

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation Announcement | Annonce relative à la nouvelle loi antiterroriste
2015-02-02, 13:00 – 2015-02-03, 13:00 ET

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding the January 30th legislative announcement expanding Canada's anti-terrorism powers stabilized, with moderate print, online and social media coverage. Broadcast media coverage was also moderate.
- Tone of coverage was varied, with a number of opinion pieces critical of the bill and its alleged lack of oversight for security agencies.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

NIL

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

"If we are going to be giving increased and enhanced powers (to CSIS), the public has a right to better oversight." – NDP Leader Tom Mulcair

"I have problems with the powers and the sweeping vague definitions." – Green Party Leader Elizabeth May

« On a un modèle canadien exceptionnel, un organisme qui existe depuis 30 ans, qui assure la continuité en matière de rapport et de surveillance (du SCRS), qui a une expertise, un savoir-faire, une crédibilité qui est reconnue à travers le monde. » – Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

NIL

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Top court embraces anti-terror laws

What politicians think about the new anti-terrorism law in an election year is almost completely irrelevant. Because, put simply, it is an election year. Stephen Harper and his Conservatives are competitive again, because their approach to the security file is closely aligned to what the electorate want. Polls taken in the past week suggest that up to 70% of Canadians support the international coalition fighting ISIS. Thomas Mulcair and his New Democrats oppose military action, much in the way the NDP have opposed many other past decisions to deploy Canadian troops. It is consistent with their values, and it is arguably popular with their core vote. Justin Trudeau and his Liberals, meanwhile, initially adopted the NDP position - opposing any combat role against ISIS. Having seen how unpopular that is with Canadians, Trudeau and his caucus are now in a quiet retreat. What does it all signify? Mostly, nothing. It's an election year. Our politicians are more preoccupied with the coming electoral battle in Canada than they are with the military battle currently underway in the Middle East. Political rhetoric is situational: nothing new there. But what of the Supreme Court, which almost certainly will be called upon to determine the constitutionality of the new anti-terror legislative measures? Will they side with the Conservatives, or with civil libertarians? A scan of some past high court rulings provides us with some hints about which way the Supremes might go. QMI Agency (Toronto Sun, Edmonton Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun)

Snowden urges caution over Ottawa's proposed security law

Edward Snowden, the fugitive American who leaked state secrets, wants Canadians to know that anti-terrorism laws are easy to pass but very hard to undo. "We saw on Friday the Prime Minister of Canada proposed a new law," Mr. Snowden told a teenaged Toronto audience via an Internet link on Monday night. He told the high school students that they should "always be extraordinarily cautious" and press for answers, whenever governments rely on "fear and panic" to set up powers that can be exercised in secret. On Friday, the Conservative government introduced legislation that would empower Canadian authorities to "disrupt" suspected terrorist threats and remove extremist posts from the Internet. At the same time, Prime Minister Stephen Harper has been resisting calls to step up scrutiny of Canada's spy agencies. Mr. Snowden was speaking to a crowd of more than 1,000 students at Toronto's Upper Canada College via a Google Hangouts link from his exile in Russia. The Globe and Mail, A6, The Canadian Press (Times Colonist), Postmedia (National Post, Ottawa Citizen, Calgary Herald, Edmonton Journal, Windsor Star, The Star Pheonix, Leader-Post, Vancouver Sun)

Imam: Preventing radicalism key to fighting terrorism

Canadians must work harder to prevent young people from becoming radicalized instead of simply dealing with the aftermath, says an Ottawa imam. There is little talk of steering vulnerable people away from extremism, Zijad Delic told the Senate national security committee Monday. Instead, the focus is on trying to deradicalize them after the fact. Political leaders, social services, teachers and others need to "find ways of tackling" the lure of extremism, Delic said. Last fall, the RCMP said it had 63 active security investigations on 90 suspected extremists who intended to join fights abroad or who had returned to Canada. The federal government has since introduced two bills aimed at reinforcing or expanding the ability of Canadian security agencies to investigate and deter terrorist threats. Legislation tabled on Friday would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service powers to actively disrupt threats, not just collect information about them. It would also make it easier for police to control the movements of terror suspects and to detain them longer without warrant. (...) In the House of Commons, Liberal MP Ralph Goodale noted key allies have robust parliamentary oversight of their intelligence services - something he said Canada needs. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said the Security Intelligence Review Committee, which reports to Parliament, keeps an eye on CSIS. The Canadian Press, (Times Colonist, A6, The Chronicle-Herald, National Post, Toronto Star, Ottawa Citizen), Presse Canadienne (Le Droit, 5 front)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

Terror bill sparks muted criticism

Prime Minister Stephen Harper and the federal Conservatives may be spoiling for a fight with their political opponents over new tough-on-terrorism legislation but, for the most part, New Democrats and Liberals remained muted Monday in their criticism of new anti-terror laws. Only Elizabeth May, the Green Party MP and leader, voiced serious concerns about Bill C-51, the anti-terrorism legislation unveiled Friday by Harper. "I have problems with the powers and the sweeping vague definitions," May said on Twitter. Among other things, the proposed law would give a new mandate to Canada's spy service, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), to "disrupt" terrorist activity in Canada using a broad range of powers if the spies get a judicial warrant. But the legislation does not provide any new oversight powers for the spy agency. Oversight of CSIS would continue to rest with the Security Intelligence Review Committee, a group of civilians appointed by the government of the day. New Democrats and Liberals want additional oversight of CSIS through a body made up of parliamentarians. (...) The Conservatives, though, didn't seem to want to accept the opposition's olive branch and were in attack mode. "Under the leadership of this government, we put forward the Combating Terrorism Act more than a year ago with no support from the NDP," Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney told the House of Commons. QMI Agency (The London Free Press, B1, Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun), Toronto Star

Anti-terror bill needs closer look

The most significant expansion in the surveillance powers of the Canadian state in recent years has crept in on cat's paws. The opposition parties, who found themselves offside from public opinion when they voted against the mission in Iraq, have been muted in their response to the anti-terror legislation brought in by the government last Friday. There have been no press releases and neither party led off on the issue when they had the opportunity to hold the government to account during Question Period on Monday. The Liberal party signaled its consent even before reading the draft legislation. Justin Trudeau, the Liberal leader, said he would be focused on oversights and safeguards Tom Mulcair, the NDP leader, has given the legislation a pass, despite saying rights have to be respected. Both parties appear to have been cowed by the Prime Minister's pre-emptive strike when the bill was released at a campaign-style event outside Toronto, where he dismissed questions about freedoms being surrendered, in favour of security considerations. National Post, A4, A8; Ottawa Citizen (Edmonton Journal, Windsor Star, The Star Phoenix, Vancouver Sun, Leader-Post, Toronto Star), Globe and Mail

MacKay once backed spy oversight now rejected by Tories

One of the Conservative cabinet ministers responsible for Ottawa's new anti-terrorism legislation once advocated parliamentary oversight of Canada's spy agencies, which the government now rejects as unnecessary even as it expands the powers of this country's national security apparatus. Justice Minister Peter MacKay stood beside Prime Minister Stephen Harper last week when the government unveiled a bill that would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service new authority to disrupt terror plots and lengthen the number of days individuals can be held on suspicion they may commit terror acts. As deputy leader of the Conservative Party in 2005, Mr. MacKay argued forcefully for giving MPs and senators a role in overseeing Canadian spies. "When you talk about a credible oversight body, I would suggest ... that a parliamentary body is going to have more credibility because of its independence and because of the fact that there is also parliamentary accountability that will be brought to bear," Mr. MacKay said in October of that year. "To that end, I suggest that it would also cause a little bit more diligence on the part of the security agents themselves, just knowing that this oversight body was in place." Asked to comment Monday, Mr. MacKay said circumstances have altered his opinion. "A great deal has changed since 2005 with respect to international security and the terrorism threat facing Canada. Parliament itself has become a target of terrorism," he stated. Globe and Mail, A1

Security agencies need parliamentary oversight

An opinion piece re: "Canada needs to watch the watchers," Jan. 30. states "In asserting that 14 federal security agencies, including CSIS, are in need of greater oversight, Senator Colin Kenny has the right to be considered both expert and authoritative. I served from 1986-98 as assistant inspector general of CSIS within an independent agency reporting to the solicitor general on whether that "spy agency" was keeping the minister appropriately informed and observing applicable laws and policies. As the senator notes, this agency was recently abolished in favour of exclusive oversight by the Security Intelligence Review Committee. I can attest to the evident competence and lofty motivations of the CSIS personnel I knew, as well as those of their RCMP and CSEC colleagues. I could also describe the sort of misdeeds and mishaps that expert external review sometimes bring to light. Wait! No I can't do that - since I am bound by law and oath not to do so. I can, however, say that the time has come to establish some form of multiparty parliamentary oversight for the federal security community, as has already been done in allied countries. Equally, we need a professional system of expert independent oversight that covers all relevant agencies. Not that all abuses will be caught. But many will and many others will be deterred. I won't address the latest security legislation introduced by the government, which piles on edgy new powers. But I am alarmed at the possibility of terror-mongering in this pre-election period. Suffice it to say that this legislation provides even more reason for urgent reform of the oversight regime." Times Colonist, A11

Tories' anti-terror bill undermines values it's meant to protect

An editorial states, "When a prime minister announces one of the most draconian anti-terrorism bills in his nation's history - and does this not in the national legislature, but at an election-type campaign stop in a riding his party hopes to hold in a looming election - Canadians should be worried about the democratic stability of the country. In introducing this new legislation, Prime Minister Stephen Harper again said that "we are at war with the Islamic State" - language U.S. President Barack Obama has explicitly warned against on the grounds that it will likely lead to overreaction. But overreaction, it seems, is exactly what Harper is hoping for. He appears to be trying to raise the level of fear in order to railroad through measures that will violate the very democratic values they are purportedly meant to protect. [...] It is well documented that CSIS watchdog SIRC, with its limited reporting function, has not been able to provide effective oversight of the powers that CSIS currently has, let alone the vastly expanded proposed powers. Add to that the additional reach the bill would give to other organizations such as the Canadian Border Security Agency, and the need for an overarching Parliamentary oversight body could hardly be starker. The UK and the U.S. both have such a body to watch over and rein in their respective security apparatuses." (...) This law is so bad one has to wonder about the true motives behind it. The fact that the prime minister and Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney have repeatedly (and bewilderingly) rejected calls to introduce an obviously needed guarantee of Parliamentary oversight of these new powers suggests a potential profoundly immoral political strategy. Did the government deliberately structure the proposed law to be unpalatable even to a largely sympathetic opposition? After all, that would allow the Tories to label their opponents "soft on terror" in the run-up to an election." Toronto Star

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

Terror could be rare winning issue for Conservatives in Quebec: Hébert

The last time Canada's intelligence service had the kind of operational anti-terrorism mandate Stephen Harper's government is looking to confer on CSIS was in the wake of the kidnapping of a British diplomat and a Quebec minister at the time of the 1970 October crisis. Then as now the country's intelligence gatherers were enabled to not only identify potential threats but also to disrupt them. That mandate bred a culture of casual disregard for civil liberties and the rule of law within the country's security service. The abuse occurred not exclusively but essentially in Quebec. Agents spied on the duly elected sovereigntist government of René Lévesque (as well as on NDP icon Tommy Douglas). They staged a break-in to steal the membership list of the PQ. They stole dynamite and committed arson. After a royal commission shed light on those acts in the early '80s, CSIS was set up as a civilian operation separate from the RCMP. An oversight committee was created to watch the spies — a setup that would remain unchanged under the government's latest anti-terrorism plan. The committee has been operating under a cloud since Arthur Porter — one of Harper's appointees to the select group — ended up on the most-wanted list of Quebec's anti-corruption unit. Given that checkered history one might expect Quebec to be the ground zero of resistance to Bill C-51. But so far members of the province's political class are falling over themselves to let someone else lead the way to the barricades. Toronto Star

Preventing radicalization a key in terrorism fight, imam tells senators

Canadians must work harder to prevent young people from becoming radicalized instead of simply dealing with the aftermath, says an Ottawa imam. There is little talk of steering vulnerable people away from extremism, Zijad Delic told the Senate national security committee Monday. Instead, the focus is on trying to deradicalize them after the fact. Opposition MPs and civil liberties advocates expressed concern Monday the bill did not boost oversight of Canada's spy agency — concerns the Conservative government quickly dismissed. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney repeated his view that the Security Intelligence Review Committee, which reports to Parliament, has the expertise to keep an eye on CSIS. Canadian Press (Metro News)

Imam Hamza Chaoui denies accusations of Mayors Ménard, Coderre

Imam Hamza Chaoui is responding for the first time since Montreal city officials announced he will not be given an operating permit to open an Islamic Community Centre called the Ashabeb Centre. On Saturday, Montreal Mayor Denis Coderre, alongside Mercier-Hochelaga-Maisonneuve Mayor Réal Ménard, announced they would not grant an operational permit to the community centre, saying it was an issue of public safety. "I categorically refute allegations of Mayors Ménard and Coderre," writes Chaoui on his Facebook page. "I'm not an 'agent of radicalization.' I've never included hatred or violence against a group in my preaching or my classes." He says he encourages young people to integrate harmoniously into Quebec society. CBC News; Canadian Press (The Gazette)

Projet de loi antiterroriste : les Canadiens doivent être « extrêmement vigilants », selon Snowden

Le dénonciateur américain en exil Edward Snowden a profité d'une allocution par vidéoconférence avec des élèves torontois, hier soir, pour mettre les Canadiens en garde contre le projet de loi C-51 du gouvernement Harper. L'agence d'espionnage canadienne verrait ses pouvoirs considérablement accrus, grâce à la nouvelle législation. Les partis d'opposition à Ottawa demandent une plus grande supervision. De son côté, M. Snowden dit que les droits des citoyens sont de plus en plus brimés par les gouvernements occidentaux. Edward Snowden est un ex-consultant de l'Agence de sécurité nationale aux États-Unis qui vit en exil en Russie depuis qu'il a révélé des détails secrets sur des programmes d'écoute électronique américains. Il prenait la parole par vidéoconférence, hier soir, devant plus de 1000 élèves du secondaire du prestigieux Upper Canada College. Radio-Canada; Macleans

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

Loi antiterroriste: l'opposition sur ses gardes

L'opposition critique timidement le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51, se concentrant sur les doléances entourant le manque de « crédibilité » des mécanismes de surveillance de l'agence d'espionnage canadienne qui verrait ses pouvoirs considérablement accrus en vertu de la législation. Le chef néo-démocrate Thomas Mulcair estime que le Comité de surveillance des activités de renseignement de sécurité (CSARS), qui est en charge superviser le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), n'est pas à la hauteur de la tâche. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, qui parraine le projet de loi, s'est énergiquement porté à la défense du CSARS, alléguant que ce dernier était une référence mondiale. « On a un modèle canadien exceptionnel, un organisme qui existe depuis 30 ans, qui assure la continuité en matière de rapport et de surveillance (du SCRS), qui a une expertise, un savoir-faire, une crédibilité qui est reconnue à travers le monde », a-t-il rétorqué aux libéraux. Le cabinet de M. Blaney a indiqué lundi, que le ministre avait complètement fermé la porte à l'idée de mettre sur pied un comité de surveillance composé d'élus. La Presse Canadienne (Métro Montréal, Radio-Canada)

NDP, Liberals want tougher oversight of anti-terror measures

Federal New Democrats and Liberals are demanding that the government increase oversight for Canada's main spy agency, but otherwise they're holding their cards close to their chests when it comes to the government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation. Prime Minister Stephen Harper said Friday that Canadians understand "their freedoms and security more often than not go hand in hand," while Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney over the weekend described the notion of additional oversight as "red tape." "If we are going to be giving increased and enhanced powers (to CSIS), the public has a right to better oversight," NDP leader Tom Mulcair said Monday. "Why does the minister call that red tape? Does he consider protecting Canadians' rights red tape?" Harper was not in the House of Commons Monday to reply, but Blaney said CSIS's activities are already reviewed by the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC), whose membership is appointed by the prime minister. It reports to Parliament annually. "The security intelligence review committee will cover all activities that CSIS will be mandated by this Parliament to accomplish," Blaney told the House of Commons. "SIRC is an established, well-recognized, expert committee that has the knowledge to do intelligence security." Ottawa Citizen; Toronto Star; CTV News

Tories spoiling for fight that's not happening on terror law

Prime Minister Stephen Harper and the federal Conservatives may be spoiling for a fight with their political opponents over new tough-on-terrorism legislation but, for the most part, New Democrats and Liberals remained muted Monday in their criticism of new anti-terror laws. "Under the leadership of this government, we put forward the Combating Terrorism Act more than a year ago with no support from the NDP," Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney told the House of Commons. "We are ready to revoke passports. We are ready to take action like removing dual citizenship to protect Canadians.

There is no support from the NDP. We are standing up to protect Canadians. QMI Agency (Sun News Network)

Harper got spy powers right, but civilian oversight very wrong

An opinion piece by Bob Rae states, "Sometimes Stephen Harper is his own worst enemy. Recent events in Europe should bring home to all of us that there are indeed people in the midst of democratic, multiracial societies who are ready and willing to kill others in the pursuit of their religious and political beliefs. They are terrorists. They plot and communicate with others of a similar mind, and with similar intentions. They receive encouragement, and sometimes even instructions, from foreign entities and governments. Canada is not somehow magically aloof from these realities. Our large cities are the home of millions of people from all over the world. There is no foreign conflict that does not have a direct influence on the lives and feelings of many Canadian citizens and, indeed, there are events and proposals in Canada itself to which some in Canada are strongly and irrevocably opposed. Whether these feelings give rise to a direct threat to the lives of their fellow Canadians is a matter of fact and evidence. But it would be simply foolish to argue that such threats could never happen here." The Globe and Mail

Tories intent on politicizing what should be a non-partisan issue — the safety of Canadians

An opinion piece states, "The most significant expansion in the surveillance powers of the Canadian state in recent years has crept in on cat's paws. The opposition parties, who found themselves offside from public opinion when they voted against the mission in Iraq, have been muted in their response to the anti-terror legislation brought in by the government last Friday... There are also concerns about the expansion in powers for CSIS, Canada's spy agency, that some argue are unnecessary and pose a grave threat to democratic freedom... But CSIS does not have a spotless reputation when it comes to telling judges everything they need to know. Federal Court Justice Richard Mosley was extremely critical of the agency in a case still being appealed by the government, after it failed to reveal it was relying on foreign allies to spy on Canadians abroad. Judge Mosley called this a "deliberate decision to keep the court in the dark about the scope and extent of foreign collection efforts." ... " National Post

Harper takes liberties with our protection

An opinion piece states, "... And so a government that after nine years in power had failed to protect even Parliament now claims it will save all of us from terrorist threats. How will that happen? With serious infringements on our democratic rights – and from a government that's hard to take seriously..." 24 Hours Vancouver

Anti-terrorism bill 'more about politics than public safety,' says civil liberties lawyer

Anti-terrorism legislation Prime Minister Stephen Harper unveiled last week gives the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service sweeping new powers that would allow the spy agency to use any undefined measure other than the use of lethal force, perversion of justice or "violating the sexual integrity" of an individual in a new role empowering it to disrupt national security threats, but one of Canada's most prominent civil liberties and human rights lawyers says it's "more about politics than public safety." The three limitations, along with the stipulation a judge's warrant would be required before CSIS agents could take measures that would violate Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms, are the only defined limits to CSIS operations under new provisions that expand its role from surveillance, security investigations and counter-espionage to a mandate to "disrupt" suspected terror plots in the planning stages, lawyer Paul Champ told The Hill Times. Mr. Champ pointed to a new section Bill C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act, would add to the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service Act placed as an example of what he says are changes that give "sweeping" new powers to CSIS, and new criminal law powers to police agencies, as part of the government's response to two killings last October Mr. Harper (Calgary Southwest, Alta.) has branded as Jihadist attacks within Canada. As part of a package of beefed-up powers for CSIS, including lower evidence thresholds to obtain judicial warrants and detain suspects or enforce police control over the movement and freedom of suspects to prevent "likely" terrorism attempts, the bill would allow CSIS to take undefined "measures" to disrupt suspected terrorism plans if agents have "reasonable grounds to believe" that a "particular activity" constitutes a threat to Canada. Hill Times

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

Worrying new powers for CSIS

An editorial states "2006, when the O'Connor inquiry delivered its report about the rendition and torture of Maher Arar, many Canadians shook their heads and wondered how our intelligence and security agencies got to be in such a mess. In 2008, when the Iacobucci inquiry delivered its report into the detention and torture of Abdullah Almalki, Ahmad Abou-Elmaati and Muayyed Nureddin, we wondered again how the actions of the people charged to keep us safe could be, in the words of the report, so "deficient in the circumstances." In 2010, the Supreme Court found that in the Omar Khadr case, Canadian officials "actively participated" in a process that "offends the most basic Canadian standards." This is the history of the last 14 years, and this is the backdrop against which we must judge the government's proposal to give CSIS more powers. Our police, foreign-affairs and intelligence agencies have done good work in this same period, and have uncovered and foiled real, dangerous plots. But they have also demonstrated a pattern of poor communication, reliance on bad information and disregard for the both the law and basic decency. Are we Canadians satisfied that these problems have been solved, and that we have sufficient oversight in place to give CSIS more powers to act on the information it collects?" Ottawa Citizen

Four reasons Harper's new anti-terrorist legislation will alarm you

An opinion piece states... "We may not be sure yet how CSIS might use its new and expanded powers, but one thing is certain: if the government has its way, there will be no Parliamentary oversight commensurate with the new danger of abuse by the spy (now to become, in effect, the secret police) agency. The Minister of Public Security, Steven Blaney, says the existing body that keeps an eye on CSIS, the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC), is all we need. Experts in the field are not convinced. SIRC only has three politically appointed members and a small staff. It may formally report to Parliament annually, but it operates under the direct supervision not of Parliament but of the Minister of Public Security. In the words of SIRC itself, "ministerial direction" guides its work. In other words, the Minister who is responsible for CSIS also directs the small and poorly resourced Committee that, very notionally, oversees and supervises CSIS's work. With that kind of institutional arrangement, taken together with the added powers the Harper government wants to give CSIS, we could say, to paraphrase Winston Churchill: "Some oversight; some supervision!" Rabble.ca

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding the forthcoming anti-terrorism legislation was moderate. Below is a breakdown of coverage by theme:

General Coverage / couverture générale

CBC News – Power & Politics interviewed security experts Amir Attaran of the University of Ottawa and Michael Zekulin of the University of Calgary regarding expanded CSIS powers. Minister Blaney was mentioned in the interview. Rough Transcript (2015-02-02)

CTV News' Power Play interviewed the former chairman of SIRC regarding CSIS oversight in respect to the forthcoming antiterrorism legislation, Bill C-51. Minister Blaney was quoted in this segment. Rough Transcript (2015-02-02)

CBC News – Power & Politics reported on the anti-terror legislation announced on January 30th and whether there is a need for greater CSIS oversight. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Safety Roxanne James, as well as MPs Paul Dewar and Wayne Easter were then interviewed on these topics. Rough Transcript (2015-02-02)

CTV News' Power Play held a panel discussion with Roxanne James, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Safety as well as other MPs regarding CSIS oversight in respect to the forthcoming antiterrorism legislation, Bill C-51. Rough Transcript (2015-02-02)

CBC News – The National reported on calls for parliamentary oversight of CSIS. Minister Blaney was quoted in the report. (2015-02-02)

Speaking via Google Hangout from Russia, Edward Snowden, the fugitive American who leaked state secrets, mentioned anti-terrorism laws. He told high school students at Upper Canada College that they should "always be extraordinarily cautious when see governments trying to set up new secret police." He said, "People die from lightning strikes, car accidents, and cheeseburgers, and heart attacks more than terrorists, but we commit a disproportionately large amount of national effort and national resources to combating this relatively limited terrorist threat." (2015-02-03 - CTV News, 9:30, CP24, 10:00 ET)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

CBC News – Power & Politics interviewed Amira Elghawaby and Imam Sakinder Hashmi for reaction of the Muslim community to the anti-terror legislation that was recently announced. Rough Transcript (2015-02-02)

CTV News' Power Play interviewed Muslim community leaders regarding the fight against Islamic radicalization in respect to the forthcoming antiterrorism legislation, Bill C-51. Rough Transcript (2015-02-02)

CFRA-AM 580 interviewed Minister Blaney regarding Bill C-51. (2015-02-02)

Sirius-XM Radio – The Arlene Bynon Show interviewed Minister Blaney regarding Bill C-51. (2015-02-02)

In the House of Commons Monday, Minister Blaney was asked about the Security Intelligence Review Committee, stricter oversight of intelligence agencies, in light of the government's new anti-terror legislation he says, "The security intelligence review committee will cover all activities that CSIS will be mandated by this Parliament to accomplish." (2015-02-03 - 580 CFRA, 6:06; CFNO-FM, 7:32 ET)

En vertu du projet de loi antiterroriste du gouvernement, le chef néodémocrate Thomas Mulcair soutient que le comité de surveillance en charge de superviser le Service Canadien du Renseignement de Sécurité n'est pas crédible. (2015-02-03 - CJRG-FM Gaspé, 7 :01 ET)

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

There have been approximately 850 social media posts today regarding Canada's new anti-terrorism legislation.

The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

In total, there were approximately 370 tweets, 458 Facebook posts, 4 news site posts, 16 blog posts comments and 2 forum posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the day:

Coverage peaked from approximately 11:00 – 12:00 ET with 124 social media posts, the vast majority of which were re-tweets of the following tweet from reporter Glenn Greenwald:

ggreenwald

Be wary of Harper's anti-terror bill, Edward Snowden warns Toronto students

<http://www.thestar.com/news/gta/2015/02/02/edward-snowden-and-greenwald-give-talk-for-toronto-high-school-students.html> ...

Stakeholders

ICLMG

Press release: New anti-terror bill is overreaching & could impact negatively on Canadians' rights
#cdnpoli #C51 conta.cc/1DxOsGk

ICLMG

Communiqué: Le nouveau projet de loi anti-terrorisme risque de porter atteinte aux droits des Canadiens
#polcan #C51 conta.cc/1DxQO8k

OpenMedia.ca

Do you think having democratic checks and balances over Canada's spying agencies is "needless red tape"? ow.ly/lnusc

OpenMedia.ca

Montreal Gazette: Canada's security agencies need more oversight ow.ly/lnaLO #privacy

OpenMedia.ca

Gov't calls security agency oversight "needless red tape" ow.ly/lnaad #privacy

OpenMedia.ca

Canadians should be freaking out right now about Bill C-51 ow.ly/i/8u9Sx ow.ly/i/8u9Sx Learn more at ow.ly/lmLCK

OpenMedia.ca

Globe & Mail: Harper wants to create "secret police" ow.ly/lm1xk #privacy

OpenMedia.ca

What it was like to be a reporter in the room when the gov't's new anti-privacy bill was announced ow.ly/lmvqA

Media

globepolitics

Harper got spy powers right, but civilian oversight very wrong <http://bit.ly/1x6QHLL> #cdnpoli

ggreenwald

Be wary of Harper's anti-terror bill, Edward Snowden warns Toronto students

<http://www.thestar.com/news/gta/2015/02/02/edward-snowden-and-greenwald-give-talk-for-toronto-high-school-students.html> ...

Hashtags

KarlNerenberg

CSIS powers to be expanded under Harper's 'Anti-Terrorism Act' | rabble.ca rabble.ca/blogs/bloggers...
#cdnpoli #polcan #antiterrorism

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51
2015-03-04

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was minimal to moderate today. Significant developments reported were discussions of the Bill via an online Q & A with American whistleblower Edward Snowden. Additionally, revelations that the Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video may be shown in House Committee Friday sparked debate on its timing alongside discussion of how it would be promoting the Bill. Media were also focused on a Facebook post by the Conservative party that appeared to promote-fear mongering in support of the Bill.
- Overall, the tone of coverage regarding Bill C-51 today was negative with various pieces critical of the Conservatives limiting the amount debate that will be had regarding Bill C-51, the legality and potential scope of the bill, and fear mongering used by officials in promoting it.
- Social media activity was moderate mirrored mainstream media with the majority of posts coming from news media and individuals being highly critical of the implications of Bill C-51.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- « Cette attaque terrifiante reste un exemple important de la raison pour laquelle nous devons faire adopter notre Loi antiterroriste — afin que la police et les organisations chargées de notre sécurité nationale disposent des outils nécessaires pour protéger les Canadiens » ~ Steven Blaney, ministre de la Sécurité publique Canada.
- “Justice Minister Peter MacKay is out of touch with reality when he pretends the official Opposition is on “the sidelines” of Bill C-51.” ~ Thomas Mulcair, NDP Leader.
- « Je trouve que c'est pousser le bouchon un peu fort (...) C'est un peu gros de la part du ministre d'utiliser la diffusion de la vidéo pour mousser C-51. Je ne pense pas que ça (la vidéo) cautionne leur projet de loi antiterroriste » ~ Rosane Doré Lefebvre, porte-parole adjointe néo-démocrate.

- "Canadian intelligence has one of the weakest oversight frameworks out of any Western intelligence agency in the world" ~ Edward Snowden, U.S. National Security Agency whistleblower.

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

- « On a déjà un problème avec plusieurs de nos jeunes, plus d'une centaine qui se sont laissés influencer. Et voilà qu'on va mettre nos autres mêmes. Appliquons peut-être l'esprit de la loi que M. Blaney veut mettre en place et ne diffusant pas quelque chose qui fait l'apologie du terrorisme. Ça va à l'encontre de ce qu'on veut accomplir. » ~ Michel Juneau-Katsuya, ancien cadre du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité.

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

NIL

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Former PMs not on C-51 witness list

A parliamentary committee will hear from strong supporters and vocal critics of the government's anti-terrorism bill, but not from four former prime ministers who have decried the lack of increased oversight in the legislation. Bill C-51 would beef up the powers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), criminalize the promotion of terrorism and provide the RCMP with new powers of preventative arrest. But critics charge it goes too far and risks ensnaring environmentalists and First Nations in the fight against terrorism. The public safety committee of the House will hear from 50 witnesses between March 9 and March 31 as part of its study of the bill, starting with Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and Justice Minister Peter MacKay. The 48 remaining slots will be filled from a list of 70 potential witnesses, based on their availability. According to the list obtained by The Globe and Mail, witnesses will come from a wide range of society, including government, academia, law enforcement and various non-governmental organizations. For example, the committee could hear from former public safety ministers (Liberal Anne McLellan and Conservative Stockwell Day), current and past members of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, current and past privacy commissioners, and retired judges John Major and Louise Arbour. Globe and Mail, A8, Toronto Star, A8

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

Lettre - Le dangereux dérapage du ministre Blaney

Selon un professeur de droit international, « Le 26 février 2015, le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique a déclaré : « Les éléments du projet de loi C-51 vont nous permettre d'éradiquer en amont les personnes qui seraient susceptibles de se radicaliser. » Vérification faite, il a effectivement employé le terme « éradiquer », qui, d'après le dictionnaire, veut dire « supprimer, extirper complètement ». Le ministre s'est exprimé en français. Il ne peut faire valoir l'excuse d'une connaissance approximative du français. D'ailleurs, le mot anglais « eradicate » a le même sens : « root out, destroy completely ». Donc, d'après le ministre, la loi C-51 permettra d' « éradiquer » des personnes. C'est ce que pratique l' « État islamique ». Mais le Canada ? Dangereux dérapage dans le langage du ministre. Sera-t-il suivi de dérapages semblables dans les faits ? Il y a lieu de le craindre. » Le Devoir, A6

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

Attentat d'Ottawa: la vidéo de Zehaf Bibeau sera diffusée vendredi Par Mélanie Marquis

La vidéo qu'a tournée Michael Zehaf-Bibeau avant de perpétrer son attentat à Ottawa en octobre dernier sera dévoilée vendredi matin par le commissaire de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), Bob Paulson, devant un comité des Communes. «La vidéo sera montrée (devant le Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale) et le commissaire répondra aux questions reliées à celle-ci», a résumé mercredi dans un courriel le sergent David Falls, relationniste à la GRC. Il n'était «pas en mesure» de préciser si l'enregistrement serait présenté dans son intégralité ou si certains passages pourraient être censurés pour des raisons de sécurité nationale... La demande émanait du bureau du ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, qui n'a pas visionné l'enregistrement, selon son porte-parole, Jean-Christophe de la Rue, et qui a accueilli favorablement le nouveau développement dans ce

dossier. «Nous nous réjouissons que la GRC ait pris la décision de rendre publique et de commenter la vidéo», a réagi le ministre Blaney par l'entremise du même porte-parole. «Cette attaque terrifiante reste un exemple important de la raison pour laquelle nous devons faire adopter notre Loi antiterroriste — afin que la police et les organisations chargées de notre sécurité nationale disposent des outils nécessaires pour protéger les Canadiens», a ajouté M. de le Rue dans son courriel...Le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 aurait-il pu prévenir cette attaque, comme le prétend le ministre Blaney? L'opposition officielle se montre sceptique, et reproche encore une fois au gouvernement d'instrumentaliser ces événements à des fins électoralistes. «Je trouve que c'est pousser le bouchon un peu fort (...) C'est un peu gros de la part du ministre d'utiliser la diffusion de la vidéo pour mousser C-51. Je ne pense pas que ça (la vidéo) cautionne leur projet de loi antiterroriste», a prédit Mme Doré Lefebvre. Presse Canadienne (Journal Métro)

Tories Criticized Over 'Fear-Mongering' Facebook Post On Bill C-51, West Edmonton Mall Threat

A Conservative party Facebook post has spurred accusations that the government is using fear-mongering to promote its proposed anti-terror legislation. And at least one Alberta Tory politician has publicly suggested his federal cousins have gone too far. On Monday, a screengrab from a video by Somalia-based terror group al-Shabaab was posted to the official Facebook page of the federal Conservatives. The group, linked to al-Qaeda, attacked Kenya's Westgate Mall in September 2013 and murdered close to 70 people. Huffington Post

Edward Snowden says Canadian intelligence gathering has 'weakest oversight'

U.S. National Security Agency whistleblower Edward Snowden says Canada has one of the "weakest oversight" frameworks for intelligence gathering in the Western world. Snowden made the comments during a teleconference discussion hosted by Canadian Journalists for Free Expression and the Ryerson School of Journalism, moderated by CBC Radio host Anna Maria Tremonti. He was speaking via video link from Russia. "Canadian intelligence has one of the weakest oversight frameworks out of any Western intelligence agency in the world," he said. Snowden said he wouldn't specifically weigh in on the government's new anti-terror legislation, saying that whether it is good or bad is ultimately up for Canadians to decide. Bill C-51 provides for a sweeping range of measures that would allow suspects to be detained based on less evidence and lets CSIS actively interfere with suspects' travel plans and finances. Critics say the legislation is too broad and lacks oversight. The government, however, says the powers in C-51 are necessary to keep Canadians safe. It points to the requirement for judges to sign off in advance of CSIS breaking Canadian law, arguing that is adequate oversight for the new powers. CBC News

Bill C-51: Breaking down a most terrifying debate

When the House of Commons reconvenes next week, the public safety committee will begin its study of Bill C-51, the Conservative government's Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015. That study will be limited to nine hearings, in which MPs will confront a five-part bill that raises questions about national security and civil liberties. In its current form, C-51 would, among other things, give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) a new ability to disrupt potential threats, create a new crime of advocating for or promoting terrorism, and allow for greater sharing of information across government departments. While the parties stake out positions—the Conservatives staunchly in favour, the NDP resolutely against, the Liberals supportive but desiring changes—critics beyond Parliament Hill are raising concerns. To advance that discussion, Maclean's convened a call with two experts: Ray Boisvert, a security analyst who spent nearly 30 years with CSIS, and Craig Forcese, a law professor at the University of Ottawa, who, along with Kent Roach, a professor at the University of Toronto, has written extensively about C-51. Macleans

Legal experts worried about Canada's new anti-terror legislation

Nearly half of all Canadians feel less safe about a terrorist attack on homegrown soil than they did two years ago, according to a new poll. However, some of our country's top legal minds say Ottawa's response to the threat — Bill C-51 — goes way too far. An open letter to Parliament signed by 100 legal experts and professors, urges the prime minister to quash the legislation. Vancouver criminal lawyer Eric Gottardi explains their concerns. News 1130

Bill C-51: Maher Arar but no ex-PMs on committee's draft witness list - Retired Supreme Court justices John Major and Louise Arbour may be asked to appear

Four former Security Intelligence Review Committee chairs, three retired judges, two former public safety ministers, Canada's best-known torture victim and the creator of CBC-TV's Little Mosque on the Prairie may soon get the chance to share their thoughts on the government's proposed anti-terror measures. According to a draft list obtained by CBC News, committee staff are currently working their way through the names of as many as 70 potential witnesses who could be called to testify over the course of eight sessions allotted to expert testimony, including retired politicians, academics, security experts, First Nations and environmental activists and privacy advocates. Among those who may be on the final witness list: - Former Security Information Review Committee chairs Ron Atkey, Bob Rae, Deb Grey and Chuck Strahl; - Retired Supreme Court justices Louise Arbour and John Major; - Former public safety ministers Anne McLellan and Stockwell Day; - Maher Arar, Canadian victim of torture at the hands of Syrian authorities and human rights activist... Initially, the Conservatives had planned to allot just three sessions to witness testimony, but a New Democrat-driven filibuster forced the government to expand its initial offer to a total of nine meetings, including one that will be devoted to Justice Minister Peter MacKay, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and other government officials. CBC News; Toronto Star; APTN News (2015-03-03); Radio-Canada

Building better anti-terrorism laws

A letter from Liberal Public Safety Critic Wayne Easter states, "In the wake of the deadly attacks on military officers in Quebec and on Parliament Hill last October, we must consider how to best protect Canadians from modern terrorist threats while safeguarding our values. Although the government's new anti-terrorism legislation, Bill C-51, takes some proper steps in that direction, it will need fixing. Having been the government during 9-11 and other terrorist events, the Liberal party is well aware of the tough issues and sensitivities involved. We will support C-51 because of measures that will help keep Canadians safe — making better use of no-fly lists, building on the powers of preventive arrest, and allowing for more coordinated information sharing within government. However, there are also concerns and we hear them and will offer non-partisan amendments to address the gaps. We hope the government will be constructive and work with us to make a better law. If not, we will present our amendments to Canadians in this year's election..." Windsor Star (2015-03-03)

Tom Mulcair: Leading the charge against C-51

A letter from Opposition Leader Tom Mulcair states, "Justice Minister Peter MacKay is out of touch with reality when he pretends the official Opposition is on "the sidelines" of Bill C-51 ('Freedom and security, hand in hand,' Feb. 28). In fact, New Democrats have been on the front line — leading the charge — opposing Conservative schemes to ram it through Parliament at all costs. If the minister and his government were really serious about security, they wouldn't shy away from meaningful study and debate of this sweeping new bill. The NDP knows that public safety is the priority of any government and we are not alone in our opposition to bill C-51. A growing list of eminent Canadians are adding their voices to the chorus of those saying the Conservatives' so-called anti-terror legislation goes too far. Four former prime ministers are concerned with the bill's broad measures; the privacy commissioner — an officer of Parliament — lacks the power and resources to provide oversight of C-51; and Canada's reputation is being tarnished as international media report the Conservative bill could open the door to human rights abuses." National Post (2015-03-03)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

Bill C-51 is rightly aimed at violent Islamic jihadi terrorists

An opinion piece states, "Despite the general justification of the preamble, there are no marginal annotations explaining the details of Bill C-51, the government's proposed anti-terrorism law. This means that commonsense is required to rein in the anxieties of our imagination if we are to discern the reasons why changes to existing security legislation are warranted. We also need to be aware of why these changes are proposed now, whatever the weight one accords the attacks of last fall. The five parts of the bill deal respectively with: (1) information sharing among government agencies; (2) preventing suspected persons from boarding commercial aircraft - a "no-fly" list - along with appeal procedures available to those barred from flying; (3) new thresholds and provisions for judicial oversight regarding the arrest of persons suspected of terrorism or of advocating terrorism, including electronic advocacy; (4) expanding the capabilities of CSIS with warrants from the Federal Court and new reporting requirements; and finally (5) strengthening the ability of the Minister of Immigration to keep information on admissibility of prospective immigrants and refugees secret..." National Post

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding the forthcoming anti-terrorism legislation was light.

General Coverage / couverture générale

Les audiences sur le projet de loi C-51 commencent mardi et c'est le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney qui va les inaugurer en quelque sorte, c'est le ministre parrain du projet de loi qui vient défendre sa législation. De plus, on est encore à négocier la liste des témoins. Ce qui est acquis, c'est que les quatre anciens premiers ministres, qui étaient quand même signataires d'une lettre qui exprimait beaucoup de réserves à l'endroit du C-51, ne seront pas invités. On ne s'est pas encore entendu, environ 48-50 témoins, un peu plus de la moitié pour le gouvernement, un peu moins de la moitié évidemment pour l'opposition. (RDI, 11h09 ET)

RDI présente une entrevue avec Michel Juneau-Katsuya, ancien cadre du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité. On discute de la vidéo de Michael Zehaf-Bibeau et du projet de loi C-51. Le ministre Steven Blaney est mentionné. Transcription ébauche

CBC News' Power & Politics held a panel discussion with MPs regarding the likelihood that the Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video will be made public. Rough Transcript

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

This social media analysis is based on the following keywords:

"anti-terror bill" AND "Canada"
"anti-terror bill" AND "Harper"
"anti-terror bill" AND "Ottawa"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Canada"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Harper"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Ottawa"
"anti-terrorism act" AND "2015"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Canada"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Harper"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Ottawa"
"bill c51"
"c-51"
"Canada" AND "anti-terror law"
"loi anti-terroriste" AND "2015"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "conservateur"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "Harper"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "Ottawa"
"loi sur la protection du Canada contre les terroristes"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Canada"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "conservateur"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Harper"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Ottawa"
"security legislation" AND "Canada"

There were a total of 1993 social media posts on March 4 2015. The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

In total, there were approximately 1628 tweets, 253 Facebook posts, 31 blog posts, 40 news posts and 41 other posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the day:

Coverage peaked at approximately 12 pm EST on March 4 with 236 social media posts based on tweets and retweets regarding a Q and A with American whistleblower Edward Snowden and his response to questions on privacy and Bill C-51.

Stakeholders

PnPCBC9

Have questions about #C51? Tomorrow @evansolomoncbc talks w/ the experts, the lawyers, the politicians about the anti-terror bill. Tune in!

PnPCBC

Don't miss tomorrow's #C51 anti-terror bill special episode - 90 minutes where we dig deep into what the bill is about, with the experts.

bccla

#HumanRights ramifications of #C51: international news! @guardian covers concerns of legal scholars & rights groups <http://tinyurl.com/qca2cea>

MacleansMag

30-year CSIS vet Ray Boisvert and law prof Craig Forcese break down the C-51 debate: ow.ly/JVtyK#cdnpoli

mgeist

Why Watching the Watchers Isn't Enough: My Talk on Privacy, Snowden & Bill C-51

http://www.michaelgeist.ca/2015/03/watching-watchers-isnt-enough-talk-privacy-snowden-bill-c-51/...

stphnmaher

Has anyone asked the West Edmonton Mall managers how they feel about @CPC_HQ posting terror threats on Facebook?

Media

TorontoStar

#LIVE Snowden goes into problematic provisions of Bill C-51. #AskSnowden. <http://on.thestar.com/1w3ATiS>

alexboutilier

Snowden says he's not going to weigh in on C51 & whether it's a good or bad bill, but Canadian spies have weakest oversight in West.

alexboutilier

Snowden calls it astonishing that Canada's agencies are trying to expand their powers in that context.

alexboutilier

He's clearly read up on the debate so far. Mentions the fact that the government is declining to hear from former PMs on C51.

CBCPolitics

Terrorism survey: 50% of Canadians feel less safe than 2 years ago http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/terrorism-survey-50-of-canadians-feel-less-safe-than-2-years-ago-

1.2978177?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter... #cdnpoli #hw

HuffPostCanada

Tories accused of fear-mongering with Facebook post on Bill C-51 <http://huff.to/1KjUzWp>

Hashtags

NIL

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51
2015-03-14 – 2015-03-15

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding Bill C-51 continued to be extensive over the weekend. The vast majority of coverage focused on the March 14th Day of Action where those in opposition to C-51 protested in dozens of communities across Canada. Due to the protests, there was a large jump in social media activity as well.
- Opinion pieces, editorials and letters to the editor over the weekend continued to be negative concerning Bill C-51.
- The Global News investigative program 16x9 aired a special on girls being recruited to go overseas and join ISIS. On the program, Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney was interviewed and discussed aspects of Bill C-51.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- "We don't have the legal authority to shut down websites who are promoting terrorism targeted. So that's the first thing of that bill. We will criminalize the promotion of terrorism, and also shut down the website." ~ Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney
- "The international jihadist movement has declared war on Canada. Canadians are being targeted by jihadi terrorists simply because they hate our society and the values it represents. That is why our government has put forward measures that protect Canadians against jihadi terrorists who seek to destroy the very principles that make Canada the best country in the world." ~ Excerpt from a statement from the office of Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney in regards to the C-51 protests
- "C-51 is a bill that could seriously endanger our right to protest peacefully, to stand up against a government or an infrastructure or an economic policy. Mr Harper has never been able to give a single example of why this bill is necessary." ~ NDP Leader Tom Mulcair

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

- "What this new act allows is for, right now, 17 agencies — but there could be more added by cabinet without any public debate — to basically share any information they deem relevant to detection of new security threats, and the definitions of the act would capture the activities of ordinary Canadians." ~ Catherine Tully, Nova Scotia's freedom of information and protection of privacy review officer

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

NIL

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Clark calls for balance on C-51 debate

B.C. Premier Christy Clark has entered the debate over the federal anti-terrorism bill, calling attention to the potential dangers of government overreach but stopping short of criticizing the legislation directly. Asked about Bill C-51 this week, the Premier said there is a need to balance the protection of personal freedoms with matters of national security. Bill C-51 - which would give Canada's spy agency sweeping powers, criminalize the promotion of terrorism and grant RCMP the power of preventative arrests - has come under fire since it was tabled five weeks ago. On Saturday, a nationwide "day of action" is planned in protest of the legislation, with events in every province. Globe and Mail, S3 (2015-03-14)

C-51 - Dérapages politiques

Une pièce d'opinion déclare, « Plus le débat sur le projet de loi C-51 avance, plus les intentions du gouvernement de Stephen Harper transparaissent. Pour justifier ses mesures antiterroristes, il invite dans le débat d'étranges alliés, le plus inattendu étant Hitler. Tous les amalgames sont bons pour alimenter le sentiment d'insécurité des Canadiens. Les conservateurs de Stephen Harper ne font rien sans calculs politiques. Les mesures contenues dans ce projet de loi et la communication qu'ils en font depuis un mois correspondent à une stratégie réfléchie que la référence à deux événements permet de mieux comprendre... Pour justifier l'octroi de pouvoirs si abusifs en regard des droits et libertés, le gouvernement n'a aucune retenue. La semaine dernière, il a rendu publique la vidéo où Michael Zehaf-Bibeau justifie son attentat au parlement, question de raviver la tension vécue par les députés le 22 octobre avant qu'ils ne commencent l'étude du C-51 en comité parlementaire. En ouvrant mardi l'étude du projet de loi, le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, en rajoutait en invitant Hitler dans le débat. Évoquant la nécessité de pouvoirs pour combattre les propos haineux, il affirmait que " l'Holocauste n'a pas commencé dans les chambres à gaz, il a commencé avec des mots "... La façon dont le gouvernement conservateur mène ce débat sert le parti, mais pas le pays. A Steven Blaney, et à tous ses collègues, il faut rappeler que oui, il faut faire attention aux mots. Il est tellement facile de glisser dans la propagande et la démagogie. Il y a eu ces derniers jours beaucoup trop de dérapages. Il faut s'en inquiéter. » Le Devoir, B4 (2015-03-14)

C-51 va-t-il trop loin?

Une pièce d'opinion déclare, « Le grand chef des Premières nations canadiennes, Perry Bellegarde craint qu'il serait trop facile de qualifier de terrorisme la défense de leurs droits, tant en matière de protection de l'environnement que des traités touchant à leurs droits territoriaux. Les Canadiens veulent que le gouvernement du Canada soit en mesure de déjouer des complots terroristes qui menaceraient la sécurité publique. Sur ce point, à peu près personne ne conteste cette responsabilité du gouvernement fédéral. Là où la dissension se manifeste c'est sur le plan des moyens à prendre pour y arriver. Comme on a pu le constater depuis quelques jours, les porte-parole du gouvernement sont prêts à dire à peu près n'importe quoi pour enfoncer leur message: le ministre de la Sécurité publique du Canada, Steven Blaney est allé jusqu'à comparer la menace terroriste qui nous guette à l'Holocauste. Ce faisant, il verse dans l'exagération. Le projet de loi C-51 n'est pas exempt d'exagération sur les moyens que le gouvernement fédéral veut se donner pour atteindre l'objectif légitime de contrer le terrorisme... » L'Acadie-Nouvelle, 23 (2015-03-14)

Protests against Bill C-51 to be staged across the province

It's certainly got people fired up. Bridgewater, Annapolis Royal, Sydney, Antigonish and Halifax will join over 40 other towns and cities across Canada hosting protests against the Conservatives' Bill C-51 on Saturday. Chronicle-Herald, A13 (2015-03-14)

Privacy protection under threat by Bill C-51

An opinion piece states, "As witnesses line up to warn about the dangers associated with Bill C-51, Canada's anti-terrorism bill, it is increasingly clear that the proposed legislation is an unprecedented undermining of Canadian privacy protection. Much of the focus on the bill has related to oversight: the government implausibly claims that it increases oversight (it does not), the Liberals disappointingly say they support the bill but would like better oversight and much of the NDP criticism has also centred on oversight. Yet with respect to privacy and Bill C-51, lack of oversight is only a part of the problem. The privacy-related concerns stem from Bill C-51's Security of Canada Information Sharing Act (SCISA), a bill within the bill that goes further than sharing information related to terrorist activity. It does so in three steps..." Toronto Star, B2 (2015-03-14)

Canadians should heed Edward Snowden's warning

An opinion piece states, "I suspect that history will one day be very kind to whistleblower Edward Snowden. Yesterday's traitor is gradually becoming tomorrow's patriot as he slowly unmask the "secret surveillance state" growing around us. In fact, there is already talk of him being able to return to the U.S. at some point. But it may be here in Canada where he will be owed a special debt. Just as Canadians appeared to be sleepwalking towards accepting a dangerous government-sponsored "anti-terrorism act" that would undermine human rights and the rule of law, the debate has appeared to turn in recent days. Government ministers are now more on the defensive. Critics of the proposed legislation are regaining their voice. And Snowden himself has intervened..." Toronto Star, WD3 (2015-03-14)

Vote for us or the terrorists will get you

An opinion piece states, "First we had Canada's New Government. Then we had Strong and Stable Government. Now we have the Be Very Afraid Government. As even casual observers of the news will know, it's all fear, all the time in Ottawa these days. The political premise is slightly disturbing - that terror and crime can be tackled as another marketing challenge, complete with labels, postcard surveys, and mind-numbing repetition of slogans. The potential payoff, presumably, is the re-election of the Conservative "brand." ... Toronto Star, IN2 (2015-03-14)

Who will police Canada's spies?

An opinion piece states, "Last month, three teenage girls flew from London to Istanbul, en route to Raqqa, headquarters of Islamic State, also known as ISIL or ISIS, to begin new lives as "jihadi brides." Turkish intelligence says the man who smuggled them across the border was a Canadian agent, Mohammed al-Rashid, a Syrian dentist who fled to Jordan to escape the civil war. The Turks say after al-Rashid came to the attention of the Canadian embassy in Amman, the Canadians brought him to Canada, offered him the hope of citizenship and set him to work smuggling foreigners into the clutches of the homicidal maniacs of ISIS. By their count, al-Rashid has helped 140 Britons get to ISIS, all the while reporting to someone named "Matt" at the Canadian embassy, where the ambassador is Bruno Saccmani, former head of Prime Minister Stephen Harper's bodyguards. The Canadian government, of course, won't say whether any of this is true... The same government that put him in charge of SIRC is now seeking to massively expand the powers of our spies with Bill C-51, with no improved oversight. The law will give spies licence to engage in a wide variety of threat-disruption activities against any threat to Canada's security, requiring warrants only when they believe their activities would break the law..." National Post (Ottawa Citizen, A10, 2015-03-14)

Bill turns CSIS into secret police

An opinion piece states, "Bill C-51, fast-tracked concurrently through the House of Commons and a compliant Senate, is only now being understood by many people and groups. Unfortunately, the governed have views about potential problems with the Canada's new anti-terrorism bill that will never be heard in Parliament..." Winnipeg Free Press, A17 (2015-03-14)

And the survey says... ? - Poorly designed politically biased surveys hurt democracy

An opinion piece states, "... Survey questions are everywhere these days, which is why I initially didn't think much of it Monday night when I saw a question in the corner of a flyer sent to my house by my Conservative member of Parliament, Lawrence Toet. But once I read the question, which asked constituents if they "agree... (that) we must take additional action to protect Canada from terrorism" or "disagree (because) terrorists are victims too." A box where you could fill in your name, address, phone number and email was also helpfully provided. I thought it would be a teachable moment to demonstrate just how loaded, self-serving and poorly crafted some survey questions can be... First of all, no one should be under any illusion that these types of survey questions are designed to actually measure what people in Elmwood-Transcona or anywhere else think about terrorism or Bill C-51, the proposed Anti-Terrorism Act just introduced by the Conservatives. If this was a sincere effort to engage community attitudes, Toet and his colleagues would publicly release the results and use them to justify their controversial anti-terror measures..." Winnipeg Free Press, A17 (2015-03-14)

Blurred lines and fear tactics

An opinion piece states, "Xenophobia is an intense or irrational dislike or fear of people from other countries. Islam is the religious faith of Muslims. Islamophobia is an irrational fear of Islam and the Muslim people based on their links to Islamic extremists who use terrorism to advance their interests. Muslims are particularly vulnerable because they are a visible minority easily identified by religion and dress. Defining terrorism is more difficult. In Canada, section 83.01 of the Criminal Code defines terrorism as an act committed "in whole or in part for a political, religious or ideological purpose, objective or cause" with the intention of intimidating the public . . . with regard to its security, including its economic security." Activities recognized as criminal within this context include death and bodily harm with the use of violence; significant property damage and interference or disruption of essential services, facilities or systems. Following January's Charlie Hebdo massacre in Paris, Prime Minister Stephen Harper warned that the "international jihadist movement" had declared war on Canada. By the end of January, he was declaring war on the jihadists with his Anti-Terrorism Act. In early February, less than two weeks after the PM introduced Bill C-51, the RCMP received a tip that four people were plotting a Valentine's Day mass shooting in the Halifax Shopping Centre. Two people were subsequently charged with conspiracy to commit murder, not terrorism. The reason according to Justice Minister Peter McKay is that the conspiracy was not "culturally motivated." ... " Times & Transcript, A13 (2015-03-14)

Une vraie menace

Une pièce d'opinion déclare, « La menace terroriste est devenue la justification passe-partout du gouvernement conservateur pour défendre les contours flous de la mission en Irak et dénigrer quiconque ose critiquer ses initiatives, en particulier le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51... » Le Devoir, B2 (2015-03-14)

Tories' Bill C-51 is flawed legislation

A letter to the editor states, "In its haste to introduce C-51, the Conservative government has shown a wilful ignorance of very careful parliamentary work done in the past to establish a domestic security service appropriate to Canada and Canadians..." Ottawa Citizen, B6 (2015-03-14)

Terror bill 'Orwellian'

Thousands gathered in the heart of Toronto Saturday to protest the federal government's new anti-terrorism bill -- legislation many demonstrators said would turn Canada into an "Orwellian" state under an intrusive, totalitarian government. It's believed as many as 4,000 people braved Saturday's cold and rain to stand in Nathan Phillips Square outside City Hall and denounce the Conservative's Bill C-51, a piece of legislation that would expand the powers of Canada's spy agency and give the RCMP increased powers of arrest when it comes to the prevention of terrorism and the promotion of it. The office of Canada's Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness was quick to respond. "We reject the argument that every time we talk about security, our freedoms are threatened," a spokesman said. "Canadians understand that their freedom and security go hand in hand. Canadians expect us to protect both." Toronto Sun, 2 (Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun) (2015-03-15)

You can't shut us up, thousands warn MPs

Thousands of Canadians came together to loudly denounce the Conservative government's proposed anti-terror legislation in dozens of rallies held across the country on Saturday. The Conservative government introduced the wide-ranging bill in January. It would give police much broader powers and allow them to detain terror suspects, as well as give new powers to Canada's spy agency. Organizers of the nationwide protest say the bill would infringe upon Canadians' civil liberties and right to privacy, especially online. Canadian Press (Toronto Star, A3; Times-Colonist, iPolitics); Edmonton Sun; Calgary Sun; Ottawa Sun; The Province; Times-Colonist; QMI Agency (Winnipeg Sun, 5; Calgary Sun, Ottawa Sun); La Presse Canadienne (Le Soleil, 14; Le Quotidien); Agence QMI (Le Journal de Montréal, 14) (2015-03-15)

Consternation au Collège de Maisonneuve

Les autorités du Collège de Maisonneuve sont dépitées et les étudiants surpris de savoir qu'un autre étudiant a quitté le pays, peut-être pour rejoindre l'état islamique. L'étudiant serait parti pour la Turquie à la mi-janvier, selon Radio-Canada, soit au même moment que six autres jeunes Québécois soupçonnés d'avoir rejoint le groupe armé État islamique en Syrie. Il était en contact avec au moins l'un d'entre eux. Un porte-parole du ministère de la Sécurité publique du Canada a rappelé que le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 "rend criminel de voyager ou tenter de voyager à des fins terroristes". Le Journal de Montréal, 10 (2015-03-15)

La façade démagogique du C-51

Une lettre déclare, « Forts d'un appui de la population de 82 % au projet de loi C-51, les conservateurs de Stephen Harper n'hésitent plus un instant à mettre les bouchées doubles pour valider avec insistance leur politique du law and order, le ministre Blaney ayant même utilisé l'Holocauste pour justifier ses propos sur les dangers qui guettent les Canadiens devant la montée de l'intégrisme et de la radicalisation... » Le Journal de Montréal, 41 (Le Journal de Québec) (2015-03-15)

C-51 FLAWS FIXABLE

A letter to the editor states, "Let's get something straight. Terrorists, not politicians, deal in fear. People intent on terrorism and treason are not about to announce their plans, plots or presence. They deal in instilling fear and have to surprise us with atrocities to be successful. Our best and most effective counter-weapon is a reasoned effort to thwart the planning and plotting before anyone is maimed or killed. That requires an extension of our policing powers. Bill C-51 addresses that issue..." Winnipeg Sun, 10 (2015-03-15)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

Projet de loi antiterroriste - Un pouvoir que seuls les espions canadiens auront

Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a soutenu cette semaine que le nouveau pouvoir de "perturbation" qu'accordera son projet de loi antiterroriste aux espions canadiens existe déjà dans plusieurs autres pays occidentaux. C-51 ne fera donc qu'arrimer le Canada à ses alliés. Or il n'en est rien. La plupart des pays cités par le ministre soutiennent que leurs services du renseignement intérieur n'ont pas de tels pouvoirs. Le Devoir, A2 (2015-03-14)

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

Bill C-51 'Day of Action' protests denounce new policing powers

Protests are underway across Canada against the government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation, which would give police much broader powers and allow them to detain terror suspects and give new powers to Canada's spy agency. NDP leader Tom Mulcair joined hundreds in Montreal in a march through the city. One protester held up a poster saying "C-51 is an act of terror," while others carried red "Stop Harper" signs. The protest was expected to end in front of the riding office of Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau. Trudeau has said his caucus will vote in favour of the bill. Dubbed "Defend our Freedom," organizers say Bil C-51 is dangerous, reckless and unacceptable. In a statement to CBC News on Saturday afternoon, a spokesman for Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said the government "rejects the argument that every time we talk about security, our freedoms are threatened." "Canadians understand that their freedom and security go hand in hand [and] expect us to protect both, and there are safeguards in this legislation to do exactly that," added Jeremy Laurin. In Toronto, hundreds gathered at city hall to speak out against the proposed legislation, with many holding signs, chanting and drumming in protest of the bill. CBC News; Ottawa Citizen; Global News; Canadian Press (CTV Montreal); CP24.com; La Presse Canadienne (Radio-Canada) ; Radio-

Canada; Canoe; Journal Métro; QMI Agency \(Canoe\); Hamilton Spectator; The Telegram; News 1130; York Region; CJAD 800; Toronto Sun; The Province; 640 AM Talk Radio Toronto; VOCM; Metro News; News Talk 770 AM Calgary; Kamloops BC Now (2015-03-14)

Loi antiterroriste : une farce démocratique

Il n'aura pas fallu grand-temps, jeudi, pour se rendre compte que les travaux du comité parlementaire étudiant le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 seraient un simulacre de consultations. Presque chaque témoin qui avait une critique à formuler s'est fait faire la leçon, a vu ses motivations mises en doute ou s'est fait égratigner par des insinuations malveillantes par les députés conservateurs. Les députés conservateurs n'étaient pas là et n'y seront pas au cours des prochaines séances pour mieux comprendre le projet de loi, en déceler les lacunes et les corriger. Leur seul rôle est de défendre C-51 coûte que coûte, et de répéter les justifications et explications du ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney. Mardi, le ministre Blaney et son collègue à la Justice, Peter Mackay, témoignaient en compagnie du commissaire de la GRC et du grand patron du SCRS — les seuls à avoir deux heures pour s'expliquer. Malgré cela, les membres de l'opposition ont concentré leurs tirs sur les ministres qu'ils peuvent interroger presque tous les jours aux Communes, et ils n'ont pas eu une seule question pour le directeur du SCRS, un homme qu'ils voient rarement. Ils n'ont même pas pensé lui demander à quoi pourraient ressembler les mesures illégales de perturbation de la menace que le projet C-51 leur permettra d'utiliser. Les conservateurs, eux, ne se sont pas privés de sa présence et lui ont lancé de nombreuses questions complaisantes. L'Actualité (2015-03-14)

Protesters gather in Kingston against Bill C-51

More than 200 demonstrators gathered at Springer Market Square Saturday to protest newly proposed legislation Bill C-51. The Anti-terrorism Act, 2015, or Bill C-51, would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) new powers, and make it easier for police to detain terror suspects. "This side of the House (Conservative), we believe that security and liberty go hand in hand," Steven Blaney, minister for public safety and emergency preparedness, told the House of Commons on Feb. 25. "In order for liberty to flourish, we need security. That is why parliamentarians must give our security and intelligence forces the tools they need to protect Canadians. "These are services that most other democratic countries have. However, we will ensure that there is judicial oversight." Kingston Whig Standard (2015-03-15)

Panelists and protestors in Calgary voice opposition to anti-terror bill

From downtown streets to a suburban community centre, hundreds of Calgarians gathered Saturday to voice their opposition to the sweeping federal Anti-Terrorism Act. Calgary Police estimate over 500 people gathered midday at City Hall to protest Bill C-51, an anti-terrorism bill that has provoked the ire of civil liberties and ethnic groups. The march was part of a national campaign by advocacy group Lead Now. Calgary Herald; Windsor Star (2015-03-15)

Protesters denounce Bill C-51 in Owen Sound

Opponents of the federal government's controversial new anti-terrorism bill say the legislation would strip away various Canadian rights, including to privacy and peaceful protest. About 120 people, including several carrying placards or banners with slogans like Defend Your Freedom and Activist Not Terrorist, gathered in front of city hall in Owen Sound Saturday to denounce Bill C-51. Similar demonstrations, promoted by Leadnow.ca and Openmedia.ca, were held in communities across the country. Owen Sound Sun Times (2015-03-15)

Ex-watchdog, Tory MP criticizes Conservatives' proposed anti-terror legislation

The Harper government has been getting an earful of criticism about bill C-51, its so-called anti-terror legislation, including from a high profile Conservative. Committee hearings into the proposed legislation began last week, and what emerged were two fundamental complaints from the critics: questions of adequate oversight and whether the bill is even constitutional. Ron Atkey, a former Progressive Conservative MP and the first chair of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, the advisory group overseeing CSIS, spent his time before the committee discussing those issues. Global News (2015-03-15)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

HOWE ROOM: Privacy officer concerned about bill C-51

Add Nova Scotia's freedom of information and protection of privacy review officer, Catherine Tully, to the growing list of people concerned about the federal government's proposed bill C-51. Tully and 11 of her provincial counterparts from across the country recently authored a letter outlining their concerns to the federal standing committee on public safety and national security, now hearing debate on the bill. In an interview last week, Tully said she has concerns that the impacts "on the privacy of ordinary Canadians of this bill are really quite profound," and she agreed with her colleagues across the country that they needed to speak up to highlight their worries. Chief among those concerns for Tully is that the bill, which the federal government is pitching as necessary to fight terrorism, permits the broad collection and sharing of personal information and "it's without appropriate oversight." Chronicle-Herald \(2015-03-15\)

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was extensive over the weekend. Majority of coverage was focused on Saturday's protests, some interviewed were conducted on the subject.

Of note:

General Coverage / couverture générale

Global News – 16x9 presents "Wives of ISIS". Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney was interviewed for the program. Minister Blaney commented on Bill C-51. Rough Transcript \(2015-03-14\)

Global News – The West Block discussed ISIS' recruitment of Canadian youth and Bill C-51 with Global News reporter Vassy Kapelos. The discussion mentioned Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney. Rough Transcript \(2015-03-15\)

Global News – The West Block interviewed Ron Atkey, former Chair of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, regarding Bill C-51. Rough Transcript \(2015-03-15\)

CTV News – Question Period interviewed Green Party leader Elizabeth May regarding Bill C-51. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney was mentioned in this interview. Rough Transcript (2015-03-15)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

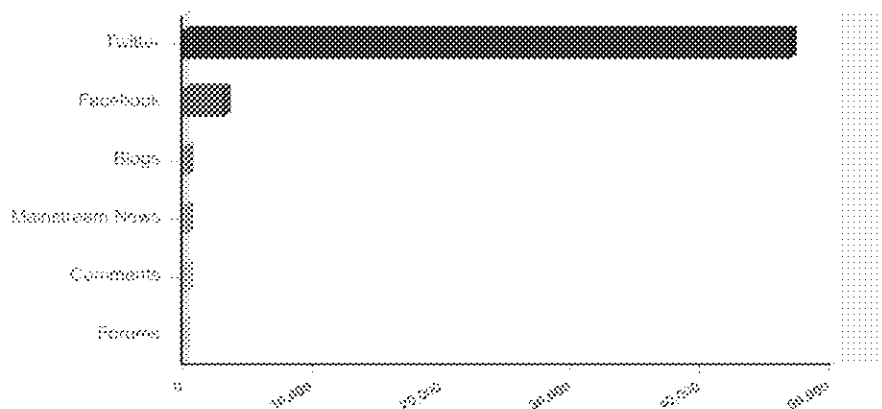

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

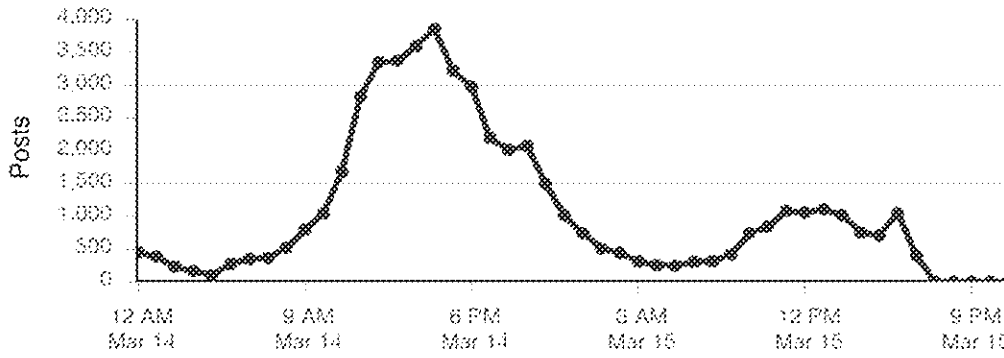

Overall, there was a large boost in social media posts over the weekend regarding Bill C-51 in large part due to the Canada-wide protests on Saturday. In total, there were approximately 50,728 social media posts.

The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

There were approximately 46,879 tweets, 3,142 Facebook posts, 265 blog posts, 245 news site posts, 189 comments and 8 forum posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the weekend:

Social media activity peaked from 16:00 – 17:00 ET on Saturday with approximately 3,856 social media posts. The vast majority of posts concerned the protests as they were ongoing.

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51
2015-03-25

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage today regarding Bill C-51 continued to be moderate, while the tone of coverage was much less balanced in comparison to yesterday and was generally negative. Of note:
 - In a letter to media, Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney wrote to clarify some perceived misconceptions about the bill. According to the Minister, "Following the introduction of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015, many Canadians have voiced their opinions on this important piece of legislation. Bill C-51 will protect our rights and freedoms by providing better tools to confront the twin challenges of our time: radicalization and terrorism."
 - Pam Palmater, a Mi'kmaq lawyer, stated that the controversial legislation targets aboriginal people's way of life and their right to protest.
 - The Canadian Civil Liberties Association expressed concern that the Security of Canada Information Sharing Act would allow information that has no relevance to terrorism to be shared amongst security agencies in Canada as well as shared with foreign agencies.
 - In a press release, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers expressed concern over Bill C-51. Specifically, the union is concerned over the lack of civilian oversight, the breadth of information sharing that will be allowed under the legislation, and that ordinary citizens could be wrongly identified as terrorists.
 - Canadian Bar Association President Michele Hollins expressed concern over the portion of Bill C-51 that would grant a judge the authority to allow CSIS officers to undertake in actions that could breach the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Hollins stated that this is "extremely troubling."

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- "As Canada's minister of public safety, I want to ensure the debate over C-51 is based on facts and not the alarmist mythology advanced by some critics of the bill, including the Liberals, the NDP and certain academics." – Steven Blaney, Minister of Public Safety
- "Increasing the powers of the security establishment will not necessarily make us safer... The lack of civilian oversight and the dearth of monitoring information-sharing between government agencies in this bill is very disturbing" ~ Denis Lemelin, National President of Canadian Union of Postal Workers
- "Bill C-51 would make it all too easy to target ordinary working people or any marginalized group and label them 'terrorists'... We should accept no violations of our human rights and freedoms in the name of national security." ~ Denis Lemelin, National President of Canadian Union of Postal Workers
- "The judicial warrants that appear in the CSIS portion of this legislation envision a situation where CSIS agents are going to knowingly commit a violation of the charter... They are then ... authorized to go and ask a judge — who, of course, is herself charged with upholding the constitution and upholding the charter — to preauthorize a breach of the charter." ~ Michele Hollins, President of the Canadian Bar Association
- "The judicial warrants that appear in the CSIS portion of this legislation envision a situation where CSIS agents are going to knowingly commit a violation of the charter... They are then ... authorized to go and ask a judge — who, of course, is herself charged with upholding the constitution and upholding the charter — to preauthorize a breach of the charter." ~ Michele Hollins, President of the Canadian Bar Association
- "Absolutely at the federal level it is crucial that information be allowed to be shared, but there has to be accountability for that and, certainly, I think it's important to respect all our rights." - Insp. Steve Irwin of the Toronto Police Service
- "We believe Bill C-51 is more about increasing the output of the tar sands and facilitating the heavy oil pipeline proposals across this country." - Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs president Stewart Phillip

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

Postal Workers Concerned about Bill C-51

The union representing 51,000 postal workers is adding its voice to the growing chorus of concerns over Bill C-51, the federal government's sweeping national security bill. "The Canadian Union of Postal Workers knows what it is like to experience out-of-control state surveillance," said Denis Lemelin, National President of CUPW, referring to the lengthy history of CUPW being spied upon by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) and the RCMP. Bill C-51 would give CSIS even broader powers to invade the privacy of Canadians in the name of combatting terrorism. Similar concerns over the bill's overly sweeping reach will be raised by the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Hassan Yussuff, who appears today before the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security (SECU). Canadian Union of Postal Workers News Release

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

The first duty of government is citizens' safety

In a letter, Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney states, "Following the introduction of the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015, many Canadians have voiced their opinions on this important piece of legislation. Bill C-51 will protect our rights and freedoms by providing better tools to confront the twin challenges of our time: radicalization and terrorism. As Canada's minister of public safety, I want to ensure the debate over C-51 is based on facts and not the alarmist mythology advanced by some critics of the bill, including the Liberals, the NDP and certain academics. Following terrorist attacks at Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu, Que., and in the heart of our democracy, Parliament Hill, we have a moral imperative to act. The first duty of any government is the safety its citizens. We must not fail in that duty." The Hamilton Spectator, A13

Anti-terror bill targets aboriginals: Lawyer

A Mi'kmaq lawyer fighting against the government's anti-terror bill asked members of a Commons committee Tuesday to compare the number of Canadians who have died on home soil in terror attacks to the number of missing and murdered aboriginal women. Pam Palmater, who holds a chair in indigenous governance at Toronto's Ryerson University, said the controversial legislation targets aboriginal people's way of life and their right to protest. She said C-51 "captures everything under Idle No More" and could put aboriginal people in jail. She said she's also concerned about a section of the bill that would outlaw terrorist propaganda and could be used against First Nations people. "All we have left are our thoughts, and our private thoughts will now be criminalized," Palmater told MPs. (...) In response, Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney pointed to a section of the bill saying it does not apply to "lawful advocacy, protest, dissent and artistic expression." QMI Agency (The Kingston Whig Standard, B1, Edmonton Sun)

Anti-terror bill about suppression, say critics

The federal government's omnibus security bill would hand extremists what they want by shackling civil liberties, a prominent aboriginal lawyer and activist says. There is no way to fix the legislation, which "makes us all suspects," said Pamela Palmater, chair in indigenous governance at Toronto's Ryerson University. "The terrorists will have won," Palmater said during a meeting of the House of Commons public safety committee, which is hearing more than 50 witnesses on the bill. The Conservatives brought in the 62-page bill following the murders of two Canadian soldiers just days apart last October by men whose motives were rooted in extremist thinking. The legislation would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service the ability to actively disrupt terror plots, make it easier for police to limit the movements of a suspect, expand no-fly list powers, crack down on extremist propaganda and dismantle barriers to exchanging security-related information. Neither the new disruptive powers nor the information-sharing provisions apply to "lawful" advocacy, protest and dissent, but some critics say these elements of the bill could be used against aboriginal and environmental activists who protest outside the letter of the law. Canadian Press (Telegraph-Journal, The Guardian, Red Deer Advocate, Cape Breton Post, L'Acadie Nouvelle)

Anti-terror law designed to boost oilsands

A B.C. aboriginal leader told the parliamentary committee studying the federal government's proposed anti-terror legislation that Bill C-51 was designed mainly to disrupt opposition to expansion of Alberta's oilsands industry. "We're absolutely convinced this is less about jihadi terrorism in this country and more about facilitating and promoting the tripling of the output of the tarsands," Grand Chief Stewart Phillip, president of the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs, told MPs. "We're gravely concerned." Phillip is one of several critics to argue that the bill could open the door to government security agencies targeting environmentalists and First Nations activists opposing pipeline expansion to the B.C. coast. (...) In the House of Commons Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney dismissed NDP accusations that the legislation is targeting First Nations protesters. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, A6, The Vancouver Sun)

Threat is relentless and global

A Toronto police officer working on the front lines of counter-terrorism gave parliamentarians an unsettling glimpse Tuesday of the threat the country faces. Insp. Steve Irwin began with the former case of the Toronto 18, in which several people were convicted for plotting to bomb major public and government sites in and around Toronto. Their aim was to provoke Canada's military withdrawal from Afghanistan. "That was generated locally," Insp. Irwin told a Commons committee studying the government's proposed antiterror legislation, Bill C-51. It "was inspired by individuals in a small group." A decade later, Islamic Jihad is a relentless, sophisticated and global phenomenon propelled by the Internet. "People from all over the world are inspiring and teaching and providing for how to beat our [security] systems [and] how to speak and not break the [hate] laws and ultimately lure mostly young, vulnerable people" into joining Islamists' holy war against Canada and the West. The new legislation proposes to make it a crime to knowingly advocate or promote the commission of a terrorist offence, however general. It's a needed change, Insp. Irwin told MPs. "Unfortunately, the [current Criminal Code laws] are too restrictive for those who are clever enough or counselled sufficiently to skirt divulging criminal intent" when publicly inciting hatred. Postmedia News (National Post, A6, Ottawa Citizen)

Anti-terrorism bill needs rigid safeguards

An opinion piece states, "When I first visited Beaumont, Alta., on the southeastern outskirts of Edmonton, it had a population of just over 2,000 and a distinctly Franco-Albertan character. The beautiful brick Catholic church of St. Vital (now close to 100 years old) kept watch over the surrounding prairie from its perch atop the "beautiful hill." Twenty-five years later, the formerly quaint French farming town is a booming bedroom community of nearly 16,000. But as vanilla and suburban as Beaumont might seem, it is also on the frontlines of the war on terror. A week ago, the RCMP's Integrated National Security Enforcement Team arrested a 17-year-old resident and charged him with trying to leave the country to join ISIS and plotting to commit "murder in circumstances that constitute terrorist activity." If the threat of terrorism in Canada has spread as far as Beaumont, then the threat literally is everywhere." QMI Agency (The Kingston Whig Standard, A4, Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, London Free Press, Edmonton Sun, Calgary Sun, Ottawa Sun)

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

C-51 must include more oversight, anti-radicalization efforts, NDP says

As the House public safety committee prepares to wrap up witness testimony on the government's proposed anti-terror bill on Thursday, the New Democrats are getting set to propose amendments that would boost oversight powers and do more to combat radicalization. The motion, which stands in the name of NDP house leader Peter Julian and could be debated in the House as early as Thursday, would allow the committee to consider amendments in two specific areas: to "ensure that the government works with Canadian communities to counter radicalization" and "enhance oversight of Canadian security and intelligence agencies." The legislation goes to clause-by-clause review next week. Without such authorization, any amendments that go beyond the current scope of the bill would likely be deemed out of order during the review. Liberal spokeswoman Kate Purchase says her party backs the bid to broaden the parameters, but without Conservative support, it will likely be defeated. It's still not clear whether the government is open to changing the bill — or, for that matter, what amendments will be put forward by opposition members next week. Liberal public safety critic Wayne Easter and rights and freedoms critic Irwin Cotler will present their party's proposed changes on Thursday. Earlier today, CBA president Michele Hollins told CBC News Network host Heather Hiscox the group is particularly concerned over the proposed provision to allow CSIS agents to ask the federal court to sign off on activities that could breach the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Meanwhile, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers has added its name to the lengthening list of those worried at what they describe as the "overly sweeping reach" of the bill. The union "knows what it is like to experience out-of-control state surveillance," Denis Lemelin said in a press release sent out on Wednesday morning. CBC News

Disregard of Charter in anti-terror bill 'untenable': CBA

The Canadian Bar Association is recommending nearly two-dozen changes to the federal government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation, to strike more of a balance between security and individual liberties. The suggestions are outlined in a report issued today in advance of an appearance by representatives of the CBA before the House of Commons committee on Public Safety and National Security. Many of the concerns raised in the report involve the greater state powers outlined in bill C-51, without a similar increase in oversight, as well as the broad and often vague language used in the proposed legislation. Canadian Lawyer Magazine

Federal Election: Ottawa's anti-terrorism bill misses the mark

A letter to the editor submitted by the Green Party of Canada states, "Canadians should be deeply concerned about Bill C-51, the federal government's new anti-terrorism bill, says Kootenay-Columbia Green Party candidate Bill Green. The hastily-drafted legislation proposed by the Conservative government, which is also supported by the federal Liberal Party, completely misses the mark about the major threats to the security of Canadians. 'The risk of death or injury by a terrorist bomb or bullet is much smaller than the risks on our roads and highways, from disease from environmental pollution, and the long-term security risk posed by climate change,' says Green. Provisions in Bill C-51 could lead the country back to the uneasy days of the FLQ crisis in the 1970's when more than 450 Canadians were wrongfully imprisoned and later had to be compensated by the government. The bill could lead to innocent Canadians being jailed for doing nothing more than joining a protest march, Green says. Invermere Valley Echo

Information privacy at threat by Bill C-51

Bill C-51, known as the anti-terrorism bill, has drawn criticism for provisions that many feel are excessive and open to abuse. One of these provisions allows government agencies to share information about Canadians for reasons of national security. Associate Professor Hasan Cavusoglu of the Management Information Systems Division at the UBC Sauder School of Business weighs in on the privacy risks for Canadians. UBC News

Bill C-51: First Nation chief worries 'lives will be lost'

A chief, who once went to jail for defending his First Nation's traditional territory during a mining dispute in northern Ontario, says he has grave concerns about Bill C-51. Kitchenuhmaykoosib Inninuwug Chief Donny Morris sent a letter to his MP, Natural Resources Greg Rickford, asking him to withdraw support for the proposed anti-terrorism law. Morris and six others from Kitchenuhmaykoosib went to jail in 2008 after peacefully protesting mining activity near Big Trout Lake, about 600 kilometres north of Thunder Bay, Ont. He's worried that under Bill C-51 the consequences for Indigenous activists will be much worse. "I take this to my heart," Morris said. "Because I know it will happen. It happened to us. We got sentenced. We got sent to jail, what's going to stop an officer from taking that next step." That next step, in Morris' mind, is First Nations people being shot by police during land-based disputes. CBC News

C-51 has sparked a much-needed conversation about security and rights

An opinion piece states, "The best thing that might come out of Bill C-51, the government's proposed new anti-terrorism legislation, will not be the bill itself, certainly not if it passes through the House of Commons and Senate un-amended. The best thing might be an affirmation that Canadians care about finding the right balance between security and democratic rights, including privacy rights. Achieving that balance is no easy matter, given the complexity and pace of change of security threats, and the modern Pandora's box of surveillance capabilities represented by what officials benignly define as the security "toolkit." High levels of official secrecy hamper the debate. Some 14 years after the Sept. 11 attacks and the original passage of Canada's first anti-terrorism legislation, we now are busy adding layers to what has become a dense legal foundation, compounding the problem of knowing whether our laws protect us or might imperil us. It is, simply, hard to know what security and intelligence agencies might need to meet threats, hard to know how newly-minted capabilities might actually be used in the future, and hard to know what their impact on rights and freedoms might actually be. Maybe the impact will be less than feared and the security-rights balance that we worked so hard to create after 9/11 will be fine. Maybe not. Because of the unknowns, there have been many calls for matching new powers with catch-up provisions for strengthened accountability. Concerns on this front have been expressed, in an unprecedented way, by four former prime ministers; Canada has even been called out by none other than Edward Snowden, the NSA whistleblower, as having one of the weakest intelligence oversight systems in the Western world. Strengthened accountability may well be our best bet to ensure that new security powers are balanced against rights protections." The Globe and Mail

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding Bill C-51 continued to be minimal today. Of note:

General Coverage / couverture générale

NIL

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

CTV News interviews the General Council of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association about Bill C-51. They are concerned about the excessive powers given to CSIS without accountability mechanisms. The Security of Canada Information Sharing Act is mentioned. Rough transcript

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

Social media activity continued to be extensive today in regards to Bill C-51. In total, there were approximately 5,218 social media posts.

The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

There were approximately 4,699 tweets, 418 Facebook posts, 56 blog posts, 26 news site posts, 18 comment posts and 1 forum post.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the day:

Social media activity peaked today from 14:00 ET – 15:00 ET with approximately 508 social media posts. While there was no specific trend in the posts this evening, posts tended to express general negative opinions towards the legislation.

Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca.

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51

2015-04-07 – 2015-04-12

FYI – Went through 3 daily packages between Tue Apr 7 to Fri Apr 10 (included the DMS on Fri)

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- During the period of April 7 to 12, coverage on Bill C-51 was light, with coverage specific to the bill consisting mainly of opinion pieces and reports of criticism of the bill and general national security atmosphere in Canada.
- There were items that made passing mention of Bill C-51, notably articles on CSIS' existing information sharing practices, shortcomings in the SIRC and the police taking on the role in protecting sentries at the National War Memorial.
- A few media items took note of polls indicating declining support for Bill C-51.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- "Despite what the government has been saying about the increasing risks to national security and the increasing importance of our security agencies, the official budget has flatlined at $10 million for more than a decade." – Liberal finance critic Ralph Goodale
- "You are more likely to die in a hospital from a super bug than be blown up in a terrorist attack. Where is the research money for super bugs?" – Canadian author Margaret Atwood
- "Despite the Liberal and NDP's votes against these increases, our government will continue to ensure that our national security agencies have the resources they need to keep Canadians safe." – Public Safety minister spokesperson Jean-Christophe de la Rue
- "Canadian intelligence has one of the weakest oversight frameworks of any western intelligence agency in the world." – Edward Snowden

- "The reality of it is that this government isn't interested in what anyone has to say because they have a majority. They will proceed and do a few minor, cosmetic adjustments." – Eve Plunkett, former inspector-general of CSIS

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

NIL

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Le SCRS partage des renseignements au-delà du réseau des "Five Eyes"

Un document interne du Service canadien de renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) révèle la présence d'un système d'échange de renseignements sur l'implication de présumés extrémistes à l'étranger avec divers partenaires, qui va au-delà du réseau habituel des "Five Eyes". Le Canada partage déjà des informations avec quatre autres pays -- les États-Unis, le Royaume-Uni, l'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande -- mais il a aussi conclu des partenariats "non traditionnels" sur cet enjeu. La note interne, intitulée "S'attaquer à la menace du déplacement des terroristes", a été obtenue par La Presse canadienne en vertu de la Loi sur l'accès à l'information. Plusieurs données ont été caviardées dans le document de cinq pages. Selon la note interne, le SCRS doit disposer "prioritairement" d'informations sur ce phénomène. "Obtenir les informations pertinentes sur cette menace pour conseiller le gouvernement nécessite des enquêtes approfondies au pays et à l'étranger, étant donné les éléments nationaux et internationaux qu'elles comportent", a-t-on écrit. Le SCRS a cependant remarqué que les alliés habituels du Canada avaient plutôt renforcé leurs ressources déjà existantes, au lieu de créer des liens avec d'autres pays. Le Canada, quant à lui, ferait face à des "défis opérationnels et à des pressions sur les ressources" causés par des facteurs ayant été censurés dans le document... Les événements survenus en octobre ont amené le gouvernement Harper à proposer un nouveau projet de loi antiterroriste afin de mieux cibler les présumés extrémistes qui vont se battre à l'étranger. Les nouvelles mesures permettraient aussi de déléguer de nouveaux pouvoirs au SCRS pour qu'il puisse obtenir un mandat afin d'enquêter dans d'autres pays. Presse Canadienne (Le Devoir, A4) (2015-04-07)

Intelligence agencies need oversight

A former CIA spy's eyes widen when he hears that, in Canada, the political opposition doesn't get to see national-security intelligence files. "You're kidding me," says John Kiriakou, who is under house arrest in Virginia after a two-year prison stay for revealing information about his former employer. "That's shocking to me. It seems to block any chance of a national consensus on an issue that I think would be very serious. There has to be oversight." Kiriakou made the remarks during an interview in which he described an internal controversy within the CIA over the arrest and rendition of Canadian Maher Arar to be tortured in a Syrian prison. Many colleagues protested, arguing that they were punishing an innocent man, he said. The CIA's role in the 2002-03 affair has never been publicly scrutinized. The fallout in Canada included a public inquiry and a $10-million government payout to Arar. A major recommendation from the inquiry was an overhaul of the model used to scrutinize intelligence work. A decade later, that recommendation from the Arar inquiry has never been implemented - even as the Canadian government prepares to provide intelligence agencies with more power in its new anti-terror bill. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, A7) (2015-04-07)

Soaring cost of terror fight hits RCMP

The RCMP has been forced to shuffle more cash and officers into terrorism investigations as Ottawa's financial contribution has remained static over the last decade, documents show. The Mounties diverted $22.9 million from other operations to the Integrated National Security Enforcement Teams (INSETs) in 2013-14... The Star made multiple interview requests to the RCMP for comment, which weren't returned. The Star also requested an interview with Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney's office. In reply, a spokesperson for Blaney said the government has increased security agencies budgets since coming to power - and took a shot at the opposition for voting against Conservative budgets. "Despite the Liberal and NDP's votes against these increases, our government will continue to ensure that our national security agencies have the resources they need to keep Canadians safe," wrote Jean-Christophe de la Rue, in a three-sentence statement. But Liberal finance critic Ralph Goodale said the RCMP's numbers contradicts the Conservatives' "rhetoric" around public safety and national security issues. "Despite what the government has been saying about the increasing risks to national security and the increasing importance of our security agencies, the official budget has flatlined at $10 million for more than a decade," Goodale, whose office obtained the documents, said in an interview. "So the RCMP has had to find the extra $20 (million) to $25 million (a year) from its own internal resources." The figures were released as the majority Conservatives continue to push through Bill C-51, the controversial anti-terrorism legislation that gives police-like powers to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. One question that has been largely ignored in the heated debate around C-51 is how CSIS's new powers will work in areas of the RCMP's current jurisdiction. Toronto Star, A1 (2015-04-09)

Ottawa police will guard the guards

There is a Latin phrase that reads: Quis custodiet ipsos custodes? - translated as "Who will guard the guards themselves?" On Thursday, that question was answered, at least for the ceremonial guards who stand watch daily over the iconic National War Memorial. The federal government has contracted the Ottawa Police Service to guard the two sentries stationed below the monument and in front of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. The Department of National Defence is paying the Ottawa police an estimated $425,000 for uniformed officers to protect the sentries beginning this week and running until mid-November. The contract follows the attack last fall in which Michael Zehaf Bibeau shot and killed honour guard Cpl. Nathan Cirillo, of Hamilton, at the memorial. Canadian Press (The Record, A1) (2015-04-10)

Terror bill losing support: Poll

Most Canadians oppose the Conservatives' proposed anti-terror legislation, according to a Forum Research poll released this week. The poll found 56% of Canadians, most of them younger and less wealthy, disapprove of Bill C-51. Forty-two percent believe the bill, if passed, will have a "negative effect" on their lives, while one-quarter think the effects will be positive. QMI Agency (Ottawa Sun, 5) (2015-04-11)

ISIS radicals change tactics

As social media giants crack down on the Islamic State's drive to attract fighters and followers, the extremist group is nimbly adapting to leave such efforts in the dust. Supporters are increasingly moving to smaller platforms such as Kik or surespot just as Twitter, Tumblr and YouTube are becoming better at taking down radical content. Western governments are intensifying efforts to respond to Islamic State's call, as 4,000 of their citizens, including 550 women, have travelled to Syria since 2012, according to figures from King's College London and the Soufan Group. In Canada, the proposed anti-terror bill C-51 would allow police to seize Internet material considered terrorist propaganda. The U.S. State Department is expanding a unit tasked with countering the Islamic State's messages, the New York Times reported. Toronto Star, WD7 (2015-04-11)

What's really terrifying about anti-terrorism

An opinion piece states, "Why are so many Canadians anxious about the Canadian government's proposed "Anti-Terrorism Act"? Can't they get a grip? Yes, more Canadians die from lightning than from terrorism. Yes, the government is about to give its controversial security and intelligence agencies a blank cheque to operate without effective accountability. And yes, as whistleblower Edward Snowden said last month to a Ryerson University audience, "Canadian intelligence has one of the weakest oversight frameworks of any western intelligence agency in the world." So what's the problem? If our own domestic agencies try to sell innocent fellow Canadians down the river - remember the case of Canadian Maher Arar, who spent a year being beaten and tortured in Syria on the basis of false information provided to the American CIA by Canada - there are apparently still individual agents within the CIA who will try to protect our interests..." Toronto Star, WD3 (2015-04-11)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

Atwood critical of Bill C-51

Renowned Canadian author Margaret Atwood added her voice to a growing chorus opposing the federal government's anti-terrorism bill. All Canadians should be concerned about Bill C-51 - "it's not only about where you live, but what you had for breakfast," said Atwood, who spoke at Red Deer College Monday as part of its Perspectives: Canada in the World series. The new bill, introduced in January by Prime Minister Stephen Harper, would grant greater powers to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, and allow federal institutions to access all information government departments have on any Canadian. There are concerns this could curtail internationally-guaranteed human rights such as liberty, privacy and freedom of expression. "You are more likely to die in a hospital from a super bug than be blown up in a terrorist attack. Where is the research money for super bugs?" Atwood said, to enthusiastic applause from the audience. Red Deer Advocate, A1, A2 (2015-04-07)

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

ISIS: Prime Minister Harper's top political bogeyman of the day

An opinion piece states, "Canada is ready to extend its fight against the Islamic State (ISIS) into Syria, carrying on a war that'll cost about half-a-billion taxpayer dollars by early next year. Prime Minister Stephen Harper is following up on his promise that Canada won't "stand on the sidelines" when it comes to the fight against Muslim extremism... The public language in support of this two-front "war on terror" has given rise to a new kind of militarism in Canada. It's characterized by a political rhetoric that galvanizes support for itself not only by pointing to a foreign enemy, but also by emphasizing the need to root out the enemy's ideological supporters on Canadian soil. This latter emphasis has, at the hands of the Tories, become a way to depict dissent against government policy as support for Muslim terrorism. Support for terrorism. Take the debate around Bill C-51 (the "Anti-terrorism Act"), the Conservative's proposal on how to fight domestic terrorism. The bill is making its way through the legislative process with limited debate and examination, despite containing provisions that will, according to a chorus of critics, forever change the landscape of Canadian national security. Its supporters emphasize the imminent nature of an ill-defined terrorism threat, keeping in mind that security issues will likely occupy the minds of voters in the upcoming fall election..." CBC News (2015-04-07)

It pays to pay attention

An opinion piece states, "Like most people I have been hearing a lot about Bill C-51 lately, and like most people I only have a passing understanding of what it actually contains. The more you read about it though, the more you realize everyone should know everything about this bill before it is most likely approved this summer. Essentially what it comes down to is an attempt by the government to extend Canada's anti-terror laws due to increased threats of terrorism. On paper, that sounds like a necessary measure. We all want to be safe and it is the government's job to keep everyone as secure as possible. The trouble is how we go about implementing the safety measures..." Meridian Booster (2015-04-07)

Bill C-51 Is More Unpopular than Ever

As Stephen Harper's controversial anti-terrorism bill clips through Parliament, en route to becoming law by the summer, public opposition is threatening to take wind out of the prime minister's sails. Of the Canadians who are aware of C-51, 56 percent oppose the bill while just 33 percent endorse it, according to a Forum Research poll provided exclusively to VICE News. That's an 11-point swing over Forum's last poll, which was conducted for VICE two weeks prior, when only a bare majority of those who were aware of the bill opposed it. The news gets worse for Harper, as one of the biggest drops in support for the bill is amongst his own kind. Of those who said they support the Conservative Party, 72 percent support Bill C-51—that's a nine point drop since Forum asked earlier in March. Meanwhile, 13 percent say they disapprove of the bill. The poll was conducted after marathon committee hearings took place, in which the Conservative majority shot down hundreds of amendments to the bill. Vice News (2015-04-09)

Ex-spy watchdog Plunkett calls CSIS civilian review 'a joke'

Eva Plunkett is not prone to hyperbole. The former inspector-general for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service – the public servant who was, once upon a time, the Public Safety minister's eyes and ears inside Canada's spy agency — chooses her words very carefully. Plunkett spent nearly a decade as IG before Stephen Harper shuttered the office in 2012 because she was doing too good a job — routinely issuing reports that diplomatically raised the alarm about CSIS's questionable conduct. She took the work seriously. So when Plunkett says that the government's civilian oversight body, the Security Intelligence Review Committee, is a "joke" — take it to the bank. She knows what she's talking about. And nobody knows better how vacuous the assurances offered by Prime Minister Harper and Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney about the draconian powers CSIS is getting under Bill C-51 truly are. iPolitics (2015-04-10)

Last word on C-51

I wasn't going to write another word on Harper's Bill C-51, because all seemed to me to have been said. 1) It's an appalling Bill, creating an unaccountable political police with wide powers—a piece of legislation clearly designed to stamp out civil dissent; and 2) With a few cosmetic changes, it's already a done deal. But a formidable new expert has now been heard from, and any waverers need to listen. Before getting to that, though, here's a brief resume of the proposed Conservative amendments to C-51 as reported in the media. Removing the word "lawful" from the Bill seemingly clarifies that acts of peaceful civil disobedience, trespass, and (in Montreal) exercising the former right of free assembly to protest government austerity, will not be considered "terrorist" acts. The Bill will now emphasize that CSIS has no power to make arrests. Information-sharing will be restricted, but we don't yet know to what degree. Rabble.ca (2015-04-11)

Indigenous Bar Association Concerned over C-51

The Indigenous Bar Association shares this message today to give voice to its deep concerns with Bill C-51 for all Canadians and for Indigenous peoples in particular. The IBA is a national association comprised of Indigenous (First Nations, Inuit and Metis) lawyers, legal academics, articling clerks and law students, including graduate and post-graduate law students. The IBA is a not-for-profit federal corporation mandated, amongst other things, to promote the advancement of legal and social justice for Indigenous peoples in Canada, as well as the reform of laws and policies affecting Indigenous peoples. Our concerns with Bill C-51, even given its proposed amendments, are manifold. We share the concerns given voice by many other groups, including that if passed into law, Bill C-51 would: Unduly privilege economic interests over social, political and legal interests; Dramatically mobilize Canada's security and surveillance apparatuses without protecting the fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadians. On the contrary, the erosion of Canadian civil and political rights appears as the condition that allows for the vast expansion in the state's powers of security and surveillance; Serve to criminalize dissent. Worse, it would serve to move claims that have always been contemplated under Canadian law within the discourse of criminality into the discourse of terror; Allow for the mass violation of the privacy rights of Canadians via increased powers of state surveillance and information sharing programs and protocols; Expose lawfully acting Canadians to a risk of arbitrary detention by state security agents. As a more general matter, the Bill as drafted is intentionally so overly-broad and ambiguous in its scope as to seriously challenge the current government's commitment to the principle of legality. Yet that principle is one which lies at the heart of Canadian constitutionalism. Bill C-51 fundamentally misrepresents the necessary balance between freedom and security. Net News Ledger (2015-04-11)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was minimal with no items of note.

General Coverage / couverture générale

NIL

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

Since Tuesday April 7, 2015, social media coverage on Bill C-51 remained fairly extensive with approximately 11, 371 social media posts.

The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

There were approximately 9849 tweets, 1047 Facebook posts, 127 blog posts, 135 news site posts, 64 comment posts and 213 other posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the week:

There was no particular peak of note during this period.

Tweets of note :

Justin Ling

Today's Daily VICE features me sitting down with Thomas Mulcair and Steven Blaney on #C51. Plus: new polling data. vice.com/en_ca/read/daily-vice (2015-04-09)

CBCOttawa

Sentries back on duty at Nat. War Memorial. DND paying @OttawaPolice $435,000/yr to protect guards. #cbcott #ottnews (2015-04-09)

CdnPress

UPDATE: Ottawa police to guard sentries at National War Memorial after deadly attack <http://bit.ly/1lw2GNM> (2015-04-09)

OpenMedia.ca

Movement to #StopC51 is bridging political divides <http://ow.ly/LpuTg> #RejectFear (2015-04-09)

rabble.ca

First Nations to Parliament on Bill #C51: I don't think so. <http://buff.ly/1CzAZv4> via @Pam_Palmater #cdnpoli (2015-04-09)

OpenMedia.ca

.@Mozilla Help us stop secret police #BillC51 - join the Thunderclap <http://ow.ly/LsfQF> #RejectFear (2015-04-10)

PaulJournet

Les leçons oubliées de l'affaire Arar et le danger du projet de loi conservateur sur le terrorisme

http://plus.lapresse.ca/screens/d913e159-0437-4296-99f3-b875dde5f504%7C_0.html ... (2015-04-10)

ipoliticsca

Ex-spy watchdog Plunkett calls CSIS civilian review 'a joke' | iPolitics <http://www.ipolitics.ca/2015/04/10/ex-spy-watchdog-plunkett-calls-csis-civilian-review-a-joke/> ... (2015-04-10)

theprovince

Sentries back on guard, and under guard, at National War Memorial <http://theprovince.com/1Ei6vni> #canada (2015-04-10)

TorontoStar

Tony Burman: The Tories' Anti-Terrorism Act only serves to place us in more jeopardy. #CDNpoli

<http://on.thestar.com/1ym1ole> (2015-04-11)

OpenMedia.ca

The more Canadians learn about secret police Bill C-51, the more they want the government to scrap it.

<http://ow.ly/LsCWB> (2015-04-12)

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Forthcoming Anti-Terrorism Legislation | Législation à venir contre le terrorisme
2015-01-28

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding the forthcoming anti-terrorism legislation continued to receive a moderate amount of media coverage and generally remained balanced. However, of note was an opinion piece written by Wesley Wark who was slightly critical in his assessments. Wark states that, in his opinion, the federal government has “over-sold” the upcoming legislation “both in terms of scale and legislative overhaul” and that the legislation will most likely be a “fine-tuning” of already established legal powers.
- According to comments made by Jason Kenney, Minister of Employment and Social Development, one objective of the upcoming bill will be to diminish the incitement of terrorism while not diminishing the legitimate expression of political or religious views. During the evening, the Canadian Press reported that the upcoming legislation will create a new Criminal Code provision making it a crime to encourage someone to carry out a terrorist attack.
- Global News reported this evening that one component of the upcoming legislation will allow police to detain an individual suspected of terrorist activity for a longer period of time without having to lay a charge.
- In an interview today, Canada’s Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien stated that he would like to see enhanced transparency and oversight provisions incorporated into Friday’s anti-terrorism legislation. Mr. Therrien also stated that he is concerned about the potential for information to be shared of non-suspects.
- On the topic of the forthcoming legislation, Liberal Public Safety Critic Wayne Easter stated that the Liberal party remains “very open to what the government will propose” though will only support the bill if it contains additional oversight provisions for security agencies.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

- “Our objective is not to diminish legitimate expression of political or religious views, but rather incitement to terrorism - and there is a fine line there that the legislation will try to draw.” ~ Employment Minister, Jason Kenney
- “Information sharing regarding whom? Regarding people who are suspected of terrorist activities, or the sharing of information about other Canadians who are not suspected of anything in order to identify a national security threat... Travellers crossing the border, ordinary Canadians crossing the border. Will there be greater information sharing about them from the border agency to the secret service?" ~ Privacy Commissioner of Canada, Daniel Therrien

- « Oui, on peut donner plus de pouvoir aux agences de sécurité et aux forces policières, mais comment va-t-on déterminer quels propos sont permis et quels autres sont interdits? » ~ Amnistie internationale, Béatrice Vaugrante
- « On a entendu parler de policiers qui savaient qu'il y avait des individus qui se radicalisaient, mais ils n'avaient pas les ressources nécessaires pour effectuer de la surveillance. » ~ Porte-parole du NPD, Rosane Doré-Lefebvre

Print Media / Médias imprimés

Feds outline more details of upcoming anti-terror bill

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney assures the government's new terror bill expected Friday will be in "full compliance with Canadian law." The bill is expected to include provisions to allow "preventative arrests" and criminalize the "promotion of terror" -- measures law enforcement has indicated would help detain potential terrorists before a crime is actually committed. Asked to explain how the government will criminalize the promotion of terrorism, Blaney said the Criminal Code already contains provisions on "supporting hatred or violence." "It is really criminal to incite terror, to support terrorism or to encourage to use violence to achieve your means," Blaney said. Liberal public safety critic Wayne Easter says it's worth examining whether Canada actually needs new laws or whether it could simply make use of what already exists. "One key question is why have current laws not been utilized to the full extent we think they ought to be," Easter told reporters Tuesday, following a meeting of the House public safety committee. QMI Agency, 30 (Edmonton Sun, Calgary Sun, Kingston Whig-Standard, London Free Press); Le Droit (Le Devoir); La Presse

Limits on free speech are risky business

An opinion piece states, "When the Harper Conservative government introduces its anti-terror legislation later this week, it will walk a fine line. The legislation is needed, because the threat of terror, especially homegrown terror, is all too real, as we have seen first hand. Most of the omnibus anti-terror bill builds on existing frameworks, giving police and security officials expanded powers and making it easier to share information - including about all citizens, not just those suspected of terror links. But there is new ground here as well, and that's what we should be watching. A key feature of the new law is a measure that draws a line between free expression and endorsing terrorism. Simply put, people who verbally promote or glorify terrorism could be charged under the act. It's easy to see how this will work in extreme cases, for example, where someone praises terror attacks like the ones that happened in Canada last year. But what about in more subjective cases? Any time we limit free speech, even for a good reason, we need to tread carefully. This is no exception." Hamilton Spectator, A10

Online Media / Médias en ligne

Conservatives looking to detain suspected terrorists longer without charge

The Conservative government is considering changes to Canada's anti-terror laws, that would allow the police to detain a suspected terrorist for a longer period for time without charges. Sources tell Global News the change is expected to be part of the Conservative government's overhaul of anti-terror laws, expected to be announced this Friday. Currently, if police believe someone is planning to commit a terrorist act, they can arrest the individual without laying a charge. Officers then have 72 hours to come up with sufficient evidence, otherwise the suspect must be released. The new rules under consideration would allow police to appear before a judge and seek two additional 48-hour extensions, allowing them more time to continue their investigation. Global News

New Conservative anti terror bill needs to walk a fine line, Kenney says

There's a fine line between legitimate religious expression and inciting terrorism, says Conservative cabinet minister Jason Kenney. It's that line the government will be walking - carefully - in its new anti-terrorism bill, expected to be unveiled Friday. The bill is the government's long-awaited legislative response to two attacks carried out on Canadian soldiers last fall by men believed to have been influenced by radical Islam - attacks the government considers acts of terrorism. Though police already have the power to go after those suspecting of being on the verge of committing terrorist attacks, the new bill is partially aimed at stopping the seeds of those attacks from germinating altogether. "Our objective is not to diminish legitimate expression of political or religious views, but rather incitement to terrorism - and there is a fine line there that the legislation will try to draw," Kenney said in an interview Tuesday. "Obviously there are some malevolent religious influences that can add to the process of radicalization towards violent extremism, and we have to be extremely mindful of that." How to effectively combat radicalization is a struggle facing governments and security agencies the world over. The RCMP is currently rolling out its own strategy, which includes working more closely with community groups in order to identify and divert people who may be susceptible to extreme views that could eventually lead to violence. Canadian Press (iPolitics); La Presse Canadienne (La Presse)

Une loi criminalisera la promotion du terrorisme

Le gouvernement fédéral déposera vendredi une loi qui rendrait criminelle l'incitation à commettre des attaques terroristes. Selon les informations obtenues par La Presse Canadienne, le gouvernement prévoit créer une nouvelle disposition dans le Code criminel pour punir les extrémistes qui encourageraient les autres à perpétrer des attentats terroristes. Selon une source gouvernementale, les attaques du mois d'octobre au pays ont prouvé qu'une telle mesure était nécessaire. La nouvelle clause ne s'appliquerait toutefois pas à la simple apologie du terrorisme. Par exemple, une personne qui publierait sur Internet des images d'une explosion ne serait pas arrêtée. Mais si ladite vidéo appelait à mener une attaque semblable au Canada, il s'agirait là d'un acte criminel. La Presse Canadienne (Journal Métro); Canadian Press (Times Colonist)

Les vidéos menaçant le Canada deviendront criminelles

Dans ses démarches pour renforcer les lois pour contrer la menace terroriste au pays, le gouvernement Harper va rendre criminelles la publication et la propagation de vidéos où le Canada est identifié comme cible. Une vidéo comme celle où l'on voit le djihadiste canadien John Maguire en appeler aux armes contre le Canada sera maintenant spécifiquement visée par le droit criminel. Parmi les mesures qui seront présentées vendredi pour contrer la promotion du terrorisme, une publication comme celle d'une vidéo où l'on demande de perpétrer des attaques au Canada en général, soit une forme d'encouragement actif, serait désormais visée par le droit pénal. Une source conservatrice indique que, selon les mesures actuelles, il est impossible d'accuser un individu si la nature des attaques n'est pas précise. TVA Nouvelles

Federal government's new terror law concerns privacy watchdog

Canada's privacy watchdog is expressing early concerns about information sharing provisions expected in the Conservatives' new anti-terror laws, as Prime Minister Stephen Harper meets with Toronto police chiefs to win support for the new measures. Daniel Therrien said he's been briefed on the government's new anti-terror bill, to be tabled in Parliament on Friday, and will be closely watching the wording of provisions aimed at increasing information sharing among government agencies. "Information sharing regarding whom? Regarding people who are suspected of terrorist activities, or the sharing of information about other Canadians who are not suspected of anything in order to identify a national security threat," Therrien said. "Travellers crossing the border, ordinary Canadians crossing the border. Will there be greater information sharing about them from the border agency to the secret service?" Toronto Star

Liberals say they're open to upcoming Tory terror bill

The Liberals say they will only support the government's upcoming terror bill if it includes oversight mechanisms for security agencies. Despite the government's caginess on its contents, information leaked to media indicates it will broadly expand police surveillance powers. It will also outlaw the nebulous-sounding "promotion of terror." The bill is expected to be tabled Friday. Speaking earlier this week following a meeting of the House public safety committee, Liberal public safety critic Wayne Easter said those laws already exist - from preventative arrests and peace bonds to outlawing anyone who's gone abroad to participate in terrorism from trying to return. On Wednesday, Easter said the Liberals remain "very open to what the government will propose." But the Liberals have a "serious caveat on this bill," he said, "and that is that there needs to be proper oversight of security agencies." Without it, Easter said privacy rights could too easily be breached. Sun News Network

Wesley Wark: The anti-terrorism legislation has likely been oversold

An opinion piece states, "The Canadian government has been beating the drum about the need for new counter-terrorism powers since the October, 2014 terror attacks in Quebec and Ottawa. A legislative package is finally scheduled to be tabled in Parliament on Friday. The substance of this new legislation has been subject to some intermittent and generalized remarks by our political leaders, reaching a slight crescendo in recent days, and by wider media speculation. To no one's surprise, there have been no substantive leaks. This is not the style of the Harper government. The closer we get to the birth date, the more hinting there has been from ministers. This can be seen as a calculated effort to prepare the ground for what is bound to be an intense political debate in Parliament about the merits of any extension to Canada's significant suite of anti-terror laws, originally passed in 2001. The broad lineaments of that debate are already clear, even without sight of the new proposals... Prediction is always a hostage to fortune, especially on the eve of the unveiling of the legislation itself. But let me make some "reasonable" predictions about the anti-terror legislation in terms of what it will and won't contain, and the historical baggage of some of its contents." Ottawa Citizen

Lutte au terrorisme: les policiers et les espions n'ont pas assez de ressources, selon le NPD

Alors que le gouvernement conservateur continue de dire que les policiers et agents du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) ont besoin de plus de pouvoirs pour stopper les terroristes, l'opposition est d'avis que les policiers et les espions ont seulement besoin de plus de moyens. «On a entendu parler de policiers qui savaient qu'il y avait des individus qui se radicalisaient, mais ils n'avaient pas les ressources nécessaires pour effectuer de la surveillance», a expliqué Rosane Doré-Lefebvre, porte-parole du NPD en matière de sécurité publique. L'opposition demande plus d'argent pour le SCRS et la GRC, au moment où le gouvernement peine à équilibrer son budget. Alors que certains s'inquiètent des ressources allouées aux agents de renseignements, le réseau Global a mis la main sur les frais de déplacement du directeur du SCRS, Michel Coulombe. «Ça n'a pas de bon sens que les voyages du directeur du SCRS coûtent plus cher que ceux du ministre. Une chambre d'hôtel à 750 $ la nuit, c'est un peu exagéré», s'est indignée Mme Doré-Lefebvre en Chambre. Le président du Conseil du trésor, Tony Clement, a déjà demandé une révision des dépenses du directeur du SCRS. Journal de Montréal

Anti-terrorism bill built around an attack that still raises questions

Was Michael Zehaf-Bibeau a terrorist or not? Canadians still don't really know. In the three months since the attack on the National War Memorial and Parliament Hill, government leaders have repeatedly declared Zehaf-Bibeau to be a violent jihadist. Prime Minister Stephen Harper mentioned it again during a campaign-style speech in Orléans on Sunday. "Jihadist terrorism is not a future possibility, it is a present reality," he said, referring to October's attacks in both Ottawa and Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu, Que. "Violent jihadism is not simply a danger somewhere else. It seeks to harm us here, through horrific acts like ... shooting a soldier from behind as he stands guard at a war memorial." Yet politicians and police have tendered no clear evidence to underpin their claims. On Friday, the question becomes more important. The Conservatives are to table anti-terrorism legislation directly inspired by the events of Oct. 22. Harper has said the new laws will increase the state's powers to monitor, arrest and detain suspected terrorists. Knowing whether Zehaf-Bibeau, 32, was a terrorist driven by Islamist rage would help in understanding whether the proposed new laws are necessary or wise – or, as the opposition NDP charges, whether the legislation is more about political opportunism in an election year. Ottawa Citizen

Laïcité: Drainville interpelle Couillard

Bernard Drainville a indiqué mardi que le premier ministre devrait condamner et combattre le fondamentalisme de toutes les religions avec des lois et des outils comme des balises pour la laïcité de l'État. «Il ne faut pas reculer sur la protection de la liberté de religion, mais ce que je dis c'est que l'intégrisme religieux qui veut imposer sa loi religieuse, sur des lois votées démocratiquement dans des parlements, ça n'est pas acceptable, a-t-il dit. Tu ne peux pas dire, comme premier ministre du Québec: ça fait partie des choix personnels. Ça et baisser les bras, ça et renoncer, ça et dire: finalement, je l'accepte, il n'y a pas grand-chose à faire avec ça. 'Come on M. Couillard, come on', vous êtes premier ministre, tenez-vous debout.» Les porte-paroles du Parti libéral du Canada et du Nouveau Parti démocratique en matière de sécurité publique s'opposent à l'idée des conservateurs d'imposer la prison à vie à des criminels sans qu'ils ne puissent réclamer de libération conditionnelle. Ils ont peur que cette mesure aggrave l'état des criminels et mette en danger le personnel des prisons. Ils prônent donc la réhabilitation des détenus, même ceux reconnus coupables de meurtres en série et d'agressions sexuelles sur des enfants. Le gouvernement présentera vendredi une nouvelle mesure dans sa politique antiterroriste. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, assure que les libertés civiles seront respectées même si les conservateurs légifèrent pour contrer la promotion du terrorisme. L'Étoile du Lac

CSE tracks millions of downloads daily: Snowden documents

Canada's electronic spy agency sifts through millions of videos and documents downloaded online every day by people around the world, as part of a sweeping bid to find extremist plots and suspects, CBC News has learned. Details of the Communications Security Establishment project dubbed "Levitation" are revealed in a document obtained by U.S. whistleblower Edward Snowden and recently released to CBC News. Under Levitation, analysts with the electronic eavesdropping service can access information on about 10 to 15 million uploads and downloads of files from free websites each day, the document says. "Every single thing that you do - in this case uploading/downloading files to these sites - that act is being archived, collected and analyzed," says Ron Deibert, director of the University of Toronto-based internet security think-tank Citizen Lab, who reviewed the document. In the document, a PowerPoint presentation written in 2012, the CSE analyst who wrote it jokes about being overloaded with innocuous files such as episodes of the musical TV series Glee in their hunt for terrorists. CBC analyzed the document in collaboration with the U.S. news website The Intercept, which obtained it from Snowden. The presentation provides a rare glimpse into Canada's cyber-sleuthing capabilities and its use of its spy partners' immense databases to track the online traffic of millions of people around the world, including Canadians. That glimpse may be of even greater interest now that the Harper government plans to introduce new legislation increasing the powers of Canada's security agencies. CBC News

Montreal teen allegedly committed robbery to help terrorist group

A Montreal teenager facing two terrorism-related charges linked to a robbery will have a trial date set next month. The 15-year-old appeared Wednesday in youth court, where his lawyer was granted a request to postpone proceedings until Feb. 16. Federal prosecutors allege he committed a robbery for the benefit of an unspecified terrorist organization. Authorities also say the adolescent is charged with planning to leave Canada to participate in the activities of a terrorist group abroad. The Harper government is about to introduce new laws which the prime minister says are designed to help authorities stop planned attacks and prevent terrorists from travelling and recruiting others. Canadian Press (CTV News); La Presse; Huffington Post

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding the forthcoming anti-terrorism legislation remained moderate.

Of note:

CBC News - Power & Politics reported on the Communication Security Establishment's Project Levitation, which is used to track terrorist activity online. Following this CBC News interviewed Daniel Therrien, the Privacy Commissioner of Canada regarding Canadians concerns about online privacy. Mr. Therrien was also asked questions regarding the upcoming anti-terrorism legislation to be tabled Friday. Rough Transcript

Social Media / Médias sociaux

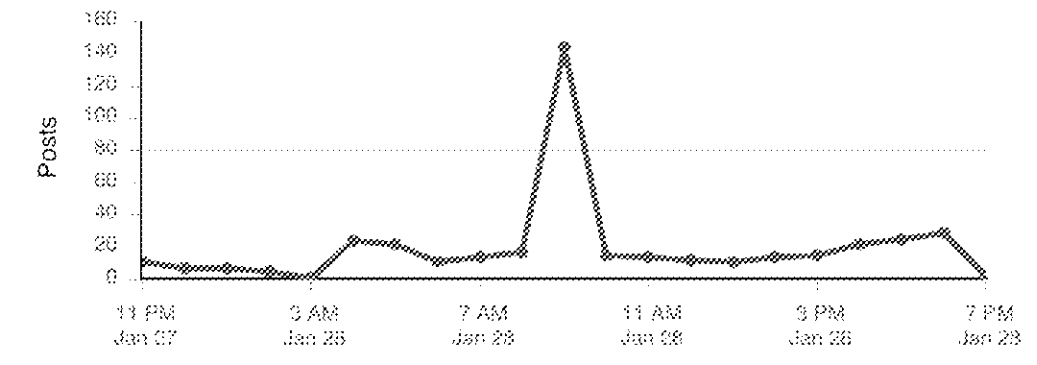

There have been approximately 422 social media posts today regarding the forthcoming anti-terrorism legislation.

The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

In total, there were approximately 235 tweets, 116 Facebook posts, 42 news site posts, 16 comments and 13 blog posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the day:

Coverage peaked from approximately 08:00 ET – 09:00 ET with numerous re-tweets of the following tweet linking to a Press Progress article from January 26th:

faisalkutty

5 things to keep an eye on in Harper's anti-terrorism bill http://www.pressprogress.ca/en/post/5-things-keep-eye-harpers-anti-terrorism-bill ... via @pressprogress

Tweets of note:

OttawaCitizen

Anti-terrorism bill built around an attack that still raises questions #cdnpoli <http://ow.ly/I7jGC>

globalnews

EXCLUSIVE: Conservatives looking to detain suspected terrorists longer without charge
<http://ow.ly/I7nZA>

tvanouvelles

Pour lutter contre le terrorisme, les vidéos menaçant le Canada deviendront criminelles
<http://bit.ly/1DI9XLh>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Lift of a publication ban / Levée d'interdit de publication
June 10, 2015 – June 13, 2016

Table of Contents / Table des matières

OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE

SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES

PRINT AND ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS ET EN LIGNE

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

The lifting of a publication ban on a Montreal trial garnered moderate amount of print media coverage during the monitoring period. Articles were positive in tone with regards to the ability to report the details of the case.

On June 10, Superior Court Justice André Vincent lifted a publication ban on the court proceedings, regarding Salvatore Montagna's murder, revealing a web of criminal activity and state-of-the-art surveillance technology. Justice Vincent rejected requests from both the Crown and the defense to extend the publication bans, and ordered that nearly all the information shall become public. Media also reported that the RCMP had warrants to intercept the BlackBerry PIN-to-PIN encrypted messages sent from the seven men accused of murder.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

"What we're seeing now is ... the best evidence of people conspiring to commit a crime is lost to us. And that's what we call 'going dark'." Chief Supt. Jeff Adam oversees the RCMP's Technical Investigations Services

"Technology is advancing very quickly and new encryption methods are coming out. And the bad guys are starting to use them (...) [Police] don't have budgets, they don't always have the right people ... We are seeing a trend where law enforcement and the government sector are being shut out in the new evolution in encryption world, absolutely. It's a battle." Daniel Tobok of Cytelligence

"I think we see the tip of the iceberg because police, by nature, are secretive about their capabilities (...) What people don't appreciate [is] that they are essentially living in this giant visible sphere of digital information. And it's there forever" criminal defence lawyer Alan Gold

Print and Online Media / Médias imprimés et en ligne

Mob violence, cutting-edge technology - The lifting of a publication ban on a Montreal murder trial exposes web of criminal activity and state-of-the-art surveillance

The morning that Salvatore Montagna, one-time boss of the Bonanno crime family, was shot three times and died on a snowy river bank outside Montreal, his archenemy Raynald Desjardins was having breakfast elsewhere in town with his daughter and chatting about her wedding photo album. Shortly after the killing, Mr. Desjardins sent a terse BlackBerry message to his associate, Vittorio Mirarchi: "Done." "Perfect," came the reply. Police who were wiretapping Mr. Desjardins's mobile phones immediately suspected he was behind the 2011 murder. The next evening - Nov. 25, 2011 - an RCMP sergeant arrived outside Mr. Desjardins's house with a portable device that tracked cellular signals and tried to identify what other mobile phones were inside. It was part of a 16-month surveillance operation that led police to charge Mr. Desjardins and seven others in connection with the murder of Mr. Montagna. Globe and Mail, A4; Journal de Montréal (2016-06-11)

Secret messages behind a mob hit - Texts revealed in Montagna case after judge partially lifts ban

In the months before he was gunned down in cold blood, Mafioso Salvatore Montagna was being hunted by a team of people who knew almost every move he made while he was being betrayed by a cloned smartphone. The detail is one of many contained in the evidence gathered in the wake of Montagna's murder, on Nov. 24, 2011, that had been subject to a publication ban for years until Superior Court Justice André Vincent partially lifted the order during a hearing at the Laval courthouse Friday. Montagna was the upstart within the Mafia in Montreal, arriving in 2009 after being deported from the United States. He apparently chose to reside here to take advantage of the fact that Vito Rizzuto, the longtime leader of the Mafia in Montreal, was serving a 10-year sentence in the U.S., and the organization that bore his family's name was weakened in his absence. What Montagna likely did not factor into his plans was that just months after he arrived in Montreal, Raynald Desjardins, 62, was freed of conditions imposed by the Parole Board of Canada, after serving jail time, that had prevented him from re-taking his high stature among Montreal's mobsters. Desjardins was sentenced to 15 years in 1994 for plotting to smuggle cocaine into Canada. Montreal Gazette, A10 (2016-06-11)

Canadian Cops Lose Fight to Keep Details of Their High-Tech Surveillance Powers Secret

Federal police in Canada may have lost the battle, but won the war, when it comes to keeping secret their ability to track cellphones, intercept messages, and decrypt messages sent by BlackBerry phones. VICE News and Motherboard first reported in April that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) had obtained BlackBerry's global encryption key, and had used it to read millions of messages sent between seven men accused of murder, and a litany of other alleged mobsters who are accused of drug trafficking, kidnapping, and arson. Since then, we have fought to keep this information in the public domain. But since then, Crown prosecutors have been fighting to put the genie back in the bottle, asserting that a vague, open-ended publication ban would forbid media from reporting the details of a case that, by the RCMP's own admission, involved the largest use ever of PIN to PIN interception technique in a major North American investigation. On Friday, a judge in Laval, Quebec, rejected requests from both the Crown and the defense to extend the publication bans, and ordered that nearly all the information shall become public. The Crown, faced with representatives from the media filing to have the information rendered public, eventually retreated, and asked for only sections of the documents to be kept secret. That the Crown was even seeking to extend the publication ban even after securing convictions is something "we don't normally see," said lawyer Christian Leblanc, who represented VICE and other media's push back against the government's efforts to suppress this information. VICE News (2016-06-10)

The RCMP Surveilled Thousands of Innocent Canadians for a Decade

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police has been using mass surveillance devices known as IMSI catchers, in public, for a decade. In that time, the police have indiscriminately surveilled potentially thousands of Canadians without their knowledge, and stored that information for later use. Motherboard and VICE News obtained more than 3,000 pages of court documents that were produced as part of a case centering around a 2010 RCMP drug bust that unveiled a Montreal mafia slaying, codenamed Project Clemenza. Thanks to these documents, Canadians are finally getting a peek into the RCMP's use of mobile device identifiers—the police's term for IMSI catchers. On Friday, some of the men who pleaded guilty in the case that sprang from Clemenza are being sentenced in a Quebec court. Motherboard (2016-06-10)

Mafia montréalaise: le meurtre d'un aspirant parrain décrypté

Le caïd Raynald Desjardins et sept complices ont illégalement espionné un aspirant parrain de la mafia montréalaise tout en orchestrant son meurtre, à l'automne 2011. Ils ignoraient toutefois que leurs propres communications étaient interceptées à leur insu par la police. Le Journal peut maintenant révéler publiquement la preuve amassée lors de cette enquête historique, menée par la Sûreté du Québec et la Gendarmerie royale du Canada, qui a permis d'élucider l'assassinat de Salvatore Montagna, abattu à Charlemagne, le 24 novembre 2011. Vendredi, le juge André Vincent, de la Cour supérieure, a levé les interdits de publication qui étaient en vigueur depuis le début de cette affaire. Journal de Montréal (2016-06-10)

The secret messages behind a Montreal mob hit

In the months before he was gunned down in cold blood, Mafioso Salvatore Montagna was being hunted by a team of people who knew almost every move he made while he was being betrayed by a cloned smartphone. The detail is one of many contained in the evidence gathered in the wake of Montagna's murder, on Nov. 24, 2011, that had been subject to a publication ban for years until a Superior Court judge partially lifted the order during a hearing at the Laval courthouse on Friday. Montagna was the upstart within the Mafia in Montreal, arriving in 2009 after being deported from the United States. He apparently chose to reside here to take advantage of the fact that Vito Rizzuto, the longtime leader of the Mafia in Montreal, was serving a 10-year sentence in the U.S., and the organization that bore his family's name was weakened in his absence. Montreal Gazette (2016-06-10)

RCMP's BlackBerry-cracking methods could be revealed in Quebec court

A Quebec court could today pull back the curtain on secretive police techniques, including how the RCMP intercepted BlackBerry text messages to prove a murder conspiracy plot, as a judge considers whether to lift a publication ban in a case involving the Montreal Mafia. The case stems from Project Clemenza, a police operation that resulted in scores of organized crime arrests in 2014. At the time, police announced they had intercepted more than one million BlackBerry messages tied to allegations of drug trafficking, kidnapping, arson, weapons and other violent offences. () Chief Supt. Jeff Adam, who oversees the RCMP's Technical Investigations Services, declined to discuss with CBC News the specific methods used. But given rapid changes in technology and public concern in the post-Snowden era, as mobile developers move toward more secure "end-to-end" encryption, he says investigators are finding their jobs increasingly difficult. "What we're seeing now is the best evidence of people conspiring to commit a crime is lost to us. And that's what we call 'going dark,'" Adam said. CBC News (2016-06-10)

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Wednesday, November 02, 2016 10:47 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: Montreal Gazette: Whistleblower Edward Snowden says spying on reporters is a 'radical attack on the free press'

Whistleblower Edward Snowden says spying on reporters is a 'radical attack on the free press'

Montreal Gazette
2016-11-02, 22:17 ET

To some, whistleblower Edward Snowden is a traitor. To others, he's a hero.

