insights that can't be detected through standard methods.

Given the pace of technological advancement and the exponential increase in the amount of data produced worldwide, there may be opportunities to do things more efficiently and identify patterns through innovative techniques, the presentation says.

"In other words, once we have the information, how can we ensure that we are in a position to use it effectively?"

The May 2015 presentation, Big Data Analytics in the World of Safety and Security, was prepared for Public Safety Canada's internal policy committee. The Canadian Press obtained a declassified version of the secret draft presentation under the Access to Information Act. Small portions were withheld due to their sensitivity.

The presenters cite examples of using big data analysis to create efficiencies, find a needle in a haystack and fill data gaps. For instance:

_ Philadelphia police mined data to predict a parolee's risk of reoffending to determine the necessary level of supervision;

_ U.S. researchers found that a genetic variant related to schizophrenia was not detectable when reviewing 3,500 cases but were able to pinpoint a trend by looking at 35,000 cases;

_ In Guatemala, a pilot project revealed how mobile phone movement patterns could be used to predict socioeconomic status.

More than two years ago, Jennifer Stoddart, the federal privacy commissioner at the time, cautioned that big data had not simply increased the risk to privacy _ it had changed the very nature of that risk.

The Public Safety presentation allows that privacy considerations and building public confidence must be taken into account.

"Privacy does not need to be a barrier to innovative data analytics," it says. "We need to think strategically about what we want to accomplish with data and then design in appropriate privacy protections."

The officials also stress the importance of finding the right partners to pursue "promising practices" as well as ensuring agencies have the technology, policies and people to make the most of the techniques.

Other federal departments and provincial security partners are exploring the potential of big data analytics, they note, but "innovation is limited and often done in silos."

The risk of not harnessing big data is a "reduced capacity to respond to _ or even understand _ the changing threat environment," the presentation warns.

Ultimately, the presenters ask whether officials should explore big data opportunities in more depth and, if so, which ones would be most useful to the portfolio?

Public Safety had no immediate comment on the department's plans.

Sent to: INTERNAL

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Correctional Service of Canada / Service correctionnel du Canada
October 29, 2015 / le 29 octobre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

PROGRAMS, POLICIES & ORGANIZATIONAL ISSUES / PROGRAMMES, POLITIQUES ET ENJEUX ORGANISATIONNELS

Survivant d'une fusillade, un ex-hockeyeur réclame 3 M

Atteint par neuf balles lors d'une fusillade près d'un bar de Mirabel, Dannick Lessard réclame un dédommagement de 3,2 millions $ aux autorités fédérales qui ont libéré le présumé tireur du pénitencier et auraient négligé de le surveiller. Dans sa poursuite déposée lundi, l'exhockeyeur allègue que lors de la fusillade survenue le 2 octobre 2012, Ryan Wolfson était «illégalement en liberté depuis deux mois», ayant fui la maison de transition où il devait demeurer. Lessard, 37 ans, reproche au Service correctionnel du Canada (SCC) d'avoir «manqué grossièrement à son devoir de surveillance de Wolfson». Il prétend aussi que la Commission des libérations conditionnelles du Canada (CLCC) aurait préalablement dû garder le présumé tireur au pénitencier, en raison de son «risque élevé» de récidive. Journal de Montréal, 11

INSTITUTIONAL & COMMUNITY ISSUES / ENJEUX RELATIFS AUX ÉTABLISSEMENTS ET À LA COMMUNAUTÉ

Undoing citizenship faces new test

A former business student imprisoned for his role in an al-Qaida-inspired plot to bomb downtown Toronto in 2006 has asked the Federal Court to stop the government from revoking his citizenship. Saad Khalid, 29, is the latest to challenge a controversial law that allows federal authorities to strip convicted terrorists of their Canadian citizenship -- provided they are also citizens of another country. Prime minister-designate Justin Trudeau campaigned on a promise to repeal the five-month-old law brought in by the Conservatives. But the government has not yet given any indication it is backing off. Asked if the revocations underway had been suspended, Citizenship & Immigration Canada spokeswoman Nancy Caron would say only it was "pre-mature for the department to comment at this time." How the Liberal government would undo the law remained unclear. "It could be complicated," said Craig Forcese, a University of Ottawa law professor and coauthor of False Security, The Radicalization of Canadian Anti-Terrorism. Toronto 18 leader Zakaria Amar has already lost his citizenship, and another nine cases are under way. Five imprisoned terrorists, now including Khalid, have launched court appeals arguing the law, C-24, is unconstitutional. Postmedia News (London Free Press, B3, Edmonton Journal, Ottawa Citizen, Windsor Star, National Post)

Canada-wide warrant for federal inmate

A Canada-wide warrant has been issued for a federal inmate who failed to return to the St. Catharines halfway house he was staying at. Eric Marchis signed out from the halfway house on the morning of Oct. 18 and was required to return before midnight that same day. He has not returned since. He is described as a white male, 35 years old, 5 feet 9 inches, 285 pounds with hazel eyes and short blond hair. Marchis has a scar on his abdomen and tattoos across his forearms that say "AGAINST ALL ODDS". He is serving a sentence of nine years, 11 months and 13 days for several bank robberies and possession of a weapon for a dangerous person. Police say the offender is known to frequent the Toronto area. While he has no known associates in the Niagara, police say he may very well have befriended people in the area. Hamilton Spectator; Niagara This Week, 610 CKTB, St. Catharines Standard (2015-10-28)

Man sent back to prison after violating parole

Police have sent a 27-year-old man back to prison after he violated his parole. Police were called to the Parrrtown community correctional centre at 9 a.m. Tuesday. The man has his parole revoked for violating the conditions of his release, said Sgt. Lori Magee of the Saint John Police Force. Sheriffs took the man back to the penitentiary. Telegraph-Journal, B5

La Commission des libérations conditionnelles statue sur le sort de Richard Charlish

Richard Charlish, condamné à huit ans de pénitencier en 2003, pourra de nouveau demeurer en établissement résidentiel communautaire, mais l'homme de Mashteuiatsh devra rentrer chaque soir. Un texte de Denis Lapierre La Commission des libérations conditionnelles annule la suspension de ce privilège qui avait été imposée à la suite de manquements à diverses conditions. L'homme de 50 ans a reçu sa peine à la suite d'une agression violente sur une femme d'Alma. L'agression était survenue à Montréal. Sa peine était assortie d'une ordonnance de surveillance d'une durée de dix ans. Sorti du pénitencier en 2011, Richard Charlish a contrevenu à de nombreuses reprises à ses conditions de surveillance, entre autres en matière de consommation d'alcool. Il a également omis de rentrer à la résidence le soir venu. Même si la Commission des libérations conditionnelles n'a pas caché ses inquiétudes à son sujet, elle a choisi de rétablir l'ordonnance de surveillance de longue durée, en vigueur jusqu'en 2022. Radio-Canada

Une chauffarde ira en maison de transition

Une jeune chauffarde condamnée à deux ans d'emprisonnement pour avoir causé la mort de deux amies au volant de sa Mercedes pourra quitter la prison pour la maison de transition. Sarah Cousineau-Denis sera éventuellement transférée en maison de transition pour un minimum de trois mois, a statué hier la Commission des libérations conditionnelles du Canada. «Trois mois en maison de transition, c'est très court, mais c'est mieux que la liberté totale qu'elle demandait », s'est consolé David Jones, l'oncle de Natasha Lavigne, une des deux victimes. Lors de son audience qui s'est tenue mardi au pénitencier de Joliette où elle est incarcérée depuis février, la jeune femme de 21 ans demandait effectivement une liberté totale à sa résidence familiale de Knowlton. «Nous espérons qu'elle aura l'encadrement nécessaire pour changer en maison de transition. Pour l'instant, on note un travail inachevé», a commenté M. Jones. Journal de Montréal, 14 (Journal de Québec), Voix de l'Est

Convicted fraudster contests failure to appear

A recently convicted fraudster and serving prisoner is looking to go to trial over charges that he failed to show up for his original trial two years ago. Steven Vincent Weeres, 56, was sentenced Oct. 9 to five years in prison for fraud and money laundering. He was found guilty July 30 in the Regina Court of Queen's Bench after a seven-week trial and testimony from 50 witnesses. His trial had been set to begin on Oct. 28, 2013, but Weeres (who was self-represented) allegedly failed to show up. At that time, Justice Catherine Dawson issued a warrant for Weeres' arrest at the request of Crown prosecutor Jerome Tholl. The trial didn't proceed, and two months later, Tholl was appointed as a judge to the Court of Queen's Bench family division. In Regina Provincial Court on Wednesday, Weeres pleaded not guilty to the failure to appear charge, and said he wanted a trial set for February in order to give him time to get a lawyer. Leader-Post, A3 (StarPhoenix)

Man convicted in 2010 robbery spree back in court on eight fresh armed robbery charges

A man dubbed the "screwdriver bandit" for a robbery spree five years ago was back in court on Tuesday facing eight new charges of armed robbery and sporting cuts and bruises on his face. Philip Haskett, now 36, was sentenced to four years in prison in 2011 for seven robberies of gas bars and convenience stores in Kitchener and Waterloo the previous year. Armed only with a screwdriver, Haskett threatened clerks to hand over money to support his $500-a-day heroin and crack cocaine habit. On Monday night, Haskett was arrested in a car in Waterloo near University Avenue and Fischer-Hallman Road, Waterloo Regional Police said. Police said he was arrested "without incident." Haskett, of no fixed address, faces eight counts of armed robbery. Waterloo Region Record (2015-10-28)

Cops feared violent arrest of triggerman in N.D.G. double murder

As the RCMP moved in to arrest Robert Simpson, the triggerman in a double murder carried out in Notre-Dame-de-Grâce five years ago, they feared the worst. Simpson's arrest was described for the jury hearing the trial of Leslie Greenwood, 46, who is alleged to have been the getaway driver when Simpson carried out the Jan 24, 2010, murders of Kirk (Cowboy) Murray and Antonio Onesi. The murders were ordered by Jeffrey Albert Lynds, a Hells Angel based in Nova Scotia. The trial is unfolding at the Montreal courthouse. Simpson, who later became a cooperating witness for the prosecution, told the jury two weeks ago about how he was on the lam during the six months that preceded the murders. He had left a halfway house on Ogilivie Ave. in Montreal while on parole, and had decided not to return. A Canada-wide warrant was issued for his arrest, but he was only located weeks after the murders were carried out. Sgt. Addie MacCallum, an RCMP investigator based in Nova Scotia, said Simpson was finally located, on Feb. 12, 2010, near Truro, N.S., after the RCMP received information about a series of robberies and assaults that had been reported in the area. By then, MacCallum was aware of Simpson's parole violation. He had been supplied with an extensive file that included details on Simpson's criminal record and his personal life. His official record, at that point, included an acquittal for having killed an inmate at a federal penitentiary in Ontario, because he had acted in self-defence, and a manslaughter conviction for his role in the death of an elderly woman in Montreal. Montreal Gazette, A8

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS / ÉDITORIAUX ET LETTRES D'OPINIONS

Porn is a privilege, not a right

An opinion piece states, "Once again the issue of prisoners' right to pornography is up for debate; this time in Canada. In 2013, Correctional Service Canada blocked inmates' access to TV channels showing late-night pornography after complaints that female correctional officers were feeling harassed. "It was found that sexually explicit material undermined a person's sense of personal dignity, and in the circumstances under consideration, particularly that of female correctional officers," state the records. Haris Naraine, who was an inmate at the time at Archambault Prison in Quebec filed a grievance, eventually taking his case to Federal Court, arguing that banning access to porn infringed on his constitutional right to freedom of expression. The judge concluded that banning the channels was not legal but, it seems, Quebec Minister of Public Security Lise Thériault disagrees. After learning that inmates at Quebec's Amos detention centre were accessing porn via a late-night movie channel, she vowed to install parental controls in prisons across the province in order to block access to channels that showed porn. Correctional Service Canada is still reviewing the court ruling and the policy so, in the meantime, there is ample opportunity to debate things like "sexuality" and "morals" and to prove how sexy and unprudish we really are when it comes to men's right to misogyny. In a repulsive but revealing report by Brigitte Noël for Vice, she accuses Thériault of "pearl-clutching" and goes on to discuss the issue of "sexuality in prison," as though male sexuality is inseparable from pornography. This kind of commentary is useful as it gets at one of two key issues here: 1) The "right" to access any media one likes, and 2) The idea that men are unable to function in a healthy manner without access to pornography." Rabble.ca

Restorative justice

A letter to the editor states, "I recently listened to a radio broadcast that used the Cheyann Peeteetuce case of what might have been had she faced a restorative system when her spiral of crime began, instead of the punitive justice system we currently have. The broadcast was based on Justice Murray Sinclair's recent speech in Saskatoon. I do have to agree with most of what he said. I had to sit through two trials - one for the youth and one for Cheyann, whose example was given. In both trials that involved six court appearances, not once did I hear any statements from them on what their thoughts were leading up to the accident that killed my daughter, Sarah, and James Haughey. They were basically allowed to hide behind their lawyers. With a restorative justice system they would have had to face everyone in court, explain their actions and be held accountable. The current system left me with no closure, with unanswered questions and hugely disappointed with our justice system. I disagree with Justice Sinclair on the Gladue reports. I also wonder why a restorative system for First Nations people only should not be for all Canadians. After all, does his position not represent all Canadians equally?" StarPhoenix, A9

Prison, strangely, has become 'happy' place

An opinion piece by federal inmate Jose Vivar states, "Prison has made me a happier person. It is kind of like a monastery, minus having to shave my head and walk around in a robe all day. But like a monastery, I live a simple life here. I wear simple clothes and eat simple food and do simple things. I abstain from the many vices that exist in the world, like gambling, drugs and alcohol and womanizing. I am no longer bothered by what my neighbour has, or what I do not have. In fact, nothing bothers me at all. I am happier now because of things like this. (...)But of course prison does not make everyone a happier person. There are people who kill themselves in places like this. People who walk around with permanent mean faces, like they are defecating 24-7 or like they walked into a room sprayed with halitosis. Not only prisoners, but even those who get to go home every day. They are not happier people, for they are in constant battle with their egos, or in combat with themselves or with the future. Their war is in their minds. They do not realize that happiness does not matter where you are." Kingston Whig-Standard, B4

OTHER / AUTRES

Un projet de loi pour la prise d'empreintes

La libération malheureuse de Francis Boucher à la suite d'une comédie de gaffes des services correctionnels force la main de Lise Thériault, qui propose des modifications législatives pour que cette bévue ne reproduise pas. Le projet de loi 63 va permettre aux autorités de «vérifier l'identité des personnes incarcérées au moyen d'un procédé permettant la prise de leurs empreintes digitales, et ce, sans leur consentement». Il touchera aussi les personnes déjà incarcérées. Rappelons que Francis Boucher a été libéré par erreur le 24 mars. Ce jour-là, les services correctionnels ont réalisé qu'un autre Boucher aurait dû être relâché la veille. Journal de Montréal, 21

Manitoba jails bursting at the seams while crime rates continue to fall

The Manitoba government jails a greater proportion of its population than any other province in the country, at a time when crime rates have fallen to historic lows. A CBC analysis reveals that the ballooning inmate population is having far-reaching consequences for the most vulnerable members of society, and also taxpayers. Inmate population figures released by the province, paint a dire picture of the state of affairs in Manitoba jails. Overall, Manitoba jails are bursting at the seams with the occupancy rate currently at 127%. The Pas Correctional Centre which is designed to house 114 inmates, currently has 262 people behind bars. Headingley jail's rated capacity is 549, but is easily surpassed now at 792 inmates. The Manitoba Government Employees Union (MGEU), which represents the province's correctional officers, says jail cells intended to house two prisoners in some cases now hold five, and gymnasiums have been converted into temporary dormitories. "I've done the tours of the jails and I've literally seen where the inmates are sleeping with their head up against the toilet on the floor because there isn't a bunk for them. So when you've got overcrowding to that capacity, how long before more frustration and more anger is happening within the jail system itself," says Michelle Gawronsky, president of MGEU. According to Statistics Canada, throughout the 1990s and early 2000s, the inmate population in Manitoba grew modestly by 16%, tracking roughly the population growth. However, from 2005 to 2014 that number exploded by 106%, with an average daily inmate count last year of 2,370. CBC News

Saskatchewan among the highest incarceration rates in Canada

When it comes to putting people behind bars, Saskatchewan ranks among the leading provinces in Canada. In 2013-14, Saskatchewan imprisoned 195 people per 100,000. Comparatively, Canada's rate was 86.53 people per 100,000. Only Manitoba and the three northern territories had a higher rate than Saskatchewan. Using data provided by Statistics Canada, CBC News learned incarceration rates in Saskatchewan have also continued to increase over the past 20 years, dating back to 1993-94. While Canada's overall incarceration rate has dropped four per cent since then, the prairie province has gone in the opposite direction. It has increased its incarceration rate by 16.21 per cent over the same time period. An assumption that these rising numbers is an indication of more crimes being committed would not be accurate. A report earlier this year by Statistics Canada stated that the serious crime rate (which includes violent acts like homicide and assault) across Canada has been steadily dropping for the past 11 years. It also concluded that serious crime in general fell to its lowest relative level since 1969. CBC News, Radio-Canada (2015-10-28)

Prison not the only option for offenders: justice expert

In Saskatchewan, there's a good chance that if you commit a crime, you'll do the time. But a professor at the University of Regina says that shouldn't always be the case. CBC looked into the numbers provided by Statistics Canada. It found that the rate of people behind bars in Saskatchewan is one of the highest in the country and continues to rise while the national rate falls. In 2013-14, 195 people per 100,000 ended up in jail. Nationally the number sits at 87 per 100,000. Only Manitoba and the territories put more people per capita in jail. Nick Jones, associate professor in the Department of Justice Studies at the University of Regina, said the high rate is related to Saskatchewan's "Law and Order" approach to crime. "I think we've become very conditioned as a society into what one might call a 911 mentality," Jones said. Jones said this means that there is an inclination to believe that the criminal justice system needs to get involved. However, crime rates and incarceration rates don't have to go hand-in-hand, according to Jones. "In some circumstances incarceration is absolutely, 100 per cent needed. I think we need to rethink on what basis we turn to incarceration." Jones said research shows there has been much success when the person who commits a crime -- helps repair the harm they caused, as it "can be empowering to them".

CBC News

"No culture of wellness" in jails, says Sask. advocate

A group of former inmates say jails could help people deal with the issues that helped pull them into the justice system in the first place. But it takes a change in thinking. Saskatchewan is putting or keeping more people in jail than nearly all other provinces in the country. In 2013-14, Saskatchewan's incarceration rate was 195 people per 100,000 people. Comparatively, Canada's rate was 86.53 people per 100,000 people. Father André Poilièvre works with former gang members in Saskatoon. He said the Saskatoon Correctional Centre is failing to offer programs that help inmates. "There are no programs in the jail that I know of at this time that are serious about rehabilitation. The inmates that go into the Correctional C in Saskatoon," Poilièvre said. "It's a warehouse. It's a dead end environment. Any programs that are serious are very limited." He said there used to be two teachers in classrooms full time, but because of minimum sentences and a large number of people who are serving time in remand, there isn't enough room. CBC News

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

CSIS Executive News Summary/Sommaire exécutif des nouvelles du SCRS
(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Saturday, June 04 2016/samedi 04 juin 2016
Abridged weekend edition/Edition abrégée de la fin de semaine

If you require copies of articles mentioned in the News Summary or radio/television interview transcripts, please contact Communications Branch at 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) or [REDACTED] on weekends. Additional weekend reports will be included in the Monday Executive Summary.

Si vous désirez obtenir des copies d'articles mentionnés dans le Sommaire des nouvelles ou la transcription d'une entrevue radiophonique/ télévisée, veuillez communiquer avec la Direction des Communications au 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) ou [REDACTED] la fin de semaine. Des reportages additionnels de la fin de semaine seront retrouvés dans le sommaire exécutif du lundi.

General News Overview/Aperçu général des nouvelles

Contents

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles	2
Canada	2
United States – États-Unis	8
United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni.....	10
Americas.....	11
Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande	12
Asia –Asie.....	12
Eastern Europe – Europe de l’Est.....	17
Africa – Afrique	18
Iraq/Iran	19
Middle East – Moyen-Orient	19
Others — Autres	20
Western Europe – Europe de l’Ouest	20

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles

1. Sikhs for Justice seek referendum in India – and a new reputation

The Globe and Mail, Sunny Dhillon, 2016 06 04

Vancouver - Advocates for an independent Sikh homeland say they're looking to the future and pushing for a referendum in India within four years, but the Khalistan movement has been hit by a familiar controversy – an alleged link to extremist violence. Hardeep Nijjar, a B.C. man who has collected signatures to have anti-Sikh violence in India in the 1980s recognized as genocide, was accused in an Indian newspaper report this week of running a "terror camp" east of Vancouver. Mr. Nijjar was also alleged to be the operational head of a group known as the Khalistan Terror Force and said to be linked to a 2007 attack on a cinema that killed six people. He denied wrongdoing and sent a letter to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau in which he said he has never supported violence. Sikhs for Justice, a non-profit organization with headquarters in Toronto and New York for which Mr. Nijjar has volunteered, rushed to his defence and accused the Indian government of trying to discredit the push for Sikh self-determination. The incident highlighted the trouble the Khalistan movement has had shedding its violent reputation, particularly in Canada. Khalistan proponents were linked to extremist violence in the 1980s, most notably the Air India bombings, which killed 329 people on an airliner and two baggage handlers in Tokyo in 1985. During the subsequent trial, the Crown alleged the bombings were carried out in response to the Indian government's raid on the Golden Temple, Sikhism's holiest shrine, a year earlier. Since the report involving Mr. Nijjar surfaced, the RCMP has said little about his case specifically, or about the Khalistan movement generally. But a former analyst at the Canadian Security Intelligence Service said the movement appears to have quieted down in recent years and Canadian law-enforcement agencies have shifted resources to other targets, such as Islamist extremism.

2. Toronto 18 leader 'enjoys notoriety,' board says

The Toronto Sun, Sam Pazzano, 2016 06 04

Toronto - The leader of the Toronto 18 terrorist group still appears to "enjoy the notoriety" and has made "insufficient change" to warrant release from prison, the Parole Board of Canada has ruled. In a seven-page decision, the board ruled that while Fahim Ahmad had recently "entered a process of change," he still did not appreciate the gravity of his crimes. He also appeared to relish the opportunity to speak at conferences. "It appeared you were more concerned about the impacts of your criminal behaviour on you and your family than on the community and country writ large," the decision stated. "You believe people will seek you out as a member of the Toronto 18. You expect to be offered opportunities to speak at conferences. "On the one hand, you seemed negative to this idea, but on the other hand you said you had a responsibility and were looking forward to it," the decision stated. "You said you owed it to the imams." The Toronto 18 plotted shootings and truck bombings in Toronto against the CSIS office and CBC, along with Parliament in Ottawa, unspecified military bases and a nuclear power plant, Justice Fletcher Dawson said at Ahmad's sentencing in 2010. "Ahma drepeatedly expressed that it was religiously permissible to attack targets in Canada because Canada was attacking Muslims in Afghanistan," said Dawson.

Canada

3. Allies will cut us off over suit : CSE boss

The Canadian Press, 2015 06 04

Ottawa - Close allies will curb or even halt the flow of intelligence to the Communications Security Establishment if the electronic spy agency is forced to spill its closely guarded secrets in open court, argues a senior CSE official. In turn, that could dry up the flow of "quality information necessary to ensure the safety and protection of Canadians and Canadian interests," says Scott Millar, director general of strategic policy and planning at CSE. Millar's warning comes in an affidavit filed in a legal tug-of-war between the federal government and a civil liberties watchdog over what CSE must disclose in court. The B.C. Civil Liberties Association is suing the national surveillance agency, claiming it breaches the constitutional rights of Canadians by intercepting their private communications.

4. Visite secrète à Ottawa

Le Journal de Montréal, Andrew McIntosh, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - Le Canada a déjà reçu une délégation d'importants responsables chinois. Ça inclut Fu Kui, qui était ministre adjoint de la commission anticorruption chinoise à Ottawa en juin 2015, selon les documents. Cette visite sur un sujet délicat n'a pas été annoncée publiquement et s'est tenue durant une des périodes les plus tranquilles dans la capitale fédérale, soit la semaine entre la fête nationale du Québec et la fête du Canada. Des procureurs et enquêteurs chinois, accompagnés par Luo Zhaohui, l'ambassadeur de la Chine à Ottawa, ont rencontré de hauts responsables des Affaires mondiales, du ministère de la Justice, de la GRC, des services frontaliers et du ministère de la Sécurité publique. Les Chinois ont alors demandé que le Canada accélère ses procédures judiciaires pour permettre le rapatriement plus rapide des Chinois suspectés de corruption. Le message que le Canada aurait livré aux fonctionnaires chinois était très clair: «Une coopération avec le Canada sur des fugitifs doit se bâtir avec une communication proactive, des protocoles mutuellement acceptables qui rencontrent les normes judiciaires dans les deux pays, et des demandes claires et précises», selon un document résumant la position du Canada.

5. Des agents d'infiltration chinois au Canada ?

Le Journal De Montréal, Andrew McIntosh, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - Des enquêteurs anticorruption chinois qui chassent des suspects en cavale en Amérique du Nord auraient conduit des opérations secrètes au Canada et aux États-Unis pour en forcer certains à se rendre en Chine pour faire face à la justice. Une partie des notes de service estampillées «SECRET» obtenue du ministère des Affaires mondiales par notre Bureau d'enquête s'intitule «Canadiens pincés en vertu de l'Opération Fox Hunt». Les passages qui suivent ce titre ont été entièrement caviardés. Cette opération est une initiative internationale de la Chine afin de débusquer et de traduire en justice des fonctionnaires corrompus et des fraudeurs qui ont fui le pays après avoir commis des crimes. Le président de la Chine, Xi Jinping, et le Parti communiste ont déclenché une vaste campagne anticorruption depuis 2012. M. Xi soutient que la corruption des dirigeants de l'État est une menace pour la survie de son parti. L'Opération Fox Hunt se veut le volet international de cette campagne. Le président pense que si les fonctionnaires corrompus savent qu'ils seront pourchassés partout dans le monde, ils seront moins tentés de voler. David Mulrone, ancien ambassadeur du Canada en Chine de 2009 à 2012, a publié en 2015 un livre sur la Chine intitulé Moyen pouvoir, moyen royaume. Selon M. Mulrone, le Canada doit faire plus pour bloquer l'entrée au pays de l'argent sale de la Chine et on devrait collaborer davantage avec les enquêteurs chinois de Fox Hunt. En 2015, le New York Times et Xinhua, l'agence de nouvelles officielle de la Chine, ont rapporté que les États-Unis avaient expulsé certains enquêteurs du groupe Fox Hunt pour méconduite.

6. Stephane Dion criticized for not protecting freedom of the press

Global News, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - Foreign Affairs Minister Stephane Dion is being criticized for staying silent in a news conference earlier this week after Wang Yi, the Chinese foreign minister, unleashed a tirade on a Canadian reporter. The reporter had asked Dion about human rights in China – specifically the case of Kevin Garratt, a Canadian detained since Aug. 2014 and charged with stealing state secrets. Wang reacted angrily and called the reporter's question "unacceptable" and that it was "full of prejudice against China and arrogance." At the time, Dion didn't defend the journalist. Asked about the incident Friday on a teleconference from Paris, Dion said he felt the journalist could fend for herself. Opposition MPs felt Dion's comments didn't get to the heart of the issue. "Completely beside the point," said Conservative MP Tony Clement. "I think it's a real mistake. I think he missed an opportunity to say in Canada we have a fundamental principle that we adhere to, that all Canadians adhere to," said NDP MP Peter Julian.

7. Cost to kill Saudi arms deal would be huge

Toronto Star, Tonda MacCharles, 2016 06 04

Toronto - The government of Canada would be on the hook for a multibillion-dollar cancellation penalty if it were to break a controversial deal to sell light-armoured vehicles to Saudi Arabia under the contract signed by the previous Conservative government, the Star has learned. The onerous price tag for cancelling might help explain the resistance of the Liberal government to growing calls by critics to cancel the $14.8-billion contract reached by the Tories. However, it also raises questions about whether such a heavy penalty effectively guts the ability of any future government to oversee any human rights violations that could result from deployment of the weaponized vehicles known as LAVs. "I'm not going to comment on the details of the contract. That's for the current Liberal government to respond to," said former Conservative international trade minister Ed Fast, who worked on the deal along with Stephen Harper's foreign affairs minister, John Baird. "All I will say is it is a very significant-sized contract. It has very significant benefits to Canada's economy and I will certainly acknowledge that a termination of the contract unilaterally by one party will have very significant consequences," Fast said in an interview with the Star.

8. Islamophobie : l'arnaque

Journal de Montréal, Richard Martineau, 2016 06 04

Chronique: Juste comme on vient de jeter aux poubelles un grand pan de PL59, le projet de loi du gouvernement Couillard qui devait aider l'État à mieux combattre les discours haineux, la branche ontarienne du Parti libéral du Canada vient d'adopter une résolution demandant au gouvernement Trudeau de mettre sur pied un groupe de travail destiné à lutter contre «toutes les formes d'islamophobie ». Cette résolution (qui constitue une menace pour la liberté d'expression) m'amène à poser trois questions. 1) Pourquoi lutter seulement contre l'islamophobie? L'antisémitisme, ça ne compte pas? L'islam est la seule religion qui est attaquée? 2) L'islam n'est pas une race, c'est une religion. Et une religion, c'est une idée. Vous êtes en train de nous dire qu'on n'aura plus le droit de critiquer une idée au Canada? Au nom de quoi? C'est quoi, la suite? Interdire toute critique du socialisme, du communisme, du libéralisme? 3) Qu'est-ce que ça veut dire, «toutes les formes d'islamophobie»? On ne pourra plus critiquer les islamistes sans se faire traiter de racistes? Cette résolution stupide n'a pas encore été adoptée par les hautes instances du PLC, mais connaissant la personnalité gngnan de Justin Kumbaya Trudeau, ça ne me surprendrait pas qu'elle passe comme du beurre dans la poêle. Je rêve peut-être les yeux ouverts, mais j'aimerais qu'avant de passer au vote, les p'tits amis du premier ministre lisent l'entrevue que Zineb El Rhazoui a accordée à la revue Technikart le 30 mai dernier. Ça les empêcherait de faire une grosse bêtise.

9. Kurdish fighters seek Canadian weaponry

Ottawa Citizen, David Pugliese, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - The Kurds are pushing Canada to supply them with the heavy weapons they need to fight ISIL - as well as to defend themselves after they separate from Iraq. The Canadian military has a stockpile of armoured vehicles that could be of use to the Kurds but has yet to figure out whether to turn those over. The military has in its surplus stocks three Husky armoured vehicles used in Afghanistan to help clear improvised explosive devices and one Buffalo vehicle used for similar operations, according to data compiled by the Canadian Forces. Also surplus are 181 Coyote wheeled armoured vehicles and 46 tracked light armoured vehicles. Some of those upgraded carriers were used in Afghanistan and received good reviews for how they protected troops. The Canadian military also has a variety of graders, tractors and other heavy equipment in its surplus inventory, according to the data. Such equipment could be of use in moving barricades and other fortifications erected by Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant forces. Canada also could provide the Kurds with small arms and anti-tank weapons. The U.S. military already has outfitted such units with mortars, anti-tank weapons and armoured personnel carriers.

10. Trudeau 'dissatisfied' with Chinese minister's behaviour

The Globe and Mail, Michelle Zilio, 2016 06 04

Toronto - Prime Minister Justin Trudeau says the government has relayed its “dissatisfaction” to China after its foreign minister lashed out against a Canadian reporter this week for asking a question about the country’s humanrights record and the imprisonment of a Canadian missionary. Mr. Trudeau emphasized the importance of freedom of the press at a media conference in Winnipeg on Friday, two days after Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi’s outburst at a joint news conference with Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion in Ottawa. “I can confirm that both Minister Dion and department officials at Global Affairs Canada have expressed our dissatisfaction to both the Chinese foreign minister and to the ambassador of China to Canada ... with the way our journalists were treated,” Mr. Trudeau said. “The fact is freedom of the press is extremely important to me ... We know that the job of the media is to ask tough questions and we certainly encourage you to do that.” But Mr. Dion, who stood by without comment as Mr. Wang lost his cool with iPolitics reporter Amanda Connolly, said Friday there is no need for him to defend her.

11. Dion justifie, Trudeau exprime son insatisfaction

La Presse Canadienne, Mélanie Marquis, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - Le ministre canadien des Affaires étrangères, Stéphane Dion, juge qu’il n’avait pas à voler au secours de la journaliste qui a subi les foudres du ministre chinois des Affaires étrangères en conférence de presse à Ottawa, plus tôt cette semaine. En conférence téléphonique vendredi depuis Paris, où il se trouvait pour des discussions entourant le conflit israélo-palestinien, il a affirmé qu’il ne lui appartenait pas de défendre une journaliste en sol canadien, où la liberté de presse est entière. En revanche, ce qu’il appartient à un ministre canadien des Affaires étrangères de faire, c’est de soulever la question des droits de la personne auprès des régimes qui les bafouent — et Stéphane Dion a assuré l’avoir fait « très clairement » auprès de son homologue chinois. Par ailleurs, ultimement, « le ministre (Wang Yi) a fait des déclarations, et c’est à lui à vivre avec ses déclarations », a tranché M. Dion à l’autre bout du fil. Il a nié que l’intention du gouvernement libéral de réchauffer les relations avec la Chine soit à l’origine de cette timidité à intervenir publiquement auprès du représentant du gouvernement chinois.

12. Will defend human rights after Canuck journalist berated

The Canadian Press, Mike Blanchfield, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - Prime Minister Justin Trudeau signalled Friday he'd take a firm stand with China on human rights, revealing how Canada expressed its "dissatisfaction" with the country after its foreign minister publicly berated a Canadian journalist. Trudeau said freedom of the press is very important to him, noting that asking tough questions is a key part of the media's role. The latest controversy comes as Canada and China work toward deepening their economic relationship, including a possible free-trade deal. Trudeau said he'd continue to raise rights questions with China, including the case of a Canadian, Kevin Garratt, who has been jailed in China on espionage charges. In Ottawa Wednesday, Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi blasted a journalist from the web outlet IPolitics who asked about China's human rights record, saying the question reflected "arrogance," was "irresponsible" and "full of prejudice."

13. Cyber-attack has Cowboys Casino scrambling

CBC News, 2016 06 04

Calgary - A cyber-attack at Calgary's Cowboys Casino — potentially breaching the personal information of staff and customers — has the venue scrambling to let people know while taking action to try to prevent it from happening again. The incident, which was detected Monday, could affect about 1,600 casino patrons and 300 staff, the general manager told CBC News Friday. Tyrone Waite says, while he's fairly confident no personal information has left the building, notifying all of the people who might be affected, has been a challenge. "I've had the busiest single week of my life," Waite said. "We got a hold of everybody as soon as we could, the police got involved and the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. They had people, so it was kind of reassuring to know that there are experts out there that can come and help."

14. Iraqi army has been 'crushing' ISIS, Canadian general says

CBC News, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - When Brig.-Gen. Greg Smith first touched down in Iraq in February to advise and assist the Iraqi army in its fight against Islamic State militants, he assumed that ISIS had the upper hand. Instead, what he found — amid the grit and violence and destruction that has consumed large chunks of Iraq and neighbouring Syria — was an Iraqi army that would not back down. "They are crushing them in many ways and pushing them back," said Smith, the Canadian chief of staff of the Combined Joint Forces Land Component Command for Operation Inherent Resolve, the U.S.-led coalition whose mission is to help guide Iraq's own forces. In his first media interview since deploying to Iraq, Smith said he had underestimated the prowess of the Iraqi soldiers. Much of the Iraq army had collapsed and fled when the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant — variously known as ISIL, ISIS or Daesh — swept through swaths of Iraq in 2014, capturing its second-largest city, Mosul. And yet when he arrived, it was the militants of ISIS who were on the run, Smith said. "I have to admit I was very surprised to see how badly they were doing once I got here and started getting read in on operations," he said.

15. Australia's refugee problem

National Post, Joseph Brean, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - When an Iranian man and a Somali woman set themselves on fire in an Australian detention camp on a small Pacific island recently, Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull was coldly pragmatic, urging his country to hold fast to its refusal of all uninvited refugees. Australians "cannot be misty-eyed about this," he said. Likewise, when Papua New Guinea's Supreme Court ruled Australia's camp on its Manus Island is illegal and must close, his resolve persisted. Between PNG and the island nation of Nauru, Australia has diverted and detained more than 1,200 seaborne migrants, leaving these asylum seekers in limbo, and Australians with a big problem. So now, in an election campaign in which both main parties agree on the blanket rejection policy, politicians have been casting around for an international solution, a distant place to unload the wretched of Nauru and Manus, as if to say, "If we will not be misty-eyed, then who might?" Enter Justin Trudeau, dewy-eyed heartthrob of geopolitics, who has been busy telegraphing his benevolence toward refugees since long before his election. As one Australian parliamentarian put it, he is the "obvious" choice. Although Canada has met its goal of welcoming 25,000 Syrian refugees, Trudeau cannot claim to have saved as many as Germany's Chancellor Angela Merkel, who has led the European response, or even Stefan Lofven, the prime minister of Sweden, which has taken the most per capita. But the instant popularity of the Canada plan, despite no official confirmation, seems to suggest Australians are moved more by Trudeau's reputation than his record.

16. Borough divided over Muslim centre

Montreal Gazette, Catherine Solyom, 2016 06 04

Montreal - There's not a lot going on in this forgotten swath of the city, wedged between the former sweatshops on Chabanel St. and the Metropolitan Expressway, dotted with modest homes and apartment buildings, empty warehouses and the occasional massage parlour. But as the neighbourhood continues to evolve, a fight is brewing over one particular locale - 406 Legendre St. W. - as residents prepare for a referendum Sunday on whether to allow an Islamic centre to put down roots. "I love my neighbourhood - vote no" reads one sign stuck to a lamp post, next to another in French, English and Italian. Across the street, another poster reads "I vote yes for social justice. Solidarity with your neighbours cultural centre." Exactly one year ago, borough councillors in Ahuntsic-Cartierville unanimously approved a resolution to change the usage of the locale, to allow it to function as a place of worship in an area otherwise zoned as commercial. But that did not resolve the issue - far from it. The politics of prayer - from Outremont to Ahuntsic The nondescript, brick building, next to what is now the D Vault Spa and massage parlour, had served as a restaurant since 1989. A faded neon sign still boasts Il Collozseo. The centre's request listed the activities to be held at the centre, including religious practices, seminars and conferences, social activities for children, families and seniors, classes in French, Arabic and Bengali, sports for youth, and support for newcomers. At first, there was concern about increased traffic and parking woes - often the arguments presented in Outremont, by residents opposed to synagogues on commercial arteries. Outremont passed a bylaw this week prohibiting the establishment of any places of worship on trendy Laurier and Bernard Aves., ostensibly to help small businesses. A referendum will likely be held there, too.

17. Destruction, displacement of citizens have crippled nation

Toronto Star, Olivia Ward, 2016 06 04

Analysis: To people in the West, the war in Yemen is a small, obscure conflict. But in the past year, it has spiralled into a vicious regional and international war that has driven more than two million people from their homes, killed more than 3,200 civilians and left millions of others hungry and destitute. "The scale of the emergency is tremendous," the UN's Yemen co-ordinator, Jamie McGoldrick, said on Thursday. "The scale of the needs is massive and the depth of the crisis is immeasurable." Belkis Wille of Human Rights Watch has witnessed the descent of the small Middle Eastern country into lower and lower circles of hell, beginning with a post-election breakdown of a power-sharing agreement between factions and accelerated by separatism and a coup by Shiite Houthi rebels. But when Saudi Arabia entered the war in March 2015, alarmed by what it saw as a power grab by Shiite Iran - backing the Houthis - a relentless bombing campaign began, supported by a group of Arab countries, the U.S., Britain and France. The military operation is to reinstate ousted president Abed Rabbo Mansour Hadi, who fled to Saudi Arabia. "There were several raging conflicts before this war," says Wille, who lived and worked in Yemen since in 2013. "But until the Saudis started bombing, in coalition with other countries, there wasn't mass destruction of the infrastructure and crippling of the country."

18. Senate set to make major changes to RCMP union bill

CBC News, Alison Drawford, 2016 06 04

Ottawa - In a signal of how unpredictable the Senate has become, the senator sponsoring the government's bill to extend collective bargaining rights to the RCMP has argued the proposed legislation needs a major overhaul. Liberal-appointed Senator Larry Campbell introduced Bill C-7 in the Upper House Friday. The former Mountie told fellow senators that "this bill is far from perfect and needs careful study to ensure that it gets it right.... This means loosening the grip that senior management has on the rights of members, to help make the force better." Campbell then listed many issues the bill excludes from the bargaining table, such as law enforcement techniques, appraisals, transfers, conduct, uniforms and staffing levels. He said those exemptions perpetuate the RCMP's paramilitary structure, which Campbell blamed as the source of many of the police force's problems.

United States – États-Unis

19. American father and son acquitted this week in UAE are freed from prison

The Washington Post, Carol Morello, 2016 06 04

Washington - Two U.S. citizens have been freed from a prison in the United Arab Emirates following their acquittal this week on charges that they supported militants fighting in Libya, their family said Friday. Kamal Eldarat, 59, was released late Thursday, according to his daughter, Amal Eldarat. His son, Mohamed, 34, was released Tuesday, she said. The two men were detained for 21 months following a 2014 security sweep that rounded up almost a dozen Libyans and men of Libyan heritage living in the UAE. Initially held incommunicado, the Eldarats went on trial in January on charges of supporting terrorists in Libya during the 2011 Arab Spring rebellion against dictator Moammar Gaddafi. The terrorism charges eventually were dropped, but they still faced charges of providing supplies to armed groups in Libya and raising donations without government permission. The Eldarats and two others - a Libyan Canadian and a Libyan resident of the UAE - were acquitted Monday, though they were led from the courtroom in handcuffs and returned to prison while their releases were finalized. Salim Alaradi, the Canadian citizen, was released Tuesday and has already flown out of the country to be reunited with his family.

20. After a Detainee Died at a Black Site, the CIA Blamed Training From the Federal Bureau of Prisons

Vice News, Jason Leopold, 2016 06 04

Washington - In late 2002, the CIA asked the Federal Bureau of Prisons (BOP) to send a training team to a CIA black site in Northern Kabul, Afghanistan, code-named COBALT. While there, the BOP team instructed guards on the proper use of a restraining technique against detainees called "short chaining," also referred to as short shackling. Not long after the BOP team left the black site, the technique was used on an Afghan militant and suspected al-Qaeda operative named Gul Rahman, who had been captured by the Pakistani government during a raid a month earlier. Deemed a high-value detainee, he was then taken to COBALT. While being held captive at the black site, the CIA said Rahman became violent, and on numerous occasions had threatened to kill guards. On November 19, 2002, at about 3pm, guards brought food to Rahman's cell. The last meal he'd eaten had been the day before. When the guards entered Rahman's cell, he was nude from the waist down. The captive again threatened to kill the guards and proceeded to throw his food, water bottle, and waste bucket at them. The guards, acting on BOP recommendations, shackled Rahman to the wall "in a short chain position, which prevents prisoners from standing upright." Rahman was chained to a "metal grill located low on the wall of his cell" on orders from the CIA officer who managed the black site. The next morning, at about 10am, Rahman was seen lying on his side. The guards tried to rouse Rahman by banging on his cell door with their nightsticks. But he didn't move. The guards then "notified several CIA officers who were present at the facility in conjunction with the interrogation of another prisoner."

21. Man shot near White House is charged

The Washington Post, Spencer S. Hsu & Peter Hermann, 2016 06 04

Washington - As he waited to be taken to a hospital after being shot once in the chest by a Secret Service agent, a Pennsylvania man answered a question put to him by a nearby officer, court files show. Why, the Secret Service officer asked, had he come to the White House? "I came here to shoot people," Jesse A. Olivieri replied, according to court records. On Friday, Olivieri, 31, of Ashland, Pa., was charged with a felony after allegedly approaching a guard booth outside the White House on May 20, pistol in hand and refusing to drop the gun after officers repeatedly ordered him to do so. Olivieri remained hospitalized Friday, and no court appearance on the charge has been set. The court files offered no other details on what may have drawn Olivieri to the booth near the Ellipse at the corner of 17th and E streets NW, carrying a silver .22-caliber Ruger handgun, as officers stated. The incident just after 3 p.m. on a Friday prompted a White House lockdown. President Obama was not at the complex at the time, and Vice President Biden was secured inside, authorities said.

22. Republicans Seek Documents On Scrubbing of Iran Video

The Wall Street Journal, Jay Solomon and Felicia Schwartz, 2016 06 04

Washington - State Department officials tried Friday to address the widening fallout from their admission this past week that a videotaped press briefing had been doctored to remove contradictory public statements about the Obama administration's secret negotiations with Iran. Congressional Republicans demanded documents related to the episode and called Friday for an investigation by the department's inspector general. But senior Obama administration officials were unclear about just how much cooperation they would lend to Capitol Hill investigators or whether an additional internal review was warranted. State Department officials confirmed this past week that a lower-level civil servant was asked to expunge roughly nine minutes of tape from a Dec. 2, 2013, briefing during which a Fox News reporter quizzed then-State Department spokeswoman, Jen Psaki, about whether the administration had lied about holding secret negotiations with Iran over its nuclear program. Earlier that year, Ms. Psaki's predecessor said there had been no secret, one-on-one talks between the U.S. and Iran. Asked about that assertion, Ms. Psaki replied indirectly, saying that sometimes "diplomacy needs privacy." That was the portion deleted from the video, though it remained in a text transcript. State Department officials have said Ms. Psaki didn't herself order the doctored of the tape. But they haven't determined which official in the State Department's Bureau of Public Affairs made the request, and have suggested they might never find out.

23. The Benghazi Committee's Dead End

The New York Times, 2016 06 04

Editorial: After running a congressional oversight committee like a Republican opposition research shop for more than two years, Representative Trey Gowdy appears to be gearing up for the finale. Democrats on the Select Committee on Benghazi expect that a final report will drop soon, just as Hillary Clinton appears poised to clinch the Democratic nomination. If things had gone his way, Mr. Gowdy, a former federal prosecutor, would have found a way to torpedo Mrs. Clinton's presidential ambitions. After all, Republican lawmakers have admitted that this is precisely what they set out to do. But things have not gone well for Mr. Gowdy, who has run the investigation with the dexterity and grace of a blindfolded toddler swinging at a piñata. Having pored over reams of documents, grilled Mrs. Clinton in an 11-hour session in October and hauled in more than 100 people for interviews, the Republicans seem to have come up with nothing.

24. It's Rucksacks and Foxholes as Army Goes Old School for New Conflicts

The New York Times, Michael S. Schmidt, 2016 06 04

Fort Stewart, Ga - When Staff Sgt. Chris Brown headed into the swamplands of Georgia for a military training exercise early this spring, he found himself missing his time in Iraq and Afghanistan — and the relative comforts he had enjoyed there at the height of both wars. Without running water, he now had to bathe with baby wipes and shave without a mirror. He had no idea how his favorite basketball team, the Golden State Warriors, was faring in the playoffs. And the food was so bad that he relied on peanut butter crackers and lost 10 pounds. "When we were out there, they tasted amazing," said Sergeant Brown, who went to the gym twice a day when he was overseas to make sure he did not put on too much weight from the dining hall and its honey buns and muffins. While some American military personnel, in particular Special Operations forces and a number of Marine and conventional Army units, operated out of small, spartan outposts in Iraq and Afghanistan, the bulk of Army troops lived on bases that had running water, electricity and housing units. Some larger bases even had wireless internet, televisions, gyms and coffee shops. Civilian contractors guarded the bases, cooked meals and transported ammunition, food and fuel.

But now that the American footprint in Iraq and Afghanistan is far smaller, the Army has begun planning for its next conflict. No matter where and when it occurs, it will almost certainly be fought under more austere conditions. To prepare for this, nearly all Army units are refocusing their training on being self-sustaining, or “expeditionary,” as their commanders put it.

25. U.S. Sanctions Expected to Hit Small Banks ' Business With North Korea

The New York Times, Jane Perlez, 2016 06 04

Beijing - Chinese banks that do business with North Korea stand to lose several billion dollars in the wake of new United States Treasury Department sanctions on all such foreign institutions, analysts said on Friday. The new sanctions were announced days before a visit to Beijing by Secretary of the Treasury Jacob J. Lew and Secretary of State John Kerry for an annual meeting on economic and security issues that starts on Monday and whose agenda this year includes North Korea. The Chinese banks most affected by the sanctions will be comparatively small regional ones that facilitate the bulk of North Korea's business in China, the analysts said. Major banks in China suspended their North Korean accounts in 2013 after the Chinese president, Xi Jinping, criticized a nuclear test conducted by the North that year, the analysts said. The Bank of China, for example, which has been expanding its operations in the United States and did not want its American business tainted by cooperation with North Korea, closed the account of North Korea's most important financial institution, the Foreign Trade Bank, in May 2013.

26. 3 Somali-Americans Found Guilty of Trying to Join Islamic State

The New York Times, Jack Healy, 2016 06 04

Minneapolis - Three Somali-American friends were found guilty on Friday of federal charges that they tried to travel to Syria to join the Islamic State, a plan that prosecutors said unfolded through propaganda videos and social media exchanges, and while they played basketball and paintball. The verdicts against the three men — Guled Omar, 21; Abdirahman Daud, 22; and Mohamed Farah, 22 — came after an emotional 17-day trial in which onetime friends from Minnesota's large Somali community testified against one another, family members squabbled in the hallways and spectators were occasionally ejected from the courtroom. On Friday, the three defendants — who had all pleaded not guilty — sat impassively in dark suits as a court clerk began to read a litany of “guilty” verdicts, the most serious being conspiracy to commit murder overseas. They were also convicted of conspiring to provide material support to a terrorist organization. The sobs of family members broke the silence. One woman, weeping, rushed from the courtroom, and others used their colorful head scarves to wipe their eyes and cover their faces. As the three men were led from the courtroom, Mr. Farah waved to the relatives and supporters in the gallery.

United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni

27. Search for UK jihadi in Isis video to use voice and vein recognition software

The Guardian, Matthew Weaver, 2016 06 04

London - Intelligence experts hunting the unknown British jihadi and a young child shown in a new Islamic State murder video will use the same identification techniques used to track down Mohammed Emwazi, who was killed in a targeted US drone strike in November. It took months to publicly identify Emwazi, also known as Jihadi John, after he appeared behind a mask in a series of videos showing the execution of western hostages in 2014 and 2015. In a seemingly deliberate attempt to replicate the Emwazi videos, the new film, which purports to be a trailer for a longer Isis propaganda video, focuses on a man with a British accent before showing the apparent murder of five hostages accused of being UK spies. The video has sparked a manhunt that will focus on the accent of the unknown militant and what can be seen of his face, which will be compared with what is known about hundreds of suspected British extremists who have travelled to Syria and Iraq. The unmasked young boy in the video, who also sounded English, will be easier to identify, according to Shiraz Maher, an expert on British jihadis and senior research fellow at the International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation at Kings College London.

28. What is the risk of a Brussels-style attack by Islamic State in the UK?

The Guardian, Ewen MacAskill, 2016 06 04

London - The British security agencies worry that Islamic State is plotting large-scale terrorist attacks in the UK by coordinated commando-style groups similar to those in Brussels and Paris. Isis propaganda videos have frequently identified the UK as a major target and intelligence officers have repeatedly said, as a caveat, that it is only a matter of time before there is a successful attack in the country, whether lone wolf-style or a large-scale assault. The agencies stopped seven plots last year but have emphasised again and again that they do not believe their luck – and operational efficiency – is going to hold forever. The threat level in the UK is “severe”, meaning an attack is designated as “highly likely”. That sounds alarming but it would need specific information to raise that to the next and highest category, “critical”, and the agencies have no such intelligence.

29. London council says CCTV cameras attract terrorists

The Independent, Caroline Mortimer, 2016 06 04

London - The presence of CCTV cameras may encourage terrorists to attack London because they generate publicity, a council in the capital has claimed. Westminster Council made the suggestion in defence of its move to scrap its entire CCTV crime network. The Conservative-controlled borough plans to scrap its crime and disorder cameras to save money after seeing its funding from central Government slashed by nearly £100m, but insists counter-terrorism operations will not be adversely affected. In a report to the council's cabinet members, civil servants claimed they had been advised by "partners" that terrorists were undeterred by the presence of CCTV cameras and could even encourage them to strike major London landmarks because of the extra publicity it would generate. The report, which will be voted on by the cabinet on Monday, said: "The council has engaged with senior figures working in counter-terrorism from the Metropolitan Police and other authorities. "Discussions with partners have indicated that CCTV is highly unlikely to prevent a major terrorist atrocity similar to that seen in the Paris attacks where perpetrators may actually seek the publicity afforded by camera coverage and are certainly not deterred by its presence." A spokesman for Westminster Council said it had consulted with the "usual people you would expect us to talk to" including "various departments within the Metropolitan Police and the Home Office" but declined to give specific details. He said: "We have been speaking to the police, Government, including the security services, over a number of years about the issues so they have been fully informed. "Whilst anti-terrorism work is the responsibility of the Metropolitan Police and the security services, regardless of any decision by Westminster Council, there will still be a very large number of CCTV cameras operational in central London that will remain available to the police for their use."

Americas

30. Siege cops in a failure to communicate

The Australian, Ean Higgins, 2016 06 04

Canberra - Soon after 2am, Lindt cafe manager Tori Johnson knew there was a good chance he was about to die, unless the heavily armed police just outside did something smart quick. The crazed gunman who had taken over the up-market establishment in Sydney's Martin Place at 9.45am the previous day, Man Haron Monis, who said he acted for Islamic State, was becoming increasingly agitated. Most of his 18 hostages had progressively flown the coop, and the police did not seem to be responding to any of Monis's demands, even the more modest ones such as that the Christmas lights in Martin Place be turned off. Hostage Pushpendu Ghosh told journalists in the weeks after the siege on December 15 and 16, 2014, that along with others, Johnson had some hours earlier been allowed by Monis to call loved ones. "It really felt very bad watching Tori speak to his family," Ghosh said. "He was sobbing, and he was crying, and he realised — is the moment near? Is it going to be very quick now?" At 2.03am, Monis fired a shot in the general direction of the last lot of escaping hostages. Police tactical response officers, armed to the teeth with automatic weapons, flashbangs and bulletproof shields, still waited outside, while other officers in an observation post watched Monis's every move.

Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande

31. Siege cops in a failure to communicate

The Australian, Ean Higgins, 2016 06 04

Canberra - Soon after 2am, Lindt cafe manager Tori Johnson knew there was a good chance he was about to die, unless the heavily armed police just outside did something smart quick. The crazed gunman who had taken over the up-market establishment in Sydney's Martin Place at 9.45am the previous day, Man Haron Monis, who said he acted for Islamic State, was becoming increasingly agitated. Most of his 18 hostages had progressively flown the coop, and the police did not seem to be responding to any of Monis's demands, even the more modest ones such as that the Christmas lights in Martin Place be turned off. Hostage Pushpendu Ghosh told journalists in the weeks after the siege on December 15 and 16, 2014, that along with others, Johnson had some hours earlier been allowed by Monis to call loved ones. "It really felt very bad watching Tori speak to his family," Ghosh said. "He was sobbing, and he was crying, and he realised — is the moment near? Is it going to be very quick now?" At 2.03am, Monis fired a shot in the general direction of the last lot of escaping hostages. Police tactical response officers, armed to the teeth with automatic weapons, flashbangs and bulletproof shields, still waited outside, while other officers in an observation post watched Monis's every move.

Asia –Asie

32. U.S. puts huawei under microscope

South China Morning Post, He Huifeng and Bien Perez, 2016 06 04

Beijing - China's massive telecommunications equipment manufacturing sector appears to have been put under a microscope by Washington, after industry giant Huawei Technologies was queried about its possible breach of longstanding trade sanctions on countries like Iran and North Korea. The inquiry made by the US Department of Commerce followed the agency's investigation of Hong Kong-listed ZTE earlier this year over the alleged sale of telecommunications equipment containing US hi-tech components to Iran in 2011. The Commerce Department had requested that Huawei executives at the company's US headquarters in the city of Plano, Texas, turn over all information regarding the shipment of telecommunications equipment with American technology to nations like Iran, North Korea, Syria and Cuba which were under rigid US export controls, according to the New York Times, which first reported the story. The agency sent Huawei an administrative subpoena, which means that the company has not been accused of any wrongdoing. It is a process that other Chinese telecommunications gear makers could face. "Presumably, the subpoena is the first step before more serious action by the US," said Paul Haswell, a partner at international law firm Pinsent Masons in Hong Kong. "It's a final chance for Huawei to confess to any wrongdoing before such action is taken, although we have seen no evidence that the company is in breach."

33. South China Sea tensions top Asia security summit in Singapore

Deutsche Welle, Staff Writer, 2016 06 04

Washington - US Secretary of Defense Ash Carter has warned China against any provocative behavior in the contested South China Sea but he also advocated greater military cooperation with the Asian giant. Carter said at an Asia security conference in Singapore on Saturday that Beijing risked erecting a "Great Wall of self-isolation" through its building of military outposts on reefs and islands in contest waters. Attempting to reclaim land and build military outposts in the contested Scarborough Shoal, an outcrop also claimed by the Philippines, would have unspecified consequences, Carter said. "I hope that this development doesn't occur, because it will result in actions being taken by both the United States and... by others in the region which would have the effect of not only increasing tensions but isolating China," Carter told the Shangri-La Dialogue, a regional security forum in Singapore. He added that the United States would remain the "most powerful military and main underwriter of security" in the region for decades to come. The Pentagon chief spoke of forming a "security network" in the Asia-Pacific that could include China. Admiral Harry Harris, the head of US Pacific Command, told reporters that the US wanted to cooperate with all countries in the region but also needed to be prepared.

34. For Wang, the only reaction was overreaction

The Globe and Mail, Nathan Vanderklippe, 2016 06 04

Beijing - To those watching in Canada, China's pen-waving Foreign Minister looked "boorish" and "unpleasant." That's how David Mulroney, the former Canadian ambassador to China, described Wang Yi's angry departure this week from the typical blandishments of diplomacy. But it's unlikely Mr. Wang had only his Canadian audience in mind when he began his tempestuous response to a question on Chinese human rights, a performance that won him accolades at home. "You have no right to speak on this. The Chinese people have the right to speak," he said in Ottawa, according to a full translation completed by The New York Times. In a strikingly direct attack, he called a reporter prejudiced and arrogant before urging: "Please don't raise such irresponsible questions again." Mr. Wang could easily have ignored the question, which had been directed at Foreign Affairs Minister Stephane Dion. Or he could have skipped the insults and stuck to the most factual elements of his response, the idea that China's protection of human rights is evident because it has made many of its people wealthy and enshrined rights protection in its constitution.

35. China says it will ignore South China Sea lawsuit decision

Associated Press, Vijay Joshi, 2016 06 04

Singapore - China said Saturday that it will ignore the decision of an international arbitration panel in the Philippines' lawsuit against Beijing's sweeping territorial claims in the South China Sea. "To put it simply, the arbitration case actually has gone beyond the jurisdiction" of a U.N. arbitration panel, said Rear Adm. Guan Youfei, director of the foreign affairs office of China's National Defense Ministry. The Philippines has filed a case in the United Nations under the U.N. Convention on Law of the Sea, questioning China's territorial claim in the South China Sea. An arbitration panel is expected to rule on the case soon. The Permanent Court of Arbitration ruled last year that it has jurisdiction over the case despite China's rejection. "Because the territorial and sovereignty disputes have not been subjected to the arbitration, we think the arbitration is illegal," Guan told reporters on the sidelines of an international security conference here. "Therefore, we do not participate in it nor accept it." Guan's statement is a reiteration of China's longstanding position that it wants to settle its disputes with various countries on a bilateral basis and that it will not accept international mediation.

36. S. Korea, U.S., Japan defense chiefs agree to strengthen joint defense

Yonhap English News, 2016 06 04

Singapore - The defense chiefs of South Korea, the United States and Japan reaffirmed Saturday their commitment to work together to counter North Korea's nuclear and missile threats, Seoul's defense ministry said. The defense ministers from the three countries, Han Min-koo, Ash Carter and Gen Nakatani, came to an understanding that the partners "are facing common challenges including North Korea's nuclear and missile threats," the Ministry of National Defense said after a three-way meeting in Singapore. The talks were held on the sidelines of the Asia Security Summit, also known as the Shangri-La Dialogue. Han, Carter and Nakatani reaffirmed their pledge to step up collaboration under the framework of the annual Defense Trilateral Talks, a deputy minister-level consultative body, especially on the crucial sector of information sharing on North Korean security threats, the ministry said in a statement. In late 2014, the three military partners also signed the Trilateral Information Sharing Arrangement to better circulate military intelligence on North Korea's nuclear and missile programs in a bid to jointly counter the communist country. During Saturday's meeting that came after a one-year hiatus, the defense chiefs discussed their upcoming joint Pacific Dragon anti-ballistic missile defense exercise set to take place in the waters off Hawaii ahead of the multilateral Rim of the Pacific exercise (RIMPAC), scheduled to run from June 30 to Aug. 4.

37. S. Korea-China defense talks expose gap over THAAD deployment

Yonhap English News, Park Boram, 2016 06 04

Singapore - China expressed its uncompromising opposition to South Korea moving forward with the deployment of a sophisticated U.S. air defense shield on its soil during their high-level defense talks on Saturday, the latest sign that the issue will likely remain a thorn in the otherwise close relationship between the two neighboring countries. "China presented its previous stance on Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD)," South Korean Defense Minister Han Min-koo said after his meeting with China's deputy chief of the joint staff Adm. Sun Jianguo on the sidelines of Asia Security Summit in Singapore. The Chinese official indicated that the deployment of THAAD infringes China's strategic interests, Han said. Seoul's defense chief said he expressed his view that Beijing is overstating the significance of THAAD's possible deployment, making clear he did not share Chinese position on this matter. The top policymaker quoted himself as telling Sun "The discussion of THAAD deployment originated in a move to defend against North Korea's nuclear and missile threats." Han also offered to provide technical descriptions of the U.S. defense system to defuse any Chinese security anxieties.

38. Chinese admiral expects NATO to be active contributor to regional, world stability

Xinhua News Agency, 2016 06 04

Singapore - A senior Chinese military official said on Saturday that China would like to see NATO play as an active contributor to regional and world peace and stability. When meeting with Chairman of the NATO Military Committee Petr Pavel, Admiral Sun Jianguo, deputy chief of the Joint Staff Department of China's Central Military Commission, said China and the Chinese military attach great importance to the relations with NATO. The Chinese admiral made a four-point proposal on future military exchanges between China and NATO. He suggested maintaining policy dialogue, enhancing personnel exchanges, strengthening multilateral cooperation as well as stepping up cooperation in unconventional security areas, such as coordination in escorting mission against piracy and anti-terrorism in Afghanistan.

39. NSA whistleblower Snowden says U.S. government carrying out mass surveillance in Japan

The Japan Times, Shusuke Murai, 2016 06 04

Tokyo - Edward Snowden, a fugitive and former U.S. National Security Agency contractor who leaked information from the agency in 2013, warned Saturday that all people in Japan are subjected to mass surveillance initiated by the U.S. government. Snowden lived in Japan from 2009 to 2011. At the time, he was an employee with computer giant Dell Inc. contracted out to the NSA, where he worked on a surveillance program at the U.S.'s Yokota airbase in Fussa, Tokyo. "They know your ... religious faith. They know whom you love. They know whom you care about ... This was our job to establish the pattern of life of any individuals," he said. Snowden made the comments via video conferencing from Russia where he resides to avoid U.S. criminal prosecution, during a symposium Saturday in Tokyo on surveillance in contemporary society. More than 200 people, including lawyers, journalists, and others, attended the discussion held in an auditorium on the University of Tokyo campus. Snowden, 32, said all the information that people input via cellphones or computers can be legally collected by the U.S. intelligence agency for analysis.