Whichever way you see him, Snowden – a former CIA employee and contractor for the National Security Agency (NSA) who is responsible for the largest national security breach in U.S. history – is a pivotal figure in any debate pertaining to the issue of government surveillance.

He is one of the most wanted fugitives in the world after leaking thousands of classified NSA documents to a few journalists in 2013. His disclosures revealed, among other things, that U.S. telecommunications companies were providing the NSA with virtually all their customers' phone records and that the NSA has a tool to search nearly everything a user does on the Internet.

So Snowden's talk at McGill University Wednesday night, as the city is in an uproar over police spying on La Presse reporter Patrick Lagacé and possibly much more widespread spying as well, was timely and promised to ignite an already fierce debate on authorities overstepping their bounds and cyber spying on their own citizens.

Students lined up across the length of the campus to see him and McGill officials had to scramble to set up overflow rooms. When Snowden's giant image finally showed up on the screen, almost 90 minutes late, he was greeted with thunderous applause.

Here's what Snowden had to say, from his hideout in Russia, on some important issues:

Montreal spying scandal: "The story about Montreal police spying on a journalist for the reason of uncovering sources is a radical attack on the free press," he said. "It unsettles me. It's a threat to the traditional model of our democracy." Now, he said, local police can decide that if they don't like a certain reporter, they can ask a judge to monitor their phones. It used to be such measures were reserved for real criminal threats; now they have been repurposed to monitor journalists.

The Internet age and surveillance: We're all being watched and that's what drove Snowden to be a whistleblower. Months before he leaked the classified documents, he heard the head of the NSA outright lie, under oath, about the use of surveillance techniques. "Surveillance technologies have outpaced democratic controls," he said. Surveillance used to be too expensive to use much. Now, he said, one guy at the NSA can track with extreme precision a large number of people. "It's become technologically and financially feasible to track people."

Intelligence agencies and authorities: How do we trust intelligence agencies and officials to operate fairly? We can't, he said. Governments should establish judicial bodies with independent prosecutorial discretion to monitor these agencies and to prosecute any illegalities. "The only thing that will ensure they play fairly is the threat of criminal sanctions," said Snowden. They need to be held accountable. And the law has been failing as a guarantor of our rights, he said.

The U.S. election: He's very disappointed that the United States is going through an entire election cycle which has focused on the personalities of the candidates – with no mention of the Constitution. In any case, people should be cautious about putting all their hopes on any one political figure because they rarely deliver what they promise, Snowden said. "You can't rely on others to do the things we must do ourselves," he said. "If you want a better country, you're going to have to build it yourself."

Snowden said that while he gets a lot of attention when it comes to surveillance issues, he considers himself the least important part of the story.

Anyone who is thinking of him or his future is missing the bigger story: "What is happening to all of us."

Sent to: !!INTERNAL; !!INTERNAL 2

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Tuesday, November 29, 2016 12:07 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: Motherboard: Canada's Police Allowed Journalists to 'Embed' to Argue For More Surveillance

Canada's Police Allowed Journalists to 'Embed' to Argue For More Surveillance

Motherboard

Kate Lunau

2016-11-29, 11:09 EST

Police in Canada have been making their case in the media for greater powers to crack encryption and other digital privacy measures, which they say are increasingly stymying investigations into criminal activities online.

To demonstrate the need for expanded powers, federal police recently gave "unprecedented access" to two of the country's biggest media outlets. The RCMP allowed journalists from the Toronto Star and the CBC to access 10 "top secret" case files, which were essentially vetted summaries prepared by police, intended to illustrate the roadblocks that investigators say they are coming up against.

The CBC/Star five-part investigative series, which was published in November, sparked widespread debate about police powers and privacy online. In Motherboard, critics accused the police of using the media to spark "moral panic" about encryption. Talk from RCMP officials about criminals "going dark" mirrors language used by the FBI in the US, which has had its own debate about these issues going back for years.

Canada is in the midst of a public consultation on a green paper on national security that highlights four proposals, including one that would give police "warrantless access" to Canadians' basic internet subscriber information. Police argue that they need expanded digital powers to keep us all safe from crime. Privacy advocates, on the other hand, say that the police already have wide-ranging capabilities to surveil Canadians, maybe more now than ever. And encryption, of course, isn't just used by criminals.

The CBC/Star investigation comes at a charged time, amid revelations that spies here had been illegally storing Canadians' metadata for a decade; that police in Quebec had been surveilling journalists in the province; and amid public consultations on Canada's controversial Bill C-51, which has been sold as an anti-terrorism measure.

In a wide-ranging conversation with Motherboard, Robert Cribb of the Toronto Star and Dave Seglins of the CBC talked about how they came to "embed" with the police, and their goals in this investigation.

This interview has been edited for length and clarity.

Motherboard: I want to start off by asking both of you what prompted this joint investigation.

Robert Cribb: I've been engaging with police on this now for more than a year and a half, and repeatedly trying to get to the place where we can talk about specifics. I believe, until our series, the police response has been rhetorical and amorphous. And that's been a frustration, in the sense that they talk about this risk to public safety, without detailing the evidence. There wasn't any clarity on the table.

Dave Seglins: I went to a conference over a year ago, I think it was late October of 2015. I got invited, because of my Snowden work, [to] a national policing symposium on cybercrime.

This was in Canada?

DS: It was in Toronto [with] policing leaders. It was Chatham House Rule. I was asked to be a panelist. They were all talking about going dark, and the problems they have as police agencies when the public discourse on the issues around police powers is so poor. I had the stage during my panel. They were grilling me on, why doesn't the media do more?

I threw down the gauntlet. I said, look, you want the public to understand this? Bring us inside. Why don't we think about some embeds, or some ways you can get us to see the problems you say you're facing, and the limitations?

So this was the RCMP?

DS: This was the RCMP, but there were several police services. I had follow-up with the Calgary Police Service and we were in discussions for a period about doing an embed with them. There were Ontario Provincial Police, there was Toronto police.

I think it was in February of this year that I called the RCMP. I finally wound up with Jeff Adam, who is the head of Technical Investigation Services, and the lead policy guy on everything including going dark. He said, we're interested in trying to facilitate media access to demonstrate some of these issues, but there's another guy on the doorstep, and that's Rob Cribb at the Star.

Interesting, OK.

DS: Ultimately I said, I know [Rob] by reputation and I've no objection to that. Given the complexity of what they were suggesting, a co-production was perhaps necessary.

Out of that, from what I understand from your reporting, you were given this top-level security clearance to review 10 case files—this "unprecedented access"—to see how digital roadblocks are interfering with police investigations.

I'm just looking at the top of the CBC story. It says, "child predators, drug traffickers and extremists allegedly planning attacks or to join ISIS are escaping the eyes of the law because of increasingly impenetrable encryption and other digital roadblocks, according to this investigation."

Given this restricted access you received, how easy was it to independently vet the role that encryption and other digital roadblocks are playing in going dark, or if there are available workarounds to police?

DS: You have to understand what happened between February and September to understand the editorial decisions we made. First off, we had to fill out these sets of [security clearance] forms. That took four or five months. CSIS had to go through everything.

At that time, the imagining was that we were going to get into one file. We thought, that's great. We kept pushing them, and saying what's coming along.

There's a couple of major problems on providing any kind of access to ongoing files. They have to consider the prospect for prosecution. If they are actively embedding journalists, the defendants and the lawyers will have right to all the disclosure around what that entails.

There's a provision in the wiretapping law that says it's actually a criminal offence for police to reveal the existence of a wiretap. So how do they bring us inside an investigation, when by law, they're forbidden from revealing to us aspects of the investigation? These were major impediments.

Not to mention the possibility of revealing police techniques that haven't seen the light of day, haven't shown up in court files, that they don't want the bad guys to know they're using, because they want them to remain effective.

By the end of summer, it was looking like the impediments were too high.

Then the government tables a green paper in the first week of September and opens a public consultation that's going to close December 1. We go, holy shit. All of the things they're talking about behind the scenes, it looks like the police have had significant input into this green paper and they're floating all of these ideas that we've been learning about and hearing about in the backrooms and in off-the-record conferences.

Do you mean [as you were] preparing to do this eventual embed?

DS: I mean the four policy proposals that the police are advancing. We'd heard inklings of this, and here they are buried in the government's backgrounder. We said, you guys say you want public literacy [and] the public debate, giddyup, get us some cases.

They lined up an interview with the commissioner for us. We lined up interviews with [Director General of RCMP Technical Investigation Services] Jeff Adam, and we did those interviews before we had access to the 10 case files. That was in early October. At the end of it, we said, you guys, how are we not going to be shilling for you unless we give us some hardcore case examples. Okay? That was a very explicit demand of ours. To that point, it was just going to be a policy and positioning exercise.

That is the point where they said, OK. They had prepared case summaries on eight of the cases. There were two that were done verbally. So now we're at your question.

The question is, how could we independently verify. The reality is, we couldn't. We took them as peace officers sworn to tell the truth, and through all our negotiations of trust, that they weren't inventing these out of thin air. I can tell you, the degree to which they were paranoid about our access to even these case summaries gave me confidence that these were based on reality. I don't think they were lying. These were details in those case summaries that we did not publish, but we had extensive background briefings on these where we got to ask questions to understand and critique, and say what's the issue here.

The short summaries that we published, we agreed [on] jointly, and constructed jointly from our notes and from the case summaries we provided. We wrote them because we wanted them to at least be in a narrative bite-size chunk that the public would grasp.

My question wasn't whether you could independently verify that these cases were true, more just whether it's possible to go beyond what the police are saying in this instance and find out if there are other workarounds they have access to.

How good of a sense could you get of that from them, how big of a factor encryption and [other] digital privacy tools were in hampering their investigations and what workarounds are available to them?

RC: It's a question repeated dozens of times throughout the course of these conversations. That's all we can tell you. The reason [these cases] were chosen is because there were roadblocks where [the police] allege that they'd exhausted all opportunities that they had in their arsenal to get access to this material.

Back to your last question about independent verification. Of course, there's no way to independently verify. All but two [of these cases] have never been known to the public, they're not before the courts. How could you possibly?

To this point [Motherboard] raised, [of] why would you let the police cherrypick these cases, well how would you at VICE go about asking for cases that literally you have no knowledge of, that don't exist on the public radar? These are live cases that are under investigation.

So you rely on [the police] to come forward with information, and the vetting is in the interviewing, which took place repeatedly. They had the file sitting in front of them and we pushed them to go further, in terms of detail.

You're talking to two journalists who've been around a pretty long time, and have a pretty good sense of bullshit. And I don't think when both of us walked out of that room, I think it's safe to say these were real cases.

In both series, the ones produced at the CBC and the Star, you interview digital privacy experts, and I noticed the the Star ran an editorial from Tamir Israel and Christopher Parsons arguing that the RCMP is overstating its need for digital surveillance tools. A lot of [privacy] advocates say this is actually a golden age of surveillance.

How do you respond to that—that this is a golden age of surveillance?

RC: I think that all of the discussion around that is a great testament to the series. At the end of the day, we were very open and transparent about our intention, which was to create a needed public debate in this country, which is in its infancy at a time where we're about to make very serious decisions legislatively.

The fact that that editorial was in the paper, and that so much discussion has taken place on this issue—I would suggest to you that that would not be taking place had we not ventured into this unusual and unorthodox method.

DS: I would agree. I would say, look, there's some truth to what Tamir Israel and Chris Parsons are putting forward. Because that's the point. Put out the raw materials that the police are willing to provide as evidence, and let's have at it.

What needs to happen to make sure that Canadians are well enough informed to make good decisions? I know you've been saying this series was an attempt to get there. But I'd like to hear any other thoughts, as well.

DS: Well, forgive me, but three months of work to get this out, that's a first step. I hope you guys engage some of these issues. Pull them apart.

What do you think? What do you think of taking the step to say, OK police, pony up, give us examples. We'll put it to the public. What do you think of what we did here?

I started off by asking you how you would independently vet these ten case files, and that was one of my main questions when I saw this series. As I said, the lede of the CBC story [referenced] a lot of things people worry about: child predators, drug traffickers. These are all fears shared by your readers, and it made me wonder how we independently vet these case files.

RC: Are you concerned about vetting the allegations of the other side as well? Are you equally concerned about vetting the allegations of the Chris Parsons of the world, and those who...

Well of course. I'm a journalist, just like you.

DS: I wouldn't have thrown away my entire professional reputation to do some PR for the police if it didn't merit the public exposure, and if it didn't meet standards of us being able to critique and ask journalistic questions. We're not just regurgitating what they gave us.

The police on the front lines, the people we pay and employ and authorize to fight crime and terrorism, have a job to do. And when they start saying, hold on, we don't exactly have the tools we need, we chose to listen to that and say, OK, provide us with some [examples], let's let the public have a glimpse inside. That wasn't easy for them, it wasn't easy for us. But I think the whole benefit of it is to try to get this debate going.

Sent to: !INTERNAL; !INTERNAL 2; RCMP Breaking News

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Sunday, October 09, 2016 10:21 AM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: Now Toronto: Casualties of war on terror continue to be hounded by Canada's spies (Minister mentioned)

Casualties of war on terror continue to be hounded by Canada's spies - Despite court victories and long-promised amendments to C-51, agencies that work in the shadows like CSIS and the RCMP still wield extraordinary powers over our privacy rights

Now Toronto

Matthew Behrens

2016-10-09, 9:35 ET

As the Trudeau government considers long-promised amendments to the Harper regime's notorious C-51 "anti-terror" legislation, Canadians have been invited to participate in an online consultation ahead of 2017 parliamentary hearings.

This complex policy area includes everything from financing terrorism and "investigative capabilities in a digital world" to "domestic national security information sharing" and "procedures for listing terrorist entities," topics not normally the focus of dinner-table conversation.

But it's more than familiar territory to Mahmoud Jaballah, a former Scarborough school principal who's spent most of the past two decades jailed without charge or under house arrest. Held under Canada's secretive security certificate regime – a Kafkaesque procedure that allows Ottawa to indefinitely detain non-citizens and conduct secret hearings based on undisclosed national security allegations – he was finally cleared in May when Federal Court Judge Dolores Hansen declared the case against him "unreasonable."

In dismissing the case, Hansen also concluded that the government had failed to establish any "serious question of general importance," closing the door to any reconsideration of her verdict.

It was Jaballah's second victory against allegations linking him to Al-Jihad, an Egyptian-based terror group, that had dogged him since he was first arrested in 1999. He was held for seven months at that time, and the dismissal of his certificate later that year was only the second such case to win at the Federal Court.

But he was arrested again in August 2001 when spy agency CSIS offered a new interpretation of a case already dismissed as not credible. The Egyptian refugee, a survivor of the torture chambers of former Egyptian president Hosni Mubarak, spent the next 15 years fighting the security certificate process, which the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional in 2007. The government responded by modifying the process to allow security-cleared lawyers some access to the secret hearings.

This past summer, in addition to connecting with his 10 grandchildren via cellphone selfies and text messaging, which he'd previously been prohibited from accessing, Jaballah booked the family trip he had dreamed of for 20 years. Following a flight out of Pearson Airport, they enjoyed a week-long road trip through Alberta and British Columbia.

"The Rocky Mountains were amazing," he recently enthused, though he was constantly worried about running into moose and other wildlife on the highways. "Canada is a beautiful country. It was good to see some of it finally."

But when the family showed up at the Calgary airport for their return flight home, Jaballah was pulled aside, held for secondary questioning and refused boarding.

"Why do they let me go but they don't let me come back?" he recalls asking airline staff, who simply shrugged and said they had no answers.

He pressed for information, after which he was shown a standardized, one-paragraph form faxed from Ottawa referencing the Secure Air Travel Act (Canada's no-fly list). Consistent with the secretive nature of the program, no reasons were listed. He was forced to head to car rentals and make the 40-hour drive home.

It was a chilling reminder for Jaballah that – despite his court victories and the change in government – agencies that work in the shadows (like CSIS and the RCMP) continue to wield extraordinary powers that affect the privacy rights and liberty of everyone in the country.

While much national discussion and protest erupted when C-51 was first introduced, the Liberals have been slow to revisit some of the new powers granted to spies to “disrupt” perceived security threats. Nor have they addressed fears of taking part in an online survey, since the ability to track IP addresses might bring Mounties to the door of those who express controversial opinions.

Despite those concerns, anyone viewing Snowden, Oliver Stone's new movie about the chilling surveillance documents revealed by the former U.S. National Security Agency contractor, may nonetheless be heading online to express their opinions about bulk collection of emails and cellphone conversations.

Indeed, Canada's own Communications Security Establishment was found in 2014 to have collected massive amounts of such data at airports, cafés and a variety of other WiFi locations, and that agency's review body last July noted a 26-fold increase in intercepted communications. CSIS, too, was recently called on the carpet for engaging in bulk data collection without specific guidelines, and last month suspended the practice pending development of new rules.

On the long drive home from Calgary, Jaballah wondered if such mass surveillance practices may have led to his sudden appearance on the no-fly list. “I try to live normal life, but then I wondered: are they still listening? Did they see the texts I sent that I travelled safely? Did they see the pictures I sent from Alberta?”

When he eventually arrived home, he had to deal with other bad news. Federal lawyers had filed a motion seeking to have his victorious court decision overturned. The Federal Court of Appeal rejected that motion last week, calling the case “closed.” However, Jaballah still must fight against the no-fly listing, which, under C-51, operates via a secretive process almost exactly like that of the security certificate regime.

The residue of cases like Jaballah's provides a potent reminder that, intimidating as C-51's new provisions may be, they often build on pre-existing security measures already wielded mostly against Muslims for the past 15 years.

Jaballah was part of a group known as the Secret Trial Five, all Muslim men subjected to lengthy detention under security certificates. Two are still battling in the courts.

But even winning a case does not stop the hounding by Canada's spies.

Hassan Almrei, a Syrian refugee held almost a decade, largely in solitary confinement, had a court victory in 2009. This did nothing, however, to advance his long-standing application for permanent residence, which remains unresolved to this day. And in a wired world, no amount of cleansing on Google can erase the search hits that remind potential employers of having once been considered a security threat.

Adil Charkaoui, who was freed from his security certificate in 2009 and has since become a Canadian citizen, says that years of anonymous “leaks” to Quebec newspapers and unfounded allegations attempting to tie him to terror threats dog him constantly, making him feel less secure than when he wore a GPS bracelet under house arrest.

The remaining two secret trial certificates – Toronto's Mohammad Mahjoub and Ottawa's Mohamed Harkat – were upheld by the Federal Court and, in the latter's case, by the Supreme Court of Canada, which held an extremely rare secret session as part of its deliberations.

Both men face legal battles to determine whether Canada can deport them to the substantial likelihood of torture in their birth countries (Egypt and Algeria).

Harkat is hoping to forestall that protracted litigation by asking Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale to find that “it is not contrary to the national interest” to allow him to stay. A campaign in support of that request has drawn more than 1,500 support letters, including from Naomi Klein, Stephen Lewis and the Prime Minister's brother, Alexandre Trudeau, who helped bail Harkat out of jail in 2006.

While these cases are often viewed as a response to 9/11, they're certainly not confined to the past. Their precedents instead reflect a future that, even if C-51 were to be repealed, remains troubling.

Sent to: !!INTERNAL; !!INTERNAL 2; CBSA Breaking News; RCMP Breaking News

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Wednesday, October 21, 2015 5:26 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: Ottawa Citizen: Liberals map swift overhaul of anti-terror law

Follow Up Flag: Follow up
Flag Status: Completed

Liberals map swift overhaul of anti-terror law

October 21, 2015, 17:15 ET
Ottawa Citizen, By: Ian MacLeod

The controversial security bill rammed through Parliament by the Conservative government in the spring is expected to be overhauled without delay by the new Liberal government, say party officials and other sources.

Proposed legislation to add new measures and repeal some existing parts of the law, now known as the Anti-terrorism Act of 2015, or C-51, is already being drafted and is to be tabled early in the new parliamentary session. Consultations with the public and various experts are planned before the replacement legislation is put to a final House vote.

The bill was brought in by the Conservatives after the killings in October 2014 of Warrant Officer Patrice Vincent in Saint-Jean-Sur-Richelieu and Cpl. Nathan Cirillo in Ottawa by lone-wolf extremists.

A key feature of the replacement legislation is expected to be the creation of a multi-party, joint House of Commons-Senate committee, sworn to secrecy and reporting to the prime minister and through him to Parliament. It would have a full-time staff, access to the necessary secret information and be tasked with strategic oversight of every government department and agency with national security responsibilities, according to a source familiar with the content.

Early reaction is positive, but with a note of caution.

"It would be a new departure for the Canadian Parliament and what would be a very difficult task," said Wesley Wark, a security and intelligence historian and scholar at the University of Ottawa.

"I'm glad we've arrived at this moment, it's something that should have been done in Canada a long time ago. (But) it would be important to be cautious about expectations around the early performance of such a committee."

Canadian parliamentarians currently have no access to confidential and high-level information about national security institutions and policies – unlike politicians in the United States, Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and some other NATO nations.

Public opinion polling shows many Canadians want a tighter watch over spy agencies and other federal intelligence gatherers, commensurate with their extended powers under C-51.

A day after the Oct. 22, 2014 terror attack on the National War Memorial and Parliament Hill, Prime Minister Stephen Harper told the Commons that an existing government initiative to strengthen laws dealing with the surveillance, detention and arrest of national security suspects would be "expedited." Two months later, he unveiled Bill C-51, which the Conservative government used as the centrepiece of a security narrative on protecting Canadians from the Islamic State and its followers.

The omnibus bill, made law in June, dramatically expanded the mandate and powers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), criminalized promoting and advocating terrorism, and required airlines to help stop extremists from flying to overseas battle zones.

It also allowed more than 100 departments and federal agencies to begin sharing Canadians' personal information more easily and made it simpler for police to arrest and detain individuals without charge as suspected national security threats, among other measures.

Five days after Harper unveiled C-51 on Jan. 30, Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau surprised many by agreeing to support it. But at the same time, Trudeau said his party would demand – unsuccessfully as it turned out – that the Tory government amend some provisions. Failing that, Trudeau said a Liberal government would make changes once in power.

The Liberal plan for a parliamentary oversight committee is fashioned on a failed 2014 Senate bill introduced by senators Grant Mitchell, Roméo Dallaire and Hugh Segal.

It called for a body to review “the legislative, regulatory, policy and administrative framework for national security and intelligence in Canada, and activities of federal departments and agencies in relation to intelligence and national security.”

The Liberals say a three-year automatic review, or sunset clause, of the entire Anti-terrorism Act of 2015 act would be added.

As well, they want to narrow some of the “overly broad” definitions of what constitutes a threat to national security, including defining “terrorist propaganda” more clearly.

Current oversight and review is chiefly the responsibility of the Security Review Intelligence Committee (SIRC), which conducts after-the-fact reviews of the operations of CSIS, the country's human spy service.

The activities of the electronic spy service, the Communications Security Establishment, are reviewed by a watchdog known as the Office of the Communications Security Establishment Commissioner (OCSEC). Increasingly, in the era of the Edward Snowden leaks on U.S. spying, CSE's domestic cyber-spying activities are raising privacy and legal concerns, though the agency has never been charged with law-breaking.

There is no independent oversight or review of the Canada Border Services Agency, which has a dual intelligence and law-enforcement role. Nor is there dedicated, independent monitoring of the intelligence arms of the RCMP, Citizenship and Immigration Canada, the Privy Council Office, Department of Foreign Affairs, Trade and Development, and the Financial Transactions and Reports Analysis Centre of Canada.

Wark believes a parliamentary committee would be best suited to a broad mandate looking at the security intelligence community in all its moving parts.

“It's going to have to maintain a strategic level look at that community and its functions. It could be matched with organizations like SIRC and the CSE commissioner who have a much more focused review mandate. (They) could both feed into the work of a parliamentary committee.”

Link

Attaques terroristes à Paris/ Paris Terrorist Attacks

(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Tuesday, November 17 2015

le mardi 17 novembre 2015

09:00 / 9 h00

Highlights/Faits saillants.....	2
Service Mentions/Mentions du Service	3
Trudeau Government Reassures Canadians Who Are Worried Terrorists Will Hide Among Refugees, Vice Canada	3
Canada	4
Radicalisation - Flot d'appels au Centre de prévention de Montréal, Le Devoir.....	4
PM faces pressure at home and abroad, The Globe and Mail	6
Other/Autres	8
U.S. will improve sharing intel with France French to receive information close to level given U.K., Chicago Tribune (Canada)	8
Encrypted Messaging Apps Face New Scrutiny Over Possible Role in Attacks, New York Times	10
After Paris Attacks, C.I.A. Director Rekindles Debate Over Surveillance, New York Times (Canada).....	12
How Islamic State Teaches Tech Savvy to Evade Detection, Wall Street Journal	14
Paris Attacks Suspect Was Monitored by Western Allies Seeking to Kill Him, Wall Street Journal	16
Comment lutter contre la radicalisation? Des mesures chocs sont annoncées, Tribune de Genève (Canada).....	20
Analyse—sLa France avait été alertée d'une menace, Le Monde.....	21
This Is ISIS's New Favorite App for Secret Messages, The Daily Beast.....	23
Paris attack suspects: what do we know about them?, The Guardian	26
ISIS Is Using Everything From Encryption To PlayStations To Avoid Being Spied On, BuzzFeed News	29
Alleged mastermind mocked Western security agencies after earlier terror plot, Globe and Mail	31
Column—Fake passports stoke concerns, National Post.....	33
" S " comme " sans résultats ", Sud Ouest	34
Remarks for CIA Director John O. Brennan as Prepared for Delivery at the Center for Strategic & International Studies Global Security Forum 2015, CIA Press Office	36

Highlights/Faits saillants

- Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale tells the Globe and Mail that refugees can be brought to Canada without jeopardizing the country's security. "We're taking all factors into account," he repeated twice when asked whether extra screening is required after the Paris attacks.
- The Chicago Tribune states that the White House has agreed to streamline sharing of intelligence and operational military information to French authorities. President Obama did not provide details, but officials said France will gain access to communications intercepts and other raw intelligence at a level close to that provided to America's English-speaking allies: Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.
- Reports in the Globe and Mail and The Guardian point out that Abdelhamid Abaaoud tipped his hat to those who had attacked Canada and other Western countries. "I ask Allah to accept the fruitful deeds of the shuhada [martyrs] who terrorized the crusaders of America, France, Canada, Australia, Germany and Belgium," he said at the end of an interview with a jihadi magazine.
- The Wall Street Journal states that Abdelhamid Abaaoud, an Islamic State operative suspected of helping plan the Paris attacks, had been monitored in Syria by Western allies seeking to kill him in an airstrike, but they couldn't locate him in the weeks before the plot was carried out.
- A number of mainstream and new-media outlets are reporting on ISIS is using a web-savvy new tactic to expand its global operational footprint. The New York Times points out that Obama administration officials say the Islamic State has used a range of encryption technologies over the past year and a half, many of which defy cracking by the National Security Agency.
- Le journaliste du Monde, Jacques Follorou, estime qu'il semble bien y avoir un lien entre le bombardement, dans la nuit du 8 au 9 octobre, d'un camp de l'Etat islamique près de Rakka, en Syrie, et la préparation d'une attaque visant spécifiquement la France. Il ajoute qu'un des responsables du renseignement français a assuré que " des efforts substantiels ont été réalisés en matière de coopération entre services français depuis les événements de Charlie Hebdo mais ce que l'on n'a peut-être pas vu,
- In the week leading up to the attack on Paris, at least four different intelligence agencies warned French officials about a possible attack on "Western targets." BuzzFeed News reports. Jordanian officials told BuzzFeed News they had sent France a warning, less than a week ago, while Iraqi and Turkish officials have said that they passed on more specific intelligence to French authorities.
- Le journal Sud Ouest se penche sur ceux qui ont fait l'objet d'une fiche « S ». Souvent critiqué, le système d'information européen Schengen a permis de l'étoffer du fait de la mutualisation des informations entre services, souligne-t-on.

Service Mentions/Mentions du Service

Trudeau Government Reassures Canadians Who Are Worried Terrorists Will Hide Among Refugees, Vice Canada

By Tamara Khandaker
Vice Canada
2015 11 16

Since terrorist attacks claimed 132 lives in Paris on Friday, discussion surrounding the newly elected Liberal government's pledge to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees into Canada by January 1 has shifted from concern over logistics to alarm over security.

At a press conference on Saturday, interim Conservative Party leader Rona Ambrose questioned whether or not the government could properly vet the flood of refugees expected to arrive in the coming months, noting that each day, 500 Syrians would have to be screened.

"The goal of supporting refugees from the region of Iraq and Syria is a very important goal for all Canadians. We are very compassionate people," Ambrose told reporters. "But Canadians are asking the question — can we do it this quickly, in a secure way? And I think that's an appropriate question."

A petition calling on the government to suspend its plan, started by a Quebec City resident on Saturday, has been circulating online. By Monday evening, it had collected 63,000 signatures.

"The safety of Canadians and the future generation should be the government's priority," wrote one commenter. "I understand that the refugees need help, but settle the problem at the source instead of overcrowding the country and taking on the risk of welcoming terrorists."

Related: Canada May Use Its Military Jets and Ships to Rescue Syrian Refugees

Resettlement organizations, experts, and public safety minister Ralph Goodale, however, are assuring Canadians that there's no need for alarm, which comes after word spread that one of the attackers travelled to Europe through Greece using a fake Syrian passport, later found lying near his body.

Speaking with Global News, Goodale said none of the victims or attackers in Paris had any ties to Canada, and that the influx of Syrian refugees expected to arrive in Canada isn't directly comparable to over 800,000 who've reached Europe in the past year.

"Ours is a planned process that will be more orderly, more controlled," he said. "Can you guarantee 100% perfection? Is it absolutely foolproof? Nothing in life is 100% but we're going to make sure that all of our security protocols and rules are properly followed."

Details for the resettlement plan are expected to be released in the coming days, but Immigration Minister John McCallum revealed last week that commercial and military planes, as well as ships, are being considered methods of transport refugees, and that military bases might be used for temporary housing.

Currently, the UNHRC determines which candidates are ideal for resettlement—according to former Immigration and Refugee Board Chair Peter Showler, the less than 5 percent who are selected go through further vetting by UN officials.

Peter Goodspeed of Lifeline Syria, which has been working to recruit, train and assist sponsor groups in the Greater Toronto Area says at this stage the UNHCR "automatically go to the most vulnerable and least likely to create a security problem."

"If you're looking at widows, orphans, older parents, people with Canadian ties already, it's all pretty well reduced risk," says Goodspeed. "Those are the people the UNHCR funnels towards the Canadian diplomats."

Those who make the cut must then undergo more screening—the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Canadian Security Intelligence Service, and the Canadian Border Services Agency are among the security agencies involved in the process.

"The security screening has to be done thoroughly and carefully, but it's possible to do that in an expeditious and efficient manner," Showler told VICE News in an interview, stressing that Canadians should be careful to not misinterpret what happened in Paris.

"That massive refugee flow has been chaotic, there have been no security screens on it," he said.

He added that officials on the ground will know who who poses a security risk, especially since many of the refugees from Lebanon, Turkey and Jordan fled Syria in the last four years and are already registered with the UNHRC.

"We know where they are and what they've been suffering for the past four years," said Showler.

"I desperately hope the ones who take this quite horrific incident in Paris and try and inflate it into something it's not, I hope they are not successful," says Showler. "I hope that common sense, level-headedness, and generosity will prevail."

Canada

Radicalisation - Flot d'appels au Centre de prévention de Montréal, Le Devoir

Le Devoir

Actualités, mardi 17 novembre 2015, p. A2

Au moins dix cas sont qualifiés de préoccupants

Isabelle Paré

Dans la foulée des attentats de Paris, une cinquantaine d'appels à l'aide provenant de familles craignant qu'un proche ne passe de la parole aux gestes a été notée au Centre de prévention de la radicalisation menant à la violence de Montréal (CPRMV), dont dix cas jugés " assez préoccupants " pour nécessiter une intervention directe.

Le ressac de la vague de violence qui a frappé la Ville Lumière n'a pas tardé à résonner de ce côté-ci de l'Atlantique. Selon le directeur du CPRMV, Herman Okomba-Debarice, la ligne téléphonique de l'organisme accessible 24 heures sur 24 n'a pas dérogé au cours du week-end dernier, prise d'assaut par des familles, mais aussi des enseignants, des travailleurs sociaux et d'autres personnes alertées par le comportement inquiétant d'un proche.

Selon ce dernier, dans dix appels reçus, les cas rapportés étaient assez préoccupants pour que le CPRMV enclenche une intervention immédiate de travailleurs sociaux ou de psychologues. " Depuis notre création en mars dernier, sur 368 appels, 6 cas ont été jugés assez sérieux pour être transmis à la police et 90 autres ont nécessité une intervention sociale ", a précisé le directeur.

Selon cet ex-policier du SPVM, dont le Centre promeut une approche psychosociale auprès des personnes radicales prônant la violence, le carnage de Paris a fait naître un sentiment de culpabilité chez les familles ou les proches qui minimisaient jusqu'à maintenant les comportements troublants de membres de leur entourage. " Les gens osent aller chercher de l'aide et savent que notre objectif n'est pas de judiciaireiser si ce n'est pas nécessaire. À chaque intervention, notre personnel se rend sur place pour juger s'il y a un enjeu de sécurité pour la personne ou pour la communauté ", affirme-t-il.

En à peine huit mois d'existence, le centre affirme que les besoins sont croissants et qu'au moins une vingtaine de dossiers requérant un suivi sérieux sont toujours ouverts. " Il faut un suivi très serré et une longue exposition pour dépister le changement de comportement chez un individu. La plupart des cas ne requièrent pas une prise en charge par la police ", explique le directeur du CPRMV.

Une mouvance inquiétante

En sus des jeunes qui succombent aux sirènes du djihadisme, une autre tendance se dessine actuellement, déplore M. Okomba-Debarice. Celle de jeunes qui souhaitent rejoindre la Syrie, mais cette fois pour combattre le groupe État islamique aux côtés des forces kurdes.

La glorification de soldats, notamment de l'ex-tireur d'élite des Forces armées canadiennes, Waly, combattant volontaire qui se met en scène dans ses propres vidéos relayées sur le Web - - présenté comme un sauveur aux heures de grande écoute par certains médias -- aurait amené une dizaine de jeunes à vouloir prendre les armes et jouer les justiciers, au péril de leur vie. " Pour moi, c'est aussi de la radicalisation dangereuse. Ces jeunes croient se battre pour la bonne cause, mais ils sont souvent vulnérables ou traversent une mauvaise période. L'armée est payée et formée pour faire ça, ce n'est pas un jeu ", dénonce le directeur du CPRMV, qui lancera dimanche des outils sur le Web pour aider les familles et l'entourage d'individus à risque de radicalisation violente.

Plus d'un an après les attentats menés sur le Parlement d'Ottawa et à Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu, plusieurs experts consultés estiment que les mesures concrètes mises en place depuis pour prévenir la radicalisation sur le terrain sont insuffisantes. Après la création CPRMV en mars, un plan d'action contre la radicalisation a été dévoilé en juin par Québec, mais les intervenants disposent de bien peu de moyens pour cerner l'ampleur du problème. " Plusieurs organismes travaillent là-dessus, mais en silo, sans trop de concertations. Je crois qu'il y a eu une sensibilisation réelle à l'enjeu de la radicalisation, mais l'articulation efficace des actions reste à faire ", affirme David Morin, codirecteur de l'Observatoire sur la radicalisation (OSR) à l'Université de Sherbrooke.

Si la police réussit à neutraliser des radicaux déjà embrigadés, il manque des moyens pour empêcher des jeunes à risque de verser dans l'idéologie sanguinaire. " On reçoit une multitude d'appels de milieux scolaires qui n'ont ni l'argent ni la formation pour ce faire. Quand on frappe à la porte des ministères à ce sujet, ça répond absent ", déplore-t-il.

" Je crois qu'il y a eu une sensibilisation réelle à l'enjeu de la radicalisation, mais l'articulation efficace des actions reste à faire "

PM faces pressure at home and abroad, The Globe and Mail

By ADRIAN MORROW, INGRID PERITZ, STEVEN CHASE

17 November 2015

©2015 The Globe and Mail Inc. All Rights Reserved.

Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall and other politicians are expressing reservations about plan to take in refugees

Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall is calling on Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to suspend his plan to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada before the end of the year, revealing a growing unease among this country's leaders in the wake of the terrorist attacks in Paris.

Some politicians are concerned about Mr. Trudeau's marquee election pledge to vastly increase the speed and scale of Canada's intake of refugees.

The mayors of Toronto, Quebec City and Montreal have all expressed reservations about Mr. Trudeau's timeline, and the premiers of B.C. and Quebec have stressed that security must be considered.

But Mr. Wall has come out strongest against the plan.

In a letter to Mr. Trudeau Monday, Mr. Wall wrote that he is "concerned" that swiftly bringing large numbers of asylum seekers into the country "could severely undermine the refugee screening process."

"The recent attacks in Paris are a grim reminder of the death and destruction even a small number of malevolent individuals can inflict upon a peaceful country and its citizens," he wrote. "Surely, we do not want to be date-driven or numbers-driven in an endeavour that may affect the safety of our citizens and the security of our country."

Speaking to reporters in Regina, Mr. Wall also pronounced himself in favour of continuing Canada's bombing campaign against the Islamic State, which Mr. Trudeau has promised to end.

"As a citizen, I would rather they continue the air strikes. I would rather Canada continue the fight. That's Canada's history, that's our tradition. When tyranny threatens freedom-loving people anywhere, Canada has responded, yes, with a humane response. But Canada also fights," he said.

The Paris attacks Friday, for which the Islamic State claimed responsibility, left at least 129 people dead. There has been no solid proof any of the terrorists were refugees, but a passport found near the body of one of the perpetrators appeared to belong to someone who had come from Syria via Greece.

There is little Mr. Wall or his fellow critics can do to stop Mr. Trudeau's plan. But how he manages their unease could be the first major test of the Prime Minister's promised new era of co-operative federalism.

In Quebec, an online petition calling for Ottawa to suspend its plan has picked up more than 61,500 signatures.

Quebec City Mayor Régis Labeaume urged Ottawa to pause in the face of public worries over the refugees. "Rushing can lead to chaotic situations," he said Monday. The mayor of Montreal, Denis Coderre, said Canada should "stay the course" on refugees, "but we don't necessarily have to have 25,000 in 45 days."

Toronto Mayor John Tory said he is still in favour of "having some of these people come to Canada," but described Mr. Trudeau's plan to bring a large number in with such a tight timeline as a "political promise."

"These things have to be done properly and thoroughly and carefully. I think everybody would expect that," he said. "Political promises should be secondary at all times to making sure that we do things in the best way and in the right way for the Canadian people."

Mr. Trudeau's government signalled Monday it will not delay the Syrian refugee effort.

In an interview with The Globe and Mail, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said refugees can be brought to Canada without jeopardizing the country's security. "We're taking all factors into account," he repeated twice when asked whether extra screening is required after the Paris attacks.

Mr. Goodale said this country is better situated than Europe to carefully select those to allow entry.

"We have the advantage of being able to plan the process, which we are trying to do.

Whereas they [Europeans] were dealing with spontaneous, adhoc, unexpected chaos," he said.

Both Ontario and Alberta said they would do their part to implement Mr. Trudeau's plan.

Ontario Health Minister Eric Hoskins said Monday the province will stick to its commitment to bring in 10,000 Syrian refugees. He added that he trusts the federal government to do the proper security checks. Asked whether the Paris attacks changed the government's thinking on refugees, he said, "Not at all, and I don't think it changes the public's resolve, either."

Alberta Premier Rachel Notley said her province is prepared to help settle as many as 3,000 refugees. "We need to move forward on the basis of humanity, not on the basis of fear," she said in Edmonton.

Quebec Premier Philippe Couillard walked a fine line. He reiterated his province's commitment to taking in more than 5,700 refugees – with the proviso that Ottawa carry out security checks on them first. Mr. Couillard, who has been vocal in defending the refugees as victims of terrorism themselves, said Ottawa's security checks are essential, but shouldn't be used as an excuse to block the refugees from coming.

"Concerns over security must not become an alibi or justification to say 'no' to refugees," he said on Monday.

British Columbia Premier Christy Clark said she could understand both sides of the argument.

"I don't know whether or not that [25,000] number is the right one. I just know that Canadians want to know that the security processes are working well," she said. "Having said that, I understand that urgency that people are feeling about inviting these people who are from one of the worst, war-torn regions in the world, who are facing the kind of violence every day that unfolded in Paris."

Other/Autres

U.S. will improve sharing intel with France French to receive information close to level given U.K., Chicago Tribune (Canada)

By Brian Bennett, Tribune Washington Bureau Tribune Washington Bureau's W.J. Hennigan and Timothy M. Phelps contributed.

17 November 2015

Chicago Tribune

The White House has agreed to streamline sharing of intelligence and operational military information to French authorities, one of several efforts aimed at countering the Islamic State group in the wake of the deadly Paris attacks, even as U.S. and European officials warned they are racing to keep up with the threat.

President Barack Obama announced the agreement Monday at the G-20 summit in Antalya, Turkey, telling reporters the new arrangement "will allow our personnel to pass threat information, including on (Islamic State), to our French partners even more quickly and more often."

Obama did not provide details, but officials said France will gain access to communications intercepts and other raw intelligence at a level close to that provided to America's English-speaking allies: Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

British Prime Minister David Cameron announced separately that his government plans to boost its spying capability by recruiting 1,900 more intelligence officers for MI5, the domestic security outfit; MI6, the foreign spy agency; and GCHQ, which conducts electronic surveillance.

In Washington, CIA Director John Brennan said he is seeking to strengthen intelligence sharing with Russia about counterterrorism, especially on the Islamic State group.

He told a Washington think tank that he had spoken to his Russian counterpart in recent weeks in a new push to stop militants from the Caucasus from heading to Syria and Iraq.

Attorney General Loretta Lynch told a news conference that the Justice Department will "ramp up our defenses" in the United States, although she provided no new details.

The FBI has said it has open investigations in every state on U.S. citizens allegedly communicating with militants overseas, considering trips to Syria, or possibly planning terrorist attacks on U.S. soil.

Several dozen Americans have been arrested on charges of providing material support to Islamic State militants in the last year.

The moves come as U.S. and allied intelligence and law enforcement services scramble to piece together the Paris plot, which left at least 129 dead and hundreds injured, and to determine if Islamic State has other violent plots in the pipeline.

Speaking at the nonpartisan Center for Strategic and International Studies, Brennan said European intelligence agencies are overwhelmed by the need to identify and monitor potential terrorism suspects.

He also warned of a black market in military assault rifles like those used in Friday's massacre in Paris. Criminal networks in Europe have obtained Kalashnikovs and other weapons looted from armories "that were overrun in the 1990s in Eastern Europe" after the fall of the Soviet bloc, Brennan said.

The biggest threat appears from the thousands of Europeans who have joined militant groups in Iraq and Syria in the last few years. Officials fear they could come back and launch terrorist attacks in their home countries, just as several of the suspects in the Paris attacks reportedly did.

British officials claim to have disrupted seven terrorist plots in the last year, and an estimated 700 British nationals have gone to fight in Syria and Iraq. French intelligence services say about 1,800 French citizens have gone since 2011.

More than 2,000 Russians are thought to have joined the conflict as well.

"The sheer number of fighters that have gone over and traveled to Syria and Iraq is unprecedented in jihadist battlefields in the modern era," said Seth Jones, a former U.S. counterterrorism official now with the Rand Corp.

Adding to the challenge, militants have increased their use of encrypted text messaging apps on cellphones in recent months, creating new blind spots for U.S. and European security services trying to disrupt potential plots.

French and British intelligence agencies have "pretty intrusive" domestic surveillance, tapping phones and monitoring neighborhoods, Jones said.

But security services in Belgium are less aggressive, which may explain why the Paris attacks appear to have been staged there, he said.

A purported Islamic State video posted on the Internet on Monday warned that more attacks are coming in Europe, and threatened to launch an attack in Washington.

A militant on the video says "as we struck France in the center of its abode in Paris, then we swear that we will strike America at its center in Washington."

Encrypted Messaging Apps Face New Scrutiny Over Possible Role in Attacks, New York Times

By DAVID E. SANGER and NICOLE PERLROTH; David E. Sanger reported from Washington, and Nicole Perlroth from San Francisco.

The New York Times

Foreign, Tuesday, November 17, 2015, p. A 12

WASHINGTON -- American and French officials say there is still no definitive evidence to back up their presumption that the terrorists who massacred 129 people in Paris used new, difficult-to-crack encryption technologies to organize the plot.

But in interviews, Obama administration officials say the Islamic State has used a range of encryption technologies over the past year and a half, many of which defy cracking by the National Security Agency. Other encryption technologies, the officials hint, are less secure than terrorist and criminal groups may believe, and clearly they want to keep those adversaries guessing which ones the N.S.A. has pierced.

Some of the most powerful technologies are free, easily available encryption apps with names like Signal, Wickr and Telegram, which encode mobile messages from cellphones. Islamic State militants used Telegram two weeks ago to claim responsibility for the crash of the Russian jet in the Sinai Peninsula that killed 224 people, and used it again last week, in Arabic, English and French, to broadcast responsibility for the Paris carnage. It is not yet clear whether they also used Telegram's secret-messaging service to encrypt their private conversations.

Nonetheless, such "end-to-end" encryption technology is now so widespread that the attack has revived vitriolic arguments between American intelligence officials and Silicon Valley. Only weeks ago, the matter appeared settled, at least temporarily, with a decision by President Obama that it would be fruitless for the government to try to compel the technology companies to provide the keys to protected conversations and data.

Apple has already made encryption technology a standard part of its iMessage service, and Apple's chief executive, Timothy D. Cook, has been among the most vocal in defending a technology for which the keys to decode messages are held not by his company but by the users at each end of the conversation.

Any other approach, Mr. Cook has argued to Mr. Obama, would undercut Apple customers' confidence that the most precious data they keep in their phones is safe from garden-variety cybercriminals as well as sophisticated nation states that could gain access to keys via hacking, or lawfully through court order. Mr. Cook argues that investigators have ways to obtain crucial clues from the available "metadata" about who is talking to whom by phone, from information in the Internet cloud -- or, security experts have said, by hacking a target's device.

But the speed of the encryption wave has touched off alarm among law enforcement and intelligence officials, who say it significantly increases the chances that they will miss evidence of an impending attack. Prime Minister David Cameron of Britain threatened late last year to ban such technologies, although he soon backed down. France is threatening to insist on access -- and if the French do, so will China, many fear, raising questions about whether the same technology used to crack terrorists' communications will be used to crack dissidents' as well.

"I think this is going to open an entire new debate about security versus privacy," said Michael Morell, a former deputy director of the C.I.A., whose book this year, "The Great War of Our Time," traced the efforts, and failures, in tracking terror plots.

"We have, in a sense, had a public debate" on encryption, he said over the weekend on CBS News's "Face the Nation." "That debate was defined by Edward Snowden," the former National Security Agency contractor who revealed much about the agency's efforts to break encryption. Now, he said, a new argument will be "defined by what happened in Paris."

It is also possible the Paris attackers conducted much of their planning face to face, particularly since several lived in the same Brussels neighborhood. But if there was a command center in Syria or elsewhere, some form of communications would have been required.

Just before the Paris attacks, Belgian officials said Islamic State terrorists had been hiding their communication using online gaming tools like Sony's PlayStation 4 to mask their chatter under that of millions of online video war game players who invoke the same language of violent, religious extremists.

Jan Jambon, Belgium's federal home affairs minister, told a public audience last week that "PlayStation 4 is even more difficult to keep track of than WhatsApp," a popular messaging system owned by Facebook.

But if that was the case, it would undermine the argument that end-to-end encryption allowed the Paris terrorism plot to go undetected. While PlayStation and Xbox deploy encryption to protect customers' personal data like credit card information, it leaves their communications open to government interception in ways that WhatsApp and iMessage do not.

So far, Mr. Obama has been reluctant to insist on a back door into the systems. He rejected the argument of the F.B.I. director, James B. Comey, that the United States should require any company that provides encrypted software and hardware to engineer a way for the government, armed with a court order, to get access. That decision came after a year of study led by the White House counterterrorism adviser, Lisa Monaco, and the head of the White House cybersecurity office, Michael Daniel.

The White House ultimately adopted a view put forth by 14 of the world's top cryptographers and computer security experts who wrote, in a white paper, that weakening the encryption of American technology sold by companies like Apple, Google and Facebook would only render confidential data and critical infrastructure more vulnerable to criminals and national adversaries, and push terrorists to adopt encrypted services sold overseas. As a result, when companies like Apple and Facebook are issued court orders to help governments monitor their customers' messages, all they can do is turn over a stream of unintelligible code.

That has inflamed law enforcement officials like Mr. Comey and William J. Bratton, the New York City police commissioner, who told "Face the Nation" on Sunday that encrypting communications in this way had made it impossible for officials to collect warnings on terrorist attacks.

"We, in many respects, have gone blind as a result of the commercialization and the selling of these devices that cannot be accessed either by the manufacturer or, more importantly, by us in law enforcement, even equipped with search warrants and judicial authority," Mr. Bratton said.

Security experts counter that such arguments ignore the fact that even end-to-end encrypted technology leaves a trail of metadata behind that can be used to parse who is talking to whom, when and where. "Encryption is really good at making it difficult to hide the content of communications, but not good at hiding the presence of communications," said Matt Blaze, a computer security expert at the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Blaze also noted that the authorities can still read communications if they hack into the target's device, or what security experts call "the end point."

"All the encryption in the world doesn't help if the end point that holds the keys are compromised," Mr. Blaze said. "So this idea that encryption make terrorists' communications go completely dark has a pretty big asterisk next to it."

Even if Apple and others in the United States were compelled to weaken the encryption in their services, American authorities still would have had no judicial authority over Telegram, the Berlin-based messaging service, recently used by Islamic State terrorists to broadcast their communiqués.

Follow the New York Times's politics and Washington coverage on Facebook and Twitter, and sign up for the First Draft politics newsletter.

After Paris Attacks, C.I.A. Director Rekindles Debate Over Surveillance, New York Times (Canada)

By SCOTT SHANE
17 November 2015
New York Times

WASHINGTON — In response to the Paris attacks, a top American intelligence official on Monday renewed a debate on government surveillance and privacy, denouncing "hand-wringing" over intrusive spying and leaks of classified information that he said had made it harder to identify terrorists.

John O. Brennan, the director of the Central Intelligence Agency, appeared to be speaking in part about the National Security Agency's mass surveillance of phone and Internet communications that were disclosed by Edward J. Snowden in 2013. Those disclosures prompted sharp criticism and new restrictions on electronic spying both in the United States and in Europe.

Mr. Brennan also seemed to be pushing back against complaints from privacy advocates in light of a growing threat from the Islamic State against Western countries, exemplified by the gun and bomb assaults in Paris that killed 129 people on Friday night.

"In the past several years, because of a number of unauthorized disclosures, and a lot of hand-wringing over the government's role in the effort to try to uncover these terrorists, there have been some policy and legal and other actions that have been taken that make our ability collectively, internationally, to find these terrorists much more challenging," Mr. Brennan said after a speech at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a Washington research organization.

The C.I.A. director, who was responding to questions about the Paris attacks, also suggested that the classified documents on N.S.A. programs given to journalists by Mr. Snowden, a former N.S.A. contractor now living in Russia, had taught terrorists how to hide from the authorities.

"There has been an increase in the operational security of a number of operatives of these terrorist networks as they have gone to school on what it is that they need to do in order to keep their activities concealed from the authorities," an apparent reference to both the use of encryption and the avoidance of electronic communications altogether by plotters. He spoke of "intentional" gaps in surveillance and complained about what he called the "misrepresentation" of intelligence programs.

Mr. Brennan's remarks, and the emotional public response to the massacre in France, reignited a debate that began after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks over just how far the government should go in invading individuals' privacy in the hunt for terrorist plots. Civil libertarians expressed concern that the Paris attacks might prompt a rush to more intrusive spying, on phone calls and Internet messages generally or possibly on Muslims specifically.

"As far as I know, there's no evidence the French lacked some kind of surveillance authority that would have made a difference," said Jameel Jaffer, deputy legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union. "When we've invested new powers in the government in response to events like the Paris attacks, they have often been abused."

While most counterterrorism experts believe the United States is safer from jihadist attacks than Europe, Mr. Brennan was one of a number of officials and commentators who have cited the Paris attacks as a reason to step up surveillance and other security measures in the United States and Europe. On Sunday, Representative Peter T. King, Republican of New York, who serves on the House Intelligence and Homeland Security Committees, called for increased surveillance specifically of Muslims, which Mr. Brennan did not.

"This shows the absolute need to have top surveillance, to stop criticizing the N.S.A.," Mr. King said on Fox News Sunday. "We have to put political correctness aside," he added. "We have to have surveillance in the Muslim communities. That's where the threat is coming from."

Farhana Khera, executive director of Muslim Advocates, a legal and civil rights group, said it made no sense to target all Muslims.

"I think all Americans want to be kept safe from violence of any kind," she said. "But we know that blanket surveillance of people based on religion and race doesn't work."

Based on arrests of Islamic State supporters in the United States in recent years, Ms. Khera said "the common thread is not that they are Muslims but that they are lonely, vulnerable young people." In some cases, she said, they are not from Muslim families but "have become Muslim online" after exposure to propaganda from the Islamic State, also known as ISIS or ISIL.

Many security experts believe that the United States is at far lesser risk than Europe for a large-scale jihadist attack directed from Syria for two reasons. First, flights into the United States and controls at the Mexican and Canadian borders make it much harder for would-be attackers to reach American soil. Second, the Muslim community in the United States is smaller proportionally and is widely seen as better integrated and more prosperous than in France and some other European countries.

How Islamic State Teaches Tech Savvy to Evade Detection, Wall Street Journal

Paris attacks raise possibility that extremists have found ways around western surveillance

By Margaret Coker, Sam Schechner and Alexis Flynn

16 November 2015

The Wall Street Journal

Terror groups have for years waged a technical battle with Western intelligence services that have sought to constrain them through a web of electronic surveillance.

The Paris attacks, apparently planned under the noses of French and Belgian authorities, raise the possibility that Islamic State adherents have found ways around the dragnet.

French authorities say two of the attackers knew each other in prison, but it isn't clear how the group communicated in plotting and coordinating the Friday attacks. Intelligence services have monitored communications from one terror suspect, Belgian Islamist Abdelhamid Abaaoud, between Syria and alleged associates in Belgium and Morocco.

Low-tech methods exist for communicating off law enforcement's radar including passing written notes or relaying messages through friends or relatives.

But law-enforcement agencies also have long warned that encrypted platforms built for gaming or other commercial purposes to safeguard privacy are being used by would-be terrorists to communicate.

Islamic State, for its part, has built a tech-savvy division of commanders who issue tutorials to sympathizers about the most secure and least expensive ways of communicating.

The bloodshed in Paris will likely exacerbate a tense debate between governments that want inside access to those encrypted tools and tech companies that say are trying to protect customer data and are wary of government overreach.

Mike Morell, the former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said terrorists' ability to use encrypted communication is a huge problem.

"I think this is going to open an entire new debate about security versus privacy," he told CBS television on Sunday.

Two top U.S. intelligence officials, CIA Director John Brennan and Robert Cardillo, director of the National Geospatial Intelligence Agency, said Monday that terror groups have "gone to school" on U.S. spying practices and learned ways to evade detection. Mr. Brennan blasted efforts to curb surveillance while Mr. Cardillo said agencies needed to adapt and find new ways to gather intelligence.

For more than a year, governments in Europe have pushed for companies such as Google, Facebook and Twitter to build "back doors" that allow law enforcement access into their encrypted tools.

Tech companies and security experts have resisted that push, which gained steam in Europe following the January attacks in Paris against the satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo.

Security experts say inserting back doors would weaken the encryption and undermine trust in the Internet.

Islamic State is among the most technologically sophisticated extremist groups. Its advice to followers includes an eight-minute video released last year in Arabic that discusses the surveillance capabilities of hostile governments and how phones can be tracked. Bulletins also include advice about brands of electronic equipment that appear vulnerable.

In January, a follower known online as al-Khabir al-Taqni, who identifies himself as a "technical expert," provided would-be fighters with a list of what he determined were the safest encrypted communications systems available.

"Through this, we can break one of the strongest weapons of the Crusader governments in spying on and tracking the mujahedeen and targeting them with aircraft," the author said, referring to the U.S.-led coalition fighting Islamic State.

The missive, authenticated by the SITE Intelligence Group which monitors and tracks radical groups online, ranked 33 applications as unsafe, moderately safe, safe, and safest.

Soon after the list was published, Islamic State started moving official communications from Twitter to Telegram Messenger, which received the second-highest safety rating from the Islamic State tech team.

That included the group's claim of responsibility for the Paris attacks as well as the Oct. 31 Russian airline crash in Egypt.

Islamic State also has urged its followers to make use of the app's capability to host encrypted group chats.

A spokesman for Telegram didn't respond to requests to comment. Pavel Durov, the app's founder who also created the Russian social network VKontakte, criticized recent calls by the Russian government to ban Telegram.

"I propose we ban words," Mr. Durov wrote in a sarcastic VKontakte post. "There is information that terrorists use them to communicate."

U.K. prosecutors convicted a British teen this year in part because police had access to his Telegram chats.

The boy, inspired by Islamic State, admitted to communicating with an Australian teenager and encouraging him to attack ceremonies commemorating military veterans.

He was convicted on one terrorism charge. Police and prosecutors have declined to comment about how they accessed those communications.

Telegram was among the first apps that explicitly catered to privacy enthusiasts in the wake of reports in 2013 alleging widespread surveillance by U.S. intelligence. A similar U.S.-based app called Wickr received the highest safety recommendation in the Islamic State tech guide. Wickr didn't respond to a request to comment.

European law-enforcement officials have also expressed concern about gaming consoles, which also allow players to communicate with each other via the Internet.

Belgium's Interior Minister Jan Jambon told a conference in Brussels last week that Sony Corp.'s PlayStation was a concern, calling it one of the most difficult platforms for governments to intercept.

He didn't say whether Belgium has investigations that include monitoring of gamers or game consoles. A spokeswoman in Brussels didn't return calls seeking comment.

In May, an Austrian court convicted a 14-year-old boy of downloading bomb-making instructions onto his PlayStation console, according to local media reports.

It is unclear whether governments have approached Sony for access to customer data. Sony said in a statement it works with local authorities as appropriate. "We take our responsibilities to protect our users extremely seriously and we urge our users and partners to report activities that may be offensive, suspicious or illegal. When we identify or are notified of such conduct, we are committed to taking appropriate actions in conjunction with the appropriate authorities," it said.

Paris Attacks Suspect Was Monitored by Western Allies Seeking to Kill Him, Wall Street Journal

Islamic State operative couldn't be located in the weeks before plot was carried out
By Benoît Faucon in London, Matthew Dalton in Brussels, and Stacy Meichtry and David Gauthier-Villarsin Paris
17 November 2015
The Wall Street Journal

An Islamic State operative suspected of helping plan the Paris attacks had been monitored in Syria by Western allies seeking to kill him in an airstrike, but they couldn't locate him in the weeks before the plot was carried out, two Western security officials said.

The operative, a Belgian citizen named Abdelhamid Abaaoud, was convicted in absentia in Brussels earlier this year of recruiting jihadists, was suspected of masterminding a foiled plot to behead police officers, escaped to Syria and was profiled in Islamic State's online magazine mocking European authorities for their failure to catch him. A year ago, video emerged of him in Syria, smiling as he drove a truck dragging the dead bodies of Islamic State's opponents tied to the bumper.

Mr. Abaaoud is one of two people who have emerged at the center of a probe into the attacks that killed 129 people on Friday. Both are at large. French and Belgian authorities are also searching for a 26-year-old petty criminal named Salah Abdeslam, who they say rented a car used in the attacks on Friday and is suspected of driving some of the suicide bombers through Paris.

On Monday, dozens of masked Belgian police stormed a house in a predominantly Muslim district in Brussels in their hunt for Mr. Abdeslam.

French prosecutors said police had stopped Mr. Abdeslam and two other men on their way to Brussels just hours after the Friday massacre. But a roadside background check failed to show that Mr. Abdeslam had rented a car in Belgium that was found outside the Bataclan night club, the site of one of the attacks, and police let him go.

The two men long resided a few blocks from each other in Brussels' Molenbeek district, where police conducted the raid Monday, and spent time in the same prison, according to a Belgian official. "It is certain that they knew each other," the official said.

Mr. Abaaoud—who escaped to Syria in January after Belgian police foiled another terrorist plot authorities say he masterminded—had been under surveillance there as part of an effort to track down and kill Islamic State militants believed to be directly involved in recruiting Westerners for the militant group, according to the officials.

Officials had no knowledge of the Paris plot when they sought to have Mr. Abaaoud killed by airstrike, and don't know whether the killing of Mr. Abaaoud would have prevented the attacks in the French capital. The plotters may have been able to act independently or, in Mr. Abaaoud's absence, another Islamic State militant could have stepped in, they said.

Growing evidence that Islamic State operatives were able to plot the attacks from abroad—mobilizing a group of seven suicide bombers to carry them out, including one of Mr. Abdeslam's brothers—suggests the extremist group has gained an unprecedented level of ability to coordinate a large-scale operation and hit Europe.

The emerging details about the plotters and their ability to elude authorities also have exposed the lack of cross-border coordination among European security officials.

Islamic State's use of Belgium as a staging ground for the assault on Paris helped the militants to go undetected as they prepared their attack, European officials said.

As French and Belgian investigators sought to comprehend how Islamic State could have built a large terror cell in the heart of Europe, featuring the two men and others involved in the attacks, authorities scrambled to tighten the net on extremists.

French President François Hollande proposed extending France's state of national emergency in the wake of the attacks for three months and called for international cooperation from Russia and the U.S. as he vowed to step up airstrikes against terrorist bastions.

"They fight us because France is a country of freedom," he said. "Our democracy has beaten far greater adversaries."

On Monday, French authorities also carried out raids in several cities amid fears that more attackers might strike. People familiar with the probe said investigators were anxious to identify and neutralize whoever made the explosive vests the attackers used to blow up themselves at France's largest sports arena, a concert hall and a restaurant.

In Belgium, a judge ordered two people, who were detained in Brussels, to remain held for allegedly providing support to the Paris attackers. Another brother of Mr. Abdeslam was also detained by police for questioning over the weekend but later let go.

"We didn't think for one second that one of my brothers was linked to this attack," said the brother, Mohamed Abdeslam, as he stood in front of his home near the Molenbeek town hall. "He grew up here, he studied here," Mr. Abdeslam said of his brother Salah. "He was a completely normal boy."

A Belgian official said Salah Abdeslam tried to go to Syria this year but was sent back by Turkish authorities. The Belgian government investigated him when he returned and concluded he didn't pose a risk.

Despite his effort to go to Syria, authorities didn't view him as a terror threat, the official said. "The investigation showed no signs of him actively going to terrorism," he said.

Police viewed Mr. Abaaoud as a much more dangerous man.

In July, Mr. Abaaoud, who is known in Belgium for having taken his 13-year-old brother with him to Syria in 2014, was sentenced to 20 years in prison in absentia by a Brussels court earlier this year on terrorism charges and for recruiting jihadists. Belgian courts don't appoint lawyers when defendants are tried in absentia.

Raised in Belgium, he returned to Europe from Syria at some point under the radar of authorities with the aim of beheading Belgian police officers, officials say. Police foiled the plot in January, and in a shootout, killed two other suspected accomplices in the eastern Belgian town of Verviers. Officials believe Mr. Abaaoud escaped to Syria that same month.

In a purported interview with Mr. Abaaoud in February, Islamic State's online magazine quoted the Belgian national of Moroccan descent mocking European law enforcement authorities.

"My name and picture were all over the news yet I was able to stay in their homeland, plan operations against them, and leave safely when doing so became necessary," he was quoted as saying.

According to a Western intelligence official, intelligence services have monitored Mr. Abaaoud's communications from Syria to associates in Europe, but weren't always sure whether it was the Islamic State operative or his teenage brother on the line. That complicated any plans to kill him with an airstrike, the official said.

After the planned attacks on Belgian police were thwarted, a core group of French-speaking Belgians in Syria started to plan and recruit for attacks on public places—including on a concert hall—in France, Spain, the Netherlands and the U.K., the official said.

The information comes from interrogations of French members of Islamic State who were arrested by Turkish police after leaving Syria and were extradited to France, the official said. The French militants said Mr. Abaaoud was leading plans to carry out attacks, the official said.

A surge in the number of such radicals traveling between France and Syria and other conflict zones has also hindered France's surveillance effort. The number of people on France's security watch list has reached 8,000, compared with about 5,000 three years ago. Officials say it is impossible to track even a fraction of these people full-time.

One radical on the watch list was Omar Ismail Mostefai, a Frenchman who authorities say was part of a trio that attacked the Bataclan concert hall on Friday, killing 89 people, before detonating their suicide vests. The militant had been on a watch list for radicalization since 2010. Mr. Mostefai is believed to have later traveled to Syria, raising suspicions he fought alongside Islamic State. French officials declined to say whether Mr. Mostefai was monitored when he returned home in the spring of 2014.

On Monday, a senior Turkish official said Ankara had identified Mr. Mostefai as a terrorism suspect and twice notified French authorities to no avail.

"The case of Omar Ismail Mostefai clearly establishes that intelligence sharing and effective communication are crucial to counterterrorism efforts," the Turkish official said.

Mr. Mostefai traveled to Turkey in 2013 and was flagged to French authorities as recently as June, the Turkish official said. There is no record of the 29-year-old French national leaving Turkey.

French Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius said he was unaware of Turkey's warnings about Mr. Mostefai. "As far as information and intelligence are concerned, we really should exchange and share much more," Mr. Fabius said at a news conference on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit in Antalya on Turkey's Mediterranean coast.

Samy Amimour, another Frenchman who investigators say took part in the Bataclan attack, had been facing an international arrest warrant for failing to check in with police on a regular basis. Mr. Amimour was required to report to police after prosecutors placed him under investigation in 2012 for attempting to travel to Yemen, a country rife with jihadist activity. He later traveled to Syria.

Earlier this month, German border police caught a Montenegrin man apparently heading for Paris with machine guns, hand grenades and explosives in his car, an arrest that Germany's interior minister said could be linked to the attacks in Paris. German authorities said they had notified the French of the arrest at the time.

Militants have long hopped across the Continent's national borders without facing internal border checks. But Friday's attacks showed that even Europe's external borders are dangerously porous, particularly as the region copes with the influx of refugees from Syria and elsewhere.

A fake Syrian passport was enough to secure one suicide bomber's passage into Europe via Greece, officials say, allowing him to reach the Stade de France on Friday night and detonate an explosive vest lined with bolts.

Comment lutter contre la radicalisation? Des mesures chocs sont annoncées, Tribune de Genève (Canada)

Jean-Noël Cuénod Paris

Tribune de Genève

Evenement, mardi 17 novembre 2015, p. 4

L'heure du contre-djihadisme a sonné en France. Devant les parlementaires réunis en Congrès à Versailles, le président François Hollande a évoqué les mesures pour lutter contre les foyers de radicalisation présents dans l'Hexagone. La veille, son prédécesseur Nicolas Sarkozy avait émis ses propositions. Au sein de la majorité socialiste comme dans l'opposition de droite, les idées circulent.

Déchéance de nationalité

Certaines ne semblent guère contestées pour le moment. Ainsi, le président Hollande a annoncé un changement législatif pour faciliter la déchéance de la nationalité française pour les auteurs d'actes terroristes. Cette déchéance ne peut concerner que les binationaux. On ne peut pas retirer son passeport à un citoyen 100% Français car ce serait le rendre apatride, ce qui est contraire au Code civil. Actuellement, la déchéance de nationalité ne peut s'appliquer qu'aux binationaux naturalisés depuis moins de dix ans. Par conséquent, ne sont pas concernés les double-nationaux qui ont été naturalisés il y a plus longtemps ou ceux qui sont nés en France. Cela va changer. Hier devant le Congrès, François Hollande s'est montré fort clair sur ce point: « Nous devons pouvoir déchoir de sa nationalité française un individu condamné pour une atteinte aux intérêts fondamentaux de la nation ou un acte de terrorisme, même s'il est né Français, dès lors qu'il bénéficie d'une autre nationalité. » Jadis, la gauche aurait tordu le nez devant une telle proposition. Mais nous vivons désormais dans un autre monde. De même, le président français veut « interdire à un binational de revenir sur le sol français, sauf à ce qu'il se soumette à un dispositif de contrôle, comme le font les Britanniques. »

Expulsion des imams toxiques

En outre, l'expulsion des imams toxiques et autres prêcheurs de haine d'origine étrangère sera prononcée manu militari. Mais l'actuel cadre juridique le permet déjà. Depuis 2012, 40 prédicateurs ont été boutés hors de France. Le mouvement risque de s'accélérer ces prochains jours.

Suspects assignés à résidence

En revanche, la proposition émise dimanche soir par Nicolas Sarkozy, le patron du parti Les Républicains, suscite plus de controverses. Rappelons que l'ancien président de la République veut assigner à résidence avec pose de bracelet électronique les éléments figurant sur la fiche S. Elle fait partie d'un plus vaste fichier, celui des personnes recherchées. Cette fiche S - pour « sûreté » - consigne tous les éléments de renseignements sur des personnes susceptibles de tomber dans le terrorisme. Mais il ne s'agit pas d'un élément de preuve, simplement d'un outil pour enrichir le renseignement intérieur. Combien y a-t-il de suspects fichés S? Les chiffres varient selon les interlocuteurs. Sarkozy en dénombre 11 500 et Valls, 10 500.

Si cette fiche S retient autant l'attention des politiciens, c'est parce que le premier terroriste identifié, Omar Ismaïl Mostefaï, y était inscrit depuis 2010. Les renseignements à son propos étaient d'ailleurs plutôt vagues et consistaient à souligner sa fréquentation d'une mosquée. L'idée est donc simple: si Mostefaï se trouvait en résidence surveillée avec un bracelet électronique, il n'aurait pas pu participer à l'attentat.

Un peu trop simple, l'idée, selon le député socialiste Jean-Jacques Urvoas, président de la Commission des lois de l'Assemblée nationale et auteur de la récente loi de renseignement qui a considérablement renforcé les moyens de surveillance policière. La proposition de Nicolas Sarkozy de poser un bracelet électronique à tous les suspects fichés S ne rencontre pas son assentiment, loin de là, comme il s'en est expliqué à l'AFP. Le but de la fiche S n'est pas d'arrêter un individu - c'est le domaine du mandat d'arrêt - mais d'engranger des informations sur son compte, évidemment sans qu'il puisse se rendre compte qu'il est surveillé! Or, si on lui pose un bracelet électronique, la récolte de renseignements s'arrêtera là.

Tout sécuritaire

Si sur le plan du renforcement des personnels de sécurité (8500 postes seront créés en deux ans) et militaires (maintien des effectifs jusqu'en 2019 et activation des réservistes avec, dans le viseur, une garde nationale), le président Hollande paraît convaincant. En revanche, il reste muet sur la création de centres de contre-radicalisation comme il en existe au Canada, en Scandinavie ou en Grande-Bretagne.

Or, depuis des années, l'anthropologue française Dounia Bouzar fait le siège des autorités pour que de tels centres soient installés dans l'Hexagone. De guerre lasse, elle a elle-même fondé le Centre de prévention contre les dérives sectaires liées à l'islam (CPDSI). Son objectif est de définir les étapes de l'endoctrinement afin de le prévenir et d'aider les familles concernées. Apparemment, les autorités françaises mettent le paquet sur la répression, ce qui est logique, mais délaissent un élément tout aussi essentiel, la prévention.

Analyse—sLa France avait été alertée d'une menace, Le Monde

Le Monde

Jacques Follorou

mercredi 18 novembre 2015, p. 12

Les frappes françaises en Syrie début octobre visaient notamment le commanditaire présumé des attentats

Quel était le degré de connaissance des autorités françaises de la préparation des attaques du 13 novembre à Paris et à Saint-Denis? La France paraît disposer de moyens pour reconstituer le fil d'actions meurtrières qui viennent de frapper sa population et ses intérêts. Mais semble désarmée pour les anticiper. Une question d'autant plus délicate que des éléments apparus ces derniers jours, dont la précision fait encore débat, attestent l'existence d'une crainte réelle d'attentat ces derniers mois.

Tout d'abord, il semble bien y avoir un lien entre le bombardement, dans la nuit du 8 au 9 octobre, d'un camp de l'Etat islamique près de Rakka, en Syrie, et la préparation d'une attaque visant spécifiquement la France. Le ministère de la défense avait alors assuré, au lendemain de cette frappe, que ce centre d'entraînement constituait " une menace " pour la France et l'Europe et hébergeait des " combattants étrangers, dont probablement des Français et des francophones ". Il assurait cependant ne pas connaître l'identité des personnes visées.

En réalité, comme l'avait alors indiqué Le Monde , l'ensemble de l'opération avait été pensée autour d'un Français, Salim Benghalem, 35 ans, originaire de Cachan (Val-de-Marne), " responsable de l'accueil des francophones au sein l'Etat islamique " et d'au moins deux autres cadres de l'organisation, dont un Belge. Ce dernier était Abdelhamid Abaaoud. Un lien direct a été établi entre cet individu originaire de Molenbeek, près de Bruxelles, parti combattre en Syrie, et plusieurs projets terroristes en France et en Europe, dont celui ayant meurtri la capitale française vendredi 13 novembre.

" Plusieurs attaques avortées " Selon nos informations, la France a - en grande partie sur la base de renseignement technique et humain provenant des services secrets américains - considéré que des personnes étaient entraînées pour frapper le sol français. Selon une source issue de la communauté du renseignement, la CIA aurait collecté des " bribes d'informations " , parfois codées, puis de plus en plus claires sur l'imminence d'une menace venant précisément de ce groupe de francophones de l'Etat islamique.

Le fruit de ces interceptions entre la Syrie et la Belgique ou la France aurait été, ensuite, communiqué à la DGSE. Le 27 octobre, Bernard Bajolet, qui dirige les services secrets extérieurs français (DGSE), s'exprimant lors d'un colloque organisé par la CIA à l'université américaine George-Washington, rappelait que " la France devait faire face à des actions terroristes planifiées et commanditées de l'étranger ou par des djihadistes français de retour dans leur pays ". Il ajoutait, " ce dernier mois, nous avons fait avorter plusieurs attaques sur notre sol, cela ne signifie pas que nous serons tout le temps capables de parer à toutes " .

Tributaires des forces américaines en matière de renseignement mais aussi en ce qui concerne le timing et la localisation des frappes aériennes en Syrie et en Irak, les Français ont dû, d'après certaines sources, repousser de " deux semaines " la frappe prévue sur le camp où étaient susceptibles de se trouver Benghalem et Abaaoud. " On peut en effet se demander si les auteurs de ce massacre sont partis entre-temps mais rien ne permet de le dire " , lâche un cadre français du renseignement. Trois jours après la frappe du 8 octobre, Salim Benghalem avait fait savoir qu'il était en effet visé mais qu'il n'avait pas été touché.

Chargé du renseignement au sein de nos frontières, la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSi) reçoit chaque jour, une grande quantité d'informations émanant des services de renseignement étrangers comme de ses propres antennes territoriales. L'enjeu porte sur la capacité à analyser la grande quantité de renseignement obtenus par des moyens techniques. Des notes de synthèses sont ensuite transmises à la justice antiterroriste dont l'un des membres a admis au Monde que " des bouts d'informations pouvaient laisser entendre qu'un acte majeur allait se produire sur notre territoire " tout en ajoutant, " mais de là à dire que le Bataclan, le Stade de France et les rues du 11e arrondissement allaient être attaqués, il y a un pas " .

Pour certains des enquêteurs, les attaques du 13 novembre à Paris ont mis en évidence les lourdeurs causées par des logiques nationales en matière de lutte antiterroriste. " Deux choses nous ont lourdement handicapés, commente l'un d'entre eux, on n'avait jamais pensé qu'une opération partirait de Bruxelles pour attaquer un quartier parisien et si les services belges nous avaient juste dit que Abaaoud était un très proche ami de Salah Abdeslam, un pilier des attaques du 13 novembre, cela nous aurait aidés. "

Parmi les signaux d'alerte reçus par la France figure également, selon l'agence Associated Press (AP), une note de renseignement transmis par les Irakiens via les forces américaines à la tête de la coalition réunie pour lutter contre l'Etat islamique en Syrie et en Irak à laquelle appartient la France.

" Cellule dormante "Si ce document ne fournit pas de détails, AP assure, néanmoins, que les autorités françaises ont été avisées par d'autres moyens de l'imminence des attaques par des assaillants entraînés à Rakka s'appuyant sur une " cellule dormante " déjà présente en France. Selon la source d'AP issue du renseignement irakien, " 24 personnes auraient été impliquées dans les opérations, dont 19 pour les attaques elles-mêmes et 5 pour la logistique et la planification " . Aucune source française n'a confirmé ces affirmations.

Selon un diplomate français en poste à Ankara, la Turquie a fait savoir, lundi 16 novembre, qu'elle avait mis en garde la France " au moins à deux reprises depuis début 2015 " sur les déplacements d'Ismaël Omar Mostefai, un des kamikazes de la salle du Bataclan entré sur le territoire turc en 2013, et sur ses liens avec quatre djihadistes recherchés par les services français. D'après l'AFP qui cite un responsable turc, " la France n'a jamais répondu " et n'a transmis de demande " qu'après les attaques de Paris " .

Interrogé par Le Monde , un des responsables du renseignement français a assuré que " des efforts substantiels ont été réalisés en matière de coopération entre services français depuis les événements de Charlie Hebdo mais ce que l'on n'a peut-être pas vu, c'est que la menace a muté, l'Etat islamique fait désormais de la politique étrangère avec des attentats et ne se contente plus d'encourager de loin des initiatives désordonnées " . Pour sa part, la DGSE a indiqué qu'elle " ne s'exprimait pas sur ses relations avec ses alliés " .

This Is ISIS's New Favorite App for Secret Messages, The Daily Beast

The Daily Beast

Shane Harris

2015 11 16

The terror group is pushing a new way to communicate quietly after the Paris attacks. It's called Telegram.

In the wake of the Paris terrorist attacks, ISIS is encouraging its followers to use a popular chat application that can make text messages effectively invisible to government spies.

A day after claiming responsibility for the attack, ISIS posted a message on one of its Web sites—which had been moved to the so-called Dark Web—encouraging its followers to download the app, called Telegram, which also allows users to set their message to self-destruct after a certain period of time.

Telegram and similar apps have been vexing intelligence and security officials, who say they have prevented the U.S. from locating and tracking ISIS militants in Iraq and Syria.

Telegram in particular has been adopted by a lot more people than ISIS—as of a year ago, the company claimed more than 50 million users sending 1 billion messages per day.

Somewhere in that mix are an unknown number of jihadists, and, ISIS hopes, more to come. Of course, there could also be drug dealers, gangsters, and other assorted criminals. But apps such as Telegram are coming in for particular scrutiny by intelligence officials for their potential role in facilitating attacks. ISIS issued its claim of responsibility for the attacks via Telegram.

CIA Director John Brennan wasted no time Monday in highlighting the threat that he thinks such technologies pose when placed in terrorists' hands.

“There are a lot of technological capabilities that are available right now that make it exceptionally difficult, both technically as well as legally, for intelligence and security services to have the insight they need to uncover” terrorist activities, Brennan said at a security conference in Washington, without mentioning any technologies by name.

Brennan linked one of the worst terrorist attacks in Europe to the profusion of 21st century technologies that, he said, are being abused in such a way that “20th century laws cannot effectively deal with [them].”

By tying the emergence of apps like Telegram to the threat posed by ISIS, and the Paris attacks in particular, Brennan may have opened a new front in the government's efforts to reign in technology that, while it can significantly protect personal privacy, is nevertheless an obstacle to surveillance.

“I do think this is a time for particularly Europe, as well as here in the United States, for us to take a look and see whether or not there have been some inadvertent or intentional gaps that have been created in the ability of intelligence and security services to protect the people that they are asked to serve,” Brennan said.

FBI Director James Comey had been trying for several months to push some legislative or regulatory solution for what he saw as the risk of “going dark,” if the bureau and other agencies that conduct electronic surveillance cannot easily decrypt text messages, emails, and other communications used by criminals.

Comey and his Justice Department colleagues had effectively stood down from that quest. But the Paris attacks may have revived the effort. Brennan is the most senior U.S. official since the assault to speak publicly about the issue.

Terrorists use of ubiquitous and highly-secure technologies demonstrates that they have studied American intelligence operations and exploited leaks about government surveillance techniques, Brennan said.

“There has been a significant increase in the operational security of a number of these operatives and terrorist networks as they have gone to school on what it is that they need to do in order to keep their activities concealed from the authorities,” he said.

Of course, terrorists didn't need the CIA to tell them that the U.S. government monitors their communications. Telegram is only one in a string of messaging systems ISIS has employed to protect its communications, U.S. officials told The Daily Beast. And some apps that have marketed their privacy-enhancing features, such as Snapchat and Secret have either disclosed their users' supposedly-private information, or have been shown to be vulnerable to hacking. In other words, they're not-so-secret after all.

But Telegram is ISIS' new "it" app—until they find another.

Founded in 2013, Telegram is the brainchild of a pair of Russian brothers, Pavel and Nikolai Durov. Pavel, the 31-year old founder of Russia's biggest social network, VKontakte, or VK, is a vocal critic of Vladimir Putin's government and provides the financial backing. Nikolai is the technical brains behind the outfit.

Not surprisingly, Telegram doesn't market its product to terrorists. But being a force against government surveillance is built into the company's philosophy.

"The No. 1 reason for me to support and help launch Telegram was to build a means of communication that can't be accessed by the Russian security agencies," Durov told TechCrunch last year in an interview.

The company says that Telegram has no connections to the Russian government. In fact, its headquarters are in Berlin.

Durov may have been trying to frustrate the Russians, who are waging their own war against Islamist militants. But he's also piqued the Americans. And, it turns out, the Iranians, who this week arrested administrators of more than 20 Telegram groups, accusing of them of spreading "immoral" content, Reuters reported. Smartphone messaging apps are popular among Iranian youth, who compose the majority of the country's population, and Iranian hardliners have been cracking down on potential subversion as the country opens up more to the West with the lifting of economic sanctions.

Telegram may be a tool for pro-democracy activists. But its anti-surveillance capabilities won't win it any points in the CIA's eye.

In his remarks Monday, Brennan was forceful in his assertion that technologies and policies set up in part to counter government overreach were making his agency's job harder.

"In the past several years, because of a number of unauthorized disclosures and a lot of handwringing over the government's role in the effort to try to uncover these terrorists, there have been some policy and legal and other actions that are taken that make our ability collectively internationally to find these terrorists much more challenging," Brennan said.

He didn't mention any names, but one in particular hung unspoken in the air: Edward Snowden.

Brennan seemed to give voice publicly to what dozens of his colleagues have argued privately, that a chain of events starting with the Snowden leaks in 2013 has worked their efforts to stop terrorist attacks. Following the disclosures, some European governments moved to enact stricter data protection rules seen as a bulwark against American surveillance. And the European Court of Justice recently invalidated an agreement that allows the free-flow of personal information from European countries to the U.S., based on allegations of surveillance found in press article based on Snowden's leaks.

"I do hope that this is going to be a wake-up call, particularly in areas of Europe where I think there has been a misrepresentation of what the intelligence security services are doing by some quarters that are designed to undercut those capabilities," Brennan said.

Paris attack suspects: what do we know about them?, The Guardian

The Guardian
2015 11 17

French authorities have said seven attackers died while carrying out Friday night's terror attacks, while one other believed to be "directly involved" in the bloodshed is on the run. Belgian authorities have arrested seven other men in connection with the attacks.

Four have been officially named – three of the dead attackers, and the wanted man – but details have emerged about others suspected of involvement. Among them are three brothers: one dead, one arrested and one on the run.

The alleged mastermind

French officials have named Abdelhamid Abaaoud, a 27-year-old Belgian linked to a Brussels-based terror cell, as the alleged mastermind of the Paris attacks. He remains at large and is believed to be in Syria.

Abaaoud was also linked by French officials to the thwarted attacks on a Paris-bound high-speed train in August and a foiled plot to attack a church in Paris in April. The French newspaper Libération also linked Abaaoud to Sid Ahmed Ghlam, a French student charged with murder, attempted murder and terror offences.

It is alleged that documents found at Ghlam's home and results from a search of his computer and telephone suggested that he was in contact with a French speaker in Syria who had ordered him to carry out an attack on a church.

Abaaoud has been described as the alleged ringleader of a Belgian terror cell, which the authorities tried to destroy in January, days after the Charlie Hebdo attacks in Paris. The counter-terror raids led to the arrests of 13 jihadis in Belgium – however, Abaaoud remained at large.

In July, Abaaoud was sentenced in absentia to 20 years in prison for recruiting Islamic State fighters to Syria. He was among 32 people charged in Belgium with running one of Belgium's largest jihadist recruitment networks, although many of the defendants – including Abaaoud – were tried in absentia and remain at large.

Abaaoud was also accused of kidnapping after his younger brother Younes travelled to Syria in January 2014 at the age of 13 and earned the media nickname of "the youngest jihadist in the world." Their father Omar Abaaoud, having heard no news from his two sons, filed a police complaint against the older son, AFP reported in May.

He is known to have spent time fighting alongside Islamic State in Syria, arriving in the wartorn country in January this year. He was known to security forces after appearing in an Isis video at the wheel of a car transporting mutilated bodies to a mass grave.

VTM, a Flemish-language channel, reported that Abaaoud made calls from Greece to the brother of one of two heavily armed suspects killed in Verviers during the counter-terrorism raids in January.

In an interview with the Isis magazine Dabiq in February, Abaaoud boasted that he had been able to plot attacks against the west under the nose of Belgian intelligence agencies.

Abaaoud, also known as Abu Umar al-Baljiki, said he and two fellow jihadis wanted to “terrorise the crusaders waging war against the Muslims”.

Posing for photographs holding an Isis flag and the Qur'an, the bearded militant said he and two fellow fighters travelled to Belgium to wage jihad in the country.

Abaaoud revealed that he was stopped during the journey by “an officer” after a picture of him fighting for Isis was published in Belgian media. He added, however, that the officer “let me go, as he did not see the resemblance”. It is not clear when or where this police intervention is said to have taken place.

Asked by the magazine why he became a suspect, Abaaoud said: “The intelligence knew me from before as I had been previously imprisoned by them. After the raid on the safe house, they figured out that I had been with the brothers and that we had been planning operations together. So they gathered intelligence agents from all over the world – from Europe and America – in order to detain me.

“They arrested Muslims in Greece, Spain, France, and Belgium in order to apprehend me... All those arrested were not even connected to our plans! May Allah release all Muslims from the prisons of these crusaders.”

He boasted that he had been able to plan terror attacks against westerners while living in Belgium and being wanted by intelligence agencies. Some time later, he travelled to Syria.

“I was able to leave... despite being chased by so many intelligence agencies,” he told the magazine. “All this proves that a Muslim should not fear the bloated image of the crusader intelligence.

“My name and picture were all over the news yet I was able to stay in their homeland, plan operations against them, and leave safely when doing so became necessary. I ask Allah to accept the fruitful deeds of the shuhada’ who terrorised the crusaders of America, France, Canada, Australia, Germany, and Belgium.”

The Bataclan attackers

1. Omar Ismaïl Mostefai was the first attacker named by French authorities. The 29-year-old is of Algerian heritage and grew up in Courcouronnes, just south of Paris; he had a criminal record for petty offences. He was identified by prints taken from a severed finger found in the Bataclan concert hall, where he detonated his explosives belt.

French intelligence took note of Mostefai when he began spending time at a mosque with radical links in 2010, but they lost track of him in 2013, when he may have travelled to Syria, the Washington Post reported. Turkish authorities said he entered the country in 2013 and there is no record of him leaving. His brother said they had not spoken for years, but he is still being questioned by police along with six others, including Mostefai's father and sister-in-law.

Turkish authorities said they notified France twice about Mostefai – in December 2014 and June this year – after French officials requested information on his whereabouts on 10 October last year. Officials in Ankara said they never heard back from their French counterparts on the matter until after the Paris attacks, when they received another information request about Mostefai.

In 2010, Mostefai had been the subject of a police "S" file for radicalisation, but the state prosecutor said he had never been implicated in membership of a terrorist organisation. Police are reported to be investigating whether Mostefai travelled to Syria from 2013–2014. The local paper, Le Journal du Centre, reported that Mostefai attended a mosque in Lucé, a town that borders Chartres, and may have followed a radical Belgium-based Islamist who visited the mosque.

2. Samy Amimour, a 28-year-old Frenchman, was named on Monday as the other suicide bomber at the Bataclan. Born on 15 October 1987 in Paris, from the north-eastern suburb of Drancy, Amimour reportedly worked as a bus driver in Paris until 2012. Also that year, he was allegedly charged in a terrorism investigation and placed under judicial supervision. However, he dropped off the radar and was the subject of an international arrest warrant. Amimour's father, Mohamed, 67, went to Syria last year to try bring his son home – but was unsuccessful. Mohamed told Le Monde in December 2014 that he had an "extremely cold reunion" with his son in Syria in June last year and was unable to convince him to return. Samy had been injured and was on crutches during the brief reunion, Mohamed said: "Samy was with another guy who never left us alone. It was an extremely cold reunion and he did not take me to his house, did not tell me how he's been injured [or] if he had fought." Three of his family and friends were arrested in pre-dawn counter-terrorism raids on Monday.

The Stade de France attackers

3. Another attacker who lived in Belgium was named by the Washington Post as Bilal Hadfi, although he has not yet been officially identified by French prosecutors. The 20-year-old is thought to have fought for Islamic State in Syria, the paper said, but did not give his nationality. Belgian reports suggest Hadfi was from Neder-over-Heembeek, in north Brussels, and became quickly radicalised last year. He is said to have gone to Syria in spring this year, according to Belgian newspaper Het Laatste Nieuws.

4. Another attacker who detonated his explosive vest outside the Stade de France stadium was carrying a Syrian passport in the name of Ahmad Almohammad, aged 25, from Idlib. A statement from the prosecutor's office said the passport "remains to be verified, but that the fingerprints matched those of someone who entered Europe through the Greek island of Leros in October. The Serbian newspaper Blic said he crossed into the country on 7 October, having arrived four days earlier in Leros. The paper also reported that French security officials had asked their Serbian counterparts for help as the man had been registered in the southern Serbian town of Preševo. A Greek newspaper, Protothema, said he was travelling with a second man, Mohammed Almuhammed, and published pictures purporting to show their travel documents. As ever, such details are hard to verify. It cannot be ruled out that the men were travelling under false documents – the Guardian has previously reported on the burgeoning trade in fake and stolen passports.

Suspect on the run

5. Salah Abdeslam went on the run after the attacks. He is the subject of an international police hunt after the Police Nationale issued a wanted notice for the 26-year-old on Sunday. Abdeslam is thought to have rented the black Volkswagen Polo used by the group that attacked the Bataclan concert hall, the Associated Press reported. He was born and lived in Belgium, although French police have described him as a French national. In the hours after the attacks, French police stopped Abdeslam and two other men close to the border with Belgium, but allowed them to go on their way because their names were not at that stage on any wanted list.

Boulevard Voltaire attacker

6. Brahim Abdeslam, the brother of the fugitive attacker Salah Abdeslam, was identified by prosecutors as the man who rented a Seat vehicle used in the attacks. He carried out the suicide attack at the Comptoir Voltaire cafe. Brahim, 31, was a French national based in Belgium.

Others

Belgian authorities on Monday released five out of the seven suspects who were arrested at the weekend after the Paris attacks, including the brother of one of the suicide bombers, prosecutors said. Mohamed Abdeslam – whose brother Ibrahim took part in the attacks and whose other brother Salah is being hunted by police – was freed “without being charged”, a spokesman for the prosecutor’s office told AFP.

Several people were also detained in anti-terrorist raids in Toulouse, Grenoble, Jeumont and Bobigny overnight on Sunday, but it is unclear whether any of these are directly connected to the Paris attacks. The Toulouse arrests are not said to be directly linked, but were carried out under the national state of emergency declared by President François Hollande after the Friday night attacks.

ISIS Is Using Everything From Encryption To PlayStations To Avoid Being Spied On, BuzzFeed News

BuzzFeed News
Sheera Frenkel
2015 11 16

New York - In the week leading up to the attack on Paris, which ISIS has claimed responsibility for, at least four different intelligence agencies warned French officials about a possible attack on “Western targets.”

“We know of three agencies who passed on these warnings — we were one of them,” said an Israeli diplomat, who acknowledged the intelligence they passed on did not include specific targets for an attack or a date. Jordanian officials told BuzzFeed News they had also sent

France a warning, less than a week ago, while Iraqi and Turkish officials have said that they passed on more specific intelligence to French authorities.

"It is fair to say that France was warned," said the Israeli diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the press. "But it is also safe to say France had been warned almost weekly for six months. That was what the chatter was telling us."

That chatter is the focus of intelligence agencies this week, as they try to figure out what they missed in the months leading up to ISIS's plan for a complex attack in Paris which left 129 people dead and over 350 wounded. Western intelligence agencies say it is clear there was an intelligence failure, but what is less clear is how to monitor a group like ISIS, which has become increasingly savvy about its online communications, encrypting messages and using a variety of platforms ranging from Tor — the browser helps mask location by bouncing it around a free, worldwide network — to the PlayStation gaming network, on which 110 million users regularly communicate, allowing militants to easily hide in plain sight. Speaking from the G20 summit in Antalya, Turkey, President Obama said that the intelligence on hand before the Paris attacks was not specific enough to "allow for law enforcement or military actions to disrupt it."

"The concerns about potential ISIL attacks in the West have been there for over a year now. And they come through periodically. There were no specific mentions of this particular attack that would give us a sense of something that we need — that we could provide French authorities, for example, or act on ourselves," said Obama.

"ISIL, overall, has a very high level of awareness of operational security," said a U.S. intelligence official who spoke to BuzzFeed News from Jordan, using the acronym for ISIS preferred by the United States. He could not be quoted on the record as he was not authorized to speak to the press. "We've seen militant groups before where maybe the highest echelon are encrypting everything, and only using secure networks. ISIL, at least from mid-2014 onwards, when they declared themselves a caliphate, has used every tool at their disposal to mask communications from the bottom up," he said.

ISIS is hardly the first militant group to consider encryption technology: In papers captured during the U.S. raid on Osama bin Laden's compound a letter was found addressed to bin Laden from an individual identified as "brother Azmarai" which read, "We should be careful not to send big secrets by email. We should assume that the enemy can see these emails and [we should] only send through email information that can bring no harm if the enemy reads it. Computer science is not our science and we are not the ones who invented it."

Those tools range from the most basic — using encrypted messaging platforms such as WhatsApp and Kik — to the more advanced use of gaming platforms to share messages between ISIS leadership in Iraq and Syria and cells awaiting orders in the West. U.S., Israeli, and Jordanian officials who spoke to BuzzFeed News over the weekend said they were aware of the methods and admitted that even though they had the ability to spy on some of that technology, it was like "looking for a needle in a haystack."

The U.S. intelligence officer told BuzzFeed News that ISIS had shown a surprising flexibility to switch between platforms, recently adopting the privacy-centric Telegram app to set up challenges and deliver messages to over 10,000 followers. Telegram co-founder Pavel Durov recently told TechCrunch that the app is seeing 12 billion messages sent out daily via the platform. In his interview with Techcrunch, Durov seemed aware that his app had become popular among militant groups, including al-Qaeda and ISIS.

"I think that privacy, ultimately, and our right for privacy is more important than our fear of bad things happening like terrorism," Durov said, adding that if it wasn't his app, ISIS would find alternative platform for communicating. On Monday, Russian authorities considered a request to close access to the Telegram site.

Durov did not answer repeated requests from BuzzFeed News for comment.

One of those alternatives was highlighted on November 11, when Belgium's federal home affairs minister, Jan Jambon, said that a PlayStation 4 (PS4) console could be used by ISIS to communicate with their operatives abroad.

"PlayStation 4 is even more difficult to keep track of than WhatsApp," said Jambon, referencing to the secure messaging platform.

It remains unclear, however, how ISIS would have used PS4s, though options range from the relatively direct methods of sending messages to players or voice-chatting, to more elaborate methods cooked up by those who play games regularly. Players, for instance, can use their weapons during a game to send a spray of bullets onto a wall, spelling out whole sentences to each other.

In addition to using sophisticated methods to mask its communications, ISIS makes sure the message is often a code, pre-arranged and known only to the operatives involved.

"Today, intelligence agencies have the ability to intercept specific encrypted messages and decrypt them, given time and reason to do so," said the U.S. intelligence officer. "But if they do this, if they intercept the message and the message reads only one word, 'tomorrow' or even, 'the weather is good,' how does that help us? We might be warned that something is happening but we don't know where or when."

Even as intelligence agencies increase efforts to monitor the myriad platforms on which ISIS is communicating, ISIS can quickly shift and switch tactics. Jordanian and U.S. officials say the most critical intelligence they are lacking is the information gathered by human sources (HUMINT), rather than information gathered by intercepting signals (SIGINT) to monitor emails and phone calls.

"If you imagine the regular flow of SIGINT communication as an ocean where you are trying to find, and swim with, a certain school of fish, deciphering encrypted communication is like trying to find a specific fish in the ocean," said the Israeli diplomat, who has previously worked closely with his country's intelligence services. "It can be done, but you need to know exactly what you are looking for."

Alleged mastermind mocked Western security agencies after earlier terror plot, Globe and Mail

Tu Thanh Ha

17 November 2015

The Globe and Mail

No media-shy man, the alleged mastermind behind the Paris attacks gave an interview this year to a jihadi magazine in which he bragged about outwitting European law enforcement.

Abdelhamid Abaaoud also tipped his hat to those who had attacked Canada and other Western countries. "I ask Allah to accept the fruitful deeds of the shuhada [martyrs] who terrorized the crusaders of America, France, Canada, Australia, Germany and Belgium," he said at the end of the interview.

His remarks appeared in the February issue of Dabiq, the glossy propaganda magazine of the group calling itself the Islamic State (IS). That interview and a gruesome video in which he can be seen in IS-controlled Syria at the wheel of a pickup truck, smiling as his vehicle dragged a pile of bodies behind him, are now in the spotlight again.

As police in France and Belgium carried out a series of raids on Monday, attention turned to the connection of the suspects to IS, which has claimed responsibility for the attacks that killed at least 129 people in Paris on Friday.

According to French media, investigators believe that the 27-year-old Mr. Abaaoud is a key figure in the plot, citing his ties to Salah Abdeslam, another Belgian national wanted by police as a suspect in the Nov. 13 attacks.

Both men have been in custody for their joint involvements in armed robberies in Belgium in 2010 and 2011, BFMTV and Le Monde reported.

Of the two, Mr. Abaaoud has the higher profile. He had already made the news for travelling to Syria to join the Islamic State, luring his teenaged brother to enlist and heading back to Belgium for a failed terror plot.

Mr. Abaaoud, one of six children of a Moroccan family, grew up in Molenbeek, the Brussels suburb that has a reputation as a nexus of Islamist activity and has been linked to four recent terrorist plots.

While a teen, he attended one of Brussels's fancier schools, the Catholic Collège Saint-Pierre, in the district of Uccle, the Belgian newspaper La Capitale reported, adding that he was remembered as "an intelligent boy who wasn't very motivated by his classes."

Mr. Abaaoud's father, Omar, runs a clothing store and has repudiated Abdelhamid, saying he has dishonoured his family by joining the Islamic State and getting involved in a terror plot against Belgium.

Abdelhamid Abaaoud appeared in a video obtained last year by two journalists working for Paris Match.

By Mr. Abaaoud's own account, a fellow jihadi had lost his camera, which "a murtadd" (apostate) later sold to journalists.

The gory video shows a cheerful Mr. Abaaoud driving a truck, towing behind him about half a dozen stiffened bodies. Wearing an Afghan pakol hat and with a GoPro camera strapped to his chest, Mr. Abaaoud jokes and tells the cameraman, "Before, we towed Jet Skis, quads, motorcycles, big trailers full of luggage and gifts for vacation. ... Now we tow the apostates and the nonbelievers. You can film now, brother, film my new trailer."

Mr. Abaaoud was in the news again after a police raid last January in the Belgian city of Verviers near the German border, where officers killed two suspected terrorists.

In his interview with Dabiq, he said he and the two men who were killed had gone to Belgium "to terrorize the crusaders waging war against the Muslims."

Because of the video, "my picture [was] all over the media, but alhamdulillah [praise be to God], the kuffar [non-believers] were blinded by Allah," he said.

He said he was even stopped by an officer who failed to notice his resemblance to the face on the video.

Mr. Abaaoud said he was able to make his way back to IS-held territory after the shootout in Verviers.

"Allah blinded their vision and I was able to leave and come to Sham [the Levant] despite being chased after by so many intelligence agencies," he said.

In words that now carry more weight after the Paris attack, he ridiculed the efforts of European counterterrorism agencies.

"A Muslim should not fear the bloated image of the crusader intelligence," he said. "My name and picture were all over the news, yet I was able to stay in their homeland, plan operations against them and leave safely when doing so became necessary."

Column—Fake passports stoke concerns, National Post

Matthew Fisher
National Post
17 November 2015

'Everyone in the world is afraid of Syrians right now,' says Mohammad Mohammed. "But that does not mean we are all terrorists."

The former clothing wholesaler, who fled his home in Edlib when extremist factions took over, was among those gathered outside Beirut's UN High Commission for Refugees Monday.

But like a million-plus other Syrians registered as refugees in Lebanon, he knows his chances could be worse since the Paris attacks last weekend.

One of the terrorists allegedly came to Europe as a Syrian refugee. Now, questions about screening procedures are being raised in many countries, including Canada, which is set to take 25,000 Syrian refugees in the next six weeks. Some groups are even calling for a cold stop to bringing Syrians across their borders.

The refugees on the street here say they understand the challenge facing anyone assessing who really is a refugee and who isn't, especially given that Lebanon and other countries in what is a notoriously tough neighbourhood are awash with dubious Syrian documents.

"Every one of us has heard about fake passports and ID cards," says Mohammed. "It is a business. Some Lebanese are buying them."

Khaled Ghazawi, who was pouring small cups of thick, sour coffee at $1 a shot, says he's seen what he believes are "fake" passports in the hands of people from seemingly everywhere - Morocco, Egypt.

The 45-year-old husband and father of six, a former grocery store manager from the brutally contested town of Daraa, says the worst are those he believes "help people get such papers."

If they are right, says Jihan Ismail, a Lebanese shop clerk, it compounds the challenge of figuring out "who is peaceful and who is a terrorist."

"It is not easy to identify terrorists," he says.

Omar Saifeddin, a fruit and vegetable salesman also from Edlib, raises his hand during the street-side discussion.

"You can see that not every finger is the same," he says. "It is like that with people, too. There are good Syrians and bad Syrians. The problem is that only God knows for sure who is good and bad."

Pouring more coffee for the growing crowd, Ghazawi says he understands the latest terror attacks claimed by ISIL "will, of course, have an effect on how foreign governments view us."

He believes the solution for countries willing to accept Syrian refugees is "really good clearances so you know who the people are that you are accepting. Remember there are many other ways for Daesh (the Arabic acronym for the terrorists) to reach where they want to go other than claiming to be refugees."

The men also insist taking in current Syrian refugees from Lebanon is a safe prospect: Lebanon ordered the UNHCR to stop registering Syrian refugees about a year ago, and "terrorists won't want to wait around for years to see if they can go somewhere," said one.

Mohammed adds he thinks the fear many countries have of refugees is misplaced.

"Canada's problem is not with Syrian refugees," he says. "There were French citizens involved in this too, so why aren't Canadians afraid of them? It is that Daesh is already in many centres overseas - they boast that they are in Canada, too, and I am sure that they are right."

Meanwhile, Radia Zammar, who had brought her four-year-old granddaughter with her to the UNHCR compound, hadn't heard about the terror attacks in Beirut or Paris.

"I am an uneducated woman," she said. "I have only come here today to beg for help for my daughter who requires kidney dialysis. I am afraid that she is going to die. My son-in-law Ahmed Hajar disappeared last year in Syria and we believe he is dead."

" S " comme " sans résultats ", Sud Ouest

ANALYSE La plupart des terroristes qui sont passés à l'acte ces dernières années faisaient l'objet d'une fiche " S ".

Sud Ouest

Toutes éditions

mardi 17 novembre 2015, p. Périgueux-C1_6

DOMINIQUE RICHARD

Ce n'est pas une surprise : plusieurs des auteurs des attentats de Paris étaient connus des organes de renseignement, voire de la justice. Comme précédemment Mohamed Merah, Mehdi Nemmouche, Amedy Coulibaly ou Yassin Salhi, ces tueurs qui, de Toulouse au Musée juif de Bruxelles, de l'Hyper Cacher de Paris à Saint-Quentin-Fallavier, en Isère, ont semé la terreur.

Tous faisaient l'objet de la fameuse fiche " S ", la balise policière qui signale les individus susceptibles de menacer la sécurité de l'État. En France, la base de données relative aux personnes suspectées de radicalisation comporterait près de 10 000 noms.

Souvent critiqué, le système d'information européen Schengen a permis de l'étoffer du fait de la mutualisation des informations entre services. Bien que résident espagnol, le Marocain Ayoub el-Khazzani, l'agresseur du train Thalys, avait été signalé au printemps lorsqu'il avait pris de Berlin l'avion pour Istanbul.

Cible idéale

Cette fiche " S ", qui n'est pas systématiquement consultée lors des vérifications d'identité, n'a rien d'une botte secrète. En aucun cas, elle ne peut déboucher sur une arrestation ou une mesure coercitive. Pour ne pas éveiller l'attention, les forces de l'ordre sont d'ailleurs priées de rester discrètes lors des contrôles. Priorité est donnée au recueil d'informations sur les allées et venues des suspects potentiels.

En pratique, la collecte, même quand elle n'est pas freinée par des zizanies entre services, survient souvent avec un temps de retard. Au regard de l'importance de la population à surveiller, de son nomadisme et de l'afflux de candidats au djihad, les 3 500 agents de la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) sont débordés.

" J'ai la conviction que les jours les plus sombres sont devant nous ", avertissait le 30 septembre dernier le juge antiterroriste Marc Trévidic au moment où, au terme des 10 ans autorisés, il était contraint de quitter ses fonctions (lire en page 5). Du fait de sa position géographique, des facilités d'entrée sur son territoire de djihadistes d'origine européenne, de sa politique étrangère, qui en fait l'allié du " grand Satan " américain, et de la fascination qu'exerce ce mouvement barbare sur une frange de la jeunesse issue de l'immigration, la France constitue presque la cible idéale.

Paradoxalement, elle n'a jamais été si désarmée, ses dispositifs policiers et judiciaires ne s'étant pas adaptés à la montée des périls. Ce que reconnaissent, entre les lignes, François Hollande et Manuels Valls en laissant entendre que le pire peut se reproduire à tout moment.

Les juges de côté

En décrétant l'état d'urgence sur tout le territoire et en invitant hier le Parlement à voter une loi qui prolongera ce dispositif de trois mois, du jamais-vu depuis la guerre d'Algérie, le gouvernement contourne la justice. Les préfets auront désormais la possibilité de " taper dans le fichier S " et d'ordonner des perquisitions et des assignations à résidence.

De quoi malmener l'État de droit. Mais peut-on critiquer cette mesure alors que, selon les mots mêmes du juge Trévidic, Daesh, le monstre que la France et les États occidentaux ont laissé se développer, peut à tout moment déclencher un 11 Septembre sur le territoire national ? Les premiers résultats des opérations engagées hier matin dans 19 départements ne sont pas anodins. Plus de 100 personnes présumées dangereuses sont désormais sous surveillance, des armes de guerre ont été saisies dans le Rhône, illustrant une fois de plus la connexion entre le banditisme et l'islamisme radical.

Espionnage légal

Imperceptiblement, la notion de " dangerosité supposée ", qui a émergé à l'époque du quinquennat de Nicolas Sarkozy, continue à se glisser dans les textes. L'emploi des outils d'espionnage survient désormais légalement avant toute saisine du juge. Les pouvoirs de la DGSI ont été considérablement renforcés lors du vote de la dernière loi sur le renseignement.

En annonçant hier des recrutements massifs aussi bien dans la justice que dans les services d'enquête, François Hollande s'est bien gardé de dire si la crise actuelle allait définitivement déplacer le curseur au détriment des juges, garants des libertés individuelles, mais aussi de l'efficacité des enquêtes.

Si le cas de Mohamed Merah, initialement signalé à sa hiérarchie par un policier toulousain, avait été transmis au parquet, sept personnes auraient peut-être eu la vie sauve.

Remarks for CIA Director John O. Brennan as Prepared for Delivery at the Center for Strategic & International Studies Global Security Forum 2015, CIA Press Office

November 16, 2015

Thank you very much, John, for those kind words and thank you for inviting me to speak this morning at CSIS's Global Security Forum. I had the pleasure of speaking at CSIS when I was at the White House serving as Assistant to the President for Homeland Security and Counterterrorism, and it is a privilege to come back to share some thoughts with you on some of the major global challenges our country faces today.

I also want to express publicly my deep appreciation to John Hamre, who has led CSIS for nearly 16 years and who is certainly one of the leading lights in the field of national security. After a distinguished government career, John has continued to make important contributions to our national security, and I think I speak for all of us in thanking him for adding such wisdom and value to the public conversation on global issues. [Applaud]

In many respects, CSIS shares the mission of our Intelligence Community: to help policymakers identify, understand, and—hopefully—successfully address the myriad national security issues that our Nation faces in a dynamic and very dangerous world.

A very dangerous world, indeed.

My opening remarks this morning are different from those I reviewed and finalized in the early afternoon of last Friday. They are different because our sensibilities and our souls have been jarred once again by the horrific and wanton violence perpetrated upon the innocent in the streets, cafes, and concert halls of the beautiful city of Paris. Our hearts ache for the scores killed and injured in those savage attacks, and our thoughts and prayers are with them and their families. Likewise, our condolences and our prayers go out to those killed in the crash of the Russian airliner a little over two weeks ago in the Sinai, Egypt.

And while we await confirmation of culpability for these tragedies, they each bear the hallmarks of terrorism carried out by the so-called Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, or ISIL, an organization of murderous sociopaths that carries out its criminal and morally depraved actions under bogus religious pretense. With its roots in al-Qa'ida in Iraq, and empowered by a large influx of foreign adherents, ISIL over the past several years has swallowed up large swaths of territory in Iraq and Syria, brutally killing thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children along the way. Not content to limiting its killing fields to Iraqi and Syrian lands and to setting up local franchises in other countries of the Middle East, South Asia, and Africa, ISIL has developed an external operations agenda that it is now implementing with lethal effect.

I am sure that we will talk more about ISIL in the question and answer session, but let me note that the grave threat posed by the phenomenon of ISIL makes it absolutely imperative that the international community urgently commit to achieving an even greater and unprecedented level of cooperation, collaboration, information sharing, and joint action—in intelligence, law enforcement, military, and diplomatic channels. The ISIL threat demands it.

At CIA, we work closely with foreign intelligence security services around the globe to advance our shared counterterrorism goals. Over the course of many years, we have forged broad and deep partnerships with our closest allies in Europe such as Great Britain, France, and many, many others. These strategic relationships have been instrumental in helping to knit together a transnational architecture that allows counterterrorism officials and experts to work closely together across sovereign borders to disrupt terrorist plans and activities. And while many terrorist operations have been thwarted as a result of strong transnational teamwork, tragically, not all terrorist plans are uncovered in time.

These strategic counterterrorism relationships need to stretch far beyond the traditional trans-Atlantic environment and alliances, which is why we are working closely with so many services in different parts of the world.

For instance, we are working very closely with our Egyptian partners, who are working tirelessly to prevent ISIL terrorists from launching attacks that are aimed at derailing Egypt's political reform initiatives and economic development objectives. I reiterated our commitment to strengthening our counterterrorism partnership with Cairo in a call to my Egyptian counterpart this past weekend.

And while Washington and Moscow have significant policy differences on how best to bring the bloodshed in Syria to a close, I have had several conversations with one of my Russian counterparts over the past several weeks about ways to strengthen U.S.-Russian counterterrorism cooperation, specifically on the ISIL threat.

These relationships are an essential adjunct to diplomacy and military operations. By working with our foreign partners, we enhance global security by helping them tackle challenges that threaten us all. And we benefit from a wider net of collection and from the insights of local services, all of which enhance the intelligence we provide to policymakers.

The fact is, good intelligence—timely, accurate, and insightful—is the cornerstone of almost every aspect of national security policy today, from military action to diplomacy to international law enforcement.

With good intelligence, our policymakers can better understand the risks, challenges, and opportunities attendant to key national security issues, which is ever-more important given the unprecedentedly complex and overlapping array of major challenges to US and global security that we face today.

The impression one might get from the daily headlines is that the world has become more unstable. And indeed, the historical record supports that judgment.

In the past three years, there have been more outbreaks of instability than at any time since the collapse of the Soviet Union, matching the rate we saw during decolonization in the 1960s. This has not just been a period of protests and government change, but of violent insurgency and, in particular, of breakdowns in many states' ability to govern.

Ongoing conflicts in Syria, Iraq, Ukraine, Yemen, Libya, and parts of Africa are clear examples. The human toll is reflected in the UN's recent announcement that the number of refugees and internally displaced persons in the world is the highest it has been since World War II. And of course, all this localized strife gives rise to the persistent threat of international terrorism.

When CIA analysts look for deeper causes of this rising instability, they find nationalistic, sectarian, and technological factors that are eroding the structure of the international system. They also see socioeconomic trends, the impact of climate change, and other elements that are cause for concern. Let me touch upon a couple of them.

First, the ideas, institutions, and states that have undergirded the post-Cold War system are under significant stress. It is easy to think of this as a phenomenon confined to the developing world, and that is certainly where we see states that have actually failed, and borders that no longer carry any practical effect, such as the border between Syria and Iraq. But there is considerable stress on governments in even the world's most stable regions.

In Europe, for instance, the migration crisis, sluggish economic growth, and a host of other factors have given rise to heightened nationalism, secession movements, and the increasing popularity of political parties on both the far-right and far-left. Even ideas that were the pillars of the Continent's postwar prosperity—such as economic integration and democracy itself—are being questioned in some quarters.

Across the globe, in both authoritarian and democratic societies, governments are finding it increasingly difficult to meet the demands—realistic or not—of their skeptical and restive populaces. The so-called Arab Spring revolutions were not fought for democracy per se as much as they were fought for relief from regimes that had failed to meet basic standards of governance and civil society.

And as we have seen, when people become disillusioned with the powers that be, social media enable them to more quickly and easily form associations that defy the status quo. And in part, that is why the global landscape has been changing at a faster, more disruptive pace.

How nations respond to these challenges, adapt to them, and evolve will be one of the great plot lines of this century.

When I meet with my foreign counterparts—from both friendly and not-so-friendly governments—I sense a very real apprehension about instability and its various manifestations: terrorism, humanitarian crises, proliferation, and so on. Interestingly, I hear these concerns even from officials representing governments whose policies are quite arguably contributing to the problem.

In Europe, anxiety has risen in states along Russia's periphery after Moscow demonstrated its willingness to use military and paramilitary forces in Ukraine. And in the South China Sea, tensions persist as China unilaterally pursues its territorial claims, including actions that rival claimants perceive as violating their sovereignty.

At the same time, the principle of democratic governance is under siege. For the ninth consecutive year, Freedom House in 2014 reported more declines than gains in the quality of democracy worldwide. Worsening ethno-sectarian and socioeconomic strains are eroding democracy, as is the rise of a more sophisticated form of authoritarianism that forgoes brute force and heavy-handed propaganda in favor of media manipulation, ubiquitous surveillance, criminalization of dissent, and controlled elections.

Second, the resumption of strong, sustained growth in the wake of the 2008 financial crash and Eurozone crisis has been elusive for some of the world's largest economies. Even China's economy, with its seemingly endless potential for growth, is slowing.

In many developing societies, growing pessimism about the prospects for economic advancement is fueling instability. Regions with burgeoning youth populations, such as the Arab world, have been unable to achieve the growth needed to reduce high unemployment rates. Perceptions of growing inequality have resulted in more assertive street politics and populism. At the same time, slower growth has left these nations with fewer resources to devote to economic, humanitarian, and peacekeeping assistance to address these challenges.

Mankind's relationship with the natural world is aggravating these problems and is a potential source of crisis itself. Last year was the warmest on record, and this year is on track to be even warmer.

Extreme weather, along with public policies affecting food and water supplies, can worsen or create humanitarian crises. Of most immediate concern, sharply reduced crop yields in multiple places simultaneously could trigger a shock in food prices with devastating effect, especially in already fragile regions such as Africa, the Middle East, and South Asia. Compromised access to food and water greatly increases the prospect for famine and deadly epidemics.

And finally, the rapid advance of information technology has given rise to an entirely new and wide-open domain for human interaction and progress: the cyber realm.

As an intelligence officer, much of my job involves dealing with the unintended consequences of the cyber revolution. For as much as it brings the world together, it also serves the purposes of those who wish us harm.

Of greatest concern, the cyber realm gives small groups and even individuals the potential to inflict damage on a scale previously restricted to nation-states. And while states are largely rational actors subject to deterrence, the same does not apply to terrorists and criminals.

Both government and private networks are under constant attack. The Department of Homeland Security reports that more than 640,000 cyber-related incidents affected federal agencies in fiscal year 2014. The massive and prolonged hacking of employee records held by the Office of Personnel Management underscores the intensity of assaults on government IT systems. And I am all too familiar with the ease with which miscreant hackers can use social engineering techniques to perpetrate criminal intrusions into personal email accounts and information technology and communication systems.

Unfortunately, there is every reason to expect cyber intrusions to increase in quantity, cunning, and impact. For one thing, the economics of cyber attacks are skewed to favor the attacker.

"Exploits," or malicious software tools, are easily acquired. In fact, their prices are falling dramatically in some criminal markets, not because of declining demand but because of an increasingly competitive marketplace. These exploits can be reused on multiple targets, and the likelihood of detection and punishment remains low.

And while the vast majority of cyber attacks target money, proprietary information, and privacy itself, we need to realize that the range of potential targets is much greater. We simply cannot discount the very real possibility of attacks against vital infrastructure—utilities, transportation, and other essential underpinnings of modern civilization.

The world has changed dramatically since I first raised my hand and swore an oath of allegiance to the United States Government as a 24-year old newly minted CIA officer eager to make a difference in August of 1980. I remember vividly taking a seat at my first desk on the sixth floor of our Langley Headquarters, putting my fingers not on the keyboard of a computer but on the keys of an electric typewriter, which was quite high tech at the time.

Thirty-five years later, our lives as well as our fingers are inextricably linked to the cyber realm—the new digital frontier, where most human interactions, transactions, and communications take place. And while that digital environment holds tremendous potential and opportunity for the further advancement of humanity, our increasing dependence on it brings obvious risks and challenges.

To deal with those risks and challenges, reactive strategies are insufficient. There has to be systematic learning, informed by constant information sharing, so that one organization's detection becomes another's prevention.

In other words, countering cyber threats is very much a team effort. And a crucial point to bear in mind is that about 85 percent of the Worldwide Web's critical infrastructure is held by the private sector. This is a privately owned and operated environment in which the rules remain uncertain at best.

A number of federal efforts in recent years have promoted the sharing of cyber threat information between the private sector and government. DHS and FBI, for example, have programs to share cyber threat information with a broad community of industry stakeholders.

We should be sharing a lot more information than we are as a nation, but programmatic, technical, and legal challenges—as well as concerns about privacy and the role of government—have hampered progress. Congress over the past few years has tried, so far without success, to pass laws addressing the need for comprehensive cyber policy, especially on information sharing.

The fact is, 20th century laws cannot effectively deal with 21st century threats.

Within the past few weeks, the Senate passed the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act, or CISA, which is roughly similar to two bills passed in the House. We may see a conferenced bill by early next year, which would be an important step forward.

And as our country deals with this issue—and, specifically, the security and privacy concerns that revolve around information sharing—it is important to note that security and privacy are not mutually exclusive. The benefits of improved information sharing can be achieved in a manner that protects privacy and civil liberties.

My hope is that America—ideally, along with our allies—can eventually adopt a comprehensive legal and operational approach to this threat without being forced to by a catastrophic cyber attack, in the same way that 9/11 forced our country to integrate its national security assets in a more rational and effective way against terrorism.

Shortly after I returned to the Agency some two-and-a-half years ago, I started to consider what we could do to ensure that CIA is well-prepared for both the opportunities and challenges of the future. The digital world stood out as an area that required special attention.

When I asked a group of our senior officers last fall to ponder the Agency's future and come back with a strategic plan, they agreed that we had to do a much better job of embracing and leveraging the digital revolution. Consequently, one of the pillars of the modernization program we launched last March was the addition of a fifth Directorate as part of the biggest change to CIA's structure in five decades: the Directorate of Digital Innovation.

This new Directorate is at the center of the Agency's effort to hasten the adoption of digital solutions into every aspect of our work. It is responsible for accelerating the integration of our digital and cyber capabilities across all our mission areas—espionage, all-source analysis, open source intelligence, and covert action.

Multiple elements of the Agency in the past have responded to the challenges of the digital era. But if we are to excel in the wired world, we must place our activities and operations in the digital domain at the very center of all our endeavors.

Our new digital directorate was launched last month, and we expect it to contribute enormously to every facet of our global mission. Alongside our partners across the Intelligence Community, we at CIA will be more capable and effective in safeguarding our country from the full range of threats we face beyond our borders.

Let me conclude by saying what I always say to each new class of Agency officers to whom I administer the oath of office every month in our Headquarters lobby. I have the absolutely best job in the world, because I work each day with some of the most dedicated, talented, courageous, and patriotic individuals this country has to offer. And, in light of the nature and scope of the national security challenges I just highlighted, the need for the contributions of these individuals has never been greater.

Thank you, and I'll be happy to take your questions.

Attaques terroristes à Paris/ Paris Terrorist Attacks

(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Wednesday, November 18 2015

le mercredi 18 novembre 2015

09:00 / 9 h00

Highlights/Faits saillants.....	1
Service Mentions/Mentions du Service	2
Ottawa seeks to ease fears over refugees, Globe and Mail	2
Transcript: "Turning Point" panel: The fight against ISIS, CBC The National.....	4
Syrian refugees will face three levels of intense screening, Toronto Star.....	12
Column—Refugee plan needs a rethink; Take in more over longer period, National Post	14
Canada	16
Video threatening Muslims in Quebec surfaces, Montreal Gazette	16
Anonymous goes to war, Ottawa Sun.....	17
Other/Autres	20
Raid Near Paris Erupts in Gunfire as Police Move In, New York Times.....	20
A Saint-Denis, l'assaut contre les terroristes, Le Monde	23
Fabien Clain, la voix des attentats de Paris, Le Monde.....	26
Attacks To Fuel Spying Debate, Wall Street Journal.....	31
Is the United States safe from a Paris-style Islamic State attack?, Washington Post.....	33
Former Al Qaeda Terrorist: Another Attack Coming in 'Two Weeks', Fox News	36
Paris attacks: lax EU watchlist lets jihadists travel freely from Syria to Europe, UK Telegraph	36
Recherche renseignement humain désespérément, Le Point.....	39
'Mastermind' was on drone strike list, UK Times (Canada)	40
Analysis-How Belgium became a breeding ground for international terrorists, The Guardian	41

Highlights/Faits saillants

- L'enquête sur les attentats de Paris a mené les enquêteurs de la Syrie à la Belgique, souligne Le Monde. « Mais c'est finalement sur un appartement de Saint-Denis que les policiers du RAID ont lancé l'assaut, mercredi 18 novembre, à 4 h 20 du matin. » L'affrontement a été violent : une femme est morte en déclenchant son gilet d'explosifs et un autre suspect est décédé lors de l'échange de tirs. Cinq personnes ont été interpellées et placées en garde à vue. Cinq policiers du RAID ont été blessés. Mercredi, en milieu de matinée, les policiers n'avaient pas encore pu totalement investir l'appartement, gravement endommagé par l'explosion et menacé d'effondrement.