40. S. Korea spurns Japan's suggestion for military intelligence pact: Seoul
Yonhap English News, 2016 06 04

Singapore - South Korea turned down Japan's suggestion to forge a controversial military intelligence sharing pact on Saturday during the countries' defense ministerial talks held in Singapore, Seoul's defense ministry said. "Defense Minister Gen Natakani briefly mentioned the importance of the General Security of Military Information Agreement (GSOMIA)," the Ministry of National Defense said after the meeting between Defense Minister Han Min-koo and the Japanese counterpart held on the occasion of the Asia Security Summit, or Shangri-La Dialogue. In a virtual rejection of the suggestion, Han said "Paving the way to lay the foundation for the GSOMIA is (more) important," adding that more mutual efforts are needed for a signing to take place, according to the ministry. The ministers' exchange offered a glimpse into still uncomfortable relations that can be traced back to Japan's colonization of the Korean Peninsula in the early half of the 20th century. The neighbors had attempted to sign the GSOMIA in 2012, but South Korea backtracked amid widespread public criticism of the sensitive information sharing pact with its former colonial ruler.

41. Security tight in Beijing on Tiananmen crackdown anniversary
Associated Press, 2016 06 04

Beijing- China tightened security around Beijing's Tiananmen Square on Saturday on the 27th anniversary of the bloody military crackdown on student-led pro-democracy protests, pointing to the enduring sensitivity over the events among the Communist Party leadership. Police checked IDs and searched the bags of anyone seeking to enter the environs of the vast public space in the center of the capital where thousands of students, workers and ordinary citizens gathered in 1989 to demand political reforms. Journalists from The Associated Press were stopped, filmed and ultimately forced to leave the area, ostensibly for lacking proper permission. Hundreds, possibly thousands, of people were killed as tanks and troops converged on Beijing on the night of June 3-4, 1989. The topic remains taboo in China and any form of commemoration, whether public or private, is banned. Memorials were planned in the semi-autonomous Chinese territory of Hong Kong and on the self-governing island democracy of Taiwan, where some former student leaders have found refuge. The Taiwanese Cabinet office responsible for ties with China issued a statement urging Beijing to "face up and heal the historical scars of June 4."

42. U.S. flexes muscles as Asia worries about South China Sea row
Reuters News, 2016 05 04

Singapore - The United States stepped up pressure on China on Saturday to rein in its actions in the South China Sea, with top defense officials underlining Washington's military superiority and vowing to remain the main guarantor of Asian security for decades to come. Defense Secretary Ash Carter said the U.S.

approach to the Asia-Pacific remained "one of commitment, strength and inclusion", but he also warned China against provocative behavior in the South China Sea. Any action by China to reclaim land in the Scarborough Shoal, an outcrop in the disputed sea, would have consequences, Carter said. "I hope that this development doesn't occur, because it will result in actions being taken by the both United States and ... by others in the region which would have the effect of not only increasing tensions but isolating China," Carter told the Shangri-La Dialogue, a regional security forum in Singapore. "The United States will remain the most powerful military and main underwriter of security in the region for decades to come – and there should be no doubt about that." The South China Sea has become a flashpoint between the United States, which increased its focus on the Asia-Pacific under President Barack Obama's "pivot", and China, which is projecting ever greater economic, political and military power in the region.

43. Noy gets briefing on moves to get Abu hostages

The Philippine Star, Aurea Calica, 2016 06 04

Manila - President Aquino has been briefed anew on the operations to rescue the remaining hostages of the Abu Sayyaf. The President met with the security cluster of the Cabinet on Thursday and received an update on the ongoing military and law enforcement operations, Presidential Communications Operations Office Secretary Herminio Coloma Jr. said yesterday. The security cluster, which is chaired by the Office of the Executive Secretary, consists of the departments of the interior and local government, foreign affairs, national defense and justice as well as the Office of the Presidential Adviser on the Peace Process and National Security Council.

44. Troops overrun terrorist camp in Lanao

The Philippine Star, Roel Pareño, 2016 05 04

Zamboanga City - Government troops have overrun another camp of a terrorist group associated with the Jemaah Islamiyah in Butig, Lanao del Sur yesterday. Lt. Gen. Mayoralgo de la Cruz, commanding officer of the Western Mindanao Command, said Camp Darul Imam in Barangay Sandag was seized without resistance. On Wednesday, Army troopers also recovered a training camp of the group led by the Maute brothers in Barangay Poctan.

45. South-east Asian defence chiefs call for greater cooperation to fight ISIS

The Straits Times, Lim Yan Liang, 2016 06 04

Singapore - South-east Asian defence ministers on Saturday (June 4) called for greater cooperation and action among countries to dismantle the Islamic State in Syria and Iraq (ISIS) terrorist group and the persistent threat it poses to global security. Calling the fight against ISIS "one of our greatest challenges today", Malaysian Defence Minister Hishammuddin Hussein noted that the terror outfit cannot be defeated using a piecemeal approach or knee-jerk reactions. "We need a different strategy, a more tailored approach that moves past outmoded forms of conventional warfare," Mr Hishammuddin said at the Shangri-La Dialogue, an annual security summit for defence ministers, scholars and business executives from Asia-Pacific and beyond organised by the International Institute for Strategic Studies. Indonesian Defence Minister Ryamizard Ryacudu called on countries in the region to make a "more serious and concerted effort" to defeat ISIS. Military operations to destroy the group's logistic and financial strength "is a right action to weaken the central gravity of ISIS", but that alone is not enough, said Mr Ryacudu.

46. 'Focus on LTTE took away Colombo's attention from emerging threats'

The Hindu, T. Ramakrishnan, 2016 06 04

Colombo - Sri Lankan security services' focus on a possible resurgence of the Liberation Tigers of the Tamil Eelam (LTTE) has affected the government's attention to emerging threats such as reports of Sri Lankan nationals joining the Islamic State (IS), the U.S. State Department has said in its 2015 report on terrorism. The U.S. referred to reports of social media announcing the death of a possible citizen of the island nation fighting with the jihadists dying in coalition air strikes in Syria. The deceased's brother-in-law was also identified as a member of the terrorist group and is believed to be in the war-torn country. Defence Secretary Karunasena Hettiarachchi, however, said that though there were reports of Sri Lankans joining IS, there was no concrete evidence to suggest IS was operating in Sri Lanka. The report also points out that while the Maithripala Sirisena government maintained a "strong military presence" in post-conflict areas and continued to voice concerns about the possible re-emergence of pro-LTTE sympathisers, the government "emphasised its commitment to seek political reconciliation with the Tamil community, including through talks with the Tamil diaspora."

47. Sub-inspector, constable killed in terrorist attack in Anantnag

Asian News International, 2016 06 04

Anantnag - A Jammu and Kashmir Police sub-inspector and a constable were killed on Saturday when terrorists attacked a police party in Anantnag district. The incident took place a day after when two Border Security Force (BSF) jawans were killed in a terrorist attack in Bijbehara on Friday. Lamenting the yesterday's killing, Jammu and Kashmir Chief Minister Mehbooba Mufti such violent incidents hamper peace efforts between India and its neighbour.

48. 2 policemen killed in terrorist attack in Indian-controlled Kashmir

Xinhua News Agency, Jit Kumar, 2016 06 04

New Delhi - Two policemen, including an officer, were killed in a militant attack in Indian-controlled Kashmir's Anantnag district Saturday, in the second such terror attack on Indian security forces in the area in the past 24 hours. "The two policemen were deployed near a bus stand in Anantnag when militants suddenly opened indiscriminate fire on them, killing both on the spot. They were rushed to a hospital where both were declared brought dead," he said, on condition of anonymity.

49. Militants planning to attack Amarnath Yatra: BSF

Indo-Asian News Service, 2016 06 04

Srinagar - A top Border Security Force (BSF) officer said on Saturday that there are intelligence reports about militants planning to attack the forthcoming Amarnath Yatra in Jammu and Kashmir. At the wreath laying ceremony in Srinagar to honour three BSF troopers martyred in an attack by guerrilla's at Bijbehara on Friday, BSF Director General K.K. Sharma told reporters: "Yesterday's attack on our convoy was sudden and unexpected. That is why we suffered casualties." "There are intelligence reports that militants have plans to attack the forthcoming Amarnath Yatra but we have made adequate arrangements to ensure an incident free Yatra this year also."

Eastern Europe – Europe de l'Est

50. Moscow Open to Kiev Agreeing on Access to Russian Border With Donbass

Sputnik News Service, 2016 06 04

Moscow - Moscow is not against Kiev trying to agree with the self-proclaimed people's republics of Donetsk and Lugansk (DPR and LPR) in Ukraine's southeast on getting access to the Russian-Ukrainian border, Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said. "In what concerns access to borders with the Russian Federation of republics within Ukraine: if Ukrainians agree with Donetsk and Lugansk, we are all for it. But it has to be specifically an agreement with them, because they have certainly not forgotten the threats that came and continue to come from Kiev," Lavrov told Russia's Vesti v Subbotu weekly news program.

51. Ukraine says arrested a man reportedly planning attack in France

Reuters News, 2016 06 04

Kiev - A Frenchman reported to be carrying weapons and explosives for a planned attack in France was arrested on the Ukrainian-Polish border in late May, the Ukrainian Border Guard said on Saturday. French broadcaster M6 reported on Friday that the 25-year-old was arrested by Ukrainian border guards with an arsenal of weapons and explosives including rocket launchers and Kalashnikov assault rifles in his vehicle. A spokesman for the Ukrainian Border Guard, Oleg Slobodyan, confirmed the arrest. A spokeswoman for Ukraine's SBU security service declined to comment. The man, who is currently being held by Ukrainian authorities pending a possible extradition request from Paris, was planning an attack in France, M6 reported. The French interior ministry said the case is being handled by judicial officials. The Polish border guard declined to comment. Security officials in Europe are on high alert after gunmen killed 130 in Paris in November last year and suicide bombers blew themselves up at Brussels airport and on the metro in March, killing 32.

Africa – Afrique

52. Les Américains louent l'expérience algérienne

El Watan, Said Rabia, 2015 06 04

Alger - Le département d'Etat américain a publié, jeudi dernier, son rapport annuel par pays sur le terrorisme durant l'année 2015. Soulignant que «l'Algérie est restée un important partenaire dans la lutte contre le terrorisme, et louant son expérience en la matière», le document note que «le gouvernement algérien a consacré des ressources considérables au développement de sa politique sécuritaire». Plusieurs forces sont impliquées dans la lutte contre le terrorisme. Le département d'Etat américain cite l'armée, la Gendarmerie nationale, les garde-frontières, le Département du renseignement et de la sécurité (DRS) sous l'égide du ministère de la Défense nationale, et la police nationale ou Direction générale de la Sûreté nationale (DGSN) sous la responsabilité du ministère de l'Intérieur. Pour le département d'Etat, Al Qaïda au Maghreb islamique (AQMI), l'Unité et le djihad en Afrique de l'Ouest (Mujao) basées au Mali, Al Murabitoun et Jund Al Khilafah étaient des menaces terroristes actives en Algérie et le long de ses frontières.

53. L'ONU veut renforcer sa mission au Mali

El Watan, journaliste maison, 2016 06 04

Gao - L'organisation des Nations unies a demandé jeudi 2500 soldats et policiers supplémentaires pour renforcer sa mission au Mali, a indiqué le porte-parole de l'organisation. «La mission de l'ONU au Mali (Minusma) a aussi besoin de moyens aériens et de forces de réaction rapide après une série d'attaques meurtrières qui ont fait 12 morts au cours du seul mois de mai», a précisé le porte-parole de l'ONU, Stéphane Dujarric. Le Conseil de sécurité doit étudier ce renforcement de la Minusma et un allongement de son mandat lors d'un vote prévu le 29 juin. «Il est évident que la sécurité en plusieurs endroits du Mali se détériore. Le personnel de l'ONU l'a payé de son sang», a déclaré M. Dujarric. «Nous parlons de forces de réaction rapide, de moyens aériens, de soldats supplémentaires spécialisés dans les convois hautement sécurisés», a-t-il noté. Le secrétaire général de l'ONU, Ban Ki-moon, a proposé d'ajouter 2049 soldats et 480 policiers à la Minusma, qui compte déjà 12 000 éléments.

Iraq/Iran

54. Senior Cleric Calls for Iranian MPs' Vigilance against US Penetration Policies

Fars News Agencies, 2015 06 04

Tehran - Tehran's provisional Friday Prayers leader Hojjatoleslam Kazzem Seddiqi called on Iranian parliamentarians to keep vigilant against the plots hatched by the US officials to influence and penetrate into the country's decision-making bodies through the recent nuclear agreement between Tehran and the world powers. Addressing a large and fervent congregation of the people on Tehran University campus on Friday, Hojjatoleslam Seddiqi said, "New Members of the parliament should spare no efforts to safeguard the significant achievements of the Islamic Revolution." He reiterated that Supreme Leader of the Islamic Revolution Ayatollah Seyed Ali Khamenei expects the parliament to confront the US' penetration plots and handle the economic situation in the post-sanction era. Iran and the world powers reached a final agreement in Vienna on July 14 to end a 13-year-old nuclear standoff. In relevant remarks some days after the agreement, Iran's Supreme Leader underlined the nuclear agreement between Tehran and the six world powers would not change Iran's policy towards the US.

55. Shiite militias inflame sectarian rifts in Iraq

The Washington Post, Hugh Naylor & Mustafa Salim, 2016 06 04

Baghdad - Iraqi soldiers are battling to drive the Islamic State out of Fallujah. But just beyond the edges of the flash point city are Shiite militias that many Iraqis fear could undermine the campaign against the radical group. These government-aligned militiamen have helped push the Islamic State out of key areas of the country but also have become a complication for the U.S.-backed military coalition assembled to destroy the hard-line Sunni group. They filled an important void left by Iraq's weakened armed forces, but their religiously motivated agenda has aggravated Iraq's combustible sectarian divisions. That is particularly problematic in a place like Fallujah, in Iraq's Sunni heartland, where residents have a history of revolt. A decade ago, al-Qaeda militants staged a punishing insurgency against then-occupying U.S. troops. Anger at the government in Baghdad helped the Islamic State win control of the area in January 2014. Iraq's government has ordered the militias to stay away from the fighting inside the city. And the U.S. military says it refuses to give them air support, fearing that their involvement could help the Islamic State rally besieged residents to its cause. The militias "are sectarian just like Daesh is sectarian," said Majid al-Juraisi, a tribal leader from the city who fled to Baghdad when the Islamic State took control. Daesh is the Arabic name for the Islamic State, also known as ISIS and ISIL.

Middle East – Moyen-Orient

56. Egypt begins trial for head of journalists union, 2 members

The Associated Press, Hamza Hendawi, 2016 06 04

Cairo - The trial began Saturday for the head of Egypt's journalists union and two board members charged with spreading false news and harbouring reporters wanted by authorities, with one defendant saying it was part of a government plan to create a "state of fear." Union head Yahya Qalash and board members Khaled el-Balshy and Gamal Abdel-Rahim showed up at the downtown Cairo court with some dozen defence lawyers led by former presidential candidate Khaled Ali. In a 10-minute hearing, the defence requested a postponement to allow them time to study the case. The trial will resume on June 18. The defendants were greeted with chants of "Long live the struggle of journalists!" and "Hold your head high, you are a journalist!" by about two dozen supporters when they came out of the courthouse, where scores of riot police were deployed, backed by armoured vehicles.

57. Syrian troops reach edge of province where IS is based

The Associated Press, 2016 06 04

Beirut - Syrian troops have reached the edge of the northern province of Raqqa, home to the de facto capital of the Islamic State group's self-styled caliphate. The government has had no presence in Raqqa since August 2014, when IS captured the Tabqa air base and killed scores of captured government soldiers. The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights says Syrian troops reached the "administrative border" of Raqqa province under the cover of Russian airstrikes. The media arm of Lebanon's Hezbollah group, which is fighting alongside government forces, says Syrian troops reached the border of Raqqa province Saturday after advancing about six kilometres (4 miles) in the past hours.

58. Syrian army presses offensive against Islamic State

Reuters News, 2016 06 04

Amman - The Syrian army has crossed the boundary of Raqqa province, home to the de facto capital of Islamic State, after a major Russian-backed offensive against the militants, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said on Saturday. The offensive is the third big assault on the self-proclaimed caliphate in recent days after Iraqi forces attempted to storm a city and a Syrian militia advanced with U.S. support. The three big offensives are some of the most aggressive campaigns against Islamic State since it declared its aim to rule over all Muslims from parts of Iraq and Syria two years ago. Heavy Russian air strikes hit Islamic State-held territory in eastern areas of Syria's Hama province, near the boundary of Raqqa province, on Friday when the army reached the edge of the province. Raqqa city, further east, is Islamic State's de facto capital in Syria and, along with Mosul in Iraq, the ultimate target of those seeking to destroy the group. The army was making its advances from the Athriya area of eastern Hama province, close to the provincial border with Raqqa. State media said on Friday the army had made territorial gains and inflicted heavy casualties on the militants. Syrian army spokesmen were not immediately available for comment.

Others — Autres

Nil

Western Europe – Europe de l'Ouest

59. France suspends 5 military for Central African violence

The Associated Press, 2015 06 04

Paris - The French Defence Ministry has suspended five members of the country's forces in Central African Republic for violence against two of the citizens they were sent to protect. Among the five are soldiers higher up in the military hierarchy "who assisted and failed to react to the violence," the ministry said on Saturday. A statement said that four others who were aware of the acts but failed to report them were handed disciplinary sanctions. The vague statement said neither when nor where the violent acts took place and didn't elaborate on them. No one was immediately available for comment.

60. La DGSI a passé au crible 3 500 intervenants à titres divers dans l'organisation de l'Euro de football. Parmi eux, 85 sont fichés.

Le Point.de, Aziz Zemouri, 2016 06 04

Paris - Les entreprises privées de sécurité qui interviennent sur les différents sites dévolus aux rencontres et fan-zones de l'Euro 2016 sont-elles assez vigilantes lors du recrutement de leurs salariés ? Dans une note datée du 23 mai que Le Point a pu consulter, la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure indique qu'elle a "criblé" 3 500 personnes. C'est-à-dire qu'elle a passé la majeure partie des salariés des PME travaillant dans le secteur de la sécurité et recrutée pour l'organisation de l'Euro de football dans le fichier Cristina. Les fonctionnaires ont constaté que 82 individus parmi les 3 500 sont inscrits dans cette base de données, à laquelle seule la DGSI a accès. Elle répertorie ceux qui sont susceptibles d'atteinte à la sûreté de l'État ou encore de commettre des actes terroristes. Les fichés S y sont inscrits, entre autres, pour l'islamisme radical ou les activités liées à la violence d'extrême gauche ou d'extrême droite. Selon ses détracteurs, il s'agit d'un fichier très large dans lequel, par exemple, un anonyme qui serrerait la main d'un individu ciblé par la DCRI serait à son tour fiché. À la différence du fichier du service central du renseignement territorial, lorsqu'on est fiché dans Cristina, il est impossible d'en sortir. Outre les menaces terroristes, les services de renseignements ciblent également les hooligans à l'idéologie d'extrême droite.

61. Un djihadiste bientôt privé de sa nationalité Suisse

Le Temps, Valurie De Graffenried, 2015 06 04

Paris - Christian I., qui a rejoint l'Etat islamique en Syrie, a posé sur Facebook avec une tête coupée. Il a jusqu'au 10 juin pour prendre position contre la procédure de déchéance de nationalité qui le vise. Au parlement, la question divise. Mort ou pas mort? Des informations contradictoires ne cessent de circuler à propos de Christian I., un apprenti de 19 ans parti en février 2015 rejoindre l'Etat islamique en Syrie. Selon la NZZ, le jeune converti, qui vient de Wülflingen, dans la région de Winterthur, est bien vivant. Les rumeurs concernant la mort de djihadistes font souvent partie de la propagande de l'Etat islamique. Une stratégie pour être moins surveillé. Mais pour celui qui se fait appeler « Abou Malik », une des preuves les plus évidentes de signes de vie récents est que le Secrétariat d'Etat aux migrations (SEM) a lancé une procédure pour le priver de sa nationalité suisse. Le recueil officiel en fait état le 10 mai, avec le nom complet du djihadiste et l'indication « lieu de séjour inconnu ». A partir de là, il a un mois pour prendre position... pour autant qu'il lise le recueil officiel depuis son champ de bataille. Christian est binational: Suisse et Italien. Et le SEM n'aurait jamais lancé une telle procédure s'il était convaincu de sa mort.

62. Le djihadiste « repent » de Paris qui a permis de déjouer un attentat en Allemagne

Le Monde, Soren Seelow, 2016 06 04

Paris - Un djihadiste « repent », un prêtre italien, un salon de coiffure, un attentat déjoué à Düsseldorf (Allemagne), un voyage au Vatican... Ce 1er février, lorsqu'ils accueillent sur le coup de 9 h 30 un réfugié syrien de 28 ans prénommé Saleh, les policiers du commissariat central du 18e arrondissement de Paris ignorent qu'ils seront à l'origine d'une des enquêtes antiterroristes les plus énigmatiques de ces dernières années. Saleh A. n'a pas perdu ses papiers. S'il se rend spontanément au commissariat en ce premier lundi de février, c'est parce qu'il a des révélations à faire. Devant les policiers interloqués, il se présente comme un djihadiste syrien missionné par l'organisation Etat islamique (EI) pour commettre un attentat en Europe, selon les informations du Monde et d'i-Télé. Il affirme être à la tête, avec un certain Hamza C., d'une cellule dormante d'une vingtaine d'hommes répartis entre Düsseldorf et un camp de réfugiés à Nimègue (Pays-Bas), tout près de la frontière allemande. Selon une source proche des services de renseignement, le djihadiste ajoute qu'il attend des instructions imminentes d'un certain Abou Doujana Al-Tunisi – un cadre de l'EI surnommé « l'Emir des étrangers » – pour activer les membres de sa cellule. Leur mission : une attaque-suicide dans un quartier commerçant de Düsseldorf, prévue dans les vingt-quatre heures. Saleh A. est aussitôt placé en garde à vue dans les locaux de la section antiterroriste de la Préfecture de police de Paris, puis dans ceux de la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI).

63. Le « repent » qui a évité un attentat à Düsseldorf

Le Monde, Soren Seelow, 2016 06 04

Paris - Un djihadiste « repentant », un prêtre italien, un salon de coiffure, un attentat déjoué à Düsseldorf (Allemagne), un voyage au Vatican... Ce 1er février, lorsqu'ils accueillent sur le coup de 9 h 30 un réfugié syrien de 28 ans prénommé Saleh, les policiers du commissariat central du 18e arrondissement de Paris ignorent qu'ils seront à l'origine d'une des enquêtes antiterroristes les plus énigmatiques de ces dernières années. Saleh A. n'a pas perdu ses papiers. S'il se rend spontanément au commissariat en ce premier lundi de février, c'est parce qu'il a des révélations à faire. Devant les policiers interloqués, il se présente comme un djihadiste syrien missionné par l'organisation Etat islamique (EI) pour commettre un attentat en Europe, selon les informations du Monde et d'i-Télé. Il affirme être à la tête, avec un certain Hamza C., d'une cellule dormante d'une vingtaine d'hommes répartis entre Düsseldorf et un camp de réfugiés à Nimègue (Pays-Bas), tout près de la frontière allemande. Selon une source proche des services de renseignement, le djihadiste ajoute qu'il attend des instructions imminentes d'un certain Abou Doujana Al-Tunisi - un cadre de l'EI surnommé « l'Emir des étrangers » - pour activer les membres de sa cellule. Leur mission : une attaque-suicide dans un quartier commerçant de Düsseldorf, prévue dans les vingt-quatre heures. Saleh A. est aussitôt placé en garde à vue dans les locaux de la section antiterroriste de la Préfecture de police de Paris, puis dans ceux de la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI).

64. La police suit quarante Genevois radicalisés

Tribune de Genève, Sophie Roselli, 2016 06 04

Genève - « Trois Suisses et deux personnes en situation irrégulière sont partis de Genève pour rejoindre une zone de combat, en Syrie ou ailleurs. » L'information a été livrée hier par Monica Bonfanti, commandante de la police genevoise, lors de la seconde conférence de presse organisée en six mois sur la menace terroriste. Celle-ci « reste réelle » à Genève et le dispositif de sécurité mis en place à la suite des attentats de Paris du mois de novembre est maintenu. Que peut-on dire des cinq hommes partis sur le chemin du djihad? « Selon les cas, il est difficile de savoir où ils se trouvent, précise Monica Bonfanti. Ils peuvent combattre, s'entraîner ou s'occuper de soutien logistique. » Et le conseiller d'Etat Pierre Maudet de préciser: « Pour l'instant, il n'y a pas eu de retours, mais nous sommes très attentifs. » Depuis janvier 2015, les signalements ont quadruplé à Genève, passant à 321. Les services de renseignement ont écarté le soupçon de radicalisation pour 281 personnes. Il reste 40 résidents genevois qui présentaient en mai 2016 un degré variable de radicalisation et pourraient partir au combat. Ils font l'objet d'un suivi par la police. Dans certains cas, des entretiens préventifs sont menés. Avec leurs limites(notre édition du 28 mai). En première ligne pour traiter les dossiers, la Brigade de sûreté intérieure (BSI) verra passer ses effectifs de 14 à 18 policiers. L'un d'eux sera affecté en septembre au Service de renseignement de la Confédération, à Berne, comme agent de liaison, dans le but de faciliter les échanges avec Genève. Combien d'agents de la BSI travaillent spécifiquement sur la thématique djihadiste? Très peu, mais à cette question, pas de réponse.

65. NATO Forges New Antiterror Role

The Wall Street Journal, Julian E. Barnes, 2016 06 04

Brussels - The Western alliance is moving toward creating a powerful new intelligence post, according to U.S. and European officials, in a bid to improve how Europe and America share sensitive information on terrorism and other threats. In the face of the terror attacks in Paris and Brussels, Europe has struggled to improve cross-border intelligence sharing. Some officials believe the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which relies heavily on U.S. intelligence, could facilitate improved information exchange if it were driven by a new senior intelligence official. NATO doesn't currently have a formal role in fighting Islamic State, and the push for the new intelligence position comes amid growing criticism of the alliance's failure to focus more resources on terrorism. Donald Trump, the probable Republican presidential candidate, has repeatedly said the organization isn't sufficiently committed to countering terrorism. To play a larger role on that front, NATO must get better at sharing and synthesizing intelligence, officials said. The new post of Assistant Secretary General for Intelligence -- likely to be formally approved by NATO in July -- was first proposed to improve the alliance's analysis and information about Russian military activities. Some U.S. and NATO officials said its most important effect, however, could be to improve how the alliance analyzes and shares intelligence on Islamic State and other Middle East-based terrorist threats.

66. Trying to Fill a Diplomatic Void, France Holds Talks on the Mideast Peace Process

The New York Times, Aurelien Breeden, 2016 06 04

Paris - With the Obama administration having effectively given up on negotiating a deal between the Israelis and the Palestinians, France tried its hand on Friday at making Middle East peace but ended the day with little to show for its efforts. Even before President François Hollande convened diplomats from 29 countries for the session -- including Secretary of State John Kerry but no representatives of either the Israelis or the Palestinians -- France had backed off its initial hope that it could produce progress where United States-led efforts had not. Still, the meeting underscored how the tense relationship between President Obama and Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel, weak leadership among the Palestinians and the array of other conflicts in the region have combined to create a diplomatic void at a time when Europe's support for Israel has shown some cracks. "The French are taking advantage of the vacuum left by the United States," Frédérique Schillo, a French historian who specializes in Israel and international relations, said in a telephone interview from Jerusalem. "They have duly noted the failure of Kerry's mission," Ms. Schillo said, referring to nine months of talks spearheaded by Mr. Kerry that collapsed in 2014. "And they have also noted a certain disengagement of the Americans in the Middle East," she added, including in Israel, but also on other issues like the conflict in Syria, where the United States backed out of conducting airstrikes in 2013, leaving the French bitter.

67. Filière jihadiste de Strasbourg: l'ombre du 13 novembre plane sur le procès

Radio France Internationale, 2016 06 04

Paris- Au cinquième jour du procès des 7 jihadistes strasbourgeois, le tribunal correctionnel de Paris s'interroge sur les conditions de leur retour en France. Sont-ils tous rentrés de leur plein gré ou ont-ils été piégés par leurs proches ? Sont-ils véritablement repentis du jihad aujourd'hui ? Encore une fois, l'ombre du 13 novembre a plané sur les audiences. Le frère d'un des kamikazes du Bataclan fait notamment partie des prévenus. Dans le box, tous disent avoir fui l'organisation Etat islamique en Irak et au Levant, en raison des guerres fratricides entre groupes rebelles. Mais à la lecture de certaines écoutes téléphoniques, la présidente du tribunal a des doutes. Une fois en Turquie, un des prévenus contacte un français en Syrie et lui dit avoir été dénoncé aux autorités turques. « Le passeur nous a vendu ce chien d'apostat », dit-il. Il explique qu'il s'agissait d'une ruse destinée à ne pas mettre en danger les autres membres du groupe restés en Syrie. Un autre est ensuite soupçonné d'avoir été piégé par ses proches venus le rencontrer en Turquie. Mais tous expliquent à nouveau que leur intention était uniquement de quitter la Syrie.

CSIS Executive News Summary/Sommaire exécutif des nouvelles du SCRS
(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Sunday, June 05 2016/dimanche 05 juin 2016
Abridged weekend edition/Edition abrégée de la fin de semaine

If you require copies of articles mentioned in the News Summary or radio/television interview transcripts, please contact Communications Branch at 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) or [REDACTED] on weekends. Additional weekend reports will be included in the Monday Executive Summary.

Si vous désirez obtenir des copies d'articles mentionnés dans le Sommaire des nouvelles ou la transcription d'une entrevue radiophonique/ télévisée, veuillez communiquer avec la Direction des Communications au 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) ou [REDACTED] la fin de semaine. Des reportages additionnels de la fin de semaine seront retrouvés dans le sommaire exécutif du lundi.

General News Overview/Aperçu général des nouvelles

Contents

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles	2
Canada	2
United States – États-Unis	3
United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni.....	5
Americas.....	6
Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande	6
Asia –Asie.....	6
Eastern Europe – Europe de l’Est.....	9
Africa – Afrique	10
Iraq/Iran	10
Middle East – Moyen-Orient	11
Others — Autres	12
Western Europe – Europe de l’Ouest	12

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles

1. Federal study disputes claim diaspora communities breed extremists

CBC News, Dan Beeby, 2016 06 05

Ottawa - Canada's immigrant communities are not breeding grounds for terrorists, as some would argue, but should be enlisted to reduce any violent radicalization in their midst, says a newly released report. The research, ordered by the Harper government in 2014, appears to repudiate Conservative measures that alienated Muslim communities in the months before last year's election. The authors examined four diaspora communities in Canada — Afghan, Somali, Syrian and Tamil — and found them to be willing allies for rooting out extremism among their often young and isolated members. "More resilient diaspora communities represent the best line of defence against violent extremism," says the March 30 report, obtained by CBC News under the Access to Information Act. "Diasporas are not a threat, as some of the mainstream discourse on counterterrorism has often implied, but rather Canada's most valued asset in the fight against terrorism." The authors found a mutual distrust between these communities and security agencies, driven partly by news media and academics who have "framed diaspora communities as partly complicit in terrorist activity, a source of threat for host countries like Canada." "It has fostered suspicion and even discrimination against certain diaspora groups." The research says security agencies such as the RCMP and CSIS need to build trust, especially among Muslim groups in Canada who can often alert police to potential terror activity. "Dispelling Islamophobia and other forms of discrimination should be a centrepiece of any community engagement strategy surrounding anti-radicalization, as it has fuelled distrust of the state and wider Canadian society in Muslim diaspora communities." The $180,000 study for Public Safety Canada was carried out over a year by the Kitchener, Ont.-based Security Governance Group, a private consultant firm.

Canada

2. Danger, Canadian spies semi-accountably at work

The Chronicle Herald, Jim Meek, 2016 06 05

Opinion: Canada's spies keep mixing up their black blotting markers and their yellow highlighters. The Globe and Mail has reported that the Communications Security Establishment (CSE) has been leaking private information about Canadians to our allies — instead of blotting it from the record. CSE's job includes gathering "metadata" from Canadians — through phone calls, emails and other online exchanges. The idea is to transfer the data without identifying information to other e-spying agencies in Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States. Add Canada to this foursome, and you get the organization known as The Five Eyes, comrades in espionage for the last 65 years or so. No Canadian names are supposed to be revealed in this joint intelligence-gathering and sharing process. Instead, the spies should put metadata through a Wizard of Oz processor, throw in an algorithm or two — and presto, terrorism rings topple in Colby Village. Eventually, the security establishment mines the data a little deeper and discovers the third baseman on your lob-ball team works as a sleeper agent for al-Qaeda. And all along you thought he was just Buddy from Glace Bay. OK, I should get serious here. The inner workings of the CSE were described in a 2015 report written by Jean-Pierre Plouffe, a retired Quebec judge who heads the Office of the CSE Commissioner. Plouffe's report was "confidential." It only came to light Wednesday because the Globe rummaged around in court filings and found it.

3. Islamophobia runs deeper than failed Tory tactics

The Toronto Star, Azeezah Kanji, 2016 06 05

Opinion: Muslim Conservative Uruzurum Heer made headlines recently for castigating the Islamophobic campaign run by her party in the last election. "This party worked actively and aggressively against my people," Heer said, at the Conservative convention. "It didn't differentiate who Muslims were versus the enemies." The Harper-headed Conservatives certainly deployed a particularly crude form of anti-Muslim animus during the election: a continuation of their governing modus operandi. However, Islamophobia did not begin with Stephen Harper, and it will not end with his exit from power. It is very tempting to relegate Islamophobia to a past we have overcome or to a future we have avoided. It is too easy to project racism onto other times or onto other people: onto those like Stephen Harper or Donald Trump, who ostentatiously brandish anti-Muslim stereotypes as political weapons. It is far more difficult to confront the normalized Islamophobia that has permeated Canadian national security law and policy since the initiation of the War on Terror, under both Liberal and Conservative governments. "Islamophobia is about more than microaggressions," writes Professor Deepa Kumar. "Daily acts of hostility, hate crimes and even job discrimination, are the outward manifestations of a system that is fundamentally racist . . . Islamophobia is an ideology that has come to be accepted as normal, as common sense, in the War on Terror era. In this sense, it is not just an individual bias but a systematic body of ideas which make certain constructions of Muslims - that they are prone to violence, that they are misogynistic, that they are driven by rage and lack rationality - appear natural." Stereotypes about Muslim violence have sustained the War on Terror's project of violence since its birth.

4. Chinese may not care Canadians offended by minister's outburst: ex-diplomat

Global News, Monique Muisse, 2016 06 05

Ottawa - China's foreign minister made headlines in Ottawa this week for all the wrong reasons when he took exception to a question posed by a journalist. But experts say it's unlikely the Chinese care about the bad press. "They'll have to deal with damage control," former diplomat Colin Robertson told the West Block's Tom Clark. Foreign Affairs Minister Stephane Dion stood next to Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi, seemingly stunned into silence, as the Chinese politician ripped into a journalist from news website iPolitics. Wang called the question on the jailing of a Canadian, Kevin Garratt, "irresponsible." The question had not, in fact, even been directed at Wang. Current senator and former journalist Jim Munson said he was deeply offended by Wang's outburst on Canadian soil. "He couldn't have picked a worse time, and particularly for me because I'm quite emotional about this issue, having seen children and adults killed in Tiananmen [Square]. There was a massacre in Tiananmen. And to say this on our territory and to say this about a journalist, my goodness, it hit home again to me what is wrong in China."

5. Is ISIS preparing for 'Plan B' as losses mount?

CBC News, Mark Gollom, 2016 06 05

Ottawa - With recruitment down, its finances squeezed and having lost considerable ground, ISIS just may be in the throes of near defeat, according to some analysts. But whether the Islamic State is on its last legs or is still capable of waging an indefinite campaign, attention is now being focussed on just what happens on the so-called "day after." "The West should have no illusion that the Islamic State will simply slump into defeat," wrote Brian Michael Jenkins and Colin Clarke, both of the Rand Corporation, which specializes in insurgency and transnational terrorism. "Instead, it must focus on thwarting the group's Plan B." That the group has formulated such a contingency plan is still a subject of speculation, and expert opinions differ on how close it is to actual defeat. "After maybe years of really stunning success, I think the Islamic State has run into trouble," said Austin Long, assistant professor of international and public affairs at Columbia University and a former adviser to the multinational force in Iraq.

United States – États-Unis

6. FBI: Our Malware Sends Unencrypted Evidence, and That's a Good Thing

Motherboard, Joshua Kopstein, 2016 06 05

Washington - The FBI is facing plenty of controversy over its Network Investigative Technique (NIT), the innocuously-named malware it used to identify thousands of anonymous users viewing images of child abuse on a hidden darkweb site called Playpen. Under a single warrant, the NIT (which the FBI staunchly refuses to call "malware") infected thousands of computers around the globe, injecting malicious code that caused any machine visiting the Playpen site to quietly transmit information back to the FBI—most importantly, their IP address, which is normally obscured by the anonymous Tor network. The hacking tool sent that information back to the FBI unencrypted, leaving it open to interception or manipulation by third parties. But the government doesn't seem to think that's such a big deal. In fact, the FBI argued earlier this week in one of the Playpen cases that not encrypting the information captured by the NIT is actually a good thing, because it allows the defendants to see the transmitted data and use it in their defense.

7. Iraqi Army Seen as Ill Equipped to Retake Mosul From ISIS, Despite U.S. Aid

The New York Times, Eric Schmitt, 2016 06 05

Washington - An exhausted and ill-equipped Iraqi Army faces daunting obstacles on the battlefield that will most likely delay for months a long-planned major offensive on the Islamic State stronghold of Mosul, American and allied officials say. The delay is expected despite American efforts to keep Iraq's creaky war machine on track. Although President Obama vowed to end the United States' role in the war in Iraq, in the last two years the American military has increasingly provided logistics to prop up the Iraqi military, which has struggled to move basics like food, water and ammunition to its troops. Without the help, American commanders said, the offensive against Mosul would most likely fail. Americans are ferrying equipment and spare parts directly to the battlefield by cargo plane, helping arrange purchases of ammunition for Soviet-era equipment and pressing the Iraqis to adopt measures to improve a supply chain that would run over 200 miles from Defense Ministry depots in the Baghdad area to Mosul. But no matter how hard the Americans push, the Iraqis can go only so fast. The pace of ground operations is likely to become even slower in the summer's searing heat and during the coming holy month of Ramadan, when Muslims often fast during the day. Much of the Iraqis' equipment needs to be repaired or replaced, and many Iraqi units will require additional training before attacking Mosul.

8. Inspectors 'stretched,' but Iran nuclear deal is working, watchdog says

The Washington Post, Joby Warrick, 2016 06 05

Vienna - The head of the United Nations nuclear agency says Iran appears to be hewing to the letter of last year's landmark nuclear agreement but says his inspectors are stretched thin by the task of monitoring compliance across a country the size of Alaska. Yukiya Amano, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency, said the hard work of verifying the controversial pact will probably continue for years, strongly hinting that he intends to seek a third term as head of the watchdog agency to see the task through. "It is still fragile," Amano said of the accord during an interview at the IAEA's Austrian headquarters. "Reaching an agreement was very important, but making it sustainable requires a lot of effort." Amano's comments echoed the conclusions of the latest report on Iran by the IAEA, which recently gave the Islamic republic a passing grade for keeping its nuclear activities within the boundaries set by the agreement reached with the United States and five other world powers last summer. The pact allows Iran to keep parts of its civilian nuclear infrastructure but sets strict limits on the production of fissile material that could potentially be used to make nuclear weapons.

9. Exclusive: Snowden Tried to Tell NSA About Surveillance Concerns, Documents Reveal

Vice News, Jason Leopold, Marcy Wheeler, and Ky Henderson, 2016 06 05

Washington - On the morning of May 29, 2014, an overcast Thursday in Washington, DC, the general counsel of the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI), Robert Litt, wrote an email to high-level officials at the National Security Agency and the White House. The topic: what to do about Edward Snowden. Snowden's leaks had first come to light the previous June, when the Guardian's Glenn Greenwald and the Washington Post's Barton Gellman published stories based on highly classified documents provided to them by the former NSA contractor. Now Snowden, who had been demonized by the NSA and the Obama administration for the past year, was publicly claiming something that set off alarm bells at the agency: Before he leaked the documents, Snowden said, he had repeatedly attempted to raise his concerns inside the NSA about its surveillance of US citizens — and the agency had done nothing. Some on the email thread, such as Rajesh De, the NSA's general counsel, advocated for the public release of a Snowden email from April 2013 in which the former NSA contractor asked questions about the "interpretation of legal authorities" related to the agency's surveillance programs. It was the only evidence the agency found that even came close to verifying Snowden's assertions, and De believed it was weak enough to call Snowden's credibility into question and put the NSA in the clear. Litt disagreed. "I'm not sure that releasing the email will necessarily prove him a liar," Litt wrote to Caitlin Hayden, then the White House National Security Council spokesperson, along with De and other officials. "It is, I could argue, technically true that [Snowden's] email... 'rais[ed] concerns about the NSA's interpretation of its legal authorities.' As I recall, the email essentially questions a document that Snowden interpreted as claiming that Executive Orders were on a par with statutes. While that is surely not raising the kind of questions that Snowden is trying to suggest he raised, neither does it seem to me that that email is a home run refutation." Within two hours, however, Litt reversed his position, and later that day, the email was released, accompanied by comment from NSA spokesperson Marci Green Miller: "The email did not raise allegations or concerns about wrongdoing or abuse."

10. The Russian Spy Run by Dumb and Dumber

The Daily Beast, Katie Zavadky, 2016 06 05

Analysis: Zhenya Buryakov, a Russian spy convicted this past month of espionage in the U.S., had the misfortune of having comically inept handlers from Russian foreign intelligence. Zhenya Buryakov lived a quiet Bronx existence with his wife and two children in Riverdale, an affluent neighborhood, working at a state-owned bank by day. He moved there, his wife would later say, because he wanted his children to speak perfect English, and two nuns next door would even pet-sit the family's bird. But by night, Buryakov met with his handlers at SVR, Russia's foreign intelligence service, and passed along information his bosses in Moscow hoped to use against his host country. That bucolic life was interrupted when Buryakov was arrested by the FBI in January 2015, and charged with being an unregistered agent of a foreign government. Unlike his handlers, whose sloppy conversations may have led to his arrest, Buryakov was only allowed to be in the United States as an employee of a foreign firm. A year later, he pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 30 months in prison, in a case that garnered relatively little attention coming on the heels of the 10 Russian "illegals" arrested in 2010. But Buryakov's arrest and sentencing serves as a firm reminder that despite the end of the Cold War, covert Russian espionage in the U.S. is prevalent and ongoing. "Russia never gave up espionage against the West, and the United States remains the prime target of Russian intelligence," former KGB spy Oleg Kalugin told The Daily Beast. Kalugin, now 81, served as a general in the KGB, but was found guilty in absentia of spying for the West by a Russian court in 2002.

United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni

11. Hackers Attack the Stock Exchange

Mail on Sunday, Jaber Mohamed, 2016 06 05

London – Cyber criminals are believed to have taken down the London Stock Exchange (LSE) website for more than two hours as part of a campaign against the world's banks and financial institutions. The attack was carried out by a group based in the Philippines which is part of the 'hactivist' network Anonymous - an organisation infamous for hacking government, religious and corporate websites. Anonymous claims the incident was one of 67 successful attacks it has launched in the past month on the websites of major institutions, with targets including the Swiss National Bank, the Central Bank of Venezuela and the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco. The attack on the LSE took place at 9am on Thursday, but experts say trading was unlikely to have been affected and that no sensitive data was stolen. In the 24 hours before the LSE site went down, Anonymous said it had also attacked the websites of the Turkey Stock Exchange and NYSE Euronext, the parent company of the New York Stock Exchange.

Americas

Nil

Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande

12. Sri Lankan refugees stopped from sailing for Australia

Canberra Times, 2016 06 05

Canberra - Indian authorities have intercepted a truck in Tiruvallur near Chennai where they found 33 Sri Lankan refugees missing from four government-run camps. The refugees, including six women and six children, were planning to take a boat to Australia, police said. It prompted refugee activists to call on the southern Indian state of Tamil Nadu to ease restrictions on Sri Lankan refugees living in guarded camps. Campaigners said the case showed how desperate they were to flee India where they have been confined to closed camps for years and have no right to work. "They are desperate people looking for a dignified life," said P. Pugalenthi, a lawyer who represents refugees in Chennai.

Asia –Asie

13. In pushback to U.S., China says 'has no fear of trouble' in South China Sea

Reuters, 2016 06 05

Singapore - China rebuffed U.S. pressure to curb its activity in the South China Sea on Sunday, restating its sovereignty over most of the disputed territory and saying it "has no fear of trouble". On the last day of Asia's biggest security summit, Admiral Sun Jianguo said China will not be bullied, including over a pending international court ruling over its claims in the vital trade route. "We do not make trouble, but we have no fear of trouble," Sun told the Shangri-La Dialogue in Singapore, where more than 600 security, military and government delegates had gathered over three days. "China will not bear the consequences, nor will it allow any infringement on its sovereignty and security interest, or stay indifferent to some countries creating chaos in the South China Sea." The waterway has become a flashpoint between the United States, which increased its focus on the Asia-Pacific under President Barack Obama's "pivot", and China, which is projecting ever greater economic, political and military power in the region. The two have traded accusations of militarizing the waterway as Beijing undertakes large-scale land reclamation and construction on disputed features while Washington has increased its patrols and exercises.

14. Governor of Jakarta Bucks Indonesia's Party Politics

The New York Times, Joe Cochrane, 2016 06 05

Jakarta - Since becoming governor of Jakarta in 2014, Basuki Tjahaja Purnama has shown little patience for incompetent bureaucrats or alleged “budget irregularities” — the local term for corruption. His new target is a political system run by aloof oligarchs. Mr. Basuki, 49, has vowed to run to stay in office in February as a political independent. His goal is to separate himself from the powerful national parties that have emerged during Indonesia’s transition to democracy, which began with the collapse of the military-backed dictatorship of President Suharto in 1998. Mr. Basuki has long been considered a political outsider, partly because he is a Christian and an ethnic Chinese steering the capital of the world’s most populous Muslim-majority nation, and his decision to run without a party affiliation has shaken the country’s political establishment. Since Indonesia began holding free elections in the late 1990s, independent candidates have won lesser local government and legislative posts, but Mr. Basuki’s breakaway is by far the most significant. Jakarta is the country’s political, social and economic center, accounting for 16 percent of the national gross domestic product in 2015, according to the country’s Central Statistics Bureau.

15. Indonesia's military rolls out plan to improve lives of Sulawesi residents affected by terrorist threat

The Straits Times, Francis Chan, 2016 06 05

Jakarta - The Indonesian military (TNI) is rolling out a plan aimed at improving the lives of Sulawesi residents affected by the threat of terrorism from the East Indonesia Mujahideen (MIT). Militants from the terror group and its leader Santoso, who have been hiding out in Poso regency in Central Sulawesi, are the subject of the largest manhunt in Indonesia. The spillover violence from their activities have resulted in some hardship for people living in the central and northern parts of the island. Major-General Agus Surya Bakti, whose military command covers Central Sulawesi and Gorontalo provinces in Sulawesi, said on Saturday (June 4) that the latest initiative is focused on enhancing the welfare of the local community. Apart from counter-terrorism operations against Santoso and the MIT, the military will also help create jobs, develop new fields for farming as well as build bridges and roads. Maj-Gen Agus added that a key plank of the initiative is its agricultural programme, which includes, among other things, providing local farmers with hand-tractors to assist in plowing and better quality seeds. He also revealed a partnership between the military and the Agriculture Ministry to free up at least 3,000ha of land for farming.

16. Okinawa Murder Case Heightens Outcry Over U.S. Military’s Presence

The New York Times, Jonathan Soble, 2016 06 05

Okinawa, Japan — Memorial Day weekend is normally party time on Gate Street, a seedy strip of bars and clubs outside a giant United States Air Force base here. During this year’s holiday, though, Gate Street was all but deserted, its customers — young Americans from the military installations that blanket much of this southern Japanese island — barred by their superiors from partying in public. The reason: a recent murder that has angered Okinawans and damaged relations between Tokyo and Washington. The killing of the 20-year-old Okinawan woman, whose body was found decomposing in a suitcase last month, has been linked to an American military contractor who is a Marine veteran. The outcry after the man, Kenneth Franklin Shinzato, was arrested on May 19 has been so strong that Prime Minister Shinzo Abe protested publicly to President Obama during the president’s recent trip to Japan. The unusual rebuke over a criminal case by another head of state marred a visit that was otherwise carefully choreographed to celebrate friendly relations and included Mr. Obama’s historic visit to Hiroshima. Mr. Abe, at a joint news conference, professed “shock” over the murder and asked Mr. Obama “to understand the feelings of the Japanese people” and strengthen military discipline.

17. More troops deployed to Sulu to rescue Abu hostages

The Philippine Star, Roel Pareño, 2016 06 05

Zamboanga City - More troops have been deployed to Sulu to help in the operations to rescue the remaining hostages of the Abu Sayyaf. Lt. Gen. Mayoralgo de la Cruz, Western Mindanao Command chief, said military operations are not dependent on the deadline set by the kidnappers. The Abu Sayyaf said the families and governments of those taken from a resort on Samal Island – Canadian Robert Hall, Norwegian Kjartan Sekkingstad and Filipina Marites Flor – should meet their demands by June 13. The group demanded P300 million each for the foreign captives. Canadian John Ridsdel, another Samal hostage, was beheaded on April 25 after the deadline for the payment of ransom lapsed. “That is their deadline. I can assure you the operations to rescue the hostages are ongoing,” De la Cruz said. He said they have reshuffled the ground commanders to enhance the operations. De la Cruz said local officials are providing information to Task Force Sulu led by Brig. Gen. Arnel de la Vega. De la Cruz said they are willing to work with the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) if directed by their superiors.

18. Army conquers jihadist camp

Manila Standard, 2016 06 05

Manila - The military admitted that the group led by Abdullah Maute is part of the Jemaah Islamiya terror network as government forces captured of their training camps in Butig, Lanao del Sur after a 10-day offensive. “Yes, the Maute brothers are members of the Jemaah Islamiya,” said Major General Gerardo Barrientos, commander of the First Infantry “Tabak” Division. “In fact, it’s correct that [slain leader] Omar [Maute] was married to an Indonesian jihadist.” Until he was slain in a military offensive last February, Abdullah Maute’s brother Omar used the lead the group which consists of former members of a defunct unit of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front. Major General Arnold Quiapo, chief of the Intelligence Service of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, said the group is known to be harboring foreign terrorists from Indonesia and Malaysia, as shown by the killing of Indonesian jihadist Muhammad Mukhtar who was killed together with Omar in February. “These two groups [Maute and Abu Sayyaf] are both Islamists and terrorists believing in the ideals of the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria even though each has unique characteristics,” Quiapo said.

19. S. Korea rallies support for implementing sanctions on N. Korea

Yonhap English News, Park Boram, 2016 06 05

Singapore - South Korean Defense Minister Han Min-koo agreed with his French and Swiss counterparts Sunday to step up joint efforts to ensure the full implementation of international sanctions on North Korea. Han and French Defense Minister Jean-Yves Le Drian also agreed to further upgrade their defense cooperation in the bilateral as well as multilateral frameworks during their talks held on the sidelines of the Asia Security Summit in Singapore, also known as Shangri-La Dialogue, according to the Ministry of National Defense. Han voiced his gratitude for France's efforts to push for and implement a United Nations Security Council resolution adopted in March in punishment for North Korea's nuclear test and long-range missile launch in early 2016, the ministry said. The French minister vowed further joint efforts with Seoul in bringing the resolution to thorough implementation, it also said.

20. Terrorist identified on CCTV is a local youth who joined LeT

Press Trust of India, 2016 06 05

Srinagar - Security agencies today claimed to have identified one of the militants on a CCTV footage as Junaid Matoo, a local resident who joined banned Lashker-e- Taiba (LeT) last year, and was allegedly involved in yesterday's killing of two Jammu and Kashmir police personnel at a bus stand in Anantnag. The CCTV footage showed two youths carrying AK assault rifles at Khanabal-Pahalgham road, 52 kms from here. While one was standing near the car, another was seen carrying a bag and walking upto the vehicle. Official sources said that one standing near the white car was identified as Junaid, a resident of Khudwani who had left his home in June last year when he was 18. After activating its human intelligence network, police found that he had joined LeT in September last year. Since that day he has surfaced yesterday for being part of the team that allegedly was involved in killing of two policemen Assistant Sub-Inspector Bashir Ahmad and Constable Reyaz Ahmad at Anantnag bus stand, the sources said.

21. India, Qatar to share intelligence to combat hawala, terror financing

Press Trust India, 2016 06 05

Mumbai - India and Qatar on Sunday agreed to share intelligence to combat 'hawala' transactions and terror financing as the two countries signed seven agreements and decided to move beyond the trading relationship and get into strategic investments. The two sides highlighted the need to "isolate" the sponsors and supporters of terrorism and agreed that urgent action against all such entities, which support terrorism and use it as an instrument of policy, must be taken. At the end of wide-ranging talks, Prime Minister Narendra Modi, who is on a two-day visit, had with Emir of Qatar Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al-Thani and Qatari leadership, the two sides decided to constitute an inter-ministerial high-level joint committee to regularly review all bilateral matters, as well as regional and global issues of mutual interest. "Crucial agreements were signed today, which will give new strength to India-Qatar ties," said Modi. "Sheikh Tamim and I had wide ranging talks on how India and Qatar can further expand bilateral ties," he tweeted. An MoU was signed between the Finance Intelligence Unit -India (FIU) and Qatar Financial Information Unit to share intelligence on illegal movement of money, termed as 'hawala'. "The two sides further agreed to take action against illegal transfer of money," a joint statement issued after the talks said. There is a lot of money flow and investment from Qatar. A number of black money investigations have taken Indian authorities to Qatar's shores and such an MoU is seen as a move to help combat money offences. Under this pact, the two sides also agreed to exchange financial intelligence to combat terrorism financing and other economic offences.

Eastern Europe – Europe de l'Est

22. Russia Highly Interested in Strengthening Mechanisms of Global Security

Sputnik News Service, 2016 06 05

Moscow - Russia, a transcontinental country with territory in both Europe and Asia, is highly interested in bolstering international security mechanisms, Russia's Deputy Defense Minister Anatoly Antonov said Sunday. "Russia as a European and Asian country has a significant stake in strengthening mechanisms of global security. I wish to emphasize the importance of creating an equal and indivisible security environment that would not serve a privileged few but everyone. Thus we could evade further conflict escalation both in Europe and Asia-Pacific region," Antonov said at the "IISS Shangri-La Dialogue" Asia Security Summit in Singapore.

23. US Leaves Russia's Proposals on Security Cooperation Unanswered – Official

Sputnik News Service, 2016 06 05

Singapore - Moscow and Washington have a number of areas for cooperation, but Russian proposals 'remain unanswered,' Russian Deputy Defense Minister Anatoly Antonov said Sunday. "Russia and the United States could have done more to settle the situation in Syria and there is scope to do more in combating international terrorism in other regions. There are many areas, where we could undertake joint efforts. Yet, our proposals on cooperation remain unanswered," Antonov said at the "IISS Shangri-La Dialogue" Asia Security Summit in Singapore. He added that at the same time cooperation between Russia and the United States contributed to deliveries of humanitarian aid to the war-torn country and restoration of peace in Syria. Syria has been mired in civil war since March 2011, with government forces loyal to Syrian President Bashar Assad fighting numerous opposition factions and extremist groups.

Africa – Afrique

24. Boko Haram attack kills 32 in Niger

BBC News, 2016 06 05

Bosso - Thirty Nigerien troops and two Nigerian soldiers have been killed in clashes with Boko Haram militants in Niger, the country's defence ministry says. It says "hundreds of assailants" attacked a military post in the south-eastern town of Bosso, on the Nigerian border, on Friday night. A counter-attack on Saturday morning allowed government troops to retake all positions in Bosso, the ministry says. It says there were several dead and injured "on the enemy's side". Boko Haram has not commented on the Nigerien defence ministry's statement. The Islamist group is based in Nigeria but is being tackled by a multinational force, including soldiers from Niger.

25. Centrafrique : l'ONU met un terme au mandat des policiers burundais, accusés d'exactions

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 05

Bangui - Les Nations unies ont annoncé vendredi qu'elles ne renouvelleraient pas le mandat des policiers burundais en mission pour l'ONU en Centrafrique, en réaction à des accusations d'exactions commises par ces forces de l'ordre au Burundi avant leur déploiement. Cette décision suit « les accusations actuelles d'atteintes sérieuses et persistantes aux droits de l'homme au Burundi », a précisé Stefan Feller, conseiller principal des Casques bleus sur les questions policières. Les 280 policiers burundais en poste ne seront pas remplacés lorsque leur mission à Bangui, la capitale centrafricaine, s'achèvera aux alentours de septembre. Une ONG burundaise, Focode, avait demandé en février aux Nations unies d'enquêter sur des accusations d'exactions commises par des policiers burundais qui se trouveraient maintenant à Bangui. « Compte tenu de la situation actuelle au Burundi, décision a été prise à l'ONU de ne pas remplacer les brigades de police servant dans le pays (la Centrafrique, ndlr) lorsque leur mission s'achèvera », a indiqué le porte-parole de l'ONU Farhan Haq.

26. Niger : 32 militaires tués dans une attaque de Boko Haram

Jeune Afrique, 2016 06 05

Au moins 30 militaires nigériens et deux soldats nigériens ont été tués lors d'une attaque massive lancée par le groupe islamiste nigérian Boko Haram à Bosso, une localité du Niger proche de la frontière avec le Nigeria, a annoncé samedi le ministère nigérian de la Défense. « Le vendredi 4 juin 2016 aux environs de 18H50 (17H50 GMT), des centaines d'assailants du groupe terroriste Boko Haram ont attaqué le poste militaire de reconnaissance de Bosso », selon un communiqué du ministère nigérian de la Défense. Le ministère donne un bilan de 30 militaires nigériens et deux militaires nigériens tués, 67 militaires nigériens et nigériens blessés. « Du côté de Boko Haram, plusieurs morts et blessés ont été emportés », poursuit le texte sans fournir de chiffres sur les pertes adverses. C'est le plus lourd bilan infligé par Boko Haram au Niger depuis que ce pays est entré en guerre contre les insurgés en février 2015. Le 25 avril 2015, les islamistes de Boko Haram avaient anéanti une position militaire sur le lac Tchad, faisant 74 morts, dont 28 civils. Trente-deux soldats avaient également été portés disparus.

Iraq/Iran

27. Iran Denies Receiving Letter from EU's Mogherini on N. Deal

Fars News Agency, 2016 06 05

Tehran - The Iranian foreign ministry dismissed media reports claiming that EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini has recently sent a letter to Iran on the full implementation of the nuclear deal by the world powers. Foreign Ministry Spokesman Hossein Jaber Ansari categorically rejected as "fake" certain Iranian media outlet's reports about a recent letter to Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif by Mogherini that allegedly called on Tehran to give concessions if it wants to receive more advantages from the West. Some media outlets in Tehran claimed that Mogherini had told Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif in a recent letter that the world powers have fulfilled their undertakings based on the nuclear deal and resolving Iran's financial and banking problems to interact with other countries falls outside their duties and responsibilities based on the deal. Supreme Leader of the Islamic Revolution Ayatollah Seyed Ali Khamenei has recently lashed out at the US for not remaining loyal to its undertakings based on the July nuclear agreement between Tehran and the world powers.

28. Iran rejects US charge of being top terror sponsor

The Associated Press, 2016 06 05

Tehran - Iran has rejected an annual US State Department report that called it the world's leading sponsor of terrorism. State TV on Sunday quotes Foreign Ministry spokesman Hossein Jaber Ansari as saying the report is "false" and further evidence of the "lack of credibility of reports by the US State Department." As in many previous years, the report identified Iran as the world's "foremost state sponsor of terrorism in 2015" through its financing, training and equipping of various extremist groups, notably Lebanon's Hezbollah, as well as the government of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad.

29. Shiite militias inflame sectarian rifts in Iraq

The Washington Post, Hugh Naylor & Mustafa Salim, 2016 06 05

Baghdad - Iraqi soldiers are battling to drive the Islamic State out of Fallujah. But just beyond the edges of the flash point city are Shiite militias that many Iraqis fear could undermine the campaign against the radical group. These government-aligned militiamen have helped push the Islamic State out of key areas of the country but also have become a complication for the U.S.-backed military coalition assembled to destroy the hard-line Sunni group. They filled an important void left by Iraq's weakened armed forces, but their religiously motivated agenda has aggravated Iraq's combustible sectarian divisions. That is particularly problematic in a place like Fallujah, in Iraq's Sunni heartland, where residents have a history of revolt. A decade ago, al-Qaeda militants staged a punishing insurgency against then-occupying U.S. troops. Anger at the government in Baghdad helped the Islamic State win control of the area in January 2014. Iraq's government has ordered the militias to stay away from the fighting inside the city. And the U.S. military says it refuses to give them air support, fearing that their involvement could help the Islamic State rally besieged residents to its cause. The militias "are sectarian just like Daesh is sectarian," said Majid al-Juraisi, a tribal leader from the city who fled to Baghdad when the Islamic State took control. Daesh is the Arabic name for the Islamic State, also known as ISIS and ISIL.

Middle East – Moyen-Orient

30. Israel says it has uncovered new information on Gaza tunnels

The Associated Press, 2016 06 05

Jerusalem - Israeli authorities say they have obtained "high value information" about the Hamas militant group's tunnel network in the Gaza Strip after arresting a 17-year-old fighter. Israel said Sunday that the teen was nabbed last month after crossing a border fence and entering Israel. It says an interrogation revealed information about his recruitment and training, most of which involved the Hamas tunnels. Israel says it learned that Hamas' military tunnel network allows it to move fighters throughout Gaza "exclusively underground." The network also includes "rest quarters" for its elite forces.

Others — Autres

Nil

Western Europe – Europe de l'Ouest

31. Paris ouvre sa conférence sur le Proche-Orient

Le Monde, Marc Semo, 2016 06 05

Paris - Vingt-neuf pays et organisations internationales ont appelé à un règlement du conflit israélo-palestinien, mais ont évité les sujets qui fâchent. Le plus difficile commence maintenant : concrétiser par une conférence internationale, avec les deux parties concernées cette fois, les grands principes d'un règlement du -conflit israélo-palestinien réaffirmés à Paris vendredi 3 juin. " C'est un message et il nous oblige ", a lancé le ministre français des affaires étrangères, Jean-Marc Ayrault, en conclusion de la réunion de vingt-neuf pays et -organisations internationales pour relancer un processus de paix au point mort. Le communiqué final, plus -petit dénominateur commun entre les participants, rappelle notamment que " le statu quo n'est pas tenable " et souligne que " la solution à deux Etats est la seule voie pour arriver à une paix durable, avec Israël et la Palestine vivant côte à côte dans la paix et la sécurité ". Mais il ne fixe aucun calendrier alors même que, du propre aveu du ministre français, " il y a urgence ". " La perspective des deux Etats est en grave danger, nous approchons du point de non-retour au-delà duquel elle ne sera plus possible ", a souligné Jean-Marc Ayrault, évoquant aussi bien les effets de la colonisation que le fossé qui se creuse de plus en plus " dans les coeurs et dans les esprits ". Incontestable succèsLe chef de la diplomatie française a néanmoins promis " qu'avant la fin du mois " serait lancé un travail " sur les incitations en matière économique, de coopération et de sécurité régionale " dans le but d'aboutir à " un paquet global à présenter aux Israéliens et aux Palestiniens " lors de la conférence internationale théoriquement prévue à l'automne.