- One of the Paris suicide attackers may have had an accomplice with him as he travelled through the Balkans to western Europe after entering Greece posing as a Syrian refugee, counter-intelligence and police sources tell Reuters. The true identity of the attacker has become a key line of inquiry for French investigators, with the focus on whether the passport is genuine, sources close to the investigation say.
- Le Monde trace un portrait de Fabien Clain, l'homme qui revendique les attaques commises à Paris. Clain, 37 ans, un vétéran du djihad originaire de Toulouse, proche du clan de -Mohamed Merah (l'auteur des tueries de mars 2012 à Toulouse et à Montauban) et condamné en 2009 à cinq ans de prison pour avoir animé une filière irakienne.
- Morten Storm, an ex-terrorist who later became a CIA double agent tells Fox News: "I believe that within the next two weeks, we will have an attack. The people who are on the run at the moment from ISIS in Europe are very desperate, and they know their time's up, and they will need to do as much damage as possible," he adds.
- The Guardian's Jason Burke writes that in the first half of the last decade, as European security services struggled to understand the new threat they faced, and bombs exploded in Madrid and London, Belgium was largely ignored. Given the increasingly evident role that the country has played in the Paris attacks, this now looks like a mistake

Service Mentions/Mentions du Service

Ottawa seeks to ease fears over refugees, Globe and Mail

By DANIEL LEBLANC, JANE TABER, BILL CURRY

18 November 2015

The Globe and Mail

Government says 'security is paramount' in plan to bring 25,000 Syrians to Canada by the end of the year

The Trudeau government vowed to put a premium on security as key ministers sought to ease growing concerns over Ottawa's plan to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of the year.

"Anything that we do, it's going to make sure that security is at the forefront," Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan told reporters after a cabinet committee meeting.

"Security is paramount, and we want to make sure that we get this right."

Asked whether the refugees will arrive by the end of the year as the Liberals promised during the election campaign, Immigration Minister John McCallum said: "We will welcome them well, that is to say that we will pay due regard, total regard, to issues of security and health, which means we will do it rapidly, but we will do it properly."

He added that he has spoken to dozens of provincial immigration ministers and mayors across the country, insisting he is aware of the preoccupations expressed in recent days by premiers and mayors.

"Yes, they said we had to be careful in terms of security, but that is what I have always said," Mr. McCallum said.

The heads of the RCMP, CSIS and the Canadian Forces were present as the cabinet subcommittee in charge of the refugee issue met in Ottawa on Tuesday.

Mr. McCallum and Health Minister Jane Philpott said the government's detailed plan will be made public in coming days.

Last Friday's terrorist attacks in Paris fuelled concerns across the country about the government's ability to properly screen all newcomers, with a number of political leaders calling on Ottawa to delay its plans.

Quebec City Mayor Régis Labeaume urged the government to prioritize orphans and families on Tuesday, adding Ottawa should avoid welcoming "frustrated 20-year-old guys."

"We think that bringing in families is much safer," Mr. Labeaume told reporters in Quebec City.

Mr. McCallum spoke to Mr. Labeaume about his concerns on Tuesday, in addition to meeting with members of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities' (FCM) task force on Syrian refugee resettlement.

"The minister offered further assurance that the security of Canadians continues to be the priority for the government. We remain confident the government will meet its security obligations," FCM president Raymond Louie said.

Speaking on his way to an AsiaPacific Economic Co-operation meeting in Manila, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said security was "at the very core" of the government's efforts to implement its election promise.

"One of the very first jobs of Canadian Prime Minister is to ensure the security of Canadians and of our communities and that has always been an integral part of our approach to accepting 25,000 Syrian refugees, and that continues to be an extremely high priority," Mr. Trudeau told reporters. "It didn't take the tragedies of Paris for us to suddenly realize that security's important.

We've known for a long time and we continue to be very much committed to keeping Canadians safe while we do the right thing to engage responsibly with this humanitarian crisis."

Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne reiterated her vow Tuesday to bring 10,000 refugees to the province by the end of 2016.

She said details are still being worked out with the federal government, including language training and housing for the refugees, in addition to questions of security.

"I think what we have to say is we have to be vigilant, we have to be perhaps more vigilant in terms of security measures," she said.

"We will certainly be working with the federal government to make sure all of those protections are in place. But, I believe that we can do that and we can learn from whatever this situation can teach us."

Toronto Mayor John Tory said Tuesday that he is supportive of any change the federal government wants to make to its timeline of bringing in 25,000 refugees by the end of the year.

"[Mr. Tory has] been clear that these decisions should be made not on the basis of commitments made during elections, but rather on the basis of what is practical and sensible and careful," a spokesperson for the mayor said.

Transcript: "Turning Point" panel: The fight against ISIS, CBC The National

PETER MANSBRIDGE (HOST):

CBC The National

2015 11 17

- It's a "Turning Point" on a global crisis. What did those attacks signal and what is the right response? What's the next move for ISIS? Tonight, some hard answers. Does ISIS actually crave Western retaliation? It's time for some perspective from our "Turning Point" experts. What's behind the string of recent strikes? And what happens next? Clear, hard facts on how ISIS really works and what it will take to end the threat. "The Turning Point" is next. -

Well, only four days have passed since the shock of the Paris attacks, emotions are still raw, but there is also a powerful need to understand what's really going on and how to respond. Is this a turning point in the fight against ISIS? We've lined up our usual experts. Janice Stein is a founding director of the Munk School for Global Affairs. Ray Boisvert is a former assistant director of CSIS. Saeed Khan is a Middle East historian at Wayne State University. And Samantha Nutt is the founder of War Child Canada. Their thoughts in a moment but, first, some background.

(Gunshots)

PETER MANSBRIDGE (HOST):

Paris under a cold-blooded siege, images seared into our minds, along with the grim fact that 129 people had their lives cut short, 352 others scarred and wounded. But that was just the latest in a chain of deadly attacks inspired or carried out by ISIS.

ON-SCREEN TEXT:

October 31: Sinai, Egypt. Russian plane crash: 224 killed.

November 9: Zabul, Afghanistan. 7 people beheaded.

November 12: Beirut, Lebanon. Suicide bomb kills 43, injures 239.

November 13: Baghdad, Iraq. Suicide bomb kills 26, injures 61.

PETER MANSBRIDGE (HOST):

The crash of a Russian plane in Sinai, Egypt, 224 killed. Brutal beheadings in Zabul, Afghanistan, 7 killed, including a child. Twin suicide bombings in Beirut, 43 killed, 239 injured. And just hours before the carnage in Paris, roadside bombs in Baghdad, 26 killed, 61 injured. World leaders have told us the ISIS threat was contained.

ON-SCREEN TEXT:

(ABC's "Good Morning America") Breaking news / U.S. drones target Jihadi John / ISIS executioner believed to be dead / Notorious ISIS terrorist known as "Jihadi John" believed dead after U.S. drone strike in Syria

BARACK OBAMA (PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES):

(ABC's "Good Morning America") Our goal has been first to contain and we have contained them.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Those claims now ring hollow, even as we're told how much worse it could have been.

ON-SCREEN TEXT:

Britain thwarted 7 terror attempts.

Russia stopped 2 major attacks.

United States monitoring "hundreds" of ISIS supporters.

PETER MANSBRIDGE (HOST):

Britain says it thwarted seven terror attempts in the last two weeks. In the last month, says Russia, two major attacks were defused. The U.S. says it has intensified the monitoring of hundreds of suspected ISIS supporters, yet so far this year ISIS has taken credit for more than 80 attacks outside of Iraq and Syria with a death toll in the thousands. As countries like France and the U.S. continue to target extremists in Syria, questions remain about how to fight the ISIS threat, both abroad and where we live. So what happens next? What role should Canada play? Can this war be won? And what does winning look like? All right, well, let's start the conversation then on the key question. Is Paris a game-changer? Is it a turning point in the fight against ISIS? Saeed, why don't you start us.

SAEED KHAN (WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY):

I think it is definitely a turning point and a game-changer, Peter, both for the scale and the level of sophistication. It's also important to recognize here that ISIS has now a reach into Western targets, Western capitals, and is, in fact, employing local or homegrown extremists as opposed to foreign or imported actors.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Janice?

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

I actually don't think it is. I don't think it's a game-changer for ISIS. I think it's a franchise model that's going to come back to haunt them really, and I don't think it's a game-changer in the fight against ISIS. Peter, we'll see some acceleration, but fundamentally the core elements are the same.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Ray, is it as simple as that, just an acceleration in the fight against ISIS?

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

It's certainly an intensification, no doubt. Turning point, I agree with Janice, I'm not so sure because I think it's also representative of their weakness. And I think as all these terrorist groups have done in various areas such as Pakistan and Afghanistan, at the moment of greatest pressure they strike out and then get their adherents to sort of touch different areas. So I think they'll suffer the consequences of that. If nothing else, I think at the G20 meeting there will be a lot of discussion how to unify to have greater impact to degrade them.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Well, that whole issue of unifying and the whole issue of bombing, increased bombing against ISIS, is there a danger here of some kind of overreaction, Sam?

SAMANTHA NUTT (WAR CHILD CANADA):

There is a danger of overreaction and one thing that we do know, if you look what's been happening over the past year, ISIS has gone from having an estimated 30,000-plus fighters to well over now it's believed to be more than 80,000 fighters. So the approach that we have taken up until this point, while it may have pushed them back within Iraq and Syria to certain territories, overall they have continued to grow, continued to spread, and they are demonstrating that they are able to reach well beyond their borders and mobilize people who are sympathetic to their cause. And that is inherently dangerous. So we have to watch for the overreaction here because we will, unfortunately, unwittingly in doing that, play into their hands.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

All right, I want to try and understand who ISIS is. I mean, we have been dealing with this group for some time now and yet there's confusion around who they actually are. So let's break it up a bit. Janice, who is ISIS?

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

Well, Peter, ISIS starts as a splinter group from al-Qaeda, takes advantage of the chaos in Syria to reorganize. But it's a very curious amalgam. There's a significant number of former Baathists, generals and military experts.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

These are Saddam Hussein's

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

These are Saddam Hussein's army people who were demobilized by the United States. These people are expert in logistics, they are very good tacticians and they account for a big part of the success. The other part are very religious people with a particular twist that distinguishes them from other jihadi groups. They are apocalyptic.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Sam, who else is in there?

SAMANTHA NUTT (WAR CHILD CANADA):

Well, as Janice said, it is certainly a hodgepodge of very violent actors here, but we also have to look beyond that sort of higher echelon and look at some of the young people who are joining these movements. If you look at the recent attacks in Paris, the young people in their 20s who were French nationals who made choices to go over into Syria to take on this conflict and to wage war against their home country, against the West. And we are seeing this right across the Western world. We are seeing young people who are expressing sympathy for the ISIS cause. But we're seeing that in other corners as well and it's important to remember that we are seeing that in other pockets within Africa. We are also seeing it within Afghanistan, young people who are being recruited by ISIS. Sometimes they're being paid for their services and that's one of the reasons why they're attracted to it, but also they are very much ideologically aligned. So we need to pay attention to that group of recruits as well.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Saeed, who else are you seeing?

SAEED KHAN (WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY):

Well, picking up on Sam's point of the economic incentives and Janice's point about the franchising, ISIS is operating like a corporation. It's employing Madison Avenue tactics which suggest that there are some very wealthy, very well-educated and savvy business minds as part of the head office of ISIS. We're looking at marketing tactics that are specifically targeted to different recruitment groups around the world and is able to go ahead then and harness this idea of using popular culture and consumerism in order to act. I mean, this is an operation that actually publishes a very slick annual report, so it shows how tied in they are to the corporate ethos and the corporate mentality.

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

And one other quick point, they're also brilliant at social media and video production. So these are very, very skilled and very savvy people that are in leadership positions, Peter.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

But, Ray, just what we have heard outlined there, three very different groups, disenfranchised youth, you know, wealthy backers and, you know, old generals from Saddam Hussein. What unites that group?

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

Well, for the most part I think uniting comes around one simple issue as it does all through the ages irrespective of the regime and the time and place-it's power. And power is the most important thing to have to be able to garner all the resources that are available. It's also a reflection of the sectarianism that has flourished in that part of the world. Janice's point around the dismantling of the Iraqi army, probably the single most important strategic mistake made by the U.S. government. Religion and this extremism though shouldn't be mistaken as being really the cause. It's the tool. It's the tool for making this happen very successfully. And the other tools include immediate capability and others, and also part of this interesting amalgam of people are very much a Western flavour. Some of the most talented people having the biggest impact around the media, for example, are Western foreign fighters who have gone over there and brought their skillset with them.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Does this makeup that we have described of ISIS, does that give us a clue on how the coalition that's fighting them should be fighting them, Saeed?

SAEED KHAN (WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY):

Well, definitely, Peter. I mean, instead of the isolation of looking at only one model, you hear, of course, a more reflective idea of military intervention, bombing, ground troops, et cetera. This is only going to go ahead and solve one particular element of it, perhaps cutting off the oil supply from which ISIS derives about a two-billion-dollar revenue annually. It requires looking at the corporate model and perhaps reducing its market share, understanding that its recruits are very much in the same keeping as consumers, as well as taking the political option as well. I mean, we have, of course, some negotiations which are addressing the underlying animus in both Syria and Iraq which is adding fuel to the fire and allowing ISIS to appear to be the one stable pillar within a region of immense instability.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

All right, let's talk about next moves here. First of all in terms of ISIS, Ray, you've got a situation where they seem to be losing ground in the main battle area in Iraq and some parts of Syria, and yet on the headline front they're making headlines with these actions of terrorism in different places in Europe. What's their next move, ISIS, given that combination?

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

I think that, one, they'll increase the tempo and the level of violence that they can project outside. So I think we may see more Paris-like events, but I think they'll focus on regimes nearby. I think Jordan, Lebanon, Turkey will be prime in their sights because it's easier, they have lots of followers and adherents, there are a million to a couple million refugees in each one of those countries. So as a result with that dislocation they could cause greater upheaval and, of course, create greater opportunities to expand locally. For now though they really need to get the pressure off because they are losing ground and they are suffering under these counterinsurgency and counterterrorism measures.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Janice?

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

I think they're in a tough spot, so that's encouraging news, actually.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Tough spot because of the ground they're losing?

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

That's right. And I think we're on the cusp of some major new ground offences, particularly from the Kurdish peshmergas who are the only fighters who have actually delivered. And those are the peshmergas, Peter, that we have been supporting and training. So they're truly in a tough spot and when groups like this find themselves in a tough spot, that's exactly when they accelerate the violence because the violence helps them recruit.

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

And back to the money issue, sorry, as well, because it's an important part, it's not just losing ground; it's losing that financial stability.

PETER MANSBRIDGE (HOST):

Sure.

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

And I think what Saeed was talking about, cutting off all those access including selling antiquities and extortion is having an impact because they do pay their fighters and they need money to operate to govern with services.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Sam, quickly on the ISIS' next move?

SAMANTHA NUTT (WAR CHILD CANADA):

Well, for ISIS, their goal is to ultimately keep on disrupting. And the more that they can do that, the greater... there's a great propaganda value that exists in that to show their strength and as they keep getting pushed back from within Iraq and Syria, they're going to keep branching out. There are other territories they can move into, develop a stronghold, Libya, for example, Afghanistan. There are many disaffected Taliban, they are now joining ISIS. So there are many opportunities for them to grow, and I do disagree with some of the others. I think that while the geography that they're losing in Iraq and Syria are important, I think that we really, when it comes to the money and the opportunities that ISIS continues to have, we have to look beyond that region because their sights are beyond that region as well. So I think they're going to continue to try to make inroads, to try to grow their base and to do that, unfortunately, in the most terrifying way possible which has been their pattern.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Okay, I'm going to have to take a break here in a moment, but, Saeed, give us a sense in terms of the West, the coalition fighting ISIS, what's their next move?

SAEED KHAN (WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY):

I think their next move, Peter, is that they're going to have to understand this is a multivalent approach and, again, not be concentrated on just one trajectory of either military or political. I think all of these things have to be on the table in approaching ISIS. But I think perhaps more importantly the West also has to be very mindful that in the process of combating ISIS, it's not mortgaging a lot of its own values and its own policies. The fact that the E.U., one of its hallmark features is having open borders and now this is being something that is challenged and debated. Or, for example, President Hollande looking to amend the Constitution to allow for greater and expanded police powers. This is falling right into the hands of ISIS to the point where the West is mutating itself as a result of ISIS actions.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Ray, briefly on the West?

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

Well, a good point. I think ultimately putting boots on the ground, despite the heated discussions are probably happening at the G20 and everybody feeling that although there's been some success, we're still not able to ground it out and defeat ISIS. There will be, I think the next possible best moves for us are increasing the tempo around deployment of special forces, more training on the ground. The peshmergas are, in fact, the most viable force. Their options have all died off. The question of accommodating Iran, Hezbollah, and also the issue of Russia has to be accommodated and discussed and sorted out. I welcome that reluctantly myself from my perspective and say (indiscernible), I think if we overplay our hand, especially domestically, it will be counterproductive because, of course, that will just be an affirmation for the ideology that the kafirs really do hate us and they're persecuting us and you must leave.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

All right, we've got to take that short break I was talking about, but when we come back, the key question: What is winning? What does winning look like?

(Commercial break)

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

And we're back with Janice Stein, Ray Boisvert, Saeed Khan and Samantha Nutt. Here's the question. The fight with ISIS, what does a win look like? What does winning look like? Sam, why don't you start us.

SAMANTHA NUTT (WAR CHILD CANADA):

I want to get back to a point that Saeed and Ray both made earlier which is that we really have to get at the money. If we can choke off the financial supply and make it much harder for ISIS to replenish itself, that's going to be critically important. And we also have to look at the arm supply and making sure that we put as many control mechanisms in place to try to offset that as well. So I think that that is very, very important to what winning looks like. But we also have to look at young people and we have to look at young people within failed states and the refugees that are flowing from these failed states, and do a better job when it comes to providing them with the support that they need to be able to rebuild their lives and rebuild their communities, because nothing is going to get solved until that piece gets solved.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Saeed?

SAEED KHAN (WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY):

I agree fully with Sam. Along with that, political solutions in both Syria and Iraq addressing grievances which give ISIS quite a bit of oxygen there, yet at the same time also addressing some of the grievances of those that are becoming radicalized elsewhere, those who feel alienated and isolated within their own respective societies. And, of course, military neutralization has to be one of those elements.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Janice?

JANICE STEIN (MUNK SCHOOL OF GLOBAL AFFAIRS):

For me, Peter, winning is depriving ISIS of its territorial stronghold in the heartland of the Sunni Arab world which is Iraq and Syria. Once you do that, they're losers. And losers cannot claim to be the caliph, the khalifah, and their capacity to recruit will diminish as soon as they begin to shrink and their claims to be who they are are belied on the ground.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

Ray?

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

Although we're not at war, there's a military approach to this and

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

You know what, I never understand that argument, we're not at war. We're dropping bombs on these people, they're fighting us. We see what happened in Paris. How is that not war?

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

Absolutely, it's not a traditional, conventional warfare approach, similar to the way Russia pursues its hybrid warfare, its Internet, cyber operations, dislocation, moving people around, little grey men with no uniforms and a number of things. At the end of the day there are Kalashnikovs and people dying. In this case it's really about air power and I'm a full supporter, we should continue, we must. Drones as well. We need to continue to decapitate the senior leadership and that's a very military approach. The other part is about intelligence on the ground, it's about shaping, it's about contributing to some sort of capacity building in that area as we talked about. And, finally, it's really about the counter-narrative. It's that resilience building within. I think Canada does benefit from having a more resilient society. People are better integrated, they believe they're better stakeholders. We're not immune but I think we're far better... we're more inoculated than perhaps Europe and other parts of the world, and that's our strength.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

We'll save for another day the discussion about air power and what it actually does, because, you know, this is the fight we have been running against people like ISIS and before them al-Qaeda for 20 years, and we're still fighting them.

SAMANTHA NUTT (WAR CHILD CANADA):

And terror attacks have gone up worldwide in that period of time as well.

PETER MANSBRIDGE (HOST):

And terror attacks have gone up.

RAY BOISVERT (FORMER ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, CSIS):

Absolutely. It's a holding power.

PETER MANBRIDGE (HOST):

A holding power, next conversation we'll have on that one. Thank you all, Ray, Janice, Sam and Saeed.

Syrian refugees will face three levels of intense screening, Toronto Star

Marina Jimenez

791 words

18 November 2015

The Toronto Star

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's insistence on bringing in 25,000 Syrian refugees by Jan. 1 has ignited fears the country's security could be compromised, and prompted several provincial and municipal leaders to call for the plan to be revised.

Concerns were heightened following the ferocious attack in Paris by Islamic State terrorists on Nov. 12 that killed at least 129 people. One of the attackers used a Syrian passport to enter Europe through Greece last month, part of the mass flow of migrants fleeing war and misery.

However, Canada's refugees will not come from the hundreds of thousands of displaced people streaming into Europe, a chaotic mass who paid smugglers to travel illegally.

They will most likely come from Jordan, Turkey or Lebanon, where almost all have been registered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

Jihadis interested in violence are not going to sit in a refugee camp for months — sometimes years — waiting for an interview with a visa officer, say experts.

"The idea that ISIS would use the refugee system to infiltrate Canada is vastly overblown. There is no history of this," said Wesley Wark, a security expert and professor at the University of Ottawa. "You could never be certain your jihadi would even arrive."

Trudeau, who is expected to unveil details of the refugee resettlement initiative later this week, defended his approach Tuesday, saying the safety of Canadians will not be compromised and that a team of ministers is currently working on a plan to settle the refugees responsibly and securely.

The 4.2 million Syrian refugees displaced by war are mostly in Turkey, Lebanon and Jordan, and some have been there since civil war erupted in 2011.

Normally, government-sponsored refugees go through three levels of intense screening for criminality, war crimes and medical needs. UNHCR officials conduct detailed interviews and identity checks in the country of first asylum. Even if Syrians don't have passports, most carry national identity cards with bar codes.

"We question them about past or current military activities or affiliations, including their future plans. We have a number of biometric security and anti-fraud measures including iris scanning," said a UNHCR spokesperson. The registration data is entered into an interconnected global system.

The UNHCR then triages the refugees, and selects a very small number (about 1 per cent) who would make good candidates for resettlement by countries such as Canada. Women with children, unaccompanied minors, the elderly, sick and vulnerable are given priority. Young, single men who may have been combatants, or cannot account for missing identity documents, do not make the cut, said Peter Showler, the former head of Canada's Immigration and Refugee Board, who has worked as a consultant for the UNHCR.

Finally, Canadian visa officers based in the Middle East interview the refugees again to ensure their stories have no discrepancies. Their names are run through various databases, including the CBSA, CSIS and RCMP.

To make the job of screening easier in a compressed time line, the government could target refugees who are least likely to be security risks, including mothers and children, as well as relatives of Canada's 40,000-strong Syrian community.

"Most of the refugees who come to Canada are families or mothers with children who have been living in camp-like situations for many months. We know what they have been up to," said Ratna Omidvar,

The UNHCR defended the integrity of the refugee system Tuesday, noting that asylum and terrorism are “not compatible.” “Refugees should not be turned into scapegoats and must not become the secondary victims of these tragic events,” said a spokesperson at a briefing in Geneva.

Government-sponsored refugees normally go through three levels of screening:

Registering with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees:

- * Tell their story of how they escaped and why
- * Confirm their identity through documents, biometric security screening, including iris scanning
- * Be registered in an automated and interconnected system
- * Red flag any cases of war crimes or criminality

UNHCR re-settlement list

- * Triage refugees and select 1 per cent who could be resettled
- * Interview candidates again
- * Give priority to the vulnerable, including those with medical problems, single mothers and children
- * Single young men unlikely to make the cut

Interview with Canadian visa officers

- * One-on-one interviews with visa officers in the Middle East
- * Confirm story again
- * Run names through data bases of Canadian Border Services Agency, Canadian Security Intelligence Service and RCMP

The 4.2 million Syrian refugees displaced by war are mostly in Turkey, Lebanon and Jordan, like the camp above in Mafraq, and some have been there since civil war erupted in 2011.

Column—Refugee plan needs a rethink; Take in more over longer period,
National Post

Terence Corcoran
National Post
18 November 2015
National Post

The question has dogged Prime Minister Justin Trudeau almost daily since the election and grows more insistent after the Paris terrorist attacks: Given the growing risk, ask the media over and over again, will his government stick to its election promise to admit 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of the year?

It's the wrong question, but Trudeau keeps standing firm behind the number and the deadline. He was asked again Tuesday while in the Philippines whether opposition from Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall on security grounds had changed the plan.

"It didn't take the tragedy in Paris for us to suddenly realize that security's important," he replied.

The new government had been planning to come up with the full strategy this week on how it would actually get 25,000 Syrian refugees into the country by New Year's Day, a target that implies moving about 100 men, women and children through immigration and security checks and into transport aircraft every workday hour between now and then.

People familiar with refugee processing say the target is technically unattainable, and the government knows it. Maybe Canada can hit 15,000 by year-end, with another 10,000 arriving over several months in the New Year. Even that might be a stretch.

Would 10,000 by year-end be a failure? Not at all. But the target has become a distraction, a meaningless hangover from the election campaign that may undermine Canada's long-term ability to do what it should do. It's time to move on from that short-term target and look to more ambitious objectives.

The larger and more important question remains unanswered: How many Syrian refugees should Canada accept over the long term?

A serious strategy should aim at adopting a target of, say, 100,000 over three to five years - a modest share of the 4,289,792 Syrian refugees registered as of Nov. 17 with the United Nations High Commissioner For Refugees (UNHCR) in sprawling camps in Egypt, Turkey, Lebanon and Jordan.

A carefully organized Canadian strategy that starts modestly at a couple of thousand a month, then systematically builds experience and capacity, might well be preferable to the coming mad scramble to meet a target and deadline set in the mindless heat of an election campaign.

Lots can go wrong in an over-aggressive attempt to squeeze too many people through the narrow time frame left before the end of the year. There are security risks, but they might well be the least of the potential disruptions brought on by too much haste. In fact, Wall's concerns, and those of others - that Canadians risk letting in a "small number of individuals" of the type that perpetrated the Paris attacks and threaten Germany and the world - appear to be misplaced.

Canada is not about to set up roadside immigration kiosks to cull refugees from the streets of Hamburg or the streams of Syrians flooding the highways of Europe en route to Sweden. Those streams might well be packed with troublesome young men. The Canadian plan, underway since September, is to select refugees who have been living for months, even years, in temporary camps in Turkey, Lebanon and Jordan.

Thousands have already been selected by Canadian immigration bureaucrats and Canadian Security Intelligence Service and other officials based in embassies in those three countries. They've been at work since mid-September, assigned by the former Conservative government, albeit to meet more modest targets. Ottawa should announce early numbers with its formal plan.

All the refugees have been or will be assessed by the UNHCR. None of this is foolproof, but it is not random and the likelihood of a terrorist slipping through appears to be low.

A greater concern should be the immediate impact of all that short-termism - overkill on the effort to meet the 25,000 target that, in turn, creates immediate and medium-term social and economic upheaval here in Canada. The media will be all over the refugee arrivals through Christmas as a great heartwarming holiday story. but after that comes the reality. The rush to transport, house, feed and integrate so many people over a period of months is bound to create political and social conflicts through 2016 and beyond.

Rushed decisions and a damn-the-costs attitude could create a fiscal balloon that undermines popular support for the refugee policy.

After the hype surrounding the New year arrivals, will Canadians and Prime minister Trudeau be able to answer the right question: Are we ready for the long-term target of 100,000?

Canada

Video threatening Muslims in Quebec surfaces, Montreal Gazette

Montreal Gazette

Kevin Mio

2015 11 18

After an online threat against mosques in Montreal was made Monday, a video surfaced Tuesday that threatens Arabs and Muslims across Quebec.

The video, which was posted on YouTube, shows a man in a Joker mask expressing his frustration with Muslims and Arabs in Quebec, adding that if the government won't do anything about them, he would. He added that he was not alone and that there was a group of people who would help him carry out his threat.

While brandishing what appears to be a pistol, the man threatens to kill one Muslim or Arab every week - starting next week.

The video has been flagged to the Montreal police and the Sûreté du Québec. The SQ would not confirm any investigation into the video.

The SPVM confirmed to the Montreal Gazette that it was aware of the video but said it was too early for them to make any comment on it.

Laurent Gingras of the Montreal police said that if anyone sees a threat or is threatened, they should immediately alert the police.

In a statement posted online, Adil Charkaoui of the Collectif Québécois contre l'islamophobie called for calm.

"The CQCI is asking that the community remain calm, to not give in to fear and also to alert authorities to any suspicious behaviour," the statement said.

The online threats come amid rising tension following the deadly attacks in Paris. A mosque in Peterborough, Ont. was set ablaze over the weekend and on Monday in Toronto, a Muslim woman was attacked outside an elementary school as she went to pick up her son.

Toronto police said that attack appeared to be "motivated by hate."

Anonymous goes to war, Ottawa Sun

Hacker collective tackles ISIS threat in wake of bloody Paris rampage

Corey Larocque

18 November 2015

The Ottawa Sun

Now, it's hacker versus terrorist.

The entry of the mysterious global network of computer hackers known as Anonymous has added a new dimension to the battle against the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria.

And one expert contends the hactivist collective may well "put a dent" in ISIS operations.

How, you ask? By sabotaging its internal communications, disrupting its propaganda machine, interfering with its finances and playing havoc with its attempts to recruit more jihadi warriors.

"Their main role, so far, is to put a dent in the propaganda machine on social media," said McGill University professor Gabriella Coleman, author of Hacker, Hoaxer, Whistle-blower, Spy: The Many Faces of Anonymous.

By exploiting the cyber security of companies and governments it opposes, Anonymous has changed the nature of political protest. The group's exploits have made it infamous. Now, it may be changing the nature of warfare, too.

On Monday, Anonymous announced it has "declared war" on ISIS, language traditionally reserved for national governments. (French President Francois Hollande declared war on Islamic State's brand of terrorism after the group killed 129 people dead at popular spots throughout the capital of France on Friday.)

CALLING CARD

In one of its calling card YouTube videos, Anonymous described ISIS terrorists as "vermin who kill poor innocent people" and warned them to expect a "massive response from Anonymous."

"These attacks cannot be left unpunished," said a Frenchspeaking, unidentified figure wearing a Guy Fawkes mask -- the now-familiar symbol of Anonymous.

On Tuesday, Anonymous claimed to have already disabled 5,500 ISIS Twitter accounts.

One of the things that has distinguished ISIS from Al-Qaida has been the success of ISIS in using social media to recruit fighters and spread its message, Coleman said.

By disabling Twitter and e-mail accounts of Islamic State members, Anonymous could prevent ISIS from spreading its message, drumming up support for its cause and finding more recruits.

That isn't to say the ISIS network will be coming tumbling down.

"Is that dent really going to change the game much? Probably not," Coleman said. "It might mean dozens of people that might actually get excited about ISIS never got to those sites."

As the French and U.S. air forces rain bombs on ISIS targets in Syria, the tactic Anonymous may use is "doxing" Islamic State members.

That could see the hackers publicizing the identities of ISIS members, posting their personal information online, robbing them of their anonymity in so doing, and potentially making them and their families feel vulnerable.

PROVEN ABILITY

Earlier this month, Anonymous revealed the identities of 1,000 Ku Klux Klan members in the United States.

But if Anonymous doxes ISIS members, Islamic State could retaliate.

The members of the extremist group have already made their own online forays, doxing the U.S. military.

"It can get really messy very quickly," Coleman said.

Just how "massive" a response computer hackers can muster against an armed terrorist group with entrenched footholds in two countries with shaky national governments, remains to be seen.

"It's definitely the case they're attacking them," Coleman said. "Whether this was just hyperbolic meant to capture media attention or because they are escalating things is still a little unclear to me."

But Anonymous has demonstrated the ability to hobble the computer networks of high-powered multinational corporations and even those of national governments.

Anonymous hackers took down the Canadian government's websites and e-mail servers in June to protest civil rights restrictions in Bill C-51, the Harper government's antiterrorism law.

Anonymous cast itself as a protector of France after the ISIS attacks on the offices of France's Charlie Hebdo magazine in January. Members sympathize with rabble-rousing journalists, Coleman said.

"The fact that attack was against journalists helps to kind of explain why Anonymous took on terrorism, which is not something they would normally do," Coleman said.

It's new territory for Anonymous, anti-establishment mischief-makers whose provocative antics have become a thorn in the side of big business, government and law enforcement. They now find themselves as unlikely allies of the American, French and Russian governments.

STRANGE BEDFELLOWS

Strange bedfellows, indeed. With leaders of France, the U.S. and Russia girding for an all-out annihilation of ISIS, Anonymous' declaration of war could be seen as the arrival of a new, unexpected ally. But Anonymous is unpredictable and plays by its own rules, Coleman said.

"It's not a perfect alignment. Nevertheless, it's getting involved in this alone definitely aligns to some degree with American interests," Coleman said.

- - -

ANONYMOUS

WHO: A network of computer hackers who use their skills to further their political activism

NUMBERS: Unknown

MOTIVES: Sympathetic toward France since January attack on Charlie Hebdo satire magazine; ISIS attack on journalists solidified Anonymous's enmity.

TACTICS: Hacking websites, disruption of websites and email servers, "doxing"

POTENTIAL TO: Disrupt ISIS propaganda machine, interfere with recruitment, publicize identities of behind-the-scenes ISIS figures, interfere with finances.

TRACK RECORD: Anonymous hacked the Canadian government's websites and email servers to protest Bill C-51, previous Conservative government's ant-terrorism law. Revealed identities of 1,000 KKK members in U.S.

ISIS

WHO: The Islamic State in Iraq and Syria is a radicalized group with an expanding foothold in the Middle East

NUMBERS: ISIS claims 100,000 combatants; CIA estimate says 20,000

MOTIVES: Rooted in radical interpretation of Islam

TACTICS: Terrorism attacks such as those in Paris; blowing up airplanes; beheading hostages

POTENTIAL TO: Kill civilians in Western countries; Take over government of Syria and Iraq; Spread radicalized Islam rule to other Middle East countries, destabilize Middle East, draw West into protracted military conflict.

TRACK RECORD: Paris attack on Nov. 13 left 129 dead; Claims responsibility for blowing up Russian airplane over Egypt Oct. 31. Violent attack on France's Charlie Hebdo magazine in January.

Other/Autres

Raid Near Paris Erupts in Gunfire as Police Move In, New York Times

New York Times

Staff reporters

2015 11 18

1702 words

18 November 2015

PARIS -- The police stormed the northern Paris suburb of St.-Denis before dawn Wednesday morning in a raid aimed at capturing at least two fugitives suspected in the terrorist attacks that killed 129 people in Paris on Friday.

The Paris prosecutor's office said that the target of the raids was Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the Belgian militant suspected of organizing the attacks, but it could not confirm that Mr. Abaaoud was in the apartment.

The prosecutor's office also could not confirm reports in the French news media that two fugitives holed up in the apartment had died in the raid, including one woman who detonated an explosive vest.

There was conflicting information from French authorities about the raid. Justice Minister Christiane Taubira, speaking to Europe 1 radio, said that the police operation was ending, but French police said shortly afterward on Twitter that the raid was continuing.

Heavy gunfire erupted around 4 a.m., the suburb's mayor, Didier Paillard, and residents told a French television channel, iTélé, and it lasted at least 20 minutes. Helicopters flew overhead, and the authorities warned people to stay indoors.

"It was really like guerrilla warfare," a resident named Pierre-Eric told BFM TV.

The raid appeared to focus on an apartment near Place Jean Jaurès, a main square in St.-Denis not far from the Stade de France, where three of the seven attackers who died on Friday blew themselves up. The Paris prosecutor's office confirmed the raid but could not provide immediate details, except that an unspecified number of men, holed up in an apartment, were being targeted.

"Security instructions: do not go out onto the street in this area," St. Denis officials said on Twitter, adding that the Rue de la République, the Rue Cornillon and the Rue Chaumettes had been cordoned off.

A second round of gunfire and explosions were reported just before 7:30 a.m.

Prime Minister Manuel Valls and Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve joined President François Hollande at the Élysee Palace on Wednesday morning to monitor the operation as it continued to unfold.

At least two fugitives are at large: one whose existence was confirmed by intelligence officials on Tuesday night, and Salah Abdeslam, 26, a Frenchman who was believed to have escaped to Brussels.

In addition to the two fugitives, the authorities were seeking Mr. Abaaoud, a Belgian militant suspected of organizing the attacks.

On Tuesday, French and American intelligence officials said they believed that Mr. Abaaoud was in Syria with fellow Islamic State militants, but on Wednesday morning, several TV stations, citing unnamed police sources, said that Mr. Abaaoud might be one of the men holed up in St.-Denis.

Seven attackers died on Friday night in a closely coordinated series of attacks that lasted three hours.

Some of the attackers rented a house in the northeast Paris suburb of Bobigny last week, telling the landlady they were businessmen from Belgium, and a hotel suite in the southeast Paris suburb of Alfortville, officials said.

Early Tuesday, 10 French fighter jets, taking off from bases in Jordan and the Persian Gulf, dropped 16 bombs on what the French Defense Ministry described as an Islamic State command center and training center in the group's self-proclaimed capital of Raqqa, Syria. Hours later, Russia carried out an attack on Raqqa with cruise missiles and long-range bombers, after acknowledging that a terrorist bomb brought down a Russian jetliner over the Sinai Peninsula in Egypt -- a hotbed of Islamic State activity -- on Oct. 31.

France, through its defense minister, Jean-Yves Le Drian, took the extraordinary step on Tuesday of invoking a European Union treaty that obliges members to help any member that is "the victim of armed aggression on its territory."

Mr. Hollande took steps to shore up global support for what he has called a war to annihilate the Islamic State, also known as ISIS or ISIL. He met with Secretary of State John Kerry, who expressed sympathy but reiterated the Obama administration's view that the group would not be destroyed until Syria's embattled president, Bashar al-Assad, leaves power.

Mr. Hollande will visit Washington and Moscow next week to meet with Mr. Obama and the Russian president, Vladimir V. Putin. In Britain, Prime Minister David Cameron told Parliament that the Paris attacks had strengthened the case for intervening against the Islamic State in Syria, a move that Parliament rejected in 2013.

On France's third and final day of national mourning, crowds gathered to light candles and lay flowers at the Place de la République and at makeshift memorials at the sites of the attacks. In the southwestern city of Toulouse, thousands gathered in the central square, waving French flags and singing "La Marseillaise," the national anthem.

"The terrorists want to erase everything: culture, youth, life, and also history and memory," Mr. Hollande said in a speech at a Unesco conference in Paris.

"You do not fight against terrorism by hiding, by putting your life on hold, by suspending economic, social and cultural life, by banning concerts, theater, sports competitions," he said. "We will not yield to terrorism by suspending our way of life."

Many Parisians and visitors followed his advice, flocking to restaurants, cafes and museums in an effort to carry on with normal life. But the country continued to reel from the attacks, the worst violence on French soil in decades. Officials said the bodies of 117 of the 129 people killed had been positively identified; 221 of the 352 people injured remained in hospitals, 57 in intensive care.

The country remained under a state of emergency, as developments in the investigation emerged in a steady trickle.

In the morning, the authorities seized a black Renault Clio with Belgian license plates in the 18th Arrondissement on the northern edge of Paris, next to the suburb of St.-Denis, where three suicide bombers detonated their explosives during a soccer game at the Stade de France. Authorities are looking into the possibility that the vehicle might have been intended for yet another attack.

On Tuesday night, the authorities released a photo of one of the stadium bombers -- who used a Syrian passport to enter Greece last month, evidently posing as a migrant -- and asked for the public's help in identifying him. The passport was probably stolen, and the identity on the passport page -- Ahmad al-Mohammad, 25, of Idlib, Syria -- may be that of a dead Syrian soldier, the French official said.

The authorities said the car had been seen -- it was not clear when, or who drove it -- on the A1 highway, which connects the suburbs of Paris with the northeastern city of Lille, about a dozen miles from the Belgian border.

In Belgium, the authorities put the country at its highest alert level. They charged two men -- Hamza Attou, 21, a Brussels native, and Mohamed Amri, 27, who was born in Morocco -- with participating in a terrorist activity, saying they had driven Mr. Abdeslam, the fugitive, from Paris to Brussels.

The two men frequented a bar owned by Mr. Abdeslam and his brother Ibrahim, who blew himself up at a restaurant on Friday in one of the attacks. The brothers lived in the Brussels district of Molenbeek, also the base for Mr. Abaaoud, the Belgian believed to have planned the attacks. A third brother, Mohamed, who was not involved in the assaults, publicly appealed on Tuesday for Salah to turn himself in.

"We are a family, we are thinking about him, we are wondering where he is, if he is scared, if he is feeding himself," Mohamed Abdeslam told the French news channel BFM TV in Brussels.

"The best would be for him to surrender so that the justice system may shed light on this situation."

Salah Abdeslam was stopped at a traffic check in the French town of Cambrai on Saturday morning, as he headed toward the Belgian border, but was then waved through after showing identification.

The Austrian police disclosed on Tuesday that Mr. Abdeslam was also stopped during a routine police check in northern Austria on Sept. 9 -- four days after Germany and Austria opened their borders to refugees streaming in via Hungary. He crossed into Austria from Germany in a car with two men who have not been identified, and told the police that he would be spending a few days on vacation in Austria, an Interior Ministry spokesman said.

Mr. Kerry, in a hastily arranged trip to Paris to show solidarity, said the United States and France had no choice but to wage war against the Islamic State, the apocalyptic militant group that purports to have restored a caliphate, or a global Muslim community under a single leader.

"This is just raw terror to set up a caliphate," Mr. Kerry said before meeting separately with Mr. Hollande and Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius. "This is not a situation where we have a choice. We're not choosing to randomly go to war. We're trying to avoid it, trying to find a better path."

At least four Americans were wounded in the attacks on Paris, and one, Nohemi Gonzalez, died.

Mr. Cazeneuve told France Info radio that the police had conducted 128 raids in France overnight against terrorism suspects. He also said 115,000 police officers and troops had been deployed across the country "to ensure the protection of the French."

A Saint-Denis, l'assaut contre les terroristes, Le Monde

Laurent Borredon, Simon Piel, Soren Seelow et, Jean-Pierre Stroobants

Le Monde

France, jeudi 19 novembre 2015, p. 8

Les forces de l'ordre étaient à la recherche du commanditaire présumé des attentats, Abdelhamid Abaaoud.

L'enquête sur les attentats de Paris, qui ont fait au moins 130 morts et plus de 350 blessés à Paris et à Saint-Denis, vendredi 13 novembre, a mené les enquêteurs de la Syrie à la Belgique. Mais c'est finalement sur un appartement de Saint-Denis que les policiers du RAID ont lancé l'assaut, mercredi 18 novembre, à 4 h 20 du matin. Ils recherchaient le commanditaire présumé des attaques, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, 28 ans, à quelques centaines de mètres du Stade de France, où trois kamikazes s'étaient fait exploser vendredi. Mercredi en fin de matinée, l'homme était toujours recherché : il n'était pas certain qu'il ait même été présent sur les lieux.

L'affrontement a été violent : une femme est morte en déclenchant son gilet d'explosifs et un autre suspect est décédé lors de l'échange de tirs. Cinq personnes ont été interpellées et placées en garde à vue. Cinq policiers du RAID ont été blessés. Mercredi, en milieu de matinée, les policiers n'avaient pas encore pu totalement investir l'appartement, gravement endommagé par l'explosion et menacé d'effondrement.

A 4 h 20, lorsque le RAID et les policiers de la sous-direction antiterroriste de la police judiciaire (SDAT) ont pénétré dans le petit immeuble de la rue du Corbillon, situé dans la vieille ville de Saint-Denis, ils ont été accueillis par un feu nourri de tirs. " Ça défouaillait " , raconte une source policière. Les enquêteurs soupçonnaient qu'Abdelhamid Abaaoud ne serait pas seul : ils avaient en revanche sous-estimé le nombre de terroristes présumés qui l'entouraient. Au lieu de deux suspects, ils font face à au moins cinq personnes. Une femme présente dans l'appartement déclenche son gilet d'explosifs.

Après quatre heures d'assaut, trois hommes retranchés dans l'appartement sont extraits par le RAID. Un deuxième suspect est tué. Au cours de l'opération, un deuxième appartement situé boulevard Carnot, à proximité immédiate du premier objectif, apparaît comme devant être examiné. Les hommes de la brigade de recherche et d'intervention (BRI) de la préfecture de police de Paris se chargent de procéder aux vérifications : il est vide. Un homme et une femme sont interpellés dans les rues avoisinantes et placés à leur tour en garde à vue.

Abaaoud, un " petit con " La principale cible de l'assaut est donc Abdelhamid Abaaoud, un Belge de 28 ans. L'homme, qui a rejoint les rangs de l'Etat islamique (EI) au début de 2013, est soupçonné d'être l'un des instigateurs de plusieurs projets d'attaques visant la France, dont plusieurs avaient la Belgique comme base logistique. En Syrie, où il a pris le surnom d'" Abou Omar Al-Soussi " , il a été parmi les cibles des frappes françaises sur Rakka, la capitale de l'EI, début octobre.

La direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) le suspecte, à des degrés d'implication divers, d'avoir joué un rôle dans l'attentat avorté contre une église de Villejuif, le 19 avril, dans un projet déjoué d'attaque contre une salle de concert, dont l'auteur avait été interpellé le 11 août, et dans l'attaque du Thalys, dix jours plus tard, le 21 août. Il était enfin en contact avec Mehdi Nemmouche, le tueur du Musée juif de Bruxelles, le 24 mai 2014. En Belgique, il a été condamné par contumace à vingt ans de prison en juillet, dans le cadre d'un dossier de filière djihadiste.

Les enquêteurs le soupçonnent d'avoir participé à l'élaboration des attentats de vendredi, à Paris et Saint-Denis. Il apparaît dans l'entourage de Salah Abdeslam, l'un des suspects des attentats de vendredi à Paris, toujours en fuite. Les deux hommes ont notamment fait de la prison ensemble en 2010 en Belgique pour braquage.

Le 11 août, un jeune Français interpellé à son retour de Syrie, Reda Hame, avait désigné Abdelhamid Abaaoud comme le commanditaire d'un projet d'attentat visant une salle de spectacle. En garde à vue, l'homme affirmait avoir reçu pour mission de cibler un " concert de rock " pour faire un " maximum de victimes " . Abdelhamid Abaaoud lui aurait remis à cette fin une clé USB contenant des logiciels de cryptage et 2 000 euros, en lui suggérant de passer par Prague, en République tchèque, pour éviter de se faire repérer.

Décrit comme " un petit con " par ses anciens camarades de classe, Abdelhamid Abbaoud a eu affaire à la justice dès 19 ans, condamné pour divers vols. Il était libre, porteur d'un bracelet électronique, lorsqu'il est entré dans le radar de l'antiterrorisme. Son père, un épicier de Molenbeek, dans la banlieue de Bruxelles, dit aujourd'hui avoir " horreur " de son fils. Il avait auparavant, et sans succès, tenté de le faire étudier dans un collège chic de Uccle, où Abdelhamid a laissé la pire des réputations. " C'était en fait un gamin de la classe moyenne, et, en ce qui le concerne, les concepts de discrimination et de frustration sociale ne s'appliquent pas " , commente un policier belge. Il avait quitté la Belgique via Dusseldorf, puis la Turquie. Il était accompagné de son jeune frère Younes, 13 ans, qu'il aurait enlevé. Le gamin a posé sur des photos, comme " plus jeune djihadiste du monde " .

Dans une poubelle Abdelhamid Abaaoud semble avoir effectué plusieurs allers-retours entre la Syrie et la Belgique sans être inquiété. Dans une interview donnée en février au magazine de l'EI Dabiq , il affirme qu'il se trouvait en Belgique le jour du démantèlement de la cellule terroriste de Verviers, fin janvier, et se vante d'avoir pu rejoindre la Syrie sans être intercepté, malgré un contrôle à un barrage de police. Ses déclarations ne sont pas confirmées de sources officielles, mais il est établi que le djihadiste le plus célèbre de Belgique a effectué plusieurs trajets entre la Belgique et la Syrie sans éveiller les soupçons. Selon une source judiciaire française, le jeune homme se serait envolé pour la Syrie au début de 2013, avant de rentrer en Belgique à la fin de la même année en transitant par la Grèce, pour ensuite regagner la Syrie. On retrouve une trace de sa présence dans les rangs de l'EI en mars 2014 : il apparaît dans une vidéo de propagande à bord d'un pick-up traînant au sol des cadavres mutilés. Qu'a-t-il fait depuis? Selon une source proche de l'enquête, son téléphone a été localisé en Grèce en 2015.

C'est un SMS, dont l'existence a été révélée par Mediapart quelques heures avant le début de l'assaut à Saint-Denis, qui a permis d'accélérer les recherches. Avant de déclencher l'attaque qui a fait 89 morts et des dizaines de blessés, à 21 h 42, l'un des trois terroristes prévient une personne qui reste à identifier. " On est parti on commence " , écrit-il précisément, selon les informations du Monde . A cette heure-là, deux kamikazes se sont déjà fait exploser aux abords du Stade de France, à 21 h 20 et 21 h 30. Une autre équipe, armée de fusils d'assaut, a achevé son parcours meurtrier dans l'est parisien : quinze personnes tuées à l'angle de la rue Bichat et de la rue Alibert, dans le 10^e arrondissement, puis cinq victimes au coin de la rue de la Fontaine-au-Roi et de la rue du Faubourg-du-Temple (11^e arrondissement), dix-neuf au bar la Belle Equipe, rue de Charonne, et enfin, une attaque kamikaze en bas du boulevard Voltaire, à 21 h 40. Quelques minutes plus tard, un troisième kamikaze explose à Saint-Denis.

Les enquêteurs ont retrouvé le SMS dans un téléphone découvert dans une poubelle, à proximité du Bataclan. Au-delà du message, l'appareil a surtout permis aux policiers de remonter la piste jusqu'à l'un des points de chute des commandos, un appartement loué dans une résidence hôtelière à Alfortville (Val-de-Marne). La recherche sur la géolocalisation du téléphone indique que son propriétaire y était passé avant les attaques. Il avait été loué au nom de Salah Abdeslam, tout comme la Volkswagen Polo utilisée par les assaillants du Bataclan. Déserté par les terroristes, le logement est investi par les enquêteurs, qui effectuent des prélèvements, pour permettre d'identifier les occupants du lieu. Contrairement à ce qui avait été indiqué sur LePoint.fr, aucune seringue n'a été retrouvée lors de la perquisition.

Salah Abdeslam, 26 ans, Français résidant en Belgique, est en fuite depuis les attentats. Samedi matin, il est parvenu à retourner en direction de la Belgique avant d'être identifié comme l'un des suspects. Les deux Belges qui sont venus le chercher à Paris ont été placés sous mandat d'arrêt, lundi 16 novembre, pour " attentat terroriste " par la justice belge. Salah Abdeslam a loué la Polo du Bataclan, mais il est soupçonné d'avoir fait partie du commando chargé des fusillades dans les rues parisiennes, à bord d'une Seat découverte à Montreuil.

Un deuxième site ayant été utilisé lors de la préparation des attentats a également été découvert, à Bobigny. Le frère de Salah, Brahim Abdeslam, qui s'est fait exploser boulevard Voltaire, avait en effet loué un pavillon dans la préfecture de Seine-Saint-Denis, du 10 au 17 novembre. Trois hommes s'étaient présentés au propriétaire comme appartenant à une société de sécurité belge.

Mercredi, toutes les gardes à vue de membres de l'entourage familial d'Ismaël Omar Mostefai et de Samy Amimour, deux des assaillants du Bataclan, ont été levées. L'une des soeurs de Samy Amimour était notamment connue pour avoir facilité le départ d'une mineure, née en 1997, vers la Syrie afin qu'elle rejoigne son frère pour l'épouser. Samy Amimour était déjà connu de l'antiterrorisme pour avoir tenté de partir vers le Yémen en 2012 en compagnie de Samir B. et Charafe E., deux amis originaires comme lui de Drancy (Seine-Saint-Denis). Le troisième assaillant de la salle de spectacle, tué à l'étage lors de l'assaut de la BRI, est toujours en cours d'identification, tout comme l'un des kamikazes du Stade de France.

Les enquêteurs ont lancé un appel à témoins, mercredi soir, pour identifier un autre membre du commando de Saint-Denis, auprès duquel un passeport syrien avait été découvert. Les policiers ont établi que la photo utilisée sur le document, qui lui a servi à rentrer en Europe via la Grèce, lui correspondait bien. Le troisième kamikaze est un Français de 20 ans, Bilal Hadfi.

Fabien Clain, la voix des attentats de Paris, Le Monde

Soren Seelow, avec Nathalie Guibert

Le Monde

France, jeudi 19 novembre 2015, p. 10

Le djihadiste français et son frère ont été identifiés dans l'un des messages de revendication des attaques. Portrait d'un salafiste toulousain.

On entend un " nashid ", un de ces chants religieux envoûtants qui font le charme vénéneux des vidéos de l'Etat islamique (EI). Puis la lecture d'un communiqué au style ampoulé : " Dans une attaque bénie dont Allah a facilité les causes, un groupe de croyants des soldats du califat, qu'Allah lui donne puissance et victoire, a pris pour cible la capitale des abominations et de la perversion, celle qui porte la bannière de la croix en Europe, Paris... " A la fin de la lecture, les chants reprennent. L'enregistrement dure cinq minutes trente.

La voix de l'homme qui revendique les attaques commises à Paris, vendredi 13 novembre, a été identifiée. Il s'agit de celle du Français Fabien Clain, 37 ans, un vétéran du djihad originaire de Toulouse, proche du clan de -Mohamed Merah (l'auteur des tueries de mars 2012 à Toulouse et à Montauban) et condamné en 2009 à cinq ans de prison pour avoir animé une filière irakienne. Selon les informations du Monde, Fabien Clain avait déjà menacé le Bataclan en 2009 en raison du sionisme supposé de ses propriétaires. L'homme qui chante avant et après la lecture du communiqué a été identifié comme étant son frère cadet, Jean-Michel, 34 ans, précise au Monde une source -proche du dossier.

Fabien Clain, un Toulousain d'origine réunionnaise converti à l'islam, s'est rapproché de la mouvance salafiste au début des années 2000 aux abords de la mosquée El Hussein, dans le quartier du Mirail. Décrit par d'anciens proches comme instruit, " très fort en religion ", ayant un " véritable talent pour convertir les gens " et les " manipuler ", il s'impose -rapidement comme l'un des principaux idéologues du courant -salafiste toulousain.

La famille Clain ne passe pas inaperçue au Mirail. Portant la barbe et la djellaba, les deux frères tiennent un stand de vente d'objets islamiques sur un marché, qu'ils utilisent pour enrôler de jeunes Toulousains. Ils ont épousé deux converties qui portent la burqa - à une époque où cette coutume était encore une curiosité - ce qui leur vaut d'être surnommé " le clan des Belphégor ".

Noyau historiqueLa famille se rapproche au début des années 2000 d'une autre communauté salafiste, structurée autour d'un Français d'origine syrienne, Olivier Corel, dit " l'Emir blanc ". Ce guide spirituel, ancien responsable en France des " Frères musulmans syriens ", tient des sessions d'enseignement religieux dans sa ferme d'Artigat, une petite commune ariégeoise. Des jeunes venus des cités toulousaines s'y pressent pour écouter ses prêches.

C'est dans cette ferme reculée que Fabien Clain, désormais surnommé " Omar ", fait la connaissance d'Abdelkader Merah, le frère de Mohamed Merah, et d'un de ses bons amis, Sabri Essid, alors âgé de 16 ans. Le groupe d'Artigat, considéré comme l'un des noyaux historiques du djihadisme français, se consolide par alliances : le père de Sabri Essid épousera successivement la mère de Fabien Clain et celle des frères Merah.

En janvier 2003, les frères Clain s'installent quelque temps en Belgique. Ceux qu'on appelle les " Réunionnais " gravitent autour d'une filière belgo-tunisienne à l'origine du départ de Murielle - Degauque, morte le 9 novembre 2005 dans un attentat-suicide à Bagdad. Les frères Clain font alors la connaissance de deux figures du djihadisme : Farouk Ben Abbes, un Belge d'origine tunisienne, et Hakim Benladghem, un ancien légionnaire français d'origine algérienne, qui sera tué des années plus tard par la police belge, le 26 mars 2013, à l'issue d'une course-poursuite. Il était soupçonné de s'apprêter à commettre un attentat en Belgique le lendemain.

Les frères Clain, Farouk Ben -Abbes, Hakim Benladghem... La petite amicale franco-belge ne va pas tarder à faire parler d'elle. En 2009, Fabien Clain et Hakim Benladghem apparaissent dans une enquête sur des menaces d'attentats visant le Bataclan. Cette salle de spectacle, dont les propriétaires à l'époque sont juifs, organisait chaque année un concert de soutien en faveur de -Magav, la police des frontières -israélienne, qui déclenchait l'ire de plusieurs associations et de groupuscules radicaux.

Cette même année, Farouk Ben Abbes est interpellé en Egypte dans le cadre de l'enquête sur un attentat ayant visé un voyage d'agrément de lycéens français au Caire en février 2009. Cette attaque, attribuée à Jaish al-Islam, " l'armée de l'islam ", la branche d'Al-Qaida à Gaza, fera vingt-quatre blessés et un mort, Cécile Vannier, 17 ans. Dans les locaux de la Sécurité d'Etat égyptienne, -Farouk Ben Abbes aurait alors protesté de son innocence tout en admettant qu'il projetait une attaque en France contre... le Bataclan. Un projet confirmé deux ans plus tard dans les locaux de la DCRI par une Française interpellée en même temps que lui au Caire.

Rentré dans la région de Toulouse, Fabien Clain a entre-temps poursuivi son oeuvre de recrutement au sein de la filière d'Artigat. Quelques mois après les menaces d'attentat visant le Bataclan, il est condamné en juillet 2009 à cinq ans de prison pour avoir organisé l'acheminement vers l'Irak de plusieurs jeunes Toulousains entre 2005 et 2006.

Ses recrues prenaient souvent l'avion depuis la Belgique, où elles étaient accueillies par des " frères " bruxellois, puis transitaient par la Syrie ou l'Egypte avant de tenter de gagner le borborygme irakien. Mais la cellule est démantelée avant d'avoir pu mettre le pied en Irak. Deux disciples de Fabien Clain, Sabri Essid et Thomas -Barnouin, seront arrêtées près d'Homs en décembre 2006 par les autorités syriennes alors qu'elles s'apprêtaient à rejoindre le champ de bataille, au sein d'une cellule d'Al-Qaida composée de Syriens et de Saoudiens.

Un départ en Syrie Durant son procès, Fabien Clain se définira comme ayant suffisamment de connaissances religieuses pour " influencer une personne indécise ". Il affirme s'en tenir à une lecture " défensive " du djihad, arguant que " quand un pays se fait envahir par un autre pays ou même si le voisin musulman se faisait attaquer, il faut le défendre ".

Il soutient devant la cour qu'il n'approuve pas les attentats-suicides. Un de ses coaccusés affirme que son djihad consistait surtout à envoyer les autres mourir à sa place. Libéré en août 2012 après avoir purgé trois de ses cinq années de prison, Fabien Clain refait sa vie en Normandie avec femme et enfants. Puis disparaît en Syrie, vraisemblablement courant 2014.

L'aîné de la fratrie n'a pas rejoint seul les rangs de l'Etat islamique (EI). Il y a reconstitué son clan, à l'abri des poursuites judiciaires. Son ancien élève Sabri Essid, désormais âgée de 30 ans, a gagné la Syrie au printemps 2014, en même temps qu'une dizaine d'anciens membres de la cellule d'Artigat. Le 11 mars 2015, jour du troisième anniversaire de la tuerie de Mohamed Merah, Sabri Essid apparaît dans une vidéo de propagande sur laquelle on voit un garçon, identifié comme son beau-fils, âgé de 13 ans, abattre à bout portant un Arabe israélien accusé d'espionnage pour le compte du Mossad.

Fabien Clain a disparu des -radars. Il ne va pas tarder à réap-paraître dans les fiches des services de renseignement. Le 19 avril, un étudiant algérien, Sid Ahmed Ghlam, est interpellé à Paris après s'être tiré une balle dans la jambe alors qu'il s'apprêtait à mitrailler la sortie de messe d'une église de Villejuif (Val-de-Marne).

L'enquête établira que deux membres français de l'EI, avec qui il communiquait dans l'élaboration de son projet, avaient été endoctrinés à distance par Fabien Clain avant de le rejoindre en -Syrie début 2015. Un projet d'attentat avorté sur lequel plane une autre ombre : celle du Belge -Abdelhamid Abaaoud, commanditaire présumé des attaques de vendredi.

Entouré de sa famille et de ses anciens disciples, Fabien Clain a recréé en Syrie le biotope d'Artigat. Il continue de recruter, depuis l'étranger cette fois, et semble avoir joué un rôle dans au moins deux attaques visant la France depuis le début de l'année. Le conflit syrien lui a donné l'occasion de parachever l'oeuvre qu'il n'avait pu mener à son terme durant la guerre d'Irak. Le champ de bataille a changé. Les ambitions de ce djihadiste de la première heure aussi. Il ne s'agit plus seulement d'envoyer des Français se battre à l'étranger : le conflit s'est déplacé sur le sol français.

Paris attacker may have had accomplice on journey through Balkans, Reuters

By Aleksandar Vasovic and Lefteris Karagiannopoulos
Reuters
2015 11 17

BELGRADE/ATHENS, Nov 17 (Reuters) - One of the Paris suicide attackers may have had an accomplice with him as he travelled through the Balkans to western Europe after entering Greece posing as a Syrian refugee, counter-intelligence and police sources say.

The assailant may also have reached Paris faster and more easily than expected because asylum seekers were rushed across some national borders at the height of the migration crisis in Europe this year to avoid bottlenecks after Hungary closed its borders, ironically to keep out suspected militants.

The man, who blew himself up near the Stade de France stadium in Friday's attacks that killed 129 people, has been identified from a Syrian passport found near his body as 25-year-old Ahmad al-Mohammad from the northwestern city of Idlib.

The true identity of the attacker has become a key line of inquiry for French investigators, with the focus on whether the passport is genuine, sources close to the investigation say.

Despite media reports that it may be counterfeit, investigators are also looking at the possibility that it is genuine - but could have been stolen or bought from a refugee after he made his way into Europe and subsequently used by the attacker, they say.

The passport's holder was registered as arriving alongside 198 refugees by boat from Turkey on Oct. 3 in Leros, a small picturesque Greek island.

French authorities have said the fingerprints of the attacker who blew himself up matched those of the man who landed on Leros.

Greek officials said on Sunday that Mohammad seemed not to be travelling with anyone specific, despite arriving with others. But a counter-intelligence source in Macedonia, one of the countries he passed through, spoke of a "massive investigation in the Balkans about the route of two of the terrorists".

The source, who declined to be named, indicated to Reuters that Macedonia was coordinating its action with Greece, and that a companion was with Mohammad by the time they bought ferry tickets taking them to Piraeus on the Greek mainland.

A Leros travel agent said that on Oct. 4 he issued two tickets costing 51.50 euros ($54.90) each to the men for a ferry departing the following night from the nearby island of Kalymnos, which is reached from Leros by a local service. The 23:10 sailing reached Piraeus on the morning of Oct. 6.

The owner of the Kastis travel agency in Leros, 42-year-old Dimitris Kastis, remembers selling tickets to Mohammad and a man who was with him. "He didn't do or say anything that caught my attention," Kastis said, adding that both men had paid in cash. He said the man travelling with him had a similar surname.

Greek media have published a photograph of the second man's ticket which gives his family name as al-Mahmod, and the initial of his given name as M.

Kastis said he recognised this as the name the second man provided when purchasing the ticket.

A Croatian police official, who declined to be named, also told Reuters that an investigation was under way into Mohammed's journey which was focusing on whether he was travelling with anyone and, if so, with whom.

BALKAN ROUTE

In Leros, Mohammad was registered as required under European Union rules, with his fingerprints recorded in a European database known as Eurodac. Because his passport looked authentic and there was no police record on him, he was given a permit allowing him to stay in Greece for six months.

A copy of Mohammad's permit was distributed to journalists by Immigration Minister Yannis Mouzalas. Written in Greek only, it states that its holder should not leave the city of Corinth for the whole period without alerting police.

But within days, Mohammad had gone at least as far as Croatia.

The counter-intelligence source in Macedonia said Mohammad was still travelling with a companion two days after reaching Piraeus. They registered together at a refugee camp in the backyard of an old tobacco plant in the Serbian town of Presevo, though Serbian officials have not mentioned an accomplice.

Mohammad then went on to Croatia, either by train or bus, and was registered on Oct. 8 at the Opatovac refugee camp.

Reuters has been unable to determine what route Mohammad took after this, or whether he was accompanied by anyone.

Croatian police said he almost certainly left for Hungary within 24 hours, though Budapest has no record of him entering from Croatia, which at the time was offloading thousands of migrants every day across its northern border with Hungary.

Mohammad's most likely destination from Hungary would have been Austria. In early October migrants were being sent in trains with locked doors to Hegyeshalom on the Austrian border, where Reuters journalists said they were ushered into the country without having their documents checked.

Austrian Interior Ministry spokesman Karl-Heinz Grundboeck said it was "conjecture and speculation" that a man going by the name of al-Mohammad had passed through Austria which, like France, is part of the EU's Schengen zone where routine internal border controls have been removed.

But Vienna has confirmed that another of the attackers, Belgian-born Frenchman Salah Abdeslam, entered Austria from Germany on Sept. 9.

Hungarian government spokesman Zoltan Kovacs told reporters on Tuesday that Budapest had no information as to whether Mohammad traversed Hungary. At that time Hungary was not registering migrants because Croatia had already done so.

Both countries are EU members but, unlike Croatia, Hungary is in the Schengen zone and had sealed its frontier with Serbia to migrants on Sept. 15.

This forced the migrants into Croatia, which infuriated Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban by busing them north across its own border with Hungary, in many cases without checks.

ORBAN'S TOUGH STANCE

The irony of an Islamist militant moving quickly through the Balkans into western Europe and the heart of the 28-nation EU will not be lost on Hungary, where Orban based his tough stance on the flow of migrants on concerns that many were immigrants rather than refugees fleeing poverty or war, and that some could be "terrorists".

The issue is also sensitive in Germany, where Chancellor Angela Merkel has been criticised for her welcoming policy on refugees.

And some far-right and populist leaders have seized on the possibility that any of the eight Paris attackers reached Western Europe by posing as a migrant, using it to step up their anti-immigration message.

Any security lapses are also a potential embarrassment for the countries Mohammad passed through, but authorities say the influx of migrants in recent months has made it almost impossible for them to keep out would-be attackers.

"We take fingerprints, but how do we check them? Against which database? If there's nothing on that person in the information we received or if he's not wanted by Interpol he can go ... He could be a shaven Osama bin Laden for all we know," said a senior Serbian law enforcement official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Attacks To Fuel Spying Debate, Wall Street Journal

By Damian Paletta and Siobhan Hughes

916 words

18 November 2015

The Wall Street Journal

WASHINGTON -- A growing belief among intelligence officials that the terrorists behind Friday's Paris attacks used encrypted communications is prompting a far-ranging re-examination of U.S. policy on data collection and surveillance.

Sen. Richard Burr (R., N.C.), chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said Tuesday his panel will launch a review of encryption use. Sen. Tom Cotton (R., Ark.) introduced a bill to extend a sweeping telephone data-collection program due to expire at month's end.

Mr. Burr, emerging from a briefing by senior intelligence officials, said it appeared the terrorists used extensively shielded communications.

"It is likely that end-to-end encryption was used to communicate in Belgium and France and Syria," Mr. Burr said. He said encryption was likely because no direct communication among the terrorists was detected.

U.S. counterterrorism officials haven't yet found evidence that the Paris suspects -- who are believed linked to Islamic State -- used encrypted communications to plan or carry out the attacks. But they expect that as the investigation advances they will find some communications among them were encrypted, according to multiple officials.

Since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, the public and policy makers have swung between emphasizing the need for security agencies to have access to data, and protecting personal privacy. That pendulum has arguably shifted more toward privacy in recent years -- a position promoted by technology companies that sell products based on the promise that corporate data will be secure from hackers.

But initial signs suggest the Paris attacks have the potential to push it back toward security, a move opposed by many public-interest groups, especially since the 2013 revelations by Edward Snowden about government data-collection practices.

Many technology companies have rejected law enforcement requests for "back door" coding that would give investigators access to secure communications. Software products are being marketed with a promise that they can't be decoded, Mr. Burr said, and that might have to change.

"We don't have a responsibility to sell their products," the senator said. "We have a responsibility to keep America safe . . . And if it means that people are going to have to change their business models, then so be it."

Mr. Cotton's bill would pause the expiration of a broad phone data-collection program run by the National Security Agency, which is set to end Nov. 29, until the president certifies that a planned replacement is equally effective.

The NSA program sweeps up data on millions of calls, such as who called whom, though not the content of the conversations. Under the new version, the NSA could get the information from phone companies only if it obtains a court order. "If we take anything from the Paris attacks, it should be that vigilance and safety go hand-in-hand," Mr. Cotton said.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.) agreed that it makes sense to review the nation's security laws. "Every time we have one of these attacks, I think it's appropriate to take a look at what the laws are on the books and be open to considering changing them if they don't reflect the modern threat," Mr. McConnell said.

Still, concerns about government intrusiveness won't suddenly melt away.

Rep. Michael McCaul (R., Texas), chairman of the House Homeland Security Committee, suggested a commission be set up to make recommendations to Congress.

"I don't want us to do a knee-jerk response in legislation and make an unintended consequence," Mr. McCaul said.

For years, intelligence and law-enforcement officials, pushing for greater access to personal information, have squared off against privacy advocates and technology firms who fear government overreach. The question is whether the Paris attacks could change that dynamic.

On Monday, CIA Director John Brennan blasted "a lot of hand-wringing over the government's role," saying the resulting curbs on investigators have made efforts to track terrorists "much more challenging." He added, "I do hope that this is going to be a wake-up call."

The attacks have already renewed a debate over whether technology companies should install back doors to encrypted data. The White House has sought the cooperation of technology companies in this area, but concluded recently that forcing the issue would only stir up resistance. That issue may now be revisited.

Sen. Dick Durbin (D., Ill.), the second-ranking Democrat in the Senate, said the U.S. needs to be sure it has the tools to fight the kind of terrorism that unfolded in Paris.

"We know that we need to change the approach when it comes to the encryption of data in communications," Mr. Durbin said.

Privacy advocates argue that back doors would build vulnerabilities into programs that could be exploited by terrorists as well as overzealous government officials.

Mr. McCaul, speaking at an event organized by the Software and Information Industry Association, waved his own phone and declared, "You don't want to put a backdoor in this device, because then you open it up to hackers, and also people think the government is in their iPhones or Androids."

Rep. Will Hurd (R., Texas), a former CIA officer, also warned against overreaction. "Our civil liberties are what make our country great, and they're not burdens," he said. "Encryption is good and we shouldn't do anything to weaken it."

Is the United States safe from a Paris-style Islamic State attack?, Washington Post

By Adam Goldman
1491 words
18 November 2015

As France reels from a set of Islamic State terrorist attacks in Paris last week that killed scores and wounded hundreds, Americans are wondering whether their own country is any safer.

"That's an easy one," said a former senior FBI official who until recently was deeply involved in terrorism operations. "Safer here than there? Yes. We are separated by an ocean. Without a doubt, we are safer here than over there."

Since Sept. 11, 2001, the U.S. government has spent more than $1 trillion fighting the war on terrorism, making border crossings more secure, detecting plots and expanding the no-fly list from about a dozen people to roughly 47,000.

Tougher post-9/11 terrorism laws also ensure that the FBI and federal prosecutors can charge people with crimes that carry stiff sentences. In the past 18 months, the FBI has charged more than 60 people in connection with the Islamic State. Many could face years in prison if convicted, meaning the FBI won't have to devote resources to tracking their movements.

In Europe, porous borders mean that hundreds of foreign fighters have slipped back into the continent from Iraq and Syria, overwhelming intelligence agencies trying to keep tabs on them. That appears to have been the case in the Paris attacks, where at least four of the possible nine attackers were known to European authorities. Another suspected key player in the plot fought in Syria and later returned to Europe, only to flee back to the Islamic State.

The number of Americans who have traveled to Iraq and Syria — or at least attempted to — is about 250, dramatically less than the estimated 4,500 who have left Europe. FBI officials aren't taking the threat lightly, but they have expressed confidence that they have those U.S. individuals contained and that the remaining Americans in Syria won't be returning to this country unless they are in handcuffs.

That assessment is echoed in a new report by the New America Foundation titled "ISIS in the West: The New Faces of Extremism."

"Tracking the many foreign fighters from Western countries who have gone to Syria and have returned to the West poses a greater challenge, given their larger numbers, than tracking the handful of returning American fighters," the report says.

But that doesn't mean the United States is not vulnerable. The FBI, which is charged with fighting terrorism in this country, has struggled at times to keep pace with a metastasizing threat.

Because of limited resources, the FBI must constantly reevaluate which targets are a priority when it comes to closely following top-tier terrorism suspects. "It's daunting," said the former senior FBI official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss the bureau.

Many law enforcement officials also argue that it would be easier to do their jobs if U.S. tech firms made it possible for phones and apps to be wiretapped. It is not yet known whether the plotters of the Paris terrorist attacks used encrypted channels of communication, but experts say it is highly likely that they did.

Cyrus R. Vance Jr., the district attorney for Manhattan, who has been outspoken on how a lack of access to encrypted communications has hindered investigations, is expected to unveil a proposal on this topic Wednesday at a conference in New York. FBI Director James B. Comey also is to appear at the event. Last year, Comey called for legislation on encryption but later backed down when it became clear that Congress was hostile to the idea of aiding government surveillance.

Comey said recently that the FBI has about 900 cases involving homegrown violent extremists in every state. The vast majority of them, FBI officials say, are related to the Islamic State.

These, however, are a fraction of the approximately 10,000 terrorism cases the FBI has opened — many are overseas cases involving crimes against Americans, such as journalist James Foley, who was beheaded last year on video by Mohammed Emwazi, better known as "Jihadi John." Authorities believe Emwazi was killed in a U.S. drone strike Thursday.

The FBI felt the Islamic State's reach acutely earlier this year when it had to reassign hundreds of agents from its criminal division to deal with the Islamic State threat across the country.

"We had dozens of people," Comey said recently at an event in Washington. "We had to find ways to incapacitate them, all popping up going to kill people." When asked whether the bureau could sustain that pace without additional resources, he expressed doubt.

"If that were the new normal, that would be very stressful," he said. "It's a hard time for the bureau. Only on TV is it easy to follow people."

The FBI is faced with guarding against two types of terrorist scenarios. In one, a plan is developed in the terrorist group's stronghold in Raqqa, Syria, and foreign fighters, skilled in the use of weapons and explosives, return home and mount a large-scale attack. The FBI has been training with police departments across the country to respond to a terrorist attack similar to the one that took place in Mumbai in 2008, when a team of 10 militants killed 164 people.

Last month, dozens of FBI agents from the Washington field office, Fairfax County, Va., police officers and tactically trained fire department personnel descended on a large shopping mall afterhours at 10 p.m. and played out such an attack until 4 a.m. the next day.

But FBI officials believe that scenario is less likely to happen in the United States.

They say a more probable attack would involve individuals inspired by Islamic State propaganda to act on their own — people Comey has described as "unmoored," "unpredictable" and "wingnuts."

That second scenario has already happened. Among the many Americans the FBI has charged, some are accused of plotting — without direction from the Islamic State — to kill U.S. military personnel and detonate bombs in New York City.

The FBI said two men in Boston — including Usaamah Abdullah Rahim, 26 — and a third man in Rhode Island had discussed beheading Pamela Geller, an outspoken critic of Islam. They planned to kill her July 4, the FBI said.

When Rahim decided to act early, the FBI was monitoring his phone.

One of the FBI's armed mobile surveillance teams confronted the knife-wielding Rahim and killed him.

"Luckily, we were covering that phone," Comey has said.

In another incident, two Phoenix men, one of whom was under FBI investigation, tried to attack a prophet Muhammad cartoon contest in Garland, Tex., which had been organized by Geller. Both men — Elton Simpson and Nadir Soofi — were killed. Although the FBI did not know of their exact plans, officials say the field office should have reacted more quickly when it learned Simpson might be interested in going to the contest.

An FBI counterterrorism official described Garland as a failure on the front end and a success story on the back end. Given the inflammatory nature of the event, the FBI persuaded local police to increase the number of officers from a handful to more than 40. When Simpson arrived, he was vastly outgunned. Police were ready.

Months after the event, Comey said the bureau still had questions about what happened and the Islamic State's role in the attack. Simpson had hundreds of exchanges with an Islamic State operative overseas, with the two communicating using end-to-end encryption.

"We don't know even today what was said between the two of them," Comey said. "We know they were in direct communication with him the day he left to go kill people in Garland, TX. This is an example of the problem that I call going dark."

It's not clear how the attacks in Paris will affect FBI operations in the United States and whether there will be an uptick in cases.

Comey said late last month that the pace had dropped a "little bit" since the summer, and so he moved FBI personnel back to their usual roles in the criminal division. He said that since July 1, the FBI had detected only six U.S. travelers trying to reach the Islamic State's self-declared caliphate. In the months before, the FBI was seeing far more than that.

Comey speculated that perhaps part of the Islamic State's message urging Muslims to come to the caliphate was "becoming less effective."

"Something interesting is going on that I don't know enough about to tell you about with high confidence," he said. "Something has happened that has flattened the curve."

That was before Paris.

Former Al Qaeda Terrorist: Another Attack Coming in 'Two Weeks', Fox News

Fox News
2015 11 17

An ex-terrorist who later became a CIA double agent says a second public attack is likely to occur within the next fortnight.

"I believe that within the next two weeks, we will have an attack," Morten Storm, a Danish former Al Qaeda member, said on "The Kelly File" tonight.

"The people who are on the run at the moment from ISIS in Europe are very desperate, and they know their time's up, and they will need to do as much damage as possible," he explained.

Storm said the security situation in Europe has become "quite severe."

"And I also believe that copycats in America will do their best to do what their brothers have done in Europe," he said.

Staging an attack here would be "a bit different," because borders here are more tightly controlled, Storm noted.

But on the other hand, people here have more access to firearms, he said.

He says terrorist militants may focus on "softer targets" in America, such as civilians in "shopping malls," he said.

Paris attacks: lax EU watchlist lets jihadists travel freely from Syria to Europe, UK Telegraph

By Matthew Holehouse
2188 words
17 November 2015

The Telegraph Online

As few as one in a hundred European passport holders are checked against anti-terror watchlist on entry to Schengen zone - and no one knows if any refugees are checked

Home-grown jihadists are able to travel freely from Syria to Europe because as few as one in 100 are checked against the EU's anti-terrorism watchlist in some countries, the Telegraph has learnt.

Wanted terrorists carrying European passports can be waved through border checks with nothing more than a cursory visual inspection of their travel documents, sources have said.

And EU officials say they have no idea if any of the thousands of refugees currently making their way into Europe are being scanned against the watchlist.

On average, just 10-20 per cent of EU nationals travelling from outside the continent have their passports checked against a Schengen-wide database designed to catch foreign fighters returning from Syria and Iraq.

At least three of the eight known Paris terrorists are believed to have fought in Syria before returning to commit Friday's atrocity. All those identified so far are believed to be EU citizens.

Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the suspected mastermind, boasted of how he had travelled back and forth from Syria to his Belgian home several times as he plotted mass-murder. He told an Isil magazine that a border guard failed to recognise him despite being hunted by intelligence agencies and his photograph being broadcast in the news.

Samy Amimour, the Bataclan suicide bomber, was put on the watchlist after trying to travel to Yemen in 2012. But he was still able to travel to Syria a year later, triggering an international warrant for his arrest, before sneaking back to France to commit mass murder.

Ayoub el-Khazzani, the terrorist behind the botched gun attack on a Thalys high speed train this summer, was also on the SIS list but is believed to have travelled to Syria and criss-crossed Europe with impunity.

It comes as European leaders warn that the Schengen free-travel zone is in crisis and will collapse as states throw up old border controls in the face of terrorism and a migration crisis.

The Schengen Information System (SIS) watchlist contains the details of 4,000 foreign fighters, as well as hundreds of thousands of stolen passports, suspect cars, wanted criminals and missing people. Passports of people travelling from outside the continent are scanned against a computer database flag up those who need to be stopped before they can enter the free-travel zone on the continent.

But the Telegraph has learnt that there are gaping holes in SIS, thanks to an EU commitment to free movement, that have let wanted men slip through.

- Who were the Paris terrorists? Everything we know about the Isil attackers so far

It is ultimately up to countries' security services how they use SIS for EU passport holders. But EU guidelines say that Europeans should be subject only to a "minimum check", including a "rapid and straightforward" inspection to check that their passport belongs to them and is not a forgery. For example, at the Eurostar border, this often involves little more than a momentary downwards glance by French officials.

Officials said the proportion of European passports cross-referenced against SIS ranges between countries from one per cent to one hundred per cent. The average across the EU is around 10-20 per cent.

"Abaaoud, or another jihadist, has good odds working in their favour," an EU diplomat admitted.

By contrast, British border officials are understood to check every traveller, regardless of nationality, against SIS and other immigration and criminal databases.

In the wake of the Charlie Hebdo massacre France demanded every traveller into Europe be subject to full SIS checks, backed up by fingerprint scans. The demand was repeated after the Paris massacre. But EU officials are resistant to a fundamental review of the rules because the right to pass in and out the continent unhindered "is a part of free movement", they argue.

Under EU rules, all non-European passport holders are meant to be checked against SIS. However, this is not taking place. Only the "majority" of airports taking commercial flights from outside Europe are applying the SIS checks.

Alain Chouet, a former chief of France's DGSE external intelligence service, said that Amimour's arrival back to France "should have triggered a red flag.

"But these guys understand very well the techniques for entering and exiting the Schengen zone. They've practised it a lot."

"We have a problem with controlling Europe's Schengen borders – a big one," he said.

Abaaoud, who uses the alias Abu Omar Al-Baljiki, told Dabiq magazine: "I was able to leave... despite being chased after by so many intelligence agencies. All this proves that a Muslim should not fear the bloated image of the crusader intelligence.

"My name and picture were all over the news yet I was able to stay in their homeland, plan operations against them, and leave safely when doing so became necessary."

He said he and two fellow jihadists travelled to Belgium to "terrorise the crusaders waging war against the Muslims".

He said: "We faced a number of trials during the journey. We spent months trying to find a way into Europe, and by Allah's strength, we succeeded in finally making our way to Belgium.

"We were then able to obtain weapons and set up a safe house while we planned to carry out operations against the crusaders."

Abaaoud said he was stopped during the journey by "an officer" after a picture of him fighting for Isil was published in Belgian media, but the officer "let me go, as he did not see the resemblance". He did not say when or where he was stopped.

He boasted that he had been able to plan terror attacks against Westerners while living in Belgium and being wanted by intelligence agencies when he travelled to Syria in January 2014.

Recherche renseignement humain désespérément, Le Point

Aziz Zemouri

Le Point, no. 2254

France, jeudi 19 novembre 2015, p. 56,57

Faillie. A-t-on trop compté sur la technologie ?

Des agents de la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) viennent de passer une semaine derrière la porte d'un objectif. En vain, le suspect était parti en vacances. Mauvaise transmission d'informations entre les analystes et les opérationnels de la centrale du renseignement intérieur ? Les réformes successives depuis la fusion en 2008 entre la Direction de la surveillance du territoire (DST) - qui avait connu son heure de gloire à combattre les espions du Rideau de fer - et la Direction centrale des renseignements généraux (DCRG), aguerris sur l'islamisme radical depuis près de vingt ans, ont multiplié les obstacles sur la route des policiers du renseignement. Pis, désormais, au sein de la DGSI, « c'est la culture DST qui a pris le pas sur les méthodes des renseignements généraux faites d'infiltration, de filatures et de contacts ».

Les fonctionnaires du renseignement obéissent au cadre fixé par les politiques. Avec une pratique contre les réseaux islamistes qui remonte au début des années 80, les flics des renseignements généraux sont pourtant marginalisés au sein de la DGSI. De l'extérieur, on pourrait croire à une querelle de chapelle. « La DST est excellente en matière de contre-espionnage, mais les agents des renseignements généraux travaillent le terreau de l'islamisme et des banlieues depuis plusieurs décennies et, malgré l'urgence de la situation actuelle, ce sont les promoteurs du contre-espionnage qui dirigent la lutte contre le terrorisme islamiste. On marche sur la tête », provoque un des derniers patrons de la DST.

La doctrine initiée par l'ancien ministre de l'Intérieur Manuel Valls fait désormais la part belle à la collecte d'informations par la technologie. Au fur et à mesure de la radicalisation de la menace, les moyens technologiques se sont multipliés au détriment du renseignement humain. Jusque et y compris à la prestigieuse DGSE, où Bernard Bajolet vient de décider qu'il en serait bientôt terminé des actions d'infiltration sur les théâtres extérieurs trop dangereux. « On se fonctionnarise », déplore un agent de terrain. Normal, pour une administration, non ? « Aux RG, on vivait pour un dossier, aujourd'hui, à la DGSI, tout est cloisonné, personne ne sait ce que fait l'autre et chacun est jaloux de ses sources et personne ne prête à ses copains », décrit un officier.

Détournement d'agent. Mais parfois la DGSI joue aussi des tours aux collègues de la Direction du renseignement de la préfecture de police (DRPP), qui agit à Paris et sur la petite couronne. Les renseignements intérieurs ont tenté de détourner un indic de son agent traitant, un fonctionnaire de la DRPP. Il lui avait même fourni un téléphone afin qu'il ne passe plus que par ses nouveaux amis de Levallois. Ces pratiques ont entraîné une vive discussion entre le patron de la DRPP, René Bailly, et celui de la DGSI, Patrick Calvar. En attendant, les djihadistes comptent les points. En outre, l'ajout d'une nouvelle structure, le service central du renseignement territorial, ne simplifie pas le recueil d'informations.

C'est pour pallier cette absence de coordination que Bernard Cazeneuve a créé un état-major opérationnel de prévention du terrorisme concurrente de l'Unité de coordination de la lutte antiterrorisme (Uclat). Cette fois, ce sont les agents qui comptent les points et se désespèrent après les différentes vagues d'attentats, les méthodes n'étant toujours pas adaptées à la réalité mouvante des cibles. Pis, les agents de certains services du renseignement rechignent à partager leurs informations avec la DGSI. Si une affaire aboutit, la récompense va au service qui « a fait l'affaire et non à celui qui l'a initiée ». Les fonctionnaires de police peu rémunérés et avec peu d'espoir de promotion regardent à deux fois avant de « perdre » une info.

Durant les attentats de Charlie-Hebdo, la DGSI était en pleine restructuration. Et la note de Bernard Cazeneuve contre la radicalisation au sein de la police a donné le sentiment aux agents d'origine maghrébine qu'ils étaient ciblés. Ce qui les a démobilisés. Certains auraient même perdu à cette occasion leur habilitation secret-défense. La multiplication des fiches S - on parle de 4 000 mais certains avancent le chiffre de 10 000 -, augmente le risque de dispersion. « Un seul gendarme qui a un an d'expérience dans le domaine de l'islamisme radical au sein du SCRT détermine si on doit créer une fiche S ou non. Sans discernement et avec le risque de se tromper, on fiche à tour de bras avec personne pour surveiller ! »

« On répertorie les plus visibles alors que ceux qui se dissimulent sont oubliés », dénonce un fonctionnaire en rupture de ban. « On ne fait plus rien en amont : il faut compter 8 polici

'Mastermind' was on drone strike list, UK Times (Canada)

Michael A. Evans
18 November 2015
UK Times

The US had been hunting for the suspected mastermind of the Paris terrorist attacks for months, it emerged yesterday, but failed to pinpoint him with surveillance in Syria.

Abdelhamid Abaaoud, high on Europe's wanted list since evading capture in Belgium for a failed terrorist plot in January, had been a potential target for a drone strike because of his declared ambition to launch attacks overseas.

The US, France and Britain operate drones over Syria, and intelligence sources told The Times that there had been an extraordinary effort to share information about Abaaoud.

France is not a member of the "Five Eyes" intelligence-sharing club, consisting of the US, Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. It does benefit from intercepted communications on a case-by-case basis, however, and was working with the Five Eyes countries to track Abaaoud.

France first deployed a surveillance drone to hunt for Abaaoud and other Isis terrorists in Syria in September. At the time, President Hollande said he was sending French drones because "we have proof that attacks have been planned from Syria against several countries, notably France". It is likely that he was referring to Abaaoud.

France's own signals intelligence capability is small-scale when compared to America's National Security Agency and Britain's GCHQ. This was why it was allowed into the Five Eyes network to track Abaaoud.

Over ten months no evidence emerged that Abaaoud was plotting a multi-pronged attack in Paris, although John Brennan, the head of the CIA, has said that the terrorist attack, which involved three teams of gunmen, would have taken months to organise.

The huge surveillance and eavesdropping operation began in January when Abaaoud vanished from Belgium after he had been suspected of plotting to behead Belgian police officers. He is thought to have arrived in Belgium from Syria a few weeks earlier. It is suspected that he then made his way back to Syria through Turkey.

He is accused of recruiting thousands of people to join Isis's cause. In July he was sentenced in his absence to 20 years in prison by a Belgian court for recruiting would-be iihadists.

Last year he went to Syria with his 13-year-old brother. Abaaoud later appeared in a video driving a vehicle dragging two bodies attached to the rear bumper somewhere in northern Syria.

The decision to recruit his brother may have helped him to avoid a drone strike. It is believed that at one point a phone call from northern Syria to Europe was intercepted, but analysts were unsure whether it was made by Abaaoud or his brother.

All US drone strikes are only authorised when there is perceived to be minimal risk of civilian fatalities. Any risk of killing a teenage boy, albeit the brother of one of their most wanted terrorist suspects, would have deterred the Americans from launching a strike.

Analysis-How Belgium became a breeding ground for international terrorists, The Guardian

Jason Burke
18 November 2015
The Guardian

Until now, European security services largely ignored the growth of extremism in the Muslim neighbourhoods of Brussels

Two days after the 9/11 attacks in 2001, a 31-year-old called Nizar Trabelsi was detained in Uccle , on the outskirts of Brussels. The former footballer of Tunisian origin was eventually sentenced to 10 years in prison for an intended attack on a Nato base.

In 2003, another militant of Tunisian origin detained in Belgium was sentenced to six years in prison for his role in a Brussels-based network which supplied fraudulent documents that had allowed the killers of an Afghan commander, Ahmed Shah Massoud , who fell victim to a suicide bomber two days before 9/11, to reach their target.

In the first half of the last decade, as European security services struggled to understand the new threat they faced, and bombs exploded in Madrid and London, Belgium was largely ignored.

Given the increasingly evident role that the country has played in the Paris attacks, this now looks like a mistake. By some estimates, Belgium has supplied the highest per capita number of fighters to Syria of any European nation – between 350 and 550, out of a total population of 11 million that includes fewer than half a million Muslims.

This is a problem that has been building for many years. As elsewhere in Europe, Belgium suffered waves of terrorism in the 1980s and 1990s linked to unrest in the Middle East. "There is a very long history of connection between Belgium and France in the realm of terrorism," said Rik Coolsaet, an expert in terrorism at the University of Ghent.

In the first half of the last decade, a few score men from Belgium made their way to Iraq. So too did Muriel Degauque, a convert from Charleroi, who died in 2005 while bombing a US convoy in Iraq, becoming the first European woman to launch a suicide attack.

Others travelled to Afghanistan. In 2008, a network sending young Belgian Muslims to al-Qaida training camps was broken up. Many appeared disappointed by what they found in the combat zone but that did not seem to slow the flow. Several returned with the intention of committing attacks at home, prosecutors claimed.

The leader of the group was Moez Garsallaoui, a Tunisian-born Belgian based on Pakistan's border with Afghanistan. Garsallaoui was not part of al-Qaida, but formed his own faction, fighting international forces in Afghanistan and fomenting terror back in Europe. Before being killed by a US drone strike in 2012, he trained Mohammed Merah, the 23-year-old French former petty criminal who killed seven people in Toulouse and Montauban.

The violent aftermath of the Arab spring provided a new motivation and new opportunities for extremists all over Europe, and militancy in Belgium itself was already broadening and deepening. One well-known, ostensibly non-violent, group of activists – Sharia4Belgium – that was responsible for a stream of aggressive hate-speech and alleged recruitment was eventually broken up.

Molenbeek, a borough of 90,000 in the capital where some neighbourhoods are up to 80% Muslim, is seen by many as a particular problem. "In parts of Brussels, there are areas on which the police have little grip, very segregated areas that don't feel they're a part of the Belgian state," said Edwin Bakker, a Dutch analyst.

Others say the role of Molenbeek is being exaggerated and that self-help groups, especially those run by concerned parents, have made a real difference there in recent years.

But the two trends – the flow of young disaffected Muslims to Syria and the longstanding links to France – inevitably combined. In August 2014, a Frenchman of Algerian origin living in Molenbeek shot dead four people at the Jewish museum in Brussels. Mehdi Nemmouche had recently returned from Syria, French officials believe, where he may have acted as a jailer of western hostages for Islamic State.

When Amedy Coulibaly, the Frenchman who claimed allegiance to Isis when he attacked a Jewish supermarket in Paris days after the Charlie Hebdo shootings in January, needed weapons, he headed to Brussels. There, he swapped cars bought on fraudulent credit cards in France for automatic weapons and ammunition.

In February, a series of raids and shootouts in Brussels and the small town of Verviers rolled up most of a network of Belgians who had returned from Syria and were preparing to launch a series of attacks, possibly on police. But some got away. Abdel-Hamid Abu Oud, who is now being seen as the organiser of the attacks in Paris, was one.

The current focus on Belgium may disguise a broader and more worrying prospect. Coolsaet, the terrorism expert, said that although the estimates for the numbers of Belgians who have travelled to Syria were accurate, they may not be exceptionally high. Instead, they could indicate that the true totals elsewhere, especially in France, may be considerably greater than currently thought.

"We have good security services who are lucky to work in a small country with small cities. It's much easier to get an insight into what's going on here," he said. "The figures are reliable. Elsewhere, that is not always the case."

Attaques terroristes à Paris/ Paris Terrorist Attacks

(A Communications Branch product/un produit de la Direction des communications)

Saturday, November 21 2015

le samedi 21 novembre 2015

09:00 / 9 h00

Highlights/Faits saillants.....	2
Service Mentions/Mentions du Service	2
Paris attacks show how hard it is to profile ISIS recruits, CBC News	2
Liberals' refugee plan still unsettled, Globe and Mail	4
Canada	6
Paris attacks a 'game changer' for NATO, general says, Globe and Mail.....	6
Other/Autres	7
Le niveau d'alerte passe à 4, Agence Belga.....	7
Belgian capital under serious terrorism threat, with at least 1 Paris attacks suspect at large, Associated Press.....	10
L'enquête avance sur le commando de Saint-Denis, Le Monde	12
Le rôle opérationnel d'Abaaoud se précise, Le Monde.....	14
Analysis: In Terror Fight, French Feel Increasingly Isolated, Wall Street Journal.....	16
Anti-terrorism 'ghosts' wage war from a computer, UK Times	17
EU to Step Up Checks on Citizens Entering Bloc in Security Push, Wall Street Journal	19
Suspected ISIL scout in Paris attacks arrested in Turkey's Antalya, Dogan News Agency.....	21
Ce que les Belges savaient d'Abaaoud, Le Monde	22
Après l'assaut de Saint-Denis, la traque se poursuit, Le Figaro.....	24
Attacks Push European Union to Consider Limits on Passport-Free Travel, New York Times ..	26
Informer, c'est aussi démentir les rumeurs, Le Monde	28
Paris attacks: Indonesia calls for more intelligence sharing, Financial Times	30
The war in the Middle East: Fighting near and far, The Economist	31
Le rôle déterminant du Maroc dans la localisation d'Abaaoud, France 24	34
After Paris attack, safety vs. liberties, New York Times	35

Highlights/Faits saillants

- The fact that most of the Paris attackers identified so far were European-born radicals has once again shined the spotlight on the growing problem in the West of homegrown extremism. There is no reliable profile for many of the candidates being recruited by extremist Islamic groups, Phil Gurski, a former intelligence analyst with CSIS, told CBC News. "Throughout my career at CSIS and looking at a lot of these things, we simply found that there were no useful elements in terms of profiles, whether it was age or ethnicity or employment status or education or psychological or criminal background," Gurski said.
- Une fiche de synthèse des services de renseignements belges concernant le parcours d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud, que Le Monde a pu consulter, reprend point par point, de façon chronologique, jusqu'en février 2015, l'itinéraire connu du djihadiste
- An elite unit of anti-terrorism "hacktivists" is helping the British security services with intelligence operations against Isis, The UK Times has learnt. Since the Paris attacks, members have infiltrated online Isis accounts run by individuals who had prior knowledge of the shootings.
- In a Globe and Mail report, General Petr Pavel, chairman of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's military committee says the Paris attacks are a "game changer" for security in the West as the ascendant Islamic State moves beyond its selfproclaimed caliphate in Iraq and Syria to wage al-Qaeda-style attacks on distant targets.
- France 24 souligne que François Hollande a vivement remercié le roi Mohamed VI en visite à Paris, vendredi 20 novembre, pour le rôle crucial des services de renseignement marocains dans l'enquête sur les attaques à Paris.
- French officials are particularly frustrated with their European Union partners over what they see as insufficient cooperation in intelligence, security and defense, the Wall Street Journal reports. "Everyone must understand that it's urgent for Europe to recover, to organize itself, and to defend itself against the terrorist menace," French Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said this week.

Service Mentions/Mentions du Service

Paris attacks show how hard it is to profile ISIS recruits, CBC News

Sheena Goodyear
CBC News
2015 11 21

The fact that most of the Paris attackers identified so far were European-born radicals has once again shined the spotlight on the growing problem in the West of homegrown extremism.

Authorities have identified four Frenchmen and two Belgians as suspects in the shootings and suicide bombings that killed 129 people on Friday. That puts them among ISIS's legion of foreign fighters, which some have estimated to be as many as 200,000.

A seventh suspect's body was found near a Syrian passport, but its authenticity has come under scrutiny after Serbian police arrested a man with an almost identical copy, the Guardian newspaper reported.

The European backgrounds of the perpetrators puts France and the West in the difficult position of trying to understand why their own citizens would sacrifice their lives to murder their neighbours on behalf of an extremist organization in another part of the world ? a question radicalization analysts say is almost impossible to answer.

There is no reliable profile for many of the candidates being recruited by extremist Islamic groups, Phil Gurski, a former intelligence analyst with the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, told CBC News.

“Throughout my career at CSIS and looking at a lot of these things, we simply found that there were no useful elements in terms of profiles, whether it was age or ethnicity or employment status or education or psychological or criminal background,” Gurski said.

Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the suspected mastermind of the Paris attacks, killed in a police assault, was a lifelong Muslim and the child of Moroccan immigrants.

By contrast, Damian Clairmont, the Calgary man who died fighting with ISIS in Syria last year, was a white Muslim convert with an Acadian ancestry.

Even gender is not a guaranteed common factor, as there have been multiple reports of Canadian women joining ISIS.

“We’ve had people ? poor, rich, married, unmarried, mental illness, converts, not-converts ? and so there’s nothing really there in terms of profile,” says Amarnath Amarasingam, a post-doctoral fellow who researches terrorism and radicalization at Halifax’s Dalhousie University.

“What all of them do tend to have in common ... is youth, [with a] thrust towards meaning and purpose and significance. A lot of these youth don’t feel like they fit into the broader society, they don’t feel like they belong.”

Giving ISIS what they want

The fact that ISIS preys on those who feel isolated and excluded should be a wake-up call for Western nations to build more inclusive societies, says Rima Berns-McGown, a University of Toronto history professor who researches how government policy affects youth radicalization.

She’s concerned that certain state responses to the Paris attacks, like closing doors to Syrian refugees, play into ISIS’s hands.

“The reason ISIS does these things, launches these attacks and so on, is because it actually wants to create an environment in which the West appears to be hostile to people who are not of the West. It wants to create a sort of civilizational war,” she said.

“It wants to create anger and resentment. It wants to create Islamophobia. It wants to create racism. Because if it does that, it makes the lives of individual Muslims more uncomfortable, and it wants to say, ‘You cannot be at home in the West. You need to come and be at home in the only place that will respect you.’”

‘Utopian’ vision

For his part, Amarasingam said ISIS is unique among Islamic extremists organizations in selling this “utopian” vision of a caliphate, or Islamic state, where people can find a sense of belonging.

“It’s a state where they believe that Islamic law is being practiced in its purest and fullest form, and therefore all Muslims around the world have an obligation to make migration to that state,” he said.

“The fact that the vast majority of Muslims around the world disagree that this is the authentic Islamic state doesn’t seem to bother them too much.” But many of the youth it is able to recruit “are drawn to that nation-building, utopian vision that they’re portraying themselves to be.”

The warning signs

When people start to buy into this propaganda, they exhibit certain behaviours.

In his book The Threat From Within: Recognizing al-Qaeda-Inspired Radicalization and Terrorism in the West, he outlines 12 indicators of radicalization, including:

- Expressing vocal opposition to Western values.
- Spending lengthy amounts of time on violent jihadist websites.
- Exhibiting hatred towards non-Muslims, moderate Muslims or Shia Muslims.
- Isolating themselves from people who disagree with them.

He cautions that while all homegrown radicals exhibit some or all of these behaviours, not everyone who shows these warning signs crosses the line into violence and criminality.

People with friends or family members who fit this profile shouldn’t necessarily make accusations or call 911, he said. Instead, just talk to them and find out what’s going on.

“These are warning signs. In the same way that if you think someone is engaged in gang activity or illegal substances or whatever, you don’t just kind of sit back and say ‘Oh that’s interesting.’ You take action.”

Liberals' refugee plan still unsettled, Globe and Mail

By DANIEL LEBLANC, STEVEN CHASE

21 November 2015

The Globe and Mail

Debate continues over whether to conduct screening on foreign soil to avoid later legal hurdles, which could have effect on timeline

The Liberals are still debating whether to extend the Dec. 31 deadline to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada in order to allow all health and security screening to be conducted on foreign soil, sources said.

The greatest concern at this point is that if some refugees land in the country as unscreened temporary residents, the government would face a series of legal hurdles before it could expel any of them for failing required tests, the sources said.

The Trudeau government is in the final stages of preparing its resettlement plan, which, in the recent election campaign, the Liberals promised to conclude by the end of the year. The final details will be unveiled on Tuesday, after a meeting of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's full cabinet.

A key issue still under debate is whether to allow some of the refugees to land in Canada as temporary residents and undergo further screening here, or to conduct all screening abroad and welcome all of the asylum seekers in the country as permanent residents, sources said.

The first option would accelerate the process; the second one could push back the arrival of a portion of the refugees into January, a source said.

Given the ongoing conflict in Syria, the government wants to avoid a situation in which it would have "stateless citizens" on its soil. In that context, some federal officials are pushing for the government to do the entire screening abroad, in countries such as Lebanon and Jordan.

"You don't want people who are in the country who are legally ambiguous and you have nowhere to send them," a federal official said, adding that the internal debate "could change the timeline" for the arrival of the refugees.

Immigration lawyer Gordon Maynard said the issue for the government is that providing temporary residency status to refugees would speed up the process, but it would be hard to subsequently send them back to their "country of nationality."

Concerns about the security risks posed by Syrian refugees began spreading among provincial and municipal governments after last Friday's terror attacks in Paris. The Trudeau government is striving to convince Canadians that the refugees are a minimal risk, insisting that the RCMP and CSIS have endorsed the proposed screening as robust and strong.

Asked about polls suggesting Canadians are sharply divided on bringing in so many Syrian refugees so quickly, Canada's new Defence Minister, Harjit Sajjan, offered a passionate rejoinder.

Mr. Sajjan said welcoming 25,000 Syrians in a matter of weeks is not just "a humanitarian project" but also a rebuke of the Islamic State, which seeks to convince Syrian Muslims and others that the West is their enemy.

"This sends a great message to ISIS," he said, using one of the acronyms for the Islamic State, "that you might have created this environment for us but we will not let you take advantage of this."

Sources said there are still a "number of moving parts" as federal officials work with other levels of government to finalize plans to welcome and house the refugees across the country – as many as half at military bases – and help them integrate into Canadian society.

Speaking at the Canada202 conference in Ottawa, Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne said she is convinced that adequate security measures are in place.

"What we can't give into is allowing security to mask racism," she said. "That's the danger."

Canada

Paris attacks a 'game changer' for NATO, general says, Globe and Mail

By STEVEN CHASE

21 November 2015

The Globe and Mail

One of NATO's senior officials says the Nov. 13 Paris attacks are a "game changer" for security in the West as the ascendant Islamic State moves beyond its selfproclaimed caliphate in Iraq and Syria to wage al-Qaeda-style attacks on distant targets.

General Petr Pavel, chairman of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's military committee, said all Western countries are at risk of not just IS-inspired attacks but also terrorism planned and executed directly by the Islamic State, also known as ISIL and ISIS.

"Anyone who is not following the values of ISIL should be afraid."

Recent examples include IS-organized attacks in Beirut, Turkey and Paris, where 130 people were killed and hundreds wounded by gunmen and bombers, as well as the downing of a Russian aircraft carrying 224 people over the Sinai Peninsula in October.

"It is apparent that the Islamic State has reached the limits of geographical expansion and now they are even losing some, so they [will] probably expand into our domain and one of them may be even hitting us on our own ground," Gen. Pavel said in an interview.

"We are most probably at the beginning of a new phase of ISIL activities that will affect us in our own countries and we will have to take appropriate measures," said the general, who was attending the Halifax International Security Forum, an annual gathering of security and defence experts sponsored by the Canadian government.

Gen. Pavel argued that what happened in Paris does not constitute grounds for France to invoke Article 5 of the NATO treaty, which would oblige collective action by all members of the military alliance. The United States invoked this article for the first time in NATO's history after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, but France has not chosen to follow suit.

"It is difficult to imagine a terrorist attack in France as a military aggression against France," the general said. "It's not a military attack."

However, he said NATO needs to share intelligence better and continue to support local forces in Iraq and Syria to fight the Islamic State.

French President François Hollande has called for a grand military coalition of the United States, France and Russia to "eradicate" the Islamic State.

This would force Washington and Moscow to set aside their estrangement over Russia's 2014 annexation of Ukraine's Crimean Peninsula and its ongoing backing for rebels fighting Kiev in eastern Ukraine.

Gen. Pavel said that while the West may have to "pragmatically co-ordinate" with Moscow to fight the Islamic State, he warned against losing focus on Russia's ongoing occupation of Crimea and the fragile ceasefire in eastern Ukraine.

"That would be a mistake on our side," he said, warning that this would play into Moscow's hands. "That would be exactly ... one of the objectives of President Putin – to take attention out of Ukraine and move it elsewhere [and] now in this case to Syria."

"We shouldn't let Ukraine disappear from the radar and stay focused on the fact there were breaches to the international security system made by Russia that are not forgiven and not forgotten."

He said there have been increasing breaches of the Minsk ceasefire between Kiev's soldiers and the Russian-backed rebels in recent days and heavy weaponry has not been removed from the immediate region, as required.

Canada has nearly 70 special forces soldiers in Iraq advising Kurdish fighters in their battle against the Islamic State and CF-18 warplanes are currently bombing IS targets in Iraq and Syria. The new Liberal government is planning to withdraw the jets and expand training efforts in Iraq, possibly including government forces.

About 200 Canadian troops are currently deployed to Ukraine to train Kiev's forces to better fight the Russian-backed rebels.

Other/Autres

Le niveau d'alerte passe à 4, Agence Belga

Agence Belga

2015 11 21

"Un risque d'attentat par des individus avec armes et explosifs à plusieurs endroits de la capitale"

Le niveau d'alerte terroriste a été relevé samedi à 4, soit le niveau le plus élevé qui qualifie la menace de "sérieuse et imminente", pour toute la Région bruxelloise, indique le Centre de crise du SPF Intérieur à la suite d'une nouvelle évaluation de l'OCAM.

Selon le Premier ministre, Charles Michel, ce relèvement du niveau d'alerte serait lié à un risque d'attentat par des individus avec armes et explosifs, peut-être à plusieurs endroits de la capitale.

Quatre axes de mesures

Le Premier ministre Charles Michel a annoncé l'entrée en vigueur de mesures immédiatement opérationnelles en quatre axes pour répondre au niveau maximal de menace terroriste à Bruxelles et au niveau trois dans le reste du pays, à l'issue d'une réunion du Conseil national de sécurité samedi matin. Le nombre de grands événements sera diminué, "pour des raisons de sécurité et de capacité", a indiqué le Premier ministre, "car cela permet de libérer des capacités qui peuvent être mobilisées pour sécuriser tout le territoire". Les organisateurs d'événements peuvent se mettre en contact avec le centre crise pour recevoir des informations complémentaires.

Les transports publics feront l'objet d'une vigilance accrue, principalement dans le métro. La circulation de ce dernier à Bruxelles reste stoppée jusque dimanche après-midi au moins. La capacité de déploiement de la police et de l'armée est renforcée sur tout le territoire, mais surtout à Bruxelles.

Enfin, une ligne téléphonique - 1771 - est ouverte pour permettre de s'adresser au centre de crise, recevoir des informations et des conseils. Pour ne pas surcharger cette ligne, il est recommandé de consulter en priorité le site internet www.centredecrise.be.

Le relèvement du niveau d'alerte terroriste au niveau quatre a été décidé durant la nuit sur base de l'évaluation de l'Organe de coordination pour l'analyse de la menace (OCAM), pour la région bruxelloise et Vilvorde, mais reste au niveau trois pour le reste du pays. "Cela résulte d'informations relativement précises d'un risque d'attentat tel que déroulé à Paris" a déclaré le Premier ministre, la menace portant sur une hypothèse d'un ou plusieurs individus avec des armes et explosifs à même de frapper à plusieurs endroits en même temps, a-t-il précisé lors d'une conférence de presse.

Les cibles potentielles, selon les informations dont les autorités disposent, sont les centres commerciaux, les rues commerçantes, les transports publics, et les événements rassemblant beaucoup de monde, a indiqué Charles Michel.

Les mesures annoncées peuvent "à tout moment être modifiées", a précisé le Premier ministre. Le Conseil national de sécurité se réunira à nouveau dimanche dans l'après-midi. Une nouvelle évaluation de la menace par l'OCAM sera formulée à ce moment-là également.

Le Premier ministre a indiqué que les enquêtes en France et en Belgique sur les attentats de Paris se poursuivaient et qu'il n'était "pas question de faire le moindre commentaire pour des raisons de sécurité évidente". "Nous recommandons à la population de respecter l'ensemble des consignes de sécurité et de se tenir informée en utilisant les voies de communication officielles", a déclaré le Premier ministre.

Le gouvernement belge appelle la population à faire preuve de prudence et de vigilance, mais aussi de ne pas glisser dans la panique, a insisté Charles Michel.

"La situation est suivie de manière permanente"

Le Centre de crise n'était pas en mesure de préciser combien de temps le niveau 4 restera en application dans la Région bruxelloise. "La situation est suivie de manière permanente. Elle peut dès lors être réévaluée à tout moment si de nouveaux éléments nous parvenaient", a expliqué Peter Mertens, porte-parole du Centre de crise.

Lundi en fin de soirée, le Centre de crise avait annoncé le relèvement du niveau d'alerte terroriste à 3 pour l'ensemble du territoire. Il avait alors rappelé que Salah Abdeslam, suspecté d'avoir participé à l'organisation et à l'exécution des attentats perpétrés à Paris le 13 novembre, était toujours recherché. Celui-ci est encore en fuite actuellement. Le gouvernement communiquera au sujet du relèvement de la menace samedi matin.

Pour déterminer un niveau, l'Ocam se base sur les informations transmises notamment par la Sûreté de l'Etat, le Service général du renseignement et de la sécurité (SGRS), les polices locales et fédérale, les douanes et l'Office des étrangers. Placé sous l'autorité des ministres de la Justice et de l'Intérieur, cet organe est composé d'experts détachés des services dont il utilise les informations et d'analystes propres. Il est chargé d'évaluer périodiquement et ponctuellement le degré de menace terroriste en Belgique.

La deuxième fois de l'histoire du pays

C'est seulement la deuxième fois que le niveau d'alerte terroriste atteint l'échelon le plus élevé sur le territoire belge. La première fois était survenue lors des fêtes de fin d'année 2007-2008 après l'interpellation de 14 personnes qui planifiaient de permettre à Nizar Trabelsi de s'évader.

La section terrorisme de la police fédérale et le parquet fédéral craignaient alors des actes à caractère terroriste et avaient pris des mesures de sécurité exceptionnelles. Le niveau de la menace avait été à maintenu à 4 entre le 21 décembre 2007 et le 3 janvier 2008. Le traditionnel feu d'artifice du Nouvel an dans le centre de Bruxelles avait été annulé à la suite cette situation.

Nizar Trabelsi avait été condamné en juin 2004 à 10 ans de prison pour la préparation d'un attentat contre la base militaire de Kleine-Brogel.

Le Conseil national de sécurité se réunit samedi matin après que le niveau d'alerte a été relevé à quatre, soit le maximum, pour Bruxelles durant la nuit. "Nous avons suffisamment d'éléments pour estimer que la menace est précise et imminente", a affirmé à son arrivée le ministre des Affaires étrangères Didier Reynders. Le Premier ministre Charles Michel, avec les vice-premiers ministres chargés de de l'Intérieur, Jan Jambon, des Affaires étrangères, Didier Reynders, de la Justice, Koen Geens, et de l'Economie, Kris Peeters, sont arrivés au 16 rue de la loi à Bruxelles vers 9h00, pour se concerter avec les autorités chargées de la sécurité. "La menace est suffisante pour passer au niveau d'alerte quatre, nous devons maintenant prendre des mesures", a déclaré à son arrivée le ministre de l'Intérieur, Jan Jambon.

Le niveau 3 maintenu ailleurs

Le niveau 3, soit une menace "possible et vraisemblable", reste en vigueur pour le reste du pays. L'analyse de l'Organe de coordination pour l'analyse de la menace (OCAM) démontre en effet "une menace sérieuse et imminente nécessitant la prise de mesures de sécurité spécifiques ainsi que des recommandations particulières à la population", précise le Centre de crise, qui qualifie la situation de "très grave" dans la Région bruxelloise.

Belgian capital under serious terrorism threat, with at least 1 Paris attacks suspect at large, Associated Press

Nov 21, 2015 7:36

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS _ Heavily armed police and soldiers patrolled key intersections and subways were closed in Belgium's capital Saturday as the government warned of a threat of Paris-style attacks. At least one suspect from the deadly Paris attacks is at large, and was last seen crossing into Belgium.

Prime Minister Charles Michel said the decision to raise the threat alert to the highest level was taken "based on quite precise information about the risk of an attack like the one that happened in Paris ... where several individuals with arms and explosives launch actions, perhaps even in several places at the same time."

The Belgian Federal Prosecutor's office said Saturday that several weapons were discovered during the search of the home of one of three people arrested in connection with the Paris attacks, but said no explosives were found.

And in Turkey, officials detained 26-year-old Ahmad Dahmani, a Belgian national of Moroccan origin, who was believed to have been in contact with the Paris attackers.

Authorities across Europe, the Mideast and in Washington are trying to determine how a network of primarily French and Belgian attackers with links to Islamic extremists in Syria plotted and carried out the deadliest violence in France in decades _ and how many may still be on the run.

A new potential link emerged Saturday in Turkey, where authorities said they detained a 26-year-old Belgian suspected of connections to Islamic extremists _ and possibly to the Paris attacks.

Belgium's national Crisis Center had raised its terrorism alert for the Brussels region to Level 4, which indicates a "serious and immediate threat." Belgium's special security Cabinet held an emergency meeting Saturday morning.

Brussels was the home of Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the suspected organizer of the Nov. 13 Paris attacks, and Belgium has filed charges of "participation in terrorist attacks and participation in the activities of a terrorist organization" against three suspects relating to the Paris attacks.

At least one Paris attacker, Salah Abdeslam, crossed into Belgium the morning after the attacks. A Paris police official and the Paris prosecutor's office said Saturday they had no firm information on Abdeslam's whereabouts, including whether he was in the Brussels area.

Heavily armed police and soldiers were patrolled Saturday morning at key intersections of the Belgian capital, a city of more than 1 million that is home to the headquarters of the European Union, the NATO alliance and offices of many multinational corporations.

Residents were recommended to avoid gatherings, train stations, airports and commercial districts. Service was halted on the Brussels Metro, as well as on streetcar lines that run underground.

The prime minister, speaking at a news conference after the emergency government meeting, said, "We urge the public not to give in to panic, to stay calm. We have taken the measures that are necessary."

He said that the government's crisis cell will meet again on Sunday afternoon to reassess the threat.

Dahmani was detained in the Turkish coastal city of Antalya along with two other suspected Islamic State militants. A senior Turkish government official said Dahmani was believed to have been in contact with the Paris attackers, though the official did not say when. Dahmani had arrived in Turkey Nov. 14 from Amsterdam, and the three were preparing to cross into Syria, the official said.

The official cannot be named because of Turkish government rules that bar officials from speaking to reporters without prior authorization.

Government officials in Belgium and France would not immediately comment on Dahmani's arrest.

A Paris police official said Saturday that he had no information about Dahmani or his possible visit to the attack sites. The Paris prosecutor's office said it had no information to communicate about Dahmani.

Concerns about Europe's porous borders prompted interior and justice ministers meeting in Brussels on Friday to promise tightened controls to make it easier to track the movements of jihadis with European passports travelling to and from warzones in Syria.

Paris prosecutors said Friday that they had determined through fingerprint checks that two of the seven attackers who died in the bloodshed Nov. 13 had entered Europe through Greece, an entry point for many of the hundreds of thousands of migrants seeking asylum in Europe.

The five other attackers who died had links to France and Belgium. One of the seven dead has not been identified, while a manhunt is underway for one suspect who escaped, 26-year-old Abdeslam. French police stopped Abdeslam the morning after Friday's attacks at the Belgian border but then let him go. His brother Brahim blew himself up in the Paris attacks.

The suspected ringleader, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, was killed in a raid Wednesday on an apartment in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis.

Marking a week since the carnage, some Parisians lit candles and paid tribute Friday night to the victims with silent reflection. Others decided that enjoying themselves was the best way to defy the extremists. They sang and danced on Place de la Republique, in the heart of a trendy neighbourhood where scores of people were killed.

France's Parliament has extended a state of emergency for three months, expanding police powers to carry out arrests and searches and allowing authorities to forbid the movement of persons and vehicles at specific times and places.

French President Francois Hollande is also meeting with British Prime Minister David Cameron on Monday morning in Paris to discuss co-operation in the fight against the Islamic State group in Syria and Iraq, Cameron's office said. Hollande will travel to Washington and Moscow later in the week to push for a stronger international coalition against IS.

L'enquête avance sur le commando de Saint-Denis, Le Monde

Trois personnes sont mortes lors de l'assaut. Le passeport de la cousine d'Abaaoud a été retrouvé sur place

Le Monde

2015 11 21

L'invité surprise des attentats du 13 novembre à Paris et Saint-Denis, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, a bien été abattu mercredi matin par les policiers du RAID, lors de l'assaut de l'appartement où plusieurs terroristes avaient trouvé refuge dans le centre de Saint-Denis, a révélé, jeudi 19 novembre le procureur de la République à Paris, François Molins. Il restait, vendredi matin, au moins un fugitif : Salah Abdeslam, 26 ans, Français résident à Bruxelles, reparti vers la Belgique samedi matin après les attaques.

Invité surprise, car si le rôle d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud, un Belge de 28 ans parti rejoindre l'Etat islamique (EI) début 2013, comme probable commanditaire des attentats du 13 novembre, est apparu assez rapidement aux enquêteurs, sa présence à Paris, et sa participation directe aux attaques, interroge sur la capacité des services de renseignement français et européens à suivre le mouvement des djihadistes de l'EI. Y compris les plus signalés d'entre eux.

Les enquêteurs s'interrogent aussi sur le parcours qui a permis à au moins deux autres auteurs des attaques de revenir de Syrie : Samy Amimour et Ismaël Omar Mostefai, deux assaillants du Bataclan. Par ailleurs, l'identité réelle du kamikaze du Stade de France auprès duquel un passeport syrien a été découvert reste à établir.

« Nous ne savons pas » comment Abaaoud est entré en France, a reconnu le premier ministre, -Manuel Valls, jeudi. « Ce n'est que le 16 novembre, postérieurement aux attentats de Paris, qu'un service de renseignement d'un pays hors d'Europe nous a signalé avoir eu connaissance de sa présence en Grèce », a précisé le ministre de l'intérieur, Bernard Cazeneuve, dans une déclaration à la presse.

Succès de police judiciaire, échec du renseignement? L'annonce de l'identification d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud parmi les corps retrouvés dans l'appartement rue du Corbillon, à Saint-Denis, où a eu lieu l'assaut, a provoqué un véritable soulagement parmi les enquêteurs. C'est la directrice centrale de la police judiciaire, Mireille Ballestrazzi, qui l'a annoncé personnellement au ministre de l'intérieur, Bernard Cazeneuve. Le corps du djihadiste était criblé de balles, sa tête méconnaissable et le buste en partie dévasté par le souffle d'une explosion.

L'enquête de la section antiterroriste de la police judiciaire parisienne, de la sous-direction antiterroriste de la direction centrale de la police judiciaire (SDAT) et de la direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) avance à grand pas depuis les attaques de vendredi, qui ont fait 129 morts et plusieurs centaines de blessés lors d'attaques kamikazes et de fusillades simultanées au Stade de France, au Bataclan et dans l'est parisien.

Les tribulations d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud dans la capitale française et sa proche banlieue entre vendredi et mercredi se précisent. Une caméra de vidéosurveillance de la RATP l'a filmé sur la ligne 9 vendredi 13 novembre, à 22 h 14, entrant à la station Croix-de-Chavaux, à Montreuil

(Seine-Saint-Denis). Des images tendant à corroborer l'idée que celui qui se faisait appeler Abou Omar était dans la Seat convoyant le commando qui a tiré sur les terrasses de café du 10e et du 11e arrondissement. La voiture avait été retrouvée dans la nuit de samedi à dimanche, rue Edouard-Vaillant, à Montreuil. Des éléments de téléphonie en cours d'exploitations pourraient venir confirmer cette hypothèse.

Services marocains

Selon une source proche de l'enquête, c'est la géolocalisation du téléphone d'Hasna Ait Boulahcen, 26 ans, la cousine d'Abaaoud, qui a permis de confirmer le premier renseignement obtenu lundi après-midi selon lequel elle se trouvait à Saint-Denis avec son cousin. Un témoin est ensuite venu confirmer cette hypothèse. A la veille de la visite du roi du Maroc en France, plusieurs médias ont assuré que ce sont les services marocains qui avaient mis la police française sur la piste de l'appartement de Saint-Denis. Des informations démenties de sources judiciaires et policières françaises, qui tout au plus expliquent que les services du royaume chérifien ont transmis a posteriori des précisions sur les personnes interpellées dans l'appartement.

C'est bien un renseignement de police judiciaire, l'exploitation de la téléphonie et des réquisitions bancaires qui ont mis les enquêteurs sur la piste de Saint-Denis. Toutefois, il n'est pas exclu que la Direction générale de la sécurité extérieure (DGSE) a pu bénéficier de renseignements transmis par des services de renseignements étrangers qu'elle aurait ensuite fournis aux enquêteurs français.

L'assaut, d'une grande violence, a entraîné une certaine confusion concernant l'identification des occupants de l'immeuble. Alors que les services de la police scientifique progressaient péniblement dans l'appartement ravagé par la confrontation entre les policiers et les terroristes, l'incertitude demeurait sur le nombre exact de personnes tuées pendant l'assaut du Raid ainsi que sur le ou la kamikaze qui a déclenché une ceinture d'explosif au moment de l'affrontement.

Selon les informations du Monde, un corps de femme a été retrouvé dans les décombres ainsi qu'un sac à main contenant un passeport au nom d'Hasna Ait Boulahcen. Mais la tête retrouvée par la police scientifique correspond finalement à celle d'un homme. Aucune arme n'a pour l'instant été retrouvée dans l'appartement.

Le procureur de la République de Paris, François Molins, a affirmé mercredi soir que tout laissait à penser « qu'au regard de leur armement, de leur organisation structurée et de leur détermination, ce commando pouvait passer à l'acte . Mais aucun projet précis n'a pu être mis en évidence à ce stade.

Huit personnes étaient toujours en garde à vue à Levallois, dans les locaux de la SDAT, vendredi matin. Parmi elles, Jawad B., qui s'était spontanément présenté comme le logeur du dernier commando à Saint-Denis devant les caméras de BFM TV, assurant toutefois qu'il ignorait tout de ses hôtes. Parmi les autres, des Marocains et des Egyptiens en situation irrégulière qui pourraient n'avoir rien à voir avec les attentats mais qui squattaient vraisemblablement dans l'immeuble.

Des doutes subsistent sur le rôle précis de Salah Abdeslam, qui pourrait être l'un des passagers de la Seat noire utilisée lors des fusillades de terrasses de restaurants et cafés du 10e et 11e arrondissement, mais qui pourrait également avoir conduit la Clio noire qui a déposé les trois kamikazes du Stade de France. Vendredi matin, l'identité de trois des assaillants morts durant les attentats restait inconnue : deux du Stade de France, et un au Bataclan.

Le rôle opérationnel d'Abaaoud se précise, Le Monde

Le Monde

France, lundi 23 novembre 2015, p. 13

Laurent Borredon, Simon Piel, et élise Vincent

Ses empreintes ont été retrouvées sur une kalachnikov laissée dans l'une des voitures du commando

Une semaine après les attentats qui ont frappé Paris, l'enquête menée par la section antiterroriste de la police judiciaire parisienne, de la sous-direction antiterroriste de la direction centrale de la police judiciaire (SDAT) et de la direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) précise peu à peu les rôles tenus par les membres du commandos.