32. Un Français arrêté en Ukraine avec des armes soupçonné de préparer un attentat

L'Express, 2016 06 05

Paris - Grégoire M., 25 ans, a été arrêté fin mai par les gardes-frontières ukrainiens alors qu'il transportait des lances-roquettes et des kalachikovs dans son véhicule. Une enquête préliminaire a été ouverte en France. Il avait un arsenal avec lui. Grégoire M., un Français âgé de 25 ans, a été interpellé le 21 mai par les gardes-frontières ukrainiens alors qu'il voulait passer en Pologne. Dans son véhicule, il transportait au moins trois lance-roquettes, plus de cent kilos de TNT, une centaine de détonateurs, ou encore des kalachnikovs, a révélé M6 vendredi. Selon les sources de la chaîne, ce lorrain inconnu des services de renseignement aurait évoqué des projets d'attentats en France visant des mosquées ou des synagogues, et comptait acquérir des munitions dans ce but. M6 ajoute qu'un t-shirt d'un groupe d'extrême-droite et des composants d'explosifs ont été retrouvés lors d'une perquisition à son domicile, situé par L'est Républicain à Nant-le-Petit, dans la Meuse.

CSIS Executive News Summary/Sommaire exécutif des nouvelles du SCRS
(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Saturday, June 11 2016/samedi 11 juin 2016
Abridged weekend edition/Édition abrégée de la fin de semaine

If you require copies of articles mentioned in the News Summary or radio/television interview transcripts, please contact Communications Branch at 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) or [REDACTED] on weekends. Additional weekend reports will be included in the Monday Executive Summary.

Si vous désirez obtenir des copies d'articles mentionnés dans le Sommaire des nouvelles ou la transcription d'une entrevue radiophonique/ télévisée, veuillez communiquer avec la Direction des Communications au 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) ou [REDACTED] à fin de semaine. Des reportages additionnels de la fin de semaine seront retrouvés dans le sommaire exécutif du lundi.

General News Overview/Aperçu général des nouvelles

Contents

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles	2
Canada	2
United States – États-Unis	10
United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni.....	14
Americas.....	16
Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande	16
Asia –Asie.....	17
Eastern Europe – Europe de l'Est.....	18
Africa – Afrique	19
Iraq/Iran	20
Middle East – Moyen-Orient	21
Others — Autres	22
Western Europe – Europe de l'Ouest	22

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles

1. RCMP actions in B.C. terror sting necessitate stay of proceedings, lawyer argues

The Globe and Mail, Sunny Dhillon, 2016 06 11

Vancouver - Entering a stay of proceedings for a husband and wife found guilty of placing potentially explosive pressure-cooker devices outside the B.C. Legislature would be “extraordinary” but is necessary given the actions of undercover police, defence counsel said Friday as it closed its entrapment argument. John Nuttall and Amanda Korody were found guilty by a jury last year of conspiring to murder persons unknown and making or possessing an explosive substance - in both cases for the benefit of or at the direction of a terrorist group. They were arrested on July 1, 2013. Mr. Nuttall and Ms. Korody have argued they were victims of police entrapment. A hearing into that aspect of the case began last July, with closing arguments getting under way this week. The Crown is to begin its argument Monday. Marilyn Sandford, Mr. Nuttall’s lawyer, told B.C. Supreme Court on Friday that her client and his wife lacked money, weapons, and even a mode of transportation before they were approached by undercover RCMP officers. Ms. Sandford has said the RCMP had been told by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service that Mr. Nuttall had tried to purchase potassium nitrate, though she said that information was not corroborated. Potassium nitrate can be used in explosives. She said the RCMP could have used other techniques to investigate Mr. Nuttall but chose the undercover operation. She said the Mounties also do not appear to have given adequate consideration to Mr. Nuttall and Ms. Korody’s vulnerabilities. She said both were highly susceptible, noting Mr. Nuttall’s comments about a conspiracy involving chemtrails and Ms. Korody’s mentions of an “alien cult.”

Canada

2. Canadian court hands over Iran assets to terror victims’ families

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 11

Toronto - A Canadian judge has ordered Iran’s non-diplomatic land and bank accounts in Canada to be handed over to victims of attacks by Hamas and Hezbollah, sponsored by Tehran. The judgment, obtained by Agence France-Presse on Friday, awards a reported $13 million to families of Americans who died in eight bombings or hostage-takings in Buenos Aires, Israel, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia from 1983 to 2002. Hundreds died in the attacks. The families, led by the parents of Marla Bennett, who was killed when a suicide bomber struck at a cafeteria at Hebrew University in Israel in 2002, had successfully sued the Islamic republic in the United States. The US court found that Iran was responsible for training Hamas and Hezbollah operatives, as well as backing the groups financially. But those judgments remain largely unpaid.

3. Les actifs de l'Iran seront remis aux victimes d'attentats

Agence France-Presse, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - Un tribunal canadien a ordonné que soient remis les actifs non diplomatiques du gouvernement iranien aux familles de victimes d'attentats coordonnés par Téhéran et perpétrés par le Hamas et le Hezbollah. Le jugement, obtenu hier par l'AFP, exige que les familles d'Américains qui ont péri dans huit attentats, perpétrés entre 1983 et 2002, reçoivent les propriétés et les comptes bancaires détenus par le gouvernement iranien au Canada en guise de dédommagement. Selon les médias canadiens, ces actifs totaliseraient environ 13 millions de dollars. Cette poursuite a été déposée au Canada en vertu d'une nouvelle loi, adoptée en 2012, qui permet aux victimes et à leurs familles d'obtenir des dommages et intérêts saisis auprès d'États soutenant des actes considérés comme terroriste. L'Iran est ainsi considéré par le Canada. Les attentats en question avaient fait des centaines de morts, à Buenos Aires, en Israël, au Liban et en Arabie saoudite.

4. Canadian leading Daesh in Bangladesh: report

Toronto Star, Oliver Sachgau, 2016 06 11, 2016 011

Toronto - A Windsor man is reportedly leading a Daesh-affiliated terrorist group in Bangladesh. According to the Bangladeshi newspaper the Daily Star, Tamim Chowdhury, who goes by the name Shaykh Abu Ibrahim Al-Hanif, is leading a group of militants in Bangladesh closely linked to Daesh, also known as ISIS or ISIL. Chowdhury, identified as "Bangladeshi-Canadian" by the Daily Star report, is originally from Windsor, Ont., according to Amarnath Amarasingam, a post-doctoral fellow in the Resilience Research Centre at Dalhousie University and expert on international terrorism. "He was definitely from Windsor. I spoke to a few people who knew him from the city. But not much else is known about him," Amarasingam said in an email. The Windsor Islamic Association said it could not confirm if Chowdhury was heading a Daesh-affiliate in Bangladesh. "We can confirm that Tamim Chowdhury was from Windsor, though he was not a well-known individual in the community," WIA spokeswoman Lina Chaker said.

5. Canadian Cops Lose Fight to Keep Details of Their High-Tech Surveillance Powers Secret

Vice News, Justin Ling, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - Vice News and Motherboard first reported in April that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) had obtained BlackBerry's global encryption key, and had used it to read millions of messages sent between seven men accused of murder, and a litany of other alleged mobsters who are accused of drug trafficking, kidnapping, and arson. Since then, we have fought to keep this information in the public domain. But since then, Crown prosecutors have been fighting to put the genie back in the bottle, asserting that a vague, open-ended publication ban would forbid media from reporting the details of a case that, by the RCMP's own admission, involved the largest use ever of PIN to PIN interception technique in a major North American investigation. On Friday, a judge in Laval, Quebec, rejected requests from both the Crown and the defense to extend the publication bans, and ordered that nearly all the information shall become public. The Crown, faced with representatives from the media filing to have the information rendered public, eventually retreated, and asked for only sections of the documents to be kept secret. That the Crown was even seeking to extend the publication ban — even after securing convictions — is something "we don't normally see," said lawyer Christian Leblanc, who represented VICE and other media's push back against the government's efforts to suppress this information. He cites a 2001 case where the Supreme Court clearly ruled that, after an investigation has concluded, the Crown has an obligation to make details of the investigation public. The court wrote then that, barring evidence that publishing the information could put the lives of officers in danger, the information ought to become public — "It would be unwise for this Court to countenance the establishment of a permanently anonymous section of the police force," the unanimous court wrote. In the end, on Friday, the Crown dropped their attempt to protect the sensitive information, but only after months of contending that Canadian media did not have the right to release information about the RCMP's expansive surveillance powers. The RCMP contend that making this information public could give criminals a leg up on running counter-surveillance measures and avoiding detection. But defense lawyers in this case argued the secrecy could hobble their clients' ability to receive a fair trial, while privacy advocates say the police are keeping the public in the dark on potentially unconstitutional spying powers. This story is part of a joint investigation with Motherboard. Check them out for more details about how Canadian police surveilled Canadians for a decade with secret spy tech.

6. Canada has started 'official' talks with Iran to renew ties, says Stéphane Dion

CBC News, Melissa Kent, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - The Trudeau government has made no secret of its desire to re-engage with Iran — it was even a campaign promise — and now Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion has confirmed to CBC News that preliminary contact has been made. In 2012, the Harper administration cut ties with Tehran and expelled Iranian diplomats from Canada. "Talks have started, yes, at the official level," Dion said Friday. There has been speculation the discussions took place in New York City, where the two countries have political delegations. "I will not comment," the foreign minister said when asked about a possible location. "But the usual way by which countries who want to recreate links proceed, is step by step, at the official level in neutral territory." Iran's ambassador to the United Nations declined to comment when asked whether the talks were happening between the two country's missions to the UN. The Harper government also added Iran to its list of state sponsors of terrorism. "We have no plans to change this," said Dion, unless Iran becomes a "respectful democracy." Dion was at pains to clarify that engaging with Tehran did not signify agreement with its policies. He cited Iran's human rights record, its support for Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and Hezbollah, as well as its threats against Israel as areas where Canada still has "huge problems" with Iran. Italy has been handling Canada's interests in the country since ties were cut four years ago, a situation Dion calls "absurd."

7. Canada court ruling to complicate ties with Iran: Analyst

Press TV News, 2016 06 11

Interview: Press TV has interviewed Kaveh Afrasiabi, author and political scientist from Boston, about a Canadian court's ruling to confiscate Iranian assets under the pretext of alleged involvement in terrorist activities. The following is a rough transcription of the interview. Press TV: This is not the first time that a court outside Iran rules to confiscate Iranian assets over the country's alleged involvement in terrorist activities and this is what they accuse Iran of. How legitimate are such verdicts in terms of international law considering that in most cases, there is lack of evidence in supporting the accusations? Can a court outside Iran accuse the country of such things and then demand damages? Afrasiabi: Unfortunately, the US and now the Canadian courts have given themselves the license to issue such unjust and illegitimate verdicts against Iran that flies in the face of international law and many international law pundits and professors of law in American universities that agree with this conclusion. The Canadian court's decision has followed the footsteps of the US Supreme Court just last month and is not surprising. One wonders at this point who's going to come next as going to be some Europeans, Australia, New Zealand, it opens the Pandora's box and very untimely too in light of the recent decision by the Canadian government to ease the sanctions on Iran and call for stage by stage dialogue with the Iranian government to restore relations that were unilaterally cut off by the conservative Canadian government in 2012 followed by the infamous decision of revising the sovereign immunity law that allows the Canadian courts to come with these very horrible verdicts against Iran with unlawful seizure of Iranian assets. And so, this has complicating effects on the future of Iran-Canada relations and if the Canadian government really wants and it's genuine about restoring relations with Iran, it should do whatever it can to put a stop to these unlawful acts that are self-serving and so forth.

8. Federal contracting creating a 'gig economy'

Ottawa Citizen, Kathryn May, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - The federal government's $10-billion reliance on temporary workers and independent contractors is turning stable work in Canada's public service into a "gig economy" that will discourage the best of the millennial generation the Liberals want to attract, a new report on contracting says. The report by the Professional Institute of the Public Service, called Programmed to Fail, concludes outsourcing costs the government money, jobs, morale, productivity, accountability, jeopardizes the privacy of Canadians and puts it "at risk of employing a permanently precarious public service." "Who wants to work for the government to do dull transaction work? They want to be challenged," said PIPSC president Debi Daviau. "If you want loyal public servants out of this millennial generation, you have to return to being a workplace of choice.” The government doesn’t consistently track or keep records on the number of contractors, temporary or term workers employed. It spends about $10 billion annually on “outsourced services” with $8 billion spent outside and the rest for services between departments. PIPSC conducted two surveys in 2015 to get a handle on the departments’ reliance on outsourcing. One survey was sent to all IT workers and another to all members in 60 departments and agencies. About 10,000 employees responded.

9. Close calls spur new plans for drones

Toronto Star, Bruce Campion-Smith, 2016 06 11

Toronto - Alarmed by close calls between drones and commercial aircraft, Transport Minister Marc Garneau on Monday will roll out proposed regulations to govern the use of drones and training for those who operate them, the Star has learned. Recognizing that drones come in many sizes, Transport Canada is looking at creating different categories of rules, depending on how much they weigh and how they will be used. Those categories will also dictate how much training a drone owner needs to operate the unmanned aerial vehicles. Garneau will lay out details of the proposed regulations during a news conference Monday morning at Ottawa International Airport, where he will be accompanied by pilot and airport representatives. Although rules are already in place for drone use, the growing popularity of the aerial devices is forcing regulators to go further in a bid to keep drones and aircraft safely separated in the skies. “While the number of drones in Canada continue to increase, so do the incidents of drones flying too close to airports and aircraft,” according to a background document prepared by the department on drone use.

10. Leaked docs show DND fire debris delays

The Ottawa Sun, David Pugliese, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - It will take up to four months to remove debris from a fire-damaged Defence Department building in Gatineau but in the meantime the federal government is scrounging for office furniture for public servants displaced by the blaze, according to a document leaked to Postmedia. The fire broke out in the Louis St. Laurent building April 21, forcing the shutdown of the facility and the need to find new offices for 1,800 Department of National Defence and Canadian Forces staff. Some 1,400 staff are now in offices across Ottawa and Gatineau, while another 400 continue to work from home. Accessing government files still left in the building at 555 Boul. de la Carrière has been a problem, according to the DND document. The fire started on the building's sixth floor. Part of the roof of the building caved in but the extent of the damage has not been released.

11. Journalist Mohamed Fahmy regains Egyptian citizenship

The Associated Press, 2016 06 11

Toronto - A Canadian journalist who spent almost two years jailed in Egypt said Friday that Egyptian authorities have restored the citizenship he renounced in order to win his release. Mohamed Fahmy, a former Al-Jazeera journalist released last year after receiving a pardon from Egypt's president, was a dual citizen but renounced his Egyptian citizenship late in 2014 after being asked to do as a condition of his release. He says he never wanted to do that. Fahmy was arrested in 2013 with two Al-Jazeera English colleagues. In a case that was widely condemned, he was sentenced to three years in prison in a retrial for airing what a court described as "false news" and coverage biased in favour of the now-banned Muslim Brotherhood. Fahmy said he called government officials and they confirmed he has his citizenship back. "I am thankful the mistake was corrected," he said. "I did not want to renounce it at the time but had no choice since I was incarcerated with a broken shoulder, watching my family suffer with illness and branded as a terrorist for a crime I did not commit. I am both a proud Egyptian and Canadian."

12. Interdiction de vol : les parents d'un enfant faussement ciblé se réjouissent des nouvelles mesures

Radio-Canada, 2016 06 11

Toronto - Les parents d'un garçon de 6 ans de la région de Toronto, dont le nom apparaît sur la liste d'interdiction de vol du Canada, se réjouissent de la création d'un nouveau bureau fédéral chargé d'aider les passagers victimes de fausses correspondances de noms. Le petit Syed Adam Ahmed voyageait avec son père, Sulemaan, en décembre dernier pour assister à la Classique hivernale de la LNH à Boston lorsque, selon ce dernier, un agent d'Air Canada leur a dit que le garçon apparaissait sur la liste d'interdiction de vol. Son nom, semble-t-il, est le même que celui d'un autre individu sur la liste. Les parents de l'enfant avaient dit à l'époque que ce n'était pas nouveau et qu'ils avaient des problèmes pour voyager avec leur fils depuis des années. Le nouveau Bureau des demandes de renseignements du Programme de protection des passagers (BDRPPP) travaillera de concert avec le gouvernement américain. Il permettra de mieux gérer les fausses correspondances de noms qui figurent sur la liste d'interdiction de vol du Canada. Selon le bureau du ministre de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, le système offrira éventuellement la possibilité aux voyageurs dont les noms ressemblent à ceux se trouvant sur la liste d'obtenir un numéro d'identification unique. Ils pourront utiliser ce numéro au moment d'acheter leurs billets afin d'éviter tout malentendu ou délai à l'aéroport. Les parents d'un garçon de 6 ans de la région de Toronto, dont le nom apparaît sur la liste d'interdiction de vol du Canada, se réjouissent de la création d'un nouveau bureau fédéral chargé d'aider les passagers victimes de fausses correspondances de noms.

13. New office to help shrink no-fly list

The Canadian Press, Jim Bronskill, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - A new federal office will handle inquiries from travellers who run into problems at the airport due to aviation-security lists. The Passenger Protect Inquiries Office is a step toward creating a full homegrown redress system to better deal with false name matches on Canada's no-fly list, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale announced Friday. The redress system will eventually allow travellers whose names closely match those on the list to apply for a unique identification number, Goodale's office said. They could use this number at the time of ticket purchase to clear their name in advance and prevent delays. However, the government cautioned, putting this new system in place will require important regulatory and data-system changes - an overhaul that may take more than 18 months. Dozens of youngsters have recently experienced frustrating airport delays because their names appeared to match those on a security list, including Canadian-born Syed Adam Ahmed, who was on his way to the NHL Winter Classic in Boston with his father Sulemaan Ahmed on Dec. 31 to watch the Montreal Canadiens take on the Bruins New Year's Day when he was flagged by a no-fly list. Those who are forbidden to fly due to their confirmed presence on the Canadian Passenger Protect list already have a recourse procedure. But until now there has been no formal avenue for those who face difficulties due to list confusion and mismatches. The government says the new office will co-operate with the bilateral working group recently established by Canada and the United States to help sort out errors of identity. But Goodale said last month Canada needs "an entirely new database and information system" to fully solve the problem of people - including children - being delayed at airports.

14. Des témoignages concordants

La Presse, Isabelle Hachey, 2016 06 11

Montréal - Pressé de fournir les preuves des 140 libérations dont il se dit responsable, Steve Maman n'a jamais pu dresser qu'une liste fragmentaire de 24 femmes et enfants, tous yézidis, tous délivrés du «califat» au cours de l'année dernière. Nous en avons retrouvé 21. Ces rescapés du groupe armé État islamique (EI) étaient répartis dans cinq familles yézidies, réfugiées dans des camps et des villages de la région de Dohuk, au Kurdistan irakien. Tous ont fait l'objet de vidéos produites par Steve Maman revendiquant leur libération. Tous ont confirmé qu'en réalité, le Montréalais n'avait pas pris part aux opérations de sauvetage, mais leur avait versé un soutien financier. Parmi eux, Nihad Barakat Shamo Alawsi, dont Steve Maman fait mention dans sa réplique. Son témoignage est relaté dans La Presse+.

15. Hope for the Arab world?

National Post, Robert Fulford, 2016 06 11

Column: The wave of protests that swept across the Middle East in 2011 was the first great international disappointment of this century. It began as the Arab Spring, a time of revolutionary hopes, but ended in a nightmare of chaos and violence. It overturned Egyptian and Libyan governments but the new rulers were no better than the old, sometimes worse. In Syria it ignited a long civil war that has killed hundreds of thousands and hasn't ended yet. It helped create the barbarities of the Islamic State, ISIL, instead of the civilized life that the armies of protest were seeking. Why did it fail so calamitously? Why do so many efforts by Arabs to better their society fail? Elie Mikhael Nasrallah thinks he knows why: the culture of the Arabs has developed over hundreds of years in a way that makes a viable modern society impossible. By "culture" he means the shared system of beliefs and customs that a people pass down from generation to generation. Driven by their culture, the Arab states have developed two contradictory qualities. They are turbulent and they are stagnant. He expands his answer in a remarkable book, Hostage to History: The Cultural Collapse of the 21st Century Arab World (Friesen Press). Nasrallah is a Lebanonborn Christian Arab who has lived in Canada since he came here with his parents in 1980. He works in Ottawa as an immigration consultant and often writes articles about the Arab world. He delivers his ideas with a refreshing bluntness, confident that his generalizations and his observations make sense. He knows the Arabs once were world leaders in science and literature; one millennium ago it appeared they had a far greater future than the Europeans. But today they are hobbled by ancient attitudes.

16. L'ex-Montréalaise qui dérange Pékin

La Presse, Frédéric Lelièvre, 2016 06 11

Hong Kong - Elle est une star pop cantonaise, elle milite pour défendre la démocratie à Hong Kong et, évidemment, elle dérange les autorités chinoises. Au point où, cette semaine, Pékin a fait pression pour annuler un de ses concerts. D'où vient cette passion de Denise Ho pour la liberté d'expression? Probablement de son adolescence montréalaise à l'époque du référendum de 1995, a-t-elle confié à notre collaborateur. Voilà une semaine que Denise Ho attend «non pas des excuses, mais une explication». La star hongkongaise de la cantopop défraye la chronique depuis que Lancôme a annulé un concert à Hong Kong au cours duquel elle devait se produire. Dimanche, dans un communiqué, le groupe français de cosmétique a justifié sa décision par des «raisons de sécurité». Or cette décision intervenait quelques heures après les critiques du Global Times, un des journaux porte-voix de Pékin, contre l'événement et les opinions politiques de la chanteuse. Lancôme est accusée d'avoir cédé pour sauver ses affaires en Chine continentale. L'Oréal, sa maison mère, a annoncé que la Chine était devenue son deuxième marché en importance. «Leur attitude est très décevante», peste Denise Ho dans un entretien avec La Presse. L'ancienne adolescente de Montréal avait commencé la conversation en français, teinté d'un net accent québécois. Mais pour ce sujet sensible, «[elle] trouve mieux [ses] mots en anglais», a-t-elle justifié. Dès le début de l'incident, «moi et mon manager avons offert notre aide, car ce n'est pas la première fois que je subis ce genre de pression de la part du gouvernement chinois. L'Oréal n'a toujours rien expliqué», regrette la chanteuse. Mercredi, à Times Square, haut lieu commerçant de l'ancienne colonie britannique, plusieurs dizaines de manifestants ont protesté devant le magasin Lancôme. «Où sont les valeurs de la France?», a hurlé Claudia Mo, députée du Parti civique. L'internet aussi s'est enflammé pour cette affaire. Une pétition de soutien lancée à Paris, avait récolté vendredi près de 70 000 signatures. Qualifiée de «poison» par le Global Times, Denise Ho est connue pour ses chansons, mais aussi pour ses prises de position politiques. À la fin de 2014, elle faisait partie des manifestants pro-démocratie arrêtés le dernier des 79 jours du mouvement des parapluies. Autre sujet d'irritation à Pékin, elle a rencontré le mois dernier le dalaï-lama, que la Chine populaire décrit comme un séparatiste.

17. Liberals continue to downplay terror; won't call ISIS goals 'genocide'

Postmedia Network, Anthony Furey, 2016 06 11

Column: The Liberals aren't planning to vote in favour of a Conservative motion introduced in the House of Commons Thursday that condemns the Islamic State for genocide against Yazidis, Christians and Shia Muslims. Sadly, it's yet another indication of this government's soft approach to terror. Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion called the motion "crass politics." He argued genocide is a legal term that only the courts can apply -- even though some of our allies, including the United States, already use the term. Granted it's the Liberals who hold the majority and the Conservatives who are newly defeated. So it's not like whenever the opposition says jump the government ought to ask how high. They're well within their right to ignore opposition motions and bills. But it's not like supporting an across-the-aisle motion on foreign matters would be unprecedented. In February, Trudeau backed a Conservative motion condemning Canadians who want to boycott and sanction Israel. Trudeau needs to show firmer resolve on the terror file, to say the least.

18. Ottawa veut resserrer les règles sur les drones

Agence QMI, 2016 06 11

Ottawa - Le gouvernement fédéral veut se doter de la réglementation la plus avantgardiste au monde pour contrôler l'utilisation des drones, qu'ils soient utilisés à des fins professionnelles ou récréatives. Huit amendes ont été données depuis le début de l'année. En 2015, Transports Canada a effectué 97 enquêtes au sujet d'infractions potentielles impliquant des drones. Depuis le début de l'année, les autorités en ont déjà ouvert une trentaine, et huit amendes ont déjà été imposées. Pour réduire les risques liés à l'utilisation d'appareils sans pilote, Ottawa a l'intention de resserrer sa réglementation. Transports Canada entreprendra une vaste consultation, dans le but de présenter un règlement plus strict en juin 2017. Le fédéral travaillera sur trois fronts: la restriction selon l'âge de l'utilisateur, la formation obligatoire et l'enregistrement des appareils.

19. Mob violence, cutting-edge technology

The Globe and Mail, Tu Thanh Ha & Les Perreux, 2016 06 11

Montreal - The morning that Salvatore Montagna, one-time boss of the Bonanno crime family, was shot three times and died on a snowy river bank outside Montreal, his archenemy Raynald Desjardins was having breakfast elsewhere in town with his daughter and chatting about her wedding photo album. Shortly after the killing, Mr. Desjardins sent a terse BlackBerry message to his associate, Vittorio Mirarchi: "Done." "Perfect," came the reply. Police who were wiretapping Mr. Desjardins's mobile phones immediately suspected he was behind the 2011 murder. The next evening - Nov. 25, 2011 - an RCMP sergeant arrived outside Mr. Desjardins's house with a portable device that tracked cellular signals and tried to identify what other mobile phones were inside. It was part of a 16-month surveillance operation that led police to charge Mr. Desjardins and seven others in connection with the murder of Mr. Montagna. The suspects, who thought their BlackBerry messages were secure, did not realize the RCMP read their words as they plotted against their enemies.

20. Le combat de Nihad

La Presse, Isabelle Hachey, 2016 06 11

Dohuk, Irak - Nihad Barakat Shamo Alawsi ne supportait pas l'idée de porter l'enfant de son « maître », son violeur, son bourreau. Plusieurs fois, elle a tenté de provoquer une fausse couche. « J'ai pris des médicaments, j'ai transporté des poids très lourds. » En vain. À 16 ans, elle a mis au monde un enfant qu'elle n'aimerait jamais, le fils d'un djihadiste. Nihad est l'une des rares victimes de l'EI à avoir le courage de raconter son histoire à visage découvert. Elle le fait pour que le monde ouvre les yeux sur la tragédie vécue par son peuple. Pour les 3800 femmes et enfants qui sont toujours captifs – vendus comme du bétail, tous les jours, au marché des esclaves. « Je veux dire au monde ce qui est arrivé aux yézidis. Je vais continuer à raconter mon histoire. » — Nihad Barakat Shamo Alawsi, ancienne esclave sexuelle de l'EI. Quand la Fondation AMAR l'a invitée à témoigner à Londres, en mars, Steve Maman a pourtant vu rouge. Nihad avait été sauvée par CYCI, soutenait-il, mais ni la Fondation AMAR ni les médias britanniques n'en faisaient mention. « Bien que son histoire soit tragique, il est tout aussi tragique de détourner une histoire et de ne pas donner le crédit à l'équipe de sauvetage », a-t-il dénoncé sur Facebook. Steve Maman a accusé d'antisémitisme les journalistes qui avaient mené des interviews avec Nihad à Londres. La Fondation AMAR était selon lui non seulement « corrompue », mais avait « profité d'une fille de 16 ans », l'avait « détruite », « manipulée » et « tenue éloignée de la personne qui l'a sauvée d'une mort certaine ». La Fondation AMAR n'a pourtant jamais prétendu avoir libéré Nihad, souligne sa présidente, la baronne Emma Nicholson de Winterbourne. En revanche, Steve Maman n'a pas davantage sauvé Nihad d'une « mort certaine ».

21. On guard for NATO

National Post, 2016 06 11

Editorial: Canada has been asked to contribute up to 1,000 troops to a new force in eastern Europe as a warning that the NATO alliance will not tolerate any aggression against western allies by Russian President Vladimir Putin. The U.S., Britain and Germany have each promised 1,000 troops; Canada would be the fourth partner. This should be the easiest of decisions. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's Liberals campaigned on a platform that pledged renewed emphasis on peacekeeping over the Conservative government's perceived taste for combat. It would be difficult to find a mission more fundamental to Canadian interests than keeping the peace in Europe, where Putin's Russia has demonstrated an inclination to drag relations back to the dark, dangerous days of the Cold War. Putin's seizure of Crimea, his support of fighting in Ukraine, his intervention in the Syrian conflict, and a number of close encounters between western forces and Russian ships and jets are all symptomatic of Moscow's growing adventurism. Bloomberg News reported this week that the rebound in oil prices has provided a financial windfall to Moscow, which Putin has devoted mainly to a military buildup, as he seeks to establish a bristling wall of soldiers and weaponry from the Baltic to the Black Sea.

22. Middle East deserves attention

The Kingston Whig, Louis A. Delvoie, 2016 06 11

Comment: Until the Second World War, Canada had virtually no substantive or sustained contacts with the Middle East, and this despite the fact that much of the region was under the colonial rule of Canada's two mother countries: Britain and France. In the decades following the war, Canada began to take an interest in the region, but it was a relatively slow process. Over time, five thrusts became discernible in the Canadian government's approach to the Middle East. The first thrust concerned the creation of the State of Israel. Canadians and their government were horrified by what had happened to the Jews of Europe at the hands of the Nazis. Although six million had been killed, there remained a substantial number who wanted to find refuge and a future in a Jewish State to be established in the Middle East. The Canadian government appointed Justice Ivan Rand of the Supreme Court to be its representative on the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine. On that committee, Rand became one of the strongest proponents of a partition plan that led to the creation of Israel. Once Israel came into existence, the Canadian government became one of the strongest defenders of its right to exist within secure and recognized borders. That remains to this day a cornerstone of Canadian foreign policy. Another, essentially humanitarian, thrust in Canadian policy was also linked to the establishment of Israel. In the course of the conflict leading up to the proclamation of the Jewish state, hundreds of thousands of Palestinian Arabs either fled or were forced out of their homes and lands. They found themselves living as refugees in squalid camps in neighbouring countries. To deal with this humanitarian catastrophe, the United Nations created a special body: the UN Refugee and Works Agency for Palestine (UNRWA). From the start, the Canadian government became one of the main financial backers of UNRWA, and over time has contributed hundreds of million dollars to it. The humanitarian dimensions of Canadian policy also became evident in the welcome accorded to refugees fleeing turmoil in Lebanon and Iran, and most recently to refugees from the vicious civil war in Syria. Finally, the Canadian government also began to view the Middle East as a useful source of immigrants to Canada. A number of countries, such as Morocco, Egypt, Lebanon and Iran, had a surplus of educated graduates and business people interested in moving abroad. The Canadian government tapped into this pool by opening up a number of immigration offices in the region. Now the number of Middle Eastern immigrants was never particularly large. The 2006 census indicated that there were some 200,000 people of Arab origin and some 125,000 people of Iranian origin living in Canada. These numbers pale in comparison with those for Chinese and Indian immigrants, but the Canadian government continues to see merit in promoting immigration from the Middle East. (Note: Louis A. Delvoie is a Fellow in the Centre for International and Defence Policy at Queen's University.)

United States – États-Unis

23. Obama Loosens Restrictions on U.S. Forces Fighting Taliban in Afghanistan

The New York Times, Matthew Rosenberg, 2016 06 11

Washington - As the United States braces for an especially bloody summer fighting season in Afghanistan, President Obama inched closer this week to allowing American forces to once again directly battle the Taliban, loosening restrictions on airstrikes and on ground combat in support of Afghan forces, the administration said on Friday. The president's decision to expand the military's mission just seven months before he leaves office signaled just how far the United States remains from achieving his goal of ending the American military role in Afghanistan. Under the new rules, airstrikes will no longer have to be justified as necessary to defend American troops. United States commanders will now be allowed to use air power against the Taliban when they see fit, Pentagon and administration officials said. American forces will also be permitted to accompany regular Afghan troops into combat against the Taliban. The guidelines reflect what has been apparent for months: American troops, primarily Special Operations forces, have continued to actively fight the Taliban since the declared end of the American combat mission in 2014.

24. Ban Ki-moon's Thankless Position

The New York Times, 2016 06 11

Editorial: It is distressing, but not surprising, that the United Nations secretary general, Ban Ki-moon, succumbed to pressure from Saudi Arabia to erase a Saudi-led military coalition in Yemen from a list of armies that kill and maim children. What is surprising is that Mr. Ban made the incident public and declared that the sort of pressure he came under was unacceptable. He was right to do so: Saudi Arabia stands doubly named and shamed -- for supporting a coalition that contributed to most of the deaths and injuries to children in Yemen last year and for leaning on Mr. Ban by threatening to withhold financing from humanitarian operations in the Palestinian territories, South Sudan and Syria. For many people, the affair will not come as a shock. The United Nations has developed an unenviable reputation over the years for hypocrisy in its approach to human rights. The United Nations Human Rights Council is famous for the human-rights violators who have figured among its rotating membership, which currently includes Saudi Arabia.

25. U.S.-backed fighters cut off ISIS route

The Washington Post, Karen DeYoung, 2016 06 11

Washington - U.S.-backed Syrian fighters, aided by relentless American airstrikes over the past week, have surrounded a key city held by the Islamic State in northwestern Syria, blocking escape routes and militant access to their headquarters in Raqqa, President Obama's chief liaison to the anti-Islamic State coalition said Friday. Envoy Brett McGurk said the operation to surround the city of Manbij, astride the only remaining access road to Turkey, has been "one of the most complex military maneuvers we've seen in some time." Once the city is taken, he said, "it will entirely cut off [the Islamic State's] ability to move from Raqqa and threaten us." He noted that planning and personnel for the recent terrorist bombings in Brussels and Paris had come from Raqqa, through Manbij. In a largely upbeat briefing to White House reporters on "a lot of progress" against militants in both Syria and Iraq, McGurk did not mention setbacks to hopes for a political resolution of Syria's separate civil war, which the Obama administration has said is crucial to winning the fight against the Islamic State. The two conflicts have increasingly overlapped, both politically and geographically, in a relatively small area of real estate north of Aleppo, Syria's largest city. Manbij lies just 50 air miles northeast of Aleppo, where Syrian government forces, aided by Russia and Iran, are engaged in fast-escalating air and ground attacks against U.S.- and coalition-backed rebel groups seeking to oust Syrian President Bashar al-Assad.

26. U.S. citizen helped arm Syrian rebels

The Washington Post, Rachel Weiner, 2016 06 11

Washington - Amin al-Baroudi came to the United States two decades ago to escape chaos in Syria. He had survived a 1982 massacre in his home town of Hama that left tens of thousands dead, then became a refugee in Saudi Arabia. Baroudi wanted to raise his children in the safety of the United States; he settled in Irvine, Calif., as an IT specialist and became a citizen. But when horror returned to Syria, Baroudi decided he could not ignore it. From 2011 to 2013, he illegally helped smuggle tactical supplies to rebels fighting President Bashar al-Assad, the son of the man who ordered the Hama attack. Baroudi, 50, appeared Friday in federal court in Virginia and was sentenced to two years in prison for his efforts. "Through this experience, I learned that there's no right way to do the wrong thing," he said in a statement read by his attorney. "I simply pray for my old country." Baroudi, who also goes by Abu al-Jud, pleaded guilty in January to conspiring to export U.S.-origin goods to Syria in violation of federal sanctions. Baroudi's lawyer, Anthony Capozzolo, said in court that his client's "intentions were essentially noble although essentially misguided." He said Baroudi was trying to prevent civilian deaths and had no sympathy for terrorist groups.

27. How to Run a Russian Hacking Ring

The Atlantic, Kaveh Waddell, 2015 06 11

Analysis: A man with intense eyes crouches over a laptop in a darkened room, his face and hands hidden by a black ski mask and gloves. The scene is lit only by the computer screen's eerie glow. Exaggerated portraits of malicious hackers just like this keep popping up in movies and TV, despite the best efforts of shows like Mr. Robot to depict hackers in a more realistic way. Add a cacophony of news about data breaches that have shaken the U.S. government, taken entire hospital systems hostage, and defrauded the international banking system, and hackers start to sound like omnipotent super-villains. But the reality is, as usual, less dramatic. While some of the largest cyberattacks have been the work of state-sponsored hackers—the OPM data breach that affected millions of Americans last year, for example, or the Sony hack that revealed Hollywood's intimate secrets—the vast majority of the world's quotidian digital malice comes from garden-variety hackers. And for many of those cybercriminals, hacking is as unglamorous as any other business. That's what a group of security researchers found when they infiltrated a ring of hackers based in Russia earlier this year, and monitored its dealings over the course of five months.

28. Hillary's under-probe emails focused on drone hits in Pakistan

The Nation, Staff Writer, 2016 06 11

Washington - A series of emails between American diplomats in Pakistan and Washington over drone strikes are the focus of the criminal probe involving presumptive Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton's handling of classified information, according to a report Thursday by The Wall Street Journal. The emails in 2011 and 2012 were sent through a "computer system for unclassified matters" that gave the State Department input into whether a Central Intelligence Agency drone strike went forward, congressional and law enforcement officials briefed on the FBI probe told the Journal. Some of those emails were then sent by then-Secretary of State Clinton's aides to her personal email account and private server, officials told the Journal. The vaguely worded messages, however, didn't mention the CIA, drones or details about the targets, the Journal reported. The emails were written within the often-narrow timeframe in which State Department officials had to decide whether or not to object to drone strikes before the CIA pulled the trigger, officials told the newspaper.

29. U.S. Friendly Fire Kills Syrian Allies

The Wall Street Journal, Gordon Lubold & Adam Entous, 2016 06 11

Washington - The U.S. military bombed a Syrian rebel unit it had trained and equipped in a friendly-fire incident in late May, prompting an internal investigation and raising questions about renewed Pentagon efforts to build local forces to battle Islamic State. The military didn't disclose the incident until asked about it by The Wall Street Journal. It is the most serious setback to date for the Pentagon's recent efforts to work with Sunni Arab forces in northern Syria. The Pentagon said it conducted a series of airstrikes in and around the Syrian town of Ma'ra on May 27 and May 28. The Pentagon-backed Mutasim Brigade said one of the airstrikes hit the brigade. A statement issued by the U.S. military at the time said three strikes were carried out near Ma'ra that "struck two separate ISIL tactical units and destroyed two ISIL tactical vehicles and an ISIL vehicle," using the Pentagon's preferred acronym for Islamic State. But leaders with the brigade in interviews said a U.S. airstrike hit brigade members while they were fighting Islamic State militants. Mustafa Sejry, the head of Mutasim's political office, said 10 of the brigade's fighters were killed in the U.S. strike. A spokesman for the U.S. military's Central Command acknowledged the incident, saying in a written statement that the U.S. military had launched an investigation.

30. US urges Pakistan, India to pursue closer ties on security front|

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 11

Washington - Pakistan and India need to pursue closer relations on security front to counter threat of terrorism, a US State Department spokesman said, stressing that the United States need to seek closer ties between both countries. "There's no zero-sum game here," Spokesman Mark Toner told a regular briefing at the State Department on Saturday, responding to a question about the recent remarks by Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi he made during his 3-day visit to Washington this week. Asked to comment on mention of cross-border terrorism during Modi's address to the US Congress, the spokesman refused to say what his intended audience was, but added that there was no zero-sum game here. "We need to pursue closer relations with India, with Pakistan, and they need to also pursue closer relations on the security front, certainly, with each other," the spokesman said and added that such relationship would benefit all in the face of continuing serious terrorist threats. "We all need to work in a concerted and coordinated fashion to address it, and we're trying to do so," he added.

31. Snowden Emails Reveal the NSA Used Notoriously Insecure Microsoft Word Macros Motherboard Blog, Marcy Wheeler, 2016 06 11

Washington - At the heart of the NSA's intelligence reporting process are—or at least were, in 2012—some templates using Microsoft Word macros. That's one of the unbelievable details revealed in a series of Edward Snowden's emails to NSA's SIGINT Oversight and Compliance Division released to VICE News in response to a FOIA request. The revelation comes amid renewed focus in the security community on hackers' uses of Microsoft macros as a vector to launch malware. In August 2012, compliance personnel in NSA's Fort Meade headquarters had a problem. As part of NSA's oversight of the use of congressionally-authorized spying authorities under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, Department of Justice and NSA compliance personnel review the intelligence reports written by analysts to ensure they meet legal guidelines, including ensuring that analysts only targeted appropriate people and masked the identities of any Americans in the reports. But because of new security compartmentalization implemented on its network in Hawaii, personnel in NSA's headquarters stopped being able to open the files sent by the Hawaii location. "The problem comes up when we send files to [NSA Washington] for legal review," said a Hawaii-based employee when requesting tech support, after having had a critical help ticket sit without response for a week. "NSAW cannot read the files that we send them. Since those files need to be accessible by Dept of Justice, we have a legal issue here."

32. Women in the Islamic State Aren't Just 'Jihadi Brides' — They're Crucial For Recruitment Vice News, Tamara Khandaker, 2016 06 11

Washington - Contrary to popular belief, pro-Islamic State women serve as more than just "jihadi brides," according to a new study that argues their online activities and influence make them crucial to the organization's survival. The report, titled Women's connectivity in extreme networks and published on Friday in the journal Science Advances, also makes the case for why engaging these women should be adopted as a counter-terrorism strategy. The study compares data from pro-ISIS' accounts online to the offline activities of women linked to the Provisional Irish Republican Army between 1970 and 1998 and concludes that regardless of the method of communication, women in extremist networks have "superior network connectivity" to men. While men dominated in numbers, the study found that women had "superior network connectivity at the collective level," passing along recruitment messages, files, prayers, video and audio propaganda, connecting distant parts of the network and channeling funds, making them essential to the survival and "robustness" of the whole system. Using the Russian social networking website VK, which has about 360 million users and has been a hotspot for extremist users — but which tends to be relatively slow at shutting down pro-IS groups and accounts — the researchers, with the help of a Russian subject matter expert, used hashtags, like #ISIS, #dawla (meaning "state") and #caliphate in multiple languages to find groups that explicitly supported ISIS in their posts, and from there, tracked down individual members.

33. Les femmes de Daesh Science Advances, Mathieu Perreault, 2016 06 11

Analyse: Contrairement à l'idée répandue, les femmes jouent un rôle crucial dans les groupes terroristes comme l'État islamique (EI), selon une nouvelle étude américaine. Elles font le lien entre les différentes cellules de ces groupes, ce qui leur donne une importance cruciale, même si elles sont beaucoup moins nombreuses que les hommes, ont calculé des chercheurs de l'Université de Miami. «Plus un forum internet sympathique à l'EI comprend de femmes, plus ce groupe a de chances d'être prolifique et durable», affirme Stefan Wuchty, informaticien spécialiste des groupes sociaux de l'Université de Miami, qui a travaillé avec des collègues de Miami, de Harvard et du Collège universitaire de Londres. «Cela contredit l'image qu'on a généralement de ces militantes, qui sont généralement décrites comme ayant été "attirées" par l'EI, alors que les hommes sont appelés "recrutés". Les femmes ont beaucoup plus de contacts que les hommes avec d'autres militants et sympathisants.» La proportion de femmes peut faire doubler l'activité d'un compte favorable à l'EI. La surveillance policière accrue dont les hommes font l'objet peut expliquer en partie l'importance des femmes comme liens entre les différentes cellules des groupes terroristes, Stefan Wuchty, qui est l'auteur principal de l'étude publiée dans la revue Science Advances. La croyance que les femmes sont moins susceptibles d'être interrogées de manière musclée par les policiers peut aussi jouer un rôle. Ce phénomène sur internet a des précédents dans le monde réel: durant la Seconde Guerre mondiale, des femmes jouaient souvent le rôle de courrier ou transportaient des armes pour la Résistance française.

United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni

34. Man is jailed over 'terror find' at home

The Daily Mirror, Ashleigh McDonald, 2016 06 11

London – A man caught with a timer power unit in his house was handed a five-year sentence yesterday. Keith McConnan was told he will spend half in custody with the rest on supervised licence - and he is set to get out within the week due to time served on remand. The 21-year-old, originally from Dundalk, Co Louth, was arrested in December 2013 after police searched his rented bungalow just over the border in Forkhill, Co Armagh. Officers found a number of items including crushed ammonium nitrate fertiliser. Last month McConnan, who originally faced nine charges at trial late last year, was found guilty of two and cleared of the other charges.

35. Tehran urged to release British-Iranian charity worker

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 11

London - The husband of an Iranian-British charity worker who has been held without charge in Iran since April on Friday called for her release at a rally outside the Iranian embassy in London. Nazanin Zaghari-Ratcliffe, 37, was arrested at Tehran airport on April 3 as she prepared to return to Britain with the couple's daughter Gabriella after visiting family in Iran, Richard Ratcliffe told AFP. Gabriella, who turns two on Saturday, was born in Britain and has a British passport, which was confiscated by the Iranian authorities, leaving her stranded with her grandparents in Iran. His wife, who spent the first 45 days in solitary confinement, was later transferred to Karman prison, 1,000 kilometers (621 miles) from Tehran, although Ratcliffe said the family had not received "any news since Sunday."

36. Minister warns of 'likely' Euro terror attack

The Daily Telegraph, Henry Samuel, 2016 06 11

London – Michael Fallon, the Defence Secretary, has warned English football fans travelling to France for the European Championships they face a "likely" terrorist attack. Mr Fallon urged supporters to be "very careful" because the French stadiums being used for Euro 2016 have been targeted before and may be again. On the eve of England's opening match against Russia today, the Cabinet minister disclosed that British security services had offered their French counterparts intelligence on threats in the run up to the tournament. "Fans should be very careful - the risk and the threat level is severe," Mr Fallon told reporters. "Stadiums are an obvious target as we have already seen with the Stade De France. Be very vigilant, an attack is likely." The Defence Secretary issued his warning as England prepared for their opening clash with Russia in Marseille today, while Wales, in their first ever European Championship finals match, take on Slovakia. Northern Ireland are due to play Poland tomorrow. The tournament is taking place amid an unprecedented security operation after a series of jihadist attacks in France over the past 18 months. Last November, three suicide bombers attacked the Stade de France in northern Paris, during a night of terror across the city that left 130 people dead and hundreds more injured.

37. German Domestic Intel Chief Accuses Snowden of Working for Russia

Sputnik News Service, 2016 06 11

Berlin - German domestic intelligence chief Hans-Georg Maassen suggested that US National Security Agency's ex-contractor Edward Snowden was a Russian spy, the German parliament said in a Friday press release. Snowden, who is residing in Russia, provided UK media with top secret NSA files in 2013 revealing that the online spy agency was covertly sifting through communications of millions in the United States and abroad. "Snowden seems to have plundered the NSA like no one else ever plundered a US intelligence agency before," Maassen speculated during a closed parliament hearing on Thursday. The German domestic security official went as far as to claim that the 32-year-old whistleblower could have been a "turncloak or a double agent" whom Moscow used in its "hybrid warfare" against the West. Maassen said Snowden's revelations, which include papers showing how the NSA had intercepted communications of German security agencies, had driven a wedge between Washington and its key allies in Berlin.

38. UK must investigate MI5 role in massacre?

London Times, Aaron Rogan, 2016 06 11

London - The British government should investigate any potential role that MI5 had in the murders of six men by loyalist gunmen, a victim support group and a British MP have said. Margaret Ritchie, SDLP MP for South Down, said that she would table a question to David Cameron on Monday asking for an investigation into the role that Britain's domestic counter-intelligence agency had in the Loughinisland massacre. Ms Ritchie said: "Given that this was during a period of direct rule here the British government has questions to answer about what exactly was going on." Adrian Rogan, 34, Daniel McCreanor, 59, Eamon Byrne, 39, Patrick O'Hare, 35, Barney Green, 87, and Malcolm Jenkinson, 53, were killed and five other men were injured when two gunmen burst into The Heights Bar in Loughinisland, Co Down, on June 18, 1994, and fired at customers watching the Republic of Ireland play Italy in a World Cup match. A report by Michael Maguire, Northern Ireland's police ombudsman, found that police "collusion was a significant feature in the Loughinisland murders". He said that some Special Branch officers had a "hear no evil, speak no evil, see no evil" mindset that placed the collection of information above the detection of crime.

39. Ex-MI6 officer will not face charges over Libyan renditions

The Guardian, Owen Bowcott & Ian Cobain, 2016 06 11

London - The former senior MI6 officer Sir Mark Allen will not face charges over the rendition and torture of two Libyan dissidents after the Crown Prosecution Service decided there was insufficient evidence to proceed. But prosecutors concluded he had been in contact with countries that detained Abdel Hakim Belhaj and Sami al-Saadi in 2004 as they were transferred back to Colonel Gaddafi's Libya and had "sought political authority for some of his actions". Following a four-year investigation by Scotland Yard, which gathered nearly 30,000 pages of evidences, the CPS has confirmed that it did not believe there were grounds for launching legal action against "the suspect" described only as a public official. Sue Hemming, the head of the CPS's special crime and counter-terrorism division, said: "Following a thorough investigation, the CPS has decided that there is insufficient evidence to charge the suspect with any criminal offence. "We made our decision based upon all the available admissible evidence and after weighing up all of the information we have been provided with." There had been speculation that the former foreign secretary Jack Straw could face charges. That prospect now seems to have disappeared.

40. Police chief vows to exhaust all avenues in Stakeknife investigation

Belfast Telegraph, Deborah McAleese, 2016 06 11

London - An English police chief tasked with investigating more than 50 murders linked to the Army's notorious IRA agent Stakeknife has pledged to leave no stone unturned in his quest for the truth. Bedfordshire Police Chief Constable Jon Butcher agreed to take on the independent investigation of the high-ranking mole who led the terror group's internal security unit while in the employ of the State. The informant, codenamed Stakeknife, has been linked to more than 50 killings carried out during the 1980s and 1990s. The activities of the agent's handlers and others within the Army, MI5 and RUC Special Branch, are to be included in the probe, with investigators looking for evidence of potential crimes. A team of 50 to 70 detectives will be involved in the inquiry, which is expected to last at least five years and cost more than £30m. The bill will be paid from the PSNI's budget. No current or former members of the RUC, PSNI, Ministry of Defence or MI5 will help carry out the investigation. The PSNI indicated that it would "not seek to direct or control, or in any way interfere" with the inquiry. Chief Constable George Hamilton said this decision "contributes towards community confidence and reduces the impact on the PSNI's ability to provide a policing service today".

41. Politics and Power

Daily Mail, Peter Osborne, 2016 06 11

Analysis: Most of what the British intelligence services does is secret. The world rarely learns about the bomb that does not go off. The plot that is foiled. Or the lives that are saved. By the same token, it is normally mistakes that are made public. The traitor who defects. The terrorist who gets through. The lapse in security. I do not question for a moment that the vast majority of intelligence officers are honourable men and women with many unsung achievements to their credit. But here I will argue that something has gone badly wrong with MI6, the service which spies for Britain overseas. The first problem concerns the Iraq war. There is a massive body of evidence — all of which has been seen by the Chilcot Inquiry, whose report will be published on July 6 — that MI6 lost its bearings as the invasion of Iraq approached in the early spring of 2003. We can see in retrospect that MI6 did not have a clue what was going on. The quality of its intelligence was so poor that one of its key claims — namely that Saddam Hussein was ready to attack British bases with his supposed weapons of mass destruction within 45 minutes — was such complete rubbish it subsequently needed to be officially withdrawn. To be fair, MI6 did not fabricate evidence about Saddam Hussein's weapons of mass destruction, as some have claimed. However, it allowed Tony Blair to get away with making a series of confident statements about their existence, which bore little or no relation to the underlying intelligence.

Americas

Nil

Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande

42. Terror fight's new frontier in valley of death

Courier Mail, Charles Miranda, 2016 06 11

Canberra - The posters along the Lebanese highway running along the Syrian frontier are emblazoned with keywords such as "sacrifice", "duty" and "dignity" and splashed with images of assault rifles and the cedar tree emblem of Lebanon. For the young soldiers travelling in columns of armoured personnel carriers and American-made Humvees they are stirring reminders of what is expected as they enter the restive Bekaa Valley along the Syrian border. It is in this corridor that Lebanon's armed forces and Hezbollah militia are battling a phantom war with coalitions of jihadists, notably ISIS and Jabhat al-Nusra, now threatening to evolve into full-scale conflict as the terror groups lose ground in Syria and Iraq and look to open new fronts. But it is also here Lebanese authorities say they are encountering as many terrorists coming into the valley from Syria as they are from those within Lebanon. These include Australian dual passport holders looking to join the phantom menace. Figures are hard to come by but one of the Lebanese Army's top ranking officials is adamant foreign nationals, notably British and Australians, are joining a new ISIS front. It's now seen as easier for foreigners to take up the cause in Lebanon than to try to cross into Syria or Iraq.

Asia -Asie

43. Uygurs not radical Muslims: ex-minister

South China Morning Post, Choi Chi-yuk, 2016 06 11

Beijing - Wang Meng, a former culture minister who spent 15 years in the restive northwestern region of Xinjiang (新疆) during the Cultural Revolution, has offered up praise for the millions of Uygurs living in the area, saying they are kind and friendly - and that the majority are tarred by the actions of a few radicals. The region has seen a string of violent attacks in recent years which Beijing blames on religious extremists and separatists seeking an independent homeland. But overseas Uygur rights groups have chafed at what they say is economic and political discrimination by the ethnic majority Han. Wang, a popular writer, told the South China Morning Post during a Hong Kong visit yesterday he sensed the national political mood was changing when he was teaching at a college in Beijing in 1963, three years before the outbreak of the 10-year Cultural Revolution. Wang, 81, who can speak the Turkic language of the Uygurs, said he made a crucial decision and moved to Ghulja in Xinjiang with his family. Wang returned to Beijing in 1978, after the upheaval ended, and was named minister in June 1986. But he followed the region's issues and visited at least once a year. Wang said Xinjiang's Uygurs were not radical Muslims: "When you go to Arab countries or Iran, drinking wine is strictly prohibited, but many Muslims in Xinjiang do take spirits." Some Uygurs in Xinjiang were born traders, he said. "Kazakhs crack jokes with the Uygurs that the latter would sell the stuff in his or her left pocket to the one on their right side."

44. Islamic State 'likely to strike region in summer'

South China Morning Post, Zhen Liu, 2016 06 11

Beijing - Indicators show terrorists are likely to strike Southeast Asia's tourist attractions this summer, security experts have warned. Recent developments concerning Islamic State (IS) across Asia suggested the group had recruited locally and was likely to carry out a major strike, said Alex Bomberg, group chief of Intelligent Protection International, part of Intelligent (UK Holdings). IS had developed localised - organisations and operations in Southeast Asia and was active in the Philippines, Indonesia, Malaysia and Bangladesh. Fighters recruited from Asia to fight in Syria and Iraq were starting also to return home, as IS was facing defeat in the Middle East. "I think they are ready to do something in Asia. I think it's going to happen very soon," Bomberg said. I think they are ready to do something in Asia.

45. Pyongyang claims S. Korea tried to abduct fishing boats

Yonhap English News, 2016 06 11

Seoul - North Korea said Saturday Seoul had "captured" its fishing boats that crossed the inter-Korean sea border earlier this week, adding that South Korea also tried to abduct its fishermen. On Wednesday, a North Korean fishing vessel was sent back home after it accidentally crossed the border. The vessel was reported by a South Korean fishing boat some 21 kilometers south of the Northern Limit Line, the de facto maritime border, in the East Sea. The boat and its crew were expelled by the South Korean authorities back to the North after a short time. Only one North Korean boat was spotted by the military. "Though the fishermen notified them repeatedly that their boats were returning to their port after a fishing operation, the puppet forces attempted to abduct the fishermen at any cost," said the Korean Central News Agency in an English dispatch monitored in Seoul.

46. Indonesian to set up agency to check cyber attacks

BBC Monitoring Asia Pacific, 2016 06 11

Jakarta - Lacking adequate cyber security, Indonesia is in a state of emergency following increasing incidents of cyber attacks mostly from within the country. Indonesia is ranked second among countries where cyber attacks are launched and is the most prone to them, according to the office of the coordinating minister for political, legal and security affairs. Last year, the country had witnessed a fourfold increase in cybercrimes from 2014. Cyber attacks in Indonesia rose 33 per cent in 2015 compared to the previous year, Coordinating Political, Legal and Security Affairs Minister Luhut B. Pandjaitan stated recently. In 2013, the quarterly State of the Internet Report by Akamai Technologies revealed that Indonesia had seen a massive increase in the number of cybercrimes and hacking attacks, so much so that Indonesia had pushed China out of the top spot for the Q2 2013 period. Prevalence of cybercrimes and hacking in Indonesia was partially attributed to its lack of laws governing such crimes, the report said.

47. Combating terrorism : 'Muslim bloc needed to counter US-India nexus'

The Express Tribune, 2016 06 11

Mumbai - Several religious and sectarian groups set aside their differences on Friday to protest the US drone strike in Balochistan. Scores of protest demonstrations were organised in various areas of south Punjab after Friday prayers. Dozens of protesters joined demonstrations called by Pakistan Difa Council, Majlis Wahdatul Muslimeen, Jamiat Ulema Islam-Fazl (JUI-F), Ahle Sunnat Wal Jamaat, Jamiat Ulema Islam-Sami (JUI-S) and Jamaat-i-Islami. Protests were held in Multan, Khanewal, Bahawalangar, Rahim Yar Khan and Bhakkar. In Multan, hundreds of activists of Pakistan Difa Council and the Majlis Wahdatul Muslimeen staged a demonstration and burnt the US flag at Gulshan Market. The participants chanted slogans against the United States. They said the United States government was sheltering Tehreek-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) chief Mullah Fazlullah in connivance with the Indian consulate general in Afghanistan. The protesters were led by Allama Iqtidar Hussain Naqvi. Addressing the protesters, he said US drone strikes violated Pakistan's territorial sovereignty.

Eastern Europe – Europe de l'Est

48. A Russian Cybersleuth Battles the 'Dark Ages' of the Internet

The New York Times, Neil MacFarquhar, 2016 06 11

Moscow - A sense of menace stirs right off the elevator on the fifth floor of Kaspersky Lab's Moscow headquarters, where a small television screen displays cyberthreats occurring in real time around the world -- a blinking, spinning, color-coded globe brimming with suspicious emails, malware and evil botnets that could be infecting a computer near you. That feeling of unease intensifies when Eugene V. Kaspersky -- the stocky, garrulous, 50-year-old founder and chief executive of the global computer security company -- begins to catalog possible threats: The computerized elevator you just left is vulnerable to cyberattacks, as are your smartphone and smartcar. Your bank, without question. Your electricity and water supplies could be at risk. Cybercriminals grow smarter, bolder and more elusive every year. "We are living in the middle cyberage, the dark ages of cyber," said Mr. Kaspersky, whose modest corner office with glass walls overlooks a stretch of canal and a boat club. He has longish salt-and-pepper hair, a trim beard and a ruddy, tanned complexion. "Right now, it is more functionality, more technology, more services, but not enough security." Kaspersky Lab is most famous for being the home of the brainy geek squad that exposed Stuxnet and Flame, the American-Israeli cyberweapons that disrupted Iran's nuclear program.

49. Vigilantes Patrol Where Few Migrants Set Foot

The New York Times, Boryana Dzhambazova, 2016 06 11

Bratislava, The People's Party-Our Slovakia, after months of stirring up fears about foreigners and Muslim migrants, decided to take action: This spring, the group's leader proudly stood in front of the main railway station in Zvolen, Slovakia, and announced that a new group of volunteers would begin patrolling passenger trains to keep the "decent citizens" of Slovakia safe from criminals and minorities. Never mind that vanishingly few of the hundreds of thousands of migrants who have reached Europe over the last year ever set foot in the Central European nation, or that only 10 people last year became crime victims on a Slovakian train system patrolled by 600 railway police officers. The xenophobic Slovakian group has been one of a wave of such extremist organizations across Central and Eastern Europe that have seized on last year's influx of migrants through Europe to advance their agenda and build popular support. In some cases, the vigilante groups have taken to patrolling borders, streets and other public places to defend against what they portray as a menacing incursion of asylum seekers, many of them Muslims from Afghanistan, Iraq, Syria and other poor, war-torn nations. "The original cultures of Europe are threatened by some idiots from the desert," said Marian Magat, the leader of Vzдор Kysuce, another far-right group in Slovakia, which has actually seen few migrants pass through its borders and fewer seek to settle. In Hungary, which saw nearly 400,000 asylum seekers pass through its borders last year en route to Germany and other more welcoming destinations, Istvan Matyas Vass, a retired artist and former parliamentarian has, since July, led a group called the Hunyadi Border-Guard Unit.

Africa – Afrique

50. Libye: les forces anti-EI avancent rapidement à Syrte

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 11

Tripoli - Les forces progouvernementales libyennes ont progressé rapidement dans leur offensive à Syrte contre le groupe Etat islamique (EI) en s'emparant du port et de plusieurs quartiers ces dernières 24 heures malgré la résistance des jihadistes qui défendent leur fief en Libye. Au lendemain de violents combats de rue, de raids aériens et de tirs à l'artillerie lourde, les violences ont nettement baissé d'intensité samedi entre les forces fidèles au gouvernement d'union nationale (GNA) soutenu par la communauté internationale et les jihadistes qui contrôlent Syrte (centre-nord) depuis juin 2015. L'offensive pour déloger l'EI de Syrte a été lancée le 12 mai par les forces du GNA, qui, avant de parvenir à Syrte, ont repris sur leur chemin d'autres localités et installations aux mains des jihadistes. Ces derniers se sont implantés en Libye fin 2014 en profitant du chaos politique et sécuritaire qui règne dans ce pays. « Nos forces ont donné l'assaut au port, l'ont repris et s'y sont installées » tard vendredi après de violents combats, a déclaré à l'AFP Reda Issa, un responsable du bureau d'informations des pro-GNA. Elles se sont aussi emparées de plusieurs quartiers résidentiels de l'est de cette ville, a ajouté M. Issa, qui a fait état de 11 morts et de 45 blessés dans les rangs des pro-GNA vendredi, la plupart touchés par des balles de francs-tireurs de l'EI postés sur les toits des bâtiments.

51. Libyan forces 'retake Sirte port from IS militants'

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 11

Tripoli - Forces loyal to the unity government in Tripoli fought street battles with IS to take Sirte's port back. Libyan forces say they have retaken control of the port in the city of Sirte, after fierce fighting with militants from so-called Islamic State. Sirte is the most significant IS stronghold outside Iraq and Syria. Air and missile strikes have hit IS positions this week, officials said. A spokesman said troops were moving closer to the city centre. The forces, aligned to the UN-backed unity government in Tripoli, began the battle to retake the city last month. A spokesman, Ahmed Hadia, told the BBC IS forces had weakened, but "not totally broken down". He said the troops were encircling part of the city.