La place tenue par Abdelhamid Abaaoud, tué mercredi à Saint-Denis (Seine-Saint-Denis) lors de l'assaut du RAID, est au coeur des investigations en cours. Sa présence aux côtés de Brahim Abdeslam qui s'est fait exploser devant le Comptoir Voltaire et d'un homme encore non identifié dans la Seat Leon retrouvée à Montreuil (Seine-Saint-Denis) dans la nuit de samedi à dimanche est désormais établie. Il s'agit de l'équipe qui a mitraillé les terrasses des cafés du 10e et du 11e arrondissement.

Vendredi 20 novembre au soir, une source judiciaire indiquait que les empreintes du djihadiste franco-belge avaient été identifiées sur une kalachnikov retrouvée dans la voiture. Les policiers étudient l'hypothèse qu'Abdelhamid Abaaoud ait été au volant de la Seat dans la soirée du 13 novembre. Des éléments de géolocalisation téléphonique permettent de penser que la Seat a en tout cas continué à tourner dans le 11e après les fusillades pendant une quinzaine de minutes avant de se rendre à Montreuil. Des images filmées par une caméra de surveillance de la RATP attestent de la présence d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud au métro Croix de Chavaux à 22 h 14.

Son itinéraire ensuite est encore flou. Pendant le week-end, il semble errer sans point de chute; cherche à se procurer des couvertures ainsi que deux costumes pour des raisons encore inconnues. C'est ensuite parce que les appuis logistiques manquent qu'il fait appel à sa cousine Hasna Aït Boulahcen.

Selon l'AFP, celle-ci serait venu le récupérer mardi dans un entrepôt à Aubervilliers (Seine-Saint-Denis) après lui avoir trouvé le logement de la rue du Corbillon à Saint-Denis. Alors qu'il avait initialement été présenté comme l'unique commanditaire des attentats, le rôle opérationnel qu'il a joué à Paris et l'enregistrement diffusé par l'Etat islamique où Fabien Clain lit le communiqué tendent à s'interroger sur le véritable commanditaire des attaques. Le procureur de la République a d'ailleurs insisté sur ce point lors de sa conférence de presse tenue mercredi soir.

Samedi matin, les gardes à vue de sept des huit personnes interpellées à Saint-Denis après l'assaut du RAID avaient été levées. Cinq d'entre elles seraient des étrangers en situation irrégulière, sans lien avec les attentats, qui squattaient vraisemblablement l'immeuble de la rue du Corbillon. Seul Jawad B., qui s'était présenté comme le logeur du commando, devant les caméras de télévision, était toujours en garde à vue. Par ailleurs, à ce stade de l'enquête, l'identification du troisième assaillant du Bataclan était toujours en cours.

Le parcours de Salah Abdeslam dont le portrait avait été diffusé par la police française s'affine lui aussi. C'est lui qui aurait conduit le commando du Stade de France au volant d'une Clio retrouvée dans le 18^e. Selon le Nouvel Observateur, son téléphone aurait été ensuite localisé un peu plus tard dans le secteur Montrouge-Châtillon avant d'être exfiltré par deux amis venus de Belgique aujourd'hui inculpés pour leur appui logistique.

Toujours selon le Nouvel Observateur, les deux hommes auraient retrouvé Salah, porteur d'une ceinture d'explosif, dans un état de " choc ". Une version qui expliquerait pourquoi l'Etat islamique a mentionné une attaque dans le 18^e arrondissement de Paris dans son communiqué de revendication alors qu'aucune n'attaque n'a finalement eu lieu. Selon Me Xavier Carrette, l'avocat belge d'un des deux hommes, ces derniers auraient simplement admis que Salah était " un peu stressé " quand ils l'ont récupéré.

La confirmation qu'un deuxième kamikaze du Stade de France soit passé par la route des migrants conforte la crainte des autorités née après la découverte, dès samedi, d'un passeport syrien près d'un des djihadistes. " Nous ne sommes pas à l'abri d'un scénario où presque tous les auteurs des attentats soient passés par là ", explique une source proche de l'enquête.

Outre les deux kamikazes du Stade de France, des questions se posent notamment sur le parcours qui a permis à au moins quatre autres auteurs des attaques de revenir de Syrie : Samy Amimour et Ismaël Omar Mostefai, deux assaillants du Bataclan. De même que sur les allers et retours entre la Syrie et l'Europe d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud, probablement le djihadiste francophone le plus connu ainsi que le parcours de Salah Abdeslam avant son arrivée en France.

Depuis plusieurs mois, le ministère de l'intérieur avait été alerté par des policiers présents en Grèce de la faiblesse, voire de l'absence de filtrage sérieux à l'arrivée sur les îles de la mer Egée.

Une telle utilisation coordonnée de la route des migrants, sous des fausses identités et/ou avec de faux passeports, serait inédite. " A cette échelle, c'est une capacité que l'on découvre ", explique une source Place Beauvau. Les centres de " tri " des migrants, baptisés " hot spots " sont bien en train d'être installés aux frontières extérieures de l'Europe, notamment en Grèce ou en Italie, mais dans la pratique, leur fonctionnement serait surtout formel et surtout adaptés à l'identification des personnes vulnérables ayant besoin de protection.

Jusqu'ici, l'écrasante majorité des djihadistes français étaient revenus en Europe sous leur propre identité. Depuis le loupé qui avait vu trois hommes, dont un ami d'enfance de Mohamed Merah, échapper à la direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) à leur retour en France, en septembre 2014, ils sont récupérés par la direction de la coopération internationale (DCI) du ministère de l'intérieur - qui a la responsabilité des attachés de sécurité intérieure placés dans les ambassades de France. Plus de 150 personnes auraient pris le chemin du retour à visage découvert depuis un an.

Enfin, l'irruption d'Hasna Ait Boulahcen, 26 ans, par le biais d'un témoignage spontané à la police, pose une nouvelle fois la question de la surveillance des milieux djihadistes par les services de renseignement. Alors qu'Abdelhamid Abaaoud était une cible privilégiée de la DGSI en raison de son rôle supposé dans plusieurs projets d'attentats en France, sa cousine, récemment radicalisée, avait-elle été repérée par la DGSI, ou a-t-elle échappé aux radars du service?

Les investigations judiciaires ne permettront pas forcément de répondre à cette question - ce n'est pas leur rôle - mais elle intrigue les enquêteurs. En tous cas, plusieurs sources confirment que, jusqu'au bout, tous les services de renseignement et de police judiciaire impliqués dans le dossier ont été persuadés que l'homme était toujours en Syrie, incrédules devant la possibilité que ce cadre de l'EI ait pu voyager aussi discrètement en Europe.

Analysis: In Terror Fight, French Feel Increasingly Isolated, Wall Street Journal

By Yaroslav Trofimov

21 November 2015

The Wall Street Journal

PARIS -- The world seems awash in sympathy with France's tragedy, from candlelight vigils to stadiums illuminated in tricolor. But, when it comes to action against Islamic State, there is growing fear in Paris that France may be in this fight dangerously alone.

French officials are particularly frustrated with their European Union partners over what they see as insufficient cooperation in intelligence, security and defense. "Everyone must understand that it's urgent for Europe to recover, to organize itself, and to defend itself against the terrorist menace," French Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said this week.

In one way, the U.S. has responded much more quickly than France's European partners after the Nov. 13 attacks, boosting intelligence sharing with Paris. But Washington hasn't signaled that a more determined military effort against Islamic State lies ahead. President Barack Obama reiterated this week that the current U.S. approach of limited military engagement is working, and ruled out the use of ground troops.

French officials and politicians worry that the U.S. is underestimating the threat Islamic State poses to the international community.

"The goal of the attacks in Paris was to destroy our values, the values shared by the U.S. and France. And without a doubt we need for the American people to understand that this is also their war," said Frederic Lefebvre, a member of the defense committee in the French National Assembly and a former minister.

In September 2001, America's allies -- such as France -- instantly offered their help under the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's Article 5, which provides for collective defense.

Paris, which described the Nov. 13 shooting and bombing spree that killed 130 people as "an act of war," hasn't asked for NATO assistance, invoking instead the mutual-defense obligations of the European Union. The response has been lukewarm, at best. Even France's request to loosen fiscal rules so it could beef up its army and police to protect the country against Islamic State has been met with noncommittal statements from Brussels, so far.

"We are on our own, and we are counting our friends," said Francois Heisbourg, an adviser at the Fondation pour la Recherche Stratégique think tank and a former senior French diplomat.

No other European country has joined France in airstrikes against Islamic State in Syria so far, though British Prime Minister David Cameron has called for a Parliament vote to authorize such an operation. In Iraq, too, no additional European countries entered the air campaign that is being conducted by France, the United Kingdom, Belgium, Denmark and the Netherlands as part of the American-led coalition against Islamic State.

Paris has asked for something simpler: help in its campaign against Islamist radicals in Mali and other West African nations. That would allow the French to free up elite troops to concentrate on Islamic State. But on that front, too, only Ireland has offered to send a "small" number of troops so far.

"Many countries avoid military action because they don't want to run the risk of becoming targets themselves, and because it is costly," said Mr. Lefebvre, the lawmaker.

Even though France asked, following the January Charlie Hebdo attacks, for the sharing of information on air travel bookings, the European Parliament scuttled the decision over privacy concerns. Mr. Cazeneuve this week noted that no European nation tipped off Paris on the movements of Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the architect of the Paris attacks, across the continent from Syria. There is also a persistent sense in Paris government offices that France can't count on the U.S., either.

Now, it is France rather than the U.S. that is paying the costs of Washington's regional "disengagement without taking into account the consequences," said Gilles Dorronsoro, a professor of political science at Sorbonne University in Paris.

"There are almost no refugees in America, and, for now, no terror attacks," Mr. Dorronsoro said. "The stakes, or at least the perceived stakes, for the U.S. are not the same."

Anti-terrorism 'ghosts' wage war from a computer, UK Times

James Dean
21 November 2015
The Times

An elite unit of anti-terrorism "hacktivists" is helping the British security services with intelligence operations against Isis, The Times has learnt.

Ghost Security Group, which counts former military computer experts among its members, is credited with providing intelligence that foiled a terrorist attack against British tourists in Tunisia this year.

Since the Paris attacks, members have infiltrated online Isis accounts run by individuals who had prior knowledge of the shootings. The group also believes that it has uncovered chatter stored on an encrypted messaging service that shows Isis members plotting the attacks.

Ghost Security Group (GSG) passes intelligence leads to MI5 and other security organisations across the world through the American authorities.

The group, which formed in January after the Charlie Hebdo massacre, comprises 14 anonymous individuals with backgrounds in the military and in private computer security companies. The group focuses on intelligence gathering but it also launches digital attacks against Isis.

The group's executive director, who goes by the name DigitaShadow, told The Times: "You guys have a lot of jihadists over there. We try to identify these people, then alert the [US] authorities, so that they can alert MI5."

GSG investigates online accounts that it suspects are owned by influential members of Isis. One line of inquiry involves accounts on the Telegram encrypted messaging system, which has become the favoured messaging and broadcast service of several jihadist organisations. "We have data that the planning for Paris was conducted through Telegram," DigitaShadow said.

Members of Ghost Security Group create "infiltrator accounts" — online profiles where they pose as jihadist sympathisers or potential recruits — to develop trust with Isis insiders. Their infiltration operations are backed by translators and analysts to make their fake profiles as credible as possible. Once trust is gained, they are able to glean intelligence from the terrorists and make contact with others higher up the chain.

GSG tries to identify online accounts that are being used to lure would-be jihadists. The group focuses its attention on social media, messaging and other accounts where Isis operatives have already made progress with recruiting vulnerable individuals.

The group also provides intelligence to the authorities about the hacking capabilities of Isis, the targets of Isis hackers and the identities of the Isis hackers themselves.

DigitaShadow said that the group had removed 149 websites, 6,000 propaganda videos and 111,000 social media accounts linked to Isis since January. The group does not remove any sites that have intelligence value, Digita-Shadow said.

The group uses Michael Smith, the chief operating officer at Kronos Security, a US counterterrorism consultancy, as a conduit to pass information to the American security services. Mr Smith, who has advised the US Congress on terrorism matters, said that the group was focusing its efforts on intelligence about possible follow-up attacks to the Paris shootings.

Mr Smith said that intelligence gathered by GSG had helped to foil a terrorist plot to attack British and Jewish tourists at Houmt Souk in Djerba, Tunisia, in July.

"Ghost Security Group is the most effective and best of the very small cast of groups I'm engaging with," he said. "It's small but there are individuals who possess the knowledge and skills that are capable of producing quality information that can be passed to intelligence services."

"The authorities in the UK are aware of the value of GSG. I know that the officials here who I liaise with have spoken with officials from the UK about Ghost Security Group. They have expressed more and more interest in their work."

However, Mr Smith suggested that the attack campaign announced by Anonymous this week could upset some intelligence work being done online.

"If they [intelligence agents and Ghost Security Group members] are undercover posing as Isis agents, Anonymous is going to end up ruining someone's investigation."

He added that the security and intelligence agencies "really do have a strong handle on the social media landscape. But Isis is so prolific that there's a need to have more eyes on the system."

EU to Step Up Checks on Citizens Entering Bloc in Security Push, Wall Street Journal

Luxembourg says 'Europe has to act now' after Paris attacks

By Valentina Pop and Laurence Norman

1393 words

20 November 2015

The Wall Street Journal Online

BRUSSELS—The European Union has ordered stepped-up checks on its own citizens when they enter the bloc, a move aimed at stemming the terror threat from foreign fighters in the wake of last Friday's Paris attacks.

The decision comes after it emerged that the organizer of the Paris attacks, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, a Belgian citizen, had traveled unhindered from Syria back to Paris in time for last Friday's killing spree.

"The strengthening of controls at our external borders is indispensable for the protection of EU citizens," French Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said, after meeting with EU justice and interior ministers in Brussels on Friday.

Under current rules, non-EU citizens are supposed to be checked against police data when they enter the bloc to see whether they are wanted by authorities or could be carrying a fake passport.

EU nationals are sometimes checked against police data if they display suspicious behavior or if there is reason to believe they pose a terror threat. However, such checks are sporadic.

Governments agreed to implement the measure immediately. Meanwhile, the European Commission, the bloc's executive, will start working on rule changes so that the systematic checks become permanent.

"I am happy about this, checks have to be made systematically and against all relevant databases to flag up the movement of jihadists," said Mr. Cazeneuve.

The new measures come as the bloc struggles to cope with the effects of the Paris attacks, the biggest act of terrorism in the bloc in years.

Central to the problem is the EU's 26-member Schengen border-free zone. Weak controls on Schengen's external borders, combined with the absence of checks once a person enters the bloc, have hugely complicated Europe's efforts to stop terror threats.

Ministers also pushed again Friday for new rules to be passed rapidly allowing airline passenger data to be shared.

The European Parliament has blocked the legislation for years over privacy concerns and has sought to water down how long the data would be retained and who would be registered.

France insisted again Friday that the proposed system—the so-called Passenger Name Record—should include intra-EU flights and that data should be kept for at least a year. The European Parliament wanted to restrict the data being kept longer than one month and to exclude intra-EU flights.

Luxembourg's Deputy Prime Minister Etienne Schneider said Friday the bloc wants an agreement on the new rules in early December and that they should be implemented "as soon as possible."

German Interior Minister Thomas de Maizière said that air travelers' records were needed because foreign fighters in Syria move back and forth when planning attacks on Europe.

"Almost every week a traveler [by air] is arrested in Germany. But there is also information we aren't getting, and then there are security gaps," Mr. de Maizière said, on his way into the meeting.

Ministers committed to better track and stop illegal firearms from being traded. The commission this week proposed tighter rules for the sale of decommissioned weapons after evidence emerged they have been used in other terror attacks in Paris this year.

The officials also pledged Friday to step up intelligence sharing. The head of the EU's police agency, Europol, said Thursday that half of the names on the organization's foreign fighters list come from just five of the EU's 28 member states.

The EU's counterterrorism coordinator, Gilles de Kerchove, said that intelligence agencies, not only police, need to include data on potential terrorists in the EU-wide databases. "This is the issue we had with Nemmouche, he was in the system but not explicitly linked to terrorism," he said, in reference to the French national, Mehdi Nemmouche, who shot four people at the Jewish museum in Brussels last year.

Mr. de Kerchove also spoke of "institutional schizophrenia" in the EU, where data gathered by the bloc's border agency Frontex on incoming migrants cannot be shared with Europol. Ministers on Friday said the two should be linked up and start exchanging data as of Jan. 1.

With Europe floundering to respond to the terrorist threat, some European officials have floated more radical options. European migration Commissioner Dimitris Avramopoulos said Friday he believed the bloc should explore an EU-wide intelligence agency, an idea quickly shot down by the German interior minister.

Meanwhile, Austria's Interior Minister, Johanna Mikl-Leitner, refused to discard some preliminary ideas, floated in the Netherlands, of restricting the Schengen free border-free zone to a small group of western European countries in an emergency.

"For now this is just a thought experiment that doesn't have highest priority. But in a situation as difficult as the one that we are experiencing at the moment, we must not prohibit the experts from thinking. Because we all know that things cannot continue as they are," she said.

Despite the decisions Friday, there is skepticism as to how quickly the EU can tighten security on its external borders.

Ministers are aiming for a March deadline to provide border authorities with the ability to run database checks against incoming people. However, in the case of Greece alone, that requires providing thousands of computers and staff at 220 border crossings, said one senior EU diplomat.

Greece has come under heavy pressure from its EU partners to improve its screening of the hundreds of thousands of migrants who have arrived there from Turkey over the past year.

One of the Paris suicide bombers, carrying what seems to have been a fake Syrian passport, was registered entering Greece in October. Mr. Abaaoud also traveled through Greece.

On Friday, Nikos Toskas, the Greek minister for public order and citizen protection, defended his country's record of securing Europe's external border.

"The big flows of refugees are continuously coming but they are checked, screened and identified according to European rules."

Meanwhile Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban said Friday that European Union member states should renegotiate the bloc's founding treaty to reinforce a sense of strength and unity, or they will face the radicalization of the continent.

The Hungarian leader also lashed out at the open-door policy for migrants and criticized Europe's plan, supported by Brussels and Berlin, to resettle migrants in EU countries. Such plans provide a means to spread terrorism in Europe, Mr. Orban said.

"Migration increases the terrorism threat, increases crime and puts our cultural identity in danger. That's why it must be stopped," the prime minister said. "Support for off-mainstream, radical, extremist political forces is on the rise...which is not in the interest of any one of us."

Mr. Orban said the Schengen system "must be corrected by all means" in light of what he sees as the current inconsistency, which see countries such as Greece fail to protect their external borders from illegal immigration while others, like Hungary, do their utmost to guard their frontiers.

"Hungary doesn't really like to belong to a treaty that some adhere to while others don't. This system is impossible to maintain," Mr. Orban said in an interview on state radio Friday.

"Several things happened over the past six to seven years that underpin the claim that we must rethink some basic issues regarding European politics."

Suspected ISIL scout in Paris attacks arrested in Turkey's Antalya, Dogan News Agency

2015 11 21

Dogan News Agency

Antalya, Turkey—Turkish police have detained a Belgian man of Moroccan origin on suspicion that he scouted out the target sites for Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) in attacks that killed 132 people in Paris on Nov. 10.

The suspect, and two others detained for possible links to him, were arrested by a court on Nov. 21.

Ahmet Dahmani, 26, was detained at a luxury hotel in the Mediterranean coastal city of Antalya.

Two other men, 29-year-old Ahmet Tahir and 23-year-old MMohammed Verd -both Syrian citizens- were also detained on a nearby highway on suspicion that they had been sent by ISIL in Syria to ensure Dahmani's safe passage across the border and were planning to meet him. The suspects had fake passports in their possession, the police said.

Counter-terrorism police first became aware of Dahmani when he arrived on a flight to Antalya and tracked him to the hotel in the Manavgat district of the city.

Separately, Turkey deported a group of Moroccans detained at Istanbul's main airport this week over suspected links to ISIL.

The eight, who said they had arrived at Atatürk Airport on Nov. 17 night from Casablanca for a holiday, were detained by border police and questioned by profiling experts who flagged them as suspected militants, a government official told Reuters.

Ce que les Belges savaient d'Abaaoud, Le Monde

France, samedi 21 novembre 2015, p. 2

Elise Vincent

Le Monde

Les services de renseignement le croyaient en Syrie, il était en réalité en France. Abdelhamid Abaaoud, soupçonné d'être le commanditaire des attentats du 13 novembre à Paris, est mort le corps criblé de balles, mercredi 18 novembre, dans l'appartement de Saint-Denis (Seine-Saint-Denis) pris d'assaut par la police.

Les enquêteurs vont s'attacher à retracer le parcours du djihadiste de l'Etat islamique. Et tenter de comprendre les failles qui ont permis le retour en Europe, incognito, de ce jeune Belge d'origine marocaine, visé par un mandat d'arrêt international et soupçonné, selon le ministre de l'intérieur, Bernard Cazeneuve, d'être à l'origine de quatre des six attentats déjoués sur le sol français depuis le printemps.

Une fiche de synthèse des services de renseignements belges concernant le parcours d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud, que Le Monde a pu consulter, donne de premiers éléments de réponse. Ce document, daté du mois d'avril, reprend point par point, de façon chronologique, jusqu'en février 2015, l'itinéraire connu du djihadiste. Un parcours à l'évidence composé de nombreux trous, que les services belges ne cherchent pas à cacher.

Extrêmement précise, cette fiche d'une vingtaine de pages retrace notamment tous les numéros de téléphone connus du djihadiste. Le dernier date de mai 2013, et il est turc. Elle retrace également l'évolution de ses kunya (« pseudonymes ») : Abou Omar en mai, Abou Omar Soussi en juillet 2014, puis Abou Omar Al-Baljiki, à partir de février 2015. Son adresse email quasi certaine a aussi été identifiée.

D'après cette fiche, l'intérêt des services de renseignement belges pour le jeune homme commence suite à une note déclassifiée de la sûreté de l'Etat en date de février 2013. Celle-ci concerne le départ simultané vers la Syrie de sept jeunes gens. Rapidement, les enquêteurs vont découvrir une page Facebook où ils communiquent, intitulée la katiba al-muhajireen (« la brigade des immigrés »). Et très vite, ils vont mettre au jour la toile de leurs amitiés.

En parallèle, les enquêteurs vont commencer à faire des recherches sur l'histoire et l'entourage d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud. Le jeune homme est né à Anderlecht, dans l'agglomération de Bruxelles, le 8 avril 1987, il est l'aîné d'une famille nombreuse de six enfants. Il a la double nationalité belge et marocaine. Avant son premier départ pour la Syrie, début 2013, il était célibataire et vivait seul.

Le jeune homme a commencé à connaître des ennuis judiciaires à partir de 2002 et a multiplié les séjours en prison entre 2006 et 2012, « mais jamais pour plus de trois mois », précise la note. Dans la famille, Abaaoud, Abdelhamid n'est pas le seul à avoir des démêlés avec la justice : son frère Yassine est connu pour des petits faits de délinquance. D'après son père, un petit commerçant auditionné en février 2014, la radicalisation d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud a démarré très vite après sa sortie, en septembre 2012, de l'établissement pénitentiaire de Forest. Il se met à porter la barbe. Arrête de fréquenter ses amis du quartier. Interrogé à la même époque, son frère Yassine pense qu'il a effectué un court séjour en Egypte avant de se rendre en Syrie.

Chapitrée par grandes dates clé, la fiche des services belges s'arrête ensuite sur la période de mars 2013. Abdelhamid Abaaoud est cette fois repéré par hasard, lors d'écoutes téléphoniques, sur le téléphone turc d'un interlocuteur situé à la frontière turco-syrienne. Abaaoud souhaite alors que ce jeune homme fasse l'intermédiaire avec son frère Yassine, resté en Belgique, et l'incite à lui envoyer de l'argent pour lui et pour « Allah » .

Sans explication, la fiche des services belges bascule immédiatement au mois de septembre 2013 : Abdelhamid Abaaoud est alors considéré comme en étant de retour en Belgique. « On sait très peu de choses sur [ses] faits et gestes jusqu'à ce qu'il revienne sur le territoire belge », concède la fiche. « De source policière, il a été aperçu à la fin du mois de septembre en train de se promener dans Molenbeek-Saint-Jean [une banlieue de Bruxelles] . » Il était accompagné d'un homme qui est parti ensuite combattre en Syrie.

Younes, 13 ans

Le 20 janvier 2014, nouveau saut de puce temporel : le djihadiste est cette fois contrôlé à l'aéroport de Cologne, en Allemagne, direction Istanbul. « Il est resté très discret et ne réapparaît sur notre radar » qu'à ce moment-là, assume aussi la fiche de synthèse belge. Il est identifié en compagnie de son petit frère mineur Younes, âgé seulement de 13 ans, et d'un autre jeune homme d'origine malienne, qui mourra plus tard en Syrie. Abdelhamid Abaaoud a en fait soustrait Younes à l'attention de ses parents à la sortie de l'école. Rien ne les empêchera de s'envoler. L'adolescent sera alors surnommé « le plus jeune djihadiste de Syrie » par les médias belges.

A partir de février 2014, Abdelhamid Abaaoud est définitivement considéré par les services de renseignements comme un « moujahid de l'Etat islamique ». Les services s'appuient particulièrement sur la vidéo de lui, diffusée sur le site de BFM-TV, où il apparaît tout sourire, au volant d'un pick-up traînant plusieurs cadavres de « mécréants », selon ses mots.

C'est vers le mois de juin 2014 que le père d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud situe ensuite le dernier contact téléphonique avec son fils. Ce jour-là, Omar Abaaoud tente d'obtenir de parler avec le plus jeune des frères, Younes. Il ne l'a plus eu au téléphone depuis deux mois et s'inquiète. Mais il n'aura plus jamais de nouvelles. Omar Abaaoud pense alors que les deux frères n'étaient plus ensemble en Syrie à ce moment-là.

Selon la fiche de synthèse, ce n'est qu'en août 2014 que des mandats d'arrêts belges et internationaux vont être émis formellement contre Abdelhamid Abaaoud.

Le feuilleton s'arrête finalement en février 2015, quand les services belges tombent sur l'interview du djihadiste au magazine de l'Etat islamique Dabiq. Sur l'une des photos de l'article, les enquêteurs reconnaissent deux jeunes gens soupçonnés de prévoir un attentat sur le sol belge. Deux hommes tués à Verviers lors d'une intervention des forces de l'ordre belges contre une « cellule terroriste opérationnelle », en janvier, quelques jours après les tueries de Charlie Hebdo et de l'Hyper Cacher. Dans cet entretien à Dabiq, Abdelhamid Abaaoud affirme qu'il se trouvait en Belgique le jour du démantèlement de la cellule de Verviers. Et qu'il avait pu regagner la Syrie sans se faire repérer.

Les deux mois qui courent avant la publication de la fiche de synthèse, en avril, ne sont pas documentés. Reste à écrire le film des sept mois suivants, jusqu'aux attentats de Paris.

Après l'assaut de Saint-Denis, la traque se poursuit, Le Figaro

Cornevin, Christophe

Le Figaro

samedi 21 novembre 2015, p. 7

Salah Abdeslam, ultime rescapé présumé des commandos de tueurs, est l'objectif prioritaire. Pas moins de 2 000 policiers sont mobilisés.

LA PLUS grande traque jamais menée par la police française pour percer les arcanes des commandos qui ont frappé de manière coordonnée le coeur de Paris et Saint-Denis ne se relâche pas d'un iota. Près de 2 000 limiers du renseignement et de la police judiciaire poursuivent leur course contre-la-montre pour identifier, localiser et neutraliser le reste de l'hydre djihadiste ayant semé la mort au nom de l'État islamique. Au dernier stade des investigations, neuf islamistes sont soupçonnés d'avoir participé directement aux fusillades et actions suicides qui se sont soldées par un bilan toujours provisoire de 130 morts. Selon une source judiciaire jointe par Le Figaro, les enquêteurs affichaient vendredi la plus grande prudence sur l'éventuelle implication des cinq personnes extraites de l'appartement « conspiratif » de Saint-Denis après l'assaut du Raid. En effet, si les vérifications se confirment, il s'agirait de trois Marocains et deux Égyptiens, tous clandestins qui squattaient sur place sans subodorer un seul instant partager le toit d'islamistes. La garde à vue des trois autres suspects se poursuit. Outre une jeune femme habitant elle aussi sur place, les policiers interrogent deux « logeurs » soutenant avoir mis les lieux à disposition d'un « ami qui avaient deux copains belges » .

Depuis une semaine, les limiers recomposent avec méthode un terrifiant puzzle dont ils ignorent le nombre de pièces. Après avoir exploré dans de périlleuses conditions les décombres de l'immeuble dévasté et en passe de s'écrouler à Saint-Denis, ils ont établi jeudi avec certitude, grâce à des comparaisons d'empreintes digitales, que le cadavre de femme est bien celui d'Hasna Aitboulahcen. Un passeport portant ce nom a en outre été retrouvé à ses côtés. Âgée de 26 ans, née dans les Hauts-de-Seine, elle est présentée comme la cousine du commanditaire présumé des attaques, Abdelhamid Abaaoud éliminé lui aussi mercredi matin par les policiers d'élite. C'est notamment la géolocalisation et la mise sur écoute de son téléphone mobile qui aurait permis aux services de renseignement de recentrer leur recherches sur l'appartement « conspiratif » où était retranchée la cellule terroriste. Mercredi, le procureur de la République, François Molins, a révélé que « la présence d'Abaaoud sur le territoire français » émanait d'un « témoignage obtenu lundi, recoupé par de nombreuses vérifications téléphonique et bancaires ». « Il a été recueilli dans le seul et unique cadre des investigations de police judiciaire », a confié une source au coeur du dossier. L'origine du « service de renseignement d'un pays hors d'Europe » qui a, comme l'a précisé Bernard Cazeneuve, « signalé avoir eu connaissance de sa présence en Grèce », reste entouré d'un épais mystère. Même si le nom de la Turquie a été évoqué, sans confirmation.

Tour à tour dépeinte comme « parfois excentrique », « extravertie », « garçon manqué » voire « instable » par son proche entourage, Hasna Aitboulahcen avait rompu les amarres familiales dès l'âge de quinze ans avant de se radicaliser de manière brutale. Troquant le chapeau de paille qu'elle portait volontiers contre un niqab noir, elle avait posté le 11 juin dernier une photo sur son compte Facebook avec ce commentaire : « Jver biento aller en syrie inchallah biento depart pour la turkie » (sic).

À la faveur des investigations, les enquêteurs, qui savent que le troisième corps retrouvé dans l'appartement de Saint-Denis est celui d'une kamikaze non identifiée, ont désormais acquis la présomption qu'Abaaoud serait le neuvième membre des commandos de vendredi. Cette figure tutélaire du djihadisme européen, que les services antiterroristes croyaient en Syrie il y a une semaine encore, a en effet été filmé par une caméra de vidéosurveillance de la RATP à Montreuil-sous-Bois (Seine-Saint-Denis) alors qu'il entrait dans la station de métro Croix de Chavaux, à 22 heures 14, le soir des attentats. Un rapprochement a été fait avec la Seat Leon noire, retrouvée à proximité dans la nuit de samedi à dimanche, avec trois kalachnikov à son bord et utilisée lors du raid qui a décimé les terrasses de cafés de l'est parisien. C'est de cette voiture immatriculée en Belgique que Brahim Salah est sorti pour se faire sauter devant le Comptoir Voltaire, dans le XI^e arrondissement. Et c'est à son volant que se trouvait a priori son frère Salah, toujours en cavale. Plus que jamais, cet « objectif prioritaire » est au coeur d'une chasse à l'homme menée sans relâche à travers toute l'Europe. Exfiltré de toute urgence à sa demande vers la Belgique au lendemain des attentats de Paris dans une Golf noire contrôlée à Cambrai et interceptée à Molenbeek d'où sa famille est originaire, le Français de 29 ans, natif de Bruxelles, est la cible de coups de filets répétés dans le royaume. Vendredi, sept des neuf individus interpellés la veille dans la capitale belge lors d'une vague de perquisitions ont été remis en liberté après interrogatoire. La garde à vue des deux autres a été prolongée de 24 heures. L'un est interrogé dans le cadre de l'enquête ouverte au début de l'année par la justice belge après le départ en Syrie de Bilal Hadfi, un des trois kamikazes confondus par ses empreintes papillaires prélevées près du McDonald's du Stade de France, où il s'est fait exploser.

Déterminé à mettre un nom sur chacun des supposés commanditaires ou inspirateurs qui ont planifié et orchestré les tueries, les services de renseignement tournaient à plein régime pour localiser Jean-Michel Clain et son frère Fabien, vétéran du djihadisme dont la voix a été authentifiée dans l'enregistrement de la vidéo de revendication de l'État islamique. Car la relève d'Abaaoud, dont la mort n'a pas encore été exploitée par l'appareil de propagande terroriste, ne saurait tarder. Aiguillonnés par l'idée de frapper à nouveau Paris, nul doute que ses prétendants réfléchissent à une réplique d'ampleur.

Depuis une semaine, les limiers recomposent avec méthode un terrifiant puzzle.

Attacks Push European Union to Consider Limits on Passport-Free Travel, New York Times

By STEVEN ERLANGER; James Kanter contributed reporting from Brussels, and Alison Smale from Berlin.

21 November 2015

The New York Times

PARIS -- If Europe's system of passport-free travel was not under enough pressure after a summer of chaotic migration, then last week's attacks in Paris have fortified doubts over how much longer that freedom of movement -- one of the most cherished accomplishments of the European Union -- can survive.

The Nov. 13 massacres in Paris were carried out almost entirely by European passport holders who slipped in and out of Syria without being identified or checked. In addition, the discovery of a Syrian passport apparently held by one of the Paris assailants has renewed fears that terrorists have infiltrated the migrant wave.

With the focus now on bolstering security, European Union interior and justice ministers met in an emergency session on Friday and vowed to complete French proposals for tighter controls by the end of the year.

For the first time, the ministers agreed finally to establish a system to share the passport data of air travelers within the open border area under what is known as the Schengen Agreement.

Given the double chaos of migratory flows and cross-border terrorists, many countries -- including France, Germany, Austria, Belgium, the Netherlands, Hungary, Slovenia, the Czech Republic, Slovakia and Sweden -- have already established temporary border controls.

The concern is that they will make those temporary controls, which are allowed under Schengen, effectively permanent, destroying the agreement.

On Thursday night, adding to the confusion, most nations along Europe's migrant corridor abruptly shut their borders to those not coming from war-torn countries such as Syria, Afghanistan or Iraq, leaving thousands stranded at Balkan border crossings.

Manuel Valls, the French prime minister, said on Thursday: "If Europe doesn't shoulder its responsibilities, then it's the whole Schengen system that's put into question."

The open-border arrangement, established 20 years ago, covers 22 European Union countries and four other nations. But the system can work only if its external borders are policed and protected, and it is obvious to all that Europe has failed to do so.

Arnaud Danjean, a member of the European Parliament and a former security official and diplomat from France, put it bluntly: "If by the end of the year necessary measures to reinforce external border controls and to check passports of Schengen citizens are not implemented, I think Schengen is dead."

Otherwise, he said, "many countries will come back in January and say we need another system, and until we have one, we will adopt permanent border controls."

French proposals for tighter controls were first made after Islamist radicals attacked the satirical newspaper Charlie Hebdo and a kosher supermarket in January.

But they were stalled by inaction and by concerns over data privacy in the European Parliament, raised particularly by Germany and the newer members from Central and Eastern Europe, which have been largely untouched by terrorism.

On Friday, however, the ministers gave their backing to measures demanded by France this week that included tightening external borders by extending checks to more people who can usually enter, and move freely within, the Schengen area.

Strengthening controls at external borders is "indispensable for the protection of European citizens," Bernard Cazeneuve, the French interior minister, said at a news conference.

Overhauling the Schengen rules would mean "systematic and obligatory checks to be carried out at all our external borders and on all people entering the Schengen area, including those who benefit from the freedom of movement," he said.

Mr. Cazeneuve has expressed fury that France found out that the ringleader of the Paris attacks, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, had slipped undetected back into Europe only from intelligence provided by a non-European country, believed to be Morocco.

Under the proposals, if a Schengen passport holder travels to a third country, whether Turkey, Syria or the United States, upon re-entering the Schengen area the passport should not just be examined but checked against criminal and security databases.

The ministers also agreed to establish a single European gun registration file. Mr. Danjean said he hoped that the gun control laws could be unified eventually in the European Union, pointing out that Belgian laws are much less restrictive than French ones.

While the difficulties with Schengen are largely technical and administrative, the politics around the subject have become nasty, feeding Europe's far-right parties, especially France's National Front and Sweden's Democrats.

Marine Le Pen, the leader of the National Front, said that "the absence of national borders is criminal madness." Striking a familiar but trenchant theme, she said: "The French elites have given themselves over to this surreal myth of a country without borders. Open your eyes, now!"

Euroskeptics and the far right, "those trying to benefit from the situation, are trying to redefine the entire Schengen debate in a way that makes Schengen look like the culprit here," said Jan Techau, director of Carnegie Europe, a Brussels-based research institution.

And the Islamic State "used a very vulnerable time for their attacks, knowing full well that the refugee crisis is like a force multiplier of their attacks," Mr. Techau added. However unfair, he said, "it's very hard to separate them now."

"The victim is Europe," said Alain Frachon, a columnist for Le Monde. The Paris attacks coming alongside the migrant crisis "are one more bullet in the corpse of Schengen," he said.

"But of course Schengen was never really applied," he said. "Freedom of internal travel required European border controls," under an agency called Frontex, "but no one wanted to put any money into Frontex."

In general, Mr. Frachon said, "the first reflex of any police, border and customs agency is to keep national control."

To defend Europe's external borders efficiently, he said, one needs a supranational, European agency that works. "But that is exactly the opposite of what public opinion is asking for now, and it's a terrible contradiction," he added.

For the European Union, this is a defining moment, said François d'Alañon, an analyst at the newspaper La Croix. "This is not only about Islamic State, but about the refugee crisis, the euro, freedom of movement and the integration of Muslims all over Europe," he said.

"We have all these people claiming that we should shut the national borders," he said, "but we know that all the answers are really European ones. For intelligence sharing, for refugees, you need more Europe, with unified asylum policies and security policies."

For many people, Mr. D'Alañon said, "we all thought the European idea, the European project was the only ideal left." But now, he said, "it's all gone, it's just a big fog."

Informer, c'est aussi démentir les rumeurs, Le Monde

Agenda, samedi 21 novembre 2015, p. 15

Le Monde

Théâtre de manifestations de solidarité, les réseaux sociaux sont également, en ces temps troublés, l'outil de propagation de « l'intox »

La France vit, agit, souffre et pleure aussi sur Internet et sur les réseaux sociaux. Et la tragédie du 13 novembre l'a, s'il le fallait encore, prouvé. La France qui sort le vendredi soir, celle des 18-40 ans, c'est celle des utilisateurs de Twitter, Facebook ou WhatsApp. Et c'est vers ces médias qu'elle se tourne, même, voire surtout, en cas d'urgence.

C'est par ces canaux que passeront, vendredi, les premières informations, celles des milliers de témoins qui tweetent ou postent pour dire les coups de feu, les victimes, la panique. C'est sur les réseaux sociaux qu'on verra, au coeur de l'horreur du vendredi soir, le meilleur : des mobilisations spontanées, comme le hashtag #porteouverte sur Twitter, sur lequel des habitants du 11^e arrondissement proposent un abri à ceux qui courent dans les rues; ou les dizaines d'initiatives, ensuite, pour retrouver les disparus de cette soirée tragique.

Mais c'est aussi par les réseaux sociaux que viendra, sinon le pire, du moins le reflet de la panique du pays, sous forme de rumeurs, d'intox, relayées souvent de bonne foi, parfois avec de mauvaises intentions, et de « course au buzz », à la notoriété, à tout prix.

Il y a les paniques qui s'amplifient, comme celle de dimanche, après les rassemblements, place de la République, qui se sont soldées par des mouvements de foule, à la suite de quelques pétards, bruits de voiture ou ampoules éclatées. Les réseaux sociaux, cette fois, ont joué un rôle de caisse de résonance de la panique des uns, qui s'est transmise aux autres, dans un contexte d'angoisse collective qui l'explique aisément.

Recherche du « buzz »

Sur le site du Monde , nous avons ouvert dès vendredi un suivi en direct, jour et nuit, des événements, dans lequel nos lecteurs pouvaient nous poser des questions. Nous avons aussi beaucoup publié sur les réseaux, essentiellement pour démentir des rumeurs et des bruits qui se diffusent d'autant plus vite dans ce contexte de peur.

L'effroi, la sidération, l'angoisse, on pouvait les lire dans les questions de nos internautes, ou par le biais de messages directs sur Facebook, reçus dans une proportion inédite. « On parle de coups de feu à [Montélimar, Marseille, Bordeaux...] , pouvez-vous confirmer? » Des dizaines, sinon des centaines de questions de ce genre nous ont été posées cette semaine, par des internautes sincèrement inquiets après avoir entendu telle ou telle rumeur. Nous avons tâché d'y répondre au mieux.

Ces fausses informations provenaient généralement d'échanges, notamment via des SMS qui ont circulé massivement, partout en France, toute la semaine. Emanant d'un « ami qui connaît quelqu'un à la DCRI » ou dans quelque haute sphère, ils préviennent d'un péril imminent à tel ou tel endroit. Nos lecteurs nous en ont envoyé une bonne demi-douzaine, à Toulouse, Marseille, etc. Tous faux, évidemment, mais tous emblématiques d'un pays apeuré, inquiet.

Evidemment, au-delà de la peur, la malveillance existe. Sur les réseaux sociaux, quelques irresponsables, mauvais plaisantins ou militants de telle ou telle cause, ont diffusé mensonges, rumeurs et propagande, avec parfois un certain succès. Ce sont, par exemple, des photos de militants du Hamas se réjouissant d'un cessez-le-feu en 2012, en les faisant passer pour une célébration des attentats à Paris vendredi, ou cet adolescent en mal de notoriété qui inventera samedi des perquisitions à Strasbourg, où il ne s'est rien passé, simplement pour voir combien de partages il va obtenir.

La recherche du « buzz », c'est aussi ce qui poussera certains à créer des comptes supposés aider des familles à retrouver leurs disparus, mais qui diffuseront parfois de fausses photos, ou des clichés de personnes décédées, avec un message nauséabond : « Un RT [un partage] = un soutien », dans l'idée d'obtenir un maximum d'influence, puis de changer le nom et l'objet du compte. Il y a enfin ces petites histoires, moins essentielles, mais significatives : cette citation par exemple, certes fort belle, attribuée à un éditorial du New York Times et très largement diffusée, y compris par des personnalités diverses, qui était en fait... un commentaire sur le site du journal américain.

Le souci de la source s'est ici effacé devant le besoin de partager, de commémorer, de communier. On en recensera plusieurs, de ce même type, histoires erronées ou déformées, mais partagées en toute bonne foi par des dizaines de milliers d'internautes.

Aider à faire le tri

Face à ces mensonges, il nous a semblé important de ne pas négliger les réseaux sociaux. Inlassablement, durant toute la semaine, nous avons donc chassé ces canulars, pour mettre en garde les utilisateurs. Nous avons aussi tâché de donner quelques « bonnes pratiques » pour éviter de se faire piéger. Ce qui n'a évidemment pas suffi à empêcher les rumeurs, bonnes ou mauvaises, de circuler, mais a pu aider une partie des internautes à faire le tri.

Quelles leçons tirer de cet épisode? Sans doute que, si les réseaux sociaux transforment chacun d'entre nous en média, au sens de transmetteur de l'information, la responsabilité que cela peut impliquer n'est pas évidente pour tout le monde. Les réseaux virtuels ont des conséquences réelles. Et la presse aussi doit en tenir compte : on ne peut plus faire le pari de « ne pas nourrir le troll », d'ignorer la rumeur : nous ne sommes qu'un canal parmi des millions d'autres. Et notre rôle doit être aussi de certifier la fiabilité de l'information et de combattre la rumeur.

Paris attacks: Indonesia calls for more intelligence sharing, Financial Times

Ben Bland
Financial Times
2015 11 21

Kuala Lumpur—Indonesia, the world's most populous Muslim-majority country, has called on nations to step up intelligence sharing following last week's terrorist attack in Paris.

Speaking on the sidelines of a regional summit in Kuala Lumpur this weekend, Retno Marsudi, Indonesia's foreign minister, told the FT countries were not doing enough to share information about the global threat from militants linked to Isis.

On Sunday, US President Barack Obama will meet 17 Asia-Pacific leaders at the East Asia Summit to discuss a range of regional security issues including terrorism, migration and the South China Sea disputes.

"The [terrorist] threat is not only to Europe but to every country," said Ms Marsudi. "That is why during the meeting, Indonesia will make a call again on the importance of having co-operation on intelligence information."

She said some countries were not sharing as much intelligence as Indonesia would like and that Indonesia was willing to become more open in order to support the global effort against the Isis threat.

"It's a must for every country because this is not a one-country issue, it's a global issue."

The Paris attacks exposed gaps in intelligence sharing even within the EU, where there is significant pooling of sovereignty and links between security services are well developed.

Intelligence co-operation is even harder in Southeast Asia and other parts of the developing world, where governments are less co-ordinated and the principle of non-interference in other nations' domestic affairs is considered sacrosanct.

One diplomat gave the example of Turkey, which has been deporting foreigners suspected of trying to join Isis without explaining to the relevant governments what level of threat the individuals posed: misguided youths or terrorist masterminds.

Southeast Asia is increasingly concerned about the threat from jihadi fighters returning from Syria and Iraq with military training, funding and the ideological determination to carry out mass-scale terrorist attacks.

Indonesia's elite antiterrorism police unit — Detachment 88 — has neutralised much of the threat from the Islamist terrorists who executed a wave of deadly bombings in the early 2000s.

But terrorism analysts and government officials in Southeast Asia fear that the conflict in Syria could become a breeding ground for a new generation of militants, as has happened in Europe.

The Indonesian government believes about 400-500 of its citizens are fighting in Syria, a number that Ms Marsudi said was relatively small given that nearly 90 per cent of the country's 255m people are Muslims.

Najib Razak, the prime minister of Malaysia, another Muslim-majority country, told other Southeast Asian leaders on Saturday that they must do more to combat extremism.

But he said that the problem "requires new solutions" and cautioned against calls for renewed military action in the Middle East.

"Understandably, many will want to fight the so-called Islamic State out of the lands they have stolen from millions of Syrians and Iraqis," he said. "But a military solution alone will not be enough to defeat those who see peace, and want to cause war; those who see order and civilisation and wish for nothing but mayhem and death."

The war in the Middle East: Fighting near and far, The Economist

21 November 2015

The Economist

Islamic State may be lashing out abroad because it has been weakened nearer home; but it will still be hard to take down

"ENDURING and expanding": Islamic State's alliterative motto leaves out its burning desire to eradicate everything else, but otherwise sums up its ambitions pretty well. If IS has, in recent times, seemed more concerned with the enduring bit, its history shows that it has never long lost sight of expanding in any way possible: by capturing territory, by spawning offshoots far and wide, by inspiring new recruits, and by spreading fear. As a state with puny resources and no real friends, it needs to be a moving target.

It is not clear to what extent recent strikes by IS beyond the boundaries of the territory it has carved out of Syria and Iraq mark a change of course. Its various affiliates--some 36 groups around the world have declared allegiance to IS's secretive caliph, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi--have been mounting terrorist attacks for some time (see chart). A recent survey by the New York Times estimated that these offshoots have killed perhaps 1,000 civilians since January via mosque bombings in Yemen, attacks on tourists in Tunisia and suicide-bombs in Ankara and Beirut (the figure excludes the murderous rampages of Boko Haram in Nigeria). The group has also encouraged "lone-wolf" acts by like-minded would-be terrorists. But the death toll over the past few weeks seems to take things to a new level.

It may be a coincidence that plots to murder hundreds in Paris, blow up an aircraft over Sinai and kill indiscriminately on the streets in Beirut all came to fruition so close together. They may have been long planned; similar attempts earlier may have been thwarted. But it may also be a considered response to challenges that IS faces closer to home.

Pentagon sources say that coalition air strikes killed 20,000 IS fighters in the 14 months after their onset in August 2014. That sounds over-optimistic. But it is certain that a number of commanders have been among the dead. The intense fighting at Kobane, a Kurdish enclave in northern Syria to which IS laid siege last September, eventually being driven back by heavy air strikes in December, is thought to have cost it 2,000 men. An IS defector told Michael Weiss, an American journalist, that the losses were at least twice that, and that tightening of the Turkish border had made it harder for IS to replace fallen fighters. He said it was partly in response to this that IS turned to attacks on the "far enemy". Single, dramatic attacks are an immense force-multiplier in propaganda terms.

Losses on the scale of Kobane are doubtless a blow but not, alas, a fatal one. Estimates of the group's military manpower range from about 30,000 (America's Central Intelligence Agency) to about 100,000 (Hisham al-Hashimi, an Iraqi security expert). Mr Hashimi reckons about 20% are foreign-born, a similar figure to that given in UN papers.

Factor into these figures the fact that IS fighters seem a lot more effective than those who oppose them. When the Iraqi city of Tikrit was recaptured last April, it took 30,000 soldiers from the Iraqi army and associated Shia militias to overcome 1,000 IS fighters. When IS took the Iraqi city of Ramadi, its forces were outnumbered ten to one by the defenders.

A willingness to use kamikaze tactics is definitely part of what gives IS forces an edge; but they are also innovative, well-drilled and better led than many of those they face. In April IS used a drone to record its troops taking an oil refinery and distributed the footage on the internet. A former American Green Beret, quoted by McClatchy, a news service, said the attackers showed "quiet tactical confidence: correct movement, intervals, fire discipline".

Fighting well is not enough

Despite these impressive fighters, IS has recently been losing ground, largely because its adversaries have air power. Kurdish forces captured Sinjar in Iraq, along with adjacent territory in Syria, and IS forces are being pushed back elsewhere in Iraq, too. With help from Russian aircraft and Iranian-backed militias, Syrian government forces recently relieved an airbase near Aleppo to which IS had long laid siege. Following the deaths of 224 Russians in the Metrojet airliner bombing of October 31st, Russia may now be targeting IS in preference to other enemies of President Bashar Assad's regime.

Yet IS endures. Indeed its territory remains one of the safer parts of Syria: aid officials in Turkey say that in September and October as many as 70,000 civilians fled to Islamic State from the province of Homs. Coalition bombing in the caliphate is much less indiscriminate than that of the Russian and Syrian air forces elsewhere. What is more, food is cheaper and there is justice of a sort. There is also a functioning economy, largely thanks to an estimated 20,000-30,000 barrels of oil pumped daily from captured fields in eastern Syria and northern Iraq.

Its dependence on oil revenues--they provide around $50m a month, according to investigative reporting by the Financial Times--is just one way in which IS looks more like an old-fashioned Arab dictatorship than a new Islamic Utopia. It doles out alms to the poor in exchange for total obedience. It promotes a cult of personality around Mr Baghdadi. It churns out turgid propaganda about repaired bridges and newly opened schools. Like all the region's successful autocracies, it has created multiple and mutually suspicious security services, the better to stave off coups.

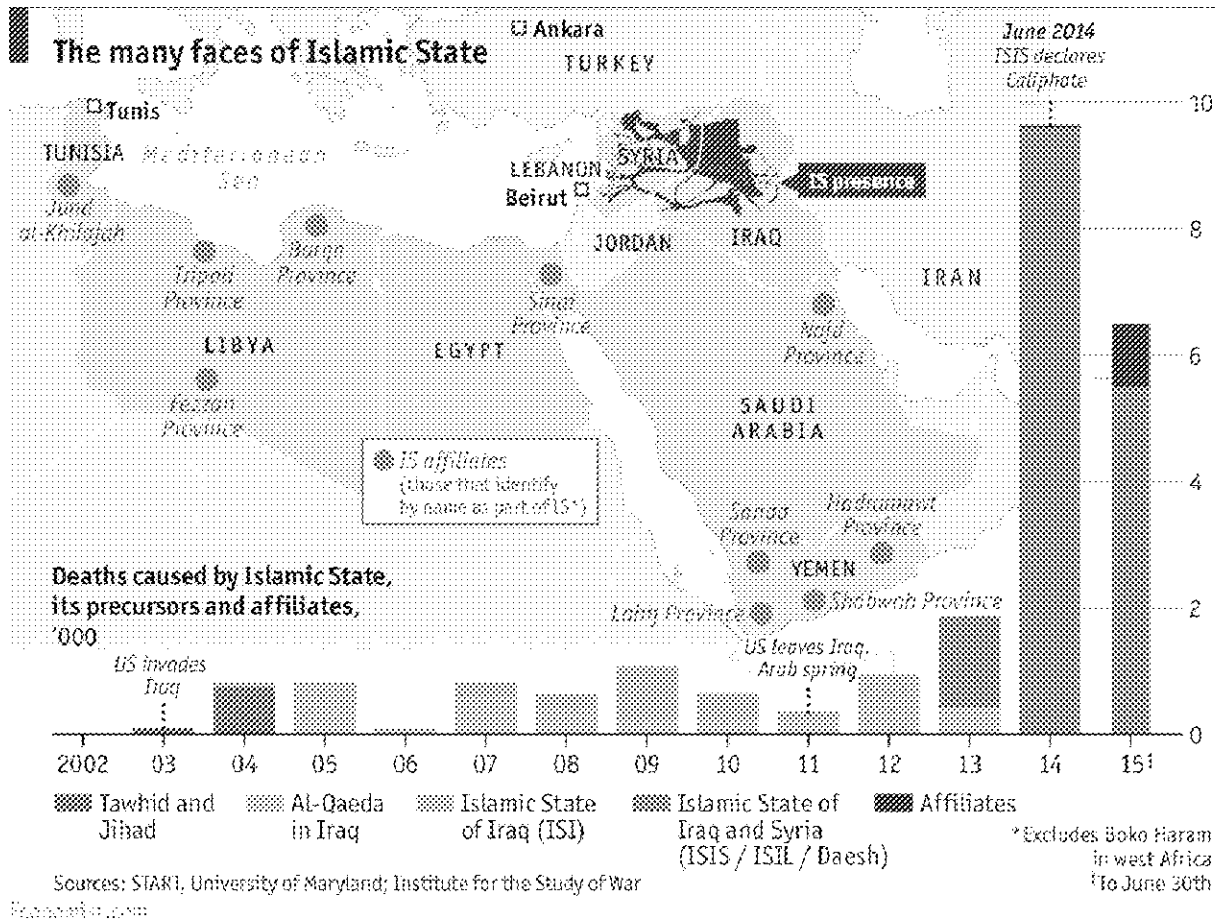

In the wake of the Paris attacks, military action aimed at denying IS its territorial base seem likely. The firepower available to IS's enemies dwarfs all that it can muster. In an interview with the BBC, the security chief of Iraq's Kurdish region reckoned that, given the necessary will, the job could be done in months or even weeks. France has already ramped up its aerial attacks and Russia, now fielding heavy bombers, says it will double the number of daily sorties. American aircraft are attacking new targets in the group's oil infrastructure. Recent strikes, preceded by warnings for civilians to escape, have destroyed hundreds of tanker trucks. America has also boosted supplies to Kurdish and other Syrian rebel forces on the IS frontlines.

The area IS controls seems likely to shrink under such pressure. But the capture of large cities like Raqqa and Mosul will require a far bigger effort on the ground. And as Sinjar and Kobane have shown, the cost will be high: both those towns now lie in ruins. The challenge is not just the diplomatic and military one of mustering, motivating, co-ordinating and deploying sufficient forces, huge though that is. It is also humanitarian: such action is likely to displace still more desperate refugees, and leave them little to return to.

The Western powers and Russia are not keen to send troops. They are even less keen to be left holding ravaged and probably hostile territory. Iraq's forces are overstretched and deeply distrusted by many of the Sunnis they would liberate; many prefer the rule of IS to that of Shia militias. Syria's forces are exhausted, overstretched and loyal to a regime responsible for war crimes. Local powers such as Iran, Turkey, the Kurds and Saudi Arabia have a range of conflicting agendas; eliminating IS is at the top of none of them.

There is progress to be made that does not need boots on the streets of Raqqa. Better police work can help; it is already producing results in Turkey, which has rounded up several cells in recent weeks. Improved planning and communication between anti-IS forces in the field would help, too. Trust, lamentably absent today, must be built.

Breaking up the would-be caliphate militarily would destroy the aura of invincibility which constitutes a large part of its attraction. But successor groups, and even more, IS's ideology, will endure for as long as the poisonous swamp it inhabits persists. A partial list of its ingredients includes a hyped-up sense of Sunni victimhood, indoctrination by xenophobic Wahhabists, the dismal anomie and yearning for heroism of some young urban Muslims in Europe and elsewhere, and the rage generated by brutal and repressive regimes such as Syria's. It has pooled and festered across the band of collapsed and failing states that stretches from Algeria to Pakistan. It will take more than a hot sun, or heavy firepower, to make it evaporate.

Le rôle déterminant du Maroc dans la localisation d'Abaaoud, France 24

France 24
 2015 11 20

À l'occasion de la visite du roi Mohamed VI à Paris, vendredi, François Hollande a remercié le Maroc pour "l'assistance efficace" qu'il a apporté à la France en l'aidant à repérer la présence, sur son territoire, d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud.

François Hollande a vivement remercié le roi Mohamed VI en visite à Paris, vendredi 20 novembre, pour le rôle crucial des services de renseignement marocains dans l'enquête sur les attaques à Paris.

C'est en effet Rabat qui a permis aux services antiterroristes parisiens de se mettre sur la piste d'Abaaoud sur le territoire français et contribué à déclencher l'opération à Saint-Denis. C'est aussi le royaume chérifien qui aurait orienté les enquêteurs français sur la piste belge.

Le renseignement marocain appelé à l'aide

Dès mercredi matin, le site marocain Le360.ma, l'affirmait : "Ce sont les services de renseignement marocains qui ont réussi à localiser les terroristes retranchés dans un appartement de Saint-Denis". Le site précisait : "Au lendemain des attentats qui avaient ensanglanté la capitale française, et sur demande des autorités françaises et belges, des officiers des renseignements marocains s'étaient rendus à Paris et Bruxelles pour aider dans les investigations en cours. Et déjà cette collaboration donne ses fruits avec l'opération menée ce (mercredi) matin."

Le mois dernier en effet, les services marocains ont arrêté un jeune frère du djihadiste, Yassine Abaaoud, alors que l'avion à bord duquel il se trouvait venait d'atterrir à Agadir, a indiqué vendredi une source marocaine à Reuters. Dès qu'elle a été informée de la présence d'Abdelhamid Abaaoud en France, la Direction générale de la sécurité intérieure (DGSI) a suivi les écoutes d'Hasna Ait Boulahcen, présentée comme sa cousine, explique-t-on de source policière.

La jeune femme d'origine marocaine de 26 ans, qui a été tuée mercredi avec Abaaoud lors de l'assaut des forces de l'ordre, était déjà surveillée par la police judiciaire (PJ) de Seine-Saint-Denis, pour trafic de stupéfiants. "Dès que l'information est tombée via le Maroc, la PJ de Seine-Saint-Denis a transmis à la DGSI ses informations, les correspondants d'Hasna Ait Boulahcen, les bornes téléphoniques, ses points de chute", explique la source policière.

"Surveillance physique"

Les écoutes ont permis d'entendre une conversation dans laquelle Hasna Ait Boulahcen faisait état de la présence d'Abaaoud, un Belge d'origine marocaine de 28 ans, selon une autre source policière. "Il y a eu ensuite une surveillance physique qui a permis de déterminer que la jeune femme et le djihadiste se sont présentés dans l'immeuble de la rue Corbillon à Saint-Denis mardi en début de soirée", explique-t-elle.

La Sous-direction anti-terroriste (SDAT) ayant l'assurance que la "cible" se trouvait dans l'immeuble, décision a été prise de donner l'assaut mercredi au petit matin, d'autant que le groupe était soupçonné de préparer une nouvelle attaque jeudi.

Les autorités françaises ont aussi indiqué cette semaine avoir bénéficié d'une information de la Turquie pour localiser Abdelhamid Abaaoud, le situant en Grèce.

After Paris attack, safety vs. liberties, New York Times

Rattled countries tilt toward bolder security, starting rights debate

By STEVEN ERLANGER and KIMIKO DE FREYTAS-TAMURA

21 November 2015

New York Times

Shocked by the carnage of the Paris attacks, France and Belgium moved aggressively to strengthen the hand of their security forces, pushing Europe more deeply into a debate that has raged in the United States since Sept. 11, 2001: how to balance counterterrorism efforts and civil liberties.

With their populations stunned and nervous, and political pressure growing on the right, the French and Belgian governments made it clear on Thursday that, for now, they would put protecting their citizens ahead of other considerations.

With time, the United States has moved to ease some elements of the U.S.A. Patriot Act, passed in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks. It has also strengthened oversight of intelligence agencies and of mass domestic surveillance in the wake of the revelations by Edward J. Snowden, the former contractor for the National Security Agency who leaked documents about surveillance.

But European nations battered by terrorism are moving in the other direction. Those nations include France, which has suffered multiple attacks this year; Belgium, where many of the Paris attackers lived or grew up; and Britain, which has thwarted a number of plots in recent years. Each is updating and strengthening government power while debating further controls over passport-free travel within Europe.

Since the Nov. 13 attacks on Paris, France has aggressively used emergency powers, for example, to round up potential terrorism suspects across the country in an effort to disrupt any further plots.

Finding the right balance between individual rights and antiterrorism measures has grown more complex in the 14 years since the United States was struck by Al Qaeda, in part because of the pervasiveness of digital technology and the ensuing questions about personal privacy. But in the days after the Paris attacks, there has been relatively little reflection about the trade-offs as the nations most affected — France and Belgium — rushed to put new security measures in place and alter their legal and constitutional structures to give government more flexibility in dealing with threats.

As Prime Minister Manuel Valls of France warned darkly on Thursday of the possibility of chemical and biological attacks, France's National Assembly voted, 551 to 6 with one abstention, to extend for three months a national state of emergency imposed after the attacks in Paris by the Islamic State, which killed 129 people and wounded 352.

"The state of emergency, it's true, justifies certain temporary restrictions on liberties," Mr. Valls said. "But resorting to this, it's to give us every chance to fully restore these liberties."

In Belgium, Prime Minister Charles Michel said he would rush through legal changes to make it easier to capture, try and punish terrorism suspects operating there. He also said he would seek constitutional changes to extend the length of time suspects can be held by the police without the filing of charges to 72 hours, from 24.

His plan calls for the imprisonment of jihadists returning to Belgium from overseas, and would require anyone deemed a threat to wear an ankle bracelet. The plan would also ban the anonymous sale of telephone SIM cards that allow terrorists to hide their identities; would remove restrictions on what times of day the police are permitted to conduct raids on terrorism suspects; and would allow the authorities to arrest or expel religious figures "who preach hatred."

Mr. Michel also wants to require all passengers traveling on high-speed trains as well as airplanes to register their identities before departure.

Jan Techau, the director of Carnegie Europe, a research organization based in Brussels, said he saw the reactions as natural. "The home front is the field of political activity now — it will all be about homeland security," he said. "There is a sense that the authorities are no longer in control, and it's a clear attempt by authorities to regain some trust."

But advocates for civil liberties warned against governments going too far, and suggested that European nations had to be particularly careful that the measures they were taking were not aimed at one class of citizens: Muslims.

Officials at Human Rights Watch in Belgium cautioned on Thursday that the authorities should ensure such measures did not lead to indiscriminate roundups or unnecessary restrictions on freedom of speech, movement and religion.

“Like every nation, Belgium has a responsibility to protect its people from attacks, but it should not trample basic rights in the process,” said Letta Tayler, a senior terrorism and counterterrorism researcher at Human Rights Watch. “Whenever a country is attacked or threatened, there is a danger that governments will overreact in an effort to make people secure.”

The French emergency bill, which the French Senate was expected to approve on Friday, extends the powers of a 1955 emergency law to allow the dissolution of radical groups running mosques and other places of prayer; the blocking of websites and social media that glorify or incite terrorism; and the use, in certain cases, of electronic tagging for those placed under house arrest.

It is the first time since the 1955 law was passed that a national state of emergency has been declared. France is already being patrolled by heavily armed soldiers, and now police officers who are off duty will be allowed to carry firearms and use them if they wear an armband identifying themselves as police.

On Wednesday, the French authorities said they had carried out over 414 raids across the country, arrested 64 people and placed 118 under house arrest.

Under the emergency, the authorities are permitted to conduct raids and make arrests without first obtaining a warrant. But as soon as someone is arrested or property is seized, the regular legal system kicks in. Suspects in terrorism cases are already allowed to be held without charge for up to six days.

In the United States, even in the immediate aftermath of Sept. 11, raids on that scale would have created a storm of criticism, but the French, only 10 months after Islamist radicals attacked the newspaper Charlie Hebdo and a kosher supermarket, have generally accepted the crackdown as necessary.

President François Hollande has also called for enshrining the state of emergency law in France's Constitution, making it easier to declare such a state for longer periods of time without resorting to the more drastic options currently available in the Constitution.

Mr. Hollande also wants to make it easier to expel foreigners deemed to be a security threat; to revoke the French nationality of dual citizens, even those born in France, if they are convicted of terrorism-related offenses; and to close radical mosques.

France had already moved last summer to strengthen and modernize laws governing electronic surveillance after the attacks in January. Laws passed by large majorities gave broad legal authority for the state to snoop on citizens.

In Belgium, the call for broad new powers came after the government was stung by criticism that it had failed to act aggressively enough to identify and stop plots being planned on its soil. Mr. Michel also vowed a crackdown on Molenbeek, the Brussels district that has bred so many jihadists and harbored others.

As in France, many Belgians said that while the measures were drastic, they were prepared to give up some of their personal freedoms in return for security.

Belgium has been so shaken by the Paris attacks that there is a broad agreement that something needs to be done, said Steven Blockmans, an analyst at the Center for European Policy Studies based in Brussels. There is a consensus about the need to strengthen law enforcement, intelligence agencies and local governments, he said.

Mr. Michel's moves are a partial vindication for the right-wing New Flemish Alliance, which has been calling for these measures for years, Mr. Blockmans said. The interior minister, Jan Jambon, who is a member of the party, recently said that Molenbeek needed to be "flushed out."

Belgium has looser gun control laws than France but stricter controls on surveillance, which the new measures would loosen. For example, the authorities can intercept telephone conversations only if there is a strong suspicion that the targets are terrorists, said Jelle Van Buuren, a lecturer in counterterrorism at Leiden University. The surveillance cannot be extended to people who may be accomplices, he said.

Bart Tommelein, Belgium's federal secretary in charge of privacy, said that the restrictions on privacy would only apply to terrorism suspects.

"If we are talking about suspected terrorists and people who have committed such crimes, then privacy doesn't exist," he said. "So for people who go to Syria, or return from Syria, that border can be crossed, they lose that right," but others will not.

It was not the government's intention to "put everyone in a database, but to target and put people suspected of engaging in terrorist activity in a database," he said, and he insisted, "We won't place security above freedom."

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
October 6, 2015 / le 6 octobre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Appuis discrets malgré de bonnes finances

L'aéroport de Québec ne réclame plus de subvention pour la construction d'un centre de prédédouanement américain, en plus de promettre des retombées économiques appréciables. Le président et chef de la direction, Gaétan Gagné, se demande donc pourquoi les appuis sont si difficiles à aller chercher en pleine campagne électorale. Dans son bureau avec vue sur les pistes, M. Gagné explique au Soleil les avantages d'un tel équipement. Les passagers, qui franchissent les douanes américaines au départ plutôt qu'à l'arrivée ou en escale, épargnent surtout du temps. Une fois aux États-Unis, ils peuvent récupérer rapidement leurs bagages ou prendre une correspondance sans autre embêtement. Les voyageurs devraient aussi avoir accès à de nouvelles liaisons, plaide le président d'Aéroport de Québec inc., la société privée qui gère l'aéroport international Jean-Lesage. Les transporteurs pourront en effet se rendre directement dans des aéroports sans poste de dédouanement puisque leurs passagers auront déjà reçu l'autorisation d'entrer aux États-Unis. Fini le détour par New York ou un autre grand aéroport seulement pour passer les douanes... Québec pensait que c'était acquis puisque son nom figurait sur la courte liste des aéroports où ajouter des «points de précontrôle», selon le jargon utilisé dans un accord entre le Canada et les États-Unis datant de 1995 et renouvelé en 2001. Or, une nouvelle version signée en mars dernier par le conservateur Steven Blaney, ministre de la Sécurité publique et député de Lévis, ne fait plus référence aux villes à desservir en priorité. Il faut dire que seules Québec et London (Ontario) n'ont toujours pas l'équipement tant désiré. Pour Gaétan Gagné, cette omission est inquiétante. «Québec se retrouve pénalisée parce qu'on n'a pas suivi l'ancien protocole. [...] C'est comme si on avait décidé de fermer le marché du prédédouanement, ça n'a pas de sens», expose-t-il. Le gestionnaire poursuit en disant qu'«il faut que les politiciens décident que ça va marcher». Il y va du développement de la région de Québec, selon lui. Le gouvernement du Québec l'a compris et a nommé vendredi dernier l'ex-ambassadeur Raymond Chrétien afin qu'il convainque les Américains - et les Canadiens - de la pertinence de la candidature de Québec. Le maire Régis Labeaume rame dans le même sens. Il a inclus le centre de prédéroulement dans ses priorités pour la campagne électorale fédérale. Jusqu'à maintenant, le Bloc québécois et le Nouveau Parti démocratique (NPD) ont appuyé l'initiative. Le Parti libéral et le Parti conservateur se font tirer l'oreille. M. Gagné en est à se demander s'il ne faudrait pas demander une subvention. «C'est un peu moins glamour pour les politiciens, peut-être, de dire qu'il n'y a pas d'argent qui va avec ça. Mais l'autorisation, ça nous suffit.» Au bureau du ministre de la Sécurité publique, on souligne que l'entente a été déposée à la Chambre des communes et doit encore être étudiée avant d'être ratifiée. Pour les nouveaux points de précontrôle, toutes les villes canadiennes seraient toutefois sur le même pied d'égalité. «Ce n'est pas un signal ou un non-signal», nous a-t-on fait valoir. Le Soleil, 10/Front

«Je n'en espérais pas tant»

Lorsqu'on lui fait remarquer qu'il a connu une ascension fulgurante dans le gouvernement Harper, Steven Blaney secoue la tête. «Je ne pense pas que le mot fulgurant est approprié», corrige-t-il, admettant tout de même être surpris par sa trajectoire en politique. «Je n'en espérais pas tant.» Le candidat conservateur dans Bellechasse-Les Etchemins-Lévis a connu une année occupée qui a confirmé son ascension, de simple député au poste névralgique de ministre de la Sécurité publique. Avant le déclenchement hâtif des élections, c'est lui qui a été chargé d'articuler la réponse du gouvernement Harper aux attentats d'Ottawa et de Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu. Les élections du 19 octobre surviendront d'ailleurs presque un an jour pour jour après la fusillade dans le Parlement fédéral. Le projet de loi C-51 a placé Steven Blaney sous le feu des projecteurs comme jamais auparavant. Aux Communes, devant la presse, il a martelé sans broncher le message conservateur, allant jusqu'à invoquer l'Holocauste pour justifier qu'on étende les pouvoirs des agences de surveillance. Finalement, cette question délicate pour le gouvernement conservateur est pratiquement absente des débats de la campagne fédérale. D'ailleurs, le Parti libéral a appuyé le projet de loi. «Ç'a été le plus grand défi de ma vie», relate Steven Blaney en revenant sur la dernière année. La Presse, A5

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Belleisle rebounds after being hammered by rain

Belleisle schools have reopened for those who can actually get to class. Anglophone School District South Supt. Zoe Watson says for those who cannot get to school, they have an excuse that won't be questioned. Both Belleisle Elementary School and Belleisle Regional High School were closed Oct. 1 and 2 after a rainstorm hammered the region, wiping out millions of dollars in infrastructure. Bridges and roads were destroyed making several in the region inaccessible. But as the community encompassing Belleisle, Springfield and Hatfield Point pulls together, there is a lot to be said about its resilience, says Aaron Law of Kars. "Great co-operation, compassion and camaraderie amongst friends and neighbours" is seeing the tight-knit community through, he said. Telegraph-Journal, B3

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Exiled spy kids battle to reclaim their citizenship

It's the stuff of a gripping spy thriller - international intrigue, stolen identities, even a mail-order diaper business. But for two brothers who were stripped of their Canadian citizenship when their parents were unmasked as Russian spies, none of that is important. The only thing that matters to them is the return of what they see as their birthright: their citizenship. Former Toronto residents Alexander Vavilov, 21, and his older brother, Timothy, 25, are in the midst of a legal battle to get their citizenship back, arguing they shouldn't be penalized for the sins of their parents. "It is not fair to punish us for something we have nothing to do with. We have done nothing wrong," Alexander Vavilov told the Star in an exclusive interview from an undisclosed city in Europe, where he is studying for an undergraduate degree (...) Alexander and Timothy have never been in trouble with the law, though it's a different story for their parents - Andrey Bezrukov and Elena Vavilova - who acquired their new personas by stealing the identities of two dead Canadians, Donald Heathfield and Tracey Ann Foley. Ottawa would not even have been aware of the identity theft if FBI agents had not arrested them in 2010 for espionage in the United States, where the family lived for 11 years before they were booted out and deported to Moscow in a spy swap. Toronto Star, A1

Toronto 18 boss loses parole appeal

A leader of the Toronto 18 terrorist group has lost his appeal of a parole board decision that concluded he wasn't yet ready to be released from prison. The board's decision was fair and reasonable, the appeals panel ruled in the case of Fahim Ahmad, who organized a paramilitary training camp north of Toronto and plotted to attack the Parliament buildings and behead MPs in 2006. The decision was "based on relevant, reliable and persuasive information," the appeal division wrote in a five-page decision that cited the "gravity" of Ahmad's offences and "lack of a release plan," among other factors. Ahmad was the leader of one of two factions of the al-Qaidainspired Toronto 18. The leader of the second faction, Zakaria Amara, last month became the first Canadian terrorist to lose his citizenship under a controversial new law. At least five other Toronto 18 members have been notified they may also lose their citizenship under the law, which applies to dual nationals convicted of terrorism offences. Ahmad's lawyer said last week his client was not among those who had received such a notice. National Post, A6

Privacy breach possible in loss of citizenship

Federal officials are investigating an apparent privacy breach involving an imprisoned terrorist who was stripped of his citizenship. Zakaria Amara's receipt of a government letter informing him he no longer held Canadian citizenship was promptly reported in the media late last month and soon after confirmed by a Conservative cabinet minister in the middle of a closely fought election campaign. The issue quickly reignited campaign trail debate about new provisions that allow the government to revoke a terrorist's Canadian citizenship as long as the person has nationality elsewhere. However, Citizenship and Immigration Canada is refusing to release a copy of the letter to Amara "due to privacy considerations," said department spokesman Rémi Larivière. As for the public disclosure of the revocation, Larivière said the department "takes privacy matters seriously and has procedures in place to protect personal information." "Within the department, we will be looking into the matter according to normal procedures." Canadian Press (Times Colonist, B6; *Whitehorse Daily Star)

The 1970 October crisis: Questions still remain

The majestic home at 1297 Redpath Crescent in Montreal looks much like it did 45 years ago, its arched wooden door a gateway to the tony Golden Square Mile, once a bastion of Montreal's English speaking elite. Nestled at the foot of Mount Royal and located on a cul-de-sac, the classic stone manor remains a landmark of the October Crisis of 1970, a turbulent chapter in the history of Quebec and Canada that still stirs political passions and jars our collective memory nearly a half-century later. Then, more so than now, Quebec's place in Canada was unsettled. But the events of October 1970, which culminated in two highprofile kidnappings and the grisly murder of provincial cabinet minister Pierre Laporte by Front de libération du Québec (FLQ) terrorists shocked Quebecers of all political leanings at the time, and contributed to the loss of support for violent means to attain the political goal of Quebec independence (...) Forty-five years later, we are still left with unanswered questions about who actually killed Laporte and the role of Hamer, the lone anglophone who participated in the Cross kidnapping but was never brought to justice until his identity emerged publicly almost a decade later. (He was arrested in 1980, and sentenced the next year to 12 months in jail after pleading guilty for his role in the kidnapping.) But given the lay of Quebec politics, we may never find out the truth. "As long as there is an independent, federalist divide in Quebec, as long as Quebec politics is structured around this, you're not going to have an honest reckoning of what happened," Bélanger said. Montreal Gazette, A4

 Programme - Violence conjugale et malbouffe au menu des libéraux: Les modifications à la loi antiterroriste C-51 sont enfin connues

Le Parti libéral a divulgué sa plateforme électorale complète lundi, levant ainsi le voile sur les quelques éléments du programme de Justin Trudeau qui n'étaient pas encore connus. La lutte contre les gras trans et la malbouffe est au menu, tout comme le renversement du fardeau de la preuve pour la remise en liberté des récidivistes en matière de violence conjugale. Les changements envisagés à la loi antiterroriste sont aussi enfin connus (...) La plateforme explique aussi comment le Parti libéral modifierait la loi antiterroriste C-51, pour l'appui de laquelle il a été vertement critiqué. Ainsi, pas question d'abolir les nouveaux super-pouvoirs de " perturbation " accordés aux espions canadiens. Les libéraux s'engagent seulement à garantir que tous les mandats obtenus par les agents du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) soient conformes à la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés. On se rappellera que le C-51 a accordé au SCRS le pouvoir d'enfreindre la loi dans ses " perturbations " moyennant l'obtention de l'aval d'un juge. Le Devoir, A2

* The big hole in Harper's policy on terror

An opinion piece states "Stephen Harper and the Conservative government continually argue that terrorist organizations in the Middle East, notably ISIS, are a threat to Canadians at home. Their belief in this is so strong that they are willing to spend millions of dollars and risk the lives of Canadian military by participating in bombing and training missions in Iraq and Syria. Assuming this is true, apart from the moral issue of depriving people of their citizenship, how does he justify supporting terrorist organizations by providing new recruits?" Hamilton Spectator, A14

* 'Deport them'

An open letter to the National Post states, "(...) I applaud the government's efforts to strip the citizenship of convicted terrorists. We should widen the scope of this law to include heinous crimes such as rape and murder. Canadians have the right to fulfil their ambitions in a peaceful and secure environment. Their lives should not be threatened by criminals who lurk in the shadows. Convicted criminals should be deported to their country of origin so that the lives of Canadians are not jeopardized by their menacing presence on Canadian soil. Revoking someone's citizenship only applies to dual citizens who have violated their oath to this country by committing a crime against the well-being of the population. Since there is no death penalty in Canada, the only way to get rid of these criminals is to deport them." National Post, A9

* Dog-whistle politics

An open letter to the National Post states "Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi doesn't like the dog whistles in the federal election campaign. Who is whistling and who are the dogs? (...) Dog whistles cannot be heard by ordinary people, as their ultrasonic waves are too high frequency for the human ear to detect. Dogs can hear them though, and so the dog whistle signals the dogs in a way that other people cannot hear. So, to take the example that greatly exercised Mayor Nenshi - whose rhetorical style blanches from anything so discreet as a lowly whistle when a bullhorn may be at hand - the prime minister is blowing his dog whistle on refugees. Prime Minister Stephen Harper says that refugee resettlement must respect the requirements of national security. That's the part ordinary people can hear. But there is another part that only the dogs can hear - namely that we have to be careful about these refugees because they are Arab and Muslim. The "dogs" are those animated by sundry bigotries; they don't like Arabs and Muslims." National Post, A9

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Norcal group grows its airport relationship

Calgary has become an important international hub specializing in receiving, transferring, storing and distributing air, rail and highway cargo. The Calgary Airport Authority continues to offer land lease development opportunities at both Calgary International Airport and Springbank Airport. More than 320 hectares of land are under lease and long-term plans envision future development that will add another 80 to 120 hectares to the city's industrial land base... Norcal managing broker Kevin Deeks says Norcal Centre, designed by Form 3 Designs, is located close to the Canada Border Services Agency and private jet hangers making it an ideal building for customs brokers, freight forwarders, a business centre and other airport related companies. Postmedia Network (Calgary Herald, C2)

«Bon pour le Québec», dit Daoust

Certains producteurs agricoles québécois subiront les conséquences d'un nouvel accord commercial, mais son impact sera globalement positif pour l'économie québécoise, a déclaré lundi le ministre de l'Économie, Jacques Daoust. M. Daoust a affirmé que les industries québécoises dans le secteur de l'aéronautique, du bois, des pâtes et papier ainsi que des métaux profiteront de la disparition progressive de droits de douane grâce au Partenariat transpacifique (PTP)... Le ministre a évoqué un resserrement des contrôles douaniers sur les substituts du lait, une interdiction formelle aux importations de lait produit avec des hormones de croissance, ainsi qu'une compensation adéquate des dommages subis à cause du PTP. Presse Canadienne (Le Quotidien, 21/Front); Le Soleil, 25/Front

Autres réactions au PTP

L'Union des producteurs agricoles (UPA) dénonce l'entente qui touche de plein fouet les producteurs laitiers, d'oeufs et de volailles. «Il est déplorable que les productions sous gestion de l'offre représentant 43% des revenus agricoles québécois fassent les frais de l'accession du Canada au Partenariat transpacifique (PTP)», souligne par voie de communiqué le président, Marcel Groleau. Ce dernier réclame maintenant la mise en place de mesures concrètes pour assurer un contrôle rigoureux des frontières et le respect intégral des normes de composition fromagère. «C'est la seule manière d'assurer une gestion de l'offre efficace et fonctionnelle pour l'avenir. L'UPA s'attend à ce que le gouvernement fédéral prenne sans délai les mesures qui s'imposent», ajoute M. Groleau. Le Quotidien, 7/Front

Qui sont les gagnants au Québec?

Le Canada et 11 pays se sont entendus sur le Partenariat transpacifique (PTP). Pour le Québec, l'intérêt de ce traité de libre-échange est notamment d'ouvrir les frontières du Japon, un pays développé de 127 millions de personnes qui maintient des tarifs élevés sur les produits agricoles et les biens manufacturés. En contrepartie, Québec subira la concurrence de pays dont la main-d'oeuvre est bon marché, comme le Viêtnam. Qui seront les gagnants et les perdants? Avec le PTP, le Canada reste sur le même pied que les Américains en ce qui a trait à l'accès au marché du Japon. «La réaction dans l'industrie est unanime», dit Jacques Létourneau, président de Canada Porc international. Le tarif de 4,3 % sera progressivement éliminé. Le Québec rattrapera ainsi deux pays du PTP, le Mexique et le Chili, qui profitaient d'un traitement préférentiel. De grands exportateurs porcins, le Brésil et le Danemark, deviennent désavantagés, puisqu'ils ne sont pas signataires du Partenariat. Le Canada a exporté 2,3 milliards $ en 2014 vers les marchés du PTP, dont 41 % à destination du Japon. Le Québec est le deuxième producteur de porc au pays. Le bois et les produits forestiers sont frappés de taux pouvant atteindre 10 % au Japon, 31 % au Viêtnam, voire 40 % en Malaisie. Les exportations canadiennes de bois et de produits forestiers atteignent 20,4 milliards par an. Le Québec produit 32 % des pâtes et papiers au Canada et arrive derrière la Colombie-Britannique pour le bois. Le Canada exporte pour 22 milliards $, «et ce chiffre est appelé à augmenter grâce à la nouvelle entente», s'est réjoui l'Association des produits forestiers du Canada (APFC) dans un communiqué. La Presse (Le Soleil, 24,25/Front); La Presse Canadienne (Le Soleil, 23/Front, La Presse, Le Devoir)

Twelve countries reach tentative Trans-Pacific trade deal

Twelve nations, including Canada, have reached a tentative deal on a massive Pacific Rim trading bloc billed as the largest-ever deal of its kind, with implications for hundreds of millions of people, hundreds of products and industries, and for long-term relationships between countries on four continents. After five days of marathon, around-the-clock negotiations, a deal was announced Monday to create the Trans-Pacific Partnership -- which would start by covering 40 per cent of the world's economy, with participants predicting it would become the building block for future trade deals. "Today is a historic day, it is a great day for Canada, it is a great day for Canadians," Prime Minister Stephen Harper beamed during a news conference Monday in Ottawa. "With this agreement, the largest economic partnership in the history of the world, Canadian exporters will gain nearly tariff-free access to almost 800 million customers in the Asia-Pacific region... including - crucially for us - Japan."... There's a major discrepancy between Canada and the U.S. on tariff-elimination for cheaper Asian parts - - with a five-times-faster phase-out north of the border, five years compared with the U.S.'s 25 years. In addition, both countries will see a 17.5-per-cent drop in the amount of regional content required in cars to avoid a tariff, compared with NAFTA. Canadian Press (Red Deer Advocate, A1, Times Colonist, B1/Front); Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A1/Front); Postmedia News (National Post, A1, Chronicle Herald, Times Colonist, Calgary Herald)

Deal may signal 'slow erosion' of dairy supply management system

Canada is opening the taps to dairy from foreign competitors as part of the Trans-Pacific Partnership deal and though the new imports may just seem like a trickle right now, some say the leak could mean the beginning of the end for supply management. Details of the TPP released Monday include allotting 3.25 per cent of annual production to foreign dairy products entering Canada, to be phased in over the next five years with an increase in exports from the 11 other TPP countries that will annually displace about 250 million litres of Canadian milk. "There seems to be this slow erosion of our supply management principals, which is really based on one premise: producing what we need domestically, and that's it," said Sylvain Charlebois, a professor at the University of Guelph's Food Institute. "This gives dairy farmers the opportunity to shift their model in order to compete in the global market place, which is something they've never had to do before." The current supply management system controls levels of milk production by tying it to Canadian consumer demand and limiting foreign competition through high tariffs. Postmedia News (StarPhoenix, D1/Front; Montreal Gazette, Calgary Herald, Charlottetown Guardian); Globe and Mail, A1/FRONT; Montreal Gazette, A15

 Will Canadians walk through the door to the Pacific?

Canada's signature on Monday's sweeping trade deal will open a door for companies to expand deeper into the Asia-Pacific region - but it remains to be seen how many will actually walk through it. With the world's largest economy right next door, Canada's business community has had good reason to remain focused on the fish-in-a-barrel opportunities offered by the United States market. So, will Canada's participation in the Trans-Pacific Partnership - a 12-country pact billed as covering 40 per cent of the global economy - encourage Canadian companies to finally step out of their North American comfort zone? "It's so easy for Canadian firms to just walk across the border," said Ian Lee, an economics professor at Carleton University's Sprott School of Business in Ottawa. Toronto Star (Record, C1)

Bridge fixed on building new truck plaza

An ongoing project to upgrade the Ambassador Bridge includes the construction of a controversial on-site truck inspection plaza, the company revealed in a written statement Monday. The city has for years blocked the proposed plaza at the foot of the bridge on Windsor's west side because it requires closing streets in the area - including a section of Huron Church Road - and could have a significant impact on the surrounding neighbourhood. "They don't have permission," said Windsor Mayor Drew Dilkens. "We've had no discussion whatsoever with the Ambassador Bridge with respect to adding a commercial inspection plaza to their current facility." Should it be built, the plaza would be located west of Huron Church Road. "There are a lot of approvals required before they could ever move forward with that type of work," Dilkens said. "I'm not aware they have approvals from any of the various bodies required before they can move forward." Secondary truck inspection by the Canada Border Services Agency is currently done two kilometres south of the bridge at a large site off Malden Road. Postmedia (Windsor Star, A1/FRONT)

 B.C. wife, husband 'stuck' after IRA-related refugee claim turned down

A former British soldier married to a disabled Canadian woman may be forced to leave their Victoria home for the United Kingdom after a series of missteps and a snarl of red tape. John Collins, 62, first made an application for refugee status when he entered Canada, based on alleged harassment in the U.K. by a member of the Irish Republican Army. The application was denied and he's been ordered to leave by the Immigration and Refugee Board... Citizenship and Immigration Canada, the Immigration and Refugee Board and Canada Border Services Agency declined to comment on the case, citing privacy concerns. CTVNews (CityNews)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CHASE THE ACE

Cameron MacQuarrie has one piece of advice for communities planning a Chase the Ace fundraiser: be prepared. The vice-president of Branch 132 of the Royal Canadian Legion and chairman of its Chase the Ace committee in Inverness, said Monday that anyone considering such an undertaking should begin by developing contacts with other community groups that may be needed to help. "You need to gather your community leaders from other organizations and prepare with them in the event that it gets as big as it could possibly get," said MacQuarrie. "You need to look at what resources you have available in terms of other spaces, more volunteers, RCMP and EHS." By the 48th week of Inverness's Chase the Ace, thousands of people poured into the small community, pushing the jackpot up to $1.7 million for Saturday's draw. Donelda MacAskill of Englishtown got the jackpot by winning the draw and then selecting the ace from the three cards remaining in the deck. All previous draw winners had failed to flip the ace. Chronicle Herald, A1

Celebrity dance off to support Julietta's Place

A Red Deer celebrity dance event that raises money for charity has chosen its benefactor and announced the eight celebrity dancers. Women's Outreach Julietta's Place will be the partner charity for the 2016 Sheraton Celebrity Dance off, which will take place April 16. Co-chair of the event, Christine Moore, said the celebrity dancers include David Brant, Dusty Daines, Bonnee Gregg, veterinarian Pat Higgins, coach Ken King, RCMP Const. Charlotte Rockwell, Hermes Salas and Tammy Schlamp. Julietta's Place provides housing to women who are fleeing domestic abuse. The popular event has raised over $1 million over the past four years. It brings together professional dancers, community leaders, business and many volunteers. Tickets for the 2016 event go on sale Jan. 19. Red Deer Advocate, C1

Airdrie shooting suspect surrenders to police

A second suspect in the shooting of a man outside a fitness centre in a Calgary bedroom community last week has turned himself in. RCMP had issued a warrant for the man on Friday. Mathew Van Schiak of no fixed address faces one count of aggravated assault and three weapons-related charges. The 21-year-old is to appear in Airdrie provincial court later this week. Also charged with aggravated assault is Michael Sharman. The 35-year-old, who is from Calgary, was arrested during a traffic stop on Friday. The 39-year-old victim was shot three times but is expected to recover fully. Canadian Press (Edmonton Journal, A7, Calgary Herald, A11)

Man charged for turning a jar into a bomb

RCMP in southern Alberta have charged a man with making a homemade bomb. Mounties say a resident in Airdrie found a suspicious looking jar last Friday among some belongings left behind in a rental property. The person had moved several of the items when the jar was spotted in an ammunition container. Officers evacuated several homes in the neighbourhood and safely destroyed the device. Kristopher Goyman, 24, of Airdrie has been charged with making an explosive device with intent to endanger life or cause serious property damage. He is to appear in Airdrie provincial court Oct. 22. Canadian Press (Edmonton Journal, A2; Red Deer Advocate); Postmedia News (Calgary Herald, A11)

Escaped Bowden inmate captured by RCMP

A man who escaped Bowden Institution on Sunday morning was apprehended by Innisfail RCMP later the same day. Kenton Matthew Boyle, 29, had been unlawfully at large since 11: 45 a.m. after staff members discovered he was missing during a count. CSC said it immediately contacted the Innisfail RCMP detachment, and a warrant for his arrest was issued. Innisfail RCMP arrested him at about 7 p.m. Boyle is currently serving a sentence in the minimum security facility of four years, six months for armed robbery, disguise with intent, possession of property obtained by crime and operate motor vehicle - flight. CSC is conducting an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the incident. Red Deer Advocate, C1

 Province investigating contract controversy

The Alberta government is considering new accountability rules for municipal governments following a police investigation into a secretive $1.4-million contract awarded to the former mayor of Lloydminster. Last week, Lloydminster Mayor Rob Saunders revealed that the City of Lloydminster was "actively participating" in an RCMP investigation into a July 22, 2013, contract between the city and AHHA

Moments Inc., a consulting firm operated by former Lloydminster mayor Jeff Mulligan, that was signed on the same day Mulligan announced his resignation. "The RCMP review was forwarded to the Alberta Crown Prosecutors' Office and they have determined that there is no evidence to support any criminal charge against the City of Lloydminster or AHHA Moments Inc. in this matter and that this file is now closed," said Saunders in a prepared statement. Saunders refused to take questions from reporters on the issue. The city, which straddles the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, fought to keep details of the agreement under wraps but the contract was released last month by the Office of the Saskatchewan Information and Privacy Commissioner. The contract was worth an estimated $1.4 million over three years for consulting work but was severed by the city after three months and $178,000 in payments to AHHA Moments Inc. The contract was never publicly tendered and was signed by city officials the same day Mulligan announced his resignation but was still sitting as mayor. A spokesperson for Municipal Affairs Minister Deron Bilous said the NDP government "takes the concerns of the residents of Lloydminster seriously." "Under the Municipal Government Act (MGA), municipalities are first and foremost accountable to their residents," said spokesperson Shannon Greer. "We are aware of the situation and under the ongoing MGA review are examining whether additional tools to enhance municipal accountability are required." Edmonton Sun, 7

 Former Windsor Mountie spent life helping others

Bernie Campbell could be an imposing figure in his RCMP dress uniform. He had a long and distinguished career in law enforcement that stretched over three decades but at home with his boys, he was ready for all manner of hijinks. "Much to my mom's chagrin, he was one of the boys," said Bernie's oldest son Ian. "She didn't have three boys, she had four." Campbell died last Friday from complications of a genetic malady known as arteriovenous malformation. He was 64... Campbell proudly played the bagpipes in the Windsor Police Band, although he often joked he was positioned in the middle of the pack so no one could hear him. He spent 17 years in drug enforcement with the Windsor RCMP detachment. He retired with the rank of corporal after 33 years. "He was quite a character but he was an even better friend," said Rick Bohus, who worked with him on the force. "One of Bernie's greatest features was his caring attitude toward others on the job or in civilian life." Bohus, who is flying in for the funeral service from his retirement home in Moncton, N.B., recalled the story of a young RCMP officer who feared losing his career after being injured in the line of duty. With Campbell's help, the young man avoided a medical discharge, went on to a full career and rose to the rank of inspector. For his work in labour relations, Campbell won the Queen's Golden Jubilee medal and the Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal. He also received the RCMP's Good Conduct and Long Service medal. Postmedia News (Windsor Star, A2)

 Mountie hurt, trial ordered

Two men accused of severely injuring an RCMP officer near Kamloops have been ordered to stand trial. Jerry Lamar and Leon Leclerc were charged with one count each of attempting to wound, maim or disfigure Const. Paul Koester in Pritchard on July 5, 2014. A trial date is expected to be set on Nov. 9. Koester shot and killed Ian Bush, 22, during a 2005 altercation at the RCMP detachment in Houston. An investigation cleared him. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, A8)

 When paranoia trumps evidence

A column states "Re: The warming comfort of a familiar paranoia, Oct. 5. Columnist Shannon Gormley offers hard facts, logic and statistics to demonstrate that fundamentalist and terrorist Muslims are no more a threat than fundamentalist or terrorist Christians to Canada's security and values. However, paranoia trumps evidence more often than not - especially if used by a politician to cement support. Prime Minister Stephen Harper seems to be doing all that he can to provide warming comfort to Canadians who feel threatened by the niqab. In appealing court decisions and in promising new laws if his appeals do not succeed, he is making sure that Canadians know that he really cares about their feelings and values. Last week he offered even more comfort. There will be an RCMP tip line for Canadians to report barbaric cultural practices. Some of us were under the impression that we had a responsibility to report barbaric practices to the police. Now, we are to tip off the RCMP if culture is involved. Paranoia will always be with us. It does not need encouragement from Harper." Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, C3)

 'Barbaric' hotline no solution to serious issues of family abuse

Sonia Bitar is no stranger to the issue of domestic violence in immigrant communities. The former citizenship court judge is executive director of Edmonton's Changing Together, a centre for immigrant women and their children. For years, Bitar has worked to empower women, helping them to understand their legal rights, flee abusive family situations, and integrate into the Canadian community. Many of the women and girls she works with are the very ones the federal Conservative Party says it's trying to help with its promised new "barbaric cultural practices" tip line. For Bitar, an immigrant from Lebanon, the party's campaign pledge provokes a sharp reaction. "Oh my God. Are we still using these kinds of words?" she says. "Are we now saying there are two different kinds of Canadians? I'm very disappointed." It isn't just the inflammatory language that bothers Bitar. She knows the oppressive domestic and cultural situations that women who are new to Canada can face. In her experience, the best way to assist women at risk is to build trust, and to reach out to them in their own languages. Many, she says, don't know their rights in Canada. Others don't trust the police. Others feel too economically or socially dependent on their husbands or families to break away. It can take time and patience to help them. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, A3)

 Tip line? Surely they jest

A column states "Immigration Minister Chris Alexander has announced that, if re-elected, the Conservative government will create an RCMP tip line people can phone to report their neighbour's barbaric cultural practices. Some people, unused to the Harper government's wry sense of humour, have taken the announcement seriously. Immediately tipping off that it was an early April Fool's joke, however, was that it was delivered by Alexander, who is best known for his award-winning imitation of Fraser Crane's brother, Niles. This announcement, a bravura performance, exceeds even Alexander's stunning role in the recent Syrian refugee crisis. Were his announcement serious, my fingers would be at the ready to dial in such barbaric practices as circumcision, the drinking of blood and eating of flesh (even in symbolic form), and the yearly celebrations of murder by crucifixion. But since it was made in jest, perforce to bring some levity to this overly long election campaign - a newly introduced form of barbarism - I propose in similar vein the following list of barbaric cultural practices. To start, the cultural practice of displaying "butt crack." While it may be necessary to grant religious accommodation to plumbers, there is no excuse for anyone else. Women's shoes. 'Nuff said." Winnipeg Free Press, A9

 Prisoner escapes from hospital, steals car

A prisoner known for fleeing from police custody managed to run from corrections officers at Victoria General Hospital, steal a car and crash it into a motorcycle before escaping Sunday, according to police. Police were hunting Monday for Tyler Desmond Fong, 31, West Shore RCMP Const. Alex Berube said Fong is not considered armed or dangerous. "Although he has a history of fleeing from police, we have no information to suggest he has a violent past which jeopardizes public safety." The convict, being held at Vancouver Island Regional Correctional Centre, escaped shortly before 8 p.m. Sunday from the custody of provincial correctional officers while at Victoria General Hospital for medical treatment, police said. He smashed his way out of the emergency department. Police did not alert the media until after they got a warrant for his arrest Monday morning and were legally able to release the prisoner's name and photograph, Berube said. Justice Minister Suzanne Anton said B.C. Corrections takes public safety "very seriously" and such escapes are rare. "They are doing a review of this to find out what happened ... it's very unusual," Anton said. The Justice Ministry said privacy rules prevent it from releasing details of the medical treatment the prisoner was obtaining. The ministry said B.C. Corrections cannot disclose specifics of how inmates are managed while escorted outside of correctional centres, for security reasons. Every escort is determined on a case-by-case basis and security protocols are put in place based on risk level, the ministry said. A "critical-incident review" of the escape must be completed within 40 working days. Times Colonist, A3

Surrey Six accused admits to drug, gun crimes

A man accused of playing a role in the 2007 Surrey Six slayings has pleaded guilty to several drug trafficking and firearms charges. Sophon Sek entered the plea to seven counts in Surrey Provincial Court on Oct. 1. He'll be back before the judge on Nov. 3 to fix a date for his sentencing. Last spring, Surrey RCMP announced that Sek, 36, was facing 20 charges related to allegations he had trafficked drugs for months despite being on bail for manslaughter in connection with the Oct. 19, 2007 murder of six in a

Surrey highrise. Twelve others were also charged after a 21-month-long investigation that led to four search warrants being executed in September 2014. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, A9)

The barbaric cultural practice of election pronouncements

There's a low-frequency thrumming in the background of this election campaign – the political equivalent of the tension track used in movies to provoke anxiety and foreboding. If this election was indeed a movie, we would probably now be watching monochrome images of bewildered Canadians clutching their children while some sinister, shifting shape takes form in the near distance – foreign eyes staring malevolently from beneath slit veils or religious zealots mutilating their helpless daughters and forcing them into marital servitude. I can think of no better narration than Rod Serling's dire intonation at the beginning of each Twilight Zone episode: "It is the middle ground between light and shadow, between science and superstition, and it lies between the pit of man's fears and the summit of his knowledge." Instead of economic issues and the timeless election slogan of jobs, jobs, jobs, the drumbeat today seems to be Muslims, Muslims, Muslims. It's not quite that explicit, of course. Using that sort of language wouldn't be "politically correct," to borrow a Conservative attack phrase. Rather, the language is more suggestive. Just last week, we were reminded by the immigration minister, standing beside the minister responsible for the status of women, that Canada now has something called the Zero Tolerance for Barbaric Cultural Practices Act, and that if re-elected, the government would establish an RCMP task force, and a "tip line" for Canadians who wish to call the Mounties to denounce someone, a neighbour, it was suggested, for engaging in a barbaric cultural practice. CBC News

Taloyoak's Netsilik School vandalized over the weekend

School officials in Taloyoak, Nunavut, are picking up the pieces after their school was vandalized on Sunday. Principal Gina Pizzo says vandals entered Netsilik School and destroyed materials and equipment. She says she is grateful that some residents called police. "[It's] really nice when people do come forward to stop that kind of activity when they see it happening, or help clean up afterwards," she says. "We do really appreciate all the people pitched in to help us clean up the mess. Hopefully we won't see any more of this activity going on anytime soon." Pizzo says some material cannot be salvaged and replacements will have to be flown into the community. She says RCMP are investigating. CBC News

Editorial: Missing and Murdered Vigil Needs to be Met With a Real Response From Canada

An editorial "Sunday marked the 10th anniversary of the March and Vigil for Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women, and the Canadian government has still not addressed this problem with a nationwide, federal inquiry. With ever-rising numbers, it's a problem that is always at the forefront every October 4. The annual event is an important reminder, but it's an issue that falls on the wayside throughout the course of the year. The Canadian government ignores it as well as a majority of its population. For the last 10 years, marches have been happening all over the country for a federal inquiry into the deaths of more than 1,200 indigenous women. So far the demands have been met with an almost deafening silence. While promises have been made to have police investigations it does not address the severity of the issue. We live in world where we talk about appropriate responses to crimes daily, but when crimes actually need a significant response, there's almost none. According to the most recent RCMP report on the issue, there has been a 9 per cent decrease in unsolved cases—from 225 to 204. It's a start, but it's still not good enough. There are still at least 204 indigenous women whose stories are yet to be concluded, and we will not forget them." The Link

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Devries back in custody

A B.C. serial fraudster has turned himself in after being wanted on a Canada-wide warrant. Last week, police said they were actively looking for Wesley John Devries, 45, after he allegedly breached conditions of his release. Devries had been released from prison over the summer after pleading guilty in 2013 to 13 counts of fraud and theft. Many of his victims were women he met through dating websites. He had most recently been living in the Victoria area, said Victoria police spokesman Bowen Osoko. The Province, A10

 'There is no appreciable gaps in his criminal behaviour'

The federal Crown is seeking dangerous offender status for Mark Lange, a 40-year-old Yukon man with 42 convictions, including six for violent crimes. The status could put Lange in jail indefinitely. Alongside Dean Boucher, Lange was convicted of manslaughter in the death of a Carcross hotel owner in 2004. Both were originally found guilty of second-degree murder. However, the Yukon Court of Appeal overturned the sentence in 2011 citing contradictory instructions the presiding judge told the jury. On Friday, Crown prosecutor Noel Sinclair noted the crimes Lange had committed fit two of the requirements for the status: a pattern of persistent aggressive behaviour, and a failure to restrain his behaviour and a likelihood of causing death or injury to other persons. In the case of an indeterminate sentence, it must be shown a lesser sentence would not protect the public adequately. Sinclair pointed to Lange's lengthy criminal record. Whitehorse Daily Star, 2/Front

 Ex-investment adviser gets 30 years

Schriver pleaded guilty to 'cold, calculated scheme' involving 22 people, over $1m

A former Halifax investment adviser has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for defrauding investors of more than $1 million. Bruce Patrick Schriver pleaded guilty in June to one charge of fraud over $5,000, involving 22 victims who lost a combined $1,054,986 over a six-year period. "The wake of this fraud will be long felt and long suffered by his many victims," Crown attorney Mark Heerema said Monday at Schriver's sentencing in Halifax provincial court. "The number of victims also speaks to the amount of time that Mr. Schriver had to consider carefully what he was doing. This case is far from a momentary lapse of judgment or an impulsive decision. "It was a cold, calculated scheme that was occurring." The Chronicle-Herald, A7

 UN CRIMINEL DE CARRIÈRE

Robert Simpson est né en septembre 1962 dans la région d'Ottawa, où il a grandi. Il vient d'une famille nombreuse. Il est très proche de son jeune frère, Timothy, avec lequel il est devenu témoin repent dans cette affaire. « J'ai toujours protégé mon frère, y compris de notre mère lorsqu'elle le battait », a-t-il témoigné. Robert Simpson est un criminel de carrière et un tueur de sang-froid. Il avait 17 ans lorsqu'il a été envoyé au pénitencier pour la première fois. Il y a passé plus de 35 ans de sa vie jusqu'à maintenant. La Presse+

 Confessions d'un tueur de sang-froid

Un procès pour meurtre qui s'est ouvert il y a quelques semaines à Montréal s'est transformé hier en véritable incursion dans le monde sordide et impitoyable des tueurs de sang-froid. Les sept femmes et cinq hommes chargés de déterminer le sort de l'accusé, Leslie Greenwood, un résident de la Nouvelle-Écosse de 45 ans, ont commencé à entendre le témoignage de Robert Simpson, un criminel notoire devenu témoin repent. Simpson, 53 ans, a déjà admis avoir commis les deux meurtres pour lesquels Greenwood est aussi accusé. Il a été condamné à la prison à vie, sans possibilité d'obtenir sa libération conditionnelle avant 25 ans. Les deux victimes, Kirk Murray et Antonio Onesi, ont été tuées le soir du 24 janvier 2010 dans le stationnement d'un restaurant McDonald's du quartier Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. Le Quotidien, 16; Le Journal de Montréal

 Les élections font jaser... jusqu'en prison

Lorsque Rick Sauvé rend visite à des prisonniers ces jours-ci, ils ont un nouveau sujet de conversation : les élections fédérales. Ils le bombardent de questions, lui demandant ce que disent les sondages ou qui, selon lui, a le plus de chances de gagner. « Ça leur permet de parler d'autre chose, affirme M. Sauvé. Parce que chaque jour est comme le jour de la marmotte, chaque jour se ressemble. Alors, quand un scrutin survient, ça attire leur attention. » Les détenus de toutes les prisons provinciales et fédérales pourront voter vendredi, soit 10 jours avant les élections, à des bureaux de vote spécialement installés dans les établissements carcéraux. La Presse Canadienne (Le Soleil, 8; Le Devoir)

 25-year stance on son's innocence impoverishes ex-Saanich parents

After 25 years, David and Elouise Lord still believe their only son, Derik, is innocent of a notorious double murder that gripped B.C. in 1990. It's an enduring faith that has led them here, to a rundown house on Yale Road in Chilliwack that the insurance company won't touch. The yard is overgrown, the shoddy stairs near collapse. Inside, the small rooms are full of clutter, including several large cabinets stuffed with papers and documents relating to Derik's case... The violent murders rank among B.C.'s most chilling and infuriating, in great part because Derik Lord continues to believe he was wrongfully convicted, despite a confession from Muir and a stack of compelling evidence. In 1992, Lord was sentenced to life in prison with no eligibility for parole for 10 years. It's where he has remained ever since. His claims of innocence have positioned him at odds with his two co-accused and bankrupted his fiercely loyal parents, who estimate they've spent $800,000 in legal bills over the years. His campaign has also ensured a regular flow of headlines over the past 10 years during which he's been eligible for parole - the latest hearing another unsuccessful, and emotionally charged, event this past March. By contrast, Muir, who at the time of the killings was a cherub-faced 16 year old, admitted his guilt and was granted full parole in 2003. He's lived a quiet life ever since. Huenemann, meanwhile, who was sentenced in 1991 to life in prison, became eligible for full parole this year. By his request, a parole hearing scheduled for this month was postponed until 2016, the Parole Board of Canada said. According to a newspaper report from 2003, he has also admitted to his role in the murders, after years of denial. It's believed he's in Quebec. Times Colonist, A2

* Cellulaires, drogue, armes et porno saisis en prison

Les agents correctionnels de la prison de Bordeaux viennent de faire un grand ménage dans l'aile abritant les Hells Angels et les gangs de rue, saisissant des téléphones cellulaires, des pics artisanaux, de la drogue et du matériel pornographique contenu dans des ordinateurs. La rafle menée jeudi dernier aurait permis d'identifier une demi-douzaine de membres et d'associés des Hells Angels parmi les détenus fautifs, a appris Le Journal. Arrêtés lors de plusieurs opérations policières menées ces dernières années, ces motards sont détenus de façon provisoire dans la prison centenaire de Montréal en attendant l'issue des procédures judiciaires intentées contre eux. Certains de ces accusés bénéficient exceptionnellement d'une permission de la cour pour avoir accès à un ordinateur portable en détention afin de pouvoir préparer leur défense. Le Journal de Montréal, 6

* New trial begins

A new trial has begun for a man previously convicted of beating his lover to death. Michael Pearce was found guilty of manslaughter in the 2007 bludgeoning death of 36-year-old Stuart Mark and sentenced in 2012 to seven years in prison. At trial, prosecutors alleged Pearce flew into a rage after learning Mark was HIV-positive and beat him with a golf club at Mark's Alfred Avenue home. Last year, the Manitoba Court of Appeal ordered a new trial in the case, ruling jurors were not adequately cautioned about the phenomenon of false confessions. Winnipeg Sun, 4

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Suspects versus sex crime survivors

A Halifax taxi driver accused of sexually assaulting a passenger is allowed back on the job. A bartender charged with aggravated sexual assault can keep mixing drinks at a downtown bar. A university student charged with sexual assault after a frosh week incident continues attending classes on campus - until a second victim comes forward. The three cases pit the competing need to protect public safety and the survivors of sexual assault against one of the most sacred legal tenets: The presumption of innocence. "It's a difficult balance," Dalhousie University law professor Wayne MacKay said. "On one hand, you have the rights of the larger society and victims within that society to have a safe environment. On the other hand, you have to protect the important rights of the accused, including presumed innocence and the right to a fair trial." In each case, however, respecting the rights of the accused appears to be held in higher regard than the potential risk to public safety and women's sense of security. Yet MacKay, the Yogis & Keddy Chair in Human Rights Law, said there is an increasing shift toward survivors' rights. "It's a bit of a newer focus and one that has generated some political and policy heat. The current government has taken more of a stand in protecting victims." The Conservatives' proposed victims' bill of rights, for example, has generated support but has also faced criticism from more traditional legal academics, MacKay said. The Chronicle-Herald, A1

 Chief defends crime comments

Linking rising city crime rates to the tumbling price of oil and resulting job losses is just a general observation, says Acting Chief Brian Simpson, defending comments from Edmonton's top cop. Simpson made the point Monday after Wood Buffalo Mayor Melissa Blake slammed comments made last week by Edmonton police Chief Rod Knecht as "derogatory" towards oil field workers from northern Alberta. Knecht said displaced workers from Fort McMurray and Cold Lake gravitate to Edmonton after job losses and he pointed to low oil prices as a reason for Edmonton's sharp increase in property and violent crime. Edmonton police saw a 12% increase in violence and an 18% increase in property crime this year over last. "When oil is up we're busy, and when oil is down we're really busy," said Knecht. Calgary Sun, 20

 Sisters in spirit 'Come together for a peaceful vigil and prayer ceremony'

"I'll bet you and I would be treated very differently if we walked into a grocery store," says Josie Nepinak. "I might be followed around. I'd likely not receive the same courtesy as you would." Nepinak and I are women in the middle age of life, both well dressed and both educated with rewarding careers. It's the colour of our skin, she says, that changes everything. "I still hear, 'I hate you Indians,' sometimes at a bus stop." It's one other, even bigger difference between us that stands out when we make our acquaintance Monday morning on the steps of Calgary's City Hall. "I had an aunt back in 1978 who was murdered and her killer has never been found," she says matter-of-factly of tragedy hitting so close to home. "And I have a cousin who in 2012 was murdered by serial killer Sean Lamb in Winnipeg." As the executive director of Calgary's Awo Taan Healing Lodge Society, the only aboriginal women's shelter in Alberta, Nepinak has spent the past 25 years promoting health and wellness for First Nations women and their families. Once a year, though, her sole focus is on the more than 1,200 murdered and missing aboriginal women in Canada over the past three decades. Calgary Herald, A6

 Police department tries to clarify link between rising crime, oil price

Edmonton's police force tried to clarify Monday comments its chief made last week that out-of-work oilpatch workers could be to blame for the city's recent rise in crime. On the weekend, the Edmonton Police Service released tables and charts that it said shows monthly crime statistics in Edmonton climbing over the past 12 months as oil prices dropped to record lows. On Monday, deputy chief Brian Simpson spoke to reporters on the steps of police headquarters. "It's not linked to oil prices," he said. "It's linked to the change in the economy that we experience in Alberta. This has been an Alberta experience for a long time." Red Deer Advocate, A5

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRE

Long-awaited inquest into young aboriginal deaths starts

A long-awaited inquest into the deaths of seven aboriginal youths who moved from their remote reserves in northern Ontario to go to high school in Thunder Bay, Ont., opened Monday following a sunrise ceremony. In an opening statement to the jury, presiding coroner Dr. David Eden warned of a difficult road ahead. "We are starting on a long pathway," Eden said. "During that time as we go through this pathway, there will be differences. It's our job to manage those differences with wisdom, not with anger." The inquest, expected to last until next spring and hear from about 200 witnesses - some will testify more than once - is probing the deaths of Jethro Anderson, 15, Curran Strang, 18, Robyn Harper, 19, Paul Panacheese, 21, Reggie Bushie, 15, Kyle Morrisseau, 17 and Jordan Wabasse, also 15. All died between 2000 and 2011 while, as Eden put it, trying to advance their lives and the well-being of their communities through education. Canadian Press (Red Deer Advocate, A6; Kingston Whig Standard, Waterloo Region Record, Hamilton Spectator); Toronto Star; * Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun, B2, StarPhoenix, C8, Calgary Herald, B2, Ottawa Citizen, C1/Front, Leader-Post, B5, Edmonton Journal, N3, Gazette, A11)

INTERNATIONAL

 Snowden seeks return to U.S

Edward Snowden says he has offered to return to the United States and go to jail for leaking details of National Security Agency programs to intercept electronic communications data on a vast scale. The former NSA contractor flew to Moscow two years ago after revealing information about the previously secret eavesdropping powers, and faces U.S. charges that could land him in prison for up to 30 years. Snowden told the BBC that he'd "volunteered to go to prison with the government many times," but had not received a formal plea-deal offer. Earlier this year, former U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder said a plea deal with Snowden was a possibility. Associated Press (Times Colonist, B7; Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Edmonton Sun, Waterloo Region Record, Globe and Mail, Times and Transcript)

Ship sinks near Bahamas

The captain of the 790-foot El Faro planned to bypass hurricane Joaquin, but some kind of mechanical failure left the U.S. container ship with 33 people aboard helplessly - and tragically - adrift in the path of the powerful storm, the vessel's owners say. On Monday, four days after the ship vanished, the U.S. Coast Guard concluded it sank near the Bahamas in about 15,000 feet of water. One unidentified body in a survival suit was spotted, and the search went on for any trace of the other crew members. The ship, carrying cars and other products, had 28 crew members from the U.S. and five from Poland. Associated Press (Times Colonist, B7)

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
November 10, 2015 / le 10 novembre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

 Politics This Morning: Ad hoc Cabinet committee on refugees meets today

The Liberal government's announcement that it created an ad hoc committee on refugees to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of this year is "short on details" and doesn't show a concrete plan to deliver on the campaign commitment, says the NDP. "We are glad that the government remains committed to resettling 25,000 Syrian refugees by year's end. We support this goal. But today's announcement was short on details and we believe Canadians were looking for a concrete plan for getting vulnerable refugees out of harm's way, not hearing about new Cabinet subcommittees," NDP MP Jenny Kwan told The Hill Times in a statement. "This is the new government's first test on delivering the change they promised to Canadians—we hope that the next announcement, on how they will achieve this goal, is coming very soon." The committee, which will hold its first meeting today, is chaired by Health Minister Jane Philpott and has eight other members. They include: Canadian Heritage Minister Mélanie Joly who will be the vice-chair, Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Ralph Goodale, Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion, Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Minister John McCallum, Treasury Board President Scott Brison, International Development and La Francophonie Minister Marie-Claude Bibeau, Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan and Democratic Institutions Minister Maryam Monsef. HillTimes

Des réfugiés pourraient loger dans des bases militaire

Des réfugiés pourraient être accueillis dans des bases militaires canadiennes, a confirmé hier le nouveau ministre de l'Immigration, John McCallum. Le Parti libéral du Canada a promis en campagne électorale d'accueillir 25 000 nouveaux réfugiés d'ici la fin de cette année. M. McCallum a annoncé la création d'un sous-comité d'une demi-douzaine de ministres qui auront le mandat de coordonner cette tâche. La ministre de la Santé Jane Philpott présidera ce comité, qui inclura aussi la ministre du Patrimoine Mélanie Joly, le ministre de la Sécurité publique Ralph Goodale et la ministre des Institutions démocratiques Maryam Monsef, elle-même admise au Canada en tant que réfugiée provenant de l'Afghanistan. Le ministre de la Défense, celui des Affaires étrangères et celle du Développement international seront aussi impliqués. LaPresse

Bibeau nommée au comité special

Quelques jours après avoir été nommée ministre, la nouvelle députée de Compton-Stanstead, Marie-Claude Bibeau, voit son nom associé à un dossier chaud du nouveau gouvernement de Justin Trudeau. Le ministre de l'Immigration, des Réfugiés et de la Citoyenneté, John McCallum, a annoncé la création d'un comité spécial chargé d'aider à faire venir 25 000 réfugiés syriens au Canada. La ministre du Développement international et de la Francophonie fait partie du groupe. Ottawa n'est pas encore en mesure de préciser quand les premiers réfugiés syriens fouleront le sol canadien, mais ce comité spécial a été mis sur pied pour préparer le terrain. M. McCallum reconnaît que le temps presse pour le gouvernement fédéral, qui a promis d'accueillir 25 000 réfugiés syriens au Canada d'ici la fin de l'année, mais il dit ne pas vouloir rater son coup. En conférence de presse dans le foyer des Communes, lundi, il a annoncé la création d'un comité composé de neuf ministres qui aura le mandat de donner suite à cet engagement. Le comité sera présidé par la ministre de la Santé, Jane Philpott, qui sera notamment épaulée par son collègue aux Affaires étrangères, Stéphane Dion, à la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, ainsi que la ministre du Patrimoine canadien, Mélanie Joly. La Presse Canadienne (LeDevoir, LaTribune); LaPresse; LeDevoir

Military aircraft, bases may be tapped for refugees

The federal government is considering using ships and commercial and military aircraft to transport 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of December. At a news conference Monday, Citizenship and Immigration Minister John McCallum also said the Liberal government might lodge the refugees at military bases upon their arrival. The emphasis is being put on two factors: security screening and the health of the refugees. To that end, the government has established an ad hoc cabinet committee to ensure the Liberals make good on their election pledge. The nine-member committee, which will hold its first meeting Tuesday, is chaired by Health Minister Jane Philpott, who has previously worked with refugees in Africa. Others include: McCallum; Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion; Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale; Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan; Treasury Board President Scott Brison; Canadian Heritage Minister Mélanie Joly; International Development Minister Marie-Claude Bibeau; and Democratic Institutions Minister Maryam Monsef, herself a refugee originally from Afghanistan. The government also appointed a senior bureaucrat to provide greater focus. Malcolm Brown, the deputy minister for International Development, becomes special adviser to the Clerk of the Privy Council Office on the "Syrian Refugee Initiative." He is a former executive vice-president of the Canada Border Services Agency with experience in several departments. Postmedia News (Leader-Post, B8, Vancouver Sun, StarPhoenix, Ottawa Citizen, Calgary Herald)

25,000 refugees are coming, one way or another

They might come by military transport, on chartered flights or warships; from Jordan, Turkey or Lebanon; to army bases or the homes of generous Canadians. When it comes to fulfilling the government's commitment of bringing 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada over the next eight weeks, "all options are on the table," said John McCallum, Canada's new Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship, during his first news conference since taking over the cabinet post from Chris Alexander. "Whatever works, whatever is cost effective, whatever will get them here safely and quickly. So yes, we're looking at the possibility of commercial airlines. We're looking at the possibility of the air force. We're looking at the possibility of ships. All of these things are being considered as we speak, and all will be used to the extent that they are needed to get the job done." It will be up to a new Ad Hoc Committee on Refugees, chaired by Health Minister Jane Philpott, to figure out how. (...) She will be joined by seven other high-profile ministers, including veteran politicians Ralph Goodale (public safety minister) and Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion, as well as the Minister of Democratic Institutions Maryam Monsef - whose own life in Canada began as a refugee from Afghanistan - and Defense Minister Harjit Singh Sajjan. Gazette

Réfugiés syriens

Le gouvernement fédéral n'est pas encore en mesure de préciser la date à laquelle les premiers réfugiés syriens attendus d'ici la fin de l'année fouleront le sol canadien, mais il a mis sur pied un comité spécial afin de préparer le terrain. Le ministre de l'Immigration, des Réfugiés et de la Citoyenneté, John McCallum, reconnaît que le temps presse pour le gouvernement, qui a promis d'accueillir 25 000 réfugiés syriens au Canada d'ici le 31 décembre. Mais Ottawa ne doit surtout pas rater son coup. «Oui, on veut le faire vite, mais en même temps, on veut le faire d'une façon correcte en termes de considérations de sécurité et de santé», a plaidé le ministre McCallum en conférence de presse au parlement, lundi. Pour atteindre l'ambitieux objectif que s'est fixé le chef libéral Justin Trudeau pendant la campagne électorale, un comité spécial composé de neuf ministres a été créé. Une première réunion de ce comité interministériel doit avoir lieu dès mardi. (...) Le ministre a également signalé que le gouvernement avait l'intention de rétablir dans son intégralité le Programme fédéral de santé intérimaire (PFSI), qui offre une protection en matière de soins de santé limitée et temporaire aux réfugiés et aux demandeurs d'asile. Le comité dont la formation a été annoncée lundi sera présidé par la ministre de la Santé, Jane Philpott. La coprésidence a été confiée à la ministre du Patrimoine canadien, Mélanie Joly. Elles seront notamment épaulées par leurs collègues aux Affaires étrangères, Stéphane Dion, à la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, au Développement international, Marie-Claude Bibeau, ainsi que par la ministre des Institutions démocratiques, Maryam Monsef, une réfugiée afghane. La Presse Canadienne (Acadie Nouvelle, 16, Voix de l'Est, Soleil, Voix de l'Est)

 Un comité spécial créé pour accueillir 25 000 réfugiés syriens

Le gouvernement Trudeau mobilise plusieurs ministres pour lui permettre d'atteindre son objectif d'accueillir 25 000 réfugiés syriens avant la fin de l'année. Le ministre de l'Immigration, des Réfugiés et de la Citoyenneté, John McCallum, a annoncé hier la création d'un comité spécial composé de neuf membres du cabinet qui se réuniront à compter d'aujourd'hui pour mettre l'épaule à la roue.

Si l'objectif d'accueillir 25 000 réfugiés en moins de deux mois tient toujours la route, M. McCallum a insisté pour dire que cet engagement électoral de Justin Trudeau devait se réaliser sans compromettre pour autant la santé et la sécurité. (...) Le comité ministériel sera présidé par Jane Philpott à la Santé, secondée par Mélanie Joly, à la tête du portefeuille de Patrimoine canadien. Outre M. McCallum, les ministres de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, des Affaires étrangères, Stéphane Dion, du Conseil du Trésor, Scott Brison, du Développement international, Marie-Claude Bibeau, de la Défense nationale, Harjit Singh Sajjan, et des Institutions démocratiques, Maryam Monsef, elle-même une réfugiée afghane, font partie du comité. JournaldeQuebec

 Trudeau's Cabinet: The essential breakdown of roles and priorities

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau unveiled his Cabinet last week, with 30 members in addition to himself, 15 men and 15 women. In the process, several changes were made to the machinery of government, giving some departments new titles and transferring responsibilities for some agencies. Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Ralph Goodale (Regina-Wascana, Sask.) The File: Mr. Goodale's most high-profile responsibility will be reforming the anti-terrorism law, Bill C-51, introduced by the last government. He is also next in line to take over Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's duties if needed. The Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness deputy minister is François Guimont, and the department has a $1.2-billion budget for 2015-16, according to the Main Estimates. Cabinet Committees: Chair of Canada in the World and Public Security; vice-chair of the subcommittee on Canada-United States Relations. Member of Agenda and Results; Intelligence and Emergency Management; and Open and Transparent Government. Background: Mr. Goodale was first elected as an MP in 1974, at the age of 24. He was then the Saskatchewan Liberal leader before coming back to the Hill in 1993. He's held several high-profile Cabinet positions. Hilltimes

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Le déversement est autorisé

La Ville de Montréal ira «rapidement» de l'avant avec le déversement de 8 milliards de litres d'eaux usées dans le fleuve Saint-Laurent tout en respectant les conditions ordonnées par la nouvelle ministre de l'Environnement, a annoncé hier le maire Denis Coderre. Selon toute vraisemblance, le rejet aura lieu cette semaine. La date sera annoncée ce matin. «C'est réglé, il va y avoir déversement», a déclaré hier soir M. Coderre lors d'un point de presse à l'hôtel de ville. Une heure auparavant, en conférence téléphonique depuis Paris, la nouvelle ministre de l'Environnement Catherine McKenna a déclaré que le déversement pourrait se faire «dès ce matin», si la Ville acceptait quatre conditions. Elle demande notamment à la Ville d'effectuer une surveillance visuelle des panaches de l'effluent, de mettre sur pied un plan d'urgence pour gérer les rejets imprévus des industries durant la période de travaux et de fournir jusqu'en juin 2016 à Environnement Canada des données qui mesurent la qualité de l'eau du fleuve. La Presse, A2/FRONT (Le Quotidien, La Nouvelliste, Le Soleil); Globe and Mail, A4

 Encore beaucoup de travail à faire

Même si on vient d'annoncer à Lac-Mégantic que la décontamination est terminée, plus de 27 mois après la tragédie ferroviaire de juillet 2013, il ne faudrait pas croire que le travail du ministère du Développement durable, de l'Environnement et de la Lutte aux changements climatiques (DDELCC) est fini pour autant. Selon Paul Benoît, gestionnaire responsable des activités de nature environnementale associées à la réhabilitation du centre-ville de Lac-Mégantic, un plan de décontamination et une nouvelle planification adoptée au début de 2015 vaudraient sûrement qu'on rende public un certain rapport à saveur de bilan avec certaines statistiques sur l'ampleur des travaux réalisés. «Plusieurs étapes sont terminées, mais le rapport n'est pas encore disponible, cela devrait venir à la fin de 2015 ou au début de 2016. Tous les sols du centre-ville contaminés par le déversement causé par la MMA ont été excavés et remplacés par des sols propres, venant de l'extérieur. Cette opération s'est terminée en octobre», décrit Paul Benoît. La Tribune, 23

 Crews work to clear tracks after 2 train derailments, oil and chemical spills in Wisconsin

Crews worked Monday to clear freight cars from rail tracks and contain spilled crude oil and chemicals after two trains derailed in Wisconsin about 200 miles apart over the weekend. More than a dozen cars of a Canadian Pacific Railway train loaded with crude oil jumped the tracks in Watertown on Sunday afternoon, puncturing one car that spilled hundreds of gallons of its load and caused the evacuation of a neighbourhood in the small southern Wisconsin city. Residents who evacuated dozens of homes were still being kept away Monday as 12 derailed cars were moved to a temporary track. Thirteen of the train's 110 cars derailed, and 109 of them were carrying crude oil, officials said. Crews were dismantling and removing the car that was punctured, Canadian Pacific spokesman Andrew Cummings said, adding that it spilled no more than 1,000 gallons. The railroad said the leaking car was sealed, the oil contained and siphoned off, and that none of the product reached any waterways. Associated Press (Cape Breton Post)

 Divers continue to investigate sunken barge

Lake Erie divers surveying the sunken wreck of the barge Argo last week were sent to hospital after a sudden leak released an unknown substance. U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Thomas McKenzie said the divers were sent to hospital as a precaution but all have been released. "They were fine and they've already left the hospital," McKenzie said. Crews were conducting a "survey" of the vessel - what McKenzie described as a rinse off of the barge - when "a rivet popped or a pinhole leak opened up and they realized there was some discharge." The leak was sealed before the divers surfaced. Crews were preparing to dive again Monday to get a sample of the solvent-like material, thought to be the petroleum distillate benzol. The Argo was carrying 4,800 barrels of crude oil when it sank during a storm in 1937 in U.S. waters approximately 12 miles northeast of Sandusky, Ohio. It now sits 44 feet below the surface with silt and bottom sand building up around its sides. Windsor Star, A6

*Two very lucky backcountry travellers' after avalanche near Rogers Pass

Two people had a near-miss in a big avalanche near Rogers Pass on the weekend, kicking off this year's season in earnest. Around 2:35 p.m. Sunday, officials with Parks Canada said they received a report of a Size 3 avalanche - enough to bury a car, damage a truck, destroy a house or break trees - on the upper part of Bruins Ridge. "It was a good-sized avalanche," said Percy Woods, a visitor safety technician with Glacier National Park. "We have two very lucky backcountry travellers." It's one of the first avalanches of the season where people got caught. A second one happened Saturday in Kootenay National Park, where five climbers on Mount Stanley were caught and carried 60 metres downslope. They were able to extricate themselves and walk away unharmed, according to Parks Mountain Safety in a Facebook post. The avalanches have prompted a reminder from officials to be prepared when heading into the backcountry. Calgary Herald

 Families should have 72 hours of supplies on hand in case of an emergency

This time of year, I always think about being prepared for an unexpected emergency situation in my home. In the Maritimes, we are lucky that we are naturally immune to some of the terrifying weather systems that occur in other parts of the world. There are, however, certain situations that we should be ready for at any given time. When I think about recent events that have given me cause to check my emergency preparedness kit, I think about autumn hurricanes, severe winter snow storms and a 15-minute evacuation order. You can't possibly be prepared for every scenario, but you can put together a very helpful kit for you and your family if you were trapped in your home without services for 72 hours or hear the knock on the door from EMO or the police ordering you to leave your home in 15 minutes. Chronicle-Herald

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

RCMP to honour Hill terror heroes

The RCMP will give awards to 20 Mounties and former House of Commons security officers in recognition of their bravery when a gunman stormed Parliament Hill last year. The national police force will make the presentations during a private Nov. 23 ceremony at RCMP headquarters. The RCMP said the awards are intended to recognize the online post. 1.866.977.2737 "bravery, dedication and quick thinking" of those who were directly involved in the events of Oct. 22, 2014. On that day, Michael Zehaf Bibeau fatally shot honour guard Cpl. Nathan Cirillo at the National War Memorial before rushing into Parliament's Hall of Honour, where he was killed in a flurry of bullets. Former House of Commons sergeant-at-arms Kevin Vickers, now Canada's ambassador to Ireland, was lauded for his role in subduing Zehaf Bibeau, but there has been no formal recognition of others. The RCMP was responsible for the grounds of the parliamentary precinct during the attack, while House of Commons and Senate security forces had jurisdiction inside the Parliament buildings. A now-merged parliamentary protective service manages day-to-day security on Parliament Hill, a direct consequence of Oct. 22 intended to avoid confusion. Times Colonist, A8 (Kingston Whig-Standard, London Free Press, Chronicle Herald); * Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A8); * Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, 18)

 Whistleblower to deliver address for Queen's

A man some people consider a hero and others believe is a criminal is to present the opening address at a Queen's University conference later this week. Edward Snowden, 32, the former Central Intelligence Agency employee and United States government contractor who leaked thousands of classified documents that revealed the extent of global surveillance programs operated by the U.S. and its English-speaking allies, is to present the opening keynote speech at the Queen's International Affairs Association's Model United Nations Invitational on Thursday. (...) Bill C-51, the Anti-terrorism Act 2015, broadened the authority of Canada's surveillance and law enforcement agencies by giving them more power to thwart suspected terrorist plots - not just gather information about them. Kingston Whig-Standard, A3

 It's your military, Mr. Sajjan. What do you want it to do?

Just a week into his government, Prime Minister Trudeau has made some bold moves. His fresh, balanced cabinet and his stated intent to bring collaboration back to the business of government policy-making is being welcomed with enthusiasm by a lot of Canadians. Every one of these new cabinet ministers faces a massive workload - none more than the new minister of Defence, Harjit Sajjan. (...) Key governmental departments, including DFATD, Public Safety Canada and DND, should collaborate quickly to help the government formulate a defence White Paper outlining a new national security strategy. Once that's done, Mr. Sajjan and his team can start the work of drafting a national military strategy that would allow civilian and military leaders within DND to plan and execute their operational and institutional responsibilities more efficiently and effectively. iPolitics; Canadian Press (National Post, A5, Star Phoenix, Calgary Herald)

Brandon boy, 16, faces terrorism-related charge

A 16-year-old boy in Brandon, Man., faces a terrorism charge for allegedly using social media to express support for the Islamic militant group ISIS. The teen has also been charged with one count of possessing child pornography. He appeared in court in Brandon on Monday, but the case was adjourned until Thursday because he had not secured legal counsel, said Manitoba's chief federal prosecutor Ian Mahon. The boy, who cannot be named under the Youth Criminal Justice Act, remains in custody. Mahon said he expects a bail application to be heard on Thursday. Not much is known about the boy. Brandon residents told CBC News he grew up in the western Manitoba city and is attending high school there. Mahon said items have been seized from the teen's home, including a computer that is closely being looked at. The matter remains under investigation. Another Manitoban, Aaron Driver, was arrested in Winnipeg in June after he openly supported ISIS on Twitter. Although Driver is not accused of any crime, the RCMP is seeking to have his current bail conditions extended for a longer term, based on the suspicion that he might help or engage in terrorist activities. He appeared in court last week to fight the Mounties' attempts to limit his freedoms. Mahon, who is also the federal prosecutor in that case, had said the restrictions are "not punitive" but reasonable for public safety. CBC News (2015-11-09)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

 Tim Hortons loses bid to turf rights complaint

A Canadian coffee giant and franchisee have lost their bid to toss out a human-rights complaint lodged by Mexican workers in northeastern British Columbia. Edxon Chein, Eric Dessens, Rodolfo Lara and Ruben Ramirez were all hired under the Temporary Foreign Worker Program to work in a Tim Hortons franchise in Dawson Creek in 2012. The workers filed a complaint with the B.C. Human Rights Tribunal against Tim Hortons Inc., TDL Group Corp., a subsidiary that oversees restaurant operations, and franchise operator Tony Van Den Bosch. They allege they had to endure inferior working conditions, racist and derogatory comments and sub-standard living conditions owned by the franchise operator. A lawyer for Tim Hortons argued before the tribunal that the company wasn't connected to the issues raised in the complaint and that Van Den Bosch operates as independent contractor. The tribunal didn't make a final decision, but ruled against the application to dismiss the case, ordered it to go to a hearing and urged the parties to seek mediation. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, A6)

Bakery owner could face jail for weapon stash

Crown prosecution argued for as much as two years behind bars while defence counsel contended a conditional sentence order is appropriate during a hearing Monday for a Prince George man who was at the centre of a massive haul of guns and bullets from his home slightly more than two years ago. Much of the hearing, held in Prince George provincial court, was spent itemizing the weapons RCMP seized from his Prospect Point home and matching them to each of the six charges Karl Heinz Haus, 55, pleaded guilty to from the September 2013 incident. It began when Canada Border Services Agency officers intercepted two packages that originated in Germany and destined for Haus's home address. They contained components used to convert an M-16 assault rifle into a fully automatic weapon. The information was passed onto the RCMP federal serious and organized crime unit and after the parts were determined to be prohibited, investigators secured a search warrant for the home. Prince George Citizen (2015-11-09)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Europe declaws Iran's 'rocket kitten' hackers

European authorities have taken action to take down a cyber espionage campaign believed to be linked to Iran's powerful Revolutionary Guard, the first operation of its kind since Tehran signed a nuclear treaty, researchers say. The hacker group - dubbed "Rocket Kitten" by security experts who have been hunting the hacker group since early 2014 - has mounted cyberattacks on high-profile political and military figures globally since that time, according to researchers from several cyber security firms who have monitored its activities. The action could hamper Tehran's efforts to gather sensitive intelligence from rivals including Saudi Arabia, Israel, Turkey, the United States. Reuters (Toronto Sun, A46; Edmonton Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun)

Parsing the risks in cyber insurance

When an insurance company sells protection against a house fire or car accident, it leans on decades of data from past experience to price policies. For every 1,000 houses you insure you have a rough idea how many will burn. That basic yet key ingredient is all but missing in the growing business of cyber insurance, in which business is booming as the list of hacking incidents from Target to Ashley Madison grows. Add to the mix the ever-changing nature of hacks and different levels of security sophistication among companies, and the challenges mount alongside the opportunities. "There are many unknowns," said Nick Galletto, cyber risk services leader for the Americas at Deloitte. Hacks such as the one that hit adultery website Ashley Madison can give an idea of the cost of the fallout of such an event. But that doesn't come close to providing the depth of data insurers use to create and measure the underwriting standards when they sell protection against house fires, break-ins and car accidents. Financial Post, FP3

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Dieppe Mountie gets major Interpol post

A New Brunswick Mountie and former commanding officer of the Codiac Regional RCMP has been elected Interpol's vice-president for the Americas. Todd Shean, who was born and raised in Dieppe, is currently an assistant commissioner and officer in charge of the RCMP's Federal Policing Special Services. This new position will be part of his regular duties with the RCMP. He was elected to Interpol's 13-member executive committee during the 84th Interpol General Assembly, which took place last week in Kigali, Rwanda. He is now one of three vice-presidents of the organization. Created in 1923, Interpol is the world's largest international police organization, with 190 member countries. In 1949, Canada became a member of Interpol and the RCMP was delegated the responsibility for administering and operating Canada's National Central Bureau, known as Interpol Ottawa. The bureau works with other countries through international criminal databases, the exchange of timely and accurate information and the coordination of international requests for assistance. Reached in Berlin, where he was attending the G7 summit on Monday, Shean said he plans to improve policing partnerships to advance Interpol's operational priorities. "We know that crime and all that goes with it is increasingly international," he said, emphasizing that it is more important than ever for law enforcement agencies to cooperate, corroborate and share information and best practices. Shean's 29-year career in law enforcement has included operational and leadership positions in tackling organized crime and financial crime, as well as in criminal intelligence and international policing. From 2005 to 2008, he led the Codiac Regional RCMP. At Codiac, he established a street crime unit, dedicated traffic section and other specialist officers in areas such as domestic violence. During that time, Metro Moncton had one of the lowest crime rates in the country. In 2008, Codiac had the best "clearance rate" among police forces in Canada for resolving serious crimes. Leading one of the largest RCMP detachments in the country, policing a bilingual city that is a microcosm of Canada, and providing services to three different municipalities were all good training, Shean said. "Codiac brings a number of different challenges. It really helps you prepare for other challenges." Shean has also held posts in British Columbia and Florenceville. Since leaving Codiac, he has gone back and forth between Ottawa and Fredericton. His base will continue to be in Ottawa, but he maintains a home in Dieppe. "I'm a Maritimer. All my ties are there. I'll be back." Times & Transcript, A1

'Our country benefits to this day'

Sgt. Gil Boone proudly participates in local Remembrance Day ceremonies each year with other members of the Cape Breton Regional Police Service. He is among 22 members of the Cape Breton Regional Police Service who have participated in 24 peacekeeping missions in places like Kosovo, Sierra Leone, Jordan and Afghanistan. Each Nov. 11, he is reminded of his own time overseas, but says his service hardly compares to what others have gone through... He said it reminded him of the quality of life back in Canada and the veterans who fought in wars to make sure that was possible. "The men and women that went over and fought for us, they did so much for us, and our country benefits from it to this day. People just don't seem to realize that." That's why he marches each year in a Remembrance Day parade. This year, he'll take part in commemorations on the Northside. The RCMP manages the deployment of Canadian police on peacekeeping missions, including planning and evaluating, selecting and training personnel and providing support throughout deployment. Cape Breton Post, A3/Front

Remembrance Day ceremonies planned throughout region

Communities across southeastern New Brunswick will join Canadians across the country in pausing to remember those who have served the nation in uniform and those who made the ultimate sacrifice doing so. Here's a look at some of the main Remembrance Day ceremonies around our region. Moncton: Thousands will gather at the Moncton Coliseum for the largest ceremony in our region, organized by the Royal Canadian Legion Branch Number 6. The ceremony runs from 10:30 a.m. to noon, with a special Lest We Forget display open after the ceremony in the adjacent Agrena complex. As well, the Sunny Brae Legion will host a parade that will leave the legion, 164 Broadway St., at 10:40 a.m. and end at the cenotaph on Massey Avenue. If it rains, the ceremony moves to the Knights of Columbus Hall on Broadway. There is also the annual informal ceremony at the Victoria Park cenotaph - including veterans and anyone who has served as a police officer, firefighter or in the military - that will be held at 11 a.m. Dieppe: The City of Dieppe, in collaboration with the Dieppe Military Veterans Association, will be holding a ceremony on Wednesday, November 11, at École Anna-Malenfant to commemorate Remembrance Day. The parade, made up of veterans, cadets and members of the RCMP, will form up around 10:30 a.m. and will make its way indoors for the ceremony. Times & Transcript, A3

 Troubled veterans lacking necessary support: critics

It was chilly March day when former master corporal Collin Fitzgerald - one of the country's most highly decorated Afghan war veterans - decided that the way he wanted to go out was in a spray of police bullets. It was, he believed at the time, the only thing he could do to wash away the pain of his crumbling marriage and to erase from his mind the faces of dead Taliban fighters that haunted him each night, every time he closed his eyes. "I was done with life and everything," Fitzgerald told The Canadian Press. "And I cannot truly say to you what that feels like, but is a very hollow, shallow, cold place to be." He tried everything. Nothing worked. "Therapy. The alcohol had run its course, the (prescription) drugs had run their courses; I was done," he said. "You just want the pain to be done. I get it." But the fact he found the strength to go on living for his daughter, and to eventually face justice after holding police at bay for five hours at his home in Iroquois, Ont., south of Ottawa, was just the start of his nightmare. Fitzgerald soon encountered another chilling reality: that Canada's justice system often treats troubled veterans as threats to public safety. After an eight-month investigation, The Canadian Press has found that the federal government allowed key findings in the tragic shooting death of another troubled veteran with severe post traumatic stress disorder to gather dust. The B.C. coroner's office investigated the September 2012 RCMP killing of retired corporal Gregory Matters and made several recommendations to both National Defence and Veterans Affairs, including making mental-health professionals available to police emergency response teams who deal with troubled veterans. Letters obtained by CP, dated from the summer of 2014 and addressed to the coroner, show that both federal departments believe they are doing enough to reach and treat troubled military members. Canadian Press (Record, A3, Spectator, Times & Transcript, Daily Gleaner)

 RCMP stymied in probe of Parliament Hill shooter's Winchester rifle

The RCMP believes it has "come to a dead end" in its probe of where Parliament Hill shooter Michael Zehaf Bibeau got his gun one of the most vexing questions about the events of Oct. 22, 2014. The Mounties continue to investigate several threads of what happened that day, including whether Zehaf Bibeau had accomplices, but have not gathered evidence sufficient for criminal charges. A source with direct knowledge of the police investigation provided the update to The Canadian Press on condition of anonymity due to the ongoing sensitivity of the file. On Wednesday, crowds will gather for Remembrance Day ceremonies at the National War Memorial, where Zehaf Bibeau killed honour guard Cpl. Nathan Cirillo, shooting him in the back three times with a .30-30 Winchester rifle. The attacker quickly made his way up Parliament Hill and into the Centre Block before being gunned down in the Hall of Honour, not far from then-prime minister Stephen Harper and countless MPs. The RCMP will honour 20 Mounties and former House of Commons security officers later this month in recognition of their bravery during the violent episode. Shortly before his attack, the gunman made a video in which he cites retaliation for Canada's military involvement in Afghanistan and Iraq as his motivation. Zehaf Bibeau, 32, plainly speaks of assaulting soldiers to show Canadians "that you're not even safe in your own land, and you gotta be careful." RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson told a Commons committee in March that the Mounties considered Zehaf Bibeau a terrorist, and that he would have been charged with terrorism offences under the Criminal Code had he lived. Guardian (Prince Albert Daily Herald, Western Star, Telegram, Mississauga News, Brandon Sun); CTV News; Globe and Mail

 Help sought in shooting probe - Investigative unit seeks witnesses to Friday's events

The province's team of independent investigators is looking for witnesses as it probes a police shooting that killed a Winnipeg man Friday. Mark DiCesare, 24, died after being shot by officers near Kapyong Barracks following a police chase through River Heights around 1:15 p.m. Friday. DiCesare had been upset over a recent breakup with his girlfriend, a source told the Free Press. Whether DiCesare was armed as he led police on a chase Friday is part of the Independent Investigation Unit of Manitoba's probe, said executive director Zane Tessler... The unit is currently investigating several other cases, including the recent police shooting of 44-year-old Haki Sefa Sept. 20, the case of a stolen RCMP gun being used in a gang-related shooting that injured a teenage girl Oct. 24 and the apparent suicide of a murder suspect who shot himself after police tried to pull him over Nov. 2. Winnipeg Free Press, B1

 Arbitration gets the boot - Carstairs backs away from option to resolve expense-claim dispute

A former Manitoba senator has changed her mind about using binding arbitration to resolve her Senate expense-claim issues and will likely now face legal action. Sharon Carstairs, who left the Senate in October 2011, is one of 30 senators who were identified in June by the auditor general as having made what were deemed to be ineligible expense claims. Senators were given the option to repay the amount owing or go to binding arbitration with former Supreme Court Justice Ian Binnie. Those who don't repay and don't go to arbitration will be pursued in court... Former Liberal senators Rose-Marie Losier-Cool and Bill Rompkey and Conservatives Gerry St. Germain and Don Oliver also initially requested binding arbitration but have since rescinded that request. There are seven senators who still owe money from the audit who haven't sought binding arbitration, including former Manitoba Liberal senator Rod Zimmer, whose outstanding amount of $176,014 was the highest total for any of the senators identified in the audit. Zimmer's claims were related to his secondary residence as well as travel the auditor said didn't appear to be for Senate business, contracts without proper documentation, as well as gifts and taxi rides for Zimmer and his spouse in Ottawa for personal activities. All seven are among the nine whose files were referred to the RCMP to see if any criminal laws were broken. None of those senators has been charged. Winnipeg Free Press, A3

 Un Néo-Brunswickois soupçonné d'agressions sexuelles

Un homme âgé de 61 ans du Nouveau-Brunswick, Jean-Marie Rodrigue, doit faire face à la justice pour des agressions sexuelles graves qui auraient été commises il y a quelques années au Québec. Les faits qui lui sont reprochés seraient survenus entre 1985 et 1998 en Beauce et en Montérégie. Le Service d'enquêtes régionales de la Sûreté du Québec (SQ), avec la collaboration de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), a procédé à l'arrestation du suspect samedi à sa résidence au Nouveau-Brunswick. L'Acadie Nouvelle a contacté la SQ pour savoir à quel endroit avait eu lieu l'arrestation, mais un agent nous a répondu que cette information «n'est pas disponible». Jean-Marie Rodrigue doit comparaître à Saint-Joseph-de-Beauce relativement à ces accusations d'agressions sexuelles. L'enquête de la Sûreté du Québec tend à démontrer qu'il pourrait avoir fait d'autres victimes. Selon la sergente aux communications de la SQ, Ann Mathieu, le suspect connaissait les personnes avec lesquelles il aurait posé ces gestes à caractère sexuel. La Presse Canadienne (Acadie Nouvelle, 7)

Youth worker left alone with violent teen

A 15-year-old Charlottetown youth in the care of the province has been placed on probation for two years after he engaged in the unwanted sexual touching of a female youth worker. The youth, whose identity is protected under the provisions of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, has been ordered by the court to attend a sexual education program. He must undergo assessment, counselling and treatment for any underlying issue that might have contributed to the commission of this offence. That counselling could include sessions on sexual deviancy and anger management. Provincial Court Judge Nancy Orr ordered the accused to provide a sample of his DNA for the national DNA databank. She also imposed a weapons prohibition. Guardian, A1

 'God didn't want me to die'

A Charlottetown youth who attempted to commit suicide by cop in the parking lot of the Charlottetown Mall was placed on probation Monday for two years on each of four weapons- related offences. The youth, whose identity is protected by the Youth Criminal Justice Act, had entered guilty pleas to possession of brass knuckles, using brass knuckles in a careless manner, using a firearm in a careless manner and possession of a weapon for a purpose dangerous to the public peace. The court was told the accused had drawn police to the rear parking lot of the Charlottetown Mall last Good Friday by placing a call to the authorities to say there was a man in the parking lot with a gun and shots had been fired. Multiple units were dispatched and when police arrived they spotted a figure with a gun, his face covered with a balaclava... Orr ordered the accused to perform 25 hours of community service on each of the four charges. He must also provide a DNA sample for the national DNA databank. Guardian, A3

Drug probe hits jackpot

A Saskatchewan police investigation dubbed Project F-Jackpot has cashed in, with four arrests and 25 charges. "The objective of this investigation was to disrupt the criminal activity and dismantle the group of individuals involved in the distribution of cocaine and crystal methamphetamine in communities in the province of Saskatchewan," said a news release issued Monday. No one was available for an interview to provide further details. The bust was made by the Saskatchewan Combined Forces Special Enforcement Unit (CFSEU), a provincewide integrated policing task force targeting existing and emerging organized criminal groups. Members of the Regina CFSEU have been involved in Project FJackpot for the past two months. The investigation concerned alleged drug trafficking by a group operating "extensively" across the province, according to the release. Saskatoon CFSEU, the Regina Police Service and RCMP units in Saskatchewan's F Division were also involved in the project. It culminated in four arrests on Wednesday. James Edward Lloyd, 36, of Regina is charged with trafficking in cocaine, possession of cocaine, meth and oxycodone for the purpose of trafficking, possession of cannabis under 30 grams, possession of proceeds of crime exceeding $5,000, and six weapons charges. Postmedia News (Leader-Post, A1)

Man critically injured in fight

Three suspects are in custody after a man was critically injured during a confrontation between two groups of people in Surrey City Centre early Monday. RCMP said that at 3:20 a.m. police were called to 108th Avenue and 132nd Street following reports of screams and two groups fighting on the street. Police found one man, in his early 20s and known to police, with a serious gash to his chest. Two men and one woman were arrested and remain in custody while the investigation continues. The victim is listed in critical condition. Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun, A4)

Moose cull prompts protests

Dennis Day was all ready to protest a Mi'kmaq moose hunt that Parks Canada approved for Monday on North Mountain in Cape Breton Highlands National Park, but there was nothing to protest. Day, a resident of nearby Cape North, set up camp along the Cabot Trail just outside the park on Sunday night, but Mi'kmaq hunters and Parks Canada officials were still putting things in place Monday and were not expected to start hunting until Tuesday at the earliest. "I'm not even going up on the mountain," Day said Monday morning inside his roadside hut, which is equipped with a wood stove inside and a porta-potty next to it. "I'm staying right here." Day said he intends to peacefully protest Parks Canada's plan to cull up to 90 per cent of the moose population in a 20-square-kilometre area on North Mountain... However, Const. Mark Skinner of Nova Scotia RCMP said no complaints had been laid by Monday morning and police were not investigating any threats. Day said he didn't complain to police, because he didn't take an online threat he received seriously. And, he said, he has no intention of disrupting the hunt. "We just want to get our word across," he said. "I can't stress enough that this isn't against the aboriginals. This is against the park." RCMP and Parks Canada enforcement officers spent Monday morning meeting with Day and local citizens to keep things calm. Chronicle Herald, A3

Cops hunt for man

Surrey RCMP are looking for a man who allegedly tried to force his way into the home of a 15-year-old girl. Police say the man approached the teen outside her home in the 13300-block of Sutton Place around 2:15 p.m. Friday. He talked to her, then tried to go into the home uninvited. The two struggled in the doorway and the teen was able to call for help, police said. The man, described as a 25-to 30-year-old South Asian man, about 5-foot-8 with a medium build, fled in an older black car, possibly a Honda Civic. Canadian Press (Province, A8)

 Charges laid in theft of poppy donations

A man faces charges after poppy boxes were stolen in Grande Prairie gas station. RCMP were called to the business on Sunday. Corey Donald Muise, 23, is charged with theft under $5,000, possession of stolen property and failure to abide by probation orders. Grande Prairie is approximately 460 kilometres northwest of Edmonton. Postmedia Network (Edmonton Journal, A5); Edmonton Sun, A6

Missing man left financial quandary

Harold Backer, who has been missing since Nov. 3, may have left the country as a result of financial mismanagement that has cost his clients a considerable amount of money. The 52-year-old Backer, who is registered as an active mutual fund dealer with Investia Financial in B.C. and Ontario, was listed as missing last week by Victoria police. Some of Backer's clients, who asked to remain anonymous, told the Times Colonist it looks as though they have lost a substantial amount of money due to his actions. It is unknown how many clients are affected. According to Canadian Securities Administrators, the umbrella group that brings together the country's various provincial securities regulators, Backer was an active dealer with Investia but under the terms and conditions of his registration he had agreed "to be closely supervised." The Mutual Fund Dealers Association did not return calls Monday to clarify what that meant. According to a spokesman, the B.C. Securities Commission cannot comment on whether a complaint has been made against a dealer or if an investigation is ongoing... On Monday, Victoria police announced they are working with U.S. law enforcement agencies to find Backer. "Both through our efforts and the fantastic support from our U.S. law enforcement partners, such as the Port Angeles Police Department, we continue to receive tips that we're working with now," said Det. Sgt. Kris Rice in a statement. "Tips are important in a missing persons file like this and sometimes it is the smallest detail that helps." Times Colonist, A1

 Opposition calls for action on fentanyl

Alberta's main opposition parties say Premier Rachel Notley's government has responded with indifference as deaths from fentanyl abuse have surged in the province and turned into a public-health crisis. Ms. Notley's New Democrats have defended their response to the fast-acting opioid by pointing to the creation of a committee to review mental health care in the province. However, members of the Wildrose and Progressive Conservative parties say resources need to be allocated immediately to overtaxed health and police services. In the first half of the year, 145 Albertans died from fentanyl... A pill of fentanyl costs about $20 on the streets of Alberta's major cities and is 50 times more potent than heroin. While the drug has been tied to prescription abuse in Eastern Canada, the variant found in the Prairies is believed to be produced by organized crime. What sets fentanyl apart from other opioids is how toxic it is - two milligrams are enough to kill the average person in less than 15 minutes. Globe and Mail, A11

 Bible Hill RCMP office undergoes renovations

The RCMP detachment in Bible Hill is getting an expansion and facelift. Work is underway on the project that will expand and upgrade the detachment at 283 Pictou Rd., consolidating in one building all units and offices in the Bible Hill area, an RCMP news release said. "By expanding and upgrading our current detachment facility, the RCMP is making a long-term commitment to policing services in the Bible Hill area and Colchester County in general," Staff Sgt. John Berry, Colchester District commander, said in the release. "This infrastructure project will also bring all RCMP resources in Bible Hill under one roof, which will enhance service delivery in the long run." In the first phase of the project, the original building will be expanded by about 1,200 square metres. The original structure will be renovated and upgraded in the second phase. When it is completed, the detachment will house eight RCMP units, including those now located in the nearby Agritech Park. Chronicle Herald (2015-11-09)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Collectibles thief granted day parole

The mastermind behind the thefts of more than 1,000 rare artifacts from universities, museums and private collections is being released on day parole. John Mark Matthew Tillmann of Fall River is serving an eight-year federal sentence for multiple counts of possession of stolen property, theft under $5,000, possession of a forged document and obstruction of justice. Tillmann was sentenced in 2013 after pleading guilty to the theft of the museum pieces, artifacts and other items in Nova Scotia. The items, which police said were worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, were recovered after police searched his Guildwood Drive home. In a Nov. 5 decision, the Parole Board of Canada granted Tillmann day parole for six months upon a bed becoming available at a community halfway house. He must return to the facility each night. Chronicle-Herald, A4

 La maison de transition pour un importateur de cocaïne

Après avoir purgé la moitié d'une peine de huit ans, Angelo Follano, chef d'orchestre d'un complot visant à importer 1300 kg de cocaïne éventé en 2006 durant la rafle antimafia Colisée, a convaincu hier matin les commissaires aux libérations conditionnelles de l'envoyer en maison de transition. Grand sportif, Follano, 42 ans, qui portait d'ailleurs un chandail des Bears de Chicago, de la Ligue nationale de football, a raconté aux commissaires que son implication dans le crime a commencé en raison de ses problèmes de jeu compulsif. La Presse, A8

 Stéphane "Godasse" Gagné veut sortir de prison

La file était longue, lundi, dans les couloirs du palais de justice de Montréal. Pendant des heures, les citoyens ont défilé devant le juge Jerry Zigman, certains dans l'optique d'être sélectionnés comme jurés, d'autres dans l'espoir d'être exemptés. Ce mardi, ils devraient être douze à s'installer dans une salle d'audience : ce sera à eux que le motard et célèbre délateur Stéphane Gagné s'adressera dans le but de faire devancer sa date d'admissibilité à la libération conditionnelle. Depuis près de 18 ans, Stéphane "Godasse" Gagné écoule le temps derrière les barreaux. Il s'y trouve parce qu'il a abattu par balles la gardienne de prison Diane Lavigne, une mère de famille choisie au hasard, le soir du 26 juin 1997, tuée pour le métier qu'elle pratiquait. Le Devoir, A4, Journal de Québec (Journal de Montréal), La Presse (La Tribune)

Psychiatric evaluation delays first-degree murder trial

Concerns over the mental state of a man convicted of first-degree murder delayed the start of his second trial for the gangland style killing of Brandon Neil Prevey. Christopher Martin Fleig, 31, was convicted in 2012 of the April 2009 drive-by shooting death of Prevey, 29, in Inglewood in Red Deer. Though Fleig did not actually shoot Prevey, the Crown believed he had orchestrated the killing. The Alberta Court of Appeal ordered a new trial on March 10, 2014, but did not overturn the conviction. Fleig's second trial started Monday in Red Deer Court of Queen's bench before Justice Larry Ackerl of Edmonton. Defence counsel Allan Fay began the trial by requesting an adjournment for a mental fitness evaluation for Fleig. Faye said he had concerns about the mental state of Fleig, citing his bipolar disorder and a recent refusal to take medication while being held at the Red Deer Remand Centre ahead of the trial. Fleig, wearing blue prisoner coveralls, was handcuffed in the prisoner box where he alternated between standing and sitting regularly. Faye told Ackerl he had visited Fleig over the Thanksgiving long weekend at the Edmonton Institution maximum security facility, and said he was lucid. But an attempt to visit Fleig at the prison this past weekend before the start of trial was thwarted by a lockdown. He later learned that Fleig was not taking his medication. (...) Fleig was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to life in prison by Justice Kirk Sisson on May 30, 2012. Red Deer Advocate, A1, Canadian Press (Cape Breton Post, The Guardian, The Telegram)

Cop's recorded threats halt robbery trial

A Fredericton police officer's threat toward a suspect was an abuse of process that merited a halt to a robbery and break-in prosecution, a judge ruled Monday. Michael David Johnston, 36, of no fixed address, stood trial Monday on charges of break, enter and assault at a residence at 548 Lincoln Rd. on May 24, and robbing Brittini Sowers of a cellphone and money on June 24. However, after hearing testimony and viewing video evidence Monday, provincial court Judge William McCarrroll issued a stay of proceedings in the case. That means the prosecution has been halted and essentially fizzles out. The ruling came as a result of the actions of Sgt. Tim Sowers, father of the complainant, Brittini Sowers, 27. In an unexpected turn in the trial, it was revealed Sgt. Sowers had confronted Johnston at the police station after he was arrested this summer. (...) While the charges against him are now gone, Johnston remains in custody. He was federal parolee at the time of the allegations, and his parole was revoked as a result of them. It remains to be seen if that parole revocation will be lifted or if he'll have to serve the remainder of his previous federal-prison sentence for an unrelated incident. Daily Gleaner, A1

Mother hopes inquest into daughter's death will bring her peace

The mother of a seven-year-old girl killed by her legal guardians appeared shaken Monday as a coroner's inquest listened to the 911 call that led paramedics to her daughter's bruised and battered body in a Toronto apartment in 2008. Emotions broke through Bernice Sampson's otherwise stoic demeanour at least once more as the inquest into Katelynn Sampson's death began more than seven years after the girl's death. On the call, made in the early morning hours of Aug. 3, 2008, Katelynn's guardian, Donna Irving, could be heard sobbing as she told the operator the girl had choked to death on bread. "She's been laying there for half an hour and she's not breathing," she said on the recording. "I was so scared, I didn't know what to do." Irving continued to cry while the operator instructed her to perform CPR, and later mumbled: "I didn't mean to." Irving and Katelynn's other guardian, Warren Johnson, were convicted three years ago of second-degree murder in the girl's death and sentenced to life in prison with no chance of parole for 15 years. The pair beat Katelynn for months until her body went into septic shock. Canadian Press (Cape Breton Post, A9, Whitehorse Daily Star, The Telegram, The Guardian, Times Colonist), Postmedia Network (Toronto Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Toronto Sun, Calgary Sun), Toronto Star, Canadian Press (The Guardian, The Telegram)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

First Nations groups urge caution before government's missing women inquiry

A coalition on missing and murdered indigenous women is urging the new federal Liberal government to be cautious before launching an inquiry into the problem. The group says the failure of British Columbia's own missing-women inquiry led by former attorney general Wally Oppal should be a lesson in what not to do. The coalition, made up of more than two dozen groups and individuals, says B.C.'s investigation neglected to consult the families of the missing women and also fell short of implementing many of the final report's 56 recommendations. The group came together after their organizations were shut out of the B.C. inquiry and it has continued to meet to pursue justice for murdered and missing women. Canadian Press (Whitehorse Daily Star, 8, Red Deer Advocate, Times Colonist, Waterloo Region Record, Hamilton Spectator, London Free Press, The Province, Vancouver Sun, Globe and Mail, Cape Breton Post, The Telegram)

Government to consult on terms for missing, murdered inquiry, says Bennett

Canada's new minister of indigenous and northern affairs says pre-inquiry consultations should be launched within the next two weeks as the Liberal government lays the groundwork for a long-awaited probe on missing and murdered aboriginal women. Carolyn Bennett says the consultation process will involve speaking with the families of victims, provincial and territorial representatives and grassroots organizations. She also says it will be key to establish terms for the inquiry, including its mandate and how many commissioners should conduct the study. In their election platform, the Liberals promised to spend $40 million over two years on the inquiry. Canadian Press (iPolitics)

* Val-d'Or: les chiffres d'une crise annoncée

Les récentes révélations de l'émission Enquête, de Radio-Canada, sur les abus envers les femmes autochtones par des policiers de la Sûreté du Québec à Val-d'Or, braquent de nouveau les projecteurs sur les conditions de vie difficiles des femmes des Premières Nations. Des chiffres pour comprendre. L'Actualité

Quebec police probe shouldn't be delayed

An editorial states, "The Quebec government has taken some positive steps in the last two weeks in response to disturbing allegations made by several indigenous women in Val-d'Or, who have said they suffered physical or sexual abuse by Sûreté du Québec officers. Last Wednesday, Premier Philippe Couillard met with Quebec aboriginal leaders. He appointed Fannie Lafontaine, a human rights lawyer, as an independent observer of the probe being conducted by Montreal police. The province also pledged $6.1 million so vulnerable women in Val-d'Or can get medical and mental health help. In Val-d'Or, some police will be patrolling alongside social workers to make them more sensitive to the realities of marginalized society. However, those steps go only a small way toward addressing the enduring problems between aboriginals, police and the Quebec government. Lafontaine has said she would not have taken the post if she thought she would not be able to act independently. Let's hope her optimism proves warranted, but a fully independent investigation would have greater credibility with aboriginals, who have little trust in the SQ." Postmedia Network (Kingston Whig-Standard, A4, London Free Press)

Red dresses draw attention

A letter to the editor states, "All across the UPEI campus, there are red dresses hanging from trees. At first glance, they appeared to be nothing more than some form of a prank. However, along with these dresses are signs addressing the issue of the more than 1,200 Aboriginal women who have been murdered or gone missing. This has been a growing issue as Canadian citizens are pressing for the problem to be discussed in Parliament. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has pledged to explore the different reasons why these women have been murdered or gone missing, and promised to give answers to those who are waiting for them. However, there is so much more to the issue than simply finding out what happened to these women. As Canadians, what can we do to prevent these disappearances from happening? Is there a way for us to save Aboriginal women before it is too late?" The Guardian, A6

Will carding crackdown tie officers' hands?

Community activists are applauding the Ontario government for proposing strict new curbs on carding. Police, to no one's surprise, are not. Some police chiefs and police unions say they are worried the curbs will hamper their ability to interact with the public and control crime. Police, of course, tend to resist any check on their authority. It would be easy to dismiss their complaints as nothing more than reflex. In this case, they deserve a hearing. Police argue that when they conduct street checks - questioning and documenting people they encounter on the beat but are not under arrest - they often learn things that help them prevent or solve crimes. Globe and Mail, A10

Police carding is not over

An opinion piece states, "Last week, the Wynne government announced draft regulations meant to herald in a new era in policing in Ontario. The proposed rules would mean the "end of carding," Queen's Park proclaimed. No longer would people be subject to discriminatory street checks by police. I was immediately suspicious. How can a government regulate a practice it is eliminating? Frustration soon turned to dull, familiar rage as I read the new policies. Carding is not over, and nothing in the draft regulations will prevent the status-quo discriminatory and disproportionate criminalization of black Ontarians. On the face of it, the regulations would prohibit police from stopping and questioning people based on race (with significant exceptions). They also state that being present in a "high crime neighbourhood" cannot be the sole reason for a street check (this doesn't scream progress to me). But let's be honest: these rules are nothing new. There are already laws in existence meant to prevent racist policing. Here's what's in the fine print: police are not to stop people based on their race, unless race is an important identifying factor in the police's search for a particular individual. In other words, carding can still happen to you - if you fit a certain description. Sadly, this is almost always the excuse used to criminalize black people. Also in the fine print: if an officer collects information from an individual in a manner that violates the regulation, there is no consequence to the officer, no recourse for the carded individual and the identifying information is retained in the police database. In other words, police can continue to card with impunity." Toronto Star, A13

Changing the face of the force

When Ingrid Cataldo arrived in Montreal from Chile 20 years ago, she had her heart set on becoming a police officer. But like many immigrants, she had a hard time convincing her mother that being a cop is a respectable profession. Her mother wanted her to get a university degree; so Cataldo enrolled at Université de Montréal and studied social work and criminology. After receiving her diploma on graduation day, Cataldo hugged her mother and whispered something in her ear. "I told her: 'Now, I'm going to become a police officer.'" Cataldo, 41, has been a Montreal police constable for 13 years, having entered the force through an equal opportunity program at a time when the SPVM was hiring more women. Almost four years ago, the SPVM's human resources department was looking for a new recruiter, someone who could be successful in persuading members of Montreal's growing visible minority community to join their ranks. As a visible minority officer who speaks French, Spanish, Italian and some English, Cataldo felt she was a good candidate. The force agreed and gave her the difficult task of trying to woo other minorities into the police force. For years, Montreal police have talked about wanting to increase the force's diversity, and its top brass hasn't been shy about expressing frustration at not being successful. In 2014, only 317 of the force's 4,601 officers were members of a visible minority - about 6.8 per cent. Another 193 were ethnic minorities and 17 were First Nations. Former police chief Marc Parent acknowledged the department struggles to recruit non-white officers. "For some, it's a trust issue, maybe. For others, it's not a respectable profession for them," he said before his retirement this year. Among officers who work on the beat, about eight per cent are visible minorities. Philippe Pichet, the force's new chief, said that number is not high enough. Montreal Gazette, A1

Don't expect deep moral justice

A proposed class-action settlement for current and former foster children who were victims of child abuse and other crimes could cost Alberta more than $20 million. But the legal firm representing the plaintiffs says most will likely receive just $15,000 to $30,000 in compensation. An Edmonton court Friday will hear arguments about the draft settlement for victims who were in provincial care between 1966 and 2008. The class-action lawsuit was originally brought by Edmonton lawyer Robert Lee in 2004 and certified by the courts, after a long legal battle, in 2009. Since then, the courts have removed Lee from the case and reassigned it to a London, Ont., firm which specializes in class-actions lawsuits. Last week, the province and the firm, McKenzie Lake, finally agreed on a draft settlement. But for hundreds who joined the original lawsuit, the settlement may be a bitter disappointment. The lawsuit was never about holding the child welfare system accountable for physical and sexual abuses. It deals, instead, with a far narrower issue: whether the province, as their guardian, failed to take timely civil action to protect the financial rights of those abused children. The lawsuit claims the province failed to sue those who had victimized the minors and then failed to apply, on behalf of young victims, to the province's own Victims of Crime Compensation Fund. Edmonton Journal, A1

Identity crisis

He's survived being shot, stabbed and beaten with a baseball bat, so James Lathlin has plenty of experience when it comes to getting back on his feet. Lathlin has spent the last 15 years trying to make a better name for himself, but now it's his name that is causing him trouble. Lathlin speaks with children and teens about the perils of gangs and drugs. His work resulted in him being part of an art campaign last March that blanketed downtown, aiming to challenge negative perceptions of Winnipeg's indigenous residents. The campaign featured two photos of Lathlin, the first being a grim-faced portrait that read: "Drug Dealer?" The second was of a smiling Lathlin that read: "A father, son, youth counsellor, motivational speaker, coach, author, rapper and an aspiring stand up comedian." In an unfortunate coincidence, James Robert Victor Lathlin's younger cousin, James Roderick Lathlin, was identified in 2012 by RCMP in Portage la Prairie as one of more than 30 people charged in a major drug trafficking bust, dubbed Project DEMERIT. "Ever since then I've been having problems," Lathlin said. "It has sabotaged my entire life and it sabotaged that whole campaign ... because here was James Roderick Lathlin who was a drug dealer." Winnipeg Sun, A5

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Province gearing up for new influx of refugees - With 1,000 already arrived, 2,000 more is ambitious goal

Manitoba is flowing money and putting in place the logistics to accept another 2,000 refugees, on top of the 1,000 already arrived, by the end of the year if it can be done, Premier Greg Selinger said Monday. In an interview with the Free Press, Selinger said the $1.2 million the province pledged in September for settlement services for refugees is starting to flow to the organizations so they can ramp up to prepare for an influx of people. "We're working on it, we said let's get this money moving," he said. He said the money needs to flow so organizations can hire people and get the supplies they need to manage. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau promised during the election to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of this year. Manitoba committed to taking up to 3,000 this year, which would be about 1,500 more than originally planned. It is a tall order, and some immigration experts think it may even be impossible, but Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Minister John McCallum said Monday the government will try to make it happen. Winnipeg Free Press, A4

Syrian refugees warned of resettlement scams on social media

Ottawa's plan to usher in 25,000 Syrian refugees may have also opened the door to unscrupulous people seeking to make a profit off the backs of desperate asylum seekers hoping to resettle in Canada. Flyers and online messages have sprung up on social media offering to connect Syrian refugees with sponsorship groups and submit their refugee applications to Canada - for a fee of hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars. But resettlement groups are warning people to beware, noting that refugee resettlement is about helping people, not about turning a profit. "You don't make money off humanitarian work. That's why refugee resettlement is under the humanitarian stream of Canadian immigration," said Brian Dyck, chair of the Council of the Canadian Refugee Sponsorship Agreement Holders Association. Government-recognized private sponsorship agreement holders say they only work directly with groups or individuals who fundraise to support the refugee they select for resettlement at a fee of no more than $100, as government rules stipulate. One recent posting on the Arabic news page, Canada Today, offered to connect Syrian refugees with private sponsorship groups, referring inquiries to a licensed immigration consultant. It is not illegal for a registered member of the Immigration Consultants of Canada Regulatory Council (ICCRC) to charge for such a service. Toronto Star, A8

Air Canada offers planes to help airlift Syrian refugees by year's end

Plans to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees by year's end could involve assistance from commercial air carriers, at least one of which has already offered space on its planes to the Liberal government. Air Canada reached out to the new government following the election, offering its services to help ferry people to Canada as they flee the ongoing civil war and other unrest in Syria. Though the airline can't fly directly into Syria itself, it could land planes in Istanbul as well as Beirut an estimated 1 million people in Lebanon have registered with the United Nations as refugees from the conflict. "Air Canada has offered to co-operate with the federal government to the fullest extent possible in any operation to transport Syrian refugees," spokesman Peter Fitzpatrick said in an email. "At this point, however, we have only exchanged preliminary information." Commercial aircraft are one of a range of options the government is exploring, Immigration Minister John McCallum said Monday as he announced a new cabinet committee specifically tasked with overseeing the resettlement program promised during the election campaign. Other options include ships and military planes, and the government is also exploring housing refugees in old military bases. Canadian Press (Daily Gleaner, B1, Red Deer Advocate, Ottawa Sun, Times Colonist, Times & Transcript, Telegraph-Journal, Chronicle-Herald)

Au moins 125 familles syriennes à Québec, espère Duclos

«J'ai espoir que la région de Québec puisse contribuer à l'accueil d'une bonne partie des réfugiés syriens», a dit le ministre canadien des Familles, des Enfants et du Développement social en entrevue au Soleil. Sans détour, il a avancé le nombre de «125 familles», soit environ 500 personnes. «C'est peu pour une population de 700 000 habitants. Je pense qu'on peut faire mieux, mais je mettrai ça comme barre minimale. On peut se donner comme objectif collectif ici à Québec de faire cette contribution», a poursuivi M. Duclos. Au-delà du fait d'aider une population en détresse, Québec bénéficiera, dit-il, de l'arrivée de réfugiés à l'heure où la région a «besoin de nouveaux immigrants et de main-d'oeuvre». Le nombre minimal de 125 familles avancé par M. Duclos est le même que celui évalué par le maire de Québec, Régis Labeaume, et différents organismes comme le Centre multiethnique. Lors d'une conférence de presse en septembre, ils avaient dit vouloir accueillir de 125 à 200 familles, soit de 500 à 800 réfugiés syriens. Récemment, le maire de Québec a toutefois déploré ne «pas avoir eu de nouvelles» du gouvernement provincial alors que sa ville est prête à recevoir ces familles qui fuient la guerre. Lundi, Jean-Yves Duclos a dit que la question des réfugiés syriens a fait l'objet d'une discussion dès la première rencontre du Conseil des ministres la semaine dernière. Le gouvernement Trudeau a encore comme objectif d'accueillir 25 000 réfugiés d'ici la fin de 2015, même si le temps file. «On travaille fort, c'est notre intention d'y arriver», a martelé le nouveau ministre. La Presse (Le Soleil); *QMI Agency (Journal de Québec)

Ils seront 25 000

De Harper à Trudeau, le contraste est saisissant en matière d'accueil des réfugiés. D'un gouvernement qui utilisait la sécurité comme prétexte pour ne pas agir, nous voilà devant un gouvernement déterminé à relever tout un défi: accueillir 25 000 réfugiés au Canada d'ici le 31 décembre. Un scénario à l'étude prévoit l'accueil de 6000 réfugiés syriens par semaine qui seraient hébergés dans des bases militaires comme celles de Valcartier ou de Trenton, selon des informations obtenues par Le Devoir. Une opération d'urgence d'envergure qui s'inspire du plan déployé en 1999 lors de l'arrivée des réfugiés kosovars au Canada. Est-ce réaliste d'accueillir autant de réfugiés en si peu de temps? «Ça dépend du niveau d'urgence qu'on attribue à la chose», me dit Janet Dench, du Conseil canadien pour les réfugiés. Si la volonté politique est là, si l'organisation suit et que les citoyens se montrent solidaires, il est clair que l'on peut accueillir beaucoup plus de gens que le gouvernement précédent ne voulait nous le faire croire. Ce qui compte, ce n'est pas d'atteindre le chiffre magique de 25 000 réfugiés le 31 décembre à minuit. Ce qui compte, c'est d'admettre qu'il y a urgence, de reconnaître que nous avons des responsabilités en matière de protection des réfugiés et d'agir en conséquence. La Presse

Former CFB Cornwallis site offers to house Syrian refugees

Beth Earle knows the role Canadian military bases played in helping refugees from Kosovo in 1999 and she believes that can happen again as the federal government prepares to bring in refugees from Syria. "I thought, well, that was 5,000 refugees (in 1999), they're talking about 25,000 in a very short period of time (now) and maybe we can reach out and work once again with the federal government." Earle is the CEO of the Annapolis Basin Conference Centre, located at the site of the former CFB Cornwallis. While the location didn't host anyone from Kosovo back in 1999, there is more than enough space and experience to help this time, she said. Each summer, the site serves as home to 900 people as it hosts the HMCS Acadia Sea Cadet Training Centre. With Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's government planning to bring 25,000 refugees to Canada by the end of the year, Earle decided to reach out to representatives at the National Defence Department and local political representatives to see if they need help in the way of temporary housing. "All of our facilities are inspected regularly and we do have the size of facilities and the infrastructure to help out in that way," she said. Chronicle-Herald

Liberals look to expedite refugee process

Immigration Minister John McCallum says a portion of the 25,000 Syrian refugees the Liberals plan to bring here will likely be housed at first on military bases, and he predicts some asylum seekers might arrive under a temporary protection program rather than as permanent residents. The Trudeau Liberal government on Monday announced it is assigning nine cabinet ministers, including Health Minister Jane Philpott and Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan, to expedite the Syrian refugee initiative. The Liberals promised during the federal election campaign to resettle 25,000 Syrians by Jan. 1 - an exceedingly ambitious goal, according to refugee advocates in this country, who say it cannot be done this fast. Refugee experts say some Syrians might arrive with more temporary status for two reasons. In some cases, Ottawa may want to speed up intake of refugees by bringing them here before screening is complete. Others might be content to live here temporarily with a plan to return to their homeland if conditions significantly improve. To expedite the arrival of 25,000, Mr. McCallum could use a ministerial permit to bring in some refugees whose security or health checks were not yet completed - and allow the rest of the scrutiny to take place in Canada. Globe and Mail, A4

Ottawa refugee health groups prepare to welcome Syrians

Refugee settlement and community health groups in Ottawa are trying to figure out how to best help the thousands of new refugees expected to arrive in the region in the coming weeks. John McCallum, the minister of immigration, refugees and citizenship, confirmed Monday the federal government plans to bring in 25,000 government-sponsored refugees in the next eight weeks. Assmaa Bilouni spends her days helping refugees navigate Canada's health care system. She's been watching from afar as her home country, Syria, has been torn apart by war, forcing millions of people to flee to neighbouring countries for safety. (...) Bilouni, who is now a Canadian Citizen, recently met with a group of other refugee advocates to talk about how to help the displaced Syrians when they arrive. That group, called Refugee 613, is helping co-ordinate local efforts. (...) For the past few years, Dr. Doug Gruner, a refugee doctor in Ottawa, fought the former federal government's decision to cut interim health care for some refugees and claimants. Now that the Liberals are reversing those cuts and reinstating health care for all refugees, Gruner said he's redirecting his energy into helping the new arrivals. "Now, no longer will the costs of medications and other issues like prosthetics be on the shoulders of our private sponsors, church groups," said Gruner. CBC.ca

Now comes the tough part for Trudeau

An opinion piece states, "In all the commentary on political affairs no insight has ever come close to matching that concocted a near half-century ago by British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan. A journalist had asked him what had been the most challenging force he had ever had to deal with. MacMillan's famous reply was, "Events, dear boy, events." To this point, Justin Trudeau has performed with exceptional, indeed quite extraordinary skill. (...) In the election Trudeau promised to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees here by the year's end. That's incomparably better than the equivalent mean-mindedness of the Conservatives. But a Canadian winter is absolutely the worst time to bring in refugees who've lived their entire life in a warm country like Syria." Toronto Star, A13

Advice for the new immigration minister

An opinion piece states, "New Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship John McCallum faces some herculean tasks. He has to deliver on a promise to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees before the end of the year. In addition, in order to meet a court-imposed demand, he must find ways to provide adequate health care and medications to asylum seekers and refugees. (...) In having the first conversation, Minister McCallum may want to evaluate how Canada has been avoiding its international obligations to refugees. To keep asylum seekers far from our borders, Canada uses devices such as visas, electronic travel authorizations, agreements to outsource decision-making to other states, carrier sanctions on transportation companies, and even billboards in foreign countries advertising that Canada will rapidly deport failed asylum seekers." Ottawa Citizen

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

 New defence minister warned of 2006 attack

Canada's new minister of national defence said he warned NATO command against a fateful 2006 Afghanistan mission that sent Canadian soldiers into an ambush where four were killed, but alliance officials ignored his warning. Harjit Sajjan, who served in Afghanistan before being named to cabinet by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau last week, also criticized coalition forces for not doing enough to "look at the root cause" of Taliban recruitment in a documentary airing this week. Sajjan, who was deployed three times to Afghanistan, was released from military service on Sunday and is no longer a reservist in the Canadian Armed Forces. Postmedia Network (Edmonton Journal, N5, Gazette, London Free Press, National Post)

 Forces plane carrying arms to Kurds held for days in Iraq

Iraqi officials temporarily seized a military aircraft carrying weapons for Canadian special forces in Kurdistan, amid a wave of anti-western conspiracy theories rife in Iraqi politics. The seizure and the reasons for it raise questions for Canada's new Liberal government, which has vowed to do more military training in the country. The Iraqis said they held the Canadian Forces Hercules transport aircraft, carrying supplies into Kurdistan without authorization, for four days. Some Iraqis are concerned that the Kurds, who ultimately want independence for their territory, will use the support and weapons they receive from the U.S.-led coalition to eventually break away. Postmedia Network (Ottawa Citizen, A1/Front, Gazette)

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca.*

Sent to: !DMS - EARLY DRAFT

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
November 19, 2015 / 19 novembre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Réfugiés - L'objectif réel d'Ottawa prendra plus de temps

La promesse libérale de faire venir 25 000 réfugiés syriens " parrainés par l'État " ne sera pas remplie avant le 31 décembre : le gouvernement se donne quelques mois de plus pour atteindre cette cible, a appris Le Devoir. Les réfugiés qui arriveront avant la nouvelle année seront entre autres parrainés par des organismes privés. Le gouvernement fédéral a ainsi confirmé mercredi que plusieurs milliers de réfugiés faisant partie de la cohorte des 25 000 attendus avant 2016 sont en fait des déplacés qui seraient venus au Canada peu importe les résultats de l'élection du 19 octobre. " Les demandes de parrainage provenant du secteur privé [généralement des familles qui font affaire avec des organismes] font partie de notre objectif à court terme ", a expliqué Nancy Chan, porte-parole d'Immigration, Réfugiés et Citoyenneté Canada. Impossible de savoir exactement quel sera le ratio de réfugiés parrainés par le privé ou par l'État. Le ministère soutient ne pas " avoir plus de précisions à donner pour l'instant "... Ces détails suggèrent que la pression immédiate mise sur le processus de sélection et de vérification des dossiers de réfugiés sera plus légère de quelques milliers de cas. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, a par ailleurs confirmé mercredi que les dossiers de tous les réfugiés seraient épluchés et qu'aucun d'entre eux ne profitera d'une vérification allégée. Les demandeurs d'asile seront rencontrés en entrevue, les données biométriques seront contrôlées, leur passé corroboré dans des bases de données canadienne et internationale. " Nous détaillerons les différentes étapes de contrôle quand le plan complet sera annoncé. Mais ce sera robuste et nous voulons nous assurer que la qualité de la vérification de sécurité, au final, est au rendez-vous ", a-t-il dit en point de presse. Ce processus de contrôle prend actuellement 12 à 18 mois. Il faudra attendre ladite annonce officielle pour préciser les délais anticipés. " Mais ce sera beaucoup, beaucoup plus court ", a certifié M. Goodale. Le ministre avait évoqué la possibilité la semaine dernière qu'une part des vérifications soit menée une fois les réfugiés en sol canadien. " Notre objectif est d'accomplir la plus grande part du travail avant que les nouveaux arrivants arrivent ", a-t-il affirmé mercredi. Quant aux populations ciblées par Ottawa, ce sera les " vulnérables, qui [soulèvent] le moins de questions [en matière] de sécurité, et des gens qui ont les meilleures chances d'avoir une intégration réussie ", a expliqué le ministre. Ottawa demeure globalement avare de détails sur la mécanique de l'opération, à six semaines de l'échéancier qu'il s'est fixé. Mercredi, Cogeco Nouvelles soutenait que la base de Valcartier pourrait accueillir 500 réfugiés dès le 1er décembre. La base de Trenton en recevrait pour sa part 1000. Le ministre Goodale a refusé de commenter ces informations. Le Devoir, A1; * La Presse, A7 (La Voix de l'Est)

Processing of Syrians can be 'fast, effective'

A respected authority on immigration and refugees says Canada and the United Nations have the operational know-how and security safeguards to safely vet 25,000 Syrians for rapid resettlement. But the question remains: Can the humanitarian resettlement project be pulled off by the Liberal government's looming Dec. 31 deadline without compromising domestic security? (...) Immigration Minister John McCallum has repeatedly said the would-be refugees will be properly screened. "I think his implication has been that if it takes longer, if it goes over the deadline, then it goes over the deadline," Showler said in an interview with the Citizen. "Certainly my understanding from him is that getting the job done properly is the priority." (...) Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale Wednesday tried to reassure Canadians the timetable will not compromise safety. "There have been very enormous efforts and thorough consultations ... to make sure that that system is strong," Goodale said. Michel Coulombe, director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, added: "I want Canadians to know that as director of CSIS I am confident that the measures in place are robust and appropriate." Under normal circumstances, Showler explained, Canada's refugee-resettlement process happens in three phases. His comments are based largely on his experience helping Syrian and other refugees in Lebanon last year... Phase three is security screening by Canada-based CSIS, RCMP and Canada Border Services Agency officers. Names, travel documents and sometime a person's biometrics are checked against national and international police and security intelligence databases. Goodale and CBSA president Linda Lizotte-MacPherson said Wednesday no refugees will be allowed into Canada until those checks come back clean. Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A1/Front); * Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun, Windsor Star, StarPhoenix, Calgary Herald, Leader-Post, National Post, Gazette, Edmonton Journal)

RCMP, CSIS say Ottawa's refugee plan is feasible

The heads of Canada's police and spy agencies are backing the Trudeau government's plans to safely screen and bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of the year. A number of municipal and provincial politicians have called on the government to take longer to conduct security checks on the asylum seekers, but RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson and CSIS director Michel Coulombe insist the government's plans are feasible. As the pair spoke alongside Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale at a news conference in Ottawa Wednesday, giving assurances that it can be done in that time frame without compromising the country's safety, Ontario's Health Minister told reporters how Canada's most populous province can help meet the commitment. Details so far are vague as to Ottawa's plans, but Eric Hoskins says that Ontario is looking at decommissioned hospitals as potential housing for refugees. He noted, for example, that Toronto's Humber River Hospital has moved from three sites to one... "Yes," he answered in a direct question on the government's ability to meet its deadline. "We will play a role in making the security checks and confirm people's identity. In my view, the system is satisfactory." Added Mr. Coulombe, the director of CSIS: "I am confident that the measures in place are robust and ... appropriate." Mr. Goodale said that the first objective of the government's promise to take in 25,000 refugees is humanitarian, in order to "rescue people who are in terrible conditions and fleeing from the scourge that is [the Islamic State]," However, he added the government would meet its objective "without any diminution or reduction in our security work." The Public Safety Minister said federal officials would conduct database checks and biometrics tests to verify the ID of all refugees, in addition to submitting them to interviews. To do the task quickly, some officials from other agencies are being seconded to the operation, including border guards. Globe and Mail, A1

Canada-Paris link probed

The RCMP is looking into whether the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant's claim of responsibility for the Paris attacks was made by a Canadian, a spokeswoman for the police force says. Staff Sgt. Julie Gagnon said the RCMP was "following up" on reports the English-language audio recording issued by the terrorist group sounded Canadian. "What I can tell you is that we are aware of the reports and are following up," she told the National Post, responding after she was asked whether the RCMP was investigating whether a Canadian had made the ISIL statement. A Public Safety Canada spokeswoman, meanwhile, said, "We do not generally discuss operational matters related to national security" but that police and security agencies "continue to monitor the situation in Paris very closely." The morning after the coordinated killings that left 129 dead, ISIL released a series of written and audio statements in Arabic, French and English that said "a group of believers from the soldiers of the Caliphate" were responsible. The attacks targeted "the capital of prostitution and obscenity, the lead carrier of the cross in Europe - Paris," the statements said, adding France was singled out because of its role in the international coalition fighting ISIL in Syria and Iraq. The identically worded releases offered no new information about the attacks other than what had already been reported but the familiar accent of the narrator of the English version caught the attention of some Canadians. Dozens of Canadians have joined the conflict in Syria and Iraq, some on the side of ISIL. On Tuesday, former Calgary resident Farah Mohamed Shirdon, 22, who has appeared in previous ISIL videos, was placed on the INTERPOL wanted list. Kingston Whig Standard, B1/Front (National Post); Toronto Star, A8

 Ottawa ne voit pas de menace imminente

Malgré les attentats de Paris, le niveau d'alerte au Canada demeure inchangé, a indiqué le gouvernement libéral mercredi, tentant de se faire rassurant. Mais les autorités ont du même souffle reconnu qu'elles ne peuvent pas garantir hors de tout doute qu'aucun des Canadiens partis rejoindre le groupe armé État islamique n'est revenu au pays. " On ne peut pas garantir à 100 % qu'on peut détecter le retour de ceux qui sont là [au Moyen-Orient] ", a consenti le directeur du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité, Michel Coulombe. L'un des terroristes qui pourraient être impliqués dans les attaques commises à Paris vendredi dernier devait se trouver, selon les informations de la communauté internationale, en Syrie. Or, il appert qu'Abdelhamid Abaaoud aurait été tué dans l'assaut lancé en banlieue parisienne dans la nuit de mardi à mercredi, selon le Washington Post. Se peut-il alors qu'un Canadien comme John Maguire, qu'on croit mort au combat en Syrie, soit discrètement revenu au pays sans que les autorités s'en soient aperçues ? " Il y a toujours une possibilité -- l'utilisation de faux documents par exemple serait une façon d'arriver au Canada. On met en place toutes les mesures avec nos partenaires domestiques et internationaux pour pouvoir détecter le retour. Mais comme toute chose dans la vie, une garantie à 100 %, ça n'existe pas ", a admis M. Coulombe lors d'une conférence pour faire le point sur l'état de la menace terroriste au Canada. Les autorités estimaient, l'an dernier, qu'une centaine de Canadiens sont partis à l'étranger grossir les rangs des organisations terroristes. Vigilance M. Coulombe et le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, sont cependant catégoriques : le niveau d'alerte n'a pas changé depuis l'attentat d'octobre 2014 au parlement, et les individus impliqués dans les attentats de Paris n'ont aucun lien avec le Canada. Les deux hommes ont néanmoins appelé les Canadiens à demeurer " vigilants ". Le Devoir, A2; Canadian Press (Red Deer Advocate, A5, Cape Breton Post, Guardian, Telegram); 1. (Times Colonist, A9); Agence QM! (Journal de Québec, 7, Journal de Montréal); La Presse Canadienne (Le Droit, 16, Le Nouvelliste, La Tribune, Acadie Nouvelle); Ottawa Sun, A3

 Canadians prefer bombs over trainers against ISIL, poll finds

Canadians broadly approve of both the country's bombing mission against Islamic State and its program of training those who fight the militant group. But if they had to choose between the two policies, more would opt for bombs over trainers, a new poll for Postmedia has found. The study by Mainstreet Research, conducted three days after the deadly terror attacks in Paris, also found Canadians were not sure the country was prepared to deal with a terrorist attack, even as they maintained they don't feel personally threatened (...) Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has vowed to end the bombing campaign on ISIL militants in Iraq and Syria before March 2015. Meanwhile, he will expand the training mission, although details on how this will be done have not yet been provided. He told reporters this week he wants Canada to be "a strong and positive contributor to the continuing mission against ISIL." Meanwhile, more than four in 10 Canadians said they didn't think Canada was prepared to deal with a terrorist attack should one occur here. Twenty-six per cent felt the country was prepared but fully one-third said they didn't know. Nonetheless, almost two-thirds said they are not concerned about a terrorist attack where they personally live or work. This last finding is in accord with the government's own message. On Wednesday, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said there's no reason to raise Canada's threat level, even after the Paris attacks. Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A10)

 Cyberattacks on infrastructure a 'major threat,' says CSIS chief

The head of Canada's main spy agency says he views the possibility of a cyberattack by ISIS or other extremist groups on the country's "critical infrastructure" as "a major threat." "Cyber is one of our top priorities," Michel Coulombe, director the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) told an Ottawa news conference on Wednesday. Coulombe was responding to questions after Britain announced it is nearly doubling funding for cyber counterterrorism amid fears ISIS is looking to target Western infrastructure such as hospitals, airports or power plants by using the internet. He was flanked by RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson and Ralph Goodale, Canada's newly appointed minister of public safety. "This is an area that I'm beginning to be further briefed on by the department," Goodale told reporters, deferring to his deputy minister and CSIS. CBC News

 Those calling for a refugee crackdown should tread carefully

An editorial states "The debate over whether to adjust our refugee policies on the chance that a terrorist might use them to enter Canada has had less to do with calculating the actual threat - and more to do with passing judgment on hundreds of thousands of desperate people. Following the traumatic attacks in Paris last week, refugees from Syria - people without homes or food or much money - have suddenly become the key suspects in the effort to thwart future terrorist plots. In Canada, those who have taken this leap of faith include the Conservative Party of Canada, several prominent pundits and one premier. They argue the federal government should slow down on its promise to bring 25,000 refugees from the Middle East by the end of the year. While the situation remains unclear and difficult to judge, people should tread with caution before agreeing with this speedy assessment. Xenophobic fear has accompanied all major refugee migrations; it's a story as old as exodus itself. The Islamic State itself reportedly believes the refugees are apostates who deserve to die. Denying haven to so many refugees amounts to delivering them into the hands of psychopaths. (...) A complete description is unlikely, but most of the information so far available has been coming from media reports - not the government. Before the Paris attacks, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said refugee claimants are less of a security threat than the previous Conservative government thought. He owes the public a detailed explanation of what he meant then and whether he still means it now. On Wednesday, he said officials from CBSA have provided invaluable support in refugee processing." iPolitics

ATTACKS IN PARIS / ATTENTATS A PARIS

Alleged plotter remains shadowy figure

Much about Abdelhamid Abaaoud's path to armed Islamic radicalism remains mysterious. In the words of Koen Geens, the Belgian justice minister, he mutated from a student at an upscale Brussels school into "an extremely professional commando," one seemingly able to slip across borders at will, someone who openly mocked the inability of Western law enforcement agencies to catch him. On Wednesday, the fate of the son of an immigrant shopkeeper from Morocco remained unclear. Police raided a suburban Paris apartment where they believed he was hiding. The siege ended with two deaths and seven arrests but no definitive information on Abaaoud, who French authorities have called the mastermind of the violence that killed at least 129 in Paris last week. The wanted jihadi's own father believes prison - where he served time for petty crimes - changed him for the worse. After his son got out, Omar Abaaoud noticed "signs of radicalization," the elder Abaaoud's lawyer, Nathalie Gallant, told RTBF broadcasting Wednesday. If so, that would fit the pattern of a number of jihadis who were radicalized in prison. Associated Press (Chronicle-Herald, A15, Ottawa Sun, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript); * Agence France Presse (Le Nouvelliste, 3, La Tribune)

* Le cerveau des attaques mort ?

L'Europe nageait en pleine confusion hier, alors que tous s'interrogeaient à savoir si le présumé «cerveau» derrière les attentats de Paris était bel et bien mort lors de l'assaut de sept heures à Saint-Denis. «Le présumé chef des attentats de Paris (Abdelhamid Abaaoud) a été tué hier lors de l'assaut de la police française, ont affirmé deux hauts responsables des autorités européennes», a écrit le Washington Post hier. Mais aucun autre média ni les autorités françaises n'ont confirmé cette information, ce qui a soulevé plusieurs questionnements dans la population. L'opération a été «extrêmement difficile » en raison de «l'usage de fusils d'assaut, de tirs de sniper et d'une grande offensive d'explosifs», a lancé le procureur de Paris, François Molins. L'opération qui a duré sept heures visait bel et bien le présumé «cerveau» des attentats de vendredi. Au moins deux personnes sont mortes, dont une kamikaze qui «a activé son gilet explosif au début de l'assaut», a précisé la police qui n'a pas confirmé les noms. De plus, huit personnes ont été placées en garde à vue après l'opération, mais ni Abaaoud, ni Salah Abdeslam, l'un des suspects des attaques toujours en fuite, ne figurent parmi elles. Une information qui laisse donc croire qu'Abaaoud serait le deuxième mort. Le Journal de Québec, 5 (Journal de Montréal); * Daily Gleaner, B1 (Telegraph-Journal); Associated Press (Toronto Star); 1 (Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Toronto Sun); CNN

AIR FRANCE FLIGHT DIVERTED

Passengers aboard Air France Flight 055 didn't learn that a bomb threat was the reason their Paris-bound flight was being diverted to Halifax until after they landed Tuesday night. Genevieve Lapeyre, a pediatric anesthesiologist from Geneva, was flying back to Europe after a meeting in Washington, D.C. She is half-Swiss and half-French, and planned a three-day layover in Paris. The terrorist attacks Friday gave her a strong wish to be in the city. (...) None of the passengers panicked, but they felt something odd was going on, she said. At one point, she wondered if there had been another attack against Paris and the aircraft couldn't go there. After the Boeing 777 touched down at about 10:15 p.m., she soon realized there was something happening regarding her flight. "I saw the firemen and everything, and I said, 'OK, there is something else.'" Lapeyre said the pilot seemed to be trying to control his emotions. "He said, 'Don't worry.' He was too much trying to reassure us." On the tarmac, passengers were told to grab their belongings and get off the plane, which they did quickly. However, they were then housed for about 30 minutes in a bus parked alongside the aircraft, which some considered dangerous, she said. Halifax RCMP spokesman Cpl. Greg Church said 262 passengers and crew got off the jet within 15 minutes of landing, which is when officers began checking for explosives; none were found. The jet was declared explosives-free at 4:28 a.m. Wednesday. The passengers were taken to a secure area to pass through customs. Postmedia Network (Chronicle-Herald, A1, Guardian, Whitehorse Star, Acadie Nouvelle); Postmedia Network (Cape Breton Post, A9)

'Like A War Zone'

2 Dead, 8 in custody after paris police launch a massive early-morning raid against a suspected terror cell located in a reinforced apartment When Tagara Traoré, a former revolutionary soldier in his native Burkina Faso, was jolted awake by a boom early Wednesday, his "military reflex" kicked in. "You get up quickly and either hide or try to get out," he said. In socked feet and wearing the sweatpants he was sleeping in, he grabbed his key and ran out the door of his fourthstorey apartment, only to find a battalion of police rushing up the stairs, headlamps glaring. "I started sensing tear gas that was coming up the stairwell. I thought the building was on fire," he said. "The police told me, 'Go down, down, down!' There were so many they had to move aside to let me out." It was 4:20 a.m., and he had been caught in the middle of a massive anti-terror operation that quickly became a protracted gun battle between police and terror suspects. A woman in the targeted apartment in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis, identified by French media as a native of nearby Clichy, was one of the dead. Initial reports said she killed herself by detonating an explosive vest, but the French prosecutor's office later said the "point needs to be verified by an analysis of the body and human remains." At least one other suspect in the apartment was killed and eight people were taken into custody. Five police officers suffered minor injuries, and a police dog - Diesel, a Belgian shepherd - was killed by the terrorists, according to the national police. Paris prosecutor François Molin said the targeted apartment had a fortified door that withstood initial police attempts to break in and gave the terrorists time to mobilize and return fire. Daily Telegraph (Windsor Star, N1/Front, National Post, StarPhoenix, Gazette); 1 (Vancouver Sun, B1/Front, Leader-Post, National Post, Edmonton Journal, Ottawa Citizen, Whig-Standard, Calgary Herald); Toronto Star, A1; Globe and Mail,

A1; * Agence France Presse (Le Soleil, 22); * Associated Press (Times Colonist, A13, Times & Transcript)

Prochaine station, la guerre

Il devait être 4h20 quand Fares s'est mis à crier. «Maman! Maman! La guerre commence! Il y a des bombes!» Fares a 7 ans. De grands yeux noisette dans lesquels on lit l'effroi. «Il ne sait même pas c'est quoi, la guerre», me dit sa mère Souhila, 38 ans. Souhila, elle, sait. Elle est née en Algérie... J'étais dans l'avion quand l'assaut antiterroriste a été donné à Saint-Denis, dans la banlieue nord de Paris, non loin du Stade de France. Dès que l'avion s'est posé, des cellulaires de passagers ont sonné. «C'est la pagaille à Saint-Denis.» La «pagaille», le mot est faible. C'est Fares qui avait raison. Ça ressemblait plus à une guerre. Rue Corbillon, à l'angle de la rue de la République, au moins deux personnes ont été tuées, dont une femme kamikaze qui a activé sa ceinture d'explosifs. Un commando, lourdement armé, qui semblait prêt à passer à l'acte, a été démantelé. Pendant une heure, les habitants du quartier ont entendu des tirs nourris. Le bruit était si fort que certains ont cru qu'il y avait un bombardement. Il y a eu au moins 5000 munitions tirées par la police. Un immeuble éventré, criblé de balles. Des voisins terrorisés. Comme si on était à Gaza et non en banlieue parisienne. L'assaut a duré sept heures, durant lesquelles le quartier a été bouclé, le métro, fermé, les écoles aussi. Des résidents ont été évacués. Les riverains ont été sommés de ne pas sortir de chez eux. Une fois l'assaut terminé, j'ai pu prendre le métro pour la guerre. La Presse, A4/Front

Mission

Ce sont des spécialistes des assauts risqués, qui montent au front contre les pires terroristes. Le RAID, le commando de la police française qui est intervenu hier à Saint-Denis, est constamment sollicité depuis un an. A Paris, La Presse s'est entretenue avec l'ancien chef des négociateurs de l'unité, Christian Caupenne, pour dresser le portrait d'une équipe devenue mythique. Fondé il y a 30 ans, le RAID (pour Recherche, Assistance, Intervention, Dissuasion) est l'unité d'élite de la police nationale, destinée à intervenir partout en France pour contrer le terrorisme et le «grand banditisme». Elle est notamment intervenue lors de l'attaque du marché Hyper Cacher en janvier et à la salle de spectacle Bataclan, vendredi dernier. Selon le chef de la police nationale, Jean-Marc Falcone, l'assaut à Saint-Denis a été l'un des plus difficiles que ses troupes ont connu. «Les scènes vécues par le RAID sont très dures. Même ces hommes rodés à la violence ont été marqués», a-t-il déclaré hier à ce sujet. La Presse, A5/Front

 Paris attacks: Extremists may strike next with chemical, biological weapons, French PM says

With France still reeling from last week's deadly attacks in Paris, Prime Minister Manuel Valls warned Thursday that Islamic extremists might at some point use chemical or biological weapons, and urged lawmakers to extend a national state of emergency by three months. "Terrorism hit France not because of what it is doing in Iraq and Syria ... but for what it is," Valls told the lower house of Parliament. He added, "We know that there could also be a risk of chemical or biological weapons." Valls did not say there was a specific threat involving such weapons. The French Interior Ministry and Paris prosecutor's office, meanwhile, said it still remains unclear whether the suspected mastermind of last week's attacks, in which 129 people were killed and hundreds of others wounded, has been killed or is still at large. Officials said authorities are working on determining whether 27-year-old Belgian Abdelhamid Abaaoud was among those killed in a chaotic and bloody raid on an apartment in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis on Wednesday. Associated Press (CBC News)

 Belgium vows crackdown on terrorists, boost security spending

Belgium's prime minister on Thursday called for changes to the country's constitution to combat extremists, and promised hundreds of millions of euros to boost the security forces. Addressing the federal parliament as security forces were conducting raids around the capital Brussels, Charles Michel pledged to use changes to the constitution to extend preventive detention times for suspects from 24 hours to 72 hours. He also affirmed that Belgium would move forward alone on a system of airline passenger information sharing that European Union nations have been incapable of agreeing in four years. Associated Press (CTV News, Times Colonist)

 EU to tighten anti-terror laws

The European Commission, the EU's executive arm, will expand its anti-terrorist legislation early next year to target fighters like those involved in the Paris attacks. The new measures will widen the range of actions punishable under the legislation to include travelling for the purpose of carrying out a terrorist act, facilitating travel or receiving training to carry out an attack. In a direct response to the Paris killings, EU citizens who travel outside the bloc and then return to carry out attacks will be considered as foreign fighters, and those helping their movement will also face prosecution. The bloc's Migration, Home Affairs and Citizenship Commissioner, Dimitris Avramopoulos, told a news conference Wednesday that the Commission would have proposals ready by the end of November and wants to see them enacted "within the first two months of the next year." Toronto Sun, A56 (Calgary Sun)

 Killer's passport fueling fear of refugees

After the bombs and Kalashnikov fire of the Paris attacks, a mere document - a passport - found near the body of an attacker is generating a new wave of dread throughout Europe and beyond. But whether the document ended up there by chance, or was part of an elaborate plot to sow panic, is not clear. Regardless of the answer, the passport has played into the Islamic State group's hands by raising concerns that militants may be marching alongside the thousands of asylum seekers flowing into Europe. That possibility is redefining the debate over immigration in Europe and even the United States, and prompting a backlash against Muslim refugees. The far-right French leader Marine Le Pen called for an immediate end to the flow of migrants into France, while across the Atlantic about half of U.S. governors are taking steps to prevent absorbing Syrian refugees in their states, citing the passport. "This terrorist attack will clearly change Europe's refugee policies and how the arrivals in Europe are treated," said Konrad Pedziwiatr, a sociologist and expert on Islam in Europe at the Krakow University of Economics. "Already the open-door policy (in Germany and Sweden) of welcoming refugees was going to be reformed because the inflow is so significant that countries cannot cope with the numbers," he said. "What the Paris attacks add to this difficult situation is the additional element of fear." A passport bearing the name of Ahmad Al Mohammad, 25, was found near one of the suicide bombers who blew himself up outside the Stade de France football stadium. It indicates that he entered Greece from Turkey on Oct. 3 and later passed through Serbia and Croatia, getting registered in every new country. The passport's authenticity has not been determined, but fingerprints of the attacker match those taken by Greece and Serbia. The other attackers who have been identified so far are all European citizens. The oddness that a passport - an intact one - was found near a man who blew himself up is creating suspicions that it is part of a plan by the Islamic State to create a backlash against the refugees. "I have never heard of terrorists carrying passports with them," Pedziwiatr said. Associated Press (Whig-Standard, B5, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript)

 ISIS is slowly killing the European experiment

As neighbours and allies declare solidarity with France, few are facing up to the inevitable: the fact that fallout from Friday's terrorist attack in Paris will stall - perhaps even reverse - the political integration of Europe. The discovery that most of the terrorists identified so far were Muslims born in France, using neighbouring Belgium as a base, will add volume to loud demands for an end to the open-border policy among the 28 members of the European Union. Pressure to terminate what is known as the Schengen Area - a pillar of the EU political integration project, along with the now-debased euro and attempts to unify foreign and defence policies - has been building as about a million refugees from the Middle East and North Africa have flooded into Europe (...) While ISIS has taken responsibility for the outrage and was, at the very least, the inspiration for it, the Paris killings were, like almost every other terrorist attack in Canada, the United States and Europe in the last 14 years, a home-grown affair. Neither Canada nor the U.S. is immune to the popular suspicion that the floods of Syrian and Iraqi refugees are an easy route for ISIS to plant terrorists in target countries. The governors of over half the 50 states in the U.S. have said they will not participate in settling Syrian refugees. And the new government of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is facing growing pressure from both the public and provincial governments - on whom much of the responsibility for resettling refugees will fall - to rethink his campaign pledge to allow 25,000 Syrian migrants into Canada by the end of the year. iPolitics

 French expats still feel sting an ocean away

Juliette Elchinger was home in Montreal on Friday evening when her Twitter feed lit up with news of the terrorist assaults in Paris. "I went into a state of shock," the native Parisian said. "I just started to shake and cry." Five days later, the 19-year-old was still struggling to make sense of the violence visited on her cherished city. She stood on Wednesday surrounded by knots of other students and staff at the University of Montreal, some holding hands and wiping tears off stricken faces, for a sombre gathering of commemoration. In the days since the shocking attacks took the lives of 129 people, Ms. Elchinger has attended solidarity marches and commemorations, monitored news from Paris obsessively and joined other members of Montreal's large expatriate French community. Some have connections to the tragedy; Ms. Elchinger's best friend lost a professor, who was slain at the Bataclan theatre along with 88 others who had attended a rock concert there. For the expats, separation from events back home has fed feelings of loss and helplessness, along with a deepened call to their French identity. Globe and Mail, A9

 Free world solidarity after Paris

An editorial states, "There aren't a lot of game-changing moments in international affairs, says Peter Van Praagh. But the ISIS terrorist attacks on Paris last weekend, like the 9-11 attacks on New York and Washington in 2001, fall into that rare category. It is, he says, one of those "events that turn things." It has acutely heightened the public sense of "how vulnerable open societies are." But it has also produced, he believes, "a fundamental solidarity and common understanding that something has to be done to address it." "We are all affected now," the security specialist told our editorial board on Wednesday, after arriving in Nova Scotia to chair, for the seventh time, the annual Halifax International Security Forum. The forum will bring 300 delegates from 60 democratic countries to the city this weekend to brainstorm the complex angles of peace and security - military, political, economic, educational and cultural. The group ranges from four-star generals to ministers to aid organizations, journalists and scholars. Their agenda runs the gamut from building new anti-terror alliances to cutting off the financing of terrorism through drug and human trafficking. There was plenty of evidence in Halifax and elsewhere this week to show security issues now touch us all." Chronicle-Herald, A6

 Hollande faces the enemy from within

The streets of Paris are no strangers to mass bloodshed. The City of Light has borne witness to more than its share of extreme violence over the centuries. The worst of it has not been perpetrated by a foreign army. The enemy has most often come from within. From the Wars of Religion, through the Revolution and the Reign of Terror, to the Paris Commune, the French often worked through their differences in the bloodiest ways possible. Since the 1960s, Paris has been a repeated target of terrorists, often French citizens or immigrants, aggrieving in some way France's unresolved colonial past in North Africa or its mandates in the Middle East. The inspiration for the most recent attacks may have come from Iraq or Syria, but their perpetrators came from the Paris suburbs. The January assaults on the satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo and a kosher supermarket were conducted by French-born radicalized Muslims. Most of those involved in Friday's sickening attacks on cafés and a concert hall appear to have had similar backgrounds. "We know, and it's cruel to say it, it was French people who killed French people on Friday," President François Hollande said in a speech for the ages. "There are, living on our soil, individuals who move from delinquency to radicalization and then to terrorist criminality." Globe and Mail

 La vie doit reprendre, dit Hollande

Dans la foulée de la série d'attentats à Paris, le président français François Hollande a encouragé ses compatriotes à «défier les terroristes» en continuant de vivre normalement, en fréquentant les cafés, les musées, et les stades sans tomber dans la crainte et la xénophobie. Les terroristes prennent la vie des innocents, mais ils veulent aussi suspendre celle des autres, a soutenu le président, mercredi, lors d'un discours télévisé devant les maires de partout au pays. Il estime que les Français ont le «devoir» de poursuivre leurs activités normales. Il a martelé que la vie «devait reprendre pleinement», ajoutant que la sécurité serait resserrée dans les lieux publics. Le président français a assuré que la France resterait un pays «de liberté, de mouvement, de culture» qui ne «pliera pas à la peur». François Hollande s'est engagé à travailler avec ses alliés pour détruire le groupe armé État islamique, qui a revendiqué la responsabilité des attaques dans la capitale française qui ont fait 129 morts et 368 blessés. Dans une allocution prononcée quelques heures après une opération antiterroriste de la police en banlieue de

Paris, le président a réitéré que la France était «en guerre avec les terroristes», mais il a aussi appelé les Français à la retenue. Associated Press (Le Droit, 17)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

* Coderre veut éviter un autre Lac-Mégantic

Depuis la tragédie de Lac-Mégantic, la Ville de Montréal se fait beaucoup plus prudente dans l'aménagement de son territoire, a expliqué Denis Coderre, hier, en réaction au reportage sur la récente interdiction de toute construction près des installations de Suncor. En revanche, au gouvernement du Québec, on ne s'émeut guère de la situation. Hier, La Presse faisait état d'un moratoire interdisant toute construction dans un rayon de 435 mètres des trois ballons de butane de Suncor. Même une enseigne de quatre pieds sur six ne peut y être installée. Le Centre de sécurité civile juge cette zone rouge à «risque très élevé» dans l'éventualité d'un accident impliquant les sphères de butane. Une explosion est jugée peu probable, mais elle provoquerait d'énormes dégâts. Or, cette zone rouge est traversée par l'autoroute Métropolitaine et 100 000 automobilistes y circulent chaque jour. La Presse, A16

* Crise en santé publique - La surveillance de l'état de santé des Méganticois écope

Bien que les impacts de la tragédie de Lac-Mégantic se fassent toujours sentir dans la population, la Direction de santé publique de l'Estrie a été contrainte de se départir de deux experts qui travaillaient de façon spécifique sur ce dossier. En janvier dernier, la Direction de santé publique de l'Estrie publiait une étude révélant que l'accident ferroviaire survenu à Lac-Mégantic en 2013 faisait encore souffrir la population : 95 % de Méganticois disaient avoir été touchés par la tragédie. On observait plus de dépressions, de troubles anxieux et de problèmes de consommation d'alcool. La directrice de la santé publique, la Dre Mélissa Généreux, s'en inquiétait. Pourtant, quelques semaines plus tard, elle mettait à pied le professionnel affecté à la surveillance de l'état de santé de la population de Lac-Mégantic. Ce dernier a fait les frais d'une vague de compressions imposée à toutes les directions de santé publique régionales au printemps dernier, dont Le Devoir tente de cerner les impacts dans une série diffusée cette semaine. En Estrie, la Direction de santé publique a dû couper 1,21 million sur un budget de 2,5 millions. " Ça représente 40 % de notre budget, ça a été toute une épreuve pour nous, tout un choc à absorber ", soupire Mélissa Généreux en entrevue téléphonique. Avec son équipe, elle a tenté de faire les choix " qui allaient engager le moins de conséquences possible sur la population ". Mais elle devait couper quelque part. " Ce n'est pas parce qu'on s'est dit que les impacts étaient moins importants, mais quand vient le temps de choisir les postes, il y a toutes sortes de considérants, en matière d'ancienneté entre autres. " L'enquête annuelle sur la population de Lac-Mégantic, qui est financée par un autre " petit budget protégé ", sera maintenue. " Ce qui a été plus difficile, c'est que parallèlement à ça, on ne voulait pas surveiller juste une fois par année, on avait donc un agent de programmation, planification et recherche (APPR) -- celui dont on a supprimé le poste --, qui se chargeait de faire des bulletins de surveillance périodiques. C'est lui qui prenait le crayon et qui faisait l'analyse de ces données. " Le Devoir, A1

* Spend more to prevent dam spills, experts say

As miners globally review the way they store waste in the wake of another horrific dam spill, the solution may be as simple as it is dramatic: spend a lot more. Images of sludge spewing into towns and rivers could be a thing of the past if mines used different types of storage such as removing water or building on more stable ground. While that can be as much as 10 times costlier for companies already squeezed by slumping prices, the cost is much higher when things go wrong. The cleanup bill for the Nov. 5 spill at the Samarco iron-ore venture in Brazil, owned by BHP Billiton Ltd. and Vale SA, probably will exceed $1 billion US, Deutsche Bank AG said. Then there's lost output and potential lawsuits. "A failure is a lot more expensive than doing it right," said Dirk van Zyl, professor of mining engineering at the University of British Columbia and one of three experts on a panel into a dam spill in Canada last year. Samarco says its dams were deemed safe in a July inspection and that it's too early to determine reasons for the spill. On Monday, BHP chief executive officer Andrew Mackenzie said the company is "carrying out a thorough review of all of our dam facilities of scale." On the same day, Vale said it's open to improvements, even after concluding that its other installations, which use state-of-the-art safety practices, were fully compliant. The Samarco breach, which propelled about 50 billion litres of mud into communities below, comes a year after Imperial Metals Corp.'s Mount Polley mine in Likely, southeast of Prince George, also dumped billions of gallons into lakes and rivers. Bloomberg (Vancouver Sun, D3)

 Lepreau residents evacuated in simulation

As an imaginary cloud of radioactive steam was vented from the Point Lepreau nuclear power plant Wednesday, real calls went out to residents within a 20 kilometre radius telling them to get out. By noon about 150 people were gathered in the gym at the G. Forbes Elliot Forbes Athletics Centre at UNBSJ and there was even space set up nearby for pets in a separate centre run by a disaster animal response team from Nova Scotia. It was the final part of a two-day exercise simulating a nuclear emergency at the power plant based on a couple of years of planning. The emergency was centred around an extreme bad weather event damaging the plant, said Meghan Gerrish a spokeswoman for NB Power... In September members of the media were given a tour of the plant to see the four large, mobile, diesel power generators that were added as a second level of backup to make sure there would always be power to control the equipment. The plant already had a backup generating system but the portable generators are a second level. Large water pumps capable of shooting streams of water over the outside of the reactor to cool it were also purchased. At that time Tony Munn, emergency preparedness manager at the plant, said the industry has learned many lessons from the three major nuclear accidents in the past 50 years - Three Mile Island in the United States, Chernobyl in Russia and Fukushima in Japan. Observers from utilities around the world were at the power plant during the exercise, Gerrish said. "There are over 1,000 people involved in this exercise," she said. Telegraph-Journal, B1

 Body found near site of Tofino whale-watching tragedy - BC Coroners Services says it can't confirm if it's the passenger who was missing, presumed dead

A body has been recovered close to Vargas Island near Tofino, B.C., says the BC Coroners Service. On Oct. 25, a whale-watching boat capsized in the area, killing five people. Another victim, 27 year-old Australian Raveshan Pillay, was never found, but presumed dead. "While I appreciate there is certainly interest with the possibility this may be linked to the missing person from the Leviathan, it is premature to suggest so," said Matthew Brown with the Coroners Service. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Terror travel investigations on the rise

Radicalized Canadians intent on going to far-off combat zones are developing sophisticated cover stories and using "broken travel patterns" to disguise their true motivations, according to an internal RCMP document that reveals public safety officials were, as of one year ago, closely monitoring about 50 foreign fighters abroad and 14 who had returned home. Family and friends are often reluctant to notify police if they suspect someone is planning a trip, the document states. Also, the speed with which a person becomes radicalized to violence and makes travel plans is sometimes so fast, police only become aware of them after they've left the country. "There is no doubt that the number and complexity of terrorist travel investigations has increased," said the briefing document, which was prepared for the RCMP commissioner and obtained by the National Post through an access-to-information request. Though the document was prepared a year ago, many of the challenges of identifying extremist travellers persist, said a Dalhousie University researcher studying Canadian foreign fighters. Amarnath Amarasingam said much of ISIL's advice to people who want to migrate to Syria is to "blend in to Western ways of life," especially right before they leave... The wave of attacks in Paris last Friday that killed 129 people has heightened concerns about the foreign-fighter phenomenon. A new report this week from the think-tank Institute for Economics and Peace said an estimated 25,000 to 30,000 foreign fighters from 100 countries have flowed into Iraq and Syria since 2011 - half from neighbouring countries and a quarter from Europe and Turkey. Public safety officials in Ottawa said Wednesday there was no evidence of any Canadian involvement in the Paris attacks. They were also unaware of any direct threats to Canada related to the attacks. Amarasingam said he believes at least 60 Canadians have gone to fight in Iraq and Syria. One of them, Toronto-born Farah Mohamed Shiridon, who police say has served in combat, recruiting and propaganda roles with ISIL, was added to INTERPOL'S wanted list this week. Neither Bob Paulson, the RCMP commissioner, nor Michel Coulombe, director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, would say Wednesday how many high-risk travellers their agencies are tracking. Postmedia News (Vancouver

Sun, B1/Front, National Post, Ottawa Citizen, Windsor Star, Leader-Post, StarPhoenix, Calgary Herald, Gazette, Edmonton Journal, Province)

Ontario accent heard in video?

Investigators are working to confirm a potential Canadian accent heard in an English audio recording released by what is believed to be the Islamic State. The recording was released Saturday and claims responsibility for the terrorist attacks that shook Paris and the rest of the world last weekend. "It is concerning if it is Canadian, but it is speculative at this stage," said RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson told a news conference Wednesday, adding that the Mounties are working to confirm it. Meanwhile, a dialect expert south of the border said it's very likely the male speaker has a Canadian - specifically an Ontarian - accent. "I mainly listened for vowel variations because that's where most of the variation in English is," said Erik Thomas, a linguistics professor at North Carolina State University. The professor was first asked by CNN to analyze the recording. He took detailed notes on words chosen by the speaker in the recording, such as "explosive" and "hand". "Everything he uttered seemed to match up with forms that predominate in Canada," he said. Certain vowels, such as the short 'o', were among the giveaways suggesting the accent originated in regions of either Canada or northern U.S. states. Winnipeg Sun, A7 (Ottawa Sun, Toronto Sun, Calgary Sun, Toronto Sun)

Hatred burns hot, but not very bright

Among responses to the scattered targeting of Muslims in the wake of the Paris attacks, the most indicative might be the safety preparations under way at a Hindu temple in Hamilton, Ont. Hindus had nothing to do with the killings in Paris. The "brains" behind the terrorist bloodshed appear to have lived in Belgium, not India. The preparations in Hamilton are predicated on the assumption that the sort of people who firebomb mosques and beat up helpless women won't know the difference. In other words, that they're so stupid they direct their hatred at anything that strikes them as vaguely Middle Eastern, even if they're off by an entire culture and a continent or two. There's good reason for their concern. The temple was set aflame in the days following the 9/11 terror attacks in the U.S., by someone who apparently confused it with a nearby mosque. A number of synagogues were also targeted at the time. Hatred may be all-consuming, but it's not very smart. That's already evident from the incidents of the past few days. The only mosque in Peterborough was torched by a person or persons unable to grasp the difference between peaceable people going about their life and the barbaric practices of the terrorists who characterize themselves as the Islamic State. A woman picking up her son at a school in Toronto was kicked, beaten and robbed in mid-afternoon by two men who are so stupid they think a hijab - which she was wearing - must signal support for the sort of brutalities meted out in Syria, most often on Muslims themselves. In Montreal, a man wearing a mask threatened to kill an Arab or a Muslim every week, obviously too dim to realize that plenty of Arabs aren't Muslims. There's a difference between ignorance and stupidity. Ignorance is a lack of knowledge. Stupidity is the determined projection of ignorance. It's likely that the people responsible for the incidents in Toronto, Peterborough and Montreal are both, but while ignorance is likely, stupidity is certain. Postmedia News (National Post, A1/Front)

Man charged after threat to kill Arabs in Quebec

A Montreal man will spend the next few days in jail after being charged in connection with a YouTube video in which someone wearing a Joker mask says one Arab would be murdered in Quebec every week. Jesse Pelletier, 24, was arraigned on Wednesday on charges of uttering threats, possession of a false weapon, public incitement of hatred and hoax regarding terrorist activities. Pelletier, who was arrested early Wednesday morning, will remain behind bars until his bail hearing Monday. The person in the video was wearing a Joker mask and could be seen brandishing what looked like a pistol as he made the threats and spoke about last week's terrorist attacks in Paris that killed 129 people. "It's really time to act," the person said in the three-minute video. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, A8, Calgary Sun, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript, Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Kingston Whig-Standard, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun, Red Deer Advocate), Presse canadienne (La Tribune, Voix de l'Est, Le Droit, Le Devoir), Montreal Gazette, Toronto Star

To combat extremism, we must work together

An opinion piece states "Last week, evil struck. There were vicious attacks in Paris, Beirut and Baghdad. I grieve with the families and friends of the victims and hope the perpetrators are brought to justice. Violent extremism is universally condemned; terror is never the answer and the loss of one innocent life is equal to that of all of humanity. We cannot let such horrific violence achieve its goal of striking fear into our communities and dividing us. It is deeply distressing to many that there has been apparent backlash against Muslim communities, including in Canada. In Peterborough, Ont., a mosque was set on fire last Saturday. Police are investigating the fire as a potential hate crime. This week in Toronto, a hijab-wearing woman was verbally assaulted, punched repeatedly in the stomach and had her hijab ripped off. Canadian Muslims are naturally very concerned. At the same time, Canadian Muslims know these cowardly acts do not represent our society. They are simply the ignorant expressions of criminals (...). Experts point out that there is no single reason why such people travel the path of radicalization. The roots are complex, the solutions not obvious. And combating the problem is made yet harder by the reality that this new brand of brazen terror is a contemporary phenomenon - it did not exist in the 1980s or 1990s. Toronto Star, A25

 Doctor to assess man caught with knife on Parliament Hill

A Toronto man arrested for allegedly carrying a hidden weapon at the entrance to the Centre Block of Parliament was remanded in custody Wednesday. Yasin Ali, 56, was detained by the Parliamentary Protective Service on Tuesday after a security screening discovered what police say was a knife. Ali made a brief court appearance Wednesday on a charge of carrying a concealed weapon. Defence lawyer Peter Azzi said his client is due back in court on Friday and will be assessed by a doctor. Neither Azzi nor the RCMP would discuss media reports that described the weapon as a meat cleaver. RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson applauded the "great job" by the protective service, for which the Mounties have day-to-day responsibility. "The individual was identified behaving oddly, suspiciously. And one of our officers challenged him, saw the knife, took him into custody," Paulson said. "I understand that it is less a concern around so-called national security considerations than it is a mental-health issue." Security on Parliament Hill has been tight since Oct. 22, 2014, when Michael Zehaf Bibeau gunned down a soldier at the nearby National War Memorial and sprinted through the main doors of Centre Block. Moments later, Zehaf Bibeau was fatally shot by security officials outside the Library of Parliament. Canadian Press (Times colonist, A8)

 Des musulmans sur leurs gardes après des menaces

Menaces de mort au téléphone, agressions verbales dans la rue, messages haineux sur les réseaux sociaux: des membres de la communauté musulmane de Montréal affirment vivre dans la peur depuis les attentats de Paris. «Depuis ce qui est arrivé à Paris, je ressens une peur chez les musulmans. Je crains que tout cela finisse mal», lance Haroun Bouazzi, de l'Association des musulmans et des Arabes pour la laïcité au Québec (AMAL). «J'ai l'impression que ce n'est qu'une question de temps avant qu'un membre de notre communauté se fasse casser les deux jambes. Il y a trop de haine sur les réseaux sociaux», poursuit-il. Mercredi matin, le téléphone ne dérougissait plus à l'AMAL, plusieurs citoyens s'inquiétant de menaces de mort proférées sur les réseaux sociaux par un homme déguisé en joker, qui a finalement été arrêté par les policiers. «Beaucoup de gens m'ont écrit en panique. C'est étonnant de voir à quel point ils vivent dans la peur», affirme M. Bouazzi. Haroun Bouazzi dit recevoir régulièrement des menaces sur le site de son organisation. Mais il affirme ressentir une «pression supplémentaire» depuis quelques jours. Il n'est pas le seul. Joint mercredi par Le Journal, Mehmet Deger, président de la mosquée Dorval, a rapporté avoir reçu un coup de fil menaçant mardi après-midi (...) Cependant, le Centre islamique de l'est de Montréal de l'imam controversé Adil Charkaoui, de même qu'une mosquée du quartier Hochelaga, ont été vandalisés au cours des derniers jours. QMI Agency (Journal de Quebec, Journal de Montréal)

 'Loves Me Not' Poem Captures Heartbreaking Reality Of Islamophobia In Canada

Taunts in public. Comments online. And recently, physical abuse. In the past months, Canada has witnessed far too many attacks against Muslims, particularly women. Earlier this week, a Muslim woman was physically assaulted in front of her children's school and called a "terrorist." In October, a woman wearing a niqab was attacked at a Toronto mall. It's difficult for most of us to imagine the emotional trauma victims of such discrimination endure. But one poem, written by a group of Muslim women in Toronto, captures the heartbreaking reality. "Loves Me Not", a video poem created earlier this year during a filmmaking workshop hosted by TIFF Special Delivery and advocacy group Outburst, tells the story of a young Muslim girl who wears the hijab. The poem begins with the girl, her hijab constructed with colourful petals. She holds a flower in her hand, but as she suffers from Islamophobia her flower begins to die. "Everywhere she looked, people would stare," the poem states. "They asked, 'Is that something your dad forced you to wear?'" According to Outburst's Facebook page, the poem was inspired by Islamophobia endured by the writers as they attended school in Toronto. The video continues to show the lasting impact of discrimination. "One day she broke down, the comments made her drown." Huffington Post

* Web et jeux vidéo au service du terrorisme

Le 10 novembre dernier, soit trois jours avant les attentats de Paris, le ministre de l'Intérieur belge Jan Jambon a laissé entendre que des terroristes utilisaient une console PS4 pour communiquer entre eux, une information qui a refait surface au cours des derniers jours. La réalité: aucune console PS4 n'a été retrouvée lors des nombreuses perquisitions effectuées en France et en Belgique. Ce qui ne veut pas dire que les jeux vidéo ne jouent pas un rôle dans les milieux terroristes. En 2013, grâce à des documents rendus publics par Edward Snowden, le Guardian et le New York Times ont révélé que la NSA et la CIA avaient déjà mené des opérations d'espionnage sur des consoles Xbox. Quelle utilisation les terroristes peuvent-ils faire des jeux vidéo? «Dans les jeux multijoueurs (pensons au jeu Call of Duty, par exemple), on retrouve des plateformes de "chat" afin que les joueurs puissent échanger entre eux, explique Hugo Loiseau, professeur à l'École de politique appliquée de l'Université de Sherbrooke. La Presse, A14

* Hindu temple gratified by public support

Young Muslims from the Toronto area would like to help pay for the damage caused at the local Hindu temple that was vandalized this week, but a temple board member said insurance covered the costs and the windows have been repaired. So the group known as Dawahnet, which means "spreading knowledge" in Arabic, will donate $2,299 that was collected in 24 hours on a gofundme website to the temple. Temple board member Vijay Solanki said the temple was overwhelmed with public support with many offering to help with the damage costs. "We gratuitously thanked them for the offer, but it is not appropriate to raise thousands of dollars for something that didn't cost us," he said. The gofundme page was set to raise $10,000 for the Kitchener temple by Dec. 1, but organizer Arshia Lakhani of Mississauga said they closed the site after speaking to the temple (...) Swami Chaitanya Jyoti and two other women were in the building and were frightened by the noise at the back of the building shortly after 11 p.m. No one was hurt in the incident. Hours before the vandals struck, Jyoti was at the Kitchener vigil honouring those who lost their lives in the Paris terrorist attacks. Record, B2

* Extend vigilance to everyday threats

An opinion piece states "In the wake of the attacks in Paris, there has been no shortage of security experts in the media talking about how to best keep safe. RCMP Assistant Commissioner Roger Brown, for example, articulated what everyone intuitively knows - there's no real science to spotting a terrorist plot. The best you can hope for is your gut tells you something is wrong. "When you do find yourself in a position where you see or do become aware of something that's not right, the next logical step is to report it to the proper authorities," Mr. Brown said. To his credit, the assistant commissioner hasn't fanned the flames or paranoia. He's done a good job of explaining the scope of the threat in Canada, not exaggerating it. David Charters of the Gregg Centre for the Study of War and Society at the University of New Brunswick has a similar message, calling an attack "a possibility but a relatively remote possibility." "The message 'If you see something, say something' is not a bad idea," Mr. Charters says. This is sound advice. It's true New Brunswick hasn't been the target of a terrorist attack, which isn't to say it's been a terror-free province. Justin Bourque's rampage in Moncton remains fresh in New Brunswickers' memories. And who can forget the seven months Allan Legere was on the loose in 1989. While the threat of a terrorist attack in Fredericton is remote, it's no excuse to be complacent. It's the reason schools practice lockdown drills. It's the reason passing through security at airports has become a much more intimate experience thanks to body scans and random searches." Daily Gleaner, A8

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Douanes à Bagotville: Lebel offre sa collaboration

Au cours d'un entretien avec le journaliste du Quotidien, le député conservateur de Lac-Saint-Jean affirme que le gouvernement Harper était prêt à annoncer, il y a quelques mois, un projet-pilote à travers le Canada, mais que la défaite électorale du 19 octobre avait modifié les plans. Depuis plusieurs années, les compagnies aériennes et les passagers qui se rendent en vacances dans le Sud réclament un service de douanes à l'aéroport de Bagotville. Il faut savoir que le service existe pour les voyages d'affaires de 30 passagers et moins seulement. Présentement, lorsque l'avion quitte le Mexique, Cuba, le Panama ou la République dominicaine, le pilote doit obligatoirement faire un arrêt à Québec. Les touristes doivent débarquer et passer par les douanes. Chaque fois, l'arrêt dure au minimum une heure et oblige les compagnies d'aviation à défrayer des sommes d'argent pour avoir le droit de se poser, en plus des dépenses de carburant que cela implique. (...) Au cours des dernières années, Denis Lebel et des fonctionnaires du gouvernement ont tenté de trouver une solution qui ne serait pas coûteuse pour ce projet. Et l'ancien ministre y était parvenu. Chaque atterrissage à Québec entraîne des coûts assez importants pour les compagnies aériennes. Ils seraient de l'ordre d'environ 10 000$, que les voyageurs paient sur leur billet. «Ce que je propose, c'est que l'on prenne cette somme et qu'on l'investisse dans les équipes de douaniers. Ça ne coûterait rien de plus au gouvernement, mais ça éviterait une escale.» «L'équipe volante des douaniers pourrait être formée des douaniers actuels de l'aéroport et on pourrait ajouter des militaires et des policiers à la retraite pour donner un coup de main. Au départ, ce serait un projet temporaire, soit pour la durée des vols offerts vers les destinations du Sud», analyse Denis Lebel. La Presse

L'ABC des achats de Noël en ligne plusieurs consommateurs n'aiment pas faire la tournée des centres commerciaux pour faire leurs emplettes des fêtes. de nos jours, il est possible d'éviter cette épreuve annuelle en commandant ses cadeaux en ligne. Selon un récent sondage du Conseil québécois du commerce de détail (CQCD), plus du quart des Québécois (26 %) prévoit acheter un ou des cadeaux sur inter-net cette année. Année après année, ce geste devient toujours plus populaire. En 2010, seulement 11 % des Québécois prévoient acheter en ligne pour la période des Fêtes. (...) En théorie, en achetant sur un site américain, vous épargnez la taxe de vente, car vous êtes résident d'un autre pays. Cela dit, bon nombre d'États américains n'ont tout simplement pas de taxe de vente. L'économie atteint près de 15 %, mais elle prive le Québec de revenus. Par contre, à la frontière, votre paquet pourrait être vérifié par l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada, qui procède de façon aléatoire. Le cas échéant, on vous facturera des frais de dédouanement et des taxes canadiennes. Ces frais augmenteront le coût de votre achat. Journal de Québec, 42; * Journal de Montréal, 36

U.S. border airports seeing drop in Canadian travelers

The shuffle off to Buffalo to catch a cheap flight on a U.S. airline is losing its shine, thanks to a lower loonie. "We have seen an impact, but it's difficult to quantify the exact number," said Pascal Cohen, senior manager of marketing at the Buffalo Niagara International Airport. That's because no data is collected on citizenship, when passengers arrive to catch their flight. However, airport officials do conduct licence plate surveys at the parking lot at the Buffalo airport. Previously, when the Canadian dollar was at par with the U.S. dollar, as many as 40 per cent of vehicles were Ontario plates. These days, the airport estimates it is about 15 to 20 per cent fewer Ontario plates. Cohen says overall passenger volume at the Buffalo airport is up 1.9 per cent, year over year, which could be attributed to an improving U.S. economy. It's unclear whether Canadian airports will enjoy a bump in traffic as travellers choose to fly from home airports. Pearson airport says passenger traffic on transborder routes are up this year, but can't attribute that to a shift in travel patterns. Toronto Star, S11

 U.S. to have tariffs against Cape Breton paper

A series of costly duties will be levied against Canadian mills, including one in Point Tupper, that produce glossy paper following a vote Wednesday affirming the trade action by the U.S. International Trade Commission. The trade body says the vote was part of the final phase of a countervailing duty investigation into Canadian imports of supercalendered paper, which is mainly used for magazines, catalogues, corporate brochures and advertising inserts... Canada's international trade minister Chrystia

Freeland, issued a statement saying an appeal under the North American Free Trade Agreement will determine if the countervailing duties are being applied in accordance with the laws of the United States. Canadian Press (Cape Breton Post. A1, A4); Chronicle Herald, A1

 SNAPSHOT: Children in immigration detention

The location of CBSA's three immigration detention centres. CROSSINGS. Chronicling the global refugee and migrant experience 65 Number of days spent in a Canada Border Services Agency immigration holding centre (as of Nov. 13) by one of the two children currently waiting to hear the results of a refugee claim. The other has been there for 18 days. An agency spokesperson said that both children's parents prefer they stay in the centre with their families, rather than be relocated by child-protection services. "If you are a Canadian citizen and you're born in immigration detention or you're a Canadian citizen but your parents are undocumented, get arrested and placed in detention, the parents have a choice to give their children over to Children's Aid Society custody and never see them again or bring them in with them in prison. Adults make the difficult decision to bring their kids into prison ... What does a two-year-old do?" Globe and Mail, L4

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

 Blackmailers target clients of Ashley Madison - Complaints to FTC claim online extortionists active in wake of site's hacking

Victims of the Ashley Madison hack say they are being blackmailed months after millions of customers had their information leaked online. Complaints filed with the U.S. Federal Trade Commission detail how customers continue to feel the aftermath of the July attack on the Toronto-based adultery website. "A recent hack from the company exposed numerous amounts of private information from me. Now I am being harassed by others who are maliciously using the contents of that information," wrote one person. The hackers, who are still at large, leaked the information online, causing shock waves across the world as millions of alleged Ashley Madison customers had their dirty laundry aired. Toronto Police are still investigating the cyber attack, which they previously linked to online hate crimes, online scams and two unconfirmed reports of suicide. Toronto Star, S12

 More offers too good to be true - Fraudsters finding new ways to victimize computer users

An opinion piece states "Raise your hand if this has happened to you: A telephone call from Microsoft (or Windows) telling you your computer needs immediate attention. An email from your bank notifying you that your bank account has been compromised and you need to reset your password. Or, you are visiting a website, to get a recipe or read some news, and you get a screen message that your computer is running slowly so 'click here' to repair the problem. Keep your hand raised if you are a senior. Well then, join the club. And it's a growing club because fraudsters can easily get your phone or email address and with mass calls and/or mailings are sure to grab more and more unsuspecting customers. Locating the scammers is almost impossible; many are out of country and most use disposable cellphones that are difficult to trace. Here's a taste of how it all goes down. An elderly friend, let's call him Blake (whom I had previously helped with computer issues) called me to say that Microsoft had phoned him and he had allowed the caller remote access to his computer. The "technician" immediately claimed to find mountains of viruses and offered to clean his computer - for a price. What credit card would he like to use? Blake, rightfully reluctant to give out his card number, hesitated. The caller pressed him further, this time to go to Western Union and send cash. When Blake once again refused, the caller informed him that unless he paid $179 his computer would become inoperable. Blake hung up. When he called me I congratulated him for not responding to an obvious scam, but here's the thing: the scammer had reset his user password and Blake could not get into his computer. Not an easy fix. Other similar examples include opening your computer only to find a detailed welcome screen seemingly from the FBI/RCMP warning you to pay a fine for illegal downloads or else your computer will remain in lockdown. This kind of malware is more easily removed, but how many people - especially seniors - are intimidated and fall for these and similar schemes?" Hamilton Spectator, A15

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

A night on the town

At 9:50 p.m. Nov. 4, two police trucks responded to a call about a woman threatening to commit suicide. The call came from a family member and was relayed to the detachment over the phone. "The whole town doesn't need to hear that over the scanner," said Const. Yannick Gagnon as he followed a vehicle to where the woman lives. In the end, police decided the woman wasn't an imminent threat to herself and took her to a relative's home. "Just to be on the safe side, we're not going to let her be alone," said Gagnon. "If she didn't have family to go to, we would bring her to the hospital to get her cleared, and if she was imminently suicidal she would be taken to the hospital right away. Better safe than sorry." He said this way if there are more concerns over the course of the night, at least the officers know the situation. Gagnon arrived at the RCMP detachment shortly before 7 p.m. on Nov. 4 to get ready for night shift. It was "superconstable" night, something that happens once every two weeks or so when shifts overlap and nearly all officers work on a given day. It means they can get caught up on paperwork and share important events with the next crew to come on. Gagnon's regular partner, Const. Mackenzie McGuffin, spent the shift preparing for a case going to court the next morning. "It's what ties everything together," he said. "You can respond to a call, but if you don't follow up with the paperwork, there's no chance those charges will go through." Gagnon said he was a few weeks into Depot, where all RCMP members go to be trained, before he realized the job was 90 per cent pencil-pushing and 10 per cent "fun stuff." "I wanted to quit right there," he joked. Inuvik Drum

Man charged over concealed cleaver

A Toronto man who allegedly tried to carry a meat cleaver onto Parliament Hill is to undergo a psychiatric assessment. A lawyer for Yasin Ali asked for the assessment in court Wednesday after the 56-year-old appeared by video from the courthouse cellblock on a charge of carrying a concealed weapon. He will remain in jail until his next appearance on Friday, when he is to appear in court in person. The man had a ticket to visit the Peace Tower, and was in line to go through the visitors' entrance at about 11:30 a.m. on Tuesday when a House of Commons security guard asked him to open his coat. The guard found the man was concealing a large cleaver with an approximately 15-cm-long blade. The man never made it as far as the metal detectors. RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson told reporters that Ali is known to authorities, but "not in the sort of counter-terrorism context." In fact, Paulson does not believe that the man's actions were politically motivated or an act of terror. Postmedia Network (Windsor Star, N5, Toronto Sun, Ottawa Citizen); ; *La Presse; * Canadian Press, (Times Colonist, A8)

 La GRC pourrait avoir agi illégalement, dit la juge

Une juge de la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique a affirmé que la preuve tendait à montrer que la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) avait agi illégalement durant une opération d'infiltration antiterrorisme de haut profil, et a ordonné à la police de remettre des documents juridiques confidentiels. La juge Catherine Bruce n'a pas encore déterminé si la GRC avait piégé John Nuttall et Amanda Korody pour qu'ils organisent un complot visant à faire exploser le parlement de la Colombie-Britannique en 2013, mais elle a indiqué que les agents pourraient être coupables d'avoir facilité en connaissance de cause un acte terroriste durant leur opération d'infiltration. «Il existe un lien suffisamment étroit entre les actes illégaux commis par la GRC et les faits reprochés aux accusés pour soutenir une allégation d'abus de procédures», a-t-elle écrit. Mme Bruce a ordonné à la police de dévoiler des avis juridiques confidentiels obtenus relativement à l'opération secrète pendant laquelle des agents se faisaient passer pour des combattants djihadistes. «Ces documents fournissent un aperçu fondamental de l'état d'esprit de tous les agents mêlés à l'intervention», a-t-elle mentionné. La confidentialité de la correspondance avec un avocat est habituellement protégée, mais la magistrate a indiqué que les agents de la GRC avaient renoncé à ce droit en dévoilant délibérément une portion de l'information en cour. La juge estime qu'il est pertinent de savoir si les policiers ont suivi les conseils de l'avocat, car cela pourrait montrer une mauvaise foi de leur part. John Nuttall et Amanda Korody ont été reconnus coupables plus tôt cette année sous des accusations de terrorisme pour avoir planifié de perpétrer un attentat sur le site de l'Assemblée législative de la Colombie-Britannique lors des célébrations de la Fête du Canada de 2013, mais leurs avocats ont argué que la GRC les avait piégés et que le complot n'aurait jamais été organisé sans l'aide de la police. La Presse Canadienne (Le Nouvelliste, 14, La Voix de l'Est); CBC News;

Postmedia News (Province, A8, Times Colonist); Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun, A2, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Province, Globe and Mail, S3)

 Les agences se font rassurantes

Les grands patrons des agences canadiennes de sécurité et du renseignement ont cherché à se faire rassurants, hier : ils ont bel et bien la capacité de faire les vérifications qui s'imposent afin de protéger les Canadiens contre les menaces potentielles posées par l'accueil rapide de 25 000 réfugiés d'ici la fin de l'année. « Je veux que les Canadiens sachent qu'en tant que directeur du SCRS, je suis sûr que les mesures en vigueur sont robustes et que j'ai pleinement confiance qu'elles seront appropriées », a déclaré Michel Coulombe, directeur du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS). De plus en plus de gens au Canada expriment leur inquiétude devant cet accueil jugé trop rapide et un nombre trop élevé de réfugiés d'ici six semaines. Les chefs du SCRS, de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), de l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada (ASFC) et le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique ont livré une rare conférence de presse conjointe pour répondre à ces préoccupations. Ils ont fourni quelques détails sur la situation sécuritaire au pays dans la foulée des attentats de Paris et sur leurs démarches pour assurer la sécurité tout en respectant la promesse électorale du Parti libéral. La Presse Canadienne (Voix de l'Est, La Presse,); La Presse

 Takes two to tango in Duffy trial

The Ol' Duff will be strutting today, his mind firmly convinced that, besides his courtroom drama playing a key role in bringing down the spiteful Harper government, he will soon be walking out of court totally vindicated. This has been Duffy's firm belief from the outset, and he has sent chastising emails to many in the media who presupposed his guilt. (...) In fact, the RCMP exonerated Wright of any wrongdoing and, after he testified about cutting the cheque to Duffy, he skedaddled back to England and his job as managing director in the London office of Onex Corp. There is no jury here. It is trial by judge alone, so it comes down to Ontario Court Judge Charles Vaillancourt to decide if there was a bribe and, if so, then solve the riddle of who bribed who. But armchair jurors are already taking bets on acquittal. The most entertaining portion of the trial, of course, has been defence attorney Donald Bayne's tarring of the Prime Minister's Office, even though who-knew-what and/or who did or did not tell the prime minister about Wright's cheque has nothing to do with Duffy's guilt or innocence. Postmedia Network (Calgary Sun, A15)

 Winnipegger warns of immigration phone scam - Callers demand payment

More than 45 years after Winnipeg resident Monina Relano moved to Canada from the Philippines, she got a phone call Tuesday saying there was a problem with her immigration paperwork. "I was scared," said Relano. Though she's been a Canadian citizen since 1975, she was taken aback by the authoritative voice on the phone. The man told her she didn't fill out a required immigration form and now had to pay an out-of-court settlement of $2,490 or the RCMP would be at her door. Relano figured out it was an immigration phone scam but worries more recent newcomers without permanent status in Canada might be conned. She wants to warn them before they get the call and end up swindled. Winnipeg Free Press, B6

 Diverse workers sought by RCMP

The RCMP is seeking some good men and women to diversify their ranks. With a visible minority presence of 9.7%, the force is seeking to increase that to 20% to better represent the country it serves, say Mounties. The force is holding a Calgary career presentation Nov. 25 at the Duncan Building, 7575 8 St. N.E. at 6 p.m. On offer are 150 different types of policing opportunities. Those applying for a position with the RCMP must be a Canadian citizen, 19 years of age and be fluent in either or both English and French. They must also possess a valid driver's licence and have a high school diploma or an equivalent, be able to meet fitness requirements and be willing to re-locate anywhere in Canada. Postmedia Network (Calgary Sun, A10)

 New Kids on the cellblock

A Red Deer crime syndicate has taken a big hit. Police have arrested and charged three alleged members of Bobby and the Kids, a group that deals mostly in the drug trade. One of them is believed to be "Bobby," the leader of the group. The organization has dealings throughout Central Alberta including Sylvan Lake, Blackfalds and Innisfail and has been operating for "some time," say police. The arrests are believed to be the first made involving the organization. "We have definitely disrupted this group and eliminated the harm they are doing in the community," said Red Deer RCMP Sgt. Eric McKenzie. Police did not give any indication of the size of the group. Last Friday, the Priority Crimes Task Force seized 55 ounces of cocaine, nine ounces of methamphetamine, marijuana, a stolen pistol, drug paraphernalia and $30,600 in cash after executing search warrants at Timothy Drive and Leonard Crescent in Red Deer and Harvest Close in Penhold. Three men between the ages of 22 and 27 were arrested without incident. Postmedia Network (Red Deer Advocate, A1, A2)

* Quebec police conduct major raids linked to drugs, organized crime

Quebec provincial police say they are conducting major raids this morning linked to drug trafficking and organized crime in the Montreal area. Sûreté du Québec spokesperson Audrey-Anne Bilodeau says roughly 200 police officers are taking part in the operation. The raids target "different strains of organized crime in link with the control of the territory, the supply and the distribution of drugs in Montreal," Bilodeau said. In all, Bilodeau says they expect to arrest about 40 people this morning. Bilodeau would not give further details on the suspects or what kind of drugs may be involved. She says members of the SQ, Montreal police and the RCMP are collaborating. A news conference is planned for later this morning to give more details on the operation. CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Young Shafia seeks appeal

Hamed Shafia, the Montreal man convicted, along with his father and mother, of murdering four family members in what the trial judge called a "heinous" and "despicable" mass honour killing, is poised to present a new claim to Ontario's top court regarding the appeal of his conviction. The youngest Shafia killer maintains that he was not 18 years old at the time of the murders on June 30, 2009, and he has documents newly obtained from Afghanistan, his birthplace, that purport to prove it. Shafia was tried and sentenced as an adult, based on documents that indicated he was born in Kabul on Dec. 30, 1990. Those records established that he was 18-and-a-half years old at the time of the killings, and therefore subject to adult criminal law. After a 45-day trial, he was convicted of four counts of first-degree murder and sentenced to the mandatory term of 25 years in prison before parole eligibility. If convicted of murder in youth court and sentenced as a youth, he would be eligible for parole much sooner, perhaps in as few as five years, calculated from the date of his arrest in July, 2009, according to Nicholas Bala, a Queen's University law professor and expert on youth criminal law. The legal scholar said it might be the first case in Canada in which a killer sought to prove he was underage after his adult conviction. Postmedia Network (Kingston Whig-Standard, A1, Montreal Gazette, Toronto Sun, Calgary Sun, National Post, Ottawa Citizen)

McDonald's killer loses appeal

The man believed to be the mastermind behind the most notorious killings in Cape Breton history has lost his appeal of the decision to deny him day parole. Derek Anthony Wood was sentenced to life in prison with no eligibility for parole for 25 years after being convicted of a number of charges, including two counts of first-degree murder in the 1992 Sydney River McDonald's killings when he, Darren Muise and Freeman MacNeil robbed the restaurant and killed three workers. A fourth person was left permanently disabled. Wood had filed an appeal with the Parole Board of Canada after it denied his day parole application earlier this year. He had been deemed a medium-to-high risk to reoffend in a violent manner, according to a psychological assessment. Cape Breton Post, A1

'She's never coming back'

Eighteen years later, the daughters of murdered prison guard Diane Lavigne say they're still struggling to cope. Testifying Wednesday at a hearing where former Hells Angels underling Stéphane Gagné is seeking an earlier parole eligibility on the life sentence he is serving for taking part in the murders of two prison guards in 1997, 40-year-old Isabelle Daoust said she still remembers how sunny it was on the Friday morning her uncle knocked on her apartment door and told her "my sympathies, Isabelle. Your mother's been assassinated." Gagné killed Lavigne in June 1997, shooting her from the back of a motorcycle as she drove home from her job at the Montreal Detention Centre. He later became a collaborating witness against biker boss Maurice (Mom) Boucher and helped convict him. Boucher is now serving a life sentence for the murders of Lavigne and Pierre Rondeau and the attempted murder of Robert Corriveau, all of them guards at provincial detention centres targeted in an effort to intimidate the Quebec justice system. Daoust called the sequence of events in 1997 "surreal. Things like that didn't happen in Quebec. It's like a film that I was watching from above ... too big and unexpected to ever see coming." Montreal Gazette, A3, Le Devoir, Journal de Québec (Journal de Montréal); * La Presse

 James Leroy Leopold, convicted of killing fiancée, has parole revoked after 5 months

A Nova Scotia man who killed his fiancée has had his day parole revoked after just five months. James Leroy Leopold was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to six years in prison after the death of Laura Lee Robertson in 2012. During his trial, the court heard Leopold told police he and Robertson got into a fight and that she died after he hit her in the throat. Following a hearing in May of 2015, Leopold was granted six months of day parole by the Parole Board of Canada. In their decision, the board noted that Leopold is at a high risk of violence towards a partner. Global News (2015-11-18)

 Parole extended for killer ex-Mountie

A former Mountie convicted of first-degree murder who has been running an antiques store in Prince George must spend at least a further six months on day parole, according to a recent Parole Board of Canada decision. Patrick Michael Kelly, 65, was convicted in 1983 for throwing his wife off the 17th-floor balcony of their Toronto apartment. Kelly was originally granted day parole in 2003. Since then, his parole has been revoked several times for failing to disclose financial dealings or relationships with women. The former undercover officer was granted full parole in 2010 and opened his store in Prince George. But the board reversed his release in August 2012 after he failed to report two relationships with women. Prince George Citizen (2015-11-18)

Traque contre un couple de voleurs

Un enquêteur qui a traqué pendant des mois un couple de voleurs à la Bonnie et Clyde, qui ont dérobé pour plus de 1 M$ en cambriolant des maisons cossues partout au Québec, sera récompensé aujourd'hui pour son travail acharné. «Je suis tellement content d'avoir résolu ces dossiers. Sinon, ils auraient continué à commettre d'autres crimes. Certaines victimes ont été démolies en se faisant voler des objets de valeur importants à leurs yeux», a dit le sergent-détective de la Sûreté du Québec, Gordon Hunter. (...)Le sergent Hunter sera récompensé aujourd'hui dans le cadre du Gala des Prix policiers du Québec pour son implication dans cette enquête. (...)Jimmy Simard-Patry et Elyanne Miller ont respectivement écopé de cinq ans et demi et de deux ans de prison en juin. Un complice du couple n'a pas encore subi son procès. Journal de Montréal (Journal de Québec)

Province's plan a 'beacon' for justice: minister - Unveils details of restorative strategy

A five-year plan to make restorative justice a mainstream method of dealing with crime in Manitoba will include a community court in the North End, an expansion of current mental-health and drug-court diversion programs and a focus on victims, the provincial government announced Wednesday. Restorative justice is "local, swift, common-sense, tough justice," Justice Minister Gord Mackintosh told a room of restorative-justice advocates at the legislature building Wednesday, proclaiming legislation he hopes will establish Manitoba as a "beacon in North America for restorative justice." The term restorative justice refers to an individualized approach for offenders (who are often youth or first-time offenders) to take responsibility for their actions, usually by reconciling with victims, performing community service and working toward their rehabilitation. It's used mainly to handle less serious crimes and non-indictable offences, but the justice minister said the province is looking at "tacking on" restorative-justice techniques alongside criminal-court sentencing. The province plans to fulfil the new strategy, announced Wednesday to coincide with the implementation of the Manitoba Restorative Justice Act, by increasing its current $1.8-million annual spending on restorative justice, starting with an additional $320,000 next year. Winnipeg Free Press, B5, Winnipeg Sun; * Radio-Canada

 Credit-card fraud extends sentence

Credit-card fraud has added to the length of a Fredericton man's prison sentence. Ashley James Charlton, 35, was brought to provincial court in custody recently on a charge of using a stolen credit card between Aug. 5 to 6. The former Canada Street resident pleaded guilty to the offence during an appearance last month. Judge Mary Jane Richards sentenced Charlton to six months' incarceration and ordered that he pay a $100 victim-fine surcharge. He was also instructed by the court to pay restitution in the order of $3,279. Charlton told court during an earlier appearance that he's serving time in the Springhill Institution in Nova Scotia for breaking into two food vendor kiosks at the Northside Market and stealing hundreds of dollars worth of meat on Aug. 19. Daily Gleaner, A4

 World's indigenous leaders look to adopt prison practices at Waikeria

Indigenous leaders from around the world hope to adopt practices from a Waikato prison unit that rehabilitated violent offenders, drug abusers and sex offenders. Daniel Levi Martin is a tribal leader of Tla-o-qui-aht First Nations people, who live on reserves along the Pacific Rim National Park, Canada. "I hope that I can learn the different ways of doing things here [at the prison], techniques I can take back home to my people," he said. Martin was in Hamilton for the week-long indigenous people's conference, Healing Our Spirit Worldwide - The Seventh Gathering, hosted by Te Rau Matatini. "I'm an elder and an advisor to treatment centres. I hope to learn something here." Waikeria Prison's Karaka Unit is an 80-bed therapeutic community for medium and high risk offenders. Since 2010, 245 prisoners have completed treatment programmes at Waikeria Prison's Karaka Unit. Since 2010, 245 prisoners have completed the programme, with 55 per cent of those identifying as Maori. There are three programmes within the unit; the Dependency Treatment Unit (DTU) for those with substance abuse, the Special Treatment Unit Rehabilitation Programme (STURP) for high-risk offenders, and the Adult Sex Offender Treatment Programme. Stuff.co.nz

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Police must communicate to track missing women

Effective communication between police agencies is essential when it comes to investigating vulnerable women who have disappeared, says the man who oversaw British Columbia's Missing Women Commission of Inquiry. Wally Oppal, a former B.C. Court of Appeal justice and provincial attorney general, said there was little communications between the RCMP and the Vancouver police in the 1990s when multiple women went missing in that province. "When vulnerable women go missing police have to get involved and that is what they didn't do in the 90s," Oppal said in an interview. "The result is you have well over 100 women who were murdered." Exchanging information in such cases has to take place, Oppal said. What happened in B.C. was that women were being picked up in the eastside of downtown Vancouver but were being murdered in Port Coquitlam, about 35-40 minutes away, he said. "There were very little communication between the RCMP and the Vancouver police," Oppal said. "We were very critical of the policing that took place and that there was no real liaison between the sex trade workers and the police." Oppal will be at St. Thomas University Thursday night presenting a public lecture on the inquiry. Appointed commissioner in 2010, Oppal held close to 100 days of public hearings and forums in Aboriginal communities in northern B.C. in which the many victims and survivors of the Robert Pickton tragedies testified. The inquiry was called to examine why Vancouver police and the RCMP failed to catch Pickton before he was arrested in February 2002. Daily Gleaner, A3 (Times & Transcript)

 Does Canada still need a Status of Women minister?