52. L'armée capture 3 autres terroristes à Médéa

El Watan, 2016 06 11

Médéa - Les forces de l'armée ont capturé, aujourd'hui samedi, 3 terroristes dans la zone de Rouakeche, près de la commune de Baâta (Médéa), a annoncé le ministère de la Défense nationale (MDN). Les éléments de l'ANP ont récupéré, en outre, des armes, des munitions et des bombes artisanales. Le bilan de l'opération de ratissage, menée par l'armée ces derniers jours dans la région de Médéa, s'élève ainsi à 4 terroristes tués et 4 autres arrêtés, selon le MDN. (Rapport Complet)

53. Egypt's Islamic authority downplays ISIS threat to destroy pyramids

Al Arabiya News, 2016 06 11

Cairo - Egypt's Islamic authority has downplayed recent threats by ISIS that the militant group could destroy the Giza pyramids, the state-owned Ahrum Online reported Friday. "This is unlikely in Egypt in light of a strong state and deterrent institutions," Dar Al-Ifta, the Egyptian state body that issues Islamic edicts, said in a statement. Dar Al-Ifta said such threats are "unrealistic" amid what it described as series of successful security blows that led to a "decline in terrorist attacks" in Egypt.

Iraq/Iran

54. Iran Firm on Fighting Terrorism

Fars News Agency, 2016 06 11

Tehran - Iranian Defense Minister Brigadier General Hossein Dehqan underlined his country's firmness in its anti-terror campaign. "The resolute actions against terrorism and terrorist groups top the Iranian government's defense doctrine," Brigadier Dehqan said in a meeting with his Syrian counterpart General Fahd Jassem al-Frej in Tehran on Friday. He, meantime, said that Iran will continue to support the Syrian government, army and nation in their fight against terrorist groups. "Campaign against terrorism will be possible in light of vigilance, unity, firmness and speedy action. On the call of the legal government of Syria, we consider support for government and nation of the country in campaign against terrorism as our duty," Brigadier General Dehqan added. Tehran, Moscow and Damascus agreed to step up cooperation in their fight against Takfiri terrorist groups and their sponsors who are to be blamed for the regional crises, specially in Syria and Iraq. "We made decisions for what must be done on the regional and operational levels in an agreed upon and coordinated manner," Brigadier General Dehqan said. Brigadier General Dehqan said that the terrorist groups and their sponsors must know that the anti-terror alliance of Iran, Russia and Syria is determined to support its cause till the end.

55. Tehran, Moscow, Damascus join anti-terrorism hands

Tehran Times, Staff Writer, 2016 06 11

Tehran - It seems that Iran, Russia and Syria are becoming more determined to fight terrorist groups in Syria. This was the main theme of the tripartite meeting held in Tehran on Thursday where defense ministers of Iran, Russia, and Syrian exchanged ideas on the latest developments in Syria and the region in general. The meeting was arranged on the initiative of the Iranian side. "We made decisions for what must be done on the regional and operational levels in an agreed-upon and coordinated manner," said Iranian Defense Minister Hossein Dehqan. There has been close cooperation among the three countries in the Syrian battlefield, where the Russian airpower has played a vital role in fighting terrorist groups, helping the Syrian army to gain ground against them. Dehqan noted that "The terrorists and their supporters must know that the group fighting against them is determined to continue this route until the end and will do so."

56. Limited progress for Iraqi army

The Washington Post, Loveday Morris & Missy Ryan, 2016 06 11

Baghdad - In the days before his death last month, Col. Ihab Hashem al-Araji confided that his battle against the Islamic State too often felt like a suicide mission, despite the more than $1.6 billion in U.S. arms and training that have flowed to the Iraqi army over the past two years. He had even begun taking a white funeral shroud to the battlefield with him. To support his forces advancing on enemy-held Fallujah, Araji had requested a U.S.-supplied M1 Abrams tank but said he was asked to pay $2,000 in bribes to secure it. Instead, he was given a run-down Russian one, which arrived without a driver trained to use it. "It was useless," one of his men, Lt. Nassir Hamza, recalled. When Araji told superiors that his men were too exhausted to go farther, he was ordered to lead another unit, one he had never fought with before. The next day, he was killed by an Islamic State rocket, a death his family blames as much on the Iraqi army's mismanagement as on the militants themselves. Two years ago this week, tens of thousands of Iraqi troops fled Mosul, the largest city in northern Iraq, as the Islamic State seized control. Senior U.S. and Iraqi military leaders say foreign assistance since then has helped to correct, at least temporarily, some of the Iraqi army's weaknesses that allowed the city to fall: inadequate intelligence, logistical issues, corruption and poor leadership.

Middle East – Moyen-Orient

57. Twin blasts near Damascus kill 12, wounds dozens

The Associated Press, Bassem Mroue, 2016 06 11

Beirut - Two suicide bombers struck close to the Syrian capital Saturday, killing at least 12 people and wounding dozens more in the latest attack to hit the predominantly Shiite area in recent months, state TV and an opposition activist group said. The Islamic State group claimed responsibility for the bombings through its Amaq news agency, which said there were three attacks carried out by suicide bombers. Amaq said two attackers were wearing explosive belts while the third was in a car. Syrian State TV said the blasts in the Sayyida Zeinab area just south of Damascus killed 12 people and wounded 55 others. The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said 20 people were killed and dozens were wounded in the two explosions. The blasts came as U.S.-backed fighters in northern Syria tightened their siege on the IS stronghold of Manbij, where tens of thousands of civilians are trapped by the fighting. The Syria Democratic Forces, a predominantly Kurdish group, encircled the town after capturing dozens of villages and farms near the Turkish border.

58. Besieged Syrian Town Gets First Food Aid Since 2012, Then Gets Bombed

The New York Times, Rick Gladstone & Hwaida Saad, 2016 06 11

Beirut - Relief trucks delivered food aid for the first time in four years to Daraya, the rebel-held Syrian town just outside of Damascus that has come to symbolize civilian suffering in the war, the United Nations said Friday. But even as the relief convoy's success was announced by the World Food Program, the United Nations anti-hunger agency, residents of Daraya were reporting that Syrian military aircraft were bombing the town, making it difficult to distribute the food. They also said the amount delivered was roughly half of what was needed. "People didn't come in large numbers to receive the convoy, they were afraid of the bombing," Amjad Abbar, a member of a local council in Daraya, said by telephone, with sounds of explosions and aircraft heard in the background. "Several barrel bombs have fallen," he said. News of the bombing nearly overshadowed the aid delivery, provoking anger among some Western powers hostile to President Bashar al-Assad of Syria. "It is an extraordinary duplicity of the regime which we are witnessing," Foreign Minister Jean-Marc Ayrault of France said at the United Nations, where he was visiting to preside over a Security Council meeting on protection of civilians in armed conflict. The Daraya food delivery, a joint operation of the United Nations and the Syrian Arab Red Crescent that had been repeatedly delayed, illustrated the multiple frustrations confronting relief providers in the Syrian conflict.

Others — Autres

Nil

Western Europe – Europe de l'Ouest

59. Turkish gov't to regulate cylinders used in bomb-making amid anti-terror fight

Hurriyet Daily News, 2016 06 11

Ankara - The Turkish Prime Ministry is set to introduce additional measures to more strictly regulate materials that are widely used by militant groups to build explosives, including cylinders and fertilizers, amid successive terror attacks that hit the country, it has announced. The sale and distribution of 12-kilogram propane cylinders will be monitored and inspected, Prime Minister Binali Yıldırım's press office announced on June 10, a day after the country's Interior Ministry temporarily suspended the sale of fertilizers containing ammonium nitrate. A second move to monitor and detect the sale and distribution of other cylinders, including camp cylinders and industrial cylinders, will follow soon, according to reports. Among the measures which are set to be introduced are mandatory inscription of serial numbers and QR codes on cylinders in addition to the online tracking of the consumption process. The ministry will also be able to access the identity card information of the final consumer, according to the plan. The orders also included tracking the entries and exits of LPG cylinders, which are brought to Turkey from foreign countries. The regulation is part of efforts to prevent access by militant groups to the substance commonly used in building explosives, including cylinders, fertilizers and inflammable materials that can easily be provided in the market.

60. Kurdish militant group claims Istanbul bombing, says tourists aren't safe

The Washington Post, Erin Cunningham, 2016 06 11

Istanbul -A Kurdish militant group warned foreign tourists Friday that they are no longer safe in Turkey as its fighters ratchet up attacks on security forces across the country, an escalation many here fear could bring more deaths and cripple an already unstable economy. The warning from the Kurdistan Freedom Falcons, known in Kurdish as the TAK, came as the group asserted responsibility for a car bomb attack on police forces in central Istanbul this week. That attack killed at least 11 people near some of the city's most famous landmarks and was the third bombing this year to hit neighborhoods popular with tourists. "We warn all tourists who might plan to visit Turkey. . . . You are not our targets, but Turkey is no [longer] secure for you," the statement posted on the TAK's website said. The TAK is a splinter group of the militant Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK), which has fought the Turkish state for decades for autonomy for Turkey's ethnic Kurds. The conflict, which has killed more than 40,000 people, reignited last year after a brief truce between Turkey and the PKK collapsed. Since then, Turkish warplanes have struck hundreds of militant targets in northern Iraq, where the PKK is based, as well as in Turkey's southeast, where many towns are majority Kurd. Turkey is home to roughly 15 million Kurds, who have long been marginalized by the state.

61. Luis Martinez " En Algérie, la mainmise des services de sécurité sur l'appareil d'Etat ne tient plus"

Le Monde, Charlotte Bozonnet, 2016 06 11

Paris - Affaiblissement du renseignement, montée en puissance des milieux d'affaires et de l'armée... Le chercheur analyse les nouveaux rapports de force au sein du régime algérien. Chercheur au CERI Sciences Po, Luis Martinez vient de coordonner, avec l'universitaire danois Rasmus Alenius Boserup, un ouvrage collectif sur l'Algérie, intitulé Algeria Modern. From Opacity to Complexity, "l'Algérie - moderne, de l'opacité à la complexité" (Oxford University Press, non traduit). Fruit de deux ans de travail, il étudie les changements politiques en cours en Algérie. A rebours du sentiment d'immobilisme, vous estimez que le système politique -algérien s'est profondément transformé sous la présidence d'Abdelaziz Bouteflika... Sur plusieurs sujets sensibles, tels que l'armée, la Sonatrach - la compagnie nationale d'hydrocarbures - et l'administration, nous avons été surpris de constater qu'un accès à leurs représentants, à certains dossiers, parfois aux archives, était possible. L'opacité complète qui caractérisait l'Algérie depuis son indépendance a cédé la place à un système d'une grande complexité au sein duquel se prend la décision politique. Jusqu'à l'arrivée de Bouteflika, les services de sécurité étaient tout-puissants. Depuis ont émergé des groupes d'intérêt - le Forum des entrepreneurs -algériens, le FLN - ex-parti unique - et d'autres - qui ne sont plus forcément sous la tutelle des services. La mise à la retraite - en septembre 2015 - du chef du renseignement, le général " Toufik ", a été une illustration de cette transformation des rapports de force au sommet. Comment expliquer cet affaiblissement du département du renseignement et de la sécurité (DRS)? Cette évolution est liée à la rente pétrolière. A partir des années 2000, des sommes co-lossales ont été accumulées et les acteurs économiques se sont multipliés. Par le passé, le fonctionnement était classique : quelques personnes contrôlaient les importations - le coeur de l'économie algérienne - , les redistribuaient à quelques milliers, qui les redis-tribuaient à leur tour aux petits commerçants. Les appareils de sécurité contrôlaient la trajectoire économique et financière de chacun. Aujourd'hui, l'économie est certes toujours rigide et dépendante du secteur des hydrocarbures, mais de nombreux entrepreneurs ont fait leur apparition. Sur un million d'acteurs économiques, 75 % ont été créés sous Bouteflika. C'est énorme!

62. Des dizaines de djihadistes cherchent à revenir en France

Le Figaro, Christophe Cornevin, 2016 06 11

Paris - Désarçonnée par les revers militaires qui s'enchaînent en Syrie et en Irak, pilonnée par les multiples frappes des avions bombardiers, l'organisation État islamique (EI) est en proie à une hémorragie programmée de ses combattants volontaires étrangers. Coûte que coûte, nombre d'entre eux cherchent à désertir les zones de combat pour rejoindre leur pays d'origine afin de se livrer aux autorités ou d'exporter le conflit en Europe. Les services de renseignement sont en ébullition. Selon un dernier bilan porté vendredi à la connaissance du Figaro , pas moins de 248 djihadistes français sont déjà revenus sur le sol national sachant que 666 compatriotes sont encore sur place, dont 400 hommes engagés sous la bannière de Daech parmi lesquels figurent environ 20 mineurs. « Si l'on n'a pas encore constaté une accélération significative du nombre des retours, nous savons que plusieurs dizaines de « pointures » essaient actuellement de revenir en France , confie un haut responsable de la lutte antiterroriste. Il s'agit essentiellement d'individus très dangereux, qui se savent pertinemment identifiés et recherchés puisqu'ils se sont pour la plupart mis en scène comme outil de propagande dans des vidéos d'égorgements... » Jamais l'hypothèse d'un nouvel attentat frappant la France n'a autant pris corps. Ayant tutoyé l'indicible au quotidien, ceux que les experts nomment les « returnees » présentent des symptômes post-traumatiques analogues aux anciens de la guerre du Vietnam. Le possible retour de ces « futurs vétérans » de Daech, mêlant selon Patrick Calvar des « terroristes très aguerris mais aussi des gens relevant d'ores et déjà de la psychiatrie », nourrit sans nul doute les plus vives inquiétudes. Si l'on ajoute la menace bien réelle d'al-Qaida, tentée elle aussi par une action d'envergure pour rétablir son aura sur la scène islamiste et les possibles « réseaux dormants » de terroristes poussant en germe dans l'Hexagone, les services français dansent sur un volcan. Plus que jamais, ils sont persuadés que Daech veut « fracturer l'Europe » en la frappant au nom de l'islam. Ce qui aura pour effet d'accentuer le ressentiment de la population contre des musulmans qui, à leur tour, risquent de se cristalliser dans un virulent communautarisme. Face à cet épouvantail et avec la collaboration de services « amis », les Français ont déployé leurs antennes aux limites de la zone Schengen, aux frontières du pays ainsi que dans l'entourage des djihadistes identifiés. À elle seule, la DGSI a déjà procédé à plus de 350 interpellations, ayant débouché sur 180 mises sous écrou.

CSIS Executive News Summary/Sommaire exécutif des nouvelles du SCRS
(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Sunday, June 12 2016/dimanche 12 juin 2016
Abridged weekend edition/Edition abrégée de la fin de semaine

If you require copies of articles mentioned in the News Summary or radio/television interview transcripts, please contact Communications Branch at 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) or [REDACTED] on weekends. Additional weekend reports will be included in the Monday Executive Summary.

Si vous désirez obtenir des copies d'articles mentionnés dans le Sommaire des nouvelles ou la transcription d'une entrevue radiophonique/ télévisée, veuillez communiquer avec la Direction des Communications au 613-231-0100 (mediamonit@smtp.gc.ca) ou [REDACTED] a fin de semaine. Des reportages additionnels de la fin de semaine seront retrouvés dans le sommaire exécutif du lundi.

General News Overview/Aperçu général des nouvelles

Contents

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles	2
Canada	2
United States – États-Unis	5
United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni.....	7
Americas.....	8
Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande	9
Asia –Asie.....	9
Eastern Europe – Europe de l’Est.....	11
Africa – Afrique	12
Iraq/Iran	13
Middle East – Moyen-Orient	14
Others — Autres	14
Western Europe – Europe de l’Ouest	14

CSIS in the News/Le SCRS dans les nouvelles

1. La liste d'interdiction de vol en cinq questions

La Presse, Daphné Cameron, 2016 06 12

Analysie: Qui est sur la liste d'interdiction de vol canadienne ? Tous les gens identifiés comme posant une menace à la sécurité aérienne et toute personne impliquée ou qui a été impliquée dans un groupe terroriste et qui peut être « raisonnablement soupçonnée » de mettre en danger la sécurité d'un avion ou d'un aéroport. Lorsque le nom d'une personne est sur la liste, cette personne peut acheter un billet d'avion, mais elle ne peut s'enregistrer en ligne. Lorsqu'elle se présente à l'aéroport, les compagnies aériennes doivent contacter par téléphone Transports Canada, qui contacte à son tour Sécurité publique Canada, qui donnera ou non l'autorisation au passager de monter dans l'avion. La réponse redescend la chaîne jusqu'à l'employé au comptoir. Les pseudonymes font l'objet du même processus. Qui décide des noms qui se retrouvent sur la liste ? Un comité consultatif formé de représentants de la GRC, du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité, de l'Agence des services frontaliers, de Transports Canada et du ministère de la Justice du Canada. C'est le ministre de la Sécurité publique qui est responsable de la liste depuis février 2011. Créé en juin 2007, le programme de protection des passagers, qui dresse la liste, était initialement sous la responsabilité de Transports Canada. La liste est constamment mise à jour.

Canada

2. ISIS-inspired board game helps Canadian military with planning

CBC News, Dean Beeby, 2016 06 12

Ottawa - Canada's military has been experimenting with a tabletop game inspired by the war against ISIS to help plan what tanks, planes, ships and people it needs to fight effectively in the coming decades. The ISIS Crisis uses dice, markers and a large map of Iraq and Syria, and is the latest twist in a government-wide effort to use more games in the workplace for training and education. "This certainly does have potential to add additional rigour to our process," said Col. Ross Ermel, in charge of a directorate that plans how the Canadian Forces must evolve. "It does show some promise.... It's one of the things that we are certainly considering." The ISIS Crisis is known as a matrix-type game, a concept dating from the 1980s, with minimal rules and using debates and arguments, unlike traditional war games with complex rules and drawing on probabilities. Matrix games allow complex, multi-sided issues to be explored, often by up to six players who don't need particular expertise in the subject matter. The ISIS Crisis was created by Rex Brynen, a political science professor at McGill University, who developed the roles and scenario rules, and by a British major, Tom Mouat, who created the map and counters. Brynen also acted as a kind of referee for the Canadian military sessions.

3. Attention, enfants à bord

La Presse, Daphné Cameron, 2016 06 12

Montreal - Au début de l'année, l'histoire du petit Adam Ahmed est devenue virale lorsque son père a publié une photo d'un écran d'Air Canada avertissant le personnel que l'enfant de 6 ans devant eux était « présumé à haut risque ». Il était loin de se douter qu'en seulement six mois, 44 familles se manifesteraient, avec des histoires de vols manqués, d'interrogatoires et de passeports confisqués en sol étranger. Dès le premier vol d'Adam, un employé d'une compagnie aérienne avait déjà discrètement prévenu ses parents que leur bébé de quelques semaines se trouvait sur une liste d'interdiction de vol. En prenant la photo du terminal, son père venait d'en avoir la preuve hors de tout doute, provoquant une vague d'indignation publique qui a forcé le gouvernement canadien à promettre des changements, qui se font cependant toujours attendre. Dans les faits, ce n'est pas le petit garçon que l'on soupçonne de fomenter des attentats. Il a le malheur de porter le même nom qu'un présumé terroriste ou un nom qui y ressemble beaucoup. La famille de trois enfants n'a jamais pu s'enregistrer avant de voyager, entraînant retards et confusion à chaque voyage, raconte la maman d'Adam, Khadija Cajee, qui nous a accueillis à son domicile à Markham, en banlieue de Toronto. La situation s'est compliquée lorsqu'il avait 18 mois et que les passeports de toute la famille ont été confisqués durant plus d'une demi-heure au Mexique. Une éternité, pour les parents qui ont failli manquer leur vol de retour. « Certaines personnes nous disent que ce ne sont que des retards, des petits irritants, mais c'est beaucoup plus grand que ça. C'est un enjeu de droit de la personne. Pourquoi est-ce que ces enfants sont marginalisés et ciblés de manière injuste par rapport aux autres enfants qui peuvent voyager en toute quiétude ? », se demande-t-elle. Khadija Cajee collige officiellement les noms des enfants afin de les remettre au gouvernement. Elle affirme que le nombre est en réalité plus élevé, mais que bien des parents hésitent d'aller de l'avant, car ils ont peur de faire des vagues.

4. Sauveur d'esclaves ou source de financement pour le terrorisme ?

La Presse, Isabelle Hachey, 2016 06 12

Dohuk, Irak - La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) s'est intéressée aux activités de l'homme d'affaires montréalais Steve Maman, qui prétend avoir libéré 140 femmes et enfants chrétiens et yézidis détenus par le groupe armé État islamique (EI) en Syrie et en Irak, a appris La Presse. Notre enquête au Kurdistan irakien a révélé hier que Steve Maman s'était faussement attribué le mérite d'opérations de sauvetage menées par des réseaux de passeurs actifs au sein du « califat ». En réalité, le Montréalais s'est contenté de soutenir financièrement 24 victimes de l'EI, pour la plupart déjà libérées ou sur le point de l'être. Dans au moins un cas, cependant, nous avons découvert que de l'argent avancé par l'organisme de Steve Maman à une famille avait directement servi à payer la rançon qu'exigeait un combattant de l'EI pour la femme et les quatre enfants yézidis qu'il détenait en Syrie. Les autorités pourraient considérer que Steve Maman et son organisme, la Libération des enfants chrétiens et yézidis d'Irak (CYCI), ont ainsi financé un groupe terroriste, une activité criminelle strictement prohibée en vertu de la loi canadienne et des conventions internationales. Chose certaine, la GRC s'est intéressée au dossier. À au moins trois reprises au cours des dix derniers mois, des enquêteurs ont rencontré Steve Maman à ce sujet. La première fois, en août 2015, deux enquêteurs l'ont longuement interrogé dans son magasin de Harley-Davidson usagées, à Montréal-Ouest.

5. Iran can ask Canada to list US, Israel for sponsoring terror: Analyst

Press TV News (Iran), 2016 06 12

Interview: Press TV has conducted an interview with Alfred Lambremont Webre, an international lawyer from Vancouver, to discuss a ruling by Ontario Superior Court of Justice to give Iran's non-diplomatic assets to the American victims of bombings blamed on Hamas and Hezbollah. A rough transcription of the interview appears below. Press TV: Can a country's internal court give itself the jurisdiction to rule on international matters like this? Webre: The easy answer is yes, because a national court can open itself for the enforcement of valid judgments from other recognized jurisdictions under recognized norms and that is what the Canadian court is arguing here. Now, If I were in the position of Iran, I would advise them as follows especially as the new Prime Minister Justin Trudeau who is a serious, progressive, open-minded person who wants to re-open diplomatic relations and that is that they have the reason why Iran has found itself vulnerable under the Canadian legislation is that Canada has listed Iran as a state sponsor of terrorism. Now, what Iran could point out is that it could apply to have the United States, Israel and the UK listed as state sponsors of terrorism under the Canadian act because now there are even books being published and most of the literate public understands that the United States, Israel and the UK are the sponsors of the terrorism of ISIS and the ISIS terrorism organization. Press TV: In this case at hand, how can Iran defend itself and get into the due process to exonerate itself in this ruling that just took place in Canada? Webre: I just stated how. It can counter-claim to have the United States, Israel and the UK listed as state sponsors of terrorism under the Canadian law and the only reason why they are going after Iran is that Canada listed Iran as a state sponsor of terrorism under the law. So then Iran can say well the US, the UK and Israel are sponsoring ISIS. So, you have to list them and Justin Trudea will finally understand and he will take Iran off of the list and he would be vulnerable.

6. Peacekeeping, foreign aid at 'core' of UN Security Council bid: envoy

The Canadian Press, 2016 06 12

Ottawa - Foreign aid and the future role of the Canadian Forces will form the backbone of the country's bid for a seat on the Security Council, says Canada's ambassador to the United Nations. Marc-Andre Blanchard tells The Canadian Press that's part of the reason why the government has embarked on major reviews in two key areas of foreign policy: international development and national defence. Blanchard says it is still early days in what will be a four-year campaign for the 2020 vote, a bid to secure a two-year term on the UN's most powerful body that would begin the following year. Still, he says, the groundwork is currently being laid, by both the internal policy reviews, and the early interactions of diplomats on ground. Blanchard says he's had more than 50 bilateral meetings with fellow ambassadors at the UN since taking up the post earlier this year, and for now he's in a listening mode to get feedback about Canada. He says the country faces a tough fight against two like-minded countries and allies — Norway and Ireland — when 2020 rolls around, so work is underway to carve out a platform that can highlight Canada's comparative advantage.

7. Bomb threat halts GO bus

The Toronto Sun, Kevin Connor, 2016 06 12

Toronto - A GO bus sits on the side of Hwy. 407 as police investigate a bomb threat yesterday. A man was taken into custody. Metrolinx officials confirmed a passenger on a bus heading from Guelph to Square One reported that another rider said he had a bomb. The OPP were contacted by Metrolinx and the bus was stopped on the 407 near Britannia Rd. Metrolinx spokesman Anne Marie Aikins said the bus was locked down and around 15 passengers were taken off. The man remained on the bus and police continued to negotiate with him through the driver's cellphone, Aikins said. Cops closed the 407 between Britannia and Derry Rd. for several hours during the negotiations with the man.

8. Under review: Independent contractor to assess Shared Services' mandate

The Ottawa Citizen, James Bagnall, 2016 06 12

Ottawa - Treasury Board president Scott Brison has ordered an independent review of Shared Services Canada, the troubled computer services agency. The Treasury Board assessment, according to procurement documents released Friday, is being billed as a way to help Shared Services do a better job delivering government-wide computer services. However, it has the potential to be much more than that. Following a devastating critique of Shared Services operations published earlier this year by the Auditor General — who noted the agency had failed the most basic job of understanding the needs of the departments it serves — the computer services agency is at risk of dissolving if it can't get its act together. Treasury Board has responsibility for establishing the government's overall plan for information technology. The Treasury Board review of Shared Services is to be done by a contractor selected through a competition, with a bidder's conference scheduled for June 22 in Gatineau. Bids are due by July 20. The initial contract — estimated at $1.4 million — is to be completed by March 31 with a one-year option beyond that. Roughly five private sector individuals with deep experience in the sector are being sought.

United States – États-Unis

9. Omar Mateen, Terrorist Who Attacked Orlando Gay Club, Had Been Investigated by FBI

The Daily Beast, Multiple Reporters, 2016 06 12

Washington - Mateen was a 'known quantity' to federal law enforcement before he killed 53 people in the worst mass shooting in U.S. history. Omar Mateen of Port Saint Lucie, Florida, came to the attention of federal authorities twice prior to being identified as the gunman in the Orlando nightclub mass shooting, a senior law enforcement source told The Daily Beast. Mateen killed 53 people and shot more than 100 in total at the Pulse gay nightclub early Sunday morning, in the deadliest mass shooting in modern American history. The senior law enforcement source reports that Mateen became a person of interest in 2013 and again in 2014. The Federal Bureau of Investigation at one point opened an investigation into Mateen but subsequently closed the case when it produced nothing that appeared to warrant further investigation. "He's a known quantity," the source said. "He's been on the radar before." Mateen was a U.S. citizen; his parents are from Afghanistan, CBS News reports. The senior law enforcement source told The Daily Beast that Mateen was born in New York and was married for a time to a woman from New Jersey. Father Mir Seddique told NBC News that the sight of two men kissing angered his son. "We are saying we are apologizing for the whole incident," the father added. "We weren't aware of any action he is taking. We are in shock like the whole country." The attack, he said, "has nothing to do with religion."

10. Orlando nightclub shooting leaves 50 dead; terrorism links probed

The Miami Herald, Multiple Reporters, 2016 06 12

Orlando - In what is now the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history, an assault rifle-wielding gunman fatally shot at least 50 people, and wounded 53 more, in a downtown Orlando gay nightclub before he was felled by police bullets. Authorities have identified the killer as Omar Mateen, 29, of Fort Pierce. Federal agents are now probing whether Mateen has links to international terrorism. As the country awoke Sunday to the shock of yet another mass shooting, federal agents with South Florida's Joint Terrorism Task Force had joined in the investigation into Mateen, who is of Afghan descent. Authorities with knowledge of the investigation say agents have already begun interviewing Mateen's relatives, and search warrants are expected to be executed Sunday afternoon. His father, Mir Seddique, told NBC News that he believed the shooting "has nothing to do with religion" but instead was outrage sparked after his son saw two men kissing in Miami a few months ago. "We are saying we are apologized for the whole incident," he told NBC News. "We weren't aware of any action he is taking. We are in shocked like the whole country." Rep. Alan Grayson, speaking to reporters Sunday, said he believed the shooting was a "hate crime," although the FBI stopped short of saying that.

11. 50 dead in Orlando nightclub terrorism attack, state of emergency declared

The Orlando Sentinel, Multiple Reporters, 2016 06 12

Orlando - A lone gunman armed with a pistol and an assault rifle killed 50 people and injured 53 more at a gay Orlando nightclub early Sunday morning in the deadliest mass shootings in American history. Federal and local authorities are investigating the massacre as a possible terrorist attack and say the gunman may be an Islamic extremist. The man, whom officials have identified as 29-year-old Omar Mateen of Port St. Lucie, was killed after a shootout with Orlando police. Police Chief John Mina said Mateen fired the first shot about 2:02 a.m. at an Orlando police officer and then ran into the club, which held more than 200 people. Details about exactly what happened inside the club were unclear, but police said handled it as a hostage situation. By 5:00 a.m., the police department's SWAT team opened fire. They distracted Mateen with an explosive device and plowed into the building with a vehicle. When officers went inside, they discovered 50 dead, including Mateen, and 53 injured. Mina credited his officers with rescuing 30 hostages from the club, Pulse Orlando, on 1912 S. Orange Ave., which is just south of downtown Orlando and near Orlando Regional Medical Center. Agent Ron Hopper of the FBI said he cannot rule this out as an act of domestic terrorism and that the suspect may have leanings toward extreme Islamic ideologies. Gov. Rick Scott is on his way to Orlando, his office said this morning. Scott has been in touch with local law enforcement and the FBI about the shootings.

11B). 50 dead in gay nightclub shooting, worst in US history

The Associated Press, Mike Schneider, 2016 06 12

Orlando, Fla - A gunman wielding an assault-type rifle and a handgun opened fire inside a crowded gay nightclub early Sunday, killing at least 50 people before dying in a gunfight with SWAT officers, police said. It was the worst mass shooting in American history. Authorities were investigating the attack on the Florida dance hall as an act of terrorism. The gunman's father recalled that his son got angry when he recently saw two men kissing in Miami. He said that might be related to the attack. At least 53 people were hospitalized, most in critical condition, officials said. A surgeon at Orlando Regional Medical Center said the death toll was likely to climb. Mayor Buddy Dyer said all of the dead were killed with the assault rifle. "There's blood everywhere," Dyer said. The suspect exchanged gunfire with an officer working at the gay club known as Pulse around 2 a.m., when more than 300 people were inside. The gunman then went back inside and took hostages, Police Chief John Mina said.

12. House Intelligence chairman: Orlando attack 'looks like radical Islam'

The Hill Times, Rebecca Savransky, 2016 06 12

Washington - Rep. Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) said Sunday that the attack at an Orlando, Fla. nightclub that left 50 dead resembles last year's Paris terrorist attacks at a music venue. "We need to let the FBI conduct their investigation, but I will say, everything that I'm seeing now points to some type of radical Islam," Nunes, the House Intelligence Committee chairman, said on CNN. "This is very, very similar to the attack on the nightclub in the concert hall in Paris and that's why it's critical right now in this juncture for the FBI and other law enforcement to quickly track down all possible leads to see if this individual is connected to any other terrorist nodes around the United States or elsewhere."

13. The Chinese Hackers in the Back Office

The New York Times, Nicole Perlroth, 2016 06 12

Belleville, Wis - Drive past the dairy farms, cornfields and horse pastures here and you will eventually arrive at Cate Machine & Welding, a small-town business run by Gene and Lori Cate and their sons. For 46 years, the Cates have welded many things -- fertilizer tanks, jet-fighter parts, cheese molds, even a farmer's broken glasses. And like many small businesses, they have a dusty old computer humming away in the back office. On this one, however, an unusual spy-versus-spy battle is playing out: The machine has been taken over by Chinese hackers. The hackers use it to plan and stage attacks. But unbeknown to them, a Silicon Valley start-up is tracking them here, in real time, watching their every move and, in some cases, blocking their efforts. "When they first told us, we said, 'No way,'" Mr. Cate said one afternoon recently over pizza and cheese curds, recalling when he first learned the computer server his family used to manage its welding business had been secretly repurposed. "We were totally freaked out," Ms. Cate said. "We had no idea we could be used as an infiltration unit for Chinese attacks." On a recent Thursday, the hackers' targets appeared to be a Silicon Valley food delivery start-up, a major Manhattan law firm, one of the world's biggest airlines, a prominent Southern university and a smattering of targets across Thailand and Malaysia. The New York Times viewed the action on the Cates' computer on the condition that it not name the targets.