We've come a long way in Canada on gender equality - far enough for Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to mandate gender parity in his first cabinet. So do we still need a Status of Women ministry? "Yes, we certainly do," said noted feminist and journalist Michele Landsberg. The new mandate letter for Status of Women Minister Patty Hajdu tasks her with trying to eliminate economic and political inequalities that affect women, tackling violence against women and moving forward with a planned inquiry into murdered and missing aboriginal women. Under the Harper government, Landsberg said, women's rights were set back by budget cuts for research and advocacy in the ministry. This loss of funding, she said, meant government couldn't get a complete picture of what was happening in the lives of women. iPolitics, Toronto Star

 Saskatoon men asked to combat violence against women

Members of the University of Saskatchewan Students' Union (USSU) have called for an end to violence against indigenous women and children, hoping men will lead the movement for change. "Traditionally as men, our role was to stand as protectors and also to support our women," said Regan Ratt-Misponas, indigenous student representative with the USSU. "Our women were very much regarded as the leaders of First Nations communities and First Nations reserves." On Wednesday, students were introduced to the "Moose Hide Campaign," a grassroots, non-profit that encourages aboriginal and non-aboriginal men to wear pins made of the material. Global News (2015-11-18)

 Delete Day aims to combat social media cyberbullying

Countless people can see what you're doing, and a lot of them are mean. That was the message Windsor police and Catholic Central High School tried to drive home Wednesday during Delete Day, an event they hosted to combat cyberbullying. Students spent time with their vice-principal and a police officer to learn how to delete bullying posts from their social media profiles, along with anything they might regret posting themselves. "There are adults and other people whose sole purpose is to troll the Internet and find young people using social media to see if they can acquire their information," said vice-principal Laura Beltran. "When that happens, it can ruin lives and it's very difficult to put lives back together once information is out there. Especially for young people, their reputation, their self-esteem, their self-concept is still growing and maturing and it can be devastating for them at a very early age." Dozens of students showed up for Delete Day, one of a number of events being held as part of Bullying Awareness Week. Grade 12 student Manal Muzamil said it was a good chance to "refresh" social media accounts, delete bad things people have posted and block those responsible for the negativity. Windsor Star, A3

 Cyberbullying starts young

Cyberbullying can affect children far younger than widely believed, experts warn. While it starts to become prevalent in students around the Grade 7 level, children can gain access to this world much sooner, said Brad Burns, principal of Highlands School in Edmonton. "I know of students that are in kindergarten who are coming to school with cellphones, because they are a very useful resource for safety and communication at homes," said Burns. "As technology is more prevalent in our lives and more integrated, that age of being in that world keeps moving down to younger and younger children." On Wednesday, as part of Bullying Awareness Week, Burns was one of five panellists speaking at an Alberta government-sponsored webcast on cyberbullying. He said it's up to the parents to inform and discuss with their children about the importance in becoming a "responsible digital citizen." Calgary Sun, A21 (Edmonton Sun)

 There's value in carding

An opinion piece states, "In September 2011, a 15-year-old girl was sexually assaulted in a Brampton park. Officers attached to Peel Regional Police's special victims unit had a description, but the perpetrator was long gone. Detectives checked to see whether there had been any PRP17s (street check reports) filed from anywhere nearby. Bingo. Up came a street check on a 37-year-old man - including name, date of birth and description - who was engaged by police at the park months earlier. They had a suspect and a reason for a search warrant which - when executed - led to the arrest of the man for possessing child pornography as well as the sexual assault on the girl. There's one example of the benefits of police community engagement that opponents feel is racial profiling. Under new rules being implemented next year by the provincial government, police will have to tell people encountered - such as the man engaged in the park - that there is no need for them to talk to officers and that they're free to go. It's absurd." Toronto Sun, A10

 Fassbender saps amalgamation impetus

It never was about forcing amalgamation on Greater Victoria, and Peter Fassbender knows it. B.C.'s community charter already bars the provincial government from imposing amalgamation on anyone. No, all that people are asking for is a study into whether amalgamation makes sense. (...)Of course, while Victoria and Esquimalt might see this disparity as an excellent reason to share the cost of policing more equitably, the other municipalities see it as a totally awesome reason to leave things as they are. Why would Langford, whose residents pay just $141 apiece for the RCMP, voluntarily eat a cost hike?

Both Victoria Mayor Lisa Helps and Esquimalt Mayor Barb Desjardins recognize this reality. Times Colonist, A3

 'Almost one an hour'

When she refused to give him money to buy beer, one Edmonton man pushed his girlfriend to the ground, pulled her hair and punched her in the face. (...) "This is only a sample of the files received by the Edmonton Police Service this past weekend," Staff Sgt. Sean Armstrong, in charge of the domestic offender crime section, told a downtown crowd Wednesday. "There were 88 cases responded to by EPS members, and sadly this was a quiet week. I can guarantee you there are many more domestic violence occurrences in our city that were not reported to us." These revelations shocked those gathered for the the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters' (ACWS) 11th annual Breakfast with the Guys at the Chateau Lacombe on Wednesday. In 2014, Edmonton police were involved in nearly 8,000 domestic violence complaints. (...) According to government statistics, Alberta has the fifth highest rate of intimate partner violence reported to police and the second highest rate of self-reported intimate partner violence in Canada. Edmonton Sun, A7

 First Nation contemplates ban on criminals on reserve

Elders on the Little Pine First Nation are exploring the idea of banishing criminals from the reserve. The idea of kicking known offenders such as drug dealers and abusers off the reserve was preposed at a recent community meeting aimed at dealing with crime on the First Nation, located north of North Battleford. "The criminal justice system is not working. Look at the statistics," said Jacob Pete, a band member who helped facilitate the meeting. "We have to take ownership of the problems and come up with local solutions." The idea of banishing criminals from a particular community is not unheard of. Saskatchewan's largest First Nation, Lac La Ronge Indian Band, has been banishing drug dealers and others for decades. First Nations like Mistawasis near Prince Albert and Fishing Lake have also banished people for crimes. StarPhoenix, A3 (Leader-Post)

 Un quartier général de la mafia visé par un attentat

Un incendie criminel allumé dans un bar de la rue Jean-Talon la nuit dernière pourrait constituer un nouveau chapitre d'une tension grandissante au sein de la mafia montréalaise. La Presse a en effet appris de sources de divers milieux que l'établissement visé, le café Empire, serait l'un des quartiers généraux de la Table de direction de la mafia qui dirige les rênes du crime organisé montréalais, en alliance avec d'autres groupes criminels, depuis la mort naturelle du parrain Vito Rizzuto, il y a près de deux ans. Selon nos sources, Vito Rizzuto aurait été vu souvent à cet endroit après sa libération d'un pénitencier américain et son retour à Montréal, en octobre 2012. La Presse (2015-11-18)

 Front line workers get info on battling sexual exploitation

If you don't think human trafficking is a concern within Norfolk County, think again. "Because we're rural, we're a very big source destination for sexual exploitation," explained Christina Bodine, chair of the Sexual Assault Centre of Brant. Bodine and her colleagues played host to a human trafficking seminar for social service employees and concerned residents at the Norfolk Golf and County Club Wednesday. One of the main messages was human trafficking – at one level or another – certainly does take place in Norfolk, Brantford and Six Nations. The trouble is, not many get the message because young women are often being shuttled to places like Niagara Falls or Windsor. "You have to lay charges in the place that the crime happens, so they'll be laid in places like Niagara Falls and Windsor, but they're gals that are from Brant, Haldimand, Norfolk, Six Nations," Bodine explained. "That's why those stats aren't showing up, but we're a big source area." That's why gatherings like the one on Wednesday are held. Speakers addressed the warning signs of human trafficking, what its definition is and who is most vulnerable. "It is complicated, so we're just trying to give an overview so people are aware," Bodine noted. "What we do know is over 90 per cent is domestic, so it's happening within Canada, it's happening within our borders." While the day-long event was open to all, Bodine and her team targeted a specific group to take part. Simcoe Reformer (2015-11-18)

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

City pulling together for refugees

It was an unprecedented Edmonton conclave. Ninety representatives from more than a dozen social agencies and government departments met Wednesday at the Ramada on Kingsway to plan a joint mission. Their goal? To settle some 1,500 Syrian refugees in Edmonton before year's end. "We're still not sure of the exact number or the exact timing. And that's causing some anxiety for us," says Stephen Carattini, CEO of Catholic Social Services. His agency has the federal contract to settle refugees in Edmonton. "Normally, we settle 400 to 500 refugees a year. Now, we're going to be settling three or four times that many. It's not unfamiliar, what we're being asked to do. But this is happening very, very quickly." The meeting included representatives from the federal departments of Canadian Heritage and Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship. Representatives of the provincial departments of Alberta Jobs, Skills, and Labour, Alberta Health and Alberta Education were there, too. So were Edmonton's school boards, along with Capital Region Housing and Edmonton and Area Child and Family Services. And there was an eclectic and ecumenical range of other agencies, including the Islamic Family and Social Services Agency, the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, Edmonton Immigrant Services Association, ASSIST Community Services, Centre d'accueil et d'établissement, Changing Together and the Indo-Canadian Women's Association. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, A1/Front)

Queens sponsorship effort edges ahead

A group of residents in Queens County has just squeaked past the halfway point in their goal of raising $20,000 to sponsor a family of Syrian refugees. The Queens Refugee Care Team hopes to sponsor a family of six, and has already raised almost $11,000. Chronicle Herald, A8

Premier confident about refugees

Nova Scotia's premier doesn't want to pre-judge whether Ottawa should pull back from a plan to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees into Canada by the end of the year. Stephen McNeil said that Ottawa is responsible for handling any security concerns that arise from its screening process of refugees and his province remained ready to proceed with welcoming newcomers once it's determined how that will happen. McNeil said he expected many of those concerns to be addressed in a federal-provincial meeting next week, in light of the recent terror attacks in Paris and Beirut. "Security coming into the country is the responsibility of the federal government," said McNeil. "So if it (the plan) continues to move forward we are ready to participate as part of the federation." Canadian Press (Cape Breton Post, A9)

Notley says Calgary, Edmonton among five Alberta cities likely to take refugees

Premier Rachel Notley says Calgary and Edmonton are expected to take in the bulk of Syrian refugees coming to Alberta, with the remainder spread out over three other cities - Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, and Red Deer. "We're working to ensure that we're able to provide a seamless and effective settlement process," Notley told reporters Wednesday. "There are five cities where refugees would most likely land. The vast majority of them will be in Calgary and Edmonton. "Obviously the mayors need to be fully on side with it, and I believe that they are and have it well in hand." Notley was flanked by Edmonton Mayor Don Iveson and Calgary's Naheed Nenshi at the legislature following a meeting to discuss a range of issues, including the refugee resettlement. The federal government has said it wants to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees across Canada by the end of the year. Notley has said she expects Alberta will take between 2,500 and 3,000 of those fleeing the war-torn region. Postmedia News (Calgary Herald)

Goodwill beats bureaucracy

They've been offered an entire convent in Pointe-Claire to house the refugees, a CEGEP in Rosemont with classrooms and showers to use at least over the holidays, rooms and fridges, winter coats and dishes. While politicians wrangle over whether it's possible to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees over the next six weeks, grassroots organizations and ordinary Quebecers are making it possible. "Since last week our phones and email accounts have been overloaded with offers from Quebec residents wanting to help Syrian refugees with clothes, furniture, appliances," said Paul Clarke, the executive director of Action Réfugiés Montréal. "As public consciousness has ramped up that Syrian refugees are coming, the generosity has been astounding." And the terrorist attacks in Paris did not stop the flow, Clarke added. He has had to ask people to stop bringing in winter coats and boots to the organization's downtown locale

- there was just no room for more. But while every bit helps, especially if Quebec does receive 5,700 refugees over the next 43 days, such a massive endeavour requires some coordination, between all the groups involved, and every level of government. The community groups tasked with helping refugees resettle in Montreal - there are 18 in Montreal alone that offer services in Arabic - have set up a central list of people who want to volunteer their time, housing and miscellaneous goods, including all those winter coats and boots: infoparrainage@tcri.gc.ca And cities, including the 13 in Quebec that could receive some of the refugees, are also mobilizing. Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, A1/Front)

Valcartier se prépare à l'arrivée de réfugiés

La base militaire de Valcartier est sur un pied d'alerte et se prépare à accueillir des centaines, voire des milliers de réfugiés syriens d'ici la fin de l'année. Le Canada avait déjà évoqué la possibilité que les bases militaires servent de terre d'accueil temporaire aux réfugiés, et l'hypothèse se confirme selon de nombreuses sources. Les 500 premiers réfugiés syriens débarqueraient dans la région de Québec à partir du 1er décembre - une date évoquée par plusieurs - et seraient logés dans diverses installations de la base militaire, notamment au Camp des Cadets. L'Armée vient de lancer un appel d'offres pour l'«hivernisation» d'une dizaine de baraquements. Les travaux, qui prévoient l'installation de chauffage, sont évalués à 1,5 M$ et seront réalisés «dans un très court délai, d'ici le 30 décembre», peut-on lire dans les documents sur le portail MERX. Journal de Québec, 3 (Journal de Montréal, 7); Le Soleil, 5/Front

Les villes veulent être mieux informées

Les maires des 13 villes québécoises qui accueilleront les réfugiés syriens attendus d'ici la fin de 2015 demandent à être mieux informés des plans d'Ottawa et de Québec, les élus ignorant encore combien d'entre eux chaque ville recevra. Une conférence téléphonique d'une quarantaine de minutes a réuni hier midi ces maires afin de faire le point sur le dossier. «Ce qui me frappe, c'est la volonté des villes à accueillir les réfugiés. Chacune a déjà pris des initiatives pour réunir les groupes sur son territoire. Mais il manque deux morceaux du casse-tête: Québec et Ottawa. Les villes sont déjà à pied d'oeuvre, mais elles n'ont pas toute l'information», a indiqué la mairesse de Longueuil, Caroline St-Hilaire. L'Union des municipalités du Québec a mis en place un comité auquel on espère voir Ottawa et Québec se joindre pour coordonner l'arrivée des réfugiés. «Il faut qu'on s'assoie, s'il le faut quotidiennement, pour éviter que chaque maire appelle à gauche et à droite pour avoir de l'information. On veut éviter qu'il y ait des ratés. On a connu de beaux succès d'accueil de réfugiés et il ne faudrait pas manquer le bateau», a ajouté Mme St-Hilaire. La Presse, A10

Rookie MP Tassi says government committed to accommodating refugees

Filomena Tassi is assuring residents that Canada remains committed to accommodating 25,000 Syrian refugees by Jan. 1. "At the same time, we're going to exercise the highest level of vetting and security," said the rookie MP, who represents the riding of Hamilton West-Ancaster-Dundas and will be sworn in as part of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's government on Dec. 2. Opposition to the Liberal campaign promise has already grown in reaction to reports that at least one of a number of ISIL terrorists who participated in the Paris attacks in last weekend entered France with other Syrian refugees. But with a majority government, Trudeau and his team appear to be moving ahead on the promise. "We are staying on course," Tassi said. Tassi has been to Ottawa and completed her training for first-time members of Parliament. She is now focused on setting up shop in her widespread constituency, searching for an office from which to serve residents from Ancaster to Westdale and the west Mountain. Tassi said there was nothing to officially announce as far as any committees she will be part of, or other specific roles within the government. Hamilton Spectator, A5

Les initiatives citoyennes se multiplient

Le téléphone de la Table de concertation des organismes au service des personnes réfugiées ou immigrantes n'arrête pas de sonner depuis des jours. «Les gens offrent des logements, des vêtements. Des professeurs à la retraite proposent de l'aide aux devoirs, des Syriens veulent faire de la traduction. Tout le monde veut contribuer et faire partie de ce moment historique», dit Sylvain Thibault. Parmi les offres de dons se trouvent aussi des messages de quelques personnes qui ont déjà pris les choses bien en main. Les initiatives citoyennes se multiplient. C'est le cas de Yasmine Abdelfadel qui a décidé lundi soir qu'elle lançait un projet de paniers d'accueil contenant notamment des paquets de couches et des fournitures scolaires. Une autre dame est en train d'amasser entre 600 et 900 toutous «pour que chaque enfant qui arrive au Québec en ait un.» Pour l'instant, les gens qui veulent faire des dons spécifiquement destinés aux réfugiés syriens peuvent le faire par l'entremise des initiatives citoyennes qui apparaissent sur les réseaux sociaux ou en communiquant avec des groupes comme la Table de concertation des organismes au service des personnes réfugiées ou immigrantes. Toutefois, la plupart des organismes communautaires sont en attente. La Croix-Rouge canadienne a ouvert, il y a quelques mois, un fonds destiné aux réfugiés syriens, mais elle attend des annonces gouvernementales pour lancer des initiatives locales qui serviront les réfugiés à leur arrivée au Canada et au Québec. Carl Boisvert, porte-parole de la Croix-Rouge pour le Québec, conseille aux personnes qui veulent contribuer à l'accueil de réfugiés ici d'attendre que les campagnes spécifiques soient mises en place. La Presse, A10

On n'a pas le temps

Alors là, un gros bravo. Quand on a retrouvé le petit Alan mort noyé sur une grève en Turquie, vous trouviez que le Canada n'en faisait pas assez pour faire émigrer sa famille chez nous. Maintenant que le Canada a décidé d'accueillir 25000 réfugiés syriens d'ici la fin de l'année, vous branlez dans le manche. Vous avez peur. Tout d'un coup qu'un ou deux terroristes se glisseraient dans le lot. J'entends des maires, des députés, des ministres réclamer des délais. Il faut prendre le temps de bien faire les choses, dites-vous. Le temps de bien faire les vérifications de sécurité. Le temps? Pendant qu'on est là à niaiser autour d'un chiffre, des bombes continuent de tomber sur la tête des gens en Syrie et en Irak. Il y a des exactions, des viols, des décapitations, des défenestrations. Et dans le lot des innocentes victimes, il y a d'autres petits Alan. Qu'est-ce qu'il vous faut pour vous convaincre que le temps presse? Des photos d'enfants déchiquetés par les explosions? Avoir du temps devant soi, c'est le luxe d'une société éloignée de la guerre comme la nôtre. Le Droit, 2/Front

Rapid resettlement is possible: expert

An authority on immigration and refugees says Canada and the United Nations have the operational knowhow and security safeguards to vet 25,000 Syrians for rapid resettlement. But the question remains: can the humanitarian resettlement project be pulled off by the Liberal government's Dec. 31 deadline without compromising domestic security? "I hate answering that question at this point," said Peter Showler, former chair of the Immigration and Refugee Board and former director of the Refugee Forum at the University of Ottawa. "(However) it is possible in a relatively short period of time - with no reference one way or the other to the deadline - to do fast, effective processing that includes reliable security screening." Immigration Minister John McCallum has said the refugees would be properly screened. "I think (McCallum's) implication has been that if it takes longer, if it goes over the deadline, then it goes over the deadline," Showler said. "Certainly my understanding from him is that getting the job done properly is the priority." Showler's appraisal came as the Ottawa Citizen learned refugees arrived Tuesday in Montreal. Department of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship spokesman Remi Larivière confirmed a planeload of Syrian refugees landed, but did not make clear if the group was part of the 25,000 targeted for resettlement under the Liberals' plan. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, A1/Front)

Clock ticking on Canada's refugee plan

The timing of Canada's crash program to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the end of the year keeps sliding, according to two officials familiar with aspects of the planning. The original goal had been to begin the airlift by Thursday of this week, but as no charter aircraft have been booked yet, it would now be at least one more week before flights got underway, one of the officials said. When the flights reach their peak next month, about 1,000 refugees will be arriving in Canada every day. The officials did not want to be identified because diplomats and immigration officers have been told by Ottawa not to speak about the matter, with all requests referred to the government. "Unfortunately I have nothing to say to you at the moment," Immigration Canada spokesman Jean-Bruno Villeneuve said in an email from Ottawa, adding that he was unable to confirm any details about the resettlement program. (...) But the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which registers asylum seekers and is supposed to be working with Canada on its resettlement program, said this week that it remained largely in the dark about Ottawa's plans. While the UNHCR welcomed the Canadian announcement to settle Syrians, "I am afraid I cannot talk about Canada's program," spokeswoman Ariane Rummery said in an email from Geneva "until we know more about the modalities." Whig-Standard, B2

Le temps du changement

Comme il était de mise dans ces circonstances tragiques qui relativisaient tout le reste, la couverture médiatique du dernier conseil général du PLQ a été presque exclusivement centrée sur les réactions aux attentats de Paris et l'accueil des réfugiés syriens. Même s'il est passé largement inaperçu, le premier ministre Couillard n'en avait pas moins un autre message à transmettre aux militants libéraux réunis à Québec. " Le temps du changement est venu, a-t-il dit. Il faut oser faire les choses différemment, oser remettre les choses en question. " Quelques minutes plus tôt, le président de la commission politique du PLQ, Jérôme Turcotte, avait évoqué les conséquences que le vieillissement accéléré de la population aura sur les coûts des services de santé qui, au rythme actuel, accapareront 70 % des dépenses gouvernementales en 2030. Ces propos semblaient rejoindre ceux que le ministre de la Santé, Gaétan Barrette, avait tenus la semaine dernière à propos du panier de services assurés par la Régie de l'assurance-maladie. S'il n'est pas question " à ce moment-ci " d'exclure certains services de la couverture, il a averti que " la situation budgétaire du Québec nous invite à une réflexion au long cours sur ces éléments-là ". Le Devoir, A4

Weil downplays 'anxiety' as polls reveal fears

Quebec's immigration minister was scrambling to reassure skittish Quebecers and mayors Wednesday that the province's decision to welcome Syrian refugees will not come back to haunt them. But two new polls reveal the brutal Paris terror attacks have spooked people. Suddenly, many are hot on the use of military force to put out threats and favour a goslow approach to accepting refugees. "There is a period of anxiety," Kathleen Weil told reporters on her way into a meeting of the Quebec cabinet. "But I think it's important that mayors and political leaders use the right tone, give the right message. "These are some of the most vulnerable people that we want to greet and settle in Quebec." Weil was responding to growing domestic blowback over the terror attacks last Friday in Paris which left 129 people dead and 350 injured - many of them seriously. With no clear plan forthcoming from Ottawa, Canadian premiers and municipalities have been operating in a void with growing questions about how the country will handle the complicated business of feeding, clothing, housing and integrating the 25,000 Syrian refugees Canada wants to welcome by Jan. 1. The province has already identified 13 Quebec cities with sufficient infrastructure and support systems to accept refugees. Quebec's share of the 25,000 is about 6,000. Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, A4)

PM condemns racism as Syria refugee plan opposed

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau urged Canadians to resist hatred and racism as a poll showed most Canadians were opposed to his plan to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees by year-end and a flurry of racist incidents were reported around the country. The Liberals, who took power after an election last month, campaigned on a promise to bring in the refugees by Jan 1. Critics say the number is too large and could threaten security following the attacks in Paris. An Angus Reid poll released on Wednesday showed 54 per cent of Canadians opposed the plan, up from 51 per cent before the bloodshed in Paris. But support for the plan also increased, with 42 per cent in favour, up from 39 per cent in October. Most of those who opposed Trudeau's plan did so because of the short timeline, with 53 per cent saying the schedule was too short to ensure all the necessary security checks were completed. Another 10 per cent said 25,000 was too many, and 29 per cent said Canada should not be accepting any Syrian refugees. (...) "Diversity is Canada's strength. These vicious and senseless acts of intolerance have no place in our country and run absolutely contrary to Canadian values of pluralism and acceptance," Trudeau said. Whig-Standard, B1/Front

Les initiatives citoyennes et les dons se multiplient

« Les gens offrent des logements, des vêtements. Des professeurs à la retraite proposent de l'aide aux devoirs, des Syriens veulent faire de la traduction. Tout le monde veut contribuer et faire partie de ce moment historique », dit Sylvain Thibault. À son bureau de la Table de concertation des organismes au service des personnes réfugiées ou immigrantes, le téléphone n'arrête pas de sonner depuis des jours. Sa boîte de courriels déborde. Parmi les offres de dons de toutes sortes se trouvent aussi des messages de quelques personnes qui ont déjà pris les choses bien en main. Les initiatives citoyennes se multiplient. C'est le cas de Yasmine Abdelfadel qui a décidé lundi soir, après en avoir discuté avec ses parents, qu'elle lançait un projet de paniers d'accueil. Le concept rappelle les paniers offerts spontanément à de nouveaux voisins qui arrivent dans le quartier. Mais les tartes bien chaudes et les confitures maison seront remplacées par des paquets de couches et des fournitures scolaires. « Des choses que les gens ne pensent pas de donner lorsqu'il y a des collectes », précise la jeune femme, encore surprise de la réponse reçue sur la page Facebook de son Opération paniers de bienvenue. Une réponse telle qu'elle est entrée en contact avec la Table de concertation pour avoir de l'aide logistique. Ce qu'elle aura. « Nous allons faire des paniers personnalisés, selon la famille à laquelle ils seront destinés. » La Presse, 5

Autre dissonance libérale

Pour une deuxième journée d'affilée, le premier ministre Philippe Couillard et son ministre Pierre Moreau ont joué des notes discordantes sur la capacité du Québec à accueillir des réfugiés syriens d'ici la fin de l'année. Le chef de l'État québécois estime que le Québec parviendra «fort probablement» à accueillir sur son sol 3650 d'entre eux avant la fin de l'année, comme il s'y était engagé. Son ministre de la Sécurité est incapable de garantir plus de 2400 réfugiés syriens sélectionnés - et non pas accueillis - au 18 décembre. «Non, on est sur la même longueur d'onde, a assuré M. Couillard en fin d'après-midi. On vient d'en parler, lui et moi, avec tous les collègues. On est très confiants d'atteindre la cible du premier contingent.» (...) Des 1200 personnes prévues à l'origine, le gouvernement Couillard rehaussait son seuil à 3650. C'était avant que l'engagement du nouveau premier ministre canadien Justin Trudeau porte à quelque 5700 le nombre de réfugiés syriens à recevoir au Québec. «Sur le premier contingent [celui de 3650 réfugiés], on n'a aucun doute parce qu'on a les moyens financiers, les mécanismes, a affirmé le premier ministre Couillard. La question qui reste à éclaircir, c'est la mise en place du plan fédéral plus large.» Pourtant, un peu plus tôt, son ministre Pierre Moreau a été incapable d'assurer que Québec parviendrait à sélectionner - et non accueillir - les 3650 personnes prévues avant 2016. Un processus d'habilitation sécuritaire effectué par Ottawa suit l'étape de la sélection par le Québec. La Presse (Le Soleil, 6,7/Front; La Tribune, A7, 23, La Tribune, A7; Le Nouvelliste, 15) * Le Quotidien, 26,27 ; Le Droit, 16) ; * Agence QMI (Journal de Québec, 4 ; Journal de Montréal, 2)

D'ex-hôpitaux ontariens pour héberger des réfugiés?

Le gouvernement ontarien songe à utiliser des hôpitaux récemment désaffectés afin d'héberger temporairement les réfugiés syriens qui doivent affluer d'ici la fin de l'année dans cette province. Le gouvernement fédéral de Justin Trudeau a promis que le Canada accueillerait 25000 réfugiés d'ici le 1er janvier 2016, et l'Ontario s'est engagée à en accueillir 10000 d'ici la fin de 2016. Le ministre provincial de la Santé, Eric Hoskins, a indiqué mercredi que son gouvernement ignorait toujours le nombre de réfugiés qu'Ottawa lui demanderait d'accueillir d'ici la fin de l'année, mais il a assuré que l'Ontario était prête à faire sa «juste part» dans cette vaste opération. L'Ontario pourrait par ailleurs accueillir et soutenir certains réfugiés sur une base temporaire, avant qu'ils ne déménagent dans d'autres provinces ou territoires, a-t-il prévenu. Le Droit, 16; * Canadian Press (Cape Breton Post, A11; The Telegram, D3; Charlottetown Guardian, A7; London Free Press, A3); * Ottawa Sun, A9

La crainte de la passoire

Un article d'opinion déclare, « Ce n'est guère surprenant: 59 % des Québécois ont peur que des terroristes se fauillent parmi les réfugiés qu'on s'appête à accueillir, parce qu'ils doutent que les autorités soient capables d'effectuer les contrôles nécessaires pour les débusquer. C'est ce que révélait, hier, un sondage Léger mené pour le compte de TVA Nouvelles. Un sondage, on n'en sera pas étonnés non plus, qui indique que trois Québécois sur quatre craignent que des attentats aient lieu au pays. Dans la foulée du drame parisien et de ses rebondissements, de même que de l'intense médiatisation qui a cours, redouter la menace terroriste, surtout après les événements de l'an passé à Saint-Jean et à Ottawa, est un réflexe qui se comprend. On ne peut pas rester insensibles à l'horreur, à la haine. Il est normal de ressentir de l'insécurité face à des actes aussi insensés, aussi méprisables. Encore faut-il gérer ce réflexe avec sang-froid et ne pas céder à la panique ou à la xénophobie. Il faut se rappeler que les auteurs des attaques de l'an dernier chez nous étaient des Canadiens, pas des immigrants. Gardons aussi à l'esprit que la menace terroriste se propage davantage par Internet que par les frontières. Enfin, considérons qu'il y a bien plus d'actes criminels commis par des bandits et des chauffards ivres que par des terroristes. Cela dit, le Canada doit bien sûr mener une lutte impitoyable au terrorisme... » Le Nouvelliste, 18

Canadians leery of Trudeau's refugee plan

A little more than half of Canadians disapprove of the federal government's plan to bring in 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of next month, a new poll suggests. And if they had to choose, Canadians surveyed by Mainstreet Research for Postmedia appear to be more in favour of bombing terrorists than training other armies how to fight. "The training mission has wider support. Either way, most Canadians believe Canada should be taking a role in the fight against ISIS. Only 8% of Canadians would support no action at all," said Quito Maggi, president of Mainstreet. Conducted Monday, the firm polled a total of 2,718 people. It suggests public opinion is polarized over what to do on the world stage when it comes to bombs and refugees. "Our earlier polling showed strong support for bringing refugees to Canada, but after the attacks in Paris, security is now a higher concern," Maggi said. QMI Agency (Ottawa Sun, A10; Toronto Sun)

 13 000 réfugiés pour trois mois

Les Forces armées canadiennes affirment pouvoir fournir de l'hébergement à un maximum de 13 000 réfugiés syriens à travers le Canada pendant une période n'excédant pas trois mois. Si l'objectif de 25 000 avant la fin de l'année est maintenu, cela signifie que les premiers arrivés ne feront que passer par les bases militaires pour ensuite être relogés ailleurs. Le Soleil, 4, 5/Front ; Postmedia News (Winnipeg Sun, A6; Ottawa Sun, A8; Toronto Sun, A4; Calgary Sun, A8)

 Hamilton readies for influx, but many questions remain

A broad range of Hamilton groups, agencies, churches, officials and individuals say they have been working for weeks to build plans for what could be a significant number of Syrian refugees landing in this city in the very near future. The trouble is, they don't know how many are coming, or which sponsorship and resettlement programs the refugees will be funnelled through. Hamilton Spectator, A1

 Canadian business groups tout refugee job opportunities

Businesses that have a hard time recruiting Canadians say they are reaching out to the federal government and the provinces to see if they can match up with the incoming wave of refugees. Lobby groups for Canadian employers are intrigued by the 25,000 refugees Prime Minister Justin Trudeau expects to bring in by the end of the year. "This has been ramping up since a year ago," said Ron Davidson, director of government relations for the Canadian Meat Council, which lobbies on behalf of meat packing plants. Embassy

 Un élan de générosité de la population

L'arrivée massive à Québec de 800 réfugiés syriens prévue en décembre semble provoquer un élan de générosité dans la population. Le Centre multiethnique note une hausse importante du nombre de personnes intéressées à leur venir en aide. Une bonne nouvelle pour l'organisme, qui aura grandement besoin de ressources supplémentaires. Le Soleil, 8/Front

 Où vont les réfugiés syriens?

L'un des terroristes à l'origine des attentats de Paris a été retrouvé avec un passeport syrien. On ne sait pas encore si le passeport est authentique ou s'il appartenait vraiment à l'homme qui s'est fait exploser au Stade de France. Mais la nouvelle a fait grand bruit, provoquant des mouvements partout dans le monde afin de fermer les portes aux réfugiés syriens. Voici quelques chiffres pour faire le point sur la crise humanitaire de l'heure. Depuis 2011, l'Agence des Nations unies pour les réfugiés (UNHCR) a dénombré plus de 4,2 millions de personnes qui ont fui la guerre en Syrie. La très grande majorité a trouvé refuge dans des pays limitrophes. Plus du quart d'entre eux ont moins de 18 ans. L'Europe a accueilli à ce jour près de 510 000 réfugiés, dont plus de 150 000 en Allemagne. De son côté, le Canada propose de recevoir d'ici la fin de l'année 25 000 nouveaux réfugiés qui s'ajouteraient aux quelque 3000 déjà au pays. Voici une douzaine de pays ou de régions qui ont accueilli des réfugiés syriens jusqu'à présent. La Presse, A11

 Accueillir des réfugiés est un devoir

Comment les réfugiés syriens traverseront-ils l'océan vers le Canada? Quels sont les risques que des terroristes s'infiltreront parmi eux? Beaucoup de Québécois ont des appréhensions face à leur venue. Alors est-ce risqué pour eux de venir ici? Pourquoi les médias ne parlent-ils pas des réfugiés innombrables de l'Afrique? Des questions comme celles-là, les élèves de cinquième secondaire de l'école Les Pionniers de Trois-Rivières en avaient plusieurs pour Béatrice Vaugrante. Le Nouvelliste, 5

 Region prepares for 1,150 Syrian refugees

Planning is underway to prepare for upward of 1,150 Syrian refugees who are soon expected to start arriving in Waterloo Region. Immigration Partnership is hosting a half-day preparedness planning session on Friday that will gather together service providers to be ready for the influx of refugees. The Record, B2

 Canada should look to the U.S

Six weeks to go until the new year and by the time we usher in 2016, the Liberal government is determined that 25,000 Syrian refugees will be in Canada. "There was an election. There was a commitment. And we'll deliver on our commitment," Foreign Affairs Minister Stephane Dion told reporters Wednesday at the annual summit of Pacific Rim leaders here. The Liberals may be determined to deliver on that commitment but there is growing unease in Canada that the arbitrary deadline of Jan. 1 may lead authorities to cut corners and open potential security concerns. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau himself says that won't happen but, so far, has yet to provide details on Canada's security arrangements. Trudeau will meet U.S. President Barack Obama on Thursday and, because of our long, shared, undefended border, one would assume Obama will want more than platitudes, he'll want some of those details. Postmedia News (Toronto Sun, A22; Calgary Sun, A35; Edmonton Sun, A50)

 Blue Rodeoto Canada

The Liberal government's plan to welcome 25,000 Syrian refugees into Canada shouldn't be deterred by recent terror attacks, said Blue Rodeo bandmates Jim Cuddy and Greg Keelor. Cuddy and Keelor, who were among 12 officers and 33 members welcomed into the Order of Canada Wednesday, continued their streak of political pillow talk to discuss some of the major issues facing Canadians under a new Liberal government. Ottawa Sun, A14

 Ils ne l'ont pas, le temps

Un article d'opinion déclare, « Alors là, un gros bravo. Quand on a retrouvé le petit Aylan mort noyé sur une grève en Turquie, vous trouviez que le Canada n'en faisait pas assez pour faire émigrer sa famille chez nous. Maintenant que le Canada a décidé d'accueillir 25 000 réfugiés syriens d'ici la fin de l'année, vous branlez dans le manche. Vous avez peur. Tout d'un coup qu'un ou deux terroristes se glisseraient dans le lot... » Le Droit, 21

 PM has no clear plan

An opinion piece states, "To be clear: I absolutely believe this country should take Syrian refugees. We have so far been sheltered from the humanitarian crisis that has engulfed Europe, as hundreds of thousands of migrants have fled the turmoil in Syria. What troubles me is the haphazard manner in which the federal government is going about it and the way it's turned into a political football..." Postmedia News (Ottawa Sun, A9; Toronto Sun, A5)

 Here, the Pope would be suspect

An opinion piece states, "Back in September, Pope Francis commented on the ongoing refugee crisis in the Mideast in an interview with a Portuguese radio station. He warned of the danger of Islamic State terrorists "infiltrating" European countries amid the huge flow of refugees streaming out of war-torn Syria and Libya. He also cautioned that host countries taking in refugees "cannot be simplistic" about integrating them into their societies, because of their own high unemployment rates. In Canada these days, such reasonable observations, are enough to get one accused of bigotry, hating refugees and fear-mongering by the liberal and Liberal elite..." Postmedia News (Ottawa Sun, A19; Toronto Sun, A15; Calgary Sun, A15; Edmonton Sun, A15)

 Provinces need more of a role helping refugees

An opinion piece states, "Most of Canada's premiers are outdoing each other with generous offers to accept Syrian refugees by the thousands during the next six weeks, but their promises are all but meaningless. Premier Kathleen Wynne re-stated her promise-2,500 refugees by the end of this year and 10,000 by the end of 2016-again Tuesday. "It's our responsibility to be open to the world," she said in Toronto..." Postmedia News (London Free Press, A6; Whig-Standard, A4)

 The refugee discussion is just beginning

A comment by Jeffrey Simpson reads "The commitment to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada before Dec. 31, made by the Liberals in the heat of an election campaign, should be seen not as the end but as the beginning of a multiyear commitment to bring tens and tens of thousands more refugees to Canada over many years. Quite apart from whether the government can meet its artificial and politically driven timetable for the 25,000, the larger question is whether the government and the Canadian people are willing, ready and able to handle much bigger numbers in the years ahead. No one has thought about this, let alone prepared for it. Circumstances, however, will force reflection. This 25,000 contingent, and the many who will follow if the government sticks to its policies, is not like, say, previous groups of refugees from Vietnam, Uganda or Kosovo. These groups were much smaller in number, displaced by one event at a given place. By contrast, there were three-day periods throughout the summer and fall when more refugees/migrants were landing on the Greek island of Lesbos than Canada proposes to admit in two months. Today's refugees/migrants are part of a mass movement of millions of people fleeing military conflict, entrenched poverty and government breakdowns across an arc of states in the Middle East and Africa. Climate change is already widening desertification, which causes people to leave drought in search of food." Globe and Mail, A19

 Our history will win over our fear, anger

An opinion piece states, "Canadians mostly have opened their doors and their hearts to refugees, displaced persons and immigrants since the 19th century, but it would be a mistake to believe it always was easy and that it happened without some of the fear and political grandstanding now surrounding the Syrian refugee crisis. Yet the common denominator for newcomers to Canada has always been the same, the promise of opportunity, tolerance, freedom and safety. In this, the vast majority of Syrians seeking refuge in Canada are no different from the millions of immigrants who came before them..." Postmedia News (Whig-Standard, A4; London Free Press, A6)

 Trudeau focused on 'sunny ways'

A letter to the editor states, "With no foreign policy credentials or experience, Justin Trudeau, in the aftermath of the Paris massacre, is Mark Twain's The Innocents Abroad, peddling his "sunny ways" election message of feel-good infrastructure deficit investment and economic inclusiveness to a G20 audience that is single-mindedly focused on dealing with the global threat of international terrorism. There is Trudeau, valiantly offering the world his prescription for saving an endangered middle class while an endangered world is grappling with how to save itself. But, of course, in Trudeau's world, Canada has nothing to fear from ISIS because of its much-vaunted multicultural diversity and inclusiveness, and soon to become the new home of some 25,000 Syrian refugees to be rushed into the country by year's end with electoral refugee "politics" trumping sustainable and responsible refugee "policies." As to fighting ISIS - glory be! Liberal "soft power" days are here again!" Windsor Star, A7

 We must be vigilant in accepting refugees

An opinion piece states, "The world has changed dramatically for Canada's new prime minister. Justin Trudeau needs to acknowledge the gravity of the situation imposed by the Paris terrorist bombings and enhance Canada's military commitment to fighting ISIS, rather than emasculating it. He should ensure no Syrian refugees, let alone 25,000, set foot on Canadian soil without a careful and comprehensive security screening process in place..." Winnipeg Sun, A13

 Why Canada Can Safely Meet Its Refugee Commitments

An opinion piece by an immigration lawyer states, "The attacks in Paris last week set off a world-wide flood of empathy and solidarity. Canadians attended vigils, lit monuments in the tricolour and mourned the loss of life and normalcy in the City of Love. However, grief quickly turned into anger, inciting the inevitable search for a scapegoat. Shocking instances of violence against mosques and Muslims have been reported around the world, including a fire at a mosque in Peterborough, Ontario. Xenophobic acts are not an uncommon public reaction; a spike in attacks on Muslims following terrorist attacks has been well studied and documented. In Canada, despite the objective lack of connection, politicians began sounding off "security concerns" related to incoming Syrian refugees. Saskatchewan's Premier Brad Wall called for a delay in resettling Syrian refugees. Premier Christy Clark of British Columbia stated the obvious: that the government needs to ensure that security checks are done on every refugee. These statements demonstrate a clear lack of understanding by government officials of Canada's process for resettled refugees. Contrary to the influx of migrants crossing into Europe over the past months, Canada is resettling pre-screened refugees who have been approved for permanent residency by a Canadian visa officer abroad. The process is thorough and involves international and national law enforcement agencies." The Tyee (2015-11-18)

Lettre - Main-d'oeuvre et réfugiés

Une lettre à l'éditeur déclare, « A la suite de la proposition d'accepter 100 000 réfugiés syriens par année au Canada, il était particulièrement ahurissant d'entendre la présidente de la Fédération canadienne des entreprises indépendantes (FCEI), Martine Hébert, affirmer : " N'importe quelle politique permettant la venue de plus de travailleurs, dont les entreprises ont tant besoin, est une bonne politique. " Mme Hébert reprenait ainsi une rengaine répétée mille fois par les organisations patronales selon laquelle plus d'immigration est toujours souhaitable en raison d'une supposée pénurie de main-d'oeuvre... » Le Devoir, A8

Refugee backlash will strengthen

An opinion piece states, "Because this is Canada, the backlash begins in the most polite of fashions. But make no mistake, a backlash against Justin Trudeau's plan to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to this country is taking root and seems certain to build. Although the Liberal pledge should be applauded, the new government has helped fuel this backlash by its stubborn determination to meet an arbitrary deadline forged in the hothouse of election campaign politics..." Charlottetown Guardian, A9, The Record, A11)

Vetting questioned

An editorial states, "Re: Don't let Paris attacks alter refugee plan: profs (SP, Nov. 16). So University of Saskatchewan counter-terrorism expert Colleen Bell thinks that turning our backs on 25,000 Syrian refugees would be "a tragedy" because "Canada is a huge country." This is the kind of academic-think that passes for expertise these days. Bell and her fellow academic Martin Gaal are reported as saying that both the UN and Canada "conduct detailed screening" of refugees. You can buy into that Liberal myth if you like. I'm more convinced by U.S. Congressman Peter King, a member of the House Homeland Security Committee, who says "there is no reliable vetting system" for these refugees. "We don't know who these people are because there are no data bases to work from." Saskatonians appear to harbour an admirable skepticism on the issue. For example, of those who responded to a (pre-Paris) CFQC-TV survey that asked if they support Prime Minister Trudeau's plan to import 25,000 Syrian refugees before year-end, 83 per cent replied No. Many media commentators and Canadians alike are cynical about Trudeau's claims that the refugees will be screened rigorously. I will be looking to see exactly which "robust" vetting methods his functionaries employ. But I won't be holding my breath that we'll be given many details." Postmedia News (StarPhoenix, A8)

Logistics, not background checks, are the problem

A letter to the editor states, "White House spokesman Josh Earnest said Wednesday the 10,000 Syrian migrants destined for the U.S. will be subject to background check vetting that can "last up to 24 months" before they are approved, or rejected, as immigrants. Fortunately for the 25,000 Syrian migrants heading for Canada, our security checking is apparently so overwhelmingly comprehensive that the 25,000 will be vetted and accepted into the Canadian family by New Year's Day. Of course, after New Year's, when one or two, or 20 migrants turn out to be Islamic State of Iraq the Levant recruits and sneak into the U.S. to inflict mayhem there, watch out for the wall construction to begin across the 49th parallel and the total loss of U.S. confidence in Canada as a reliable neighbour and ally." Postmedia News (National Post, A11)

Keeping the door open

An editorial states, "The terror attacks in Paris have provoked a maelstrom of emotions and calls to action. It's crucial that governments and individuals refrain from responding in ways that do more harm than good. Reports that one of the attackers had entered Europe as a Syrian migrant have heightened Canadians' fears. That's because Canada has committed to welcoming 25,000 Syrian refugees by year's end. There had been warnings that ISIS might slip terrorists into the flow of Syrians seeking refuge in the West, and that one case is being cited as confirmation. However, that threat does not justify closing the door to the vast majority of legitimate refugees; it's a reminder of the need for effective security screening. Canada's new government has reiterated its promise to take in 25,000 Syrians by Dec. 31, and for this it should be commended. The renewed commitment underlines a message that is worth repeating : Asylum seekers should not be conflated with terrorists; they are fleeing terror." Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, B6)

Syrian refugees now scapegoats

An editorial states, "The tragic events in Paris have resulted in an unfortunate over-reaction. There are the expected demands for justice and calls for revenge. But the alarm bells are now sounding that Syrian refugees are guilty until proven innocent. When politicians, statesmen and decision-makers are caught up in this hysteria, it is very disappointing. This irrational conclusion is threatening the refugee resettlement program involving thousands of innocent Syrian refugees involving many nations, including Canada. The attacks in Paris were carried out by French and Belgian citizens. Likely, they were radicalized by terrorist elements or inspired by real or perceived attacks or discrimination against Islam and Muslims. The murders carried out by fanatics have somehow resulted in blame being placed on innocent refugees..." Charlottetown Guardian, A8

Whose side are we on?

An opinion piece states, "There are all sorts of fascinating and necessary questions that remain unanswered about exactly why, whether or when Prime Minister Justin Trudeau should or will withdraw Canada's CF-18s from the U.S.-led coalition arrayed against the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL). There are at least as many troubling questions about whether it is wise or even remotely possible for Canada's new Liberal government to fulfil Trudeau's campaign promise to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees in this country before Christmas. (...) But if Trudeau's Canada is to be something truly new and different, then in this most horrific of global calamities, Canada should be the voice for Syria's voiceless. That's whose side we should be on." Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, C7; National Post)

Let Watson stay

A letter to the editor states, "... Canada should be a refuge from militarism." PM Pierre Elliot Trudeau, 1970 Among the policies of the past 10 years that the new government seeks to reverse, one is urgent and could be made with the stroke of a pen. Against the will of Parliament, who voted twice to let American war resisters stay, Harper's government issued a deportation order against Rodney Watson, who then went into sanctuary for six years in First United Church, Vancouver. Canadian Immigration Officers waited outside to deport Watson to the U.S., to spend up to two years in prison. What a different era we are in compared to the Vietnam War. In 1967, myself an officer in the U.S. Military Medical Corps, and my wife Bonnie, later an Officer of the Order of Canada, were processed at midnight at Dorval Airport, receiving Landed Immigrant status in 20 minutes. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has expressed empathy for the plight of refugees from the Iraq War. Urge him and Citizenship, Immigration and Refugee Minister John McCallum, to rapidly end this travesty of justice." Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, B7)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Open public data necessary for functioning democracy

An opinion piece states, "There may be a new era coming in our federal access-to-information laws, and that would be a good thing, However, it's one thing to promise access in a campaign and another to follow through when in government. We'll have to wait and see. Information laws exist to protect our collective right to access public records. Every citizen and permanent resident in Canada has the right to request information from federal, provincial/territorial and municipal governments. All orders of government are subject to the protocols set out in the Access to Information Act (ATIA) at the federal level and Freedom of Information (FOI) legislation at the provincial/territorial and municipal levels. These legal instruments allow individuals to request records, policy documents and correspondence that show how government agencies operate. ATI/FOI files are different than the open-source material found on government websites, in the rhetorical speeches of politicians, and in the sanitized information packages of public relations experts. ATI/FOI files illustrate how power operates in democratic societies and can expose the often-secretive dealings between state entities and political players. There have been a number of instances where Canadians have become aware of an issue of public interest because of information uncovered using access-to-information laws." Winnipeg Free Press, A9

OTHER / AUTRE

* Clarity from Liberals needed to calm tensions, says Ambrose

The new interim Conservative leader is promising to change the party's tone, but Rona Ambrose was not as willing Wednesday to say she would abandon the practice of using cultural wedge issues as a political tactic. Ambrose was asked about a recent tweet in which MP Candice Bergen said she was embarrassed and sickened by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's approach to the fight in the Middle East and his promise to resettle 25,000 refugees. The Liberals intend to withdraw Canada's jets from the ongoing bombing campaign against the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, also known as ISIL or ISIS, but will keep soldiers in the region to train anti-ISIL fighters. Ambrose chalked up Bergen's tweet to heightened passions in the wake of Friday's attacks by ISIL militants in Paris, which killed 129 people and left hundreds more injured. "After what happened last week, there is going to be some emotion and some passion and I'm going to chalk that one up to some emotion and passion," Ambrose said. Similar passions were conjured up during the election campaign in response to the Conservative emphasis on issues like the niqab ban and a tip line to report so-called "barbaric cultural practices," Ambrose acknowledged. Both were considered to be wedge issues exploited by the Conservatives to mobilize votes. Ambrose said she was not part of the decision to promise a tip line, nor did she support it. But when asked whether her party would drop the wedge politics strategy, Ambrose didn't answer. Canadian Press (Telegraph-Journal, A8); * Toronto Star

* Whose side are we on?

An editorial states "There are all sorts of questions that remain unanswered about Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's decision to withdraw Canada's CF-18s from the U.S.-led coalition fighting against the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL). There are at least as many troubling questions about whether it is wise, or even remotely possible, for Canada's new Liberal government to fulfil Trudeau's campaign promise to resettle 25,000 Syrian refugees in this country before Christmas. But there is a far more important unanswered question that deserves at least some passing attention in all this: just whose side are we on, anyway? For five full years, Stephen Harper's Conservatives chose to go along to get along with U.S. President Barack Obama's half-baked responses to the hideously violent Baathist reaction to the Arab Spring that has now metastasized into the world-devouring catastrophe with its jihadist epicentre in the Syrian hellhole of Raqqa (...). Of course there are other questions. Up to 1,000 Syrian refugees a day are expected to begin arriving next week in the first convoy of a half dozen widebody jumbo jets shuttling Syrian refugees from Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey to Canada. About all that, here's just one of the questions that remains unanswered: what exactly are we going to do with all these people?" Postmedia News (National Post, A10)

* Slain volunteer fighter to be honoured

He was a volunteer fighter in a war in which Canada has no regular troops on the ground. The group he fought with has murky ties to a group Canada officially lists as a terrorist organization. John Gallagher, 32, who grew up in Southwestern Ontario and died fighting alongside Kurdish forces against the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) in Syria, will get a hero's welcome home Friday when his body is returned from the Middle East. His death - and the Highway of Heroes-style salute planned for him - opens a new chapter in Canada's military story, one highlighting the shifting nature of allegiances and the tricky job of honouring those who serve. "He used to be in the military," said Casper Koevoets of the Royal Canadian Legion's Victory branch in London. "He was fighting the right fight that he believed in. I think he deserves a hero's welcome home," Gallagher was killed Nov. 4 in Syria by an ISIL "suicide attack" on Kurdish fighters with the People's Protection Units (YPG), a group that actively recruits English-speaking fighters. Its members include citizens of Canada, the United States and Britain.

Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun, B2, London Free Press, National Post, Edmonton Journal, Whig-Standard)

 Climate change the worst threat this century, Dion tells APEC summit

Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion says climate change is the "worst threat we are facing this century," and warned that emissions-reduction targets don't go far enough. It's a marked departure from the stance of the previous federal government, which had alternated between whether ISIL or Russia was the greatest threat to Canada and the world. The question of how to deal with climate change took centre stage at the Asia-Pacific Economic Co-operation summit Wednesday, which has brought together leaders from 21 countries on both sides of the Pacific. The Syrian refugee crisis and Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal were also discussed. U.S. President Barack Obama said the Asia-Pacific region is particularly vulnerable to flooding and land loss associated with climate change. Ottawa Citizen (Vancouver Province, A24; Star-Phoenix; Leader-Post; National Post; Montreal Gazette)

INTERNATIONAL

False hope, no mercy for fleeing migrants

For more than two months this spring, Abul Taher did not know where his son had gone. Then his phone rang. "Your son is in the middle of the sea. Give us money," the voice on the other side said. "If you don't give the money, we will kill your son and throw him into the sea." In the background, he could hear screams from his son as captors beat him. Then his son, Muhammad Selim, was allowed to speak. "Please, give them money. Please, save my life," he said. (...) The unfolding of what Amnesty International called a "humanitarian crisis at sea" started long before Syrian refugees began leaving for Europe, and threatens to continue for years. A regional crackdown has won a pause in the number taking to the water this fall. But the grinding poverty and persecution that have driven the trade remain unchanged. "I fully expect that the trafficking will resume. I was in the camps a month ago and lots of people said, 'We don't care about the risk, we're just going to go,' " said David Scott Mathieson, a senior researcher with Human Rights Watch. The long southeastern peninsula of Bangladesh slices alongside Myanmar, its 125 kilometres of sand forming one of Earth's longest beaches. It's one of the few places in Bangladesh that attract tourists. It's also home to one of Asia's most vulnerable populations, where poor farmers live alongside drug traffickers, corrupt police and a persistent dream that across the water, there is something better. Globe and Mail, A12

L'EI lance un nouveau numéro de son magazine

«Juste terreur» ou «juste la terreur». C'est par ce double sens arrogant - Just Terror, en anglais - que le groupe armé État islamique a coiffé la une du plus récent numéro de son magazine de propagande Dabiq, consacré en partie aux attentats de Paris. Lancé hier sur les réseaux sociaux, le numéro contient quelques images des attentats. Provenant d'agences de presse, elles ont été retouchées avant leur publication dans le magazine. La photo de la une, par exemple, montre des secouristes venant en aide à un blessé. Une femme, qui apparaissait à droite dans la photo originale de l'Agence France-Presse, a été carrément effacée de l'image avec un logiciel de retouche. Les chaussures d'une des femmes victimes de l'attentat, en bas à gauche, ont aussi été floutées. Selon nos vérifications, Dabiq n'a jamais publié de photo montrant une femme, même voilée, dans l'un ou l'autre des onze numéros précédents du magazine voué à la promotion du djihadisme. Une bombe dans une canette Dabiq a aussi publié une image de ce qui serait la bombe artisanale utilisée par l'EI pour abattre l'avion de Metrojet qui s'est écrasé dans le désert du Sinaï, en Égypte. Le dispositif aurait été dissimulé dans une simple canette de boisson gazeuse. «On ne voit que trois éléments: la canette, une charge explosive et un commutateur. Il n'y a pas de minuterie ou de dispositif de déclenchement à distance. Ça laisse croire, si l'image est véridique, qu'ils ont utilisé un kamikaze pour commettre l'attentat», note le Canadien Yannick Veilleux-Lepage, spécialiste de la propagande terroriste à l'Université St. Andrews, en Écosse. La Presse, A14

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PS.PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
December 1, 2015 / 1 décembre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

 University, Intact team up on climate research site

The University of Waterloo and Intact Financial Corp. have created a new research centre that will look for new ways to reduce weather-related property damage linked to climate change. Intact will initially provide $4.25 million for a program focused on how to protect Canadian communities from severe precipitation, such as unusually heavy rains and ice storms. Another program will identify how various Canadian industrial sectors are vulnerable to extreme weather. The new Intact Centre on Climate Adaptation will be based in the university's environment faculty. The centre will monitor applied research from around the world and conduct its own research. The ICCA will also launch a national Home Adaptation Audit Program (HAAP) to assess the vulnerability of homes to flood damage, and make specific recommendations to help homeowners avoid costly damage from extreme weather. Canadian Press (Chronicle-Herald, B4); Toronto Star

 CP to fight $409-million Lac-Mégantic lawsuit

Canadian Pacific Railway Ltd. says it will fight a $409-million lawsuit the province of Quebec has launched over the 2013 LacMégantic oil train explosion that killed 47 people. The lawsuit filed in Quebec Superior Court alleges CP was negligent in handing over the tank cars to Montreal, Maine and Atlantic Railway, the now-defunct company that was in possession of the 74-car train left unattended before it rolled into LacMégantic and wiped out much of the town's core. The lawsuit also accuses CP of failing to take steps to prevent the disaster. "CP intends to fully defend itself in court," a company spokesman said on Monday. CP hauled the oil train from its origin in North Dakota to Montreal, where it handed over the cars to MM&A. The train was destined for Irving Oil's refinery in Saint John. In October, CP dropped its objections to a $446-million compensation fund for victims, allowing the settlements to begin flowing. Of about 24 settling parties, CP was the sole company refusing to pay into the fund, a stance that leaves it open to possible future damage claims. Globe and Mail, B5

 Belledune - forte opposition québécoise au projet de port pétrolier

Le projet de construction d'un terminal pétrolier au port de Belledune par l'entreprise Chaleur Terminals continue de susciter la mobilisation de citoyens et de groupes écologistes du Québec opposés au transport de pétrole par train pour l'exportation. Jeudi, les partis de l'opposition à l'Assemblée nationale du Québec ont uni leurs voix à celle des opposants du projet qui prévoit l'acheminement par train au Nouveau Brunswick de pétrole issu des sables bitumineux de l'Alberta... En entrevue à l'Acadie Nouvelle, la députée Manon Massé a indiqué que sa formation politique exige elle aussi la tenue d'audiences et d'un examen par le Bureau d'audiences publiques sur l'environnement, l'organisme québécois voué à l'information et à la consultation publiques sur des projets susceptibles d'avoir un impact majeur sur l'environnement. Celle-ci se dit sensible aux critiques venants de plusieurs néo-brunswickois qui craignent de voir l'opposition à de tels projets mener à l'abandon d'initiatives qui seraient créatrices d'emplois pour diverses communautés du Nouveau-Brunswick. «Loin de nous l'idée de dire qu'il faut pénaliser les petites communautés. La question qui se pose, c'est comment pouvoir sortir de cette économie qui est basée sur la filière pétrolière», explique Manon Massé. La députée montréalaise estime qu'à l'image de la tragédie de Lac-Mégantic, les populations locales subissent et absorbent les risques du transport de produits pétroliers. «L'industrie pétrolière est financée à coup de milliards de dollars, cet argent devrait plutôt être investi dans la création d'autres types d'emplois, comme dans la fonction publique et dans les industries de la forêt et des énergies renouvelables», estime Manon Massé. L'Acadie Nouvelle, 8

 Incertitude

Une pièce d'opinion dit « « Alors que Chemin de fer Central Maine & Québec (CMQ) pourrait techniquement transporter du pétrole brut à compter du 1er janvier, l'incertitude de la Coalition des citoyens et organismes engagés pour la sécurité ferroviaire est bien légitime et commande davantage d'écoute de la part des autorités. Le président du CMQ, John E. Giles, soutient que sa compagnie n'a encore aucun contrat pour le transport de pétrole brut et rappelle son engagement d'aller rencontrer les citoyens et les dirigeants municipaux si la situation change. Mais la levée même symbolique de l'embargo volontaire sur le transport de pétrole brut n'en constitue pas moins une épée de Damoclès. Depuis juin 2014, M. Giles a fait de la sécurité ferroviaire son leitmotiv, affirmant que sa compagnie a investi 22 millions$ pour améliorer la voie ferrée et les infrastructures après des années de négligence de l'ancien propriétaire, Montréal, Maine & Atlantic. Il a aussi démontré une volonté de rassurer les citoyens à la suite la tragédie de juillet 2013, alors qu'un convoi de 72 wagons-citernes remplis de pétrole avait déraillé en plein centre-ville. Toutefois, malgré le verdict de Transports Canada selon lequel les voies sont sécuritaires, les observations effectuées par des citoyens et le consultant Jacques Vandersleyen ont démontré des problèmes de rails usés, de traverses pourries, de même qu'un ponceau en mauvais état. » La Tribune, 14

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

 Trudeau's Parliamentary Secretaries To Be Charged With Policy Files

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau will appoint his parliamentary secretaries in the next day or two, The Huffington Post Canada has learned. Parliamentary secretaries resemble junior cabinet ministers, but they traditionally don't attend cabinet meetings and they have no managerial responsibilities over departments. They mostly answer questions on behalf of their minister when he or she is not in the House. This time, however, some parliamentary secretaries will be charged with actual policy files... Another Liberal source cautioned that there might be several familiar names left off the list of appointees this week. The PMO is hoping that some who are left off the list will be elected committee chairs, including the chair of the soon-to-be struck national security committee — the oversight body the Liberals promised as a response to the concerns over increased sharing of information by security agencies in Bill C-51. Huffington Post (2015-11-30)

 Can we please stop blaming terrorism on civil libertarians?

An opinion piece by Andrew Mitrovica states "White. Male. Academic. Check off those three boxes and you've got a good chance of being anointed a "national security expert" by the mainstream media ... no questions asked. You'll be contacted by reporters for instant comment on the terrorist attack du jour, based on information that you've likely gleaned from reading newspapers and watching TV - just like everybody else. But you've got a PhD, so that's all that really matters. One frequent rider on the national security pundit carousel is Christian Leuprecht, a professor at the Royal Military College, Queen's University and a 'senior fellow' at the Macdonald-Laurier Institute. Last week, Leuprecht penned a column for the Globe and Mail that was rife with inaccuracies, offered a vacuous defence of Bill C-51 and made the breathtakingly absurd suggestion that "self-righteous" critics of the "surveillance state" (presumably including journalists like yours truly) have prevented the forces of order from "leveling the playing field with the bad guys" responsible for the Paris atrocities.. Readers may recall that in a March column I dissected the equally laughable remarks Leuprecht made before the Senate's Public Safety and National Security Committee considering Bill C-51. Caught in one act of ill-formed hyperbole, Leuprecht has chosen to double-down. He starts his latest rant in the Globe by chastising unnamed "critics" for pointing out that many of the terrorists who murdered hundreds of innocents all over Paris were hardly in deep cover - that, as the Wall Street Journal has so meticulously reported, the killers made their deadly preparations in "plain sight" of somnolent French and other European intelligence services... Leuprecht then compounds this bit of lunacy by suggesting Canadian cops and spies are reluctant to share such information because of ... Canadian torture survivor Maher Arar. "Since the Maher Arar case," Leuprecht writes, "Canadian agencies are loath to share intelligence with other departments, let alone countries." iPolitics

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Deportation order hard to grasp

At first glance it seems a contradiction, one many Londoners find difficult to understand. As Canada lays out the welcome mat for 25,000 Syrian refugees fleeing catastrophic conditions in their home country, the government shut the door last week on a Colombian family who say they fear they will be killed when they return to theirs. (...) "It's clear in the law, but I can understand why people in the community don't understand it. It's quite complex," London immigration consultant Mia Loebach said Monday. "The basic answer to that is anyone, before they come to Canada, needs a permanent resident visa to come in." "The (Syrian refugees) have been processed by the United Nations. They will land as permanent residents," Loebach said. In contrast, when people ask for refugee status after arriving in the country - as Johanna Santos, Edgar Regalado and their two children did in April 2013- they are immediately given what's called a "conditional removal order," Loebach said. "And that moves pretty quickly once the refugee claim is refused," she said. The plight of the Santos-Regalado family has triggered an outpouring of support in the northwest London community where the children attend St. Paul elementary school and the parents have put down roots. They said they had been targeted by the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) for years, had moved cities to avoid persecution and fled the country after a FARC member shot at Regalado. But in a decision later upheld by a federal court, a refugee board denied their claim for status here, saying they had not done enough to get help in Colombia. The family has received an order to leave the country on Wednesday. London Free Press, A1/Front

Woman arrested at St. Stephen border

A 28-year-old woman was sent to jail on Saturday after being taken into custody by Canadian customs officials. Police were called to St. Stephen on Saturday at 7 p.m. after the woman was identified as being wanted for an outstanding committal warrant, said Sgt. Lori Magee of the Saint John Police Force. Such warrants typically are issued for unpaid fines. Telegraph-Journal, B4

Low dollar gives tourism a temporary lift

Tourism to Canada rebounded in 2015, thanks to the low Canadian dollar, but the travel industry can't count on a favourable exchange rate to prop it up indefinitely. The sector has to make some significant changes if it is going to regain its spot among the top 10 destinations in the world, according to the latest annual report from the Travel Industry Association of Canada. That means boosting marketing efforts, trimming airport taxes and fees for incoming travellers and making sure there are enough employees to work in the sector. The report notes that Canada was in eighth place among the world's top destinations - measured by international visits - in 2000, but it has fallen well out of the top 10 since then. By 2014, Canada was in 17th place, behind countries such as Saudi Arabia, Greece, Thailand and Austria. (...) Another key issue for the tourism sector is a labour shortage, especially in Western Canada. Loosening the Temporary Foreign Worker Program to allow a seasonal stream of employees would be one short-term fix, TIAC suggests. Globe and Mail, B3

La lutte aux gangs de rue s'intensifie

Le chef de la police d'Ottawa, Charles Bordeleau, a présenté son budget préliminaire pour 2016, à la Commission des services policiers, lundi soir. Quelques heures plus tôt, le numéro un de la police municipale a confirmé au Droit que son unité des gangs de rue et des armes à feu était débordée. C'est pourquoi douze agents viendront en aide - temporaire - à la dizaine déjà en place dans cette escouade. (...) Du même souffle, le chef de police a mis en relief une surabondance des armes à feu provenant des États-Unis qui débordent à Ottawa. De plus en plus d'armes de poing achetées au pays de l'Oncle Sam traversent la frontière canadienne, et servent à des criminels plus ou moins avertis dans la capitale fédérale. Le Droit, 5/Front

Deporting this family seems wrong

An opinion piece states, "Regarding the article Colombian clan loses bid to stay in Canada (Nov. 28). Would someone please explain to me why this family of four (who apparently has assimilated into Canadian culture with support from family, community, school and a job) is being deported. Meanwhile we are prepared to offer thousands of refugees free passage, lodging and everything else supplied to come to Canada, London included. Are we being humane only to Syrians and disregarding anyone else? I don't understand the rationale behind this decision." London Free Press, A5

Jury duty can be taxing in more ways than one

A letter to the editor asks, "Q "I read recently that Canada and the U.S. are exchanging border information to keep closer tabs on how long people are staying in the two countries. The insinuation is that if you spend more than 182 days outside Quebec, you could lose your health benefits in Quebec. Is this true?" A It has been rumoured for a while that border monitoring is being stepped up, which could mean a nasty surprise for Quebecers who don't check - or don't care - how long they stay in the U.S. or anywhere else. To be covered by the provincial health card, residents are supposed to be present here more than half the year. You cannot be absent more than 182 days in a calendar year. (Departure and return days don't count against you in the calculation, and neither does any absence of 21 days or less). "Any person who does not respect this condition is not covered by the provincial health system for that year or any other where they're absent for 183 days or more," a spokesman for the Régie de L'Assurance Maladie du Québec said. "The Régie will ask to be reimbursed for any health services received during that period."" Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, B1/Front)

Time for action on new terminal

An opinion piece states, "Victoria Mayor Lisa Helps is part of a 13-member delegation in Ottawa this week trying to drum up federal funding for a new Belleville Street ferry terminal. This is no junket. After decades of talks, task forces, reports and hand-wringing, replacement of the dismal terminal on the south side of Victoria's Inner Harbour is long overdue. Visitors coming to downtown Victoria by sea are treated to a magnificent view that, besides natural features, includes the B.C. Parliament Buildings, the Empress Hotel and other heritage buildings. Much work over the years has gone into turning a bleak industrial site into an attractive, welcoming harbour. But the welcome mat for ferry passengers is tattered and grubby. The terminal is a hodge-podge of temporary industrial trailers, hardly a fitting portal to a beautiful harbour and a beautiful region. (...) Travellers arriving in Greater Victoria by air are greeted suitably. In 2011, Victoria International Airport, which receives federal funding for improvements, was rated among the top 10 most-loved airports in the world, and has consistently won awards for customer service. While the Belleville Street terminal does not handle as many travellers as the airport, it, too, is an important portal. The federal government should do its part to ensure travellers by sea are welcomed in comfortable and attractive surroundings, not in temporary buildings more suitable for an oil camp than a port of entry to Canada." Times Colonist, A10

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

* Kids' tech maker VTech hacked, 5 million at risk

Kid's technology maker VTech says the personal information of about 5 million of its customers and their children may have been stolen by hackers. The Hong Kong-based company disclosed the breach of a customer database late last week, but didn't say until Monday how many people could be affected. The news comes just as the holiday shopping season is kicking into gear and kids' smartwatches and tablets made by companies such as VTech are expected to be high on children's wish lists. VTech's Kidizoom Smartwatch is predicted to be a top seller this holiday season, while its InnoTab tablets have been popular in the past. Compromised information in the VTech breach includes the names, birthdates and genders of child users. It also includes adult user information including names, email addresses, passwords, secret questions and answers for password retrieval, IP addresses, mailing addresses and download histories. The affected database doesn't contain any credit card numbers, or personally identification information such as Social Security or driver's licence numbers, VTech said. Customers from the U.S., Canada and 15 other countries are affected. The hacking serves as a reminder to parents to be careful about what kinds of information about their children they enter into on Internet-connected devices. While devices like kid-friendly smartwatches and tablets may block a child's access to the bulk of the Internet, they're still a potential target for hackers. The breach took place Nov. 14 and was discovered 10 days later. It involved customer data stored on the Learning Lodge app store database. Customers use Learning Lodge to download apps, games, e-books and other content to VTech products. Associated Press (Times-Colonist, B3); Telegraph-Journal; Reuters (National Post)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

* Vader Trial 'Crisis'

Court hears how lack of disclosed evidence led to stayed charges. The Crown is denying it is an abuse of process to put Travis Vader on trial for killing two vanished St. Albert seniors after charges against him were earlier stayed. And court heard Monday during a hearing into the case that the "disclosure crisis" that led to the first-degree murder charges being stayed was the fault of the RCMP. Edmonton Chief Crown prosecutor Michelle Doyle testified at the Court of Queen's Bench hearing that she was "stunned" to learn of the "staggering" amount of evidence in the case which had not been disclosed by police. "I couldn't believe it," said Doyle. "I was very upset and very angry and that was communicated quite clearly." In the month before Vader's April 28, 2014, trial for the alleged killing of Lyle McCann, 78, and his 77-year-old wife Marie, was set to start, a team of 20 Mounties was tasked to figure out the situation, but it quickly became apparent the evidence would not be disclosed in time. "At this point I had lost all confidence in the status of disclosure," said Doyle, adding she knew then that she could not proceed with the upcoming trial. Postmedia Network (Edmonton Sun, A10); CBC (2015-12-01); CBC News; Edmonton Journal (2015-11-30)

Man charged with murder in death of Cutknife

A 19-year-old man has been charged with second degree murder of a Samson Cree Nation woman. Maskwacis RCMP found the body of Kirsten Cutknife on the Samson Cree town site residence on Saturday morning. Joshua Crier, 19, was also charged with assault with a weapon involving another woman. She did not receive life-threatening injuries. All three people are known to one another. All three people are known to one another. Crier is in police custody and will make a first appearance in relation to the charges in Wetaskiwin Provincial Court on Dec. 17. An autopsy has been tentatively scheduled for Wednesday at the Office of the Medical Examiner in Edmonton. Postmedia Network (Red Deer Advocate, A5)

Mother of five one of three found dead in rural home

Friends and family have identified a woman who recently started a new job at a fast-food restaurant as one of three people killed in a rural Alberta home. Mounties say the bodies of a man, a woman and a teenage girl - all with "obvious trauma" - were found in a house near Edson on Sunday. Sylvia Standing said Monday that her goddaughter Roxanne Ruth Berube was 36, had five children and was a good mother. There were also media reports identifying the male victim as Dan Miller. Insp. Gibson Glavin said the deaths were not a murder-suicide. "I will be clear that there was someone out there, or some people, who did this and we have not arrested them yet," he said. RCMP major crimes investigators and other Mounties were speaking with people in the area west of Edmonton looking for leads and clues, he said. Police found the bodies after responding to a call from someone outside the home. Glavin said police don't believe anyone else is at risk, but urged people to be careful. "We do urge the public to be cautious, to be aware of people or circumstances that cause them to believe that they have some knowledge or some connection with this homicide investigation," he said. Postmedia Network (Red Deer Advocate, A1, A2, Times Colonist, London Free Press Edmonton Journal, Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun, Vancouver Sun, Calgary Sun, Calgary Herald Times & Transcript); National Post, Presse canadienne (La Voix de l'Est, 4)

 School response to undisclosed threat was 'precautionary'

Two messages sent to parents of students at Bernice MacNaughton High School concerning a threat at the school were a matter of caution, said the superintendent of the Anglophone East School District Monday afternoon. Gregg Ingersoll said in an emailed statement that the principal of the high school in west Moncton received information late last week that caused her to initiate a security protocol that resulted in two messages being sent to parents over the weekend disclosing that a threat had been made. The school district has an established assessment tool for determining the significance of any threat connected to a school. Ingersoll said in this case, "the result was that the situation posed a low level of concern, however the school asked the RCMP to get involved as a precautionary measure. The school had a smooth start up this morning and officials at the school are working with the RCMP in the ongoing investigation." The district's assessment tool defines a "Low Level of Concern" as instances when "risk to target(s), student, staff and school safety is vague and/or indirect." The involvement of the RCMP is typically reserved for high levels of concern when a threat is imminent or immediate, but that was not the case in this instance. Postmedia Network (Times & Transcript, A3)

 Tories hand over Atcon computer servers to RCMP

Progressive Conservatives have handed over Atcon's back-up computer servers to the RCMP after revealing on Monday that the party purchased them at a bankruptcy auction in 2013. The Miramichi company's bankruptcy cost taxpayers close to $70 million. The Progressive Conservatives have long said questions remain over the former Liberal government's dealings with the failed Miramichi company. Interim Tory Leader Bruce Fitch says there's now "enough new information" on the servers to prove a new audit is required, something the Liberal government hasn't committed to doing. Liberal cabinet Minister Donald Arseneault labelled the move a "pretty pathetic" attempt to divert attention away from issues of the current day by an opposition without any new ideas. Arseneault also questions whether there's anything to the servers - beyond a political stunt. In a 61-page report earlier this year, Auditor General Kim MacPherson found that Atcon received a total of $77 million from the defunct Department of Economic Development, with nearly $70 million of that amount in default. She noted that her office hadn't done a forensic audit on the money trail, but would be willing to do one if the Legislative Assembly asked her to do it and provided the resources to make it happen. The Progressive Conservatives contend it didn't seek to analyze the servers it quietly purchased now more than two years ago - even through a general election - because it was waiting on what the auditor general found. Fitch said on Monday that the current Liberal government's stance to not move forward on a larger audit then led the party to hand the servers over to police. It first paid about $1,800 to have the servers analyzed by an IT firm to recover some of the documents. Postmedia Network (Times & Transcript, A10, Daily Gleaner, Telegraph-Journal)

 Youth pleads guilty to being an accessory to robbery

A Moncton teen has admitted to being an accessory to robbery and will be sentenced on Dec. 14. The female offender appeared in Moncton youth court Monday morning with her lawyer Helene Beaulieu. She can't be named because she was 17, a youth, when the offence was committed. She pleaded guilty to being "a party" to robbing Bharat Kumar Gader of electronic items while wounding him with a knife. The Crown withdrew charges of aggravated assault and robbing money from him while armed with a knife. She also pleaded guilty to two breaches of undertaking in June and July. The offence occurred just before 4 a.m. on May 3. The RCMP were called to the parking lot of the Sports Rock Bar on Paul Street where a man was suffering from stab wounds. Police said he drove himself there and his vehicle ran into the back of a cab. Postmedia Network (Times & Transcript, A3)

Murder scene was 'pretty horrific,' officer tells jury

Even for a seasoned Hamilton police forensic investigator, the Lou Malone murder scene was horrific. "There is a male deceased lying on the west sidewalk with a large pool of blood at his head. The top part of his head appeared to have been shot off," Det. Const. Doug Moon told a jury of the murder scene he witnessed on Kenilworth Avenue North in the early morning hours of Nov. 9, 2013. "Are you able to characterize the scene?" prosecutor Craig Fraser asked the officer. "It was a bloody mess. Pretty horrific. It was ugly," Moon replied. Brothers John and Mike Josipovic, aged 52 and 49 respectively, have pleaded not guilty to first-degree murder in the slaying of Malone, 49. Malone, a former biker, had been shot point blank in the back of the head after being chased by two men in a pickup truck. Moon testified Monday that birdshot pellets from the shotgun blast that killed the ex-Hells Angel biker broke storefront windows on the west side of Kenilworth, south of Hope Street. The seven-man, five-woman jury learned earlier that Malone was initially grazed in the neck in front a home at 35 Robins Ave. Moon presented evidence that showed how close that blast had been. Postmedia Network (Hamilton Spectator, A8)

 Murder charges should be stayed, lawyer say

Murder charges against Travis Vader in the case of a slain St. Albert couple should be stayed because the prosecution gave itself an unfair advantage by delaying the case for two years, according to his lawyer. In turn, the prosecution has blamed the delay on an Alberta RCMP "fiasco" that put Vader's right to a fair trial in jeopardy with late disclosure of evidence. The RCMP's disclosure problems were massive and egregious, according to the prosecution, and left no option but to stay the charges in one of the province's most-watched trials. Michelle Doyle, the original prosecutor in the case, said she believed disclosure of evidence was complete before the RCMP sent thousands of new documents in the weeks before Vader's 2014 trial was set to begin. (...) Vader's previously scheduled trial was derailed on March 29, 2014, when prosecutors stayed the murder charges because of the RCMP's lack of disclosure. Later that year, they lifted the stay and Vader faced the murder charges once more. Postmedia Network (Edmonton Journal, A7)

Cocaine, weapons found in home near school

Drugs and a firearm were seized Sunday from a Sidney home directly across the street from Sidney Elementary School. Sidney/North Saanich RCMP executed a search warrant at the home and found cocaine that was packaged - seen as an indication that it was prepared for distribution - as well as a rifle with prohibited ammunition capacity and a set of brass knuckles with a Taser built in. Police arrested a 17-year-old girl, a 23-year-old woman and two men, ages 19 and 21. The females were released without charge, but the men are facing charges that include possession of a controlled substance for the purpose of trafficking and unlawful possession of a firearm. They have been released and are awaiting court appearances. Sidney/North Saanich Cpl. Erin Fraser said it's disturbing to have to carry out a bust like this one near a school. "Definitely not ideal, especially given there was a weapon found," she said. "There was no direct threat to the kids, no links that we could establish with the kids, but just the fact that it's right there certainly is concerning to us." Postmedia Network (Times Colonist, A4)

Property crimes spike

Police are cracking down on organized crime and making headway when it comes to safer youth and safe roads, according to the Red Deer RCMP's annual policing report. But the year-to-end results show a significant spike in total property crimes from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30 over the last five years. In 2015 there were 10,034 total property crimes compared to 9,506 in 2014 and 7,342 in 2011. RCMP Insp. Gerald Grobmeier said this may be attributed to the growth in Red Deer's population, the downturn in the economy or that people are reporting more crimes. "It's probably a combination of everything," he said. Criminal code offences, such as disturbing the peace and offensive weapons, have stayed relatively the same with 16,313 in 2015 compared to 16,241 in 2014 and 14,297 in 2011. Total persons crimes were down to 2,117 in 2015 compared to 2,336 in 2014 and 2,567 in 2011. This includes crimes such as robberies, sexual assault and utter threats. Grobmeier said the downward trend is common throughout the country. He said it could be a combination of better education, better programs and more calls to the police. Postmedia Network (Red Deer Advocate, A1, A2)

 Stemming the violence - Legislation would make it easier for victims to obtain protection orders

An editorial states, "The Selinger government has introduced legislation to make it easier for victims of domestic violence to obtain protection orders and to require the subjects of such orders to surrender firearms they may possess. The measures come in the wake of two high-profile deaths in the province this fall. Manitoba has the second-highest rate of spousal homicide in Canada, next to Saskatchewan, Attorney General Gord Mackintosh said Monday in announcing several administrative and proposed legislative changes. "We have to do better," he said. "We have to end this terror." Mackintosh said amendments he introduced in the legislature to the Domestic Violence and Stalking Act will set a less onerous standard for obtaining protection orders. (...) Over the last two years, more than 1,200 protection orders have been granted in Manitoba, but another 1,700 have been dismissed." Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press, A3)

 Real protection

In the wake of two recent deaths linked to domestic violence, the provincial government hopes to soon offer victims the strongest protection in Canada. To do so, it must first eliminate barriers that are relatively unique to Manitoba. Over the past two years, 1,200 protection orders were granted in the province, while 1,700 - 59% - were dismissed because of a high threshold for victims to qualify, said Justice Minister Gord Mackintosh. And when protection applications came in, courts also weren't required to follow up on reports the suspected abuser had a gun or check into his or her criminal record. "We have to open wider the doors of justice, particularly for those women living in fear," said Mackintosh. Mackintosh announced new legislation Monday that aims to make protection orders easier to get. Those with orders against them would also face automatic criminal checks and be banned from keeping guns. The new bill follows two deaths that raised questions about Manitoba's current system. Selena Rose Keeper was denied a protection order before her ex-boyfriend was charged with killing her in October. And Camille Runke was allegedly shot to death by her ex-husband while she had a protection order against him. "This is for Selena and Camille and too many other women who deserve long lives and a life in peace," Mackintosh said. Postmedia Network (Winnipeg Sun, A5)

 Solicitor general vows to help ALERT cope with shortfall

Alberta's solicitor general has vowed to protect Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams (ALERT) from layoffs stemming from a $3-million drop in funding anticipated next year, but future changes to the agency are being considered. On Monday, Kathleen Ganley dismissed fears that 70 ALERT members could be laid off next year as a result of a reduction in federal grant funding. "We don't believe that will be the case," Ganley told reporters at the legislature. "We're committed as a fundamental principle to ensuring that no layoffs occur and that the functions of this organization continue going forward." The province received a $42.4-million grant from Ottawa in 2008-09 as part of the federal government's initiative to recruit new police officers. Funds were allocated to ALERT in increments until the grant was depleted. "During this fiscal year they are adequately funded and they can continue to maintain their operations," she said. "Going forward we have, with the support of both ALERT and the Association of Chiefs of Police, performed an audit on ALERT and we will be determining in the coming days how best to perform that function." She noted ALERT is made up of a series of specialized teams. The 280-member agency brings together six teams from across Alberta to deal with fugitives, grow ops, child pornography, cybercrime and other large cases. ALERT chair Shami Sandhu said last December that a cut of one-quarter of the agency's officers would jeopardize the work it does and leave it on a "shoestring" budget. Ganley said earlier this month during her ministry's budget estimates that the province recently had an outside audit conducted into the operations of the 10-year-old integrated unit of municipal police, RCMP and provincial sheriffs "to see how well that was working for everyone." Postmedia Network (Calgary Herald, A6, Edmonton Journal)

 Father of 2 shouldn't have been killed by Thompson RCMP, family says

The family of a Thompson man shot to death by RCMP says he never should have been killed over a case of drinking and driving. Steven Campbell, 39, was shot and killed by an RCMP officer on Nov 21 after a short police chase ended in an officer shooting into the vehicle he was driving. "Steven had his demons, and Steven was no saint, but I just wanted to tell his story because he made mistakes, and he didn't deserve this," said Shannon Heck, Campbell's sister. According to RCMP, Campbell had been driving erratically when officers tried to pull him over. CBC (2015-12-01); Thompson Citizen (2015-11-30)

Downloading costs

In a classic case of downloading from Ottawa and Victoria, municipalities are being asked to pay more for DNA crime analysis. It's baffling that this isn't included in the current RCMP contract. Policing is the biggest of big-ticket items in municipal councils' budgets and they're growing impatient with ever-ballooning costs. This will likely spur a closer look into whether we could be saving money or getting better service by jettisoning the RCMP in favour of a local or regional police force. Housing is a provincial responsibility, yet cities and districts are regularly allowing denser condo developments in exchange for the inclusion of non-profit or market rental housing - both things the province and the feds have largely pulled out of over the last 30 years. That siphons off money that could otherwise be invested in areas that are within municipal jurisdiction, such as updating old rec centres or paying for local infrastructure. Postmedia Network (Times Colonist, A10)

 Saisie par la GRC de cigarettes électroniques contenant de la marijuana

Les policiers ont récemment saisi dans un véhicule intercepté au Nouveau-Brunswick une grande quantité de marijuana, de l'hydromorphone et des cigarettes électroniques contenant de la marijuana. Le conducteur, Stéphane Fournier, un homme âgé de 39 ans de la région d'Ottawa, a été arrêté lors de cette opération qui s'est produite en octobre, près de Havelock, mais qui n'a été rapportée que cette semaine par la GRC. Les cigarettes électroniques saisies contenaient de l'huile de cannabis et du tétrahydrocannabinol (THC), la composante psychoactive de la marijuana. C'était la première fois que la GRC au N.-B. interceptait un produit de la marijuana sous cette forme. Les cigarettes électroniques contenant de la marijuana peuvent être consommées discrètement, car elles ne dégagent aucune odeur et ressemblent à une cigarette électronique typique. En Cour provinciale à Moncton, Stéphane Fournier a été accusé de trois chefs d'accusation de possession d'une substance réglementée dans le but d'en faire le trafic et de trois chefs d'accusation de trafic d'une substance réglementée. Il a été libéré sous certaines conditions et comparaitra de nouveau en cour à une date ultérieure. Presse canadienne (Acadie Nouvelle, 2)

 Legalizing pot shouldn't be another promise to go up in smoke

Prohibition has not served us well, let's hope Trudeau follows through. After Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's recent climb down on his refugee commitment, it might be fair to wonder how many other of his election promises might be compromised. For example, is it a certainty that marijuana will be legalized? It was one of Trudeau's first promises as Liberal leader, and his mandate letters to the relevant ministers spell out the need to create a federal-provincial process "that will lead to the legalization and regulation of marijuana." Mind you, "creating a process" makes it sound like the government is less than 100 per cent committed. If there's any kind of significant pushback on this issue, will they get cold feet? The public, at least, seems to be onside with the concept (...) Calgary police chief Rick Hanson, however, took a much different view on such matters, and was never shy about expressing his opinion on what laws we needed or did not need. So where does our current chief stand? Back in October, newly minted police Chief Roger Chaffin seemed to take a hands-off approach. He expressed his hope that law enforcement would at least be consulted, and said in the meantime, they would "continue our education, enforcement and public outreach activities in regards to marijuana and other illicit drugs." Postmedia Network (Calgary Herald, B4)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Assante settlement greenlighted

A $10-million settlement has been approved in the class-action lawsuit involving a former Red Deer investor incarcerated for first-degree murder. Justice John Rooke, associate chief of the Alberta Court of Queen's bench, approved the settlement between a class of 804 claimants against Assante Capital Management, Assante Wealth Management, and Brian and Christine Malley. It was approved on Monday in Red Deer Court of Queen's bench. The Malley's ran the Assante Capital and Wealth Management office in Red Deer. Former clients launched the suit claiming invest mismanagement. (...) Brian Andrew Malley, 58, of Innisfail was convicted of first degree murder on Feb. 24 in Red Deer Court of Queen's bench. Victoria Shachtay, 23, of Innisfail was killed on Nov. 25, 2011. The quadriplegic single mother died when she opened a gift left on her doorstep. The gift disguised a pipe-bomb, which detonated. Malley was sentenced to life without parole for 25 years. He is currently appealing the decision and sentence. Red Deer Advocate, A2

 Son sort repose sur la crédibilité des délateurs

La crédibilité des frères Robert et Timothy Simpson, délateurs qualifiés de «sociopathes» par la défense, pèsera lourd dans le sort d'un de leurs présumés complices d'un double meurtre à Montréal. C'est ce qu'ont convenu les procureurs des deux parties au procès de Leslie Greenwood, qui tire à sa fin après deux mois et demi d'audition. Le garagiste est accusé d'avoir participé aux meurtres du trafiquant Kirk Murray et de son chauffeur, Antonio Onesi, dans le stationnement d'un McDonald's du quartier Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, le 24 janvier 2010. Les victimes ont été abattues par Robert Simpson, aidé de son frère cadet, sous l'ordre du Hells Jeffrey Lynds. (...) Robert Simpson est incarcéré pour sept meurtres, dont quatre perpétrés dans des pénitenciers et qu'il a décrits en détail au procès. Journal de Montréal, 18

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Speeding up justice for victims

In her more than 25 years working as a prosecutor, Kelly Winchester has never found that it gets easier to look at the bloody and bruised photographic evidence of intimate partner violence, or to hear the heartbreak of abuse. Yet she remains dedicated to prosecuting sexual assault and domestic violence cases. The images, the stories, as difficult as they may be, steel her determination. And she has plenty of work to do. Winchester estimates about a quarter of the files that come across her desk entail some type of domestic violence. This is in keeping with data from Statistics Canada that intimate partner violence comprises a quarter of violent crimes in New Brunswick. More than drugs, robbery, motor vehicle theft and even drunk driving, it's intimate partner violence that consumes Winchester's time. Winchester works out of the Crown's Saint John office. In a province that has the highest rate of police-reported intimate partner violence east of Manitoba, the Port City is the crime's epicentre. The city regularly ranks as one of the most dangerous for couples in the country. According to data obtained exclusively from Statistics Canada by the Telegraph-Journal, in 2014 Saint John Police reported more than one incident of domestic violence a day. One out of every five victims reported by police in the province was located in Saint John. Telegraph-Journal, A1 (Daily Gleaner, Times & Transcript)

 Real protection

In the wake of two recent deaths linked to domestic violence, the provincial government hopes to soon offer victims the strongest protection in Canada. To do so, it must first eliminate barriers that are relatively unique to Manitoba. Over the past two years, 1,200 protection orders were granted in the province, while 1,700 - 59% - were dismissed because of a high threshold for victims to qualify, said Justice Minister Gord Mackintosh. And when protection applications came in, courts also weren't required to follow up on reports the suspected abuser had a gun or check into his or her criminal record. "We have to open wider the doors of justice, particularly for those women living in fear," said Mackintosh. Mackintosh announced new legislation Monday that aims to make protection orders easier to get. Those with orders against them would also face automatic criminal checks and be banned from keeping guns. Winnipeg Sun

 First phase of inquiry into missing, murdered indigenous women expected this week

The federal government is expected to release the details of the first phase of a national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women this weekend, CTV News has learned. Ottawa plans to make the announcement, which is expected to begin with the consultation of the victims' families, on or before the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women on Dec. 6. "As we promised, we will listen to the families first, who have good experience with this and good instincts, and then we will engage with the other partners in the aboriginal organizations, provinces and territories, (and) experts," said Indigenous and Northern Affairs Minister Carolyn Bennett. A full inquiry is expected to be launched in the spring of 2016. CTV News

 'Gender inclusive' inquiry for indigenous men not for everyone

A recent petition calling for a "gender inclusive" inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal people in Canada is not sitting well with everyone. Adam Jones, an associate professor with the University of British Columbia, started the petition a few weeks ago, saying men and boys account for more than 70 per cent of total aboriginal homicide victims in Canada and should not be ignored in a national inquiry. Canada's minister of Indigenous Affairs, Carolyn Bennett, has previously said she hasn't ruled out the possibility of including men and boys in the national inquiry. CBC News

'Karina was stolen from our family'

Carol Wolfe never forgot the last words her daughter said before she disappeared five years ago. "The last memory I have is Karina saying, 'I love you mom and I will be home later,'" she said through a sign language interpreter Monday at the Saskatoon police station. Karina never came home. Last month, the man who is charged with killing Karina Wolfe led police to the area northwest of the city where they discovered her remains. (...) People said Carol Wolfe was tireless in her search for her daughter. "She never gave up," Darlene Okemaysim-Sicotte said, standing a few feet away from the spot where police recovered Karina's body. (...) Meanwhile, supporters are working hard to help Karina's family. Okemaysim-Sicotte said her grassroots organization, Women Walking Together, has been working with Wolfe's family since she disappeared. She said the fact that Constant volunteered information that led to the body's discovery and his subsequent arrest shows that awareness about missing and murdered aboriginal women is working. Postmedia News (StarPhoenix, A1, Edmonton Journal, Ottawa Citizen, National Post)

Man pleads guilty to Winnipeg assaults

A 21-year-old man has pleaded guilty to last year's attack on a Winnipeg teen, admitting his role in the nearly fatal assault that turned the young woman into a voice for Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women. In provincial court in the Manitoba capital on Monday, Justin Hudson, a member of the Poplar River First Nation, pleaded guilty to two counts of aggravated sexual assault in relation to the Nov. 8, 2014, attack on the young woman and a separate assault hours later on a second indigenous woman. He had been charged with attempted murder, aggravated sexual assault and sexual assault with a weapon. The young woman's name is protected by a publication ban ordered by the court on Monday, as is the second victim's. (...) The young woman, now 17, is today an advocate for a national inquiry into Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women - a probe the Liberal government has said it will launch by the summer. Her case also provoked a conversation about identifying victims of sexual assault. Globe and Mail, A3, Winnipeg Free Press, Canadian Press (Times Colonist), CBC News

Quilt stitches families together - Honouring slain, missing women

A quilt made by family members of Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women is to be unveiled Friday at the Winnipeg Art Gallery. The project, which involved 200 relatives from every province, is believed to be the first time families have come together to work on an art installation of this kind. The 200 family members made the patches in Winnipeg in September when the province hosted a national event to bring families from across Canada together. "There are a lot of projects to honour missing and murdered indigenous women and girls, but this one is about the families. It's the families who are creating something, making something for their loved one," said Nahanni Fontaine, Manitoba's special adviser on aboriginal women's issues. Fontaine spearheaded the project, modelling it on a quilt created in Manitoba for missing and murdered indigenous women and girls. That quilt, with 35 patches, was unveiled at the art gallery in 2014. With 95 patches, the new quilt is three times the size of the Manitoba one, which Fontaine takes to meetings around the country. Winnipeg Free Press

 Sunday vigil to mark 26th anniversary of Montreal Massacre

In honour of the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women, the Comox Valley Transition Society and Honouring Our Sisters will host a vigil on Sunday, Dec. 6 at 2 p.m. on the plaza in front of the Comox Valley Art Gallery, 580 Duncan Ave., Courtenay. Dec. 6 will be the 26th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre, where 14 young women were gunned down simply because they were women who were studying to become engineers. Over the last 40 years, approximately 1,200 indigenous women have gone missing or have been murdered in Canada. Every six days, a woman is murdered by a current or former partner. Comox Valley Record (2015-11-30)

Police shuffle aims to deal with shootings, gangs

Ottawa's police chief has reassigned as many as 12 officers to his force's guns and gangs unit in response to the growing number of shooting incidents in the city. The deployment comes in advance of a meeting this week with Mayor Jim Watson, Chief Charles Bordeleau and police board chair Eli El-Chantiry to discuss what could become a record year for gunfire. Most of the 42 shooting incidents in Ottawa so far this year appear connected to gangs and have ranged from reports of shots being fired to young men showing up at hospitals with bullet wounds. The total compares with 49 incidents in all of 2014. El-Chantiry said the additional officers will come from other departments within the force. Ottawa Citizen, A2

Le SPVM mène une offensive contre les gangs de rue

L'opération policière qui a mené à une dizaine d'arrestations samedi à Montréal et sur la Rive-Sud s'inscrit dans une offensive plus globale contre les gangs de rue lancée par le Service de police de la Ville de Montréal (SPVM) à la fin de l'été, a appris La Presse. Cette offensive, baptisée « Projet Accalmie », doit se poursuivre au moins jusqu'à la fin de l'année et avait comme premier objectif de mettre fin à une vague d'événements violents qui ont secoué les gangs de rue depuis le printemps dernier. Une dizaine de meurtres, de tentatives de meurtre, d'agressions et d'autres événements se sont produits durant cette vague qui a culminé avec l'assassinat de Donald César, survenu à Montréal-Nord au début du mois de septembre. César était le demi-frère de Chénier Dupuy, défunt chef des Rouges tué durant l'été 2012, et des policiers avaient ensuite dit à La Presse craindre une escalade de la violence. Un inspecteur du SPVM avait toutefois assuré qu'il n'y avait pas de guerre entre les gangs de rue et que plusieurs mobiles différents pouvaient expliquer les événements violents. La Presse

 Nunavik beer, wine sales foster lower crime rates: police

Police in Puvirnituq say there has been a major drop in the number of calls they've had to handle since the Nunavik community's co-op store began selling beer and wine in October. The Povungnituk Co-operative Association began offering beer and wine sales from its local store in October, the second co-op in the region to do so since the Fort Chimo Co-operative Association in Kuujjuaq re-launched its own sales in 2013. "It's been a month, and for us, we've seen a huge decrease in the number of calls we've received," said Kativik Regional Police Force captain Jean François Morin, who serves as interim deputy chief of operations in Puvirnituq. "There's been a huge decrease in the number of files we've had." Morin said it's not just law enforcement that's noticed the difference, but the community's health and social services workers too. (...) It's less clear how beer and wine sales have impacted on crime in Kuujjuaq; last year, the KRPF has said crime rates in Nunavik's largest community have remained roughly the same. But the KRPF says there has been a recent and overall drop in violent crime across Nunavik, and that this decrease is related to a bump in alcohol seizures over the past year. Nunatsiaq Online (2015-11-30)

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Dilkens in Ottawa to hear federal plan for Syrian refugees in Windsor

Windsor Mayor Drew Dilkens could find out Tuesday in Ottawa how many hundreds of Syrian refugees his city will be expected to welcome over the next 90 days. "That's what all of us mayors are hoping to hear," said Dilkens, who is being joined by municipal leaders from across Canada at a morning meeting at Rideau Hall with Gov. Gen. David Johnston and federal and provincial ministers. The mayors are in the capital to hear the Liberal government's how-to plan on mobilizing Canadians and co-ordinating agencies to receive 25,000 refugees from war-torn Syria over the next three months. Initially advised that Windsor could expect up to 1,000 refugees - triple its normal annual immigrant intake - Dilkens said he was reassured by both the federal and provincial ministers responsible for immigration that the actual number could be anywhere between 200 and 400. He said he told both that Windsor has a relatively high residential vacancy rate of four per cent but also has Canada's highest unemployment rate. "Everybody wants them to be successful, and part of being successful is being able to find employment," said Dilkens. Postmedia News (Windsor Star, A1/Front)

 First 'new wave' of Syrian refugees arrive in Canada from Lebanon

Ibrahim Tonbari struggled off Air Canada Flight 8867 in Windsor, Ont., Monday with his wife, Zaineab, and four children under the age of seven. He shuddered in the cold, but told CBC News in Windsor that the first thing he thought of was a better future for his children. (...) Sunday, they piled into one taxi and make the three-hour drive to Beirut's Hariri airport. None of them has ever flown on a plane, let alone a 28-hour journey with four kids and two layovers. "I didn't sleep last night", says Zaineab wanely. The Canadian government has contracted the International Organization of Migration to handle logistics and country exits. The official arrives and starts calling out names for the 32 refugees who are on the flight that night. Each gets a blue bag, stenciled IOM, and inside is the coveted document, a copy of Canadian "permanent resident status" — one each for Ibrahim, his wife and four kids. CBC News

Refugee hotline set up

Manitobans looking for ways to help Syrian refugees coming to the province can now go to an information hotline. The line has been set up by the provincial government, the Manitoba Emergency Measures Organization and the Canadian Red Cross. It will provide information to anyone looking to make a donation or who wants to volunteer with resettlement efforts. Manitoba is expecting between 1,500 and 2,000 people who have fled Syria. Winnipeg Sun, A12

 Advice for Syrian refugees

Over the next month, thousands of Syrian refugees will land in Quebec, in a foreign land, at the beginning of winter, where few speak Arabic and still fewer have a full understanding of the kind of upheaval they have experienced - first in Syria, then as they waited in limbo in Jordan, Turkey or Lebanon. Some Montrealers do know what it's like, however - because they went through it themselves not so long ago. We asked a few of them what advice they had for those following in their footsteps. (...) Originally from Idlib in northwestern Syria, Feras, 41, fled to Lebanon in 2014 after his house was destroyed in fighting between the Assad government and rebel groups, and he started receiving threats from both sides. He arrived in Montreal June 23. Hariri's advice to newcomers? "You have to give it time. "You have to breathe," Hariri says. It's not easy to sit around and wait - for language classes, for an apartment, for a job, Hariri says. "Syrians want to be Canadian just like everyone else and get the new job right away and the new car. But it doesn't work that way. You have to be patient." Learn the language - French or English, preferably both. Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, A1/Front)

 Privately sponsored refugees fare better in the short term, research says

It was nearly 20 years ago that Drenka Debro set foot in B.C., she, her husband and their young son fleeing the Bosnian war that had left an estimated 100,000 people dead. Given a choice between Australia, the United States and Canada, they chose Canada - partly because of Ms. Debro's childhood memory of a beloved pair of winter boots that were called "Canadian boots" and partly because they understood Canada was a peaceful country. Beyond that, they knew little. When they learned they were to be privately sponsored by St. Peter's Church in Campbell River, B.C., they had to look up the city on a map. (...) Privately sponsored refugees are most often brought over by Sponsorship Agreement Holders

(SAH) such as a humanitarian group or a church. The St. Peter's Church, which sponsored the Debro family, is part of the Anglican Diocese of B.C., which is a SAH. Refugees can also be sponsored by a constituent group - a group of five or more Canadian citizens or permanent residents, or a community sponsor. Privately sponsored refugees often have family links in the country of resettlement. In a 2012 survey, the department's research and evaluation branch found privately sponsored refugees economically outperform government sponsored ones, at least initially. Globe and Mail, S1

Phone calls about Canada offer hope to refugee family

Mohammad Mnaahe, only a year old and not yet walking, crawls across the beige carpets in his family's rented apartment about 30 kilometres from the Jordanian border with Syria. As his brother Tamim sleeps on a yellow and red mattress on the floor and another brother, Saif, is tucked in next to his father, Mohammad plays with a laminated plastic certificate, oblivious to the value it holds for his family. His parents, however, keep a close eye on it. To them, it represents their best hope of getting out of Jordan and to Canada - proof from the United Nations of their official status as refugees of the Syrian war.(...) When word began to spread through Syrian refugees in this town that Canada was going to be taking in many thousands - and quickly - Mohammed's father, Mjdi, said something told him he might be among them. And then, two weeks ago, the call came. Would they be interested in moving to Canada, the UN asked him, possibly as early as the end of the year? He said yes, and last week, was among 900 people called to the UN's office building in Amman to have his file reviewed for possible submission to the Canadian government program. He was there eight hours, he said - case number 698. After two 15-minute interviews, was told to await another call. That one came, too. So on Dec. 10, his entire family will go to the new Canadian processing centre at a Jordanian military exhibition facility to fill out more paperwork, have their fingerprints and other biometric information taken, be interviewed by Canadian officials, and get a medical check or an appointment for a future one. Once all that's done, they'll wait again. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, B7, Red Deer Advocate, Times & Transcript)

Family beats odds to make first cut in bid to escape grim Zaatari camp

Ahmad Lakash was already a famous man in Zaatari. His falafel restaurant is the first thing you see when you enter the sprawling refugee camp. It sits right at the top of the dusty market road that residents refer to deadpan as the "Champs Élysées." Now Mr. Lakash is envied for another reason. His family of six are the only ones among Zaatari's 79,120 residents known to have received a text message from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees inviting them for an interview that could put them on track for resettlement to Canada. The family, who arrived in Jordan in early 2012 after fleeing the fighting in Syria, have no idea why they made the list while their neighbours in Zaatari didn't. "Maybe we'll be making falafels in Canada," the 48-year-old says with a grin, leading a tour of the family's modest home in refuge - two sparsely furnished caravans connected by a tarp that creates a chilly sitting area between them. "We won't need to take anything with us from here. We'd be ready to leave within a week." While Immigration Minister John McCallum, Defence Minister Harjit Sajjan and Health Minister Jane Philpott made a show of visiting Zaatari during a whistlestop visit to Jordan on Sunday, the UN refugee agency says that none of the several hundred names it has forwarded thus far to the Canadian government are Zaatari residents. (Mr. Lakash has only been invited for a preliminary interview with the UNHCR. If approved by the refugee agency, the family will be given an appointment with Canadian officials who have arrived in Jordan to do additional health and security screening before refugees are invited to Canada.) Globe and Mail, A1

Complications in Turkey slow arrival of Syrians to Canada

The operation to resettle as many as 5,000 Syrian refugees from Turkey to Canada is being slowed by the additional "complexities" of the situation in that country, Canada's ambassador to Ankara said in an interview. The situation in Turkey is different from both Jordan and Lebanon, the other countries from which Canada is accepting Syrian refugees, because the Turkish government and not the UN High Commissioner for Refugees registers and keeps track of refugees in the country. The sheer size of Turkey - as well as concerns about security in the southern regions where most of the Syrian refugees are registered - create additional complications. (...) John Holmes, Canada's ambassador to Ankara, told The Globe and Mail that the Turkish government last week submitted a list of 5,000 names that Turkey was suggesting for resettlement to Canada. The Canadian embassy will now hand the list to the International Organization for Migration, which will try to establish whether those 5,000 still reside at the addresses where they're registered by Turkish authorities, and whether those families are indeed willing to move to Canada. (...) "Our normal points of operation, Istanbul and Ankara, are not really viable," Mr. Holmes said. Among the additional challenges, he said, would be finding hospitals that are up to Health Canada standards - so that health checks can be carried out on refugees - as well as airports capable of handling the large planes the Canadian government will likely have to charter for the operation. Globe and Mail, A1

Feds to waive travel costs

Syrian refugees' arrival in Canada will be made slightly easier as the federal government waives repayment of any costs they incur getting over here. Currently, the government provides loans of up to $10,000 for government-assisted refugees to make their way to Canada. It's a sticking point activists have been fighting for years. But last week, the government announced it will waive that repayment, along with costs refugees typically have to pay for medical exams and other fees. "Given the extreme and unprecedented hardships faced by this community, Canada is upholding its humanitarian tradition by offering help and protection to those most in need," Theodora Jean, a communications rep for Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada, explained in an e-mail. Postmedia Network (Toronto Sun, A5, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun)

Ottawa urged to double Syrian refugee intake

As Canada braces for the arrival of 25,000 Syrian refugees, the man who served as immigration minister during the Vietnamese boat people crisis says Ottawa should be doing much more. Ron Atkey believes the 25,000 Syrians Ottawa is promising to resettle initially is a "noble objective" but he wants Canada to up the ante. "If Canada can do another 25,000 - that would make a significant contribution in line with Canada's contribution with the Vietnamese boat people in 1979 to 1980. It will demonstrate to the Americans that they have to do more. We'll shame them into it, similarly the Australians," says Atkey, who was immigration minister in the Joe Clark government in 1979 when 50,000 Vietnamese refugees were granted asylum in Canada. By the end of 1980, that number had risen to 60,000. "For us to take a dramatic position on the world stage is important. We won a medal from the United Nations High Commission for Human Rights. We gained a lot of prestige as a humanitarian country. I think that's consistent with Canadian tradition." Atkey, who is also a lawyer, professor and national security expert, is chair of Humanity Wins, a group of prominent Canadians who came together earlier this year to advocate for re-settlement of Syrian refugees to Canada. Toronto Star, A6

 Ottawa urged to sprinkle refugee flow across country

Mayors and provincial officials are putting pressure on the federal government to ensure that Syrian refugees initially settle all over the country instead of congregating in Canada's biggest cities. Details of Ottawa's plans to bring in 25,000 refugees by the end of February remain incomplete, including when the Syrians will start arriving in Canada and where they will be settled. However, there are growing concerns that a large majority of the government-sponsored refugees will be drawn to cities such as Montreal and Toronto, where thousands of privately sponsored refugees are heading in coming weeks to join large, existing communities of Syrian Canadians. Officials in the Atlantic provinces, including Halifax Mayor Mike Savage, argue that having refugees more uniformly distributed could provide a great opportunity for the region to deal with its demographic challenges. "It ties in with the needs of Nova Scotia for immigrants to come to the province, so we think there can be not only a humanitarian and compassionate side to this, but also be very good for our economy," Mr. Savage said. "All provinces and cities will likely be saying, 'We think we can play a role here and we want to have a chance to do so.'" Manitoba Premier Greg Selinger added that his province would like to welcome up to 8 per cent of the Syrian asylum seekers - about twice Manitoba's proportion of the overall Canadian population. "We know that Manitobans want to do their part in welcoming these innocent victims of war [and helping them] find a better life," he said. Globe and Mail, A1

Refugee aid groups overwhelmed

A groundswell of public generosity for Syrian refugees has left some local non-profit organizations overwhelmed by the response of Montrealers. Action Réfugiés Montréal (ARM), a non-profit organization dedicated to helping refugees and asylum seekers, has been inundated with phone calls and emails since it put out a call through social media for winter coats and boots. "We were looking for 30 or 40 coats," said

Paul Clarke, executive director of ARM. "We put out a call in early November, then it got shared on Facebook 60 times. It was oversubscribed very, very quickly," said Clarke, who has already collected more than 50 coats, some with new retail stickers still attached. And the donations keep on coming. "I went to speak at a church yesterday and there were about 30 bags of what we need, plus more, and we have very limited space ourselves," said Clarke. He dropped off the extra clothing at the Syrian Canadian Council, but wonders whether the local refugee aid effort could benefit from better coordination by civic authorities. Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, A3); * Radio-Canada

Rideau Hall forum may be a 'call to action'

Because things are so urgent, most of the Syrian refugees coming to Canada are being brought in directly by the federal government, rather than through private sponsors. These government-assisted refugees, as they're called, are at greater risk of failing or of falling through cracks. How can you help? A forum at Rideau Hall Tuesday hopes to tell you. Governor-General David Johnston, who convened the forum, believes the Syrian refugee crisis is simply the latest in a long line of events that challenge Canada's willingness to welcome the world. (...) Participants include federal Immigration Minister John McCallum, who returned Monday from a fact-finding mission in Jordan, provincial immigration ministers, mayors from Halifax to Victoria, leaders of non-profits that work with refugees and of other charitable organizations, representatives of the Canadian Armed Forces, aboriginal leaders, faith and interfaith leaders, and representatives of the private sector, among others. The purpose of the gathering, which is open to the media and will be televised, is for everyone to tell everyone what everyone is doing, to swap ideas and tips, and to make sure that this extraordinarily complex and multifaceted operation will come off with as few hitches as possible. Globe and Mail, A9; * CBC News; * Hill Times

Sea of red tape faces refugees looking to Canada

Consider the to-do list of a Syrian refugee who hopes to come to Canada. This isn't someone who floated on a leaky boat across the open sea last month. This is someone who has been under observation for several years in a refugee camp in Lebanon, Jordan or Turkey. He or she has registered with the United Nations, then submitted to a multiple-step, protracted interview about their life history. Next, undergone a medical exam, then provided biometric data, including fingerprints. If they pass all this and are deemed "most vulnerable," the UN grants refugee status. The most vulnerable category accounts for less than one per cent of the world's refugees. ISIS would probably get better odds if it wanted to sneak a terrorist into Canada like a guy with a plane ticket and a Belgian passport. Next, the UN selects the resettlement country. If Canada is picked, our immigration officials conduct multiple interviews and background checks overseas, including fingerprint checks. The refugee's information is crosschecked with terrorist and criminal databases. The final check is in Canada, at the airport immigration counter. Chronicle-Herald, A4

All roads lead to Toronto

Almost 80% of the privately sponsored Syrian refugees coming to Ontario will start out in Toronto. Numbers released by the federal government over the weekend detail the destinations for 4,584 refugees who are being sponsored by organizations or groups of Canadians. Ottawa's numbers don't include the 3,650 refugees the government of Quebec says it will take in by the end of the year. Ontario, meanwhile, can expect 3,318 privately sponsored Syrian refugees - 33 have arrived since Nov. 4 and 3,285 are still being processed by the government. Of those refugees coming to Ontario, 2,602 will be coming to Toronto. According to the federal government, 1,326 will come to central Toronto, 1,079 are destined for Willowdale, 156 are headed to Scarborough, 23 will go to North York, and 18 are expected to head to Etobicoke. Councillor Joe Mihevc said Toronto can "absolutely" handle the refugees. "For a city of almost three million people, my back of envelope (calculation) that's 0.01% which is not a tough number for us to absorb," Mihevc said. Dr. David McKeown, the city's chief medical officer of health, added Toronto Public Health is preparing to help with the refugees coming to Toronto. Toronto Sun, A5

 Ontario ready to take 4,000 refugees this year

Ontario is prepared to take roughly 4,000 of the 10,000 Syrian refugees set to arrive in Canada by the end of the year and may not need as many resources to accommodate them as previously thought, says the province's health minister. Since Ontario accounts for about 40 per cent of the country's population, it is prepared to take in that proportion of refugees, Eric Hoskins said Monday. "It will depend on the flow of refugees coming from those various countries," he said. "I think it's a better approach to understand that we will be receiving our share. We know what that will be roughly and we're prepared within a margin on either side of that to accommodate them." Hoskins has said Ontario was looking at using recently decommissioned hospitals to house refugees on an interim basis, but now they may not be needed. "We have sites identified. Some of those sites have taken the extra step of ensuring they are prepared to accommodate the refugees, but we'll see if that type of facility is in fact required," he said. "It will depend partly on the numbers that arrive. We were thinking maybe 1,000 a day. Now the federal government is thinking somewhat fewer than that and it's over a longer period of time." Ottawa has said military bases are an option for interim housing. The federal government pushed back the timeline for settling 25,000 people from the end of this year to the end of February, so Hoskins said Ontario may not need to dedicate as many resources. Canadian Press (Waterloo Region Record, A3, Toronto Sun, Calgary Sun, Ottawa Sun, Hamilton Spectator, Times & Transcript)

Ready to serve

Some have been jailed and tortured; others, sexually assaulted while their children were forced to watch. Some fled their homes and homeland years ago and their hope rising and falling with the passage of time - have waited in refugee camps for the world to take notice. It's not just shelter these 100 Syrian refugee families coming to London will need, but support in dealing with a range of traumas inconceivable to most Canadians. And though large teams of volunteers are working out logistics of winter coats and English-language classes for when families arrive in coming months, some area professionals are working to meet needs of the psyche and soul for people who have been dislocated and relocated. At right is a look at how London professionals are preparing to help and how regular Londoners can help: "There's a lot for (refugees) to deal with," said LloyWylie, an assistant professor in the master's of public health program at Western University. "In the past five years in London alone, people are saying there's a higher level of trauma (among refugees) than they've ever seen." Wylie is helping lead a team that includes mental-health professionals from London Health Sciences Centre, London Inter-Community Health Centre and the Cross-Cultural Learner Centre to help refugees and immigrants. London Free Press, A3

 Refugees coming to province expect to work hard, says Syrian immigrant

In his six years in Moncton, Elian Elias has invested more than a million dollars in the community creating businesses, buying a home and commercial buildings and employing many Canadians. He's contributing to his adopted community in small ways too, providing free pizzas each month to a local group that's been feeding the homeless, an interesting counterpoint to the voices these days arguing Canada should take better care of its poor and homeless people before welcoming Syrian refugees. Elias is not a refugee, because he had the good fortune to come to Canada from Syria in 2009 as an immigrant before there was any sign of significant trouble in his homeland. That's all changed now, of course, as Syrians find themselves trapped in the madness of civil war and the Islamic State. He's currently struggling to get his brother and brother's family out of Syria before more violence comes to their region near the Lebanese border. Elias owns the Freddie's Pizza in Riverview and Mama's Pizza in downtown Moncton. If he can get his brother here, he will employ him and house his family until they get their foothold, just as New Brunswickers are planning to do for the 1,500 Syrian refugees expected here in the next few months. Elias is sure of one thing: the Syrian refugees who come to Moncton and the rest of the province won't need as much help as some might imagine. "The Syrians are hard workers. The Syrians who already live in Canada? You will find they almost all own their own businesses. They come here for a better life and they expect to work hard. They have that plan before they leave their country." Times & Transcript, A1

300 to 600 refugees expected to resettle in city

Fredericton is now expected to receive 300 to 600 Syrian refugees, but there is still no word on when they will arrive. The capital is also getting ready to have translated into Arabic some key documents such as Fredericton's newcomers guide and its recreation guide to help the refugees adjust. David Seabrook, Fredericton's assistant director of growth and community services, released the refugee number to the capital's council-in-committee meeting Monday night. A city task force on Syrian refugees that involves all the local agencies involved was established last week and will meet for the first time on Thursday, said Seabrook. The lead organization in the refugee settlement effort is the Multicultural Association of Fredericton, he said. (...) Mayor Brad Woodside said he and other councillors are getting calls from people who want to help. He asked where they should direct those calls. Seabrook said councillors should direct those calls to the Multicultural Association of Fredericton. He also warned that volunteers who want to work with refugees will have to undergo a police check. Fredericton Police Chief Leanne Fitch confirmed that requirement. Daily Gleaner, A1

Universities offer their support to Syrian refugees arriving in Fredericton

St. Thomas University is planning to offer full scholarships to Syrian refugees making their way to Fredericton. A team of professors and university staff members are discussing the possibility of providing tuition and covering residence and food costs. Jeffrey Carleton, communications director with St. Thomas University, says the scholarship is still in its early stages but there could be a range of up to four scholarships. "The idea came from a number of people at the same time," he said. "There's still lots of details to be worked out but there will always be a thousand details." Carleton says international scholarships range up to $13,000 per student. Telegraph-Journal, A3

Yukoners are ready to welcome refugees

There's still some unpacking to do, but the beds are made, dishes are stacked in the cupboards and towels are in the closet as Yukoners get ready to welcome a family of 10. Raquel De Queiroz, who heads up Yukon Cares, said this morning her group spent much of the weekend getting a four-bedroom house ready. It did so with numerous donations from the community for the family of Syrian refugees it's sponsoring to come to Canada. The group has been fundraising since September to sponsor the family. While the fundraising and collecting of household donations has been underway, the paperwork and formal process has also progressed, with the family recently having had their visa interview with federal authorities. Following that, Yukon Cares was asked to submit its paperwork to the federal government for the sponsorship. "That was done and submitted on Friday," De Queiroz said. The family must now go through medical and security clearance before they can be approved to come to Canada, she added. Whitehorse Daily Star, 2/Front

Les premiers vols nolisés pour bientôt

Le ministre de l'Immigration, des Réfugiés et de la Citoyenneté espère voir les premiers avions nolisés transportant des réfugiés syriens se poser au Canada la semaine prochaine. John McCallum n'a pas voulu avancer de date précise, disant souhaiter que le premier de ces vols nolisés arrive « aussitôt que possible », soit « possiblement » dans une semaine. Le gouvernement prévoit que le premier appareil à se poser en serait un des forces aériennes du Canada, et les suivants des vols commerciaux, a spécifié M. McCallum. On prévoit attendre « d'avoir la capacité d'avoir plusieurs vols et pas seulement un » avant de fixer une première date d'arrivée, a-t-il exposé en conférence téléphonique, lundi. Presse canadienne (Voix de l'Est, 14, Le Soleil, Le Nouvelliste, Acadie Nouvelle, La Tribune)

What is a privately sponsored refugee?

Groups or organizations can agree to privately sponsor refugees. The federal government's plan to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by next year relies heavily on processing thousands of privately-sponsored refugees. Around 4,511 files of privately-sponsored refugees are being processed for Canadian cities outside Quebec. Postmedia has reported the province of Quebec has more than 3,000 privately-sponsored refugee applications. According to Citizenship and Immigration Canada, sponsoring groups must agree to provide refugees with care, lodging, settlement assistance and support for approximately the first year in Canada or until the refugee becomes self-sufficient. The group has to demonstrate they have the funds to cover rent, utilities, food and day-to-day living costs. Once the sponsored refugees arrive, the sponsors are expected to help them become accustomed to Canada including assisting with the search for employment. Ottawa Sun, A10

 Lawyers bridge gap between Canada's goodwill and caution

Many Canadians rushed to find a way to do something to help Syrian refugees in the days after photos were published showing little Alan Kurdi's lifeless body on a Turkish beach. It's who we are, and why Canadians bear the national stereotype of being nice. Do-gooders, even. Phone calls, emails and texts ping-ponged among friends, including my own. Maybe we can sponsor a family. How hard could it be?(...) For now, let's just focus on G5s - those nice people unaffiliated with a faith group or other sponsorship agreement holder. G5s "must agree to give emotional and financial support to the refugee(s) for the full sponsorship period - usually one year," according to the government's website. But what does that mean? Then, the G5 need to provide a settlement plan and prove the group can afford the sponsorship. Before potential G5 members even get to the application, they are urged to go to the refugee sponsorship training program website. The application makes the longform census seem like a walk in the park, a superficial glance at people's private lives. Among the documents that must be filed by at least three of the five members of the group are: the most recent T4; the most recent notice of assessment from Revenue Canada; proof from your employer confirming financial details or a letter from an accountant if you are self-employed; proof of any other income. (...) So, a group of powerful and well-connected lawyers has stepped in to bridge that gap. It began as a conversation between Jennifer Bond, a professor at the University of Ottawa's law school and faculty director of its Refugee Hub, and Jacqueline Swaisland, a Harvard-trained, Toronto lawyer who teaches a course in immigrant and refugee law at the university. They decided to expand the Refugee Hub's existing sponsorship support program by training 15 students to advise groups in the Ottawa area about the process, the liabilities and legal responsibilities. Other lawyers expressed interest and were trained as well at a five-hour workshop in October. The next night, at a forum hosted by Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson, they held a pop-up clinic for wannabe sponsors. More than 450 people showed up and close to 60 lawyers helped them. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, A4)

'Like a dream come true'

A Kosovo refugee who arrived at Canadian Forces Base Kingston in the spring of 1999 has some advice for potential Syrian refugees should they arrive next month and move into barracks at the base, as he had over 15 years ago. "My first thing is you came to this country, you must love and respect this country because this country is your best opportunity. It's like a dream come true for everybody," said Avni Lushaku, now 37, on Monday from Mississauga, where he now lives with his wife, Shqipe, and one-month-old son Artin. (...) He was able to learn English by volunteering at the base's Salvation Army tent for donated clothes. His mother encouraged him to volunteer and learn English at the same time as an in-between person the volunteers and refugees. During his time in Kingston, he toured around the city and took lots of photos. He added that many volunteers took his family off the base for home-cooked meals. "They were our families, they were our uncles, like our aunts, because we had nobody here," Lushaku said. His family's stay was short at CFB Kingston, only a month, before being shipped off to Valcartier, Que., where he had to learn French, but by the end of September when the Canadian refugee camps started to wind down, he and his family came back to Kingston to settle. Kingston Whig-Standard, A1/Front

Accueil de réfugiés syriens

Le Centre d'accueil multiculturel et des nouveaux arrivants de Saint-Jean (CAMNASJ) tiendra une séance d'information sur l'arrivée de réfugiés syriens dans la région, le mercredi 2 décembre, à 9 h 30, au bureau du CAMNASJ, situé au 165 rue Union. Le Centre vous informera du besoin de bénévoles lors de l'arrivée des réfugiés syriens au cours des prochaines semaines et des prochains mois. Le Centre expliquera également ce qu'il prévoit mettre en place afin d'accueillir, d'orienter et de soutenir les familles qui arriveront à Saint-Jean. Veuillez confirmer votre présence auprès de Sandrine Selway, agente d'accueil et d'établissement, au 642-7265 ou par courriel (sandrine.selway@sjmnr.ca). Acadie Nouvelle, 25

 Laurentian students eager to help refugees

Yvonne Udowa found the weather in Sudbury to be frigid, but the people full of warmth. An international student at Laurentian University who hails from Nigeria, she said the Nickel City was as friendly as any she has visited. "Everybody here is helpful," said Udowa, a fourth-year liberal science student at LU. "Everybody here is so open and ready to help, so it was easier for me to get into the community when I came. It's so easy to get around here, the transportation system is great – the weather, not so great, but other than that, everything else is good. There are so many activities, so many multicultural associations here that I could attend or join when I came, and it helped me get used to the society quickly. It wasn't hard at all." She hopes that when a pair of refugees from Syria arrive next year to study at Laurentian, they find folks just as welcoming. Udowa is a member of the World University Service Canada local committee at Laurentian, which plans to sponsor two young Syrian refugees who will study at the university beginning next year as part of the WUSC Student Refugee Program. (...) WUSC is now working in refugee camps in Jordan and Lebanon, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to interview and document appropriate candidates for sponsorship. Sudbury Star (2015-11-30)

 One great heart, united

An opinion piece states, "It's a truism that bears repeating: We all came from somewhere else. Canadians remember this to their credit as they prepare to welcome 25,000 Syrian refugees this year and early next. Of these, New Brunswick is on tap to resettle about 1,500 in Moncton, Saint John and Fredericton. In fact, all regions of this country are old hands at this form of humanitarian aid. According to one federal government web site, "Our compassion and fairness are a source of great pride for Canadians. These values are at the core of our domestic refugee protection system and our Resettlement Assistance Program. Both programs have long been praised by the United Nations Refugee Agency (UNHCR)." The system works this way: "Refugees selected for resettlement to Canada have often fled their homes because of unimaginable hardships and have, in many cases, been forced to live in refugee camps for many years. When they arrive in Canada, they basically pick up the pieces of their lives and start over again. "As a member of the international community, Canada helps find solutions to prolonged and emerging refugee situations and helps emerging democracies try to solve many of the problems that create refugee populations. To do this, Canada works closely with the UNHCR." Crucially, "Under our legislation, all resettlement cases must be carefully screened to ensure that there are no issues related to security, criminality or health. Citizenship and Immigration Canada (CIC) works with its security partners such as the Canada Border Services Agency to complete this work as quickly as possible." Times & Transcript, A9

Welcome to Canada

A letter to the editor states, "It's not common sense that's been missing from the discussion about screening Syrian refugees, it's a surprising inability to connect a few dots. The first dot is that the terror attacks carried out in IS's name in the West were done by homegrown supporters, not Syrian refugees. Why would IS bother smuggling someone out as a refugee when it has wannabe terrorists here? The second dot is that IS in Syria is primarily made up of, not Syrians, but Sunni Muslims from Iraq and a few thousand hotheads from Europe and elsewhere. The third dot is that there are more than three million Syrians seeking refuge. Connect these dots and the unsurprising conclusion is that there is a 99.9 per cent chance terrorists are not hiding among those who want to come here. Single men included. Tight screening won't better the odds." Globe and Mail, A10

Letters to the Editor

A letter to the editor states, "Are refugees aware of difficulties here? Our federal government wants to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada. I am in complete agreement because these people are leaving everything they own behind as they run for their lives. Any civilized country could do no less. But do we hide the total truth about Canada from these people who are so desperately in need of hope? Things like a lack of jobs, a lack of decent housing, poverty and isolation among so many of our indigenous peoples, poverty among children and seniors, food banks everywhere struggling to meet the needs of an ever growing number of clients, and social assistance programs that are based on the wealth of the individual provinces (for example, a person can get a lot more on social assistance in Alberta than in a province like New Brunswick)?" Telegraph-Journal, A6

Une politique discriminatoire

Un article d'opinion déclare, « L'accueil des réfugiés syriens se double d'une politique discriminatoire inacceptable: les hommes seuls seront exclus, sauf s'ils sont gais (on se demande comment ces derniers réussiront à en faire la preuve, mais c'est une autre question). On peut certes établir des priorités dans une politique d'accueil. Ainsi, il serait normal qu'en sélectionnant les réfugiés parrainés par le gouvernement, on privilégie les chrétiens et les yézidis, qui sont les premières cibles du groupe État islamique (EI). Les chrétiens sont la minorité la plus persécutée dans l'ensemble du Proche-Orient. Quant aux yézidis, adeptes d'une ancienne religion répandue chez les Kurdes, les hommes capturés sont assassinés sur-le-champ et leurs femmes, réduites à l'esclavage. Le gouvernement a manifestement voulu, en écartant les hommes seuls, rassurer les citoyens qui craignent que des terroristes ne s'infiltrent parmi les réfugiés. Mais l'exclusion des hétérosexuels masculins, outre qu'elle est injuste, constitue une protection parfaitement illusoire. Ce que cette décision laisse entendre, c'est que tout homme musulman est un terroriste potentiel, et que les hétérosexuels portent en eux un facteur supplémentaire de violence. Pourtant, les gais, comme n'importe quels autres humains, ont produit leur lot de déviants. » La Presse, A11

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

 Grits firm up line between politics, PS

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is introducing the first code of conduct on political staffworking for cabinet ministers, aimed at drawing a "line in the sand" between politics and public service neutrality for ministerial aides. The code is part of the Open and Accountable Government guide, released last week, on roles, responsibilities and standard of conduct Trudeau expects from his cabinet. The guide is an updated version of one that the Privy Council Office prepared for former prime minister Stephen Harper in 2011. The line between politics and the public service has been blurring for decades, with experts calling for a code to govern the behaviour of ministerial staffers - the "political warriors" or "kids in short pants" who roam Ottawa's corridors of power with little accountability. The code says ministerial aides can't meddle in the work of the public service, can't give public servants orders, and that ministers are responsible for their staff's actions. The guide also changes the rules on the personal and partisan use of social media. Ministers' staff, who are hired under the Public Service Employment Act, are exempt from the hiring rules for public servants. Their job is to provide political advice to ministers; bureaucrats offer nonpartisan advice. Karl Salgo, formerly of the Privy Council Office and now executive director of public governance at the Institute on Governance, said the guide doesn't break new ground, but is the first attempt to pull together the rules - written and unwritten - in a single code that will be enforced as a condition of employment. Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A1)

Clinton emails

A U.S. official expressed amazement at how deeply detested Canada's Conservative government was by some employees of the Foreign Affairs Department. That impression was described in a note sent three years ago to Hillary Clinton, who was then the secretary of state and whose emails are now being publicly released. It was contained in a message where a U.S. official described how his colleagues across the border pleaded for his help lobbying the Canadian government not to cut a program for Haiti. The U.S. special co-ordinator for Haiti said Canadians were worried about budget cuts that would have slashed down an operation from 11 employees to four, for a country that was ostensibly a major Canadian foreign policy priority. "I was a little astonished at how openly the career folks at the foreign and assistance ministries disliked their new political masters and wanted us to convince them not to cut Haiti," said Tom Adams, in a May 2012 email forwarded to Clinton and released Monday... The latest released batch includes another interesting exchange about Canada. There was delight in Clinton's office over news that Omar Khadr was being released from the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay and repatriated to a prison in his home country. The newly released emails show the then-secretary of state's response to news that the young man was being transferred to Canada: "Thank you for all you did to get this resolved." She was writing to the State Department's legal adviser -- who was ecstatic at the 2012 development. "So glad we got this done," said the adviser, Harold Koh. "After spending the last 10 years on GTMO, at least this young man finally has another chance." Canada's then-Conservative government was far less enthusiastic about approving Khadr's return, which was delayed amid sniping between Canada and the U.S. In his written decision allowing the transfer, then-public safety minister Vic Toews expressed five points of concern about bringing home a young man he described as a known al-Qaida supporter and convicted terrorist. Canadian Press (Calgary Sun, Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun, Ottawa Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Guardian, Telegram, Hamilton Spectator, Times Colonist, Ottawa Citizen); * Presse canadienne (L'actualité)

OTHER / AUTRE

Climate talks hailed as 'an act of defiance' against terror

Pushing for a powerful climate deal, President Barack Obama called the global talks opening Monday outside Paris an "act of defiance" against terrorism that proves the world stands undeterred by Islamic State-linked attacks in Europe and beyond. Obama used his speech to more than 150 world leaders at the UN's 21st Conference of the Parties (COP21) summit to salute Paris and its people for "insisting this crucial conference go on" just two weeks after attacks that killed 130 in the French capital. He said leaders had converged to show resolve to fight terrorism and uphold their values at the same time. "What greater rejection of those who would tear down our world than marshalling our best efforts to save it?" Obama said. Obama's remarks came at the start of two weeks of make-or-break negotiations to finalize a sweeping global agreement to cut carbon emissions and hopefully stave off the worst effects of climate change. He exhorted leaders to fight the enemy of cynicism: "the notion we can't do anything" about the warming of the planet. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's address dovetailed perfectly with these sentiments. In his opening comments on Monday, he told delegates that Canada "will take on a new leadership role internationally." "Canada is back, my friends," Trudeau declared. "We're here to help." Associated Press (Toronto Star, A1, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript); Canadian Press (Record, A1, Whig-Standard, Red Deer Advocate, Telegram, Guardian, Chronicle-Herald, Cape Breton Post, Hamilton Spectator, Times Colonist, Daily Gleaner); Globe and Mail, A4; Postmedia News (National Post, FP7); * Associated Press (Acadie Nouvelle, 22)

NATO eager to size up Grits as ISIL threat emerges in Libya

Stephane Dion hasn't even arrived yet in Brussels, but a lineup is already forming to meet Canada's new foreign affairs minister. Canadian staff at NATO headquarters are fielding requests from alliance members keen to size up the Liberal government's new point man on the evolving confrontation with Russia and the growing influence of the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant in Libya. Dion will join foreign ministers from the other 28 member countries on Tuesday and Wednesday, several of whom are eager to take stock of Justin Trudeau's plan to end the bombing campaign against extremists in Iraq and Syria, instead refocusing the military effort on training local forces. While NATO is not formally involved in the 62-country, U.S.-led coalition against ISIL, its members see Canada's planned actions as important. One of Dion's most important tasks will be to reassure allies the country remains stalwart, especially in light of the terror attacks in Paris and the security lockdown in Brussels. Canadian Press (Whig-Standard, B1/Front, Guardian, Waterloo Record, Spectator); * Ottawa Sun, A9; * La Presse Canadienne (La Tribune, 33, Le Droit)

 U.S. targets 2016 to end ISIL airstrikes

A top U.S. general involved in the bombing war against ISIL says he hopes the campaign will be wrapped up by the end of next year. Canada is expected to withdraw its six CF-18 fighter jets from the coalition campaign before March. Lt.-Gen. Charles Brown Jr., who is in charge of the U.S. air force Central Command, said ISIL hasn't been able to mount any major ground offensives during the past several months. "By the time we get to the end of 2016, I hope to be pretty well done with Daesh," Brown told the Air Force Times newspaper, using an Arabic term for ISIL. "That's probably aspirational, but I think we are putting pressure on Daesh. We have not seen from Daesh any major offensive in the past couple of months. Most of the stuff we see is more harassing attacks. So they don't have the staying power that they're going to need to survive what we're putting on them." It's not the first time a U.S. military leader has talked optimistically about ISIL's waning military capabilities. Canadian and U.S. senior officers said this year the extremist group was on the verge of defeat, only to have ISIL forces go on the offensive. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has said he is sticking to his election promise to remove the CF-18s. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, N6, Ottawa Citizen)

 Conflict investigation involving former Alberta premier to be reviewed

The Alberta government is launching an outside review of an investigation two years ago into conflict-of-interest allegations involving former premier Alison Redford. The 2013 investigation looked into how a Calgary law firm with close ties to Redford was awarded the contract to represent Alberta in a lawsuit against tobacco companies. One of the partners in the law firm was Redford's former husband, who remained a strong Conservative supporter. Neil Wilkinson, the ethics commissioner at the time, cleared Redford of any conflict in awarding the multibillion-dollar contract while she was justice minister. The NDP government says concerns have emerged that Wilkinson might not have had all the relevant information needed for his investigation. The review is to be handled by retired Supreme Court justice Frank Iacobucci. "These allegations are serious. We believe that the best path forward to ensure an objective review is to have that review performed externally," Alberta Justice Minister Kathleen Ganley said in a statement. "Our government is committed to transparency and accountability, which is why we're taking action." Canadian Press (Times Colonist, A8, Calgary Sun); Postmedia News (Calgary Herald, A3, Edmonton Journal); Edmonton Sun, A7

 From observation to activism, one Canadian man's experience of Syria

When Cody Bergerud left Saltspring Island for northern Syria, he didn't tell anyone where he was going. "It just made things easier," he says. No fights with family. No awkward conversations with the authorities, at least until he came back. Unlike other Canadians who have travelled to the region, Mr. Bergerud wasn't driven by the thought of taking up arms for or against the terrorist group the Islamic State. His is not that kind of story. The University of Victoria political philosophy student was in northern Syria to witness what he calls a social revolution. Amid the country's years-long civil war, the Kurdish population in the north has gained a level of autonomy. A website for the Lions of Rojava, which is aligned with the Kurdish People's Protection Units (YPG), describes its society's three principles as direct democracy, gender equity and sustainability - all of which it pursues while within firing range of the Islamic State. Mr. Bergerud, 26, went to Rojava to observe. He arrived in Syria in March, slipping into the country through the northeast after a 2 1/2-week stint as a volunteer at a Turkish refugee camp. While at the camp, Mr. Bergerud says he primarily helped on the construction side. He also took time to play with some of the children. Getting into Syria, he says, was fairly simple. "I made friends, and they were able to connect me with people who got me across the border," he said. "They pick out a good spot and you kind of just run over the border. The whole process takes three to five minutes." Mr. Bergerud met five or six Canadians while he was in Rojava. The youngest was 24, while the oldest was 67. He never met John Gallagher, a Canadian who was killed in Syria earlier this month while fighting with the YPG against the Islamic State. Globe and Mail

INTERNATIONAL

 Key suspect in Paris attacks may have eluded dragnet, fled to Syria

Paris attacks suspect Salah Abdeslam may have fled to Syria, according to reports quoting French intelligence services. A major manhunt is under way for the Belgian-born French national who has been on the run since the Nov. 13 attacks, which killed 130 people. But investigators are now working under the assumption the 26-year-old has slipped the net and is now in Syria, a source close to the investigation and a counter-terrorism source told CNN. The Islamic State of Iraq and Levant, which controls a large swathe of territory across Syria and Iraq, has claimed responsibility for the attacks. French police have issued an international arrest warrant and a wanted poster for Abdeslam, describing him as highly dangerous. He rented the VW Polo and Renault Clio cars used in the attacks. Investigators say he went to Belgium from France the day after the attacks in a VW Golf, despite being stopped by French police along the way in routine road checks before his name was circulated as a suspect. His brother Brahim died in the attacks. Postmedia News (National Post, A12)

 La NSA ne stocke plus les données des appels

C'est une victoire pour Edward Snowden, qui avait révélé l'ampleur des pouvoirs de surveillance de la toute puissante agence de renseignement américaine NSA: depuis dimanche, l'agence ne stocke plus les données liées aux appels téléphoniques des Américains. La révélation en juin 2013 par Edward Snowden que les métadonnées (horaires, durée, numéros appelés) des appels étaient conservées dans les gigantesques ordinateurs de la NSA avait provoqué la stupeur et l'indignation chez beaucoup d'Américains. En juin dernier, le Congrès avait adopté une loi mettant fin à cette collecte et introduisant un nouveau système qui permet à l'agence de renseignement de continuer à accéder si nécessaire aux données des appels des Américains, avec un contrôle juridique renforcé. Si elle ne dispose plus elle-même des données, la NSA peut toutefois les exiger auprès des compagnies téléphoniques. La NSA pourra toujours avoir accès aux données concernant les appels téléphoniques d'un suspect et les correspondants de ce suspect. Mais ces recherches seront moins «efficaces» et «prendront plus de temps», affirme Stewart Baker, avocat spécialiste des problèmes de cybersécurité et surveillance électronique. AFP (Le Soleil, 21; Le Devoir)

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PS.PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
December 7, 2015 / 7 décembre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

A

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Parliamentary standoffs: Let the sparring begin

No matter how much the federal parties insist they'll behave in the new House of Commons, expect some pitched battles between Liberal cabinet ministers and opposition critics. Here are a few matchups to watch during question period. THE LEADERS Justin Trudeau versus Rona Ambrose (Con.) versus Tom Mulcair (NDP) Trudeau's strength was never in the Commons, where he laboured in the shadow of Mulcair when it came to holding the last government's feet to the fire. But the new prime minister has set a torrid pace since his Oct. 19 election victory, and vows to continue his "sunny ways" approach to politics (...). Public Safety: Ralph Goodale versus Erin O'Toole (Con.) versus Randall Garrison (NDP) Goodale is unflappable, having served under three prime ministers (one of whom was Pierre Trudeau). He'll bring a firm hand to a hectic and high-profile portfolio, ranging from security services to refugee screening to the promised overhaul of the Conservatives' national security Bill C-51. O'Toole cut his chops at parliamentary debating beginning last January when he replaced the failing Julian Fantino as minister of veteran affairs. Soon after the election, the former air force officer and lawyer wrote to his caucus colleagues saying, "Our goal must be to challenge the Liberals from day one." Garrison has been an informed, outspoken and combative opposition voice. His growing knowledge of Canada's national security apparatus should make him an effective critic. Postmedia News (Windsor Star, NP3, StarPheonix, Leader-Post, Gazette, Ottawa Citizen, National Post, Edmonton Journal)

 Liberal MPs rise up food chain as parliamentary secretaries

Among the 35 parliamentary secretaries appointed by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau last week are new faces and familiar ones: star candidates from the last election as well as returning MPs who now may be a step closer to becoming ministers (...) First elected to the House in 1997, Mr. McKay, a lawyer, was the parl-sec to then-Finance minister Ralph Goodale (Regina-Wascana, Sask.) in Paul Martin's Liberal government. He's already a Privy Councillor, thanks to former Prime Minister Martin's singular practice of including parliamentary secretaries in that august body. Hill Times

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

 Nearly 35,000 homes without power as wind and rain lash B.C.'s south coast

Strong winds whipped through Vancouver Island and Metro Vancouver Sunday evening, sparking weather warnings and downing power lines across the south coast. Up to 50 millimetres of rain was forecast for Howe Sound and Metro Vancouver's North Shore as a second Pacific storm pressed westward over Vancouver Island. The downpour was expected to last until Monday morning. About 25,000 customers in cities throughout the Lower Mainland and another 8,200 on Vancouver Island were without power by 8:30 p.m., according to BC Hydro. Many of the outages happened shortly after 7 p.m. when a series of strong gusts blew into the region. Environment Canada issued wind warnings for Metro Vancouver and Howe Sound, forecasting winds of up to 70 km/h and gusts of as much as 90 km/h. Vancouver Sun; The Province; Canadian Press (The Province)

 Railroads quash rules after 2012 derailments

A pair of train derailments in 2012 that killed two people in Maryland and triggered a fiery explosion in Ohio exposed a little-known and unsettling truth about railroads in the U.S. and Canada: No rules govern when rail becomes too worn down to be used for hauling hazardous chemicals, thousands of tons of freight or myriad other products on almost 170,000 miles of track. U.S. transportation officials moved to establish universal standards for when such steel gets replaced, but resistance from major freight railroads killed that bid, according to Associated Press interviews with U.S. and Canadian transportation officials, industry representatives and safety investigators. Now, following yet another major accident linked to worn-out rails - 27 tanker cars carrying crude oil that derailed and exploded in West Virginia earlier this year - regulators are reviving the prospect of new rules for worn rails and vowing they won't allow the industry to sideline their efforts. "We try to look at absolutely every place where we can affect and improve safety," said Federal Railroad Administrator Sarah Feinberg. "Track generally is the place that we're focusing at the moment, and it's clearly overdue. Rail head wear is one place in particular that we feel like needs to be addressed as soon as possible." Associated Press (Red Deer Advocate, B10)

 Sick of the weather? blame el nino

The El Nino weather phenomenon, which has impacted millions around the world this year and helped drive the huge hurricanes that battered Mexico's Pacific coast, is forecast to continue through the winter and become one of the strongest on record (...) El Nino is the warm phase of a seven-year weather cycle that drives sea-surface temperatures in the tropical eastern Pacific Ocean. It is associated with destructive flooding along the west coast of South America and severe hurricanes farther north along the Pacific coast. El Nino tends to bring mild, dry winters to the Pacific northwest but cold, snowy winters to the southern U.S. and Atlantic seaboard. National Post, A2 (Leader-Post, Financial Post)

 Solemn anniversary

Ken Hynes walked through the courtyard of Halifax's Citadel Hill on Sunday towards the exact spot his grandfather stood 98 years ago the moment two ships collided in the narrows of the Halifax harbour, causing a massive explosion that left part of the Nova Scotia capital in ruins. Under partly cloudy skies, Hynes remarked that the weather was similar on Dec. 6, 1917, when the French cargo ship SS Mont-Blanc, loaded with explosives, collided with the Norwegian vessel SS Imo, creating the largest man-made explosion prior to the development of nuclear weapons. Hynes, a retired army major and curator of the Army Museum at Citadel Hill, imagined his 18-year-old grandfather Fletcher Manchester Bartlett watching as a blast wave swept over the fortress near the harbour in the city's downtown, wondering if the Germans had attacked. Canadian Press (The Guardian, B4; Calgary Sun)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Extremists could use peaceful demonstrations as cover

Intelligence officials are concerned that extremists might infiltrate peaceful anti-petroleum protests to "incite violence," a newly disclosed assessment indicates. The federal analysis of threats to the passenger rail system introduces a new twist to the often tense debate over state scrutiny of environmental demonstrators - that otherwise harmless activists might unwittingly harbour dangerous terrorists. The assertion - contained in a Transport Canada intelligence report - led one defender of civil liberties to ask whether there is evidence to support it. "I do think it's dangerous to start painting activism as a potential cover for terrorist activities," said Cara Zwibel, director of the fundamental freedoms program at the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. The Canadian Press recently obtained a copy of the six-page, November 2014 analysis by Transport's security intelligence assessment branch through the Access to Information Act. Overall, the assessment warns that surface transportation such as passenger rail is "a favoured target of terrorists" because attackers can inflict mass casualties, fear and economic harm using simple tactics - particularly improvised explosive devices. It points to the 2004 Madrid and 2005 London bombings as well as a more recent, failed plot to derail a Via Rail passenger train - all led or supported by al-Qaida. Future plots against passenger rail in Canada are possible given the emphasis on "solo jihad" by al-Qaida and the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, past statements from their members and supporters, and the ease with which an attack could be carried out, the report says. Canadian Press (Red Deer Advocate, A1, Guardian, Record, Ottawa Sun, Ottawa Citizen, Whig-Standard, Toronto Star, Hamilton Spectator, Times & Transcript, Telegraph-Journal); La Presse Canadienne (Acadie Nouvelle, 17)

Crainte d'une infiltration d'extrémistes

Des hauts fonctionnaires craignent que des extrémistes se glissent dans des manifestations contre la construction de pipelines, l'exploitation des sables bitumineux ou le transport du pétrole par train afin d'encourager la violence, indique un rapport récemment dévoilé. Le document rédigé par le service du renseignement de sécurité de Transports Canada, qui porte sur une analyse des menaces contre les services ferroviaires voyageurs, donne une nouvelle tournure au débat concernant la surveillance dont font l'objet les manifestants écologistes par l'État en laissant entendre que des activistes pacifiques pourraient involontairement accueillir dans leurs rangs des terroristes. Cara Zwibel, directrice du programme des libertés fondamentales pour l'Association canadienne des libertés civiles, a toutefois remis cette affirmation en question, doutant que le ministère ait des preuves pour étayer ses dires. Selon elle, il est dangereux de présenter le militantisme actif comme une couverture potentielle pour des activités terroristes. La Presse Canadienne a obtenu copie du rapport de six pages datant de novembre 2014 en vertu de la Loi sur l'accès à l'information. De manière générale, l'analyse avise les autorités que le transport de surface comme les services ferroviaires voyageurs compte parmi les cibles préférées des terroristes parce que les attaquants peuvent faire un grand nombre de victimes, semer la peur et nuire à l'économie en utilisant des tactiques simples, comme les engins explosifs de fabrication. La Presse Canadienne (Le Droit, 19, La Presse)

 Deadly Dollars

Canada's new prime minister has made an international commitment to tackle terrorist financing but the country is failing to bring such cases to court, some experts say. Senator Daniel Lang, who led a National Security and Defence Committee study into the terrorism threat in Canada, said police and justice officials have received almost 700 reliable reports of suspected terrorist financing in the country during recent years. The committee also heard from Canada Revenue Agency that the agency had revoked the charitable status of eight charities over links to terrorism, he said (...) Money flowing into the country to fund efforts to radicalize Canadians is as dangerous as money headed out to fund terrorist organizations abroad. Sources for the money are wide-ranging - everything from criminal activities to "charitable" fundraising to a radical's maxed-out credit card before departure to fight in foreign lands. Darren Gibb, of the Financial Transactions and Reports Analysis Centre of Canada (FINTRAC), a financial intelligence unit with a mandate to deter money laundering and financing of terrorist activities, said the organization provides information to police and other authorities to aid in investigations. Toronto Sun, A4 (Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun)

* Muslim women stage hijab event

Local Muslim women are joining with others across the country to shed light on why they wear the hijab with the #JeSuisHijabi campaign. The Ahmadiyya Muslim Women's Association Edmonton held an open house at the Baitul Hadi mosque at 7005 98 Avenue on Sunday and plan to hold "try on a hijab" events at the University of Alberta Student's Union building on Monday from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. and at Telus building at 10020 100 Street from 9 a.m. to noon. Nudrat Mansoor says she respects Canadian values and is asking for the same respect (...) Following terrorist attacks in Paris on Nov. 13 and in San Bernardino, California on Wednesday, discrimination became worse. Mansoor says she has experienced cases where she is sitting on the LRT and people move to avoid sitting next to her. She said she wants to promote peace and harmony between everyone. "It's my choice to wear a hijab and I think I should be respected for that," Mansoor said. She added terrorism has no religion and it's up to everyone to work together to promote peace and respect. "Acceptance and diversity are core Canadian values that we should strive to embrace and live by. This campaign allows for Canadians to come together and engage in peaceful public dialogue to foster a better understanding of the Islamic," Edmonton Sun, A8 (Calgary Sun, A21)

* Tory MP Opposes Bill C-51 Changes

The recent terrorist attack in Paris and mass shooting in southern California have authorities around the world on high alert, and are causing concern here at home. During the federal election campaign, the Liberals and New Democrats pledged to reopen Bill C51, which is designed to safeguard Canadians against the possibility of such attacks. The legislation was one of the major achievements of the former Conservative government, and the Tory MP for Huron-Bruce says now is not the time for second thoughts. Ben Lobb points to action displayed by French authorities immediately after the Paris attacks, that allowed them to deal with most of the attackers quickly. He tells Bayshore Broadcasting News that the anti-terror legislation allows a broad range of federal agencies to work together in assessing potential terror threats against Canada. Lobb explains that it only makes sense for agencies like the military, the RCMP, C-SIS and Transport Canada to cooperate in the face of any threats. The anti-terror legislation was hotly discussed at times in nine Huron-Bruce all-candidates' meetings during the federal election campaign. Bayshore Broadcasting News

Un homme déconnecté

Un article d'opinion dit "Mi-figue mi-raisin, richard Martineau me disait récemment que lui et moi sommes des hommes du 20e siècle, alors que Justin Trudeau est un homme du 21e siècle. Je comprends ce que Richard voulait dire. Faites cependant un test autour de vous. Demandez aux gens sur quoi repose au juste la «modernité» de Justin Trudeau. Invariablement, on vous parlera de choses qui ont rapport avec son image: ses cheveux, la cravate dénouée, son goût pour les selfies, son aisance en public, son allure générale décontractée (...) C'est indiscutablement, même si c'est hautement déplaisant, la lutte au terrorisme et la question de notre sécurité. Au cas où vous ne l'auriez pas remarqué, des gens nous ont déclaré la guerre et tuent des innocents. Hier, le président Obama s'est solennellement adressé au peuple américain. L'Allemagne, dont la réticence à participer à des opérations militaires a des causes historiques, engagera six avions Tornado, une frégate et 1200 hommes en Syrie. La Grande-Bretagne vient de procéder à ses premières frappes en Syrie. Même les petits Pays-Bas, un joueur modeste, se font demander par la France et la Grande-Bretagne de faire leur part. Le président François Hollande, grandi par l'épreuve, dit que la France sera «implacable», sans renoncer pour autant à ses valeurs. Pendant ce temps, que fait Justin Trudeau? Il hésite, il tergiverse, il dit des banalités, il soigne son image. Dans le Discours du trône, un banal et maigrelet passage sur la lutte contre le terrorisme était noyé dans une liste d'épicerie de bons sentiments." Journal de Montréal, 32 (Journal de Québec)

* 1989 Massacre was Terrorism

An opinion piece states "On Dec. 6, Canadians observe the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women, wearing white ribbons in commemoration of the Montreal Massacre. On Dec. 6, 1989, a lone gunman carried out a rampage shooting at the École Polytechnique engineering school in Montreal, Quebec. Marc Lépine killed 14 people and injured 14 others before taking his own life. He left a suicide note claiming "political reasons" for attacking women and feminism, which he blamed for ruining his life. He separated men from women before opening fire in a classroom. All of the 14 people he killed were women. The way such crimes are labelled has changed greatly since 1989. At the time of the attack, most Canadians had never heard of "lone wolf" terrorism. The term "terrorist" was generally reserved for urban guerrillas and paramilitary extremists. The Montreal Massacre was largely described as a "crime" or a "tragedy" in newspapers and in official statements. Yet in 2015, we live a world where a single person can start a shootout on Parliament Hill, or massacre youths at a camp in Norway, in the service of fringe political ideologies. In this context, it is time to reevaluate the Montreal Massacre as a deliberate, theatrical act of violence targeted against civilians and driven by extremist politics: one of the worst terrorist attacks Canada has ever endured. To be sure, the idea that attacks against women or feminists are "political enough" to constitute terrorism is novel. In a post-9/11 world, people have become accustomed to terrorism driven by more "conventional" political and religious goals: shifts in western foreign policy, or silencing offensive cartoonists. Yet it is generally understood that violence driven by hatred for particular ethnicities or political groups can constitute terrorism. It is no great leap to broaden that understanding to include violence driven by hatred of women or of feminism." Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, C3)

 To rein in terror, world must stop arms proliferation

An opinion piece states "Terrorism is perpetrated by socio/psychopaths of all stripes and beliefs. These are people so immersed in evangelical beliefs, some religion-based and others secular-based, that they push beyond any form of rational consideration to become entirely convinced that their desired ends justify use of any means. Consequently, all empathy is driven from their thinking and behaviour, enabling them to plan and complete the most horrific of acts by dehumanizing their victims. Unfortunately, all societies have to live with such persons or groups. Think mass killers of all sorts, not just jihadists. What we can do, practically, is contain and limit their damage and, in so doing, enhance our sense of personal security and freedom. In the wake of the Paris outrage, the French armed forces are lashing out with all the high technology at their disposal and the usual suspects are beating their collective chests demanding more security and, unbelievably, seeming to blame this and possible future attacks on the pathetic Syrian refugees fleeing the very violence the West hopes to prevent." Chronicle-Herald

 Obama no cure for terroritis

An opinion piece states "You are still far more likely to be killed by lightning than by terrorists. Fifty Americans and 10 Canadians are fatally zapped in an average year. But no U.S. president has ever addressed his nation from the Oval Office on the growing threat of thunderstorms. Nor do we walk the street or ride the subway or stroll the mall glancing about for suspicious electrical fields. So why is terrorism so much scarier? Why do we suffer from terroritis? The difference, of course, is that lightning is known. It is natural. It is cause and effect. If you sit under a lone tree in a storm, or play the next hole, or kayak on open water, or stand in the open with a three-metre metal pole, you are quite likely to get fried. So you don't do those stupid things." Toronto Sun (2015-12-06)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

 U.S.-Canada border called 'significant' terrorist pathway | Washington Examiner

The U.S.-Canada border is the likely path for terrorists to invade the country, according to top national security experts and Congress' most comprehensive review of America's 19,000 miles of coasts and land borders. "The nexus between known or suspected terrorists in eastern Canada and the northern parts of the U.S. represent [sic] a significant national security threat," said a new report from the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, a conclusion reached as Canada decided to settle 25,000 Syrian refugees by March. Washington Examiner (2015-12-06)

 Labour shortage in Banff and Lake Louise a challenge for tourism

Businesses in Banff and Lake Louise are seeing a surge in tourism thanks to the low Canadian dollar, but they're struggling to find enough workers to meet the demand. Darren Reeder is the executive director of Banff & Lake Louise Hospitality Association and says the labour shortage is widespread in the tourism industry, according to a recent survey of area businesses. (...) One of the major issues is changes to the federal temporary foreign worker program brought in by the former Conservative government, including increased administrative fees for hiring foreign workers, and restrictions on working holiday visas that prevent workers from returning each year. That last restriction, limiting workers to one two-year stint, is having an effect at local ski hills where Australian accents often outnumber local dialects. "That's pretty concerning ... and more importantly they are some of our most important brand ambassadors. They are the people that go home and talk about our values on the environment, about the economy," said Reeder. CBC News (2015-12-06)

* Plus d'une dizaine de personnes radicalisées dans les prisons fédérales

Selon des documents datant de mars 2015, obtenus de Service correctionnel Canada (SCC) à la suite d'une demande d'accès à l'information, il y a « onze délinquants coupables d'infractions liées au terrorisme » dans les prisons fédérales. Ils purgent des peines allant de 10 ans à l'emprisonnement à vie et la majorité d'entre eux est incarcérée dans un établissement à sécurité maximale. À cela s'ajoutent des « personnes d'intérêt » qui « sont possiblement radicalisées » ou qui « sont considérées comme posant une menace pour la sécurité nationale ». Le SCC ne donne toutefois pas de chiffres précis pour cette catégorie de détenus « radicalisés ». Mais la présence de ces personnes « d'intérêt » soulève des inquiétudes, affirme Herman Debarice Okomba, le directeur du Centre de prévention de la radicalisation menant à la violence à Montréal. (...) Pour identifier les personnes radicalisées, le SCC recueille des informations à l'intérieur des prisons et se fie aussi à la GRC, au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité ou encore de l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada. Les personnes reconnues coupables d'infractions en vertu de la « Loi antiterroriste » sont aussi identifiées comme « délinquants radicalisés ». Radio-Canada (2015-12-06)

* Drug prices expected to jump as result of trade deal

The intellectual-property provisions in the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement will drive up global drug prices and make it harder to treat diseases in developing countries, Médecins sans Frontières (Doctors Without Borders) says. A month after the final text of the TPP was released, the medical humanitarian organization has completed its analysis of the portions of the massive trade pact that will affect drug costs. Despite changes from earlier leaked versions of the text, there are still serious problems, Judit Rius, MSF's U.S. legal policy adviser, said. "This is catastrophic. This is very negative. The impact is going to be at multiple levels," Ms. Rius said in an interview. Globe and Mail, B1

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

* Zombies informatiques neutralisés

Le CRTC a récemment exécuté un mandat à Toronto pour le retrait d'un serveur de commande et de contrôle de la famille de maliciels Win32/Dorkbot. Ces maliciels ont infecté au-delà d'un million d'ordinateurs personnels dans plus de 190 pays, a précisé le Conseil de la radiodiffusion et des télécommunications canadiennes (CRTC). « Ces réseaux de zombies, qui sont très dangereux, sont utilisés aux fins d'activités illégales et peuvent mener au vol d'identité et à la fraude. Cette intervention montre que les partenariats entre les organismes d'application de la loi à l'échelle nationale et internationale sont essentiels en vue de lutter contre les cybermenaces transnationales », a indiqué Manon Bombardier, cadre en chef de Conformité et enquêtes du CRTC. (...) Dorkbot se propage au moyen d'une clé USB, des programmes de messagerie instantanée et des réseaux sociaux. Une fois qu'on a porté atteinte à l'intégrité d'un ordinateur, on peut lui ordonner de voler les mots de passe pour effectuer des transactions bancaires et les paiements en ligne. Il est aussi possible de télécharger et installer des maliciels dangereux et s'unir à d'autres ordinateurs infectés pour expédier des demandes multiples à un serveur en vue de dépasser sa capacité de réponse. Cette situation est aussi connue comme une attaque par déni de service. Le mandat a été exécuté conformément à la Loi canadienne antipourriel. Aux fins de cette enquête, le CRTC a collaboré avec plusieurs partenaires, dont le Federal Bureau of Investigation, Europol, Interpol, Microsoft inc., la Gendarmerie royale du Canada, Sécurité publique Canada et le Centre canadien de réponse aux incidents cybernétiques. Presse Canadienne (Journal Montréal, 38)

* Who is listening as your children talk to their toys?

Your daughter rips open the wrapping paper and screams with excitement - it's Talk To Me Tammy! After connecting the doll to your home's wireless network through a smartphone app, she and Tammy start chatting. Tammy tells her jokes, quizzes her on some math questions and says her favourite colour is pink. She asks your daughter lots of questions about her likes and dislikes, hopes and dreams, and family and friends. The next day, you notice advertisements for products your daughter told Tammy she wants on your Facebook page. That's because buried in Tammy's terms of service - which you didn't read - was a clause authorizing the toy company to sell the data Tammy collects to marketers. Meanwhile, hackers who don't want to pay the toy company for your daughter's valuable data are working on a way to access it for free. Financial Post (Edmonton Journal, B6; Calgary Herald)

 After Paris Attacks, French Cops Want to Block Tor and Forbid Free Wi-Fi

After the recent Paris terror attacks, French law enforcement wants to have several powers added to a proposed law, including the move to forbid and block the use of the Tor anonymity network, according to an internal document from the Ministry of Interior seen by French newspaper Le Monde. That document talks about two proposed pieces of legislation, one around the state of emergency, and the other concerning counter-terrorism. Regarding the former, French law enforcement wish to "forbid free and shared wi-fi connections" during a state of emergency. This comes from a police opinion included in the document: the reason being that it is apparently difficult to track individuals who use public wi-fi networks. As the latter, law enforcement would like "to block or forbid communications of the Tor network." Motherboard (2015-12-06)

 NSA's shuttered program was 'a sacrificial lamb' in U.S. mass surveillance

The National Security Agency in the United States may have shuttered its controversial bulk phone record collection program, but that doesn't mean people living in that country suddenly have their communications free from government scrutiny... Snowden also revealed that Canada's electronic spy agency tracks millions of downloads daily by people around the world, including Canadians. While it's hard to know much about the Canadian Security Establishment because of the secrecy surrounding the agency, there is "evidence of the same kind of indiscriminate surveillance as the NSA engages in," says David Lyon, the director of Queen's University's surveillance studies centre and author of Surveillance after Snowden. CBC News (2015-12-06)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Man escapes custody in N.S. while being transferred to police van

Police in Nova Scotia searching for a man they say escaped custody while being transferred to a sheriff's van in the parking lot of the Truro Justice Centre. Nova Scotia justice officials say Marc Joseph Pellerin, 43, was awaiting a court appearance on a variety of charges, including theft of a motor vehicle, theft over $5,000, break and enter, possession of stolen property, evading police, unsafe storage of a firearm and resisting arrest. The Moncton man was being transferred from Shediac Jail in New Brunswick to Halifax for a Monday court appearance. Authorities say Pellerin had previously escaped a police vehicle in May. Fred Hildebrand, of Nova Scotia's Department of Justice says Truro Police, the RCMP and Sheriff Services are searching for the subject. Postmedia (Daily Gleaner, B3)

Trudeau among those marking solemn occasion

Mourners gathered in Vancouver and other Canadian cities on Sunday to mark the 26th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre, where 14 women were shot to death at the Ecole Polytechnique. In Montreal, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and a small crowd listened as the names of the victims were read aloud, silhouetted by 14 beacons of light projected into the night sky in memory of the victims. Trudeau did not address the crowd, but said afterward the anniversary is not only a time to remember the events of the massacre, but also to make promises. He said his personal pledge was "to never forget, and to do everything I can to ensure that never again." Trudeau released a statement on the massacre Sunday restating the Liberal government's promise to launch an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women and to introduce legislation to provide greater support for survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault. "We all have an important role to play in stopping violence against women and girls, and in denouncing misogyny in all its forms," the statement read. "Like all parents, I want my daughter to grow up in a safe community and a safe world." Representatives of women's and aboriginal rights groups reminded the public that women in Canada still face violence. "In 2015, women are still victims of violence, just because they're women," said Carole Benjamin, a spokesperson for the event. Postmedia (Province, A6, Winnipeg Sun, London Free Press, Calgary Sun, Kingston Whig-Standard, Hamilton Spectator, Red Deer Advocate, Chronicle Herald); Waterloo Regional Record; Gazette; * Globe and Mail, A8

RCMP officer remembers Montreal losses

RCMP Sgt. Bert Paquet vividly recalls the day 14 women were murdered at the University of Montreal's Ecole Polytechnique 26 years ago. "I was actually in the pavilion next door to where it happened," the Manitoba RCMP media spokesperson said Sunday. "I was studying criminology in Montreal and we heard over the intercom for students to leave the area immediately and in a certain direction." Paquet had not heard the shots fired that fatal day but the stunning news quickly spread across campus. "It was just surreal," Paquet said on the National Day of Remembrance and Violence Against Women. "Even going back to school a couple of days later was different. It changes you. It changes the people around you, and you look at people around you differently as well." But deciding to become an RCMP officer was not the result of that tragedy and how close he was to it. Rather, meeting some RCMP officers later "planted the bug," he said. But Paquet, who was born in Montreal, will not soon forget that day. "It's a sad, sad story that did not need to happen," said Paquet, 50. "And it cost the lives of those promising young women." The RCMP maintain a strong presence whenever vigils for murdered women are held and continue to investigate unsolved ones under Project Devote. Postmedia Network (Winnipeg Sun)

RCMP seek pharmacy burglars

Crime Stoppers and Southeast District RCMP's Sackville Detachment are trying to identify two men responsible for a break, enter and theft at a Port Elgin pharmacy last year. On Nov. 27, 2014, at approximately 3 a.m., two men wearing white balaclavas entered the Port Elgin Village Pharmacy by breaking through the front entrance. Once inside, the burglars stole an undisclosed quantity of medication. The investigators determined through the security video that both intruders were Caucasian men with medium builds. One man was wearing a white suit that is commonly worn on construction sites and in fish plants. The other was wearing a black hoodie. The security footage shows them leaving the scene in a light-coloured Toyota 4Runner. Postmedia Network (Times & Transcript, A6); Record, A1

Victoria's chief of police apologizes for behaviour

Victoria's chief of police says he's "sorry and humiliated" after a police-board investigation found online messages he sent to another officer's wife were inappropriate. Chief Frank Elsner took the Victoria Police Department's helm in January, 2014, after four years as chief of police in Sudbury. But Barbara Desjardins, mayor of Esquimalt and head of the Victoria police board, said Sunday the board was notified about a concern involving the chief during the summer. Ms. Desjardins said she could not disclose who raised the concern, but the board hired a lawyer to investigate. The mayor said the investigation wrapped up a couple of weeks ago and a report found the chief's use of direct Twitter messages to the officer's wife "was inappropriate." The mayor said she could not disclose if the chief was disciplined, but said he will remain in his role with the board's "full confidence." "Our chief has done some amazing things in the last two years," she said in an interview. "Yes, this was something that the chief admits he's ashamed of. But the board feels that within the report, the process, we've dealt with it and they feel that the good work that the chief has done ... they're hopeful that that continues." Chief Elsner, in a written statement, said he "should not have engaged in the direct messages in the first place and for that, I take complete responsibility." "Our citizens place a significant amount of confidence and trust in their police service," he wrote. Globe and Mail; * Postmedia Network (Province, A6, Vancouver Sun)

Can Trudeau re-set Canada's relationship with First Nations?

Throughout the election campaign, Justin Trudeau promised "real change". Arguably, no segment of Canadian society is more in need of that change than Canada's Indigenous peoples, who fall well below national standards on socio-economic indicators. The change Trudeau referenced during his campaign was evident the day his cabinet was sworn into office. Two Indigenous MPs were selected as cabinet ministers: Jody Wilson-Raybould was appointed Justice minister and Hunter Tootoo became the minister of Fisheries and the Canadian Coast Guard. This signalled to many Indigenous voters that the prime minister's commitment to reconciliation was sincere. His comments in the Speech from the Throne and his mandate letter to Carolyn Bennett, the minister of Indigenous and Northern Affairs, further illustrates his commitment to renewing the relationship between Canada and Indigenous peoples. In both, he speaks of the need to engage in a nation-to-nation process in an effort to make real progress on the issues identified as being most important to First Nations, the Métis Nation and Inuit communities. These issues are extensive and include reforms in the areas of rights recognition, housing, employment, health and mental health care, community safety and policing, child welfare and education. Of particular significance is the prime minister's commitment to implementing all 94 recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on residential schools, many of which are far-reaching. Specifically, he calls on the minister to implement the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP). Since the adoption of UNDRIP in September 2007, Indigenous Canadians have been calling for the recognition of the human rights standards articulated within it. However, it wasn't until November 2010 that Canada actually decided to endorse UNDRIP and, even then, it did so with express limitations. iPolitics

Injured woman found on gravel road at Samson Cree Nation

RCMP are releasing few details about an injured female found on a gravel road near the Samson Cree Nation on Sunday morning. The Maskwacis RCMP found her on the road in a rural area after receiving a call about a "seriously injured female." The female was taken to hospital and an RCMP news release stated "the full extent of her injuries is not known at this time." RCMP did not release the age of the unidentified female, except to say she was "described as being older than a child." RCMP are expected to release more information as the investigation progresses. The Samson Cree Nation is roughly 100 kilometres south of Edmonton. Postmedia Network (Edmonton Journal)

Victoria police chief 'humiliated beyond words' over inappropriate Twitter messages

Victoria's police chief says he's ashamed and humiliated by his own actions after exchanging inappropriate messages with the wife of a subordinate officer. Frank Elsner told The Vancouver Sun on Sunday he was the subject of a recent internal police board investigation over his conduct, but has emerged with the continued confidence of the board and intends to address the department and continue leading the force. "I'm humiliated beyond words," he said. He said he's also spoken to his officer, whose wife was involved, and his family about the incident. "I'm ashamed of my actions," said Elsner. "I'm better than that. I know better than that. And I think part of this, the learning opportunity, is that you stand up and tell the truth and learn from it and move on." Elsner has led the Victoria force for almost two years. He's married with two daughters, and said his wife has been fully aware of what happened. In September, he said the civilian police board became aware of an allegation against him. "An allegation was made against me that based on direct messages off of Twitter that I had an inappropriate relationship with a female. The board notified me of that and they hired an independent lawyer to do the investigation. The investigation was completed and last week I was notified and they found that there was no inappropriate relationship. However, I should not have engaged in the direct messages in the first place and I fully agree." Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, Province, Times Colonist)

 Escapee eludes police capture

Canada-wide warrant issued after prisoner runs away from guards in Truro on Friday. A Canada-wide warrant has been issued for the New Brunswick prisoner who escaped from guards Friday afternoon at the Truro Justice Centre. Marc Joseph Pellerin ran off while being transferred from one sheriff services vehicle to another at about 5:45 p.m. and has not been seen since. "No news outside of that we have a Canada-wide warrant for him," Truro Police Service Insp. Rob Hearn said Sunday afternoon. "I can't get into the details of the investigation, obviously, but we are following any leads, and hopefully he'll be picked up soon." In a news conference Saturday, the director of sheriff services with the provincial Justice Department said that Pellerin, described as five-foot-seven and 155 pounds, was not handcuffed or shackled during the transfer that occurred under the watch of four guards in the parking lot behind the Prince Street justice centre. "Normally, in a transfer, he would have the shackles and the handcuffs on all the time," Fred Hildebrand said. "That's just the routine. Officers are trained to do that, and that's what they do." But the routine was not followed and Pellerin escaped on foot and is still on the lam. "We have to investigate," Hildebrand said of why the sheriff services officers did not follow protocol. "We consider it very serious. We have to investigate to get the facts before we can determine exactly what happened." Pellerin was being transferred from a jail in Shediac, N.B., to one in Dartmouth, from where he was to appear in a Halifax court Monday on property-related charges. Postmedia Network (Chronicle Herald, A7)

 Technology transforming Saskatchewan's courts

From flip charts and overhead projectors of years past to iPads and pop-up monitors of today, technology is transforming Saskatchewan's courtrooms. Paper gave way to pixels at a Regina jury trial earlier this year when the attention of jurors and witnesses was drawn to photos reflected on iPads and television screens - instead of the usual paper photo booklets. It doesn't seem like such a monumental leap in a society immersed in instant, digital images, but the trial, which ended with Adam Riley Cyr convicted of murder, was a courtroom first. "It worked really well," said Adam Breker, co-Crown prosecutor on the case, adding everyone was on the same page, and jurors couldn't get distracted flipping ahead. "The witness is scrolling through the photos, and the jurors can all see ... on the TV exactly what the witness is talking about." The change from booklets to iPads was initiated by the Regina Police Service identification section. "I saw how much work and money was put into the photo books for court," said Sgt. Dean Yadlowski, who heads the unit. Typically in a jury trial, some nine or more photo books are prepared. On a major case, each book can easily contain 100 or more photos, so the costs can climb to $2,000 for paper alone. At times, a last-minute deal meant it was all for naught, and the books were simply shredded. Yadlowski looked for a solution. Today, the Regina Police Service has two kits, each containing five iPads. "It only took one or two of those major files by the time the iPads started paying for themselves," said Yadlowski. He also sees a use beyond photos, for example, displaying video exhibits, diagrams or other documents. Since the Cyr trial, a few more hearings have used iPads. But Yadlowski notes they're not going to replace paper completely. A hard copy photo book is still placed into evidence for posterity. And, with only two iPad kits that can be tied up for several days or weeks at a time, they aren't suited to every trial. Fraud cases have also evolved, as evidenced by this year's Regina trial for Steven Weeres, convicted in an extensive investment scheme. Evidence showing how money moved from deposits, through bank account to withdrawals and, in some cases, to how it was spent was traced through computerized spreadsheets embedded with hyperlinks to the corresponding bank documents. Prosecutor Dana Brule said the digitized evidence made it much simpler for witnesses who didn't have to juggle and leaf through multiple binders of documents. "It made it more logical," he added. Again, the change was largely driven by a police agency, since it was RCMP software that created the spreadsheet and hyperlinks. Postmedia Network (Leader-Post, A3)

 Terrorist financing cases not prosecuted

An opinion piece by Antonella Artuso Antonella Artuso Queens Park Bureau Chief states, "Canada's new prime minister has made an international commitment to tackle terrorist financing but the country is failing to bring such cases to court, some experts say. Senator Daniel Lang, who led a National Security and Defence Committee study into the terrorism threat in Canada, said police and justice officials have received almost 700 reliable reports of suspected terrorist financing in the country during recent years. The committee also heard from Canada Revenue Agency that the agency had revoked the charitable status of eight charities over links to terrorism, he said. "And that information, the way I understand it, was brought to the attention of the RCMP, and we have had I believe one charge since 2001," Lang said. "The question that has to be asked is if we have the information, and credible information obviously, there is terrorist financing going on in this country ... why aren't there any charges brought forward?" In Turkey last month, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau committed to a joint G20 statement to tackle "the financing channels of terrorism" by such means as freezing terrorists' assets and criminalizing terrorist financing. A report to the G20 -- prepared by the Financial Action Task Force in November -- said that almost all jurisdictions have criminalized terrorist financing as a distinct offence. "But relatively few jurisdictions have obtained convictions for terrorist financing," the report says. The bulk of terrorist funds are not put toward attacks but instead used for organizational support such as recruitment, training, living costs, travel and, in the case of foreign terrorist fighters, maintaining a legitimate public face, the report says". Postmedia Network (Ottawa Sun, Toronto Sun)

 Curbing the use of police background checks

More knowledge isn't always good. In an anxious world where intrusive police checks have become an increasingly common way of verifying the character of a job applicant or volunteer, the hunt for ever more background information too often damages innocent people and compromises civil liberties. Police databases are full of questionable knowledge acquired in the course of investigations, or simply the residue of a chance 911 call, which can be systematically used against people who have done no harm. Safety concerns are paramount when it comes to those working closely with the young and vulnerable.

But they need to be balanced against the privacy rights of people whose lives shouldn't be jeopardized because of minor or irrelevant brushes with the record-keepers of law enforcement. The government of Ontario has wisely decided to limit the kind of information police can disclose, in legislation that standardizes the wayward policies previously used for background checks across the province. The aim of the new law is that only criminal conviction records are to be passed on to potential employers and groups that recruit volunteers. The need for reform was hammered home by the unanimous, all-party vote in favour of the bill. In some cases, people had lost jobs because police passed on phone records pointing to a suicide attempt, or were disqualified as a volunteer because they were listed as a witness to a crime, or merely questioned in an investigation. Unproven allegations took on the taint of credibility simply by being revived and relayed. Having assumed the supreme power to disrupt an individual's educational and vocational prospects, police decision-makers could retrieve information about charges that had been withdrawn decades before and pass it on as if it were useful, worrying knowledge. Non-conviction records, such as dismissed charges, can still be disclosed in limited circumstances, for positions where children, seniors and other vulnerable people are involved. It is crucial that this discretionary power be limited and not abused. Information overreach remains problematic, including at Canada's borders, where police agencies continue to share imperfect knowledge about private lives. In the wake of Ontario's encouraging reforms, this practice needs closer security. Globe and Mail

 Pot can help vets

A former member of Canada's elite counter-terrorism unit has emerged from the shadows to promote medical marijuana for ailing veterans. Kevin Whitenect hopes that his message promoting medical cannabis will bring hope to those former soldiers dealing with emotional or physical pain as well as reduce the stigma surrounding its use. "I saw a value for veterans," said Whitenect, who spent most of his 17 years in the Canadian Forces with the Ottawa-based Joint Task Force 2 counter-terrorism unit. "I started speaking with veterans who were using (medical cannabis) and started hearing the great stories about how it is getting them off the mind-numbing narcotics they are being issued." Whitenect is working as a medical marijuana "ambassador" for CannaConnect, a Toronto-based company that acts as a middleman to bring together licensed medicinal marijuana producers, doctors, and users. Whitenect, who runs his own private security company in Toronto, isn't receiving any payment for his advocacy. Nor does he use marijuana himself. But over the years, he has encountered a number of serving and retired military personnel who are dealing with both post-traumatic stress disorders as well as pain from physical injuries. "I'm a 25-year combat veteran and I don't have emotional trauma," he explained. "I've been very fortunate. But I'm around men who do, and I'm around men who have chronic pain. The system should start to understand the damage that has been done to a lot of veterans." The federal government started paying for medical marijuana for veterans in 2009, but its acceptance has been an uphill battle. The Canadian Medical Association has argued there isn't enough research to show how much marijuana is a safe amount for a patient to take. Former Conservative veterans affairs minister Julian Fantino dismissed marijuana as a serious health risk, pointing out it is not an approved drug in Canada. Postmedia Network (Kingston Whig-Standard, B2)

 Une mauvaise note pour la GRC

Même si la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) répond à davantage de demandes d'accès à l'information, le corps policier n'en demeure pas moins le mouton noir des institutions gouvernementales en matière de transparence. Le Commissariat à l'information, qui a publié le 3 décembre son rapport sur le système d'accès à l'information pour la période 2013-2014, souligne que les résultats de la GRC sont « inférieurs à ceux de l'ensemble du gouvernement ». « Ça me choque!, a commenté l'avocat spécialiste de l'accès à l'information Michel Drapeau. En tant que responsable du respect des lois, la GRC ne doit pas simplement montrer patte blanche, elle doit montrer l'exemple. » De façon générale, la GRC a répondu à 73,2% de ces demandes en 2013-2014, soit 1706, contre 66,7% en 2012-2013. Cependant, les délais de traitement des demandes se sont accrus. En moyenne, la GRC a mis 173 jours pour compléter une demande en 2013-2014, contre 115 jours l'année précédente. En principe, ces délais sont de 30 jours, mais ils peuvent être prorogés. Un peu moins de la moitié des demandes ont d'ailleurs été traitées en plus de 120 jours. La proportion des demandes traitées hors délai a ainsi augmenté, passant de 56,9% à 65%. Cette statistique préoccupe particulièrement le Commissariat, au point où une alerte rouge a été lancée. « A titre de comparaison, cette proportion était de 14% à l'échelle gouvernementale en 2013-2014 », souligne le rapport. La charge de travail a été la principale raison invoquée pour justifier ces retards dans la majorité des demandes. «Aucune raison ne peut justifier ces retards, affirme Me Drapeau. Si une institution doit être transparente, c'est bien elle.» Selon le spécialiste, la GRC est le mauvais élève de l'accès à l'information depuis une dizaine d'années. Au début des années 2000, l'ancien commissaire à l'information John Reid avait déjà interpellé le commissaire à la GRC Giuliano Zaccardelli au sujet de la transparence. Presse Canadienne (La Presse, A6)

 Minister pledges native inquiry 'shortly'

The Liberal government will "very shortly" announce a national inquiry into Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women, Status of Women minister Patty Hadju said Sunday. Speaking to a crowd of 400 gathered Sunday evening at the Women's Monument in Minto Park to mark the 26th anniversary of the murder of 14 women at the École Polytechnique in Montreal, Hadju won applause for saying Canadians can expect in "the weeks to come" to hear about the scope of an inquiry. She said the government wants "work with people," particularly aboriginal women, in both setting up the inquiry and its ongoing process. The day after his election on Oct. 19, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau said his government would move "quickly" on a campaign promise to hold a public inquiry into the disproportionate rate of violence perpetuated against indigenous women in Canada. A 2014 RCMP report found that 1,181 indigenous women were killed or disappeared between 1980 and 2012. Statistically, aboriginal women are eight times more likely to be the victims of violence than non-aboriginal women. The promise of the inquiry might have been the highlight of the vigil, but the issue of violence against any woman was far from forgotten. A video screen displayed messages such as, "Don't tell your daughter not to go out; tell your son to behave." "Why are women still struggling everyday to overcome systemic violence?" asked Rosella Chibambo of the Ottawa Coalition to End Violence Against Women, reminding the crowd of the purpose of the vigil. She said women's groups will be "activity monitoring the new government" to see if it delivers on promises to tackle the social ill of gender-based and sexual violence against women. "Because it's 2015. We are watching you." Canadians are increasingly aware of the issue, said Yamikani Msosa, public education coordinator for the Sexual Assault Support Centre in Ottawa. Postmedia (Ottawa Citizen, A1/FRONT)

 Ten Arrested in Multiple Thefts and B&Es

Ever since August, Yorkton Rural, Yorkton Municipal, Canora, Wadena, and Esterhazy RCMP have received numerous complaints of break and enters, thefts, mischief, and dangerous driving. Now, five adults and five youth have been arrested. Police say they were linked to multiple files through evidenced gathered to date. In total, the ten accused face a combination of 167 charges. They are all remanded on strict conditions. Saskatoonhomepage.ca; 620ckrm

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Author weighs in on prison farms

When he speaks in Kingston this week about the links between food and climate change, author Peter Ladner will be able to share his insights into a pressing local issue - prison farms. In his 2011 book The Urban Food Revolution, the Vancouver-based author discusses the closing of prison farms across Canada the previous year, including Frontenac Institution in Kingston. "It just seemed so missing the point that you have people doing worthwhile work," said Ladner in a telephone interview this week. "When the government said those weren't useful skills, tell that to farmers. I don't understand why they did it. Here in British Columbia a politician had a friend in the food business and they gave that person the contract." Reopening prison farms, a possibility with the election of a Liberal government in Ottawa, is just one of many topics that will no doubt strike a sympathetic chord with his Kingston audience. Ladner will be speaking on Tuesday at the Tett Centre for Creativity and Learning as part of the Kingston Climate Action Speaker Series hosted by the city and Sustainable Kingston. Kingston Whig-Standard, A1

Family cheers Watts's arrest

Just two weeks after his release from prison, a high-risk sexual offender convicted in the 2001 death of a 13-year-old Kitchener girl is back behind bars. Christopher Michael Watts was arrested last week by police in Vancouver for breaching the conditions of his parole, after serving 12 years in prison for manslaughter, sexual touching and sexual assault in the death of Amanda Raymond. Raymond died after an all-night party in June 2001 at Watts's home on Puslinch Lake. Watts was found guilty of feeding the girl a lethal concoction of drugs, and assaulting her when she was comatose. The judge who sentenced Watts, who published a book while behind bars called "The Criminal's Handbook," labelled him a "voracious sexual predator" who was "without any sense of guilt" throughout the trial. Before his release on Nov. 20, the Parole Board of Canada declared Watts a high risk to reoffend, but regretted he couldn't be kept in prison after his sentence was finished. He left the federal prison in Mission, B.C., under a long-term supervision order, with strict limitations on his freedom. On Friday, Raymond's mother, Teresa Trupp, got a call from the parole board - telling her Watts had been arrested. A warrant had been issued after he allegedly breached the conditions of his parole. "I was ecstatic. We were jumping for joy. This is just the best early Christmas present my family could hope for," Trupp said. "I knew he was going to mess up, I really did. I feel so relieved that he's off the streets again." Waterloo Region Record, A1

Quatre ans de prison pour avoir agressé une fille de 12 ans

La Cour d'appel de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard vient d'alourdir la peine d'emprisonnement d'un homme âgé de 22 ans qui s'est introduit par effraction dans la chambre à coucher d'une jeune fille de 12 ans avant de l'agresser dans son lit. Travis Mehmoodi a d'abord été condamné à deux ans de pénitencier pour crime sexuel, mais aussi à 11 mois et demi de détention pour l'entrée par effraction. La Cour d'appel a effacé la peine de 11 mois et demi et l'a portée à quatre ans, la période que le malfaiteur devra purger puisque les peines sont concurrentes. Un emprisonnement de quatre ans avait d'ailleurs été réclamé par la Couronne. La Cour d'appel a écrit que la peine de 11 mois et demi ne tenait pas compte de la gravité du crime, de son impact sur la jeune victime et de la jurisprudence en matière de tels crimes au Canada. Presse canadienne (Acadie nouvelle, 13)

In The Courts

A partial compilation of offences from Kingston's Ontario Court of Justice for the period of Nov. 9 to 13, 2015. Only sentences that involved a large fine, probation or incarceration are included. Christopher Perez, 23, was convicted of carrying a concealed weapon for a purpose dangerous to the peace. He had 45 days added to the three-year prison sentence he's already serving for a weapons offence. Justice Judith Beaman was told Perez was charged in mid-May after he was injured in an altercation with a fellow Collins Bay Institution inmate. Crown attorney Ross Drummond said Perez was carrying a homemade knife at the time, but there was no indication he ever tried to use it. Kingston Whig-Standard, A6

North End eyed for new court - Province hires Crown prosecutor for restorative justice

The province has taken its first steps toward establishing Manitoba's first court for restorative justice. The court would be located in Winnipeg's North End. A newly created position as North End community prosecutor has been filled by Nancy Fazenda, a Crown attorney with 15 years' experience as a lawyer, and justice officials are working to define her role in an area of the city most affected by poverty and crime. "I think this is going to be a unique opportunity to work in the community and with the community on some of the complex issues that we have with crime in the North End," Fazenda said. "I still think it involves accountability, but we're going to be balancing that with community supports and support for individuals to address specific issues that some may have that make them more likely to be involved in the criminal justice system." The move comes on the heels of the provincial government's five-year restorative-justice strategy, part of which involves plans to set up a North End court to deal with less serious crimes in the neighbourhood similar to how mental-health and drug-treatment courts function in Manitoba. Winnipeg Free Press, B1

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

'Mom, where are you?'

Lita Blacksmith lights a cigarette. Her living room is chock full of sequined art, dream catchers, aphorisms on every wall: "Today's moments are tomorrow's memories." And, "We should not let our fears hold us back from pursuing our hopes." (...) Imagine a snappingly cold winter's day in Winnipeg. Jan. 11, 2012, to be precise. It's 22 below, colder with the wind chill. Flurries. That evening, Lorna Blacksmith dressed in red and wore dangling earrings with a small metal feather hanging in the middle of the two circles. Lorna was strikingly beautiful. Lita drove her daughter to a wood-frame house on Toronto Street, well known as a drug den. She had no misconceptions about the life her daughter was leading. (...) On Nov. 4, 2002, Shawn Lamb, 43, appeared before Judge Rubin at the stately Winnipeg Law Courts building. Crown counsel itemized Lamb's prior convictions and breaches, spanning back to the winter of 1985 when Lamb spent a year in jail for assault causing bodily harm and one count of mischief. The précised version of Lamb's sheet included five months in custody in 1987 for breaching probation. Sentenced to four years for a 1992 sexual assault. Parole violations in 1995. Nine months in custody in 1996 for assault. Utter forged document. Possess goods. Failure to appear. Sentenced to two years in September 2001 for assault causing bodily harm. Sixty-eight days in the spring of 2002 for uttering threats. (...) It was June 21. Shawn Lamb, serial killer, had directed police to the body of Lorna Blacksmith. (...) Lamb is serving a 20-year-sentence at an Ontario penitentiary. Parole eligibility is fixed at nine years. Through written correspondence with the Star, Lamb commented on the banal ("I hope your (sic) well and enjoying the summer. It's been pretty humid these days") and the substantive ("I also don't think an inquire (sic) is the complete solution"). He noted that his background "has helped me gain insight as well as the many aboriginal women I've met in our very unhealthy lifestyles." A request for an interview was denied by Correctional Service Canada. Toronto Star, A3

Minister pledges native inquiry 'shortly'

The Liberal government will "very shortly" announce a national inquiry into Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women, Status of Women minister Patty Hadju said Sunday. Speaking to a crowd of 400 gathered Sunday evening at the Women's Monument in Minto Park to mark the 26th anniversary of the murder of 14 women at the École Polytechnique in Montreal, Hadju won applause for saying Canadians can expect in "the weeks to come" to hear about the scope of an inquiry. She said the government wants "work with people," particularly aboriginal women, in both setting up the inquiry and its ongoing process. The day after his election on Oct. 19, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau said his government would move "quickly" on a campaign promise to hold a public inquiry into the disproportionate rate of violence perpetuated against indigenous women in Canada. A 2014 RCMP report found that 1,181 indigenous women were killed or disappeared between 1980 and 2012. Statistically, aboriginal women are eight times more likely to be the victims of violence than non-aboriginal women. Ottawa Citizen, A1

'We can find strength'

In the dim lighting of Sydenham Street United Church, the faint smell of candles and roses mixed with quiet conversation fills the air. Neighbours and friends greet each other cheerily, but they've gathered for a sobering event. As the sun set and the outside darkened Sunday evening, inside the church more than 150 residents attended a ceremony to honour the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. Rev. Elizabeth Macdonald welcomed the group to the event that honoured the 14 women killed during the Montreal Massacre in 1989 at Ecole Polytechnique de Montreal and missing and murdered indigenous women. The event also remembered local victims such as the Shafia women murdered in Kingston in 2009; Kaitlan Babcock, who was killed in her home on Conacher Drive on June 18, as well as Carol Culleton, Anastasia Kuzyk and Nathalie Warmerdam, the victims of a murderous rampage in Wilno, Ont., on Sept. 22. "When we try to remember this on our own it can be so overwhelming and paralyzing," Macdonald said. "But when we come together in community, with people we know, with people we're going to get to know, when we come together in community to remember, even the most painful events, even the most horrific actions, when we come together in community we can find strength, we can find comfort, we can find hope. "It is so important that we gather to remember so that we will be strengthened. So that we will be comforted. So that we will find the hope we need to take action." Kingston Whig-Standard, A1

 Polytechnique Massacre victims honoured by indigenous community

Members of the indigenous community are standing in solidarity with the victims of the Montreal Massacre, while highlighting that violence against women is not something fixed in the past. Fourteen women were killed on Dec. 6, 1989 when an armed man entered the École Polytechnique and separated the men from the women, killing 14 people just because they were women. On Sunday, members of the aboriginal community marked the 26th anniversary of the massacre by honouring the 14 victims through speeches and song. They gathered at Place du 6 décembre in Côte-des-Neiges to honour the Polytechnique victims while also remembering those who continue to suffer violence. "It's still happening to do this day, almost three decades later you know, there's still violence happening in the form of murdered and missing indigenous women," said Chantel Henderson, a spokesperson for the Missing Justice Collective. There are many similarities between the violence that is a reality for many indigenous women and what happened at the Polytechnique Massacre, Henderson said. CBC News, Le Devoir

Crowd gathers in Riverview to give voice to victimized women

First mourn. Then work for change. That is the call to action inscribed on the Dec. 6 monument in Riverview, and each year in the town, people from southeastern New Brunswick gather to mourn women lost to domestic violence and to strengthen the voice that calls for change. About 75 people gathered Sunday evening at the Father Dan Bohan Family Centre for the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. The local event, organized by the Moncton & District Labour Council's December 6 Committee, heard from Suzanne Bibeau, an outreach worker with the Coalition Against Abuse in Relationships. She said on average, a Canadian woman dies from intimate partner violence every six days in Canada. As well, an estimated 1.5 million Canadian children are exposed to domestic violence in their homes. The National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence was born out of the horror of the 14 young women murdered at Montreal's L'École Polytechnique 26 years ago. It seeks to remember as well as the roughly two dozen women and girls from Metro Moncton who have died from violence since that night. The toll of domestic violence continues to grow. At this year's ceremony, Paula Armstrong's name was added to the local roll of remembrance. She was murdered in a home on Purdy Avenue in June. Her killer then took his own life. Times & Transcript, A1

Montreal massacre remembered

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau joined a subdued ceremony Sunday to mark the 26th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre where 14 women were shot to death at the École Polytechnique. Trudeau and a small crowd listened as the names of the victims were read aloud, silhouetted by 14 beacons of light projected into the night sky in memory of the victims. Trudeau did not address the crowd, but said afterward the anniversary is not only a time to remember the events of the massacre, but also to make promises. He said his personal pledge was "to never forget, and to do everything I can to ensure that never again." Trudeau released a statement on the massacre Sunday restating the Liberal government's promise to launch an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women and to introduce legislation to provide greater support for survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault. Canadian Press (Waterloo Region Record, Toronto Sun, London Free Press, The Province, Montreal Gazette, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Kingston Whig-Standard, London Free Press, Chronicle-Herald, Hamilton Spectator), * Globe and Mail, * Journal de Montréal

 Massacre remembered

It's been 26 years since 14 young women at Montreal's l'École Polytechnique de Montréal were murdered, simply because they were women. Every year since that cold and dark evening on Dec. 6, 1989, Canadians around the country have gathered to remember those women and others who have been killed because of genderbased violence. But not only has that day served as a collective symbol of pain for Canadians, it has also served as a beacon of hope - hope that one day violence against women will be a thing of the past. The Sun spoke to Yami Msosa, the public education coordinator of the Sexual Assault Support Centre of Ottawa, to discuss how the events of Dec. 6, 1989 have changed people's views as well as society, and what we've learned since then. Toronto Sun, A49 (Ottawa Sun)

 Vigil at University of Windsor marks Montreal Massacre

Amelia Runchey was born in 1989, the year of the Montreal Massacre. In her 26 years, the Hamilton native, who is the co-ordinator of the University of Windsor women's centre, has grown to appreciate the gravity of marking the day of Dec. 6 when 14 female engineering students were gunned down in cold blood at L'École Polytechnique de Montreal. "Today is an opportunity to remember and honour these women and also an opportunity to reflect and speak out against violence against women in all forms," said Runchey, a student in women's and gender studies. "It's very important to me and to students because it happened to students. "It was a classroom that was targeted. It's important for campuses to take this day, take some time to remember what happened 26 years ago." About 100 people gathered at the university's memorial to the massacre, which features 14 obelisks - one for each of the victims. Windsor Star, A3

 Hamilton remembers victims of Montreal massacre

A small crowd gathered near Hamilton City Hall on Sunday for an emotional ceremony to remember the women killed during the Montreal Massacre 26 years ago. On Dec. 6, 1989 Marc Lepine carried a rifle into Montreal's École Polytechnique and shot 28 people, killing 14 female engineering students. Sunday afternoon's memorial in Hamilton saw about 40 people gather at the corner of Main Street West and Bay Street. That's the site of a memorial stone that, 25 years ago, was placed to commemorate the women. By the end of the half-hour ceremony, it was covered with red roses and a single burning candle. Similar events were held across the country. In Montreal Sunday, white roses were laid on pillars in a park near the school to remember the victims. Representatives of women's and aboriginal rights groups reminded the public that women in Canada still face violence. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau was expected to attend a ceremony on Mount Royal later in the day, where 14 beacons of light were to be projected into the sky. Hamilton Spectator, A3

 'You don't have to feel ashamed' - Sex-trafficking survivor hopes to protect girls

As a teen, she went from a loving, middle-class home to being trafficked for sex to middle-class dads in the West End. After that, she was "sold" in Toronto. Finally, she returned to Winnipeg, where she threw herself off the Maryland Street Bridge, breaking bones in her back, legs and feet. Now 32, Jessica Pennock is a survivor who is determined to prevent girls from getting sucked in by predators, such as the one who got her at age 15. (...) Then she met former Conservative MP Joy Smith, whose foundation raises awareness about sex trafficking in Canada. A light went on for Pennock. For the first time, she realized what had happened to her - being groomed then trafficked from the age of 15 - wasn't her fault. "I'm a survivor of a horrible crime," she said. Now she's volunteering with the Joy Smith Foundation and sharing her story. The foundation is going to junior high schools to teach students about predators' tactics and how to avoid them and stay safe. Smith, who was a teacher for 23 years before she was an MP, said she's prepared course material in English and French that are age-appropriate and should be part of the curriculum in schools across Canada. (...) 93 per cent of Canada's sex trafficking victims are Canadian girls who have either been groomed online or lured into false "boyfriend" relationships at the local mall or recreational centre. On average, a trafficker makes $280,000 for each girl they force into prostitution. Canada does not have a standard system for collecting data on trafficking incidents. Winnipeg Free Press, A3

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Former refugees say winter can be shock to newcomers

It was a frigid February in 1985 when Getachew Woldeyesus arrived in Saskatchewan as a refugee. The young man from Ethiopia stayed inside for two months. "Because you don't know, is it slippery out there? Are you wearing the right shoes? It's freezing out there, so I was afraid to go out," Woldeyesus recalled in an interview with The Canadian Press. Weather-related challenges will no doubt face many of the 25,000 Syrian refugees the federal government has committed to bring to Canada by early next year. Social agencies, church groups and private citizens across the country have been organizing donations of clothing with an emphasis on coats, gloves, hats and winter footwear. (...) Ali Abukar agrees. Abukar fled Somalia and lived in Egypt as a refugee before arriving in Canada in 2011. He lived in Ontario before moving to Saskatoon in the winter of 2013. Abukar said winter can be tough for refugees who use public transit and will stand outside waiting for a bus. (...) Abukar, who is now executive director at the Saskatoon Open Door Society, said sometimes refugees and immigrants don't know what clothes to wear in the winter. The society shows them what mittens and scarves are all about and how to dress for the cold. Canadian Press (The Guardian, A8, Waterloo Region Record, Leader-Post, Times & Transcript, Red Deer Advocate, Calgary Sun); Presse Canadienne (Le Nouvelliste, 8, Acadie Nouvelle)

 Déjà vu? Finding the right balance in the refugee-terrorism nexus

Faced with security issues whose dimensions overlap both the foreign and domestic arenas, newly-minted Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is in a truly unenviable position. He has vowed to end Canada's combat mission against ISIS and instead refocus upon training local forces and redoubling the humanitarian effort. Playing upon the anger and frustration many Canadians felt towards Harper and the Conservatives, Trudeau presented himself as a sympathetic and humanist alternative, and thereby promised to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees into Canada by the end of 2015. (...) More crucial is how this will affect Canada's relationship to the United States. Americans will play close attention to how the Trudeau government handles the movement of 25,000 refugees and how this is done securely. In the aftermath of 9/11, continental security is not negotiable to the Americans. As debate concerning the admission of Syrian refugees into the United States becomes even more acrimonious, many will cast their gaze upon Canada. In the tense atmosphere that now exists, if even one Syrian refugee crosses the border into the United States and commits a terrorist act, the consequences for Canada could well be devastating. Hill Times

Syrian refugee process in Turkey 'a little bit behind,' Canadian ambassador says

As the effort to select and process Syrian refugees for resettlement in Canada ramps up in Jordan and Lebanon, a more complex situation on the ground in Turkey has slowed the pace of the operation there. The Canadian government has committed to bring 10,000 Syrian refugees to Canada from the three countries by the end of December. An additional 15,000 will be resettled by March. The processing centres in Amman, Jordan, and Beirut, Lebanon, are ramping up to meet the demand. A Canadian official said the government met its goal of processing 500 refugees a day at the Amman centre on the weekend. But the situation in Turkey is a different story. "We're a little bit behind our colleagues in the other posts but we're going to do our best," said John Holmes, Canada's ambassador to Turkey, in an interview with CBC News. (...) Thirty additional Canadian personnel will be deployed to Turkey to assist with the refugee airlift. A processing centre is being established in Gaziantep, a major city in southeast Turkey near the Syrian border. "Security, of course, is a concern in that part of the world. So that is our No. 1 priority for our staff," Holmes said. Thirty-three people were killed in July when a suicide bomber with reported links to ISIS attacked a crowd of youth activists in the Turkish town of Suruc, 110 kilometres from Gaziantep. The Canadian Embassy in Ankara is working with the International Organization for Migration on a plan to airlift the refugees in Turkey to Canada. Holmes said he's unsure when those charter flights will depart, adding that "we are a few weeks away." CBC News

Liberals to concede flaw in fiscal plan

The Trudeau government will acknowledge this week that its tax hike on the richest Canadians won't cover the entire cost of its promised tax cut for the middle class, adding to the fiscal pressures on coming federal budgets, sources said. (...) Liberal House Leader Dominic LeBlanc said in an interview the tax measures and the TFSA change will be announced simultaneously to allow taxpayers to adjust before they come into effect at the start of the new tax year. The Liberal government's plan to end income-splitting for families will be formally announced next year, along with the creation of the promised Canada Child Benefit. Mr. LeBlanc added that the House will spend much of its time this week debating the Throne Speech, giving a number of rookie MPs a chance to make their "maiden speech" in Parliament. In addition, there will be a vote on Thursday on the cost of resettling 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of February. Globe and Mail, A1

Eager to help refugees

When Ruth and Richard MacKellar decided to sponsor a refugee family from Syria with some friends, they quickly realized there were three things needed right away: money, a settlement plan and housing. "The biggest hurdle was going to be accommodation," said Richard, who lives in Squamish. Despite the community's relatively small size and distance from Vancouver - about an hour's drive - Squamish is not immune to the region's housing affordability crisis. The rental vacancy rate is less than one per cent and housing prices are rising rapidly, Richard said. (...) Staff at the Immigrant Services Society, which receives the housing leads through its website, are analyzing and mapping the types and locations of accommodation offers they receive, said Chris Friesen, the society's settlement services director. Two local developers have also offered free or below-market rental apartments to Syrian families for their first few months. Short-term, transitional housing is not likely to be as much of a challenge, as places such as church basements, hotels with kitchenettes or even school gymnasiums could be pressed into service. The real challenge across Canada, particularly acute in Vancouver, will be for refugees who live on an income equivalent to provincial welfare rates to find long-term housing they can afford. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, A1/Front)

 Refugee housing: Where will they live in Ottawa?

Like many young women searching for an apartment, Jennifer Graham has a list of demands: it has to be affordable, close to amenities and in a nice area. But this apartment isn't for her. She's house hunting for a refugee family. Graham is part of the Ottawa South Committee for Refugee Sponsorship. Like many such groups across the city, hers is scrambling to figure out where the refugee family it's sponsoring will live once the plane lands. "First and foremost we want affordable housing. We're looking for a multicultural neighbourhood, and that is close to amenities that they need like transit, groceries, schools, parks for the kids," Graham said. (...) Vincent Detillieux, president of Saint Joseph Property Management, says his company has 32 available units he could offer to refugees. "The timing works out very well," he said. "There's a desire to want to help them, to provide housing to them that's affordable, but quality housing." Detillieux's company works with about 10,000 landlords in the city, keeping track of them with the aid of a database. He says at least 200 of them are currently seeking tenants. "I believe this landlord database could be used to find landlords who are willing to accept refugees in their rentals," Detillieux said. "People want to help." CBC News

City readies for influx of Syrian refugees

An Edmonton agency is setting up a volunteer hotline in preparation for the arrival of Syrian refugees in what's likely the largest influx since the arrival of Vietnamese "boat people" in the late 1970s. The Mennonite Centre for Newcomers is receiving 30 to 40 calls a day offering to help, but some people are shuttled between groups as they narrow down where assistance is most needed, executive director Erick Ambtman says. "There are so many people, and they're calling 20 different organizations and levels of government. There's a lot of uncertainty about who you contact," he says. (...) Ambtman estimates that as many as two-thirds of the 3,000 Syrian refugees likely coming to Alberta by early next year will wind up in Edmonton, more refugees than have been seen since thousands of Vietnamese came in the '70s. The city has also set up a website called Welcoming Syrian Refugees outlining the settlement process and volunteer opportunities. One of the many groups in the area sponsoring refugees is an ecumenical Sherwood Park church committee working to bring in an extended family of 15 people. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, A1/Front)

Waiting for refugee numbers

The provincial government doesn't know exactly how many refugee families could settle in New Brunswick before the new year and where exactly those people will be housed. With less than a month to go before the deadline passes on the federal government's promise to bring 10,000 Syrian refugees to Canada, the cabinet minister who oversees New Brunswick's preparations says they're still working on the federal government to get firm numbers. Since they don't know how many people will arrive in New Brunswick yet, Francine Landry said they can't predict where they'll be housed. The 1,500 refugees expected by New Brunswick will be placed in Moncton, Saint John or Fredericton. "We don't have exact numbers at this time," Landry said on Friday. "We might get those answers next week. We are not sure. We are still working with the federal government on that." In the meantime, she said government is searching for Arabic translators, trying to find affordable housing and preparing services like health care to be ready for the arrival of refugee families. Telegraph-Journal, A2 (Times & Transcript, Daily Gleaner)

Quebec ready for influx

Nearly 3,000 refugees are expected to arrive in Quebec between now and New Year's, with the first full planeload landing next Saturday. The majority will settle in Montreal, which typically takes in 85 per cent of new arrivals to the province. It is an influx unparalleled in Quebec history in terms of the large numbers arriving in such a short period of time. They will come tired, disoriented, hopeful and in need of help to start their new lives. And smack in the middle of the Canada's busiest holiday period. To show Quebec is in fact ready to deal with the coming flood at Christmas-time, provincial Immigration Minister Kathleen Weil and acting Public Security Minister Pierre Moreau visited an immigration support centre in the St-Laurent borough Saturday to chat with new arrival success stories like Harout Sarajian and his family. (...) Weil said the province's main concern is with the timing of the integration, when the massive volume of people will come over the course of three weeks in December. Quebec has already taken in 1,000 of the 3,650 Syrian refugees it has pledged to accommodate. The province will provide more funding to organizations like CACI if there is a need, she said, in addition to the $29 million it has already earmarked. The federal government has also promised funding. Most of the refugees Quebec has pledged to receive for 2015 are privately sponsored, meaning a community organization like CACI, a religious group or a joining of five community members have pledged to look after the welfare of a refugee or refugee family for their first year here. Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, A4)

6 citations sur la réalité des réfugiés syriens qui arrivent au Canada

Citoyen canadien depuis deux ans, Anas Hariri essaie de rassembler sa famille qui vit encore en Syrie, au Liban et en Turquie. Pour le moment, seule la famille de son frère a réussi à intégrer le Canada. Voici 6 citations sur la réalité des réfugiés syriens. «Jusqu'à maintenant je vis un rêve, parce que je vois comme c'est difficile la situation là-bas et à quel point c'est difficile la situation mondiale envers les réfugiés... », raconte Anas qui est désormais citoyen canadien et qui a eu la chance de pouvoir accueillir des membres de sa famille. «Au début, elle essayait de suivre le rythme...» explique Anas en riant, qui a amené sa famille aux célébrations de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste tout de suite après leur arrivée. Il faut payer 12 000$ pour pouvoir parrainer sa famille au Canada. Anas est responsable de son frère et de sa famille pendant 12 mois. Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, Journal de Québec)

Welcome home

It was after he was "taken" for two months that Rakan decided enough is enough: He and his family - wife Houda, and their five children - had to leave Syria. Close to two years later, the 44-year-old hesitates to speak of his terrifying disappearance, not revealing anything other than his family did not know where he was for weeks, and that he was not kidnapped for money. (...) They arrived in Canada last week, one of several Syrian refugee families sponsored privately by Humanity First. The Toronto Sun visited the family at their temporary accommodations inside an empty Vaughan home used as a communal guest house by the Ahmadiyya Muslim community, which is co-ordinating resettlement efforts with Humanity First. "We work with them, for them, to find permanent accommodations for them," said Mumtaz Ali, a member of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at resettlement team for Syrian refugees. "We do work with them to find a job." Rakan and Houda intend on getting work and placing their kids in school as soon as possible. "We hear that the first year will be very difficult," Rakan said. Toronto Sun, A8 (Calgary Sun)

Syrian refugee response gets organized

Guelph entrepreneur and philanthropist Jim Estill is overjoyed by the response the Guelph community is making to the Syrian refugee crisis. But far from being overwhelmed, Estill appears to relish the organizational challenge of bringing 50 Syrian refugee families to Guelph in the coming weeks. Estill went public on Nov. 24 with his pledge to financially sponsor 50 of those families in Guelph, an act of charitable giving that could total as much as $1.5 million. He said it is simply the right thing to do. Other groups are also sponsoring refugees. (...) An organizational framework driven completely by volunteers comprises eight teams, each lead by a director, and each with an assistant director. Estill shared the information recently on his blog, www.jimestill2.blogspot.ca. The eight teams include mentors, finance, education/training, health, food and meals, jobs, transportation, and housing. The list of people who will direct these teams was being finalized late last week. In all of these areas volunteers are being signed up, and goods and services providers are being identified. Many have offered to billet families. There is a definite need for more accommodations. And more volunteers are needed. The Salvation Army has stepped up as the lead organization for donations. Waterloo Region Record, B4

«Attache ta tuque avec de la broche»

Depuis que le Canada a donné son feu vert à l'accueil de 25 000 réfugiés syriens au cours des prochains mois, Pompon Laine Café s'est transformé en point de chute pour ceux qui souhaitent offrir des tuques et autres vêtements de laine destinés aux citoyens fuyant la guerre civile en Syrie. Le lieu de rencontre, qui propose des cours de tricot et du café aux amateurs de longues aiguilles, troquera son activité de Noël, prévue jeudi, par une séance de tricot en règle au profit des futurs résidents québécois. «Habituellement nous sommes dans la période où l'on fabrique des cadeaux express, des petits patrons pour les tricoteuses aguerries. Puis on a décidé de se réorienter et on a demandé aux gens de venir tricoter avec nous. En fait, les Syriens n'ont pas demandé à quitter leur pays. Ils s'en viennent dans un milieu qui peut être assez hostile. Il n'ont pas choisi d'être en exil. Donc, si c'est réconfortant pour nous, tricoter, on se dit que ce sera réconfortant pour eux. Tricoter un morceau, c'est comme un lien d'affection, une preuve d'affection, d'amitié, de bons vœux, de bienvenue», note l'une des propriétaires de Pompon Laine Café, Julie Biron, qui se réjouit de la trentaine de tuques déjà au rendez-vous. La Presse

Refugee planning gets down to details in Old Ottawa South

Old Ottawa South resident Marc Rand decided he wanted to do something to help a Syrian refugee family that is being sponsored by a community group in his neighbourhood. But he needed the OK from his 16-year-old son, Ben. "Mind giving up your room for a while?" he asked Ben before offering their home as a temporary refuge for the family with four young children. (...)The Ottawa South group had a blizzard of details on the table. Friends and neighbours have been asked to donate a long list of items, from a kitchen table to dish soap, dressers, lots of shoes and four car seats. "Should we get them cellphones?" someone asked. They've been awash in offers of help and cash. More than $50,000 has been raised, enough to start work on sponsoring a second family. A dentist, optometrist and barber have offered their services. Several former English-as-a-second-language teachers said they'd be glad to tutor them. Students at a nearby private school plan to make welcome signs in Arabic. Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A4)

'How people live, it's inhumane,' says refugee living in Fredericton

When Mohammed Daoussa Tom thinks about his mom and dad, tears begin to roll down his cheeks. The Sudanese refugee doesn't remember the last time he saw his parents alive. "I'm starting to forget their faces," said the 21-year-old, burying his face into his hands. "It's been a long time." Last year, he learned his father is dead and he still doesn't know the whereabouts of his mother. (...)Daoussa Tom says he's trying to do his best to integrate into Canadian society. He's doing this by taking classes and learning English at the Multicultural Association of Fredericton. When he first arrived, the Fredericton resident said it was a bit strange. Daoussa Tom admits he was a bit afraid and sick. But says he's also living in an apartment and making new friends in the Fredericton community. "It's a small city but everyone is generous and they're not aggressive or violent," he said. "I like Fredericton, it's the ideal city for me." He also admits, Canadian living conditions can be difficult. "Once the cold arrives, I can't leave the house," said Daoussa, who says he dresses in layers, but nothing seems to prevent the cold. "I stay in my room." Telegraph-Journal, A3 (Daily Gleaner)

Saskatoon comes together to provide dream wedding

Athar Farroukh and Mohamad Al-Noury got the wedding they always wanted. The couple, refugees from Syria, was given a lavish wedding reception Sunday thanks to a wave of donations from Saskatoon residents and businesses. "We're blessed that we're in Saskatoon. It's a dream come true for us," Farroukh said before cutting the cake and joining the revellers in a Delta Bessborough hotel ballroom. "It's a great feeling. I wish everyone could have the same experience." The couple arrived in Saskatoon one year ago. Their village in Syria was bombed and they were forced to flee. They had hoped to get married at home, but soon saw they could not return. They were married in a modest ceremony in a Lebanese refugee camp before being accepted to Canada. Last week, CBC reporter Eman Bare was interviewing them when she discovered they had no wedding photos. Bare and some friends offered to snap some shots, and they put out a call for help on social media. "I posted it, but then the community took over," she said. People donated flowers and food, as well as a wedding dress and suit for the couple. Bessborough officials donated the banquet hall. On Sunday afternoon, about 50 guests, as well as a throng of reporters and photographers, were on hand as the smiling couple entered the ballroom. They sat for photos, then watched as well-wishers sang and drummed and danced in their honour. Postmedia News (StarPhoenix, A1/Front)

Armenian centre in Willowdale to accept more than 1,000 refugees

There are already roughly 350 Syrian refugees adjusting to their first winter in Canada, the first days of a new life, thanks to the Armenian Community Centre in Willowdale. The centre's co-ordinator will see her phone ring all day, as Citizenship and Immigration Canada (CIC) alerts her of new arrivals. Lorig Garboushian and volunteers have picked up more than 20 people in a day, just the beginning of the 1,079 newcomers they will be sponsoring. That's roughly half of the 2,600 refugees Toronto will be accepting, according to the numbers released two weeks ago by CIC. There's always someone there at the airport to welcome the arrivals, whose faces often belie conflicted emotions. CBC News (2015-12-06)

Young singer inspired by plight of refugees

Like many a musician before her, Jamie Arsenault is trying to fight hatred with music. Disturbed by a wave of prejudicial comments about refugees on social media, the 21-year-old musician from Grande Prairie decided to do something about it. "I wanted people to realize that refugees are just like us," Arsenault said. "Maybe they look different, or speak a different language and pray to a different god, but they're just human, with the same hopes and fears as us." (...) Arsenault said she spent a few days researching the experiences of Syrian refugees, and fine-tuning the lyrics and music before recording and posting her video. The lyrics to Arsenault's Refugee Song are written from the point of view of a mother in a war-torn country who is trying to comfort her child. (...) Though she's not sure if she changed the minds of any people who posted hateful comments, all of the responses she has received so far have been positive. "I think I've made a big enough difference that it's made my heart a little bit happier," she said. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, A5)

 Amnesty supporters gather in Waterloo to write for rights

International Human Rights Day, which was marked Saturday, has special meaning for Anwar Arkani. After his father was murdered in 1978, Arkani fled through the jungles of Burma (now called Myanmar) along with his mother and 300,000 other refugees to Bangladesh. It was a two-day walk, and only the beginning of a 24-year-long journey that ended in Canada. (...) Margaret Jackson co-chairs one of the two Amnesty International groups in Kitchener- Waterloo. Her group raises awareness, and the other writes letters. The Saturday event was called Write for Rights. "It is the premier event for Amnesty International all around the world," Jackson said. "Last year in this event we were able to send out over three million letters." Among the 10 issues highlighted by Jackson's group Saturday are three in Canada: a dam on the Peace River in northern B.C. that will destroy First Nation trap lines and hunting grounds; keeping Canada's immigration doors open to Syrian refugees; and the actions of Canadian mining and oil companies operating abroad. Waterloo Region Record, B1

How do refugees travel to work?

An editorial by a P.E.I. board member for Transportation Action Atlantic states, "According to The Guardian, Dec. 4, Robert Henderson, MLA for O'Leary-Inverness, thinks that refugees arriving in P.E.I. should be encouraged to become farm and fisheries workers, replacing temporary foreign workers. Mr. Henderson sees a double benefit: employment for refugees while lowering the number of temporary foreign workers. Hmmm. How are the refugees to get to the farms and fish plants? Won't they have the same problem many rural islanders, who would also like to work on the farms and fish plans, have? On P.E.I., as it is now, the only way to reach a destination more than walking distance away is by automobile. Is P.E.I. going to provide refugees with automobiles? It so far hasn't done this for those rural islanders who do not have their own cars. The temporary foreign workers do not need cars because they are housed in barracks at the work sites. Refugees coming here will be housed in camps or barracks near work sites?" The Guardian, A6

Saint John is up to refugee challenge

An editorial states, "Saint John, with one of the country's highest poverty rates, is about to welcome up to 500 Syrian refugees who will need financial and moral support. Is welcoming so many outsiders in conflict with helping the city's existing poor? In the words of Mayor Mel Norton, this isn't an either/or situation. We have a duty -- and a history -- of responding to international humanitarian crises. Mayor Norton and Shilo Boucher, CEO of the Greater Saint John YMCA, have outlined some of the needs as the city prepares. The YMCA's Newcomer Connections program is acting as the co-ordinating site for the refugees. There are already signs of preparation around Saint John. The YMCA has received scores of offers of time and money. A call for Arabic translators brought 40 responses. Area churches are working on a clothing drive so every family has what it needs to face a Canadian winter. The city will offer the refugees free bus passes. The welcoming effort still needs more support. Ms. Boucher says the Y is looking to match welcoming groups of three-to-five Saint John area residents with each refugee family. These groups will help them with everyday activities -- navigating the city, opening a bank account, finding grocery stores and pharmacies, helping arrange child-care and schools." Telegraph-Journal, A8

Volunteers aid refugees more than government

An opinion piece states, "Throughout the Syrian refugee crisis, when governments have stumbled, volunteers have charged ahead. (...)Private citizens often plug the gaps that the state leaves open. In some ways, that's as it should be. But even if resettling refugees is a national project, the project begins and ends with government policy. Canada's refugee policy has holes in it that no volunteers can fill. The responsibility for repair falls to the Liberal government alone. And if it keeps one of its campaign promises on refugees, it may fail in this. It isn't difficult for refugee advocates to support several Liberal promises on refugees. Not just the promise that Prime Minister Justin Trudeau made to resettle more Syrian refugees - he vowed to change the system. If he fulfils that vow, his government will improve family reunification. It will reduce sponsorship application processing timelines. It will restore refugee health care. It will appoint only experts to the Immigration and Refugee Board. In other words, the government will do a better job of taking refugees in, and will take better care of them when they arrive. What's not to like? Only this: Canadian refugee advocates have long criticized a list that gives preferential treatment to refugees that don't come from so-called "safe countries." While a Citizenship and Immigration Canada spokesperson tells me that it's too early to comment about the government's intentions, according to the Liberal campaign platform, the government may revise the safe country list, but has no plan to rip it up." Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, C4)

Canada needs to prepare for refugees

An opinion piece states, "Canada has an opportunity to once again be known as a nation of small towns with big hearts greeting the world's first "environmental refugees". Get ready Canada for a reinvigoration of the Nanaimos, Medicine Hats, North Battlefords, Selkirks, Thunder Bays, Rimouskis, Monctons, Dartmouths, Summersides, and Ganders as choice destinations for displaced persons fleeing chaos around the world. (...)To such populations, Canada is a kind of Promised Land. Underpopulated, potentially benefitting agriculturally from the early stages of global warming, and predisposed to middle-power diplomacy and decency, Canada is the kind of country people everywhere would like to raise their children. Consider the choices a young Syrian family faces today in a Beiruti refugee camp, perhaps a repurposed concrete parking garage in the city's core. To stay is to accept an uncertain fate at best, cooking dinners on an open fire and hoping for charity or marginal employment in the city's street-side markets. Educational opportunities for children will be severely limited. To decide to move is to embrace hope of redemption in another system - in another world. To such parents, Canada is the dream destination. Facing this uncertain world, Canada needs seriously to plan for a growing tide of refugees. Expensive real estate and a high cost of living will bar some traditional recipient cities like Vancouver and Toronto from playing a key role." Red Deer Advocate, A4 (The Guardian, Daily Gleaner)

A chance for compromise

A letter to the editor states, "Re: Refugees Eschewing Canada Refuted, Dec. 4. A UN agency's discovery that fewer than 5 per cent of eligible Syrian refugees are interested in coming to Canada presents a wonderful opportunity for compromise for Liberals and their critics alike: the Liberals can hold their heads up high and truthfully say they've invited 25,000 to come to Canada, but only 1,250 of them signed up. The Liberals could then fairly claim they "can only lead the horse to water..." and bring closure to this ill-conceived election promise." Postmedia News (National Post, A9)

 Negativity carried too far

An editorial states, "It appears that we are living in an increasingly negative thinking society. After the big Liberal win in the Oct. 19 federal election, jubilation suddenly turned sour as new Prime Minister Justin Trudeau announced that he would bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the year's end. What amazes me is that the news media, instead of praising the action of the government's proposed humanitarian effort, immediately focused on the fact that this project could not be successful. And now they seem to be reveling in the fact that they were right. I want to point out to our intrepid 'investigative' reporters that every proposed project must have a deadline attached. Otherwise it would only be a wish, which might never be accomplished. Are you too small to give credit where it is due?" Cape Breton Post, A8

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

 What the throne speech tells us about the 'new' federalism

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau took primary responsibility for the health of the federation when he was sworn in last month as Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. When the Prime Minister's Office subsequently released the all-important Ministerial Mandate Letters there was no such letter regarding Intergovernmental Affairs - the PM apparently kept the details of his own mandate to himself. However, other ministers' letters addressed multiple federalism-related issues, from health and climate change to infrastructure and job creation. And while the intergovernmental script remained private, the new minister of Intergovernmental Affairs' actions spoke loud and clear. On November 23, 2015, Trudeau convened a First Ministers Meeting (FMM) in Ottawa, the first such meeting since 2009. The primary objective of this gathering was to develop a pan-Canadian framework to address climate change. The collaborative symbolism of the FMM persisted as the First Ministers accompanied the prime minister to the United Nations Climate Conference in Paris. iPolitics

OTHER / AUTRE

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

U.K. police probe 'terrorist' knife attack

Counter-terrorism police in Britain on Sunday investigated a stabbing at a London Underground station in which a man brandishing a knife injured two people and reportedly said "This is for Syria." Police arrested a 29-year-old man late Saturday and said they are treating the "violent unprovoked knife attack" at east London's Leytonstone subway station as a "terrorist incident." Richard Walton, chief of Scotland Yard's counter-terrorism command, said the decision was made because of information received from witnesses and police investigations. The force said it was searching a residential address in east London, but declined to say whether they were looking for other suspects. Associated Press (Guardian, B7, Red Deer Advocate, Edmonton Journal, StarPhoenix, Windsor Star, Gazette, Leader-Post, Toronto Sun, Times & Transcript, Whig-Standard); * Calgary Sun, A23

Obama vows to defeat terror threat

In a rare Oval Office address, U.S. President Barack Obama vowed Sunday night the United States would overcome a terror threat that has entered a "new phase" as he sought to reassure Americans shaken by recent attacks in Paris and California. "I know that after so much war, many Americans are asking whether we are confronted by a cancer that has no immediate cure," he said, speaking from a lectern in his West Wing office. The president's speech followed Wednesday's shooting in San Bernardino, Calif., that killed 14 people and wounded 21. Authorities say a couple carried out the attack and the wife pledged allegiance to the Islamic State and its leader in a Facebook post. Obama said that while there was no evidence that the shooters were directed by a terror network overseas or part of a broader plot, "the two of them had gone down the dark path of radicalization." "This was an act of terrorism designed to kill innocent people," he said in the 13-minute address. The president announced no significant shift in U.S. strategy and offered no new policy prescriptions for defeating the Islamic State, underscoring both his confidence in his current approach and the lack of easy options for countering the extremist group. He did call on Congress to tighten America's visa waiver program and to pass a new authorization for military actions underway against ISIL in Iraq and Syria. Associated Press (Record, A1, Calgary Herald, Ottawa Citizen, Red Deer Advocate, Ottawa Sun, Times & Transcript, Edmonton Journal, StarPhoenix, Windsor Star, Leader-Post, Toronto Sun, Vancouver Sun, Province, Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Hamilton Spectator, Whig-Standard); Globe and Mail, A1

Storm Desmond: army aids rescue effort as communities struggle after floods

The army has been deployed to help flood-hit communities in the north of England after Storm Desmond left at least 60,000 homes without power and many lacking clean water, as whole communities were cut off. The storm turned high streets into waterways, with fire services in Lancashire and Cumbria forced to swap their fire engines for rescue boats. Hospitals in Lancaster and Carlisle were running on generator power after electricity substations were flooded, with army trucks used as ambulances in Lancaster to ferry patients to A&E. The Guardian

 Far Right expected to triumph in French elections following Paris Attacks

In a pattern that has become depressingly predictable, the far-right is making historic gains in France in the wake of the Paris terror attacks. The country is still in a state of emergency after simultaneous terror attacks across the capital killed 130 people three weeks ago. Now, the Front National has won the opening round of regional elections, coming first in six out of 13 'super-regions' in France. This is the most successful ever performance for the FN, which has never before held the leadership of a French region. Metro UK; France 24

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PS.PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.qc.ca*

Daily Media Summary / Revue de presse quotidienne
Public Safety Canada / Sécurité publique Canada
December 7, 2015 / 7 décembre 2015

The Daily Media Summary can also be accessed through Newsdesk / La Revue de presse quotidienne peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

A

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRE

INTERNATIONAL

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Parliamentary standoffs: Let the sparring begin

No matter how much the federal parties insist they'll behave in the new House of Commons, expect some pitched battles between Liberal cabinet ministers and opposition critics. Here are a few matchups to watch during question period. THE LEADERS Justin Trudeau versus Rona Ambrose (Con.) versus Tom Mulcair (NDP) Trudeau's strength was never in the Commons, where he laboured in the shadow of Mulcair when it came to holding the last government's feet to the fire. But the new prime minister has set a torrid pace since his Oct. 19 election victory, and vows to continue his "sunny ways" approach to politics (...). Public Safety: Ralph Goodale versus Erin O'Toole (Con.) versus Randall Garrison (NDP) Goodale is unflappable, having served under three prime ministers (one of whom was Pierre Trudeau). He'll bring a firm hand to a hectic and high-profile portfolio, ranging from security services to refugee screening to the promised overhaul of the Conservatives' national security Bill C-51. O'Toole cut his chops at parliamentary debating beginning last January when he replaced the failing Julian Fantino as minister of veteran affairs. Soon after the election, the former air force officer and lawyer wrote to his caucus colleagues saying, "Our goal must be to challenge the Liberals from day one." Garrison has been an informed, outspoken and combative opposition voice. His growing knowledge of Canada's national security apparatus should make him an effective critic. Postmedia News (Windsor Star, NP3, StarPheonix, Leader-Post, Gazette, Ottawa Citizen, National Post, Edmonton Journal)

 Liberal MPs rise up food chain as parliamentary secretaries

Among the 35 parliamentary secretaries appointed by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau last week are new faces and familiar ones: star candidates from the last election as well as returning MPs who now may be a step closer to becoming ministers (...) First elected to the House in 1997, Mr. McKay, a lawyer, was the parl-sec to then-Finance minister Ralph Goodale (Regina-Wascana, Sask.) in Paul Martin's Liberal government. He's already a Privy Councillor, thanks to former Prime Minister Martin's singular practice of including parliamentary secretaries in that august body. Hill Times

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

 Nearly 35,000 homes without power as wind and rain lash B.C.'s south coast

Strong winds whipped through Vancouver Island and Metro Vancouver Sunday evening, sparking weather warnings and downing power lines across the south coast. Up to 50 millimetres of rain was forecast for Howe Sound and Metro Vancouver's North Shore as a second Pacific storm pressed westward over Vancouver Island. The downpour was expected to last until Monday morning. About 25,000 customers in cities throughout the Lower Mainland and another 8,200 on Vancouver Island were without power by 8:30 p.m., according to BC Hydro. Many of the outages happened shortly after 7 p.m. when a series of strong gusts blew into the region. Environment Canada issued wind warnings for Metro Vancouver and Howe Sound, forecasting winds of up to 70 km/h and gusts of as much as 90 km/h. Vancouver Sun; The Province; Canadian Press (The Province)

 Railroads quash rules after 2012 derailments

A pair of train derailments in 2012 that killed two people in Maryland and triggered a fiery explosion in Ohio exposed a little-known and unsettling truth about railroads in the U.S. and Canada: No rules govern when rail becomes too worn down to be used for hauling hazardous chemicals, thousands of tons of freight or myriad other products on almost 170,000 miles of track. U.S. transportation officials moved to establish universal standards for when such steel gets replaced, but resistance from major freight railroads killed that bid, according to Associated Press interviews with U.S. and Canadian transportation officials, industry representatives and safety investigators. Now, following yet another major accident linked to worn-out rails - 27 tanker cars carrying crude oil that derailed and exploded in West Virginia earlier this year - regulators are reviving the prospect of new rules for worn rails and vowing they won't allow the industry to sideline their efforts. "We try to look at absolutely every place where we can affect and improve safety," said Federal Railroad Administrator Sarah Feinberg. "Track generally is the place that we're focusing at the moment, and it's clearly overdue. Rail head wear is one place in particular that we feel like needs to be addressed as soon as possible." Associated Press (Red Deer Advocate, B10)

 Sick of the weather? blame el nino

The El Nino weather phenomenon, which has impacted millions around the world this year and helped drive the huge hurricanes that battered Mexico's Pacific coast, is forecast to continue through the winter and become one of the strongest on record (...) El Nino is the warm phase of a seven-year weather cycle that drives sea-surface temperatures in the tropical eastern Pacific Ocean. It is associated with destructive flooding along the west coast of South America and severe hurricanes farther north along the Pacific coast. El Nino tends to bring mild, dry winters to the Pacific northwest but cold, snowy winters to the southern U.S. and Atlantic seaboard. National Post, A2 (Leader-Post, Financial Post)

 Solemn anniversary

Ken Hynes walked through the courtyard of Halifax's Citadel Hill on Sunday towards the exact spot his grandfather stood 98 years ago the moment two ships collided in the narrows of the Halifax harbour, causing a massive explosion that left part of the Nova Scotia capital in ruins. Under partly cloudy skies, Hynes remarked that the weather was similar on Dec. 6, 1917, when the French cargo ship SS Mont-Blanc, loaded with explosives, collided with the Norwegian vessel SS Imo, creating the largest man-made explosion prior to the development of nuclear weapons. Hynes, a retired army major and curator of the Army Museum at Citadel Hill, imagined his 18-year-old grandfather Fletcher Manchester Bartlett watching as a blast wave swept over the fortress near the harbour in the city's downtown, wondering if the Germans had attacked. Canadian Press (The Guardian, B4; Calgary Sun)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Extremists could use peaceful demonstrations as cover

Intelligence officials are concerned that extremists might infiltrate peaceful anti-petroleum protests to "incite violence," a newly disclosed assessment indicates. The federal analysis of threats to the passenger rail system introduces a new twist to the often tense debate over state scrutiny of environmental demonstrators - that otherwise harmless activists might unwittingly harbour dangerous terrorists. The assertion - contained in a Transport Canada intelligence report - led one defender of civil liberties to ask whether there is evidence to support it. "I do think it's dangerous to start painting activism as a potential cover for terrorist activities," said Cara Zwibel, director of the fundamental freedoms program at the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. The Canadian Press recently obtained a copy of the six-page, November 2014 analysis by Transport's security intelligence assessment branch through the Access to Information Act. Overall, the assessment warns that surface transportation such as passenger rail is "a favoured target of terrorists" because attackers can inflict mass casualties, fear and economic harm using simple tactics - particularly improvised explosive devices. It points to the 2004 Madrid and 2005 London bombings as well as a more recent, failed plot to derail a Via Rail passenger train - all led or supported by al-Qaida. Future plots against passenger rail in Canada are possible given the emphasis on "solo jihad" by al-Qaida and the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, past statements from their members and supporters, and the ease with which an attack could be carried out, the report says. Canadian Press (Red Deer Advocate, A1, Guardian, Record, Ottawa Sun, Ottawa Citizen, Whig-Standard, Toronto Star, Hamilton Spectator, Times & Transcript, Telegraph-Journal); La Presse Canadienne (Acadie Nouvelle, 17)

Crainte d'une infiltration d'extrémistes

Des hauts fonctionnaires craignent que des extrémistes se glissent dans des manifestations contre la construction de pipelines, l'exploitation des sables bitumineux ou le transport du pétrole par train afin d'encourager la violence, indique un rapport récemment dévoilé. Le document rédigé par le service du renseignement de sécurité de Transports Canada, qui porte sur une analyse des menaces contre les services ferroviaires voyageurs, donne une nouvelle tournure au débat concernant la surveillance dont font l'objet les manifestants écologistes par l'État en laissant entendre que des activistes pacifiques pourraient involontairement accueillir dans leurs rangs des terroristes. Cara Zwibel, directrice du programme des libertés fondamentales pour l'Association canadienne des libertés civiles, a toutefois remis cette affirmation en question, doutant que le ministère ait des preuves pour étayer ses dires. Selon elle, il est dangereux de présenter le militantisme actif comme une couverture potentielle pour des activités terroristes. La Presse Canadienne a obtenu copie du rapport de six pages datant de novembre 2014 en vertu de la Loi sur l'accès à l'information. De manière générale, l'analyse avise les autorités que le transport de surface comme les services ferroviaires voyageurs compte parmi les cibles préférées des terroristes parce que les attaquants peuvent faire un grand nombre de victimes, semer la peur et nuire à l'économie en utilisant des tactiques simples, comme les engins explosifs de fabrication. La Presse Canadienne (Le Droit, 19, La Presse)

 Deadly Dollars

Canada's new prime minister has made an international commitment to tackle terrorist financing but the country is failing to bring such cases to court, some experts say. Senator Daniel Lang, who led a National Security and Defence Committee study into the terrorism threat in Canada, said police and justice officials have received almost 700 reliable reports of suspected terrorist financing in the country during recent years. The committee also heard from Canada Revenue Agency that the agency had revoked the charitable status of eight charities over links to terrorism, he said (...) Money flowing into the country to fund efforts to radicalize Canadians is as dangerous as money headed out to fund terrorist organizations abroad. Sources for the money are wide-ranging - everything from criminal activities to "charitable" fundraising to a radical's maxed-out credit card before departure to fight in foreign lands. Darren Gibb, of the Financial Transactions and Reports Analysis Centre of Canada (FINTRAC), a financial intelligence unit with a mandate to deter money laundering and financing of terrorist activities, said the organization provides information to police and other authorities to aid in investigations. Toronto Sun, A4 (Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun)

* Muslim women stage hijab event

Local Muslim women are joining with others across the country to shed light on why they wear the hijab with the #JeSuisHijabi campaign. The Ahmadiyya Muslim Women's Association Edmonton held an open house at the Baitul Hadi mosque at 7005 98 Avenue on Sunday and plan to hold "try on a hijab" events at the University of Alberta Student's Union building on Monday from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. and at Telus building at 10020 100 Street from 9 a.m. to noon. Nudrat Mansoor says she respects Canadian values and is asking for the same respect (...) Following terrorist attacks in Paris on Nov. 13 and in San Bernardino, California on Wednesday, discrimination became worse. Mansoor says she has experienced cases where she is sitting on the LRT and people move to avoid sitting next to her. She said she wants to promote peace and harmony between everyone. "It's my choice to wear a hijab and I think I should be respected for that," Mansoor said. She added terrorism has no religion and it's up to everyone to work together to promote peace and respect. "Acceptance and diversity are core Canadian values that we should strive to embrace and live by. This campaign allows for Canadians to come together and engage in peaceful public dialogue to foster a better understanding of the Islamic," Edmonton Sun, A8 (Calgary Sun, A21)

* Tory MP Opposes Bill C-51 Changes

The recent terrorist attack in Paris and mass shooting in southern California have authorities around the world on high alert, and are causing concern here at home. During the federal election campaign, the Liberals and New Democrats pledged to reopen Bill C51, which is designed to safeguard Canadians against the possibility of such attacks. The legislation was one of the major achievements of the former Conservative government, and the Tory MP for Huron-Bruce says now is not the time for second thoughts. Ben Lobb points to action displayed by French authorities immediately after the Paris attacks, that allowed them to deal with most of the attackers quickly. He tells Bayshore Broadcasting News that the anti-terror legislation allows a broad range of federal agencies to work together in assessing potential terror threats against Canada. Lobb explains that it only makes sense for agencies like the military, the RCMP, C-SIS and Transport Canada to cooperate in the face of any threats. The anti-terror legislation was hotly discussed at times in nine Huron-Bruce all-candidates' meetings during the federal election campaign. Bayshore Broadcasting News

Un homme déconnecté

Un article d'opinion dit "Mi-figue mi-raisin, richard Martineau me disait récemment que lui et moi sommes des hommes du 20e siècle, alors que Justin Trudeau est un homme du 21e siècle. Je comprends ce que Richard voulait dire. Faites cependant un test autour de vous. Demandez aux gens sur quoi repose au juste la «modernité» de Justin Trudeau. Invariablement, on vous parlera de choses qui ont rapport avec son image: ses cheveux, la cravate dénouée, son goût pour les selfies, son aisance en public, son allure générale décontractée (...) C'est indiscutablement, même si c'est hautement déplaisant, la lutte au terrorisme et la question de notre sécurité. Au cas où vous ne l'auriez pas remarqué, des gens nous ont déclaré la guerre et tuent des innocents. Hier, le président Obama s'est solennellement adressé au peuple américain. L'Allemagne, dont la réticence à participer à des opérations militaires a des causes historiques, engagera six avions Tornado, une frégate et 1200 hommes en Syrie. La Grande-Bretagne vient de procéder à ses premières frappes en Syrie. Même les petits Pays-Bas, un joueur modeste, se font demander par la France et la Grande-Bretagne de faire leur part. Le président François Hollande, grandi par l'épreuve, dit que la France sera «implacable», sans renoncer pour autant à ses valeurs. Pendant ce temps, que fait Justin Trudeau? Il hésite, il tergiverse, il dit des banalités, il soigne son image. Dans le Discours du trône, un banal et maigrelet passage sur la lutte contre le terrorisme était noyé dans une liste d'épicerie de bons sentiments." Journal de Montréal, 32 (Journal de Québec)

* 1989 Massacre was Terrorism

An opinion piece states "On Dec. 6, Canadians observe the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women, wearing white ribbons in commemoration of the Montreal Massacre. On Dec. 6, 1989, a lone gunman carried out a rampage shooting at the École Polytechnique engineering school in Montreal, Quebec. Marc Lépine killed 14 people and injured 14 others before taking his own life. He left a suicide note claiming "political reasons" for attacking women and feminism, which he blamed for ruining his life. He separated men from women before opening fire in a classroom. All of the 14 people he killed were women. The way such crimes are labelled has changed greatly since 1989. At the time of the attack, most Canadians had never heard of "lone wolf" terrorism. The term "terrorist" was generally reserved for urban guerrillas and paramilitary extremists. The Montreal Massacre was largely described as a "crime" or a "tragedy" in newspapers and in official statements. Yet in 2015, we live a world where a single person can start a shootout on Parliament Hill, or massacre youths at a camp in Norway, in the service of fringe political ideologies. In this context, it is time to reevaluate the Montreal Massacre as a deliberate, theatrical act of violence targeted against civilians and driven by extremist politics: one of the worst terrorist attacks Canada has ever endured. To be sure, the idea that attacks against women or feminists are "political enough" to constitute terrorism is novel. In a post-9/11 world, people have become accustomed to terrorism driven by more "conventional" political and religious goals: shifts in western foreign policy, or silencing offensive cartoonists. Yet it is generally understood that violence driven by hatred for particular ethnicities or political groups can constitute terrorism. It is no great leap to broaden that understanding to include violence driven by hatred of women or of feminism." Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, C3)

 To rein in terror, world must stop arms proliferation

An opinion piece states "Terrorism is perpetrated by socio/psychopaths of all stripes and beliefs. These are people so immersed in evangelical beliefs, some religion-based and others secular-based, that they push beyond any form of rational consideration to become entirely convinced that their desired ends justify use of any means. Consequently, all empathy is driven from their thinking and behaviour, enabling them to plan and complete the most horrific of acts by dehumanizing their victims. Unfortunately, all societies have to live with such persons or groups. Think mass killers of all sorts, not just jihadists. What we can do, practically, is contain and limit their damage and, in so doing, enhance our sense of personal security and freedom. In the wake of the Paris outrage, the French armed forces are lashing out with all the high technology at their disposal and the usual suspects are beating their collective chests demanding more security and, unbelievably, seeming to blame this and possible future attacks on the pathetic Syrian refugees fleeing the very violence the West hopes to prevent." Chronicle-Herald

 Obama no cure for terroritis

An opinion piece states "You are still far more likely to be killed by lightning than by terrorists. Fifty Americans and 10 Canadians are fatally zapped in an average year. But no U.S. president has ever addressed his nation from the Oval Office on the growing threat of thunderstorms. Nor do we walk the street or ride the subway or stroll the mall glancing about for suspicious electrical fields. So why is terrorism so much scarier? Why do we suffer from terroritis? The difference, of course, is that lightning is known. It is natural. It is cause and effect. If you sit under a lone tree in a storm, or play the next hole, or kayak on open water, or stand in the open with a three-metre metal pole, you are quite likely to get fried. So you don't do those stupid things." Toronto Sun (2015-12-06)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

 U.S.-Canada border called 'significant' terrorist pathway | Washington Examiner

The U.S.-Canada border is the likely path for terrorists to invade the country, according to top national security experts and Congress' most comprehensive review of America's 19,000 miles of coasts and land borders. "The nexus between known or suspected terrorists in eastern Canada and the northern parts of the U.S. represent [sic] a significant national security threat," said a new report from the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, a conclusion reached as Canada decided to settle 25,000 Syrian refugees by March. Washington Examiner (2015-12-06)

 Labour shortage in Banff and Lake Louise a challenge for tourism

Businesses in Banff and Lake Louise are seeing a surge in tourism thanks to the low Canadian dollar, but they're struggling to find enough workers to meet the demand. Darren Reeder is the executive director of Banff & Lake Louise Hospitality Association and says the labour shortage is widespread in the tourism industry, according to a recent survey of area businesses. (...) One of the major issues is changes to the federal temporary foreign worker program brought in by the former Conservative government, including increased administrative fees for hiring foreign workers, and restrictions on working holiday visas that prevent workers from returning each year. That last restriction, limiting workers to one two-year stint, is having an effect at local ski hills where Australian accents often outnumber local dialects. "That's pretty concerning ... and more importantly they are some of our most important brand ambassadors. They are the people that go home and talk about our values on the environment, about the economy," said Reeder. CBC News (2015-12-06)

* Plus d'une dizaine de personnes radicalisées dans les prisons fédérales

Selon des documents datant de mars 2015, obtenus de Service correctionnel Canada (SCC) à la suite d'une demande d'accès à l'information, il y a « onze délinquants coupables d'infractions liées au terrorisme » dans les prisons fédérales. Ils purgent des peines allant de 10 ans à l'emprisonnement à vie et la majorité d'entre eux est incarcérée dans un établissement à sécurité maximale. À cela s'ajoutent des « personnes d'intérêt » qui « sont possiblement radicalisées » ou qui « sont considérées comme posant une menace pour la sécurité nationale ». Le SCC ne donne toutefois pas de chiffres précis pour cette catégorie de détenus « radicalisés ». Mais la présence de ces personnes « d'intérêt » soulève des inquiétudes, affirme Herman Debarice Okomba, le directeur du Centre de prévention de la radicalisation menant à la violence à Montréal. (...) Pour identifier les personnes radicalisées, le SCC recueille des informations à l'intérieur des prisons et se fie aussi à la GRC, au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité ou encore de l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada. Les personnes reconnues coupables d'infractions en vertu de la « Loi antiterroriste » sont aussi identifiées comme « délinquants radicalisés ». Radio-Canada (2015-12-06)

* Drug prices expected to jump as result of trade deal

The intellectual-property provisions in the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement will drive up global drug prices and make it harder to treat diseases in developing countries, Médecins sans Frontières (Doctors Without Borders) says. A month after the final text of the TPP was released, the medical humanitarian organization has completed its analysis of the portions of the massive trade pact that will affect drug costs. Despite changes from earlier leaked versions of the text, there are still serious problems, Judit Rius, MSF's U.S. legal policy adviser, said. "This is catastrophic. This is very negative. The impact is going to be at multiple levels," Ms. Rius said in an interview. Globe and Mail, B1

CYBER SECURITY / CYBERSÉCURITÉ

* Zombies informatiques neutralisés

Le CRTC a récemment exécuté un mandat à Toronto pour le retrait d'un serveur de commande et de contrôle de la famille de maliciels Win32/Dorkbot. Ces maliciels ont infecté au-delà d'un million d'ordinateurs personnels dans plus de 190 pays, a précisé le Conseil de la radiodiffusion et des télécommunications canadiennes (CRTC). « Ces réseaux de zombies, qui sont très dangereux, sont utilisés aux fins d'activités illégales et peuvent mener au vol d'identité et à la fraude. Cette intervention montre que les partenariats entre les organismes d'application de la loi à l'échelle nationale et internationale sont essentiels en vue de lutter contre les cybermenaces transnationales », a indiqué Manon Bombardier, cadre en chef de Conformité et enquêtes du CRTC. (...) Dorkbot se propage au moyen d'une clé USB, des programmes de messagerie instantanée et des réseaux sociaux. Une fois qu'on a porté atteinte à l'intégrité d'un ordinateur, on peut lui ordonner de voler les mots de passe pour effectuer des transactions bancaires et les paiements en ligne. Il est aussi possible de télécharger et installer des maliciels dangereux et s'unir à d'autres ordinateurs infectés pour expédier des demandes multiples à un serveur en vue de dépasser sa capacité de réponse. Cette situation est aussi connue comme une attaque par déni de service. Le mandat a été exécuté conformément à la Loi canadienne antipourriel. Aux fins de cette enquête, le CRTC a collaboré avec plusieurs partenaires, dont le Federal Bureau of Investigation, Europol, Interpol, Microsoft inc., la Gendarmerie royale du Canada, Sécurité publique Canada et le Centre canadien de réponse aux incidents cybernétiques. Presse Canadienne (Journal Montréal, 38)

* Who is listening as your children talk to their toys?