14. CIA director John Brennan expects release of 9/11 documents to clear Saudi Arabia

Independent Online, Peter Yeung, 2016 06 12

Washington - CIA director John Brennan expects a classified US congressional report into the 9/11 attacks to be published and clear Saudi Arabia of any blame. The withheld section of the 2002 report into the era-defining terrorist strikes is central to a dispute over whether Americans should be able to sue the Saudi government for damages. "I think the 28 pages will be published and I support their publication and everyone will see the evidence that the Saudi government had nothing to do with it." Saudi Arabia denies providing any support for the 19 hijackers – most of whom were Saudi citizens – who killed nearly 3,000 people in the 9/11 attacks. Riyadh strongly objects to the bill. The Saudi government has said it might sell up to $750 billion (£526 billion) of investments in American assets if it becomes law. Mr Brennan called the 28-page section merely a "preliminary review", but previously said it should be kept out of the public domain for fear of fuelling unfounded rumours. He added: "It was found later, according to the results of the report, that there was no link between the Saudi government as a state or as an institution or even senior Saudi officials to the September 11 attacks."

United Kingdom - Royaume-Uni

15. Secret phone tap unit was run by Strathclyde Police

Sunday Herald (UK), 2016 06 12

London – A top secret surveillance unit that had access to a GCHQ spy programme collecting information from people's private phones, emails and use of social media, was based in Glasgow and run by Strathclyde Police, the Sunday Herald can reveal. Newly released classified documents from US whistleblower Edward Snowden reveal that a previously unknown body called the Scottish Recording Centre (SRC) was given access to a GCHQ project codenamed Milkwhite. The SRC was used by Scottish police forces to secretly access metadata via Milkwhite which collated information about people's private communications, online activities and movements. Milkwhite was also storing data on people's usage of smartphone apps such as WhatsApp and instant messenger services. Both GCHQ and Police Scotland have refused to say whether Milkwhite continues to monitor the public, although neither body said the project had ended. The programme was set up by GCHQ to allow police to spy on people without any legal framework. However, the UK Government is now seeking controversial powers which would cover such surveillance under the Investigatory Powers Bill, aka the snooper's charter, which the House of Commons passed last week.

16. The Jihadis cutting off their beards and slipping on to refugee boats bound for Italy

Mail on Sunday, Barbara Jones, 2016 06 12

London - Hundreds of fanatical Islamic State terrorists are on their way to Europe posing as migrants after being driven out of their Libyan stronghold by British-backed forces, The Mail on Sunday has learned. As the Libyan troops and jihadis fought a running battle in the port city of Sirte yesterday, we uncovered disturbing evidence that IS fighters are fleeing the onslaught and shaving off their beards and hair to blend in with refugees on their exodus across the Mediterranean. Last night, the Libyan Brigades, secretly supported by elite troops from the British Special Boat Service, told me they were days away from regaining Sirte, which has been in IS hands for 18 months. The jihadis briefly regained control of the city's port area yesterday after a fierce firefight with naval vessels - while other Libyan troops advanced into the city centre, coming under sniper fire. Libyan officer Colonel Mohamed El-Gasri told me: 'We have taken casualties but so have the militants. We need to secure the port to prevent any escape by sea.' He said intelligence gleaned with the help of British and US Special Forces showed that families holed up in their homes may be supporting and harbouring IS. 'Sirte was Muammar Gaddafi's home town and there is still fierce allegiance to him and opposition to our forces, who killed him,' he said. 'We have been appealing for weeks for people to get out and, while tens of thousands have left, there are others who chose to stay. 'This is not going to be easy, but we feel confident the city will be ours within days.'

17. Gardai block 'Irish MI5' plan

The Sunday Times, John Mooney, 2016 06 12

London – The gardai have rejected proposals to overhaul the state's intelligence apparatus, including a plan to create a national security council to advise the government on crisis situations and terrorism. Instead, following the intervention of Frances Fitzgerald, the justice minister, they have secured an expanded role in defending the country's national security. The decision follows discussions between the Department of Justice, Department of Defence, Garda Headquarters and the military on state security. One of the most radical proposals discussed was the creation of a national security council similar to Britain's Cobra committee. Simon Coveney, the former defence minister, wanted to include a proposal to establish the council in a recent white paper on defence, but his plan was vetoed by Fitzgerald. Fitzgerald and her department are said to have "vehemently opposed" Coveney's plan. Some of those involved in the discussions had also supported the creation of an independent intelligence agency similar to MI5, but the idea "did not get off the ground" as Garda Headquarters already has responsibility for the role.

18. Ticking time bomb of IRA shops blast

The Sunday Mirror, 2016 06 12

London – The IRA is taking lives with a bomb terrorists used to blow up a shopping centre 20 years ago. Scores of police, paramedics and workers who waded through wreckage of Manchester's Arndale were exposed to asbestos, which causes cancer decades later. One, guard Stuart Packard, 40, died last year of mesothelioma - only caused by asbestos. Widow Julie, from Essex, said later: "If the bomb hadn't happened, he would likely still be alive." Graham Dring of Manchester Asbestos Victims Group said: "There may be more cases in the future given the problem of asbestos fibres released."

19. Fans face airport-style checks at screenings

The Sunday Times, Dipesh Gadhur, 2016 06 12

London - Fan zones in Britain showing Euro 2016 matches are deploying airport-style security amid fears they could be targeted by terrorists. Police are understood to be running background checks in advance of supporters turning up for screenings at the Hyundai FanDome in King's Cross, London, which promises to host 1,000 people for each game. Fans, who have had to register their details online to get tickets, are met at the venue by police sniffer dogs trained to detect explosives. Bags are screened by scanners, while individuals walk through security arches and are separately frisked by staff with hand-held metal-detector wands. Photo identification, such as a passport or driving licence, is also required at the site. Organisers of the fan zone, hosted by one of Uefa's official sponsors, are believed to have co-operated closely with anti-terrorist officers at the Metropolitan police. Wales supporters entering a 6,000-capacity fan zone close to Cardiff Castle yesterday were also subjected to bag checks, screenings and pat-downs.

Americas

Nil

Australia –Australie/New Zealand - Nouvelle-Zélande

20. After the gunfire, inquest left with blanks

The Australian, Mark Coultan & Dan Box, 2016 06 12

Canberra - A witness statement provided to the Lindt café siege inquest by the most senior NSW police tactical officer on duty that night stops at 12.15am — two hours before the siege ended in three deaths. Asked why the document stops short of the moment his officers stormed the building, its author, identified only as the tactical -adviser, told the inquest this week: “No reason I can think of.” Did he not think the coroner would be interested in those final hours before gunman Man Haron Monis shot and killed café -manager Tori Johnson? Before police fired the bullets that killed Monis and a second hostage, -Katrina Dawson? “Now that you point it out, I -really don’t have a reason,” the tactical adviser said. His blank response was only the latest in a long line of difficult exchanges State Coroner Michael Barnes has overseen as he tries to establish what happened on that night in December 2014. At times, both the NSW Police Force and state Director of Public Prosecutions have fought bitterly over the public release of evidence at the inquest. With his inquiry into its 13th month of public hearings, Barnes must also now hold the line amid political scrutiny, obsessive attention within the police and warring media camps. Adding to this pressure, it seems inevitable the inquest will influence the choice of a successor to NSW Police Commissioner Andrew Scipione, whose contract, which has already been -extended once, ends next year. For the coroner, all this comes after a drawn-out inquest, the end of which seems still to be receding. It has suffered delays. Some are understandable: the inquest has the biggest scope of any -attempted in NSW. It is the first to deal with an act of domestic terrorism, the first to seek evidence from intelligence agency ASIO. Investigators have canvassed more than 14,500 people, taken nearly 1000 written statements, reviewed 1200 hours of CCTV and media footage, and liaised with 32 state, federal and foreign government and private agencies to date.

Asia –Asie

21. Blast from "self-made" explosive injures five in Shanghai airport

Reuters News, 2016 06 12

Shanghai - A man set off a home-made explosive at a terminal in Shanghai's Pudong International Airport on Sunday, the city's government said, injuring five people, including himself. The explosion occurred near the airport's Terminal Two ticketing area at about 2:20 p.m. and the people who were injured were taken away for medical treatment, the Shanghai government said in a short statement on its official microblog. "According to an initial police investigation, a man took self-made explosive materials in a beer bottle out of his backpack and threw it at ticketing counter," the government said. After the bottle exploded, he took out a knife and slashed his own neck, it said, adding that efforts to treat his "serious" injuries were underway. Another four people were lightly injured by exploding glass, it said. The incident was under investigation and only the three flights in that ticketing area had been affected. Unverified pictures on China's Weibo microblog showed a person on a gurney being wheeled away by medical attendants and a pool of blood on the floor.

22. Philippine authorities maintain no-ransom policy for hostage-takers (Canada)

Kyodo News, 2016 06 12

Manila - Philippine authorities on Sunday maintained their policy of not paying ransom for the release of hostages, on the eve of a deadline set by a local bandit group that has been holding three people, including two foreigners, hostage for months. Brig. Gen. Restituto Padilla, spokesperson of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, said the military will sustain its offensive against the Abu Sayyaf militant group in the southern Philippine island of Mindanao to try to free the hostages. "Our focused military operations continue without let up. We will not stop until we find these criminals and rescue the hostages," Padilla said. "As their world gets smaller, we will eventually find them and hold them accountable for all their crimes." In September last year, the group kidnapped four people -- Canadians John Ridsdel and Robert Hall, Norwegian Kjartan Sekkingstad and Filipina Marites Flor -- from a posh resort on Samal Island in Davao del Norte. Ridsdel was beheaded in April after the Philippine and Canadian governments refused to pay ransom money.

23. Additional troops deployed for operations vs Abu Sayyaf

The Philippine Star, Jaime Laude, 2016 06 12

Manila - The Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) has deployed another Army battalion to Sulu as the deadline set by the Abu Sayyaf for the families of the foreigners they seized on Samal Island to pay ransom nears. The 45th Infantry Battalion based in Central Mindanao had been sent to Sulu to help in the operations to rescue the hostages. Eight Army battalions as well as Scout Rangers, Special Forces and the United States-trained Light Reaction Co. are presently operating against the Abu Sayyaf in Sulu and Basilan. Lt. Gen. Glorioso Miranda, AFP acting chief, has been going to the Western Mindanao Command in Zamboanga City in the past weeks to oversee the ground operations. The kidnapers had demanded P300 million each for Canadian Robert Hall and Norwegian Kjartan Sekkingstad. They threatened to execute another captive if their demand is not met by tomorrow.

24. Philippines arrests suspect in kidnap of Italian ex-priest

Agence France Presse, 2016 06 12

Manila - Philippine authorities have arrested a man accused of kidnapping an Italian businessman who was held hostage for six months by Islamic militants, the military said Sunday. Retired Catholic priest Rolando Del Torchio, was abducted at his pizza restaurant in the southern city of Dipolog on Mindanao island last October. He was released unharmed on the Abu Sayyaf stronghold of Jolo island in April. Sehar Muloc, also known in the area as Commander Red Eye, helped the kidnapers select and stalk their Italian target, regional military spokesman Major Filemon Tan told AFP. "He (Muloc) is linked with the Abu Sayyaf. We have no information on whether he is also a member," Tan said referring to the kidnap group, which is also blamed for the deadliest bombings in the Philippines. Muloc was arrested near the town of Naga, about halfway between Dipolog and Jolo, early Sunday and will be charged with kidnapping, Tan added.

25. Bangladesh Arrests Over 3,000 to Halt Attacks

The New York Times, Julfikar Ali Manik & Geeta Anand, 2016 06 12

Dhaka, Bangladesh - More than 3,000 people, some of them known Islamist militants, have been arrested in a series of police raids intended to quell a wave of deadly machete attacks against bloggers, minorities and others, the police said Saturday. The roundup began last week after militants killed the wife of a police superintendent who had been investigating the machete attacks. Over the course of the week, the police said, they killed five militants in shootouts. They were members of the Jama'atul Mujahedeen Bangladesh, one of two groups that the authorities believe are behind most of the attacks, the police said. Many citizens criticized the government for not taking action sooner against the militants, who have created a climate of terror since they began murdering secularist bloggers and others more than three years ago. Since 2013, bloggers, freethinkers, religious minorities, foreigners, gay activists, followers of more liberal strains of Islam and others have been killed in attacks carried out mostly by groups of young men wielding machetes.

26. India Holds Suspect in Killing of Narendra Dabholkar , an Anti-Mystic Activist

The New York Times, Ellen Barry, 2016 06 12

Bangalore - A court in western India on Saturday ordered a member of a right-wing Hindu sect held in connection with the 2013 murder of Narendra Dabholkar, a physician who spent his adult life crusading against spiritual practices he considered fraudulent. The killing of Dr. Dabholkar, who was shot at point-blank range while walking near his home in Pune, took place at a time of rising ideological change in India, when more conservative strains of Hinduism have been gaining resonance nationally. The suspect, Virendra Tawde, also a doctor, appeared in a Pune courtroom on Saturday and was ordered held until Thursday. Dr. Tawde had known Dr. Dabholkar for years and had clashed with him over his campaigns against superstitious practices, according to the victim's son. Dr. Tawde is associated with a division of Sanatan Sanstha, an organization based in Goa that immerses its followers in a regimen of meditation and chanting, offering what it calls an escape from addiction and materialism. The group's founder, a former hypnotherapist known as His Holiness Dr. Jayant Athavale, has called the shooting "a blessing from God" because Dr. Dabholkar had escaped dying from old age. At the time of his murder, Dr. Dabholkar had been lobbying intensively for the passage of legislation banning a list of mystical practices, including animal sacrifice, the magical treatment of snakebites and the sale of magic stones.

27. India Rejects Google Street View Over National Security Concerns

Motherboard Blog, Daniel Oberhaus, 2016 06 12

Mumbai - After several months of delay, India's Ministry of Home Affairs rejected Google's request to expand its Street View service in the country on Friday. The rejection came after India's Ministry of Defense raised concerns that the expansion of the service in the country could be a threat to national security. As its name suggests, Street View allows for 360-degree on-the-ground panoramas in Google Maps and has been taken to some of the most remote regions on Earth, like Antarctica and Mount Everest. In 2011, Google received the go-ahead to map major Indian heritage sites like the Taj Mahal in conjunction with the Archaeological Society of India. Google Maps shows dozens of individual locations with street view enabled in cities like New Delhi and Mumbai, but the service is far from ubiquitous in these mega-cities. "The main concern [in rejecting Street View] was security of sensitive defense installations," an anonymous senior government official told The Hindu, one of the country's largest newspapers. "The Defense Ministry said it was not possible to monitor the service once it was launched and it would be detrimental to national security." According to The Hindu, Google's Street View proposal may have been rejected by the Defense Ministry as early as February, which cited concerns that Google Maps had been used to orchestrate a terrorist attack on India's Pathankot airbase the month prior. Similar concerns that Google Earth was used to orchestrate the 2008 terror attack in Mumbai have also been cited as possible grounds for the rejection.

Eastern Europe – Europe de l'Est

28. Kazakhstan Reveals Aktobe Terrorists Planned Attacks on Gov't Agencies

Sputnik News Service, 2016 06 12

Almaty - On June 5, unidentified armed assailants attacked two gun shops and a military unit in Aktobe. As a result of the attack, at least 7 people were killed, including three servicemen, and 38 injured. In response, the country's authorities announced an anti-terrorist operation. "According to preliminary reports, terrorists planned to attack a penal institution and certain administrative buildings of government agencies after obtaining fire arms," Maj. Gen. Nurgaly Bilisbekov told reporters. He added that joint efforts of Kazakhstan's law enforcement agencies prevented terrorists from implementation of their plans.

29. In Albania, concerns over ISIS's emergence

The Washington Post, Joby Warrick, 2016 06 12

Tirana, Albania - Ask Bujar Hysa about the charges that landed him in Tirana's cramped No. 302 Prison, and he spits furious denials. "I never encouraged terrorism!" declared the Muslim cleric, convicted last month of recruiting young Albanians for the Islamic State. But press further and Hysa readily admits to supporting a kind of Islamic state - not in Syria, but at home, in Albania, a NATO member and close U.S. ally on Europe's southern flank. Reflecting on his country's future from the prison's tiny visitor's room, he predicted that Albanians would inevitably replace Western-style governance with sharia, or Islamic law. Indeed, younger members of his flock were clamoring for it, he said. "Islam can coexist with other religions, but with democracy? No!" the bearded imam told a reporter as a guard kept an anxious watch just outside the door. "Anyone who says that sharia can coexist with democracy is a hypocrite." It is precisely this sentiment that has officials on a war footing in tiny Albania, a country with 2.8 million people, but an outsize problem trickling in from across its rugged eastern border. The Balkan enclave, nestled between the shimmering Adriatic and the high peaks of the Dinaric Alps, has a majority-Muslim population but a centuries-old tradition of religious tolerance and moderation. Yet even here, 1,200 miles from the fighting in Syria, the Islamic State has found a small but devoted following.

Africa – Afrique

30. Daech au pied du mur à Syrte

El Watan, 2016 06 12

Syrte - Les informations en provenance de Syrte indiquent que les forces de Daech ont subi un cinglant revers lors de l'affrontement en cours contre les troupes loyales au gouvernement de Tripoli. Daech ne contrôle plus qu'un quartier à l'intérieur de la ville, selon Ridha Aissa, du bureau de communication de l'opération de libération de Syrte. Le port de Syrte a été libéré avant-hier après un affrontement de quelques heures aux armes lourdes. Daech n'a pas fait le poids face aux troupes de Misrata et de ses alliés», a ajouté Aissa à la correspondante de l'agence Dune-voices, en précisant que «l'opération, qui a commencé il y a un mois, a fait 125 morts et plus de 400 blessés parmi les rangs des forces de Tripoli». Aucun chiffre n'a été officiellement communiqué sur les pertes dans les rangs de Daech. Les communiqués militaires en provenance du front ont rapporté que les forces gouvernementales ont utilisé, au début des opérations, des chars, de l'artillerie lourde et des lance-missiles. Les avions de l'académie militaire de Misrata ont également accompli 125 sorties pour bombarder les positions de Daech lors des premières attaques. Mais «les combats sont aujourd'hui dans les rues de Syrte», précise un membre actif des forces de Misrata, qui constituent la colonne vertébrale des forces loyales au gouvernement de Tripoli soutenu par la communauté internationale.

31. Libye: le groupe Etat islamique acculé au cœur de Syrte

Radio France Internationale, 2016 06 12

Syrte - La fin de la bataille de Syrte est proche. Les forces progouvernementales libyennes ont progressé rapidement dans leur offensive à Syrte contre le groupe Etat islamique en s'emparant du port et de plusieurs quartiers. Désormais la résistance de l'EI se concentre dans une zone restreinte d'environ 3km². L'après bataille est déjà dans les têtes. Des bâtiments et des voitures piégées à la va-vite, quelques snipers : c'étaient les dernières menaces auxquelles devaient faire face les forces Misrata samedi 11 juin.

32. Nigeria : quatre femmes égorgées dans une attaque de Boko Haram

Jeune Afrique, 2016 06 12

Abuja - Quatre femmes ont été égorgées dans un village du nord-est du Nigeria par des militants de Boko

Haram, ont indiqué samedi des miliciens qui luttent contre ces rebelles islamistes. Une quinzaine d'assaillants à moto ont surgi vendredi soir à Mairari, un village isolé situé à 80 kilomètres de Maiduguri, la capitale de l'Etat de Borno. Ils ont fait sortir de leurs maisons les femmes, âgées de 27 à 45 ans, et les ont égorgées, selon les témoignages des miliciens. « Ils sont allés dans quatre maisons pendant que les habitants rompaient le jeûne (du ramadan) vers 19 heures (18H00 GMT), ils ont sorti les quatre femmes et leur ont tranché la gorge », a déclaré à l'AFP un milicien, Babakura Kolo. Selon lui et un autre milicien, Musa Ari, les assaillants ont délibérément visé ces femmes, soit parce que leurs maris avaient refusé de rejoindre les rangs de la rébellion islamiste, soit parce que Boko Haram soupçonnait ces hommes de renseigner les autorités.

33. Freed From Prison , Zainab al-Khawaja Flees Bahrain

The New York Times, Kareem Fahim, 2016 06 12

Cairo - A political dissident from Bahrain, who was recently released from prison after the government there faced international outrage, said on Saturday that she had fled the country after she was threatened again with detention. The dissident, Zainab al-Khawaja, had been one of the last vocal pro-democracy activists remaining in the country amid a five-year government crackdown on dissent. Since facing an uprising in 2011, Bahrain's ruling monarchy has imprisoned prominent activists and opposition leaders or stripped them of citizenship. Other dissidents have either quieted their criticism of the government or left the country. Ms. Khawaja, 32, a dual citizen of Bahrain and Denmark who was imprisoned along with her infant son, was released on humanitarian grounds in May, and left Bahrain for Denmark last week. She said in an interview that Bahraini officials had warned the Danish Embassy that if she did not leave, she would be rearrested within months and separated from her son. "I have been arrested 11 times," she said in a telephone interview from Denmark. "I have done all I can do inside of prison."

Iraq/Iran

34. Thousands flee Falluja using first safe exit route secured by Iraqi army

Reuters News, Maher Chmaytelli and Ahmed Rasheed, 2016 06 12

Baghdad - The Iraqi army said on Sunday it had secured the first safe exit route for civilians to leave Islamic State's besieged stronghold Falluja, and a Norwegian aid group said thousands of people had already used it to flee in the first day it was open. Iraq has launched a major operation to recapture Falluja -- an Islamic State bastion just an hour's drive from Baghdad -- but the United Nations fears for the fate of up to 90,000 civilians believed trapped inside with little food or water. The new exit route, known as al-Salam (Peace) Junction, was secured on Saturday, southwest of Falluja, Joint Operation Command spokesman Brigadier Gen. Yahya Rasool told Reuters. "There were exit routes previously, but this is the first to be completely secured and it's relatively safe," said Rasool. About 4,000 people had fled the city over the past 24 hours through the al-Salam Junction, said Karl Schembri, a spokesman in Iraq for the Norwegian Refugee Council, which has been assisting people who escape the city. "We expect thousands more to be able to leave in the coming days," he said.

35. Spokesman Slams Canada's Anti-Iran Court Ruling

Fars News Agency, 2016 06 12

Tehran - Iranian Foreign Ministry Spokesman Hossein Jaber Ansari blasted a Canadian court's ruling to seize Iran's assets under the pretext of alleged involvement in terrorist activities. "Such a move is at odds with Ottawa's claims on the normalization of bilateral relations," Jaber Ansari said on Saturday. Canada's Ontario Supreme Court issued a political ruling to confirm a verdict for confiscation of $13 million of Iranian assets on the baseless allegation that Iran has supported the terrorist groups. The Iranian foreign ministry spokesman said that the recognition and enforcement of the politically motivated and in absentia rulings of the US courts, which have been confirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada's Ontario State runs in contradiction with the international commitments of the Canadian government per the principles and rules of the international law on judicial immunity of governments and their properties. Jaber Ansari reiterated that Canada's court ruling is in contradiction with statement of the new government of Canada willing to normalize bilateral relations and making up for the extremist policies of the former government of Canada.

36. Iran: Canada's Court Ruling against Int'l Laws

Fars News Agency, 2016 06 12

Tehran - Iran's Judiciary Spokesman Gholamhossein Mohseni Ejei blasted a Canadian court's ruling to seize Iran's assets under the pretext of support for so-called terrorist activities, describing it as contradictory to the international laws. "Such moves are violating the international laws and are adopted by certain western states, headed by the US," Ejei told reporters in a press conference in Tehran on Sunday. "This issue is groundless and if these countries don't pay attention to the international laws, it will backfire on them," he added. Ejei called on the government to pursue the case seriously through diplomacy. In relevant remarks on Saturday, Iranian Foreign Ministry Spokesman Hossein Jaber Ansari also lambasted the Canadian court's ruling, and said, "Such a move is at odds with Ottawa's claims on the normalization of bilateral relations." Canada's Ontario Supreme Court issued a political ruling to confirm a verdict for confiscation of $13 million of Iranian assets on the baseless allegation that Iran has supported the terrorist groups. The Iranian foreign ministry spokesman said that the recognition and enforcement of the politically motivated and in absentia rulings of the US courts, which have been confirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada's Ontario State runs in contradiction with the international commitments of the Canadian government per the principles and rules of the international law on judicial immunity of governments and their properties.

Middle East – Moyen-Orient

37. Activists say airstrikes in northwest Syria kill 27

The Associated Press, 2016 06 12

Beirut - A series of airstrikes in an insurgent-held Syrian province on Sunday killed at least 27 people, including four children, activists said. The airstrikes in the northwestern Idlib province struck a crowded market and an apartment block, and came despite reports that a local truce between the government and insurgents had been renewed. The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, which relies on a network of activists on the ground, said at least 21 people were killed by several airstrikes in Idlib city, including one that hit a popular market. The group said another airstrike in the city of Maaret al-Numan, also in Idlib province, hit an apartment building, bringing it down and killing six people, including a mother and her four children who were trapped under the rubble.

Others — Autres

Nil

Western Europe – Europe de l'Ouest

38. Endoctrinés, traumatisés, dangereux : que vont devenir les enfants de Daesh ?

SudOuest.fr avec AFP, 2016 06 12

Paris - Pour la France, les autorités estiment à environ 400 le nombre de mineurs actuellement présents dans les rangs de Daesh. Que se passera-t-il s'ils décident de revenir ? Ils sont des centaines, endoctrinés, traumatisés, potentiellement dangereux : les enfants occidentaux qui auront passé des années au sein de Daesh, s'ils rentrent un jour dans leurs pays d'origine, vont poser un problème auquel il faut se préparer, estiment officiels et experts. Alors que les forces de Daesh vont de défaite en défaite et perdent du terrain, les défections se multiplient dans les rangs des combattants étrangers qui avaient rejoint le "califat" autoproclamé. Si certains sont venus avec femmes et enfants, nombreux sont ceux qui se sont mariés et dont les épouses ont eu des enfants : pour la France, les autorités estiment à environ 400 le nombre de mineurs actuellement présents dans la zone. "Les deux tiers sont partis avec leurs parents, le tiers restant est composé d'enfants nés sur place et qui ont donc moins de quatre ans", a précisé récemment, lors d'une audition à l'Assemblée nationale française, le directeur général de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI), Patrick Calvar. Les "lionceaux du califat" "Je vous laisse imaginer les problèmes de légalité que posera leur retour avec leurs parents, s'ils reviennent, sans compter les réels problèmes de sécurité car ces enfants sont entraînés, instrumentalisés par Daesh : une vidéo récente les met en scène en tenue militaire"

39. ISIL puts beer bottles in front of cell houses to avoid police raids in Turkey's southeast
Hurriyet Daily News, 2016 06 12

Istanbul - Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) militants put beer bottles in front of their cell houses as a ploy to avoid police raids or arrests in the southeastern province of Diyarbakır, Doğan News Agency reported on June 12. A total of 128 objects seized in an operation on Oct. 26, 2015, including plenty of beer and perfume bottles, were destroyed according to the police report. The ISIL militants also put beer on their beards in order to give the impression that they consumed alcohol to avoid arrest. Two police officers and seven militants were killed in the aforementioned operation and many seized objects were destroyed under prosecutor's orders on June 11 for not having criminal elements.

40. German citizens who fought with 'IS' under surveillance in Euro 2016
Deutsche Welle, 2016 06 12

Berlin - Some 500 Germans who have fought with terrorist group "Islamic State" are under surveillance during the Euro 2016 soccer championship. Germany kicks off its Group C campaign against Ukraine in Lille on Sunday. German Interior Minister Thomas de Maiziere told the "Bild am Sonntag" newspaper that security forces have received many tip-offs regarding possible attacks at Euro 2016, but added that there had been no concrete indications a terrorist attack was imminent during the tournament. "There are officially some 500 threats that we have in our sights," he told the mass-market paper. "That is very extensive, but subject to change." Germany has been on high alert for several months since the attacks last year in Paris and this year in Brussels. It's not known exactly how many German citizens are fighting or have fought in Syria or Iraq with IS, but estimates put the number in the hundreds. The German interior minister added that homegrown hooligans were being closely watched.

41. Kurdish militant group claims Istanbul bombing, says tourists aren't safe
The Washington Post, Erin Cunningham, 2016 06 12

Istanbul - A Kurdish militant group warned foreign tourists Friday that they are no longer safe in Turkey as its fighters ratchet up attacks on security forces across the country, an escalation many here fear could bring more deaths and cripple an already unstable economy. The warning from the Kurdistan Freedom Falcons, known in Kurdish as the TAK, came as the group asserted responsibility for a car bomb attack on police forces in central Istanbul this week. That attack killed at least 11 people near some of the city's most famous landmarks and was the third bombing this year to hit neighborhoods popular with tourists. "We warn all tourists who might plan to visit Turkey. . . . You are not our targets, but Turkey is no [longer] secure for you," the statement posted on the TAK's website said. The TAK is a splinter group of the militant Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK), which has fought the Turkish state for decades for autonomy for Turkey's ethnic Kurds. The conflict, which has killed more than 40,000 people, reignited last year after a brief truce between Turkey and the PKK collapsed.

42. Germany's Merkel pushes rule of law, market access in China

Reuters News, 2016 06 12

Beijing - German Chancellor Angela Merkel stressed the role of an independent judiciary and the need for a level playing field for foreign firms as she begun her ninth trip to China since taking office. Merkel arrived in China on Sunday amid growing pressure from industry and rights groups to confront the Chinese more forcefully. The Chinese government is overseeing a broad crackdown on rights groups and activists, and is facing complaints from foreign firms about market access restrictions. Speaking to students at a Beijing university, Merkel explained the importance of real rule of law. "This means the judiciary decides according to the laws and legislation of the country independently of politics, and everyone is equal before the law. That means court procedures and rulings have to be transparent," she said. "If interpreted in this way, rule of law strengthens the trust of citizens in state institutions and its decisions. And thereby also strengthens the social stability of a country."

Ellis2, Andrew (PS/SP)

From: [REDACTED]
Sent: Saturday, November 05, 2016 10:03 PM
To: MEDIAMONIT MEDIAMONIT
Subject: CSIS under scrutiny for programme that illegally kept metadata (BBC News/Jessica Murphy)

CSIS under scrutiny for programme that illegally kept metadata

By Jessica Murphy
BBC News, Toronto
2016 11 05

Canada's spy agency is under scrutiny itself after a scathing court ruling said it was illegally keeping data on Canadians who posed no threat national security threat.

The programme had been going on since 2006.

Ottawa says it will ensure the spy agency is in is full compliance with Thursday's Federal Court decision.

The news came in the wake of revelations that police in Quebec had been spying on journalists.

The Federal Court ruling said that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) had been illegally keeping and analysing so-called "associated data", more commonly known as metadata, from third party communications.

That metadata, which could include the date, time, and telephone number linked to a phone conversation or an email address, was collected legally.

But it could only be retained if it was related to national security threats or of use to an investigation or prosecution.

It could also be kept if it was related to national defence or international affairs.

The court found CSIS was holding onto data from an unknown number of Canadians unrelated to threats or to the target of the warrants and that did not fall under any of those categories.

The spy service also failed to inform the court about that programme for a decade.

CSIS said it has suspended all access to and analysis of that metadata while it determined the its next steps.

Canadian Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said on Friday that CSIS's compliance with the judgement will be supervised by Canada's security intelligence review committee.