Your daughter rips open the wrapping paper and screams with excitement - it's Talk To Me Tammy! After connecting the doll to your home's wireless network through a smartphone app, she and Tammy start chatting. Tammy tells her jokes, quizzes her on some math questions and says her favourite colour is pink. She asks your daughter lots of questions about her likes and dislikes, hopes and dreams, and family and friends. The next day, you notice advertisements for products your daughter told Tammy she wants on your Facebook page. That's because buried in Tammy's terms of service - which you didn't read - was a clause authorizing the toy company to sell the data Tammy collects to marketers. Meanwhile, hackers who don't want to pay the toy company for your daughter's valuable data are working on a way to access it for free. Financial Post (Edmonton Journal, B6; Calgary Herald)

 After Paris Attacks, French Cops Want to Block Tor and Forbid Free Wi-Fi

After the recent Paris terror attacks, French law enforcement wants to have several powers added to a proposed law, including the move to forbid and block the use of the Tor anonymity network, according to an internal document from the Ministry of Interior seen by French newspaper Le Monde. That document talks about two proposed pieces of legislation, one around the state of emergency, and the other concerning counter-terrorism. Regarding the former, French law enforcement wish to "forbid free and shared wi-fi connections" during a state of emergency. This comes from a police opinion included in the document: the reason being that it is apparently difficult to track individuals who use public wi-fi networks. As the latter, law enforcement would like "to block or forbid communications of the Tor network." Motherboard (2015-12-06)

 NSA's shuttered program was 'a sacrificial lamb' in U.S. mass surveillance

The National Security Agency in the United States may have shuttered its controversial bulk phone record collection program, but that doesn't mean people living in that country suddenly have their communications free from government scrutiny... Snowden also revealed that Canada's electronic spy agency tracks millions of downloads daily by people around the world, including Canadians. While it's hard to know much about the Canadian Security Establishment because of the secrecy surrounding the agency, there is "evidence of the same kind of indiscriminate surveillance as the NSA engages in," says David Lyon, the director of Queen's University's surveillance studies centre and author of Surveillance after Snowden. CBC News (2015-12-06)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Man escapes custody in N.S. while being transferred to police van

Police in Nova Scotia searching for a man they say escaped custody while being transferred to a sheriff's van in the parking lot of the Truro Justice Centre. Nova Scotia justice officials say Marc Joseph Pellerin, 43, was awaiting a court appearance on a variety of charges, including theft of a motor vehicle, theft over $5,000, break and enter, possession of stolen property, evading police, unsafe storage of a firearm and resisting arrest. The Moncton man was being transferred from Shediac Jail in New Brunswick to Halifax for a Monday court appearance. Authorities say Pellerin had previously escaped a police vehicle in May. Fred Hildebrand, of Nova Scotia's Department of Justice says Truro Police, the RCMP and Sheriff Services are searching for the subject. Postmedia (Daily Gleaner, B3)

Trudeau among those marking solemn occasion

Mourners gathered in Vancouver and other Canadian cities on Sunday to mark the 26th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre, where 14 women were shot to death at the Ecole Polytechnique. In Montreal, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and a small crowd listened as the names of the victims were read aloud, silhouetted by 14 beacons of light projected into the night sky in memory of the victims. Trudeau did not address the crowd, but said afterward the anniversary is not only a time to remember the events of the massacre, but also to make promises. He said his personal pledge was "to never forget, and to do everything I can to ensure that never again." Trudeau released a statement on the massacre Sunday restating the Liberal government's promise to launch an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women and to introduce legislation to provide greater support for survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault. "We all have an important role to play in stopping violence against women and girls, and in denouncing misogyny in all its forms," the statement read. "Like all parents, I want my daughter to grow up in a safe community and a safe world." Representatives of women's and aboriginal rights groups reminded the public that women in Canada still face violence. "In 2015, women are still victims of violence, just because they're women," said Carole Benjamin, a spokesperson for the event. Postmedia (Province, A6, Winnipeg Sun, London Free Press, Calgary Sun, Kingston Whig-Standard, Hamilton Spectator, Red Deer Advocate, Chronicle Herald); Waterloo Regional Record; Gazette; * Globe and Mail, A8

RCMP officer remembers Montreal losses

RCMP Sgt. Bert Paquet vividly recalls the day 14 women were murdered at the University of Montreal's Ecole Polytechnique 26 years ago. "I was actually in the pavilion next door to where it happened," the Manitoba RCMP media spokesperson said Sunday. "I was studying criminology in Montreal and we heard over the intercom for students to leave the area immediately and in a certain direction." Paquet had not heard the shots fired that fatal day but the stunning news quickly spread across campus. "It was just surreal," Paquet said on the National Day of Remembrance and Violence Against Women. "Even going back to school a couple of days later was different. It changes you. It changes the people around you, and you look at people around you differently as well." But deciding to become an RCMP officer was not the result of that tragedy and how close he was to it. Rather, meeting some RCMP officers later "planted the bug," he said. But Paquet, who was born in Montreal, will not soon forget that day. "It's a sad, sad story that did not need to happen," said Paquet, 50. "And it cost the lives of those promising young women." The RCMP maintain a strong presence whenever vigils for murdered women are held and continue to investigate unsolved ones under Project Devote. Postmedia Network (Winnipeg Sun)

RCMP seek pharmacy burglars

Crime Stoppers and Southeast District RCMP's Sackville Detachment are trying to identify two men responsible for a break, enter and theft at a Port Elgin pharmacy last year. On Nov. 27, 2014, at approximately 3 a.m., two men wearing white balaclavas entered the Port Elgin Village Pharmacy by breaking through the front entrance. Once inside, the burglars stole an undisclosed quantity of medication. The investigators determined through the security video that both intruders were Caucasian men with medium builds. One man was wearing a white suit that is commonly worn on construction sites and in fish plants. The other was wearing a black hoodie. The security footage shows them leaving the scene in a light-coloured Toyota 4Runner. Postmedia Network (Times & Transcript, A6); Record, A1

Victoria's chief of police apologizes for behaviour

Victoria's chief of police says he's "sorry and humiliated" after a police-board investigation found online messages he sent to another officer's wife were inappropriate. Chief Frank Elsner took the Victoria Police Department's helm in January, 2014, after four years as chief of police in Sudbury. But Barbara Desjardins, mayor of Esquimalt and head of the Victoria police board, said Sunday the board was notified about a concern involving the chief during the summer. Ms. Desjardins said she could not disclose who raised the concern, but the board hired a lawyer to investigate. The mayor said the investigation wrapped up a couple of weeks ago and a report found the chief's use of direct Twitter messages to the officer's wife "was inappropriate." The mayor said she could not disclose if the chief was disciplined, but said he will remain in his role with the board's "full confidence." "Our chief has done some amazing things in the last two years," she said in an interview. "Yes, this was something that the chief admits he's ashamed of. But the board feels that within the report, the process, we've dealt with it and they feel that the good work that the chief has done ... they're hopeful that that continues." Chief Elsner, in a written statement, said he "should not have engaged in the direct messages in the first place and for that, I take complete responsibility." "Our citizens place a significant amount of confidence and trust in their police service," he wrote. Globe and Mail; * Postmedia Network (Province, A6, Vancouver Sun)

Can Trudeau re-set Canada's relationship with First Nations?

Throughout the election campaign, Justin Trudeau promised "real change". Arguably, no segment of Canadian society is more in need of that change than Canada's Indigenous peoples, who fall well below national standards on socio-economic indicators. The change Trudeau referenced during his campaign was evident the day his cabinet was sworn into office. Two Indigenous MPs were selected as cabinet ministers: Jody Wilson-Raybould was appointed Justice minister and Hunter Tootoo became the minister of Fisheries and the Canadian Coast Guard. This signalled to many Indigenous voters that the prime minister's commitment to reconciliation was sincere. His comments in the Speech from the Throne and his mandate letter to Carolyn Bennett, the minister of Indigenous and Northern Affairs, further illustrates his commitment to renewing the relationship between Canada and Indigenous peoples. In both, he speaks of the need to engage in a nation-to-nation process in an effort to make real progress on the issues identified as being most important to First Nations, the Métis Nation and Inuit communities. These issues are extensive and include reforms in the areas of rights recognition, housing, employment, health and mental health care, community safety and policing, child welfare and education. Of particular significance is the prime minister's commitment to implementing all 94 recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on residential schools, many of which are far-reaching. Specifically, he calls on the minister to implement the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP). Since the adoption of UNDRIP in September 2007, Indigenous Canadians have been calling for the recognition of the human rights standards articulated within it. However, it wasn't until November 2010 that Canada actually decided to endorse UNDRIP and, even then, it did so with express limitations. iPolitics

Injured woman found on gravel road at Samson Cree Nation

RCMP are releasing few details about an injured female found on a gravel road near the Samson Cree Nation on Sunday morning. The Maskwacis RCMP found her on the road in a rural area after receiving a call about a "seriously injured female." The female was taken to hospital and an RCMP news release stated "the full extent of her injuries is not known at this time." RCMP did not release the age of the unidentified female, except to say she was "described as being older than a child." RCMP are expected to release more information as the investigation progresses. The Samson Cree Nation is roughly 100 kilometres south of Edmonton. Postmedia Network (Edmonton Journal)

Victoria police chief 'humiliated beyond words' over inappropriate Twitter messages

Victoria's police chief says he's ashamed and humiliated by his own actions after exchanging inappropriate messages with the wife of a subordinate officer. Frank Elsner told The Vancouver Sun on Sunday he was the subject of a recent internal police board investigation over his conduct, but has emerged with the continued confidence of the board and intends to address the department and continue leading the force. "I'm humiliated beyond words," he said. He said he's also spoken to his officer, whose wife was involved, and his family about the incident. "I'm ashamed of my actions," said Elsner. "I'm better than that. I know better than that. And I think part of this, the learning opportunity, is that you stand up and tell the truth and learn from it and move on." Elsner has led the Victoria force for almost two years. He's married with two daughters, and said his wife has been fully aware of what happened. In September, he said the civilian police board became aware of an allegation against him. "An allegation was made against me that based on direct messages off of Twitter that I had an inappropriate relationship with a female. The board notified me of that and they hired an independent lawyer to do the investigation. The investigation was completed and last week I was notified and they found that there was no inappropriate relationship. However, I should not have engaged in the direct messages in the first place and I fully agree." Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, Province, Times Colonist)

 Escapee eludes police capture

Canada-wide warrant issued after prisoner runs away from guards in Truro on Friday. A Canada-wide warrant has been issued for the New Brunswick prisoner who escaped from guards Friday afternoon at the Truro Justice Centre. Marc Joseph Pellerin ran off while being transferred from one sheriff services vehicle to another at about 5:45 p.m. and has not been seen since. "No news outside of that we have a Canada-wide warrant for him," Truro Police Service Insp. Rob Hearn said Sunday afternoon. "I can't get into the details of the investigation, obviously, but we are following any leads, and hopefully he'll be picked up soon." In a news conference Saturday, the director of sheriff services with the provincial Justice Department said that Pellerin, described as five-foot-seven and 155 pounds, was not handcuffed or shackled during the transfer that occurred under the watch of four guards in the parking lot behind the Prince Street justice centre. "Normally, in a transfer, he would have the shackles and the handcuffs on all the time," Fred Hildebrand said. "That's just the routine. Officers are trained to do that, and that's what they do." But the routine was not followed and Pellerin escaped on foot and is still on the lam. "We have to investigate," Hildebrand said of why the sheriff services officers did not follow protocol. "We consider it very serious. We have to investigate to get the facts before we can determine exactly what happened." Pellerin was being transferred from a jail in Shediac, N.B., to one in Dartmouth, from where he was to appear in a Halifax court Monday on property-related charges. Postmedia Network (Chronicle Herald, A7)

 Technology transforming Saskatchewan's courts

From flip charts and overhead projectors of years past to iPads and pop-up monitors of today, technology is transforming Saskatchewan's courtrooms. Paper gave way to pixels at a Regina jury trial earlier this year when the attention of jurors and witnesses was drawn to photos reflected on iPads and television screens - instead of the usual paper photo booklets. It doesn't seem like such a monumental leap in a society immersed in instant, digital images, but the trial, which ended with Adam Riley Cyr convicted of murder, was a courtroom first. "It worked really well," said Adam Breker, co-Crown prosecutor on the case, adding everyone was on the same page, and jurors couldn't get distracted flipping ahead. "The witness is scrolling through the photos, and the jurors can all see ... on the TV exactly what the witness is talking about." The change from booklets to iPads was initiated by the Regina Police Service identification section. "I saw how much work and money was put into the photo books for court," said Sgt. Dean Yadlowski, who heads the unit. Typically in a jury trial, some nine or more photo books are prepared. On a major case, each book can easily contain 100 or more photos, so the costs can climb to $2,000 for paper alone. At times, a last-minute deal meant it was all for naught, and the books were simply shredded. Yadlowski looked for a solution. Today, the Regina Police Service has two kits, each containing five iPads. "It only took one or two of those major files by the time the iPads started paying for themselves," said Yadlowski. He also sees a use beyond photos, for example, displaying video exhibits, diagrams or other documents. Since the Cyr trial, a few more hearings have used iPads. But Yadlowski notes they're not going to replace paper completely. A hard copy photo book is still placed into evidence for posterity. And, with only two iPad kits that can be tied up for several days or weeks at a time, they aren't suited to every trial. Fraud cases have also evolved, as evidenced by this year's Regina trial for Steven Weeres, convicted in an extensive investment scheme. Evidence showing how money moved from deposits, through bank account to withdrawals and, in some cases, to how it was spent was traced through computerized spreadsheets embedded with hyperlinks to the corresponding bank documents. Prosecutor Dana Brule said the digitized evidence made it much simpler for witnesses who didn't have to juggle and leaf through multiple binders of documents. "It made it more logical," he added. Again, the change was largely driven by a police agency, since it was RCMP software that created the spreadsheet and hyperlinks. Postmedia Network (Leader-Post, A3)

 Terrorist financing cases not prosecuted

An opinion piece by Antonella Artuso, Antonella Artuso Queens Park Bureau Chief states, "Canada's new prime minister has made an international commitment to tackle terrorist financing but the country is failing to bring such cases to court, some experts say. Senator Daniel Lang, who led a National Security and Defence Committee study into the terrorism threat in Canada, said police and justice officials have received almost 700 reliable reports of suspected terrorist financing in the country during recent years. The committee also heard from Canada Revenue Agency that the agency had revoked the charitable status of eight charities over links to terrorism, he said. "And that information, the way I understand it, was brought to the attention of the RCMP, and we have had I believe one charge since 2001," Lang said. "The question that has to be asked is if we have the information, and credible information obviously, there is terrorist financing going on in this country ... why aren't there any charges brought forward?" In Turkey last month, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau committed to a joint G20 statement to tackle "the financing channels of terrorism" by such means as freezing terrorists' assets and criminalizing terrorist financing. A report to the G20 -- prepared by the Financial Action Task Force in November -- said that almost all jurisdictions have criminalized terrorist financing as a distinct offence. "But relatively few jurisdictions have obtained convictions for terrorist financing," the report says. The bulk of terrorist funds are not put toward attacks but instead used for organizational support such as recruitment, training, living costs, travel and, in the case of foreign terrorist fighters, maintaining a legitimate public face, the report says". Postmedia Network (Ottawa Sun, Toronto Sun)

 Curbing the use of police background checks

More knowledge isn't always good. In an anxious world where intrusive police checks have become an increasingly common way of verifying the character of a job applicant or volunteer, the hunt for ever more background information too often damages innocent people and compromises civil liberties. Police databases are full of questionable knowledge acquired in the course of investigations, or simply the residue of a chance 911 call, which can be systematically used against people who have done no harm. Safety concerns are paramount when it comes to those working closely with the young and vulnerable.

But they need to be balanced against the privacy rights of people whose lives shouldn't be jeopardized because of minor or irrelevant brushes with the record-keepers of law enforcement. The government of Ontario has wisely decided to limit the kind of information police can disclose, in legislation that standardizes the wayward policies previously used for background checks across the province. The aim of the new law is that only criminal conviction records are to be passed on to potential employers and groups that recruit volunteers. The need for reform was hammered home by the unanimous, all-party vote in favour of the bill. In some cases, people had lost jobs because police passed on phone records pointing to a suicide attempt, or were disqualified as a volunteer because they were listed as a witness to a crime, or merely questioned in an investigation. Unproven allegations took on the taint of credibility simply by being revived and relayed. Having assumed the supreme power to disrupt an individual's educational and vocational prospects, police decision-makers could retrieve information about charges that had been withdrawn decades before and pass it on as if it were useful, worrying knowledge. Non-conviction records, such as dismissed charges, can still be disclosed in limited circumstances, for positions where children, seniors and other vulnerable people are involved. It is crucial that this discretionary power be limited and not abused. Information overreach remains problematic, including at Canada's borders, where police agencies continue to share imperfect knowledge about private lives. In the wake of Ontario's encouraging reforms, this practice needs closer security. Globe and Mail

 Pot can help vets

A former member of Canada's elite counter-terrorism unit has emerged from the shadows to promote medical marijuana for ailing veterans. Kevin Whitenect hopes that his message promoting medical cannabis will bring hope to those former soldiers dealing with emotional or physical pain as well as reduce the stigma surrounding its use. "I saw a value for veterans," said Whitenect, who spent most of his 17 years in the Canadian Forces with the Ottawa-based Joint Task Force 2 counter-terrorism unit. "I started speaking with veterans who were using (medical cannabis) and started hearing the great stories about how it is getting them off the mind-numbing narcotics they are being issued." Whitenect is working as a medical marijuana "ambassador" for CannaConnect, a Toronto-based company that acts as a middleman to bring together licensed medicinal marijuana producers, doctors, and users. Whitenect, who runs his own private security company in Toronto, isn't receiving any payment for his advocacy. Nor does he use marijuana himself. But over the years, he has encountered a number of serving and retired military personnel who are dealing with both post-traumatic stress disorders as well as pain from physical injuries. "I'm a 25-year combat veteran and I don't have emotional trauma," he explained. "I've been very fortunate. But I'm around men who do, and I'm around men who have chronic pain. The system should start to understand the damage that has been done to a lot of veterans." The federal government started paying for medical marijuana for veterans in 2009, but its acceptance has been an uphill battle. The Canadian Medical Association has argued there isn't enough research to show how much marijuana is a safe amount for a patient to take. Former Conservative veterans affairs minister Julian Fantino dismissed marijuana as a serious health risk, pointing out it is not an approved drug in Canada. Postmedia Network (Kingston Whig-Standard, B2)

 Une mauvaise note pour la GRC

Même si la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) répond à davantage de demandes d'accès à l'information, le corps policier n'en demeure pas moins le mouton noir des institutions gouvernementales en matière de transparence. Le Commissariat à l'information, qui a publié le 3 décembre son rapport sur le système d'accès à l'information pour la période 2013-2014, souligne que les résultats de la GRC sont « inférieurs à ceux de l'ensemble du gouvernement ». « Ça me choque!, a commenté l'avocat spécialiste de l'accès à l'information Michel Drapeau. En tant que responsable du respect des lois, la GRC ne doit pas simplement montrer patte blanche, elle doit montrer l'exemple. » De façon générale, la GRC a répondu à 73,2% de ces demandes en 2013-2014, soit 1706, contre 66,7% en 2012-2013. Cependant, les délais de traitement des demandes se sont accrus. En moyenne, la GRC a mis 173 jours pour compléter une demande en 2013-2014, contre 115 jours l'année précédente. En principe, ces délais sont de 30 jours, mais ils peuvent être prorogés. Un peu moins de la moitié des demandes ont d'ailleurs été traitées en plus de 120 jours. La proportion des demandes traitées hors délai a ainsi augmenté, passant de 56,9% à 65%. Cette statistique préoccupe particulièrement le Commissariat, au point où une alerte rouge a été lancée. « A titre de comparaison, cette proportion était de 14% à l'échelle gouvernementale en 2013-2014 », souligne le rapport. La charge de travail a été la principale raison invoquée pour justifier

ces retards dans la majorité des demandes. «Aucune raison ne peut justifier ces retards, affirme Me Drapeau. Si une institution doit être transparente, c'est bien elle.» Selon le spécialiste, la GRC est le mauvais élève de l'accès à l'information depuis une dizaine d'années. Au début des années 2000, l'ancien commissaire à l'information John Reid avait déjà interpellé le commissaire à la GRC Giuliano Zaccardelli au sujet de la transparence. Presse Canadienne (La Presse, A6)

 Minister pledges native inquiry 'shortly'

The Liberal government will "very shortly" announce a national inquiry into Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women, Status of Women minister Patty Hadju said Sunday. Speaking to a crowd of 400 gathered Sunday evening at the Women's Monument in Minto Park to mark the 26th anniversary of the murder of 14 women at the École Polytechnique in Montreal, Hadju won applause for saying Canadians can expect in "the weeks to come" to hear about the scope of an inquiry. She said the government wants "work with people," particularly aboriginal women, in both setting up the inquiry and its ongoing process. The day after his election on Oct. 19, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau said his government would move "quickly" on a campaign promise to hold a public inquiry into the disproportionate rate of violence perpetuated against indigenous women in Canada. A 2014 RCMP report found that 1,181 indigenous women were killed or disappeared between 1980 and 2012. Statistically, aboriginal women are eight times more likely to be the victims of violence than non-aboriginal women. The promise of the inquiry might have been the highlight of the vigil, but the issue of violence against any woman was far from forgotten. A video screen displayed messages such as, "Don't tell your daughter not to go out; tell your son to behave." "Why are women still struggling everyday to overcome systemic violence?" asked Rosella Chibambo of the Ottawa Coalition to End Violence Against Women, reminding the crowd of the purpose of the vigil. She said women's groups will be "activity monitoring the new government" to see if it delivers on promises to tackle the social ill of gender-based and sexual violence against women. "Because it's 2015. We are watching you." Canadians are increasingly aware of the issue, said Yamikani Msosa, public education coordinator for the Sexual Assault Support Centre in Ottawa. Postmedia (Ottawa Citizen, A1/FRONT)

 Ten Arrested in Multiple Thefts and B&Es

Ever since August, Yorkton Rural, Yorkton Municipal, Canora, Wadena, and Esterhazy RCMP have received numerous complaints of break and enters, thefts, mischief, and dangerous driving. Now, five adults and five youth have been arrested. Police say they were linked to multiple files through evidenced gathered to date. In total, the ten accused face a combination of 167 charges. They are all remanded on strict conditions. Saskatoonhomepage.ca; 620ckrm

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Author weighs in on prison farms

When he speaks in Kingston this week about the links between food and climate change, author Peter Ladner will be able to share his insights into a pressing local issue - prison farms. In his 2011 book The Urban Food Revolution, the Vancouver-based author discusses the closing of prison farms across Canada the previous year, including Frontenac Institution in Kingston. "It just seemed so missing the point that you have people doing worthwhile work," said Ladner in a telephone interview this week. "When the government said those weren't useful skills, tell that to farmers. I don't understand why they did it. Here in British Columbia a politician had a friend in the food business and they gave that person the contract." Reopening prison farms, a possibility with the election of a Liberal government in Ottawa, is just one of many topics that will no doubt strike a sympathetic chord with his Kingston audience. Ladner will be speaking on Tuesday at the Tett Centre for Creativity and Learning as part of the Kingston Climate Action Speaker Series hosted by the city and Sustainable Kingston. Kingston Whig-Standard, A1

Family cheers Watts's arrest

Just two weeks after his release from prison, a high-risk sexual offender convicted in the 2001 death of a 13-year-old Kitchener girl is back behind bars. Christopher Michael Watts was arrested last week by police in Vancouver for breaching the conditions of his parole, after serving 12 years in prison for manslaughter, sexual touching and sexual assault in the death of Amanda Raymond. Raymond died after an all-night party in June 2001 at Watts's home on Puslinch Lake. Watts was found guilty of feeding the girl a lethal concoction of drugs, and assaulting her when she was comatose. The judge who sentenced Watts, who published a book while behind bars called "The Criminal's Handbook," labelled him a "voracious sexual predator" who was "without any sense of guilt" throughout the trial. Before his release on Nov. 20, the Parole Board of Canada declared Watts a high risk to reoffend, but regretted he couldn't be kept in prison after his sentence was finished. He left the federal prison in Mission, B.C., under a long-term supervision order, with strict limitations on his freedom. On Friday, Raymond's mother, Teresa Trupp, got a call from the parole board - telling her Watts had been arrested. A warrant had been issued after he allegedly breached the conditions of his parole. "I was ecstatic. We were jumping for joy. This is just the best early Christmas present my family could hope for," Trupp said. "I knew he was going to mess up, I really did. I feel so relieved that he's off the streets again." Waterloo Region Record, A1

Quatre ans de prison pour avoir agressé une fille de 12 ans

La Cour d'appel de l'Île-du-Prince-Édouard vient d'alourdir la peine d'emprisonnement d'un homme âgé de 22 ans qui s'est introduit par effraction dans la chambre à coucher d'une jeune fille de 12 ans avant de l'agresser dans son lit. Travis Mehmoodi a d'abord été condamné à deux ans de pénitencier pour crime sexuel, mais aussi à 11 mois et demi de détention pour l'entrée par effraction. La Cour d'appel a effacé la peine de 11 mois et demi et l'a portée à quatre ans, la période que le malfaiteur devra purger puisque les peines sont concurrentes. Un emprisonnement de quatre ans avait d'ailleurs été réclamé par la Couronne. La Cour d'appel a écrit que la peine de 11 mois et demi ne tenait pas compte de la gravité du crime, de son impact sur la jeune victime et de la jurisprudence en matière de tels crimes au Canada. Presse canadienne (Acadie nouvelle, 13)

In The Courts

A partial compilation of offences from Kingston's Ontario Court of Justice for the period of Nov. 9 to 13, 2015. Only sentences that involved a large fine, probation or incarceration are included. Christopher Perez, 23, was convicted of carrying a concealed weapon for a purpose dangerous to the peace. He had 45 days added to the three-year prison sentence he's already serving for a weapons offence. Justice Judith Beaman was told Perez was charged in mid-May after he was injured in an altercation with a fellow Collins Bay Institution inmate. Crown attorney Ross Drummond said Perez was carrying a homemade knife at the time, but there was no indication he ever tried to use it. Kingston Whig-Standard, A6

North End eyed for new court - Province hires Crown prosecutor for restorative justice

The province has taken its first steps toward establishing Manitoba's first court for restorative justice. The court would be located in Winnipeg's North End. A newly created position as North End community prosecutor has been filled by Nancy Fazenda, a Crown attorney with 15 years' experience as a lawyer, and justice officials are working to define her role in an area of the city most affected by poverty and crime. "I think this is going to be a unique opportunity to work in the community and with the community on some of the complex issues that we have with crime in the North End," Fazenda said. "I still think it involves accountability, but we're going to be balancing that with community supports and support for individuals to address specific issues that some may have that make them more likely to be involved in the criminal justice system." The move comes on the heels of the provincial government's five-year restorative-justice strategy, part of which involves plans to set up a North End court to deal with less serious crimes in the neighbourhood similar to how mental-health and drug-treatment courts function in Manitoba. Winnipeg Free Press, B1

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

'Mom, where are you?'

Lita Blacksmith lights a cigarette. Her living room is chock full of sequined art, dream catchers, aphorisms on every wall: "Today's moments are tomorrow's memories." And, "We should not let our fears hold us back from pursuing our hopes." (...) Imagine a snappingly cold winter's day in Winnipeg. Jan. 11, 2012, to be precise. It's 22 below, colder with the wind chill. Flurries. That evening, Lorna Blacksmith dressed in red and wore dangling earrings with a small metal feather hanging in the middle of the two circles. Lorna was strikingly beautiful. Lita drove her daughter to a wood-frame house on Toronto Street, well known as a drug den. She had no misconceptions about the life her daughter was leading. (...) On Nov. 4, 2002, Shawn Lamb, 43, appeared before Judge Rubin at the stately Winnipeg Law Courts building. Crown counsel itemized Lamb's prior convictions and breaches, spanning back to the winter of 1985 when Lamb spent a year in jail for assault causing bodily harm and one count of mischief. The précised version of Lamb's sheet included five months in custody in 1987 for breaching probation. Sentenced to four years for a 1992 sexual assault. Parole violations in 1995. Nine months in custody in 1996 for assault. Utter forged document. Possess goods. Failure to appear. Sentenced to two years in September 2001 for assault causing bodily harm. Sixty-eight days in the spring of 2002 for uttering threats. (...) It was June 21. Shawn Lamb, serial killer, had directed police to the body of Lorna Blacksmith. (...) Lamb is serving a 20-year-sentence at an Ontario penitentiary. Parole eligibility is fixed at nine years. Through written correspondence with the Star, Lamb commented on the banal ("I hope your (sic) well and enjoying the summer. It's been pretty humid these days") and the substantive ("I also don't think an inquire (sic) is the complete solution"). He noted that his background "has helped me gain insight as well as the many aboriginal women I've met in our very unhealthy lifestyles." A request for an interview was denied by Correctional Service Canada. Toronto Star, A3

Minister pledges native inquiry 'shortly'

The Liberal government will "very shortly" announce a national inquiry into Canada's missing and murdered indigenous women, Status of Women minister Patty Hadju said Sunday. Speaking to a crowd of 400 gathered Sunday evening at the Women's Monument in Minto Park to mark the 26th anniversary of the murder of 14 women at the École Polytechnique in Montreal, Hadju won applause for saying Canadians can expect in "the weeks to come" to hear about the scope of an inquiry. She said the government wants "work with people," particularly aboriginal women, in both setting up the inquiry and its ongoing process. The day after his election on Oct. 19, Liberal leader Justin Trudeau said his government would move "quickly" on a campaign promise to hold a public inquiry into the disproportionate rate of violence perpetuated against indigenous women in Canada. A 2014 RCMP report found that 1,181 indigenous women were killed or disappeared between 1980 and 2012. Statistically, aboriginal women are eight times more likely to be the victims of violence than non-aboriginal women. Ottawa Citizen, A1

'We can find strength'

In the dim lighting of Sydenham Street United Church, the faint smell of candles and roses mixed with quiet conversation fills the air. Neighbours and friends greet each other cheerily, but they've gathered for a sobering event. As the sun set and the outside darkened Sunday evening, inside the church more than 150 residents attended a ceremony to honour the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. Rev. Elizabeth Macdonald welcomed the group to the event that honoured the 14 women killed during the Montreal Massacre in 1989 at Ecole Polytechnique de Montreal and missing and murdered indigenous women. The event also remembered local victims such as the Shafia women murdered in Kingston in 2009; Kaitlan Babcock, who was killed in her home on Conacher Drive on June 18, as well as Carol Culleton, Anastasia Kuzyk and Nathalie Warmerdam, the victims of a murderous rampage in Wilno, Ont., on Sept. 22. "When we try to remember this on our own it can be so overwhelming and paralyzing," Macdonald said. "But when we come together in community, with people we know, with people we're going to get to know, when we come together in community to remember, even the most painful events, even the most horrific actions, when we come together in community we can find strength, we can find comfort, we can find hope. "It is so important that we gather to remember so that we will be strengthened. So that we will be comforted. So that we will find the hope we need to take action." Kingston Whig-Standard, A1

 Polytechnique Massacre victims honoured by indigenous community

Members of the indigenous community are standing in solidarity with the victims of the Montreal Massacre, while highlighting that violence against women is not something fixed in the past. Fourteen women were killed on Dec. 6, 1989 when an armed man entered the École Polytechnique and separated the men from the women, killing 14 people just because they were women. On Sunday, members of the aboriginal community marked the 26th anniversary of the massacre by honouring the 14 victims through speeches and song. They gathered at Place du 6 décembre in Côte-des-Neiges to honour the Polytechnique victims while also remembering those who continue to suffer violence. "It's still happening to do this day, almost three decades later you know, there's still violence happening in the form of murdered and missing indigenous women," said Chantel Henderson, a spokesperson for the Missing Justice Collective. There are many similarities between the violence that is a reality for many indigenous women and what happened at the Polytechnique Massacre, Henderson said. CBC News, Le Devoir

Crowd gathers in Riverview to give voice to victimized women

First mourn. Then work for change. That is the call to action inscribed on the Dec. 6 monument in Riverview, and each year in the town, people from southeastern New Brunswick gather to mourn women lost to domestic violence and to strengthen the voice that calls for change. About 75 people gathered Sunday evening at the Father Dan Bohan Family Centre for the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. The local event, organized by the Moncton & District Labour Council's December 6 Committee, heard from Suzanne Bibeau, an outreach worker with the Coalition Against Abuse in Relationships. She said on average, a Canadian woman dies from intimate partner violence every six days in Canada. As well, an estimated 1.5 million Canadian children are exposed to domestic violence in their homes. The National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence was born out of the horror of the 14 young women murdered at Montreal's L'École Polytechnique 26 years ago. It seeks to remember as well as the roughly two dozen women and girls from Metro Moncton who have died from violence since that night. The toll of domestic violence continues to grow. At this year's ceremony, Paula Armstrong's name was added to the local roll of remembrance. She was murdered in a home on Purdy Avenue in June. Her killer then took his own life. Times & Transcript, A1

Montreal massacre remembered

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau joined a subdued ceremony Sunday to mark the 26th anniversary of the Montreal Massacre where 14 women were shot to death at the École Polytechnique. Trudeau and a small crowd listened as the names of the victims were read aloud, silhouetted by 14 beacons of light projected into the night sky in memory of the victims. Trudeau did not address the crowd, but said afterward the anniversary is not only a time to remember the events of the massacre, but also to make promises. He said his personal pledge was "to never forget, and to do everything I can to ensure that never again." Trudeau released a statement on the massacre Sunday restating the Liberal government's promise to launch an inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women and to introduce legislation to provide greater support for survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault. Canadian Press (Waterloo Region Record, Toronto Sun, London Free Press, The Province, Montreal Gazette, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Kingston Whig-Standard, London Free Press, Chronicle-Herald, Hamilton Spectator), * Globe and Mail, * Journal de Montréal

 Massacre remembered

It's been 26 years since 14 young women at Montreal's l'École Polytechnique de Montréal were murdered, simply because they were women. Every year since that cold and dark evening on Dec. 6, 1989, Canadians around the country have gathered to remember those women and others who have been killed because of genderbased violence. But not only has that day served as a collective symbol of pain for Canadians, it has also served as a beacon of hope - hope that one day violence against women will be a thing of the past. The Sun spoke to Yami Msosa, the public education coordinator of the Sexual Assault Support Centre of Ottawa, to discuss how the events of Dec. 6, 1989 have changed people's views as well as society, and what we've learned since then. Toronto Sun, A49 (Ottawa Sun)

 Vigil at University of Windsor marks Montreal Massacre

Amelia Runchey was born in 1989, the year of the Montreal Massacre. In her 26 years, the Hamilton native, who is the co-ordinator of the University of Windsor women's centre, has grown to appreciate the gravity of marking the day of Dec. 6 when 14 female engineering students were gunned down in cold blood at L'École Polytechnique de Montreal. "Today is an opportunity to remember and honour these women and also an opportunity to reflect and speak out against violence against women in all forms," said Runchey, a student in women's and gender studies. "It's very important to me and to students because it happened to students. "It was a classroom that was targeted. It's important for campuses to take this day, take some time to remember what happened 26 years ago." About 100 people gathered at the university's memorial to the massacre, which features 14 obelisks - one for each of the victims. Windsor Star, A3

 Hamilton remembers victims of Montreal massacre

A small crowd gathered near Hamilton City Hall on Sunday for an emotional ceremony to remember the women killed during the Montreal Massacre 26 years ago. On Dec. 6, 1989 Marc Lepine carried a rifle into Montreal's École Polytechnique and shot 28 people, killing 14 female engineering students. Sunday afternoon's memorial in Hamilton saw about 40 people gather at the corner of Main Street West and Bay Street. That's the site of a memorial stone that, 25 years ago, was placed to commemorate the women. By the end of the half-hour ceremony, it was covered with red roses and a single burning candle. Similar events were held across the country. In Montreal Sunday, white roses were laid on pillars in a park near the school to remember the victims. Representatives of women's and aboriginal rights groups reminded the public that women in Canada still face violence. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau was expected to attend a ceremony on Mount Royal later in the day, where 14 beacons of light were to be projected into the sky. Hamilton Spectator, A3

 'You don't have to feel ashamed' - Sex-trafficking survivor hopes to protect girls

As a teen, she went from a loving, middle-class home to being trafficked for sex to middle-class dads in the West End. After that, she was "sold" in Toronto. Finally, she returned to Winnipeg, where she threw herself off the Maryland Street Bridge, breaking bones in her back, legs and feet. Now 32, Jessica Pennock is a survivor who is determined to prevent girls from getting sucked in by predators, such as the one who got her at age 15. (...) Then she met former Conservative MP Joy Smith, whose foundation raises awareness about sex trafficking in Canada. A light went on for Pennock. For the first time, she realized what had happened to her - being groomed then trafficked from the age of 15 - wasn't her fault. "I'm a survivor of a horrible crime," she said. Now she's volunteering with the Joy Smith Foundation and sharing her story. The foundation is going to junior high schools to teach students about predators' tactics and how to avoid them and stay safe. Smith, who was a teacher for 23 years before she was an MP, said she's prepared course material in English and French that are age-appropriate and should be part of the curriculum in schools across Canada. (...) 93 per cent of Canada's sex trafficking victims are Canadian girls who have either been groomed online or lured into false "boyfriend" relationships at the local mall or recreational centre. On average, a trafficker makes $280,000 for each girl they force into prostitution. Canada does not have a standard system for collecting data on trafficking incidents. Winnipeg Free Press, A3

OPERATION SYRIAN REFUGEES / OPÉRATION RÉFUGIÉS SYRIENS

Former refugees say winter can be shock to newcomers

It was a frigid February in 1985 when Getachew Woldeyesus arrived in Saskatchewan as a refugee. The young man from Ethiopia stayed inside for two months. "Because you don't know, is it slippery out there? Are you wearing the right shoes? It's freezing out there, so I was afraid to go out," Woldeyesus recalled in an interview with The Canadian Press. Weather-related challenges will no doubt face many of the 25,000 Syrian refugees the federal government has committed to bring to Canada by early next year. Social agencies, church groups and private citizens across the country have been organizing donations of clothing with an emphasis on coats, gloves, hats and winter footwear. (...) Ali Abukar agrees. Abukar fled Somalia and lived in Egypt as a refugee before arriving in Canada in 2011. He lived in Ontario before moving to Saskatoon in the winter of 2013. Abukar said winter can be tough for refugees who use public transit and will stand outside waiting for a bus. (...) Abukar, who is now executive director at the Saskatoon Open Door Society, said sometimes refugees and immigrants don't know what clothes to wear in the winter. The society shows them what mittens and scarves are all about and how to dress for the cold. Canadian Press (The Guardian, A8, Waterloo Region Record, Leader-Post, Times & Transcript, Red Deer Advocate, Calgary Sun); Presse Canadienne (Le Nouvelliste, 8, Acadie Nouvelle)

 Déjà vu? Finding the right balance in the refugee-terrorism nexus

Faced with security issues whose dimensions overlap both the foreign and domestic arenas, newly-minted Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is in a truly unenviable position. He has vowed to end Canada's combat mission against ISIS and instead refocus upon training local forces and redoubling the humanitarian effort. Playing upon the anger and frustration many Canadians felt towards Harper and the Conservatives, Trudeau presented himself as a sympathetic and humanist alternative, and thereby promised to bring 25,000 Syrian refugees into Canada by the end of 2015. (...) More crucial is how this will affect Canada's relationship to the United States. Americans will play close attention to how the Trudeau government handles the movement of 25,000 refugees and how this is done securely. In the aftermath of 9/11, continental security is not negotiable to the Americans. As debate concerning the admission of Syrian refugees into the United States becomes even more acrimonious, many will cast their gaze upon Canada. In the tense atmosphere that now exists, if even one Syrian refugee crosses the border into the United States and commits a terrorist act, the consequences for Canada could well be devastating. Hill Times

Syrian refugee process in Turkey 'a little bit behind,' Canadian ambassador says

As the effort to select and process Syrian refugees for resettlement in Canada ramps up in Jordan and Lebanon, a more complex situation on the ground in Turkey has slowed the pace of the operation there. The Canadian government has committed to bring 10,000 Syrian refugees to Canada from the three countries by the end of December. An additional 15,000 will be resettled by March. The processing centres in Amman, Jordan, and Beirut, Lebanon, are ramping up to meet the demand. A Canadian official said the government met its goal of processing 500 refugees a day at the Amman centre on the weekend. But the situation in Turkey is a different story. "We're a little bit behind our colleagues in the other posts but we're going to do our best," said John Holmes, Canada's ambassador to Turkey, in an interview with CBC News. (...) Thirty additional Canadian personnel will be deployed to Turkey to assist with the refugee airlift. A processing centre is being established in Gaziantep, a major city in southeast Turkey near the Syrian border. "Security, of course, is a concern in that part of the world. So that is our No. 1 priority for our staff," Holmes said. Thirty-three people were killed in July when a suicide bomber with reported links to ISIS attacked a crowd of youth activists in the Turkish town of Suruc, 110 kilometres from Gaziantep. The Canadian Embassy in Ankara is working with the International Organization for Migration on a plan to airlift the refugees in Turkey to Canada. Holmes said he's unsure when those charter flights will depart, adding that "we are a few weeks away." CBC News

Liberals to concede flaw in fiscal plan

The Trudeau government will acknowledge this week that its tax hike on the richest Canadians won't cover the entire cost of its promised tax cut for the middle class, adding to the fiscal pressures on coming federal budgets, sources said. (...) Liberal House Leader Dominic LeBlanc said in an interview the tax measures and the TFSA change will be announced simultaneously to allow taxpayers to adjust before they come into effect at the start of the new tax year. The Liberal government's plan to end income-splitting for families will be formally announced next year, along with the creation of the promised Canada Child Benefit. Mr. LeBlanc added that the House will spend much of its time this week debating the Throne Speech, giving a number of rookie MPs a chance to make their "maiden speech" in Parliament. In addition, there will be a vote on Thursday on the cost of resettling 25,000 Syrian refugees by the end of February. Globe and Mail, A1

Eager to help refugees

When Ruth and Richard MacKellar decided to sponsor a refugee family from Syria with some friends, they quickly realized there were three things needed right away: money, a settlement plan and housing. "The biggest hurdle was going to be accommodation," said Richard, who lives in Squamish. Despite the community's relatively small size and distance from Vancouver - about an hour's drive - Squamish is not immune to the region's housing affordability crisis. The rental vacancy rate is less than one per cent and housing prices are rising rapidly, Richard said. (...) Staff at the Immigrant Services Society, which receives the housing leads through its website, are analyzing and mapping the types and locations of accommodation offers they receive, said Chris Friesen, the society's settlement services director. Two local developers have also offered free or below-market rental apartments to Syrian families for their first few months. Short-term, transitional housing is not likely to be as much of a challenge, as places such as church basements, hotels with kitchenettes or even school gymnasiums could be pressed into service. The real challenge across Canada, particularly acute in Vancouver, will be for refugees who live on an income equivalent to provincial welfare rates to find long-term housing they can afford. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, A1/Front)

 Refugee housing: Where will they live in Ottawa?

Like many young women searching for an apartment, Jennifer Graham has a list of demands: it has to be affordable, close to amenities and in a nice area. But this apartment isn't for her. She's house hunting for a refugee family. Graham is part of the Ottawa South Committee for Refugee Sponsorship. Like many such groups across the city, hers is scrambling to figure out where the refugee family it's sponsoring will live once the plane lands. "First and foremost we want affordable housing. We're looking for a multicultural neighbourhood, and that is close to amenities that they need like transit, groceries, schools, parks for the kids," Graham said. (...) Vincent Detillieux, president of Saint Joseph Property Management, says his company has 32 available units he could offer to refugees. "The timing works out very well," he said. "There's a desire to want to help them, to provide housing to them that's affordable, but quality housing." Detillieux's company works with about 10,000 landlords in the city, keeping track of them with the aid of a database. He says at least 200 of them are currently seeking tenants. "I believe this landlord database could be used to find landlords who are willing to accept refugees in their rentals," Detillieux said. "People want to help." CBC News

City readies for influx of Syrian refugees

An Edmonton agency is setting up a volunteer hotline in preparation for the arrival of Syrian refugees in what's likely the largest influx since the arrival of Vietnamese "boat people" in the late 1970s. The Mennonite Centre for Newcomers is receiving 30 to 40 calls a day offering to help, but some people are shuttled between groups as they narrow down where assistance is most needed, executive director Erick Ambtman says. "There are so many people, and they're calling 20 different organizations and levels of government. There's a lot of uncertainty about who you contact," he says. (...) Ambtman estimates that as many as two-thirds of the 3,000 Syrian refugees likely coming to Alberta by early next year will wind up in Edmonton, more refugees than have been seen since thousands of Vietnamese came in the '70s. The city has also set up a website called Welcoming Syrian Refugees outlining the settlement process and volunteer opportunities. One of the many groups in the area sponsoring refugees is an ecumenical Sherwood Park church committee working to bring in an extended family of 15 people. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, A1/Front)

Waiting for refugee numbers

The provincial government doesn't know exactly how many refugee families could settle in New Brunswick before the new year and where exactly those people will be housed. With less than a month to go before the deadline passes on the federal government's promise to bring 10,000 Syrian refugees to Canada, the cabinet minister who oversees New Brunswick's preparations says they're still working on the federal government to get firm numbers. Since they don't know how many people will arrive in New Brunswick yet, Francine Landry said they can't predict where they'll be housed. The 1,500 refugees expected by New Brunswick will be placed in Moncton, Saint John or Fredericton. "We don't have exact numbers at this time," Landry said on Friday. "We might get those answers next week. We are not sure. We are still working with the federal government on that." In the meantime, she said government is searching for Arabic translators, trying to find affordable housing and preparing services like health care to be ready for the arrival of refugee families. Telegraph-Journal, A2 (Times & Transcript, Daily Gleaner)

Quebec ready for influx

Nearly 3,000 refugees are expected to arrive in Quebec between now and New Year's, with the first full planeload landing next Saturday. The majority will settle in Montreal, which typically takes in 85 per cent of new arrivals to the province. It is an influx unparalleled in Quebec history in terms of the large numbers arriving in such a short period of time. They will come tired, disoriented, hopeful and in need of help to start their new lives. And smack in the middle of the Canada's busiest holiday period. To show Quebec is in fact ready to deal with the coming flood at Christmas-time, provincial Immigration Minister Kathleen Weil and acting Public Security Minister Pierre Moreau visited an immigration support centre in the St-Laurent borough Saturday to chat with new arrival success stories like Harout Sarajian and his family. (...) Weil said the province's main concern is with the timing of the integration, when the massive volume of people will come over the course of three weeks in December. Quebec has already taken in 1,000 of the 3,650 Syrian refugees it has pledged to accommodate. The province will provide more funding to organizations like CACI if there is a need, she said, in addition to the $29 million it has already earmarked. The federal government has also promised funding. Most of the refugees Quebec has pledged to receive for 2015 are privately sponsored, meaning a community organization like CACI, a religious group or a joining of five community members have pledged to look after the welfare of a refugee or refugee family for their first year here. Postmedia News (Montreal Gazette, A4)

6 citations sur la réalité des réfugiés syriens qui arrivent au Canada

Citoyen canadien depuis deux ans, Anas Hariri essaie de rassembler sa famille qui vit encore en Syrie, au Liban et en Turquie. Pour le moment, seule la famille de son frère a réussi à intégrer le Canada. Voici 6 citations sur la réalité des réfugiés syriens. «Jusqu'à maintenant je vis un rêve, parce que je vois comme c'est difficile la situation là-bas et à quel point c'est difficile la situation mondiale envers les réfugiés... », raconte Anas qui est désormais citoyen canadien et qui a eu la chance de pouvoir accueillir des membres de sa famille. «Au début, elle essayait de suivre le rythme...» explique Anas en riant, qui a amené sa famille aux célébrations de la Saint-Jean-Baptiste tout de suite après leur arrivée. Il faut payer 12 000$ pour pouvoir parrainer sa famille au Canada. Anas est responsable de son frère et de sa famille pendant 12 mois. Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, Journal de Québec)

Welcome home

It was after he was "taken" for two months that Rakan decided enough is enough: He and his family - wife Houda, and their five children - had to leave Syria. Close to two years later, the 44-year-old hesitates to speak of his terrifying disappearance, not revealing anything other than his family did not know where he was for weeks, and that he was not kidnapped for money. (...) They arrived in Canada last week, one of several Syrian refugee families sponsored privately by Humanity First. The Toronto Sun visited the family at their temporary accommodations inside an empty Vaughan home used as a communal guest house by the Ahmadiyya Muslim community, which is co-ordinating resettlement efforts with Humanity First. "We work with them, for them, to find permanent accommodations for them," said Mumtaz Ali, a member of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at resettlement team for Syrian refugees. "We do work with them to find a job." Rakan and Houda intend on getting work and placing their kids in school as soon as possible. "We hear that the first year will be very difficult," Rakan said. Toronto Sun, A8 (Calgary Sun)

Syrian refugee response gets organized

Guelph entrepreneur and philanthropist Jim Estill is overjoyed by the response the Guelph community is making to the Syrian refugee crisis. But far from being overwhelmed, Estill appears to relish the organizational challenge of bringing 50 Syrian refugee families to Guelph in the coming weeks. Estill went public on Nov. 24 with his pledge to financially sponsor 50 of those families in Guelph, an act of charitable giving that could total as much as $1.5 million. He said it is simply the right thing to do. Other groups are also sponsoring refugees. (...) An organizational framework driven completely by volunteers comprises eight teams, each lead by a director, and each with an assistant director. Estill shared the information recently on his blog, www.jimestill2.blogspot.ca. The eight teams include mentors, finance, education/training, health, food and meals, jobs, transportation, and housing. The list of people who will direct these teams was being finalized late last week. In all of these areas volunteers are being signed up, and goods and services providers are being identified. Many have offered to billet families. There is a definite need for more accommodations. And more volunteers are needed. The Salvation Army has stepped up as the lead organization for donations. Waterloo Region Record, B4

«Attache ta tuque avec de la broche»

Depuis que le Canada a donné son feu vert à l'accueil de 25 000 réfugiés syriens au cours des prochains mois, Pompon Laine Café s'est transformé en point de chute pour ceux qui souhaitent offrir des tuques et autres vêtements de laine destinés aux citoyens fuyant la guerre civile en Syrie. Le lieu de rencontre, qui propose des cours de tricot et du café aux amateurs de longues aiguilles, troquera son activité de Noël, prévue jeudi, par une séance de tricot en règle au profit des futurs résidents québécois. «Habituellement nous sommes dans la période où l'on fabrique des cadeaux express, des petits patrons pour les tricoteuses aguerries. Puis on a décidé de se réorienter et on a demandé aux gens de venir tricoter avec nous. En fait, les Syriens n'ont pas demandé à quitter leur pays. Ils s'en viennent dans un milieu qui peut être assez hostile. Il n'ont pas choisi d'être en exil. Donc, si c'est réconfortant pour nous, tricoter, on se dit que ce sera réconfortant pour eux. Tricoter un morceau, c'est comme un lien d'affection, une preuve d'affection, d'amitié, de bons voeux, de bienvenue», note l'une des propriétaires de Pompon Laine Café, Julie Biron, qui se réjouit de la trentaine de tuques déjà au rendez-vous. La Presse

Refugee planning gets down to details in Old Ottawa South

Old Ottawa South resident Marc Rand decided he wanted to do something to help a Syrian refugee family that is being sponsored by a community group in his neighbourhood. But he needed the OK from his 16-year-old son, Ben. "Mind giving up your room for a while?" he asked Ben before offering their home as a temporary refuge for the family with four young children. (...)The Ottawa South group had a blizzard of details on the table. Friends and neighbours have been asked to donate a long list of items, from a kitchen table to dish soap, dressers, lots of shoes and four car seats. "Should we get them cellphones?" someone asked. They've been awash in offers of help and cash. More than $50,000 has been raised, enough to start work on sponsoring a second family. A dentist, optometrist and barber have offered their services. Several former English-as-a-second-language teachers said they'd be glad to tutor them. Students at a nearby private school plan to make welcome signs in Arabic. Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A4)

'How people live, it's inhumane,' says refugee living in Fredericton

When Mohammed Daoussa Tom thinks about his mom and dad, tears begin to roll down his cheeks. The Sudanese refugee doesn't remember the last time he saw his parents alive. "I'm starting to forget their faces," said the 21-year-old, burying his face into his hands. "It's been a long time." Last year, he learned his father is dead and he still doesn't know the whereabouts of his mother. (...)Daoussa Tom says he's trying to do his best to integrate into Canadian society. He's doing this by taking classes and learning English at the Multicultural Association of Fredericton. When he first arrived, the Fredericton resident said it was a bit strange. Daoussa Tom admits he was a bit afraid and sick. But says he's also living in an apartment and making new friends in the Fredericton community. "It's a small city but everyone is generous and they're not aggressive or violent," he said. "I like Fredericton, it's the ideal city for me." He also admits, Canadian living conditions can be difficult. "Once the cold arrives, I can't leave the house," said Daoussa, who says he dresses in layers, but nothing seems to prevent the cold. "I stay in my room." Telegraph-Journal, A3 (Daily Gleaner)

Saskatoon comes together to provide dream wedding

Athar Farroukh and Mohamad Al-Noury got the wedding they always wanted. The couple, refugees from Syria, was given a lavish wedding reception Sunday thanks to a wave of donations from Saskatoon residents and businesses. "We're blessed that we're in Saskatoon. It's a dream come true for us," Farroukh said before cutting the cake and joining the revellers in a Delta Bessborough hotel ballroom. "It's a great feeling. I wish everyone could have the same experience." The couple arrived in Saskatoon one year ago. Their village in Syria was bombed and they were forced to flee. They had hoped to get married at home, but soon saw they could not return. They were married in a modest ceremony in a Lebanese refugee camp before being accepted to Canada. Last week, CBC reporter Eman Bare was interviewing them when she discovered they had no wedding photos. Bare and some friends offered to snap some shots, and they put out a call for help on social media. "I posted it, but then the community took over," she said. People donated flowers and food, as well as a wedding dress and suit for the couple. Bessborough officials donated the banquet hall. On Sunday afternoon, about 50 guests, as well as a throng of reporters and photographers, were on hand as the smiling couple entered the ballroom. They sat for photos, then watched as well-wishers sang and drummed and danced in their honour. Postmedia News (StarPhoenix, A1/Front)

Armenian centre in Willowdale to accept more than 1,000 refugees

There are already roughly 350 Syrian refugees adjusting to their first winter in Canada, the first days of a new life, thanks to the Armenian Community Centre in Willowdale. The centre's co-ordinator will see her phone ring all day, as Citizenship and Immigration Canada (CIC) alerts her of new arrivals. Lorig Garboushian and volunteers have picked up more than 20 people in a day, just the beginning of the 1,079 newcomers they will be sponsoring. That's roughly half of the 2,600 refugees Toronto will be accepting, according to the numbers released two weeks ago by CIC. There's always someone there at the airport to welcome the arrivals, whose faces often belie conflicted emotions. CBC News (2015-12-06)

Young singer inspired by plight of refugees

Like many a musician before her, Jamie Arsenault is trying to fight hatred with music. Disturbed by a wave of prejudicial comments about refugees on social media, the 21-year-old musician from Grande Prairie decided to do something about it. "I wanted people to realize that refugees are just like us," Arsenault said. "Maybe they look different, or speak a different language and pray to a different god, but they're just human, with the same hopes and fears as us." (...) Arsenault said she spent a few days researching the experiences of Syrian refugees, and fine-tuning the lyrics and music before recording and posting her video. The lyrics to Arsenault's Refugee Song are written from the point of view of a mother in a war-torn country who is trying to comfort her child. (...) Though she's not sure if she changed the minds of any people who posted hateful comments, all of the responses she has received so far have been positive. "I think I've made a big enough difference that it's made my heart a little bit happier," she said. Postmedia News (Edmonton Journal, A5)

 Amnesty supporters gather in Waterloo to write for rights

International Human Rights Day, which was marked Saturday, has special meaning for Anwar Arkani. After his father was murdered in 1978, Arkani fled through the jungles of Burma (now called Myanmar) along with his mother and 300,000 other refugees to Bangladesh. It was a two-day walk, and only the beginning of a 24-year-long journey that ended in Canada. (...) Margaret Jackson co-chairs one of the two Amnesty International groups in Kitchener- Waterloo. Her group raises awareness, and the other writes letters. The Saturday event was called Write for Rights. "It is the premier event for Amnesty International all around the world," Jackson said. "Last year in this event we were able to send out over three million letters." Among the 10 issues highlighted by Jackson's group Saturday are three in Canada: a dam on the Peace River in northern B.C. that will destroy First Nation trap lines and hunting grounds; keeping Canada's immigration doors open to Syrian refugees; and the actions of Canadian mining and oil companies operating abroad. Waterloo Region Record, B1

How do refugees travel to work?

An editorial by a P.E.I. board member for Transportation Action Atlantic states, "According to The Guardian, Dec. 4, Robert Henderson, MLA for O'Leary-Inverness, thinks that refugees arriving in P.E.I. should be encouraged to become farm and fisheries workers, replacing temporary foreign workers. Mr. Henderson sees a double benefit: employment for refugees while lowering the number of temporary foreign workers. Hmmm. How are the refugees to get to the farms and fish plants? Won't they have the same problem many rural islanders, who would also like to work on the farms and fish plans, have? On P.E.I., as it is now, the only way to reach a destination more than walking distance away is by automobile. Is P.E.I. going to provide refugees with automobiles? It so far hasn't done this for those rural islanders who do not have their own cars. The temporary foreign workers do not need cars because they are housed in barracks at the work sites. Refugees coming here will be housed in camps or barracks near work sites?" The Guardian, A6

Saint John is up to refugee challenge

An editorial states, "Saint John, with one of the country's highest poverty rates, is about to welcome up to 500 Syrian refugees who will need financial and moral support. Is welcoming so many outsiders in conflict with helping the city's existing poor? In the words of Mayor Mel Norton, this isn't an either/or situation. We have a duty -- and a history -- of responding to international humanitarian crises. Mayor Norton and Shilo Boucher, CEO of the Greater Saint John YMCA, have outlined some of the needs as the city prepares. The YMCA's Newcomer Connections program is acting as the co-ordinating site for the refugees. There are already signs of preparation around Saint John. The YMCA has received scores of offers of time and money. A call for Arabic translators brought 40 responses. Area churches are working on a clothing drive so every family has what it needs to face a Canadian winter. The city will offer the refugees free bus passes. The welcoming effort still needs more support. Ms. Boucher says the Y is looking to match welcoming groups of three-to-five Saint John area residents with each refugee family. These groups will help them with everyday activities -- navigating the city, opening a bank account, finding grocery stores and pharmacies, helping arrange child-care and schools." Telegraph-Journal, A8

Volunteers aid refugees more than government

An opinion piece states, "Throughout the Syrian refugee crisis, when governments have stumbled, volunteers have charged ahead. (...)Private citizens often plug the gaps that the state leaves open. In some ways, that's as it should be. But even if resettling refugees is a national project, the project begins and ends with government policy. Canada's refugee policy has holes in it that no volunteers can fill. The responsibility for repair falls to the Liberal government alone. And if it keeps one of its campaign promises on refugees, it may fail in this. It isn't difficult for refugee advocates to support several Liberal promises on refugees. Not just the promise that Prime Minister Justin Trudeau made to resettle more Syrian refugees - he vowed to change the system. If he fulfils that vow, his government will improve family reunification. It will reduce sponsorship application processing timelines. It will restore refugee health care. It will appoint only experts to the Immigration and Refugee Board. In other words, the government will do a better job of taking refugees in, and will take better care of them when they arrive. What's not to like? Only this: Canadian refugee advocates have long criticized a list that gives preferential treatment to refugees that don't come from so-called "safe countries." While a Citizenship and Immigration Canada spokesperson tells me that it's too early to comment about the government's intentions, according to the Liberal campaign platform, the government may revise the safe country list, but has no plan to rip it up." Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, C4)

Canada needs to prepare for refugees

An opinion piece states, "Canada has an opportunity to once again be known as a nation of small towns with big hearts greeting the world's first "environmental refugees". Get ready Canada for a reinvigoration of the Nanaimos, Medicine Hats, North Battlefords, Selkirks, Thunder Bays, Rimouskis, Monctons, Dartmouths, Summersides, and Ganders as choice destinations for displaced persons fleeing chaos around the world. (...)To such populations, Canada is a kind of Promised Land. Underpopulated, potentially benefitting agriculturally from the early stages of global warming, and predisposed to middle-power diplomacy and decency, Canada is the kind of country people everywhere would like to raise their children. Consider the choices a young Syrian family faces today in a Beiruti refugee camp, perhaps a repurposed concrete parking garage in the city's core. To stay is to accept an uncertain fate at best, cooking dinners on an open fire and hoping for charity or marginal employment in the city's street-side markets. Educational opportunities for children will be severely limited. To decide to move is to embrace hope of redemption in another system - in another world. To such parents, Canada is the dream destination. Facing this uncertain world, Canada needs seriously to plan for a growing tide of refugees. Expensive real estate and a high cost of living will bar some traditional recipient cities like Vancouver and Toronto from playing a key role." Red Deer Advocate, A4 (The Guardian, Daily Gleaner)

A chance for compromise

A letter to the editor states, "Re: Refugees Eschewing Canada Refuted, Dec. 4. A UN agency's discovery that fewer than 5 per cent of eligible Syrian refugees are interested in coming to Canada presents a wonderful opportunity for compromise for Liberals and their critics alike: the Liberals can hold their heads up high and truthfully say they've invited 25,000 to come to Canada, but only 1,250 of them signed up. The Liberals could then fairly claim they "can only lead the horse to water..." and bring closure to this ill-conceived election promise." Postmedia News (National Post, A9)

 Negativity carried too far

An editorial states, "It appears that we are living in an increasingly negative thinking society. After the big Liberal win in the Oct. 19 federal election, jubilation suddenly turned sour as new Prime Minister Justin Trudeau announced that he would bring 25,000 Syrian refugees to Canada by the year's end. What amazes me is that the news media, instead of praising the action of the government's proposed humanitarian effort, immediately focused on the fact that this project could not be successful. And now they seem to be reveling in the fact that they were right. I want to point out to our intrepid 'investigative' reporters that every proposed project must have a deadline attached. Otherwise it would only be a wish, which might never be accomplished. Are you too small to give credit where it is due?" Cape Breton Post, A8

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

 What the throne speech tells us about the 'new' federalism

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau took primary responsibility for the health of the federation when he was sworn in last month as Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. When the Prime Minister's Office subsequently released the all-important Ministerial Mandate Letters there was no such letter regarding Intergovernmental Affairs - the PM apparently kept the details of his own mandate to himself. However, other ministers' letters addressed multiple federalism-related issues, from health and climate change to infrastructure and job creation. And while the intergovernmental script remained private, the new minister of Intergovernmental Affairs' actions spoke loud and clear. On November 23, 2015, Trudeau convened a First Ministers Meeting (FMM) in Ottawa, the first such meeting since 2009. The primary objective of this gathering was to develop a pan-Canadian framework to address climate change. The collaborative symbolism of the FMM persisted as the First Ministers accompanied the prime minister to the United Nations Climate Conference in Paris. iPolitics

OTHER / AUTRE

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

U.K. police probe 'terrorist' knife attack

Counter-terrorism police in Britain on Sunday investigated a stabbing at a London Underground station in which a man brandishing a knife injured two people and reportedly said "This is for Syria." Police arrested a 29-year-old man late Saturday and said they are treating the "violent unprovoked knife attack" at east London's Leytonstone subway station as a "terrorist incident." Richard Walton, chief of Scotland Yard's counter-terrorism command, said the decision was made because of information received from witnesses and police investigations. The force said it was searching a residential address in east London, but declined to say whether they were looking for other suspects. Associated Press (Guardian, B7, Red Deer Advocate, Edmonton Journal, StarPhoenix, Windsor Star, Gazette, Leader-Post, Toronto Sun, Times & Transcript, Whig-Standard); * Calgary Sun, A23

Obama vows to defeat terror threat

In a rare Oval Office address, U.S. President Barack Obama vowed Sunday night the United States would overcome a terror threat that has entered a "new phase" as he sought to reassure Americans shaken by recent attacks in Paris and California. "I know that after so much war, many Americans are asking whether we are confronted by a cancer that has no immediate cure," he said, speaking from a lectern in his West Wing office. The president's speech followed Wednesday's shooting in San Bernardino, Calif., that killed 14 people and wounded 21. Authorities say a couple carried out the attack and the wife pledged allegiance to the Islamic State and its leader in a Facebook post. Obama said that while there was no evidence that the shooters were directed by a terror network overseas or part of a broader plot, "the two of them had gone down the dark path of radicalization." "This was an act of terrorism designed to kill innocent people," he said in the 13-minute address. The president announced no significant shift in U.S. strategy and offered no new policy prescriptions for defeating the Islamic State, underscoring both his confidence in his current approach and the lack of easy options for countering the extremist group. He did call on Congress to tighten America's visa waiver program and to pass a new authorization for military actions underway against ISIL in Iraq and Syria. Associated Press (Record, A1, Calgary Herald, Ottawa Citizen, Red Deer Advocate, Ottawa Sun, Times & Transcript, Edmonton Journal, StarPhoenix, Windsor Star, Leader-Post, Toronto Sun, Vancouver Sun, Province, Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Hamilton Spectator, Whig-Standard); Globe and Mail, A1

Storm Desmond: army aids rescue effort as communities struggle after floods

The army has been deployed to help flood-hit communities in the north of England after Storm Desmond left at least 60,000 homes without power and many lacking clean water, as whole communities were cut off. The storm turned high streets into waterways, with fire services in Lancashire and Cumbria forced to swap their fire engines for rescue boats. Hospitals in Lancaster and Carlisle were running on generator power after electricity substations were flooded, with army trucks used as ambulances in Lancaster to ferry patients to A&E. The Guardian

 Far Right expected to triumph in French elections following Paris Attacks

In a pattern that has become depressingly predictable, the far-right is making historic gains in France in the wake of the Paris terror attacks. The country is still in a state of emergency after simultaneous terror attacks across the capital killed 130 people three weeks ago. Now, the Front National has won the opening round of regional elections, coming first in six out of 13 'super-regions' in France. This is the most successful ever performance for the FN, which has never before held the leadership of a French region. Metro UK; France 24

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PS.PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.qc.ca*

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, January 28, 2016 12:10 PM
Subject: Huffington Post: CSE Broke Privacy Laws With Metadata Sharing, Watchdog Says

CSE Broke Privacy Laws With Metadata Sharing, Watchdog Says

Huffington Post
January 28, 2016 11:22 am EST

OTTAWA — A federal watchdog says Canada's electronic spy agency broke privacy laws by sharing information about Canadians with foreign partners.

In his annual report, Jean-Pierre Plouffe says the Communications Security Establishment passed along the information — known as metadata — to counterparts in the United States, Britain, Australia and New Zealand.

Metadata is information associated with a communication — such as a telephone number or email address — but not the message itself.

The Ottawa-based CSE uses highly advanced technology to intercept, sort and analyze foreign communications for information of intelligence interest to the federal government.

Documents leaked in 2013 by former American spy contractor Edward Snowden revealed the U.S. National Security Agency — a close CSE ally — had quietly obtained access to a huge volume of emails, chat logs and other information from major Internet companies, as well as massive amounts of data about telephone calls.

As a result, civil libertarians, privacy advocates and opposition politicians demanded assurances the CSE was not using its extraordinary powers to snoop on Canadians.

Link

A. Forcione Transcription Services

[REDACTED]
Kanata, Ontario
K2M 0G1

Phone: (613) 599-8303

Fax: (613) 599-0826

E-mail: [REDACTED]

Media: CBC-R (NATIONAL) Program: WORLD REPORT
Time: 06H00
Reference: CBC-R-012815
Length: 02:20 MIN.
Date: JANUARY 28, 2015
Title: CSE IS CONDUCTING MASS SURVEILLANCE OF THE INTERNET ON A GLOBAL SCALE

Word count: 420

DAVID COMMON (CBC-R): Canada's electronic spy agency is conducting mass surveillance of the Internet on a global scale. Documents first obtained by U.S. whistle-blower Edward Snowden show Canada's communication Security Establishment is filtering millions of daily downloads from file-sharing sites looking for extremists.

Is filtering looking for Dave Seglins has our report.

DAVE SEGLINS (CBC reporter): It's called Project Levitation. Canada is watching 102 Internet file-sharing sites. According to spy agency documents, they're sifting through 10 to 15 million uploads and downloads every day. They're looking for people sharing extremist propaganda and training manuals.

GLENN GREENWALD (Journalist, The Intercept): It's really the first time that a story has been reported that involves the CSEC as the lead agency in a program of pure mass surveillance.

DAVE SEGLINS: Glenn Greenwald is a journalist with the U.S. news site The Intercept. He obtained these documents from Edward Snowden and says Canada is using huge databases shared among its allies to build profiles of people downloading suspicious material.

GLENN GREENWALD: They cannot only monitor you into the future, but they can go increasingly into the past and find your Google searches, find your emails, find your chats, find the files that you've uploaded, your Facebook activity. A whole array of Internet activity that you've engaged in.

DAVE SEGLINS: Now Ron Diebert, Director of Citizen Lab, a technology think tank at the University of Toronto, says the goal of stopping terrorists is good, but how much intelligence is being gathered and at what cost?

RON DIEBERT (Director of Citizen Lab, University of Toronto): Is it okay in the pursuit of radical extremists and defending Canadians from possible harm that the government sets up a giant digital x-ray machine over everything that we do? Because that's effectively where we're headed right now.

s.19(1)

3

DAVE SEGLINS: CSEC says it's all within its legal mandate to find foreign terrorists. The agency says it's not targeting Canadians and any Canadian incidentally caught up in the surveillance, well, they have measures in place to protect their privacy.

Dave Seglins, CBC News, Toronto.

DAVID COMMON: Much more, including the top-secret documents, can be found at cbcnews.ca. Just follow the links to the Canadian Snowden files.

* * * *

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, November 26, 2015 6:35 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: iPolitics: Goodale making no quick calls about online police powers

Goodale making no quick calls about online police powers

Claire Wahlen

iPolitics

November 26 2015, 17:47 ET

Following RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson chilling warning that his police force cannot protect Canadians from cyber crimes, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale seemed unwilling to wade into the questions Paulson raised about Canada's legal framework.

"He and I have not had the chance to have that conversation yet and I'm looking forward to hearing the elaboration of his views," Goodale told reporters at the Securetech conference in Ottawa.

"This issue has presented difficulties in the past, very high profile ones, that obviously we're quite serious about," he added, not giving any extra air to the debate that has divided security buffs from privacy advocates.

"I just need to have that conversation with the commissioner."

Paulson made the argument Tuesday that as it currently stands, the legal framework in Canada is slowing down police efforts to enforce Canadian laws online.

"Fundamentally, ladies and gentlemen, it's hard to keep people safe on the Internet right now. The best advice we can give people is, 'Don't go (on the Internet),' which is not really working, or 'If you go, be really, really, really careful,'" Paulson told the conference.

"And if something bad happens, hopefully we'll be able to help you, but there's no guarantee."

Privacy concerns, some critics charge, have slowed police agencies down by unnecessarily demanding warrants for certain information created online. These critics argue that metadata should be readily available, including subscriber data from telecoms, a practice the Supreme Court put a plug in with the 2014 Spencer decision.

That decision came shortly after it was discovered that in 2011, nine companies were asked by law enforcement and government agencies to voluntarily hand over their customers' personal information a total of 1.2 million times.

"I'm all for warrantless access to subscriber info," said Paulson. "If I had to get a judge on the phone every time I wanted to run a licence plate when I was doing my policing, there wouldn't have been much policing getting done."

Paulson wasn't alone in advocating for broader police powers online. Former CSIS assistant director of intelligence Ray Boisvert spoke to the conference Wednesday and argued that in the "post-Snowden hysteria," privacy advocates are bringing about restrictions that not only protect lone actor attackers but often facilitate their self-radicalization.

"The challenge around the post-Snowden era is that we're going to see a lot more of this [lone actors] because it makes it difficult to find conspiracy type individuals. The advantage to the lone attacker is extremely important, because as the name implies they can construct, plan, theorize, even self-radicalize and all until they're ready to act," said Boisvert.

Despite the commissioner's cautions, internal RCMP documents looking into the affects of the Spencer ruling show no "significant negative effects" on operations.

The government however has made cyber security a priority in the publicly released ministerial mandate letters, with several departments committed to a multi-departmental review into cyber security for critical infrastructure.

Link

Sent to: !!INTERNAL; RCMP Breaking News

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, September 15, 2016 11:51 AM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: iPolitics: Goodale to host UK terror watchdog, national security committee

Goodale to host UK terror watchdog, national security committee

Amanda Connolly

iPolitics

2016-09-15, 11:36 ET

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale will host the U.K.'s terrorism legislation watchdog and members of its Intelligence and Security Committee (ISC) next week in Ottawa for a meeting that will include discussion about the government's new national security committee of parliamentarians.

The meeting will come as Parliament resumes from its summer sitting and is expected to dive into debate on Bill C-22, which was tabled on June 16 and announced the framework for the government's nine-member committee of appointed parliamentarians who will "review and scrutinize" the activities of national security agencies.

The committee brings Canada more in-line with other G7 countries' democratic review and oversight bodies, including congressional intelligence committees in the US.

It won't be the first time Goodale sits down with the eight British committee members — back in January, he spent three days in the U.K. and France holding meetings with counterterrorism partners including the ISC.

Goodale's office at the time described the trip as an opportunity for the minister to meet with his foreign counterparts on security issues ranging from how best to create a parliamentary oversight committee to how to tackle radicalization and security.

David Anderson, the U.K.'s Independent Reviewer of Terrorism Legislation, will also be taking part in the meeting with Goodale and the ISC.

Anderson, who has been described by the U.K.'s The Guardian newspaper as "one of the most informed voices in the public debate over surveillance since revelations made by former CIA employee Edward Snowden," is stepping down from his post in February 2017 after serving two three-year terms in the office.

Last month, he tabled a report to the U.K. parliament that said allowing bulk data collection by British spy agencies was "vital in preventing terrorist attacks," a move that drew the ire of some privacy groups in the country who argued the report didn't do enough to present "hard evidence" that the bulk collection was needed.

Following a speech in Ottawa last month at the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police conference, Goodale told reporters he wants to see a greater public debate about the balance between privacy and security, particularly with regards to the use of encryption.

His comments came after the police chiefs passed a resolution calling for a law that would force Canadians to hand over their electronic passwords with a judge's consent, with the head of the association stressing that criminals' increasing use of encryption means police needs more tools to keep up.

It's not clear how long Anderson or the ISC will be in Ottawa or if they are holding meetings with other parliamentarians or organizations while in town.

iPolitics has reached out to both parties to request further details.

Sent to: !!INTERNAL & !!INTERNAL 2

Pillon, Gabrielle (PS/SP)

From: PSPMediaCentre / CentredesmediasPSP (PS/SP)
Sent: Thursday, July 14, 2016 6:50 PM
To: Today's News / Actualités (PS/SP)
Subject: IT World Canada: Whistleblower Edward Snowden to keynote Toronto conference

Whistleblower Edward Snowden to keynote Toronto conference

IT World Canada
Brian Jacks
July 14, 2016

The man that says he lives on the Internet will be the showcase speaker at SecTor, a Toronto-based security conference this year.

Edward Snowden, the former CIA employee and government contractor that leaked classified documents about a mass surveillance operation run by the National Security Administration (NSA), will be appearing at the conference via a video link from Russia, where he's been living under asylum since 2013. SecTor will be Snowden's first and only commercial conference appearance in North America this year, conference organizers say.

"Edward Snowden is not only one of the biggest names in cybersecurity, but his unique situation and cybersecurity experiences also make him one of the most important and influential," said SecTor co-founder Brian Bourne in an email announcement. It's important to have him "appear in front of the Canadian IT community, so we engage and inspire today's security professionals and don't fall behind."

Snowden has been said to make his living off of speaking fees since fleeing the U.S. and leaking state secrets. Snowden's lawyer Ben Wizner once told the New York Times the fees can sometimes exceed $10,000 per appearance.

Snowden has also made appearances at conferences and gallery events via telepresence robot BeamPro, essentially a raised iPad on two wheels. He first used the robot at a TED talk in 2014.

Beyond NSA's clandestine mass surveillance operations that were leaked by Snowden, Canada's Communications Security Establishment (CSE) has also been the subject of some of his classified leaks. He's also said that Canada's intelligence gathering operations have the "weakest oversight" among western nations.

A Hollywood movie, directed by Oliver Stone and titled Snowden, is based the whistleblower's life and focuses on his choice to reveal state secrets.

SecTor begins in Toronto Oct. 17.

Media Analysis | Analyse médiatique
Cyber Security in Canada and the Cyber Security consultation and review | La Cyber sécurité au Canada et l'examen de la politique de cyber sécurité

November 1, 2015 to April 18, 2016 – 1 novembre, 2015 au 18 avril, 2016

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- PRINT AND ONLINE MEDIA / PRESSE ÉCRITE ET EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

Cyber security in Canada received a significant amount of media coverage, focusing on current cyber threats. The government of Canada's Cyber Security consultation and review received light media coverage. Overall tone of coverage was neutral.

- A small number of print and online articles mentioned Minister of Public Safety, Ralph Goodale's mandate letter asking for a review of existing measures to protect Canadians and critical infrastructure from cyber threats. Officials at Public Safety Canada stated the review will launch in the spring of 2016. It will look at legal gaps and shortcomings in police resources. The creation of the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX) received a light amount of print and online media coverage.
- The bulk of broadcast media coverage focused on cyber threats and cyber security in the business world.
- Social media trends focused on the increased global cyber threat environment, gaps in information sharing between countries (especially the U.S. and Canada) and measures for private enterprises to take to ensure their cyber security.

News Releases / Communiqués

Déclaration du ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile à propos du lancement de l'Échange canadien de menaces cybernétiques

L'honorable Ralph Goodale, ministre canadien de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile, a fait la déclaration suivante au sujet du nouvel Échange canadien de menaces cybernétiques (ECMC), un centre de cybersécurité à but non lucratif : « Le cyberspace génère des avantages extraordinaires pour la qualité de vie des Canadiens et notre prospérité nationale. Nous avons tous le devoir de protéger ces avantages contre les menaces cybernétiques. L'un de nos meilleurs moyens de défense est notre capacité à travailler ensemble et à échanger de l'information sur les menaces cybernétiques actuelles et futures, les techniques de défense et les autres pratiques exemplaires. Voilà pourquoi le gouvernement du Canada accueille favorablement la création de l'ECMC par le secteur privé. Cette nouvelle organisation favorisera la collaboration entre le secteur public et le secteur privé au Canada et nous aidera à déceler, à prévenir et à atténuer les risques cybernétiques plus efficacement. Nous serons heureux de travailler avec l'ECMC et ses membres pour assurer la sécurité du Canada et de ses citoyens. » Sécurité publique Canada

Statement from the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness on the launch of the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange

The Honourable Ralph Goodale, Canada's Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, made the following statement regarding the launch of the new Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX), a not-for-profit cyber security hub: Cyberspace provides tremendous benefits to the quality of life of Canadians and to our national prosperity. We all share in the responsibility to protect those benefits from online threats. One of our best defences is our ability to work together and share information on existing and emerging cyber security threats, defensive techniques and other best practices. For this reason, the Government of Canada welcomes the private sector initiative to create the CCTX. It will facilitate collaboration amongst public and private sectors in Canada and will help us to identify, prevent and mitigate cyber risks more effectively. We look forward to working with the CCTX and its members to keep Canada and Canadians safe and secure. Public Safety Canada

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

"We need to examine a broad collection of things related to national security" "This will involve a very extensive examination of our security and intelligence operations now and how we can make them better." "We will begin the process by circulating materials that we would invite Canadians to comment on. Where that leads at the end of the process, we'll have to see what the process itself generates." "We will be consulting Canadians broadly and Parliamentarians and subject matter experts to revise the provisions in the law." ~ Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Ralph Goodale

"Cyberspace provides tremendous benefits to the quality of life of Canadians and to our national prosperity. We all share in the responsibility to protect those benefits from online threats. One of our best defences is our ability to work together and share information on existing and emerging cyber security threats, defensive techniques and other best practices. For this reason, the Government of Canada welcomes the private sector initiative to create the CCTX. It will facilitate collaboration amongst public and private sectors in Canada and will help us to identify, prevent and mitigate cyber risks more effectively. We look forward to working with the CCTX and its members to keep Canada and Canadians safe and secure." ~ Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Ralph Goodale

"It is our intent to conduct a review that is going to be credible and comprehensive, and reaches out to all stakeholders across Canada. And also to our international partners." - Monik Beauregard, senior assistant deputy minister at Public Safety Canada's national and cybersecurity branch

"The threat is constantly evolving. The kinds of attacks, viruses and malware are rapidly changing. Nobody has the capability of staying ahead of it all the time." ~ President of the Canadian Council of Chief Executives, John Manley

"The lack of data is because companies do not want to admit that they were victim to a hack, particularly because of the perceived liability." ~ President of I-Sec Integrated Strategies and a former Assistant Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, Ray Boisvert

"We've been putting military and intelligence organizations at the top and see the world through the lens of a kind of competitive militaristic view of what cybersecurity means, when in fact I think we need to take an entirely different approach that puts more emphasis on a civilian understanding of securing cyberspace." ~ Ron Deibert, director of the Citizen Lab at the University of Toronto's Munk School of Global Affairs

"Overall, it's a very positive initiative () it will make (Canadian businesses) more resilient." ~ Partner and Cybersecurity Consulting Leader at PWC, Saj Nair

"Le FBI a publié en 2007 un rapport montrant que malgré ses craintes, le cryptage des ordinateurs n'avait jamais empêché de résoudre une affaire [...] Je ne pense donc pas qu'interdire le cryptage des mobiles résoudrait les problèmes de sécurité nationale" ~ Vicente Diaz, analyste pour l'entreprise russe Kaspersky Labs

"By bringing together technological solutions, by influencing human behaviour and by developing the insurance market, we can distribute cyber risk in order to enjoy the potential of a connected future." ~ Dominic Casserley, president and deputy chief executive officer of Willis Towers Watson, during a speech at the Commonwealth Club of California in San Francisco

"For instance, just like in the United States there is a cybercrime underground in Canada. But, the Canadian cybercrime underground is smaller and focuses primarily on trafficking in counterfeit and stolen documents and credentials." ~ Christopher Budd, global threat communications at Trend

Print & Online Media / Presse écrite et en ligne

From November 1, 2015 to April 18, 2016, media coverage of cyber security as a general topic was significant, with mentions in 310 English language articles and 69 French language articles. The bulk of articles discussed cyber threats affecting the private sector. However, the Cyber Security consultation and review received a light amount of coverage. The tone of coverage was neutral. Articles featured comments supporting the government's proposal to conduct a review and consultation on Canada's Cyber Security strategy. Stakeholders noted the need to update Canada's critical infrastructure and cyber security infrastructure.

Key issues:

- Media noted that in his mandate letter, Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Ralph Goodale, was asked to lead a review of existing measures to protect Canadians and critical infrastructure from cyber threats, in collaboration with other departments. At the Conference of Defence Associations Institute's Ottawa conference on February 18, Minister Goodale stated that the review of the cyber security policy will be comprehensive.
- The Cyber security review will focus on two threats: the increase in sexual exploitation over the Internet and national security.
- Nine major Canadian companies, along with the Canadian Council of Chief Executives, announced the formation of the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX), a non-profit organization that will allow firms to share information amongst themselves, government and research institutes about cyber-attacks.
- Budget 2016: The Communications Security Establishment, is expecting a net increase of $59.5 million "in support" of its mandate. Specifically, CSE expects to spend the money to increase its "capacity to address cyber threats and advancements in technology." Media note the bulk of money for domestic cyber security will be directed at Shared Services. Budget 2016 allocates $77.4 million over five years, starting this year, for Shared Services to update its cyber security network, patch existing problems and make sure government networks are protected from cyber threats, malicious software and unauthorized access.
- Alberta's auditor general criticized Alberta Energy for failing to assess the performance of its oil and gas royalty reduction programs and not assessing the potential impacts of a cyber-attack on the industry.

- Patrick Boucher, the acting director general responsible for critical infrastructure, said Canada works closely with its Five Eyes partners - the U.S., U.K., Australia and New Zealand - to address transnational threats.
- Media reported Canada and the U.S. are vulnerable to an electromagnetic pulse (EMP) attack.
- President Barack Obama and PM Justin Trudeau agreed to increase critical infrastructure security and information sharing on cyber security with the private sector.
- Over a two month period, Canada faced 25 attacks from sophisticated malware designed to target its critical infrastructure. Power plants, electrical grids, aviation software a variety of government-run systems were facing assault from Advanced Persistent Threat (APT) technology, likely dispatched by foreign governments both hostile and friendly.
- The World Economic Forum has listed cyber security as one of the greatest threats to business around the world
- In the private sector, media report on the lack of awareness among non-technical employees. Additionally, reports note companies are concerned about cyber security.
- According to the US Department of Homeland Security, the energy sector faces more cyber-attacks than any other industry.
- Stakeholders: Wesley Wark, a Canadian expert on issues relating to intelligence, national security and terrorism, stated that instead of spending time on a review of cyber security, what the government requires is "fresh thinking on a much larger scale about its national security capabilities and strategy". Gabe Rottman, a policy advisor at the American Civil Liberties Union in Washington: like Canada, the United States has a complicated network of government entities trying to handle cyber security threats.

Cyber threats, private sector CCTX

Tech Threat

Computer programs designed to snoop through retailers' point-of-sale (POS) systems for sensitive customer information or to encrypt files so that criminals can extort money are among the cyber threats Canadian businesses face. But a major hurdle to overcoming such threats, suggest information technology security experts, is a lack of awareness among non-technical employees. While very few threat reports focus on or cover Canada, the data available indicates that the most prominent IT security threat here is the OpenCandy toolbar, Natasha Hellenberg, senior threat researcher for Tokyo-based vendor Trend Micro Incorporated, suggests in a blog post. Users are tricked into installing this onto their machine, which is then used to also download malware onto it, says Ottawa-based Hellenberg ()One hurdle to gathering Canadian statistics for malware attacks on businesses, McCloskey advises, is the fact that it is tough to get people to come clean on their level of incidents. The federal government recently made some announcements with respect to facilitating some judgment-free sharing of incident information across industries. For example, the Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre (CCIRC) shares technical information on threats, vulnerabilities, risks and incidents with its partners to enhance collective understanding of cyber threats and incidents, and help ensure organizations have the information required to make informed decisions, Public Safety Canada reports on its website. Organizations can report cyber incidents to the [federal government] through CCIRC, adds a spokesperson for the federal department. Canadian Underwriter (2016-03-31)

This one chart explains why cybersecurity is so important

New hacking threats have emerged in the past two years, and with it has come an large increase in worldwide concern about cybersecurity. In 2014, 69% of executives expressed concerned about cyber threats, including a lack of data security, according to a PricewaterhouseCoopers survey. In 2015, an updated survey increased that number to 86%, so it's clear that the desire for better cybersecurity is not going away anytime soon. In the infographic below, John Greenough of BI Intelligence, Business Insider's premium research service, explains what cybersecurity is, what the investment will be, the top types of attacks, and the ways enterprises are protecting themselves. Business Insider (2016-03-17)

Multi-layered approach key to tackling cyber risks: Willis Towers Watson

Taking a multi-dimensional approach as opposed to relying on a sub-set of actions is needed to tackle the growing cyber security risk, Dominic Casserley, president and deputy chief executive officer of Willis Towers Watson, suggested in a recent speech at the Commonwealth Club of California in San Francisco. Casserley urged organizations in the public, private and social sectors to adopt an integrated plan for building cyber security as a package, rather than relying on a sub-set of actions in response to growing cyber threats, notes a statement issued Thursday by global advisory, broking and solutions company Willis Towers Watson. Canadian Underwriter (2016-02-26)

Téléphone intelligent - Protection des données ou sécurité nationale?

La cybersécurité touche aussi la téléphonie mobile, quoi qu'en pensent leurs usagers

Longtemps à la traîne, la sécurité des données des téléphones mobiles devient un enjeu majeur pour les entreprises et les consommateurs, mais la lutte contre le terrorisme complique l'équation. "Pour une très grande majorité des utilisateurs, les questions de sécurité peuvent supposer un frein à un usage plus poussé des technologies", explique Stéphane Geyres, responsable activités conseil et service en cybersécurité chez Accenture. Avec le développement des services sur mobiles, comme l'accès aux données bancaires, les utilisateurs s'interrogent de plus en plus sur la sécurité qu'ils peuvent en attendre. Pour autant, paradoxalement, cette question n'est pas au centre de leurs préoccupations lors de l'achat d'un nouveau modèle. Le Devoir, B4 (2016-02-25)

Spy agency unlawfully shared metadata for years

The unlawful sharing by Canada's electronic spy agency of metadata involving Canadians' communications went on for years before the practice was suspended in 2014, parliamentarians learned Monday. The disclosure by Jean-Pierre Plouffe, head of the small, independent agency that monitors the legality of Communications Security Establishment (CSE) operations, means vast amounts of unprotected data were shared with Canada's "Five Eyes" intelligence partners in the United States, Britain, Australia and New Zealand. Plouffe, testifying before the Senate's National Security Committee, was asked by Senate Opposition Leader Claude Carignan how many Canadians were affected by the privacy breach. "Given the number of years which this happened, and given the fact this is a systemic issue, it was difficult to establish the volume and the number of people affected," replied Plouffe. "Hundreds of thousands?" asked Carignan. "It is impossible to know the exact figure," said Plouffe. Metadata is information used by computer systems to identify, describe, manage or route communications across networks. It can include Internet protocol addresses, phone numbers and the time of a transmission or the location of a device. The data is vital to the CSE's collection of foreign electronic signals to detect and defend against cyber-threats to Canadian networks and terrorist threats to national security. While metadata does not reveal the content of the communications, it can expose information about the user. CSE computer software is supposed to "minimize" such information - removing potentially revealing details - before it is shared with foreign partners. Instead, reams of unminimized metadata flowed to a U.S.-based Five Eyes metadata sharing point for years. The spy agency first discovered the problem in late 2013 and suspended the practice in early 2014 until a technical fix could be found. It has yet to resume the metadata sharing, Plouffe said Monday. The CSE notified Plouffe's Office of the Communications Security Establishment Commissioner soon after discovering the problem. Plouffe went public in his annual report, released in January, and sanctioned the agency for breaking the law - the first such rebuke in the agency's long history. Postmedia News (Vancouver Sun, A10, Ottawa Citizen, Calgary Herald) (2016-02-23)

Survey: Majority of Energy Sector Companies Can't Track Cyber-Threats

According to the US Department of Homeland Security, the energy sector faces more cyber-attacks than any other industry, and attacks on industrial control system networks are on the rise. If successful, these energy sector cyber-attacks could have a dramatic physical impact. But, two-thirds of IT staff in the energy, utilities and oil and gas industries say they have no visibility into the physical ramifications at stake. Info Security Magazine (2016-02-05)

Protecting Canada

While Canada and the U.S. are vulnerable to an electromagnetic pulse (EMP) attack that has the potential to destabilize our power grid, water systems, food supply chain and more, the solution is relatively simple. But first the issue needs to become a priority for Canadian politicians. Part 1 of this two-part feature explained former CIA analyst Dr. Peter Pry's attempts to educate policymakers and the military on the need to protect our electrical grid. If an enemy detonated a nuclear missile above the skies of North America, it could take out our grid for months. Countries like North Korea and various terrorist groups have shown they can launch EMP missiles. "This is a bigger threat than the classic nuclear war we talk about," Pry explained during a recent visit to Toronto. "It will kill a lot more people. One bomb will basically end your civilization () In the mandate letter sent to Ralph Goodale, minister of public safety and emergency preparedness, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau instructs him to "lead a review of existing measures to protect Canadians and our critical infrastructure from cyber-threats." This review could be the beginning of the answer, but neither the minister's office nor department would confirm EMP is a priority. Postmedia Network (Calgary Sun, A16; Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Calgary Sun, Edmonton Sun) (2016-02-01)

The Internet's Wild West

Hijacking "smart" toasters and refrigerators and hacking corporate ventilation systems are among the new threats envisioned by cybersecurity experts as an increasing array of items are connected to the Internet. The Internet of Things, a movement that seeks to control everything from factory equipment to traffic lights and household appliances through the web, creates vast opportunities for improved efficiency and convenience. But unless companies address the emerging cybersecurity risks, the Internet of Things (or IoT) will fail, said Stephen Pattison, the vice-president of public affairs at ARM Holdings, the U.K. semiconductor company. "We ain't seen nothing yet," Pattison said, speaking on a panel at the recent Security Innovation Network's U.S./U.K. Global Cybersecurity Innovation Summit in London. Bloomberg (Waterloo Region Record, A10, Hamilton Spectator) (2016-02-01)

Canada Discovers It's Under Attack by Dozens of State-Sponsored Hackers

Over a two month period, Canada faced 25 attacks from sophisticated malware designed to target its critical infrastructure. Power plants, electrical grids, aviation software a variety of government-run systems were facing assault from Advanced Persistent Threat (APT) technology, likely dispatched by foreign governments both hostile and friendly. In access to information documents, obtained by VICE News, Public Safety Canada describes these "Advanced Persistent Threat" groups as "sophisticated threat actors with significant resources who pursue objectives over an extended period of time and attempt to maintain presence on the targeted network" and are most likely "a nation state" given the "level of intent and capabilities of these actors". APT attacks, in other words, are hacks designed to surreptitiously gain backdoor access to a system in order to lay dormant for long periods of time, usually undetected, to collect data. There were 25 incidents involving "hosts affected with APT-related malware," according to reports obtained from the Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre (CCIRC), the federal agency tasked with keeping tabs on cyber threats to the public and private sector. All of the threats came from "the Information and Communications Technologies (ICT) sector," with connections to Canada's major public infrastructure. Critical infrastructure, which is increasingly automated and online, entails public systems like the electrical grid, nuclear power plants, water filtration stations and financial institutions. It's been said that, should hackers successfully leverage one of those exploitations, it could result in a "Cyber Pearl Harbor." A report from the country's main intelligence service, the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS), says the threat posed by these hacks are "very real" and that they could "affect water supply, energy and utilities, manufacturing, Internet communications technology or even gravely affect institutions such as schools and hospitals." Public Safety Canada remained tight lipped when asked about any Canadian critical infrastructure being exploited by hackers in the employ of hostile nations. "While we do not comment on specific or potential threats against Canadian critical infrastructure interests, I can say that the CCIRC is focused on protecting vital systems outside of the federal government, including critical infrastructure, against cyber incidents," said Mylène Croteau, a spokesperson for Public Safety Canada. Vice.com (2016-01-25)

Beefing up our cyber defences

In an opinion piece, lawyers Imran Ahmad, Marlon Hylton and Bernice Karn, members of Cassels Brock Blackwell LLP's cyber-security practice write, "With cyber attacks steadily increasing in sophistication, frequency and magnitude, we must ask ourselves whether Canada is ready to meet the challenge these threats pose to our economy, national security and the overall wellbeing of Canadians. Unfortunately, when compared to the United States, the United Kingdom or Germany, Canada is clearly lagging in terms of cyber readiness (...) Nevertheless, last month alone, several positive developments within the public and private sectors signalled a real effort to move the yardsticks on Canada's cyber preparedness. The first was Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's mandate to his minister of public safety to lead a review of existing measures to protect critical infrastructure - utilities, transportation, financial sector, telecommunications, etc. - from cyber threats. Shortly thereafter, the Canadian Council of Chief Executives announced that it was establishing the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange, a member-funded, not-for-profit organization focused on helping Canadian businesses and consumers protect themselves against cyber-attacks." National Post, A9 (2016-01-20)

Cyber-attack among World Economic Forum's top global risks

The World Economic Forum (WEF) has listed cyber-security as one of the greatest threats to business around the world. In the Global Risks Report, the annual study of what the WEF fears and what the forum feels the world should fear, cyber-security has made its third appearance. The category finds itself ranked fairly high, above food crises, interstate conflict, terrorist attacks and spread of infection diseases but below climate change, fiscal crises and mass migration. In 140 economies, the report notes, cyber-attacks rank in the top ten threats. The United States is considered to have the most to be concerned about given the effects cyber-threats can have on the economy. SC Magazine (2016-01-19)

Why CIOs should pay attention to the difference in U.S. and Canadian cyber threats

When it comes to cyber threats, the U.S. and Canada are very different, according to Trend Micro threat researcher Natasha Hellberg, and that should affect how CIOs manage security. "Our culture, motivations, behaviours and political climate are all unique to Canada. These influence how threat actors here behave," she said in her post(<http://blog.trendmicro.com/trendlabs-security-intelligence/what-about-canada-eh-the-canadian-threat-landscape/>) on the TrendLabs Security Intelligence blog, What About Canada, Eh? - The Canadian Threat Landscape. The post was a supplement to Trend Micro's report, North American Underground: The Glass Tank, which examined cybercrime on both sides of the border. "In the report we find that Canadian threat trends are related but different from those in the United States," noted Christopher Budd, global threat communications at Trend. "For instance, just like in the United States there is a cybercrime underground in Canada. But, the Canadian cybercrime underground is smaller and focuses primarily on trafficking in counterfeit and stolen documents and credentials." National Post (2016-01-18)

Must see: The government doesn't want you to click here

Warnings against clickbait and phishing permeate Canadian spy agency's cyber defence reports.

Government of Canada users should avoid clicking on suspicious or catchy articles or email links, warns a Canadian spy agency in its Cyber Defence Report for the first quarter of 2015. "Clickbait," it explains, "are websites or online articles designed to drive visitor traffic by containing catchy sensationalist headlines like 'must see' or 'unbelievable' and are distributed over social media and online ads." They want to exploit curiosity, the Communications Security Establishment warns-to "drive web traffic and generate advertising revenue" or to "launch exploits against systems that visit a seeded website." Though the former sounds like the behaviour of any modern news organization, it's the latter that concerns Canada's government. Luring users through email links, or phishing, is one of the ways that hackers can attempt to compromise systems or access classified data. Embassy (2016-01-13)

Cybersecurity focus increases in Canada, U.S. and U.K.

Over the past week, major initiatives have been launched in Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom focused on enhancing cybersecurity. In Canada last week, the Canadian Council of Chief Executives and a group of leading Canadian companies recently announced plans for an independent, not-for-profit organization, the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX), to help Canadian businesses and consumers guard against cyber attacks. Launching in 2016, the CCTX will work to share information about cyber threats and vulnerabilities among businesses, government and research institutions. It will provide its members and the general public with analysis of cybersecurity issues and act as a point of contact for cyber information-sharing organizations in other countries. BiometricUpdate.com (2015-12-15)

New threat intelligence sharing site to open for all Canadian firms

Canadian CISOs are about to get help in defending attacks through something few other nations have - a national cyber threat information exchange for small, medium and large enterprises from all sectors. The Canadian Council of Chief Executives announced this morning that it and a group of major corporations including banks and telcos some of whom have their own private threat sharing networks are behind the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX) to help businesses and consumers stay ahead of cyber attacks. The idea is to really start sharing information on a very big scale so all participants will be able to access intelligence and threat information from their partners and use this information to protect their systems much better, said Benoit Dupont, national scientific director of the Montreal-based SERENE-RISC cybersecurity information exchange and a board member of CCTX. The founding members are: Air Canada, Bell Canada, Canadian National Railway Company, HydroOne, Manulife, Royal Bank of Canada, Telus, TD Bank Group and TransCanada Corporation. The non-profit exchange will be up and running in the first quarter of next year, although all of its capabilities won't be available until the end of the year. A search for an executive director starts today. Large companies (and the definition of large hasn't been settled yet) will be charged $50,000 a year, mid-size firms $20,000 and small firms $5,000. IT.World.Canada (2015-12-11)

Canadian companies have a big new ally in the fight against cyber crime

Businesses in Canada will soon have a new network to guard against cyber crime, which is costing them more than $3 billion a year. Nine major Canadian companies, including the big telcos and some of the Big Five banks, along with the Canadian Council of Chief Executives on Friday announced they are forming the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX), a non-profit organization that will allow firms to share information amongst themselves, government and research institutes about cyber attacks. Overall, it's a very positive initiative, said Saj Nair, a partner and cybersecurity consulting leader at PwC Canada. It will make (Canadian businesses) more resilient. The effect of cyber crime on Canadian GDP is lower than in the U.S. (0.17 per cent versus 0.64 per cent), but the reason for this gap may be underreporting and a lack of data, according to a Fraser Institute report. The lack of data is because companies do not want to admit that they were victim to a hack, particularly because of the perceived liability, said Ray Boisvert, president of I-Sec Integrated Strategies and a former assistant director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Financial Post (2015-12-11)

New cybersecurity network aims to share data on emerging threats

Leaders of some of Canada's largest industries are creating a new network to help businesses and the public stay abreast of emerging cyber threats from malware, hackers and online criminals. "The threat is constantly evolving. The kinds of attacks, viruses and malware are rapidly changing. Nobody has the capability of staying ahead of it all the time," said John Manley, president of the Canadian Council of Chief Executives, which is spearheading the program. Billed as the CCTX - or the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange - it is set to launch in early 2016. It will be run as an independent, not-for-profit organization open to business and institutions of all sizes. Its founding members include Air Canada, Bell Canada, CN Rail and HydroOne, as well as Royal Bank and TD. The initiative will also work with the federal government's Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre run by the Ministry of Public Safety. CBC News (2015-12-11)

Canadian businesses launching organization to combat cyber threats

Canada's private sector is taking cyber security into its own hands in an attempt to get back some of $3 billion they're losing to online thieves annually. The Canadian Council of Chief Executives and nine major

Canadian companies including several big telecoms and two of the Big Five banks announced Friday they are forming the Canadian Cyber Threat Exchange (CCTX), set to be launched in early 2016. The threat is constantly evolving. The kinds of attacks, viruses and malware are rapidly changing. Nobody has the capability of staying ahead of it all the time, said John Manley, president of the CCCE, which is spearheading the program. It will be run as an independent, not-for-profit organization open to business and institutions of all sizes. Founding members include Air Canada, Bell Canada, CN Rail and Hydro One, as well as Royal Bank, Manulife and TD. iPolitics (2015-12-11)

When the government really IS here to help with cybersecurity

Last week, I had the privilege of being invited to a workshop hosted by the Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre (CCIRC). Much like many such organizations around the world, CCIRC wants to ensure that Canadian citizens enjoy a free*, secure and safe online experience. The workshop included individuals from both the public and private sectors and from diverse countries. The goal of the week was to seek a better understanding of the types and magnitude of online threats faced by Canadians, what tools we might use to combat cyber threats and how the public and private sectors can better co-operate to achieve a safer cyber Canada. Sophos Security (2015-11-27)

When the government really IS here to help with cybersecurity

According to Ronald Reagan, the nine most terrifying words in the English language are: I'm from the government and I'm here to help. Thanks to Edward Snowden, those concerned with security and privacy would probably agree. I'm here to tell you that there is a different side to this story and it's one that is worth writing about. Last week, I had the privilege of being invited to a workshop hosted by the Canadian Cyber Incident Response Centre (CCIRC) ()Much like many such organizations around the world, CCIRC wants to ensure that Canadian citizens enjoy a free*, secure and safe online experience. The workshop included individuals from both the public and private sectors and from diverse countries. The goal of the week was to seek a better understanding of the types and magnitude of online threats faced by Canadians, what tools we might use to combat cyber threats and how the public and private sectors can better co-operate to achieve a safer cyber Canada. Naked Security (2015-11-27)

Canada 'failing' in fight against cybercrime, hacking

Canada is lagging behind the U.S., Britain and other countries in defending citizens and businesses against malicious hackers and cyber-criminals, say numerous groups involved in trying to police the internet. "We're failing, we're falling behind," warns Katherine Thompson of the Canadian Advanced Technology Alliance, one of Canada's largest private-sector high-tech advocacy groups. "We cannot continue down the path that we're on right now," she told CBC News. "We just went through a very long federal election where not one of the major party leaders discussed cyber-security." Since 2010, Public Safety Canada has spent $245 million on defending government computer networks, safeguarding critical infrastructure and educating the public. It has also earmarked $142 million over the next five years to tackle cyber-threats particularly against critical infrastructure. But leaders in Canada's policing, IT and cyber-security sectors say the federal strategy is focused primarily on national security threats and does little to combat the dramatic growth in email scams, online extortion and breaches at corporate computer networks. Canadians are also largely in the dark about the scope of cybercrimes given the country has no central agency to track online scams and malicious electronic attacks. What's more, there are no federal laws to force companies to disclose hacks, security breaches, thefts of data or money so the general public has incomplete knowledge of which companies have been compromised. CBC News (2015-11-24)

Cyber threats to critical infrastructure on the minister of public safety's radar

On November 13, 2015, as part of the new Canadian Prime Minister's commitment to an open and transparent government, ministerial mandate letters were made public. These letters outline a broad framework for what ministers are expected to accomplish, including specific policy objectives and challenges to be addressed. While they are not intended to be an exhaustive list of all files that a Minister needs to address, they provide insight in terms of the government's overall priorities for the ministry. The ministerial letter issued to the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness (the Minister) lists several priorities, most notably: Lead a review of existing measures to protect Canadians and our critical infrastructure from cyber-threats, in collaboration with the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Innovation, Science and Economic Development, the Minister of Infrastructure and Communities, the Minister of Public Services and Procurement, and the President of the Treasury Board. Recognizing cyber threats in the context of ensuring the security of Canada's critical infrastructures is an important step. The Minister will be able to build upon the existing Public Safety's Action Plan for Critical Infrastructure (2014-2017) which outlines the government's cyber strategy to protecting critical infrastructures. Given the changing landscape when it comes to cyber threats, the timing of the Minister's review is timely. Lexology.com (2015-11-24)

Canada's investing industry urged to make detailed plans to respond to cyber attacks

Canada's investment industry association is urging dealers to make detailed plans at the most senior levels to prepare for and respond to cyber-attacks. The cyber threat is far too sophisticated and serious to relegate it simply to the firm's IT department, Ian Russell, chief executive of the Investment Industry Association of Canada, said in a letter to members Tuesday. Russell said directors and senior executives including the chief executive must be involved, and urged investment dealers to scrutinize their internal defences and technical controls, as well as any third-party vendors with access to their systems. This means the firm must undertake due diligence of third party vendors, to ensure it covers all system entry points to reduce the ways in which cybercriminals can access a firm's systems, the letter said. Financial Post (Canada.com) (2015-11-24)

Hacked Medical Devices May Be The Biggest Cyber Security Threat In 2016

Hackers have been using ransomware--a type of malware in which attackers can steal or delete the contents of users' computers if they don't pay a ransom--for the past 25 years. Now, it seems, the same tactic may be used on insulin pumps and pacemakers. Ransomware in medical devices is the single biggest cyber security threat for 2016, according to a recent report from research and advisory firm Forrester and reported by Motherboard. Popular Science (2015-11-24)

Trudeau government putting new emphasis on cybersecurity

The neglected federal cybersecurity file made a surprising appearance in several of the ministerial mandate letters publicly released last week, buried under hot-topic campaign promises like the Syrian refugee project and the legalization of marijuana. Observers say it's a good sign that Canada is starting to take the threat of cybercrime more seriously. "There's a lack of a strategy and a lack of clarity of who in the government is responsible for what," said former CSIS assistant director of intelligence Ray Boisvert, who has criticized the Canadian government in the past for not doing enough to protect Canada's critical infrastructure from cyberattacks. "We (Canada) are a little complacent and in a sort of 'stand by and watch others' mode - which I think is globally a problem - and unlike other defence issues there's no hiding under the U.S. umbrella, because cyber touches everyone, everywhere," said Boisvert. "There are no walls or barriers of isolation for Canada, no hiding behind our three oceans." The planned review of cybersecurity, which covers seven federal departments, will assess Canada's critical infrastructure against cyber threats. There's no word yet on when the review might take place or how much it might cost. Ron Deibert, director of the Citizen Lab at the University of Toronto's Munk School of Global Affairs, said Canada's approach to cybersecurity has been too "top-down, state-driven (and) militaristic" and needs a complete rethink. "We've been putting military and intelligence organizations at the top and see the world through the lens of a kind of competitive militaristic view of what cybersecurity means, when in fact I think we need to take an entirely different approach that puts more emphasis on a civilian understanding of securing cyberspace," said Deibert. The promise of a review comes not long after the previous government committed in a budget to new legislation and programs and tens of millions of dollars in funding for the framework. iPolitics (2015-11-17)

Cyber security a growing issue for govts, infrastructure operators: report

Cyber security continues to grow as one of the largest challenges facing both governments and critical infrastructure operators, according to a new report from a global analyst firm which says that engagement between industry and key stakeholders is critical to better protect from increasingly complex cyber threats. In a new video report just released, Frost & Sullivan senior consultant Anthony Leather says economic and financial instability, as well as political and social unrest, have brought controversy and insecurity across a number of countries, impacting security decisions worldwide - posing increasingly complex security challenges to governments and across critical infrastructure. Leather explores the changing global dynamics that are driving security stakeholders to re-evaluate resources and operational requirements to protect against a range of evolving threats from traditional terrorism and crime to emerging threats from cyber security, information and unknown groups. IT Wire (2015-11-04)

Spy agency wants industry help on cyber security

Canada's electronic spy agency has identified holes in the way the country secures government information-and wants private industry to help fill them. The Communications Security Establishment of Canada is introducing a new "medium" security level for the electronic storage and transmission of sensitive government information, it announced at this year's Government Technology Exhibition and Conference in Ottawa. John Turnbull, the director general of CSEC's Cyber Protection Branch, told industry groups Oct. 21 that there is "an awful lot" of over-classified information within the Canadian government. For now, the government only operates with two levels of assurance. Basic assurance secures most of the government's daily operations, while much more robust high assurance secures classified information. This includes military, security and intelligence activities. () There are big costs associated with administering security clearances and physically renovating buildings to be more secure. CSEC has develops infrastructure to protect information and gathers foreign intelligence about cyber threats. Within CSEC is a Cyber Threat Evaluation Centre that handles cyber threat incident reports. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service analyzes and investigates security threats writ large. And the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigate cyber crimes. The buck doesn't stop there: Foreign Affairs, Trade and Development Canada advises the government on "the international dimension of cyber security." Embassy (2015-11-04)

Cyber security consultation/review

CSE chief says federal departments need to "get on" Shared Services' cyber defences

Despite recent news that the RCMP and Department of National Defence are having problems with Shared Services Canada, the head of the country's cyber defence agency says the platform is a "key part" of Canada's cyber operations and more departments need to get on board. CBC News reported last week that it had obtained documents showing that investigations were jeopardized and the public put at risk because of Shared Services' disorganization. It also said senior DND staff were annoyed by Shared Services and said the department caused "significant inefficiency at every level," - from service delivery to procuring resources. Despite that, Greta Bossenmaier, chief of the Communications Security Establishment, told members of the Senate's national security committee on Monday afternoon that, despite the challenges, the department is a critical part of the agency's broader strategy for keeping Government of Canada networks secure - and more agencies need to use it to its full capabilities (...). One of the key tasks outlined for Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale in his mandate letter is the creation of a cyber review that will assess how well Canada is doing in preparing for cyber attacks on things like critical infrastructure, and what it can do better. No date for that review is set but Sajjan's defence policy review, scheduled to be ready by the end of the year, is also expected to include a cyber component. iPolitics (2016-03-21)

Cyber security review still in early stages, Senate told

Public Safety officials say they're still trying to figure out the scope of a review into protecting critical infrastructure from cyber attacks. Speaking before a Senate committee on national defence Monday, Monik Beauregard said that the department is under a tight timeline to review its efforts and get a report to cabinet. But Beauregard said the department is still trying to figure out how wide or narrow the review will be. "At this point, we're all looking at the scope of the reviews and thinking about how to carry it out," Beauregard told senators Monday evening. In his mandate from the prime minister, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale was asked to lead the review into critical infrastructure protection, in co-ordination with five of his cabinet colleagues. "Critical infrastructure" has a broad definition, but is typically thought of as systems, networks, facilities and assets essential to public safety, national security and economic interests of Canada. That includes everything from bridges to roads, but also data centres, financial networks and natural resources projects. Toronto Star, A6 (2016-03-08)

National security policy under review, says Goodale Cyber security also being reviewed in cabinet

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale says his department is undertaking a national security review. "We want open, inclusive consultations that reassure Canadians that their engagement is not just a window dressing but that it's meaningful and has impact," the minister told a recent Ottawa defence conference. Mr. Goodale said the government is looking for "thoughtful discussion, analysis [and] debate." He specifically cited a National Post op-ed by Luc Portelance, former president of the Canada Border Services Agency and Ray Boisvert, former assistant director of intelligence at Canada's spy agency, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Their message was that the government has a "timely opportunity to consider a thorough assessment of our national security structure" and advocated a "national security reset." (...) One thing that Mr. Goodale's mandate letter does specify is to conduct a review of cyber security policy with other cabinet ministers. Expect it to be "comprehensive," he told the CDA Institute crowd. Embassy (2016-03-01)

Trudeau government targets cyber threats

With Internet-based child sex-ploitation crimes skyrocketing, the Trudeau government intends to launch a "credible and comprehensive" review this spring of cybersecurity threats in Canada. Officials with Public Safety Canada said Thursday that while the details of that review are still being hammered out by Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale, a review will determine how Canada can best deal with everything from online predators to digital jihadists. Kathy Thompson, assistant deputy minister in charge of the Community Safety and Countering Crime Branch at Public Safety Canada, said that while the crime rate continues to decline across the country, "there are some exceptions. One of those exceptions is child sexual exploitation over the Internet - that is going up exponentially, year over year." Thompson made her remarks at the House of Commons Public Safety and National Security Committee, where MPs are looking for topics their group can zero in on during the current parliamentary session. A cybersecurity review that looks at legal gaps and shortcomings in police resources could form a plan for the way the Trudeau government approaches law and-order issues. Toronto Sun, A8 (Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun) (2016-02-19)

Crippling Attack

Imagine a North America in a permanent blackout - no electricity, transportation, banking. All modern machinery stopped leading to the collapse of civilization. And it's not a science fiction story - it's the reality of what could happen with an electromagnetic pulse (EMP) attack. While both Canada and the United States are currently vulnerable to an electromagnetic pulse (EMP) attack that has the potential to destabilize our power grid, water systems, food supply chain and more, the solution is relatively simple. But first the issue needs to become a priority for Canadian politicians. The challenge is the issue doesn't appear to be a priority in Canada. Representatives from CSIS, the RCMP and Public Safety Canada all confirm that attacks to what's called "critical infrastructure" are concerns of theirs, but it appears no recent reports specifically mention EMP. It's unclear to what degree government experts are studying the issue. In the mandate letter sent to Ralph Goodale, minister of public safety and emergency preparedness, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau instructs him to "lead a review of existing measures to protect Canadians and our critical infrastructure from cyber-threats." This review could be the beginning of the answer, but neither the minister's office nor the department would confirm if EMP was a priority. Winnipeg Sun, A9 (Toronto Sun, Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun) (2016-02-01)

Canada: Cyber Threats To Critical Infrastructure On The Minister Of Public Safety's Radar

On November 13, 2015, as part of the new Canadian Prime Minister's commitment to an open and transparent government, ministerial mandate letters were made public. These letters outline a broad framework for what ministers are expected to accomplish, including specific policy objectives and challenges to be addressed. While they are not intended to be an exhaustive list of all files that a Minister needs to address, they provide insight in terms of the government's overall priorities for the ministry. The ministerial letter issued to the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness (the "Minister") lists several priorities, most notably: "Lead a review of existing measures to protect Canadians and our critical infrastructure from cyber-threats, in collaboration with the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Innovation, Science and Economic Development, the Minister of Infrastructure and Communities, the Minister of Public Services and Procurement, and the President of the Treasury Board." Recognizing cyber threats in the context of ensuring the security of Canada's critical infrastructures is an important step. Cassels Brock (Mondaq.com) (2016-01-08)

Trudeau's instincts have not served him well

An opinion piece by Wesley Wark, visiting professor at the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Ottawa and an expert on international intelligence and security states, "Justin Trudeau has proudly proclaimed that "Canada is back" as a constructive partner in global affairs. The first test of that proud and no doubt heartfelt claim has come from an unexpected and horrific event. The night of carnage in Paris, and the fear of what might come next, will force the new Liberal government to pay more attention to security policy than they intended. They have some difficult decisions to face. Our hearts and sympathies go out to the French people. But our ability to help is limited. With only a small overseas intelligence capacity, Canada is not in much of a position to offer security assistance to France in its efforts to understand current Islamic State plotting. The question of Canada's foreign intelligence needs has, in the aftermath of this fresh round of attacks in Paris, raised its head once again. Instead of spending time on a promised review of cyber security, what the new government requires is fresh thinking on a much larger scale about its national security capabilities and strategy." National Post, A10 (2015-11-16)

Provinces, academics

UNB can help make New Brunswick a global locus for cyber security

Every day, headlines surrounding cybersecurity become grimmer, from attacks against power plants to hacks that can disable SUVs, to the loss of personal records in massive data breaches affecting retailers, hospitals, governments, universities and more. Credible entities put the global cost of cyber attacks at $400 billion last year, and predict losses exceeding $2.1 trillion by 2020. Global spending on cyber security reflects this growing threat, with the cyber-security industry expected to grow to more than $170 billion by 2020 from $75 billion today. New Brunswick, as a pioneer in the 1990s and early 2000s in Internet and later broadband Internet adoption, is poised once again to be a global leader in cyber security. The strong partnership between the University of New Brunswick and IBM helped lay the foundation for the company's announcement this week that it is growing its workforce in this province. (...) UNB has the potential to lead across several areas of cybersecurity, including the fast-growing area of Internet of Things and the need to protect critical infrastructure thanks to our collaborative partnership with Siemens Canada and NB Power in the Smart Grid Innovation Network. Times&Transcript (2016-04-01)

Royalty reduction, cyber security flagged

Alberta Energy taken to task in latest report by auditor general

Alberta's auditor general criticized Alberta Energy on Wednesday for failing to assess the performance of its oil and gas royalty reduction programs and not assessing the potential impacts of a cyber attack on the industry. With the first of 15 recommendations in his February report, Merwan Saher called on the ministry to annually evaluate and report on whether the ministry's royalty reduction programs meet their objectives. He also urged the department to assess the threat and impact of attacks on the industrial control systems used to operate oil and gas infrastructure. (...) His concerns are even greater in the oil and gas sector. While Alberta Justice has assessed a low risk of a cyber attack against about 50 critical oil and gas sites in Alberta, no one has calculated the impact if such an attack did occur. "We were unable to obtain any documentation from any provincial government entity to show that an assessment of the possible risks and impacts from an attack on unsecured (industrial control systems) was completed," said the auditor general. Calgary Herald, A4 (2016-02-11)

International collaboration

It wasn't all play for Trudeau and Obama

It wasn't all parties and elbow-rubbing as Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and U.S. President Barack Obama announced a plethora of new agreements and policies Thursday in Washington. Here's what you need to know: (...) The leaders agreed to beef up critical infrastructure security and information sharing on cyber-security with the private sector. They said they will work to get more regional partners involved in the G7 24/7 Network, which connects national police agencies to fight cyber crime. The countries will work even closer on the world stage to advance a variety of objectives. The leaders promised to help Haiti and Ukraine stand on their own two feet, push for better access to electricity and education for girls in Africa, and work outside the UN to fight nuclear proliferation. They also both committed to doing more on UN peacekeeping and the refugee crisis. Money was pledged to help dozens of countries prevent and respond to the threat of infectious disease. National Post (2016-03-11)

Obama says upgrading U.S. cybersecurity is complex, long-term job

President Barack Obama said on Wednesday the United States is not as organized as it needs to be to step up its protections against cyber threats, and that making improvements would be a complex task lasting well beyond his time in office. Obama made his comments after meeting in the Oval Office with two advisers who will lead a new commission tasked with making recommendations by the end of the year on a long-term plan for cybersecurity upgrades. Reuters (2016-02-18)

Les réseaux djihadistes communiquent avec un arsenal toujours plus perfectionné

De l'adresse cachée au jeu en ligne, les réseaux djihadistes utilisent de mieux en mieux les ressources d'internet pour recruter et communiquer, entraînant les services de sécurité dans une course-poursuite technologique pour les localiser et décrypter leurs messages. Peut-on agir impunément sur le web en restant anonyme ? Pas complètement, même si, selon des experts réunis au Forum international de la cybersécurité (FIC) à Lille, dans le nord de la France, les méthodes des cellules terroristes sont désormais les mêmes que celles des hackers. Pour rester discret sur internet, il faut d'abord se procurer une adresse IP (l'identification de l'appareil) exotique. Et, explique à l'AFP Thierry Karsenti chez l'éditeur d'antivirus israélien Check Point, ne jamais surfer depuis chez soi, en profitant au maximum du wifi public. Il faut ensuite utiliser des flux anonymisés, comme le réseau TOR. Et crypter ses communications. AFP (Journal de Montréal) (2016-01-25)

Peut-on décrypter les conversations des djihadistes ?

Lutte contre le terrorisme

Mercredi, lors d'une réunion spéciale de l'ONU, des responsables antiterroristes du Canada et de France ont manifesté leur exaspération. Les ordinateurs et téléphones qu'ils saisissent auprès de suspects sont maintenant impossibles à faire parler. Contacts, historique d'appels, messages reçus et envoyés : l'information se trouve bel et bien dans la mémoire de l'appareil... mais ils ne peuvent la lire. Oliver Bilodeau, chercheur en cybersécurité pour la firme montréalaise GoSecure, croit que les forces antiterroristes se butent bel et bien à un mur. « Il n'y a aucune porte dérobée, il n'y a aucun accès que pourraient utiliser les autorités », dit-il. C'est que les iPhone, téléphones Android et BlackBerry de nouvelle génération ne se contentent plus d'essayer d'établir des communications sécurisées. Ils encryptent les données contenues sur le téléphone lui-même. La Presse+ (2015-12-18)

Forum sur la sécurité à Halifax

La Chine va-t-elle stopper ses cyberattaques?

Le directeur de l'agence nationale de sécurité (NSA) des États-Unis affirme que rien n'assure pour l'instant que la Chine va arrêter de parrainer des cyberattaques menées contre des entreprises privées. Le président américain Barack Obama et son homologue chinois Xi Jinping se sont entendus, en septembre, pour ne pas voler en ligne des secrets ou des renseignements commerciaux confidentiels ou soutenir de telles pratiques. L'accord s'applique uniquement aux attaques informatiques lancées avec le consentement des gouvernements contre des entreprises. Au Forum sur la sécurité internationale à Halifax, l'amiral Michael Rogers, qui est à la tête du United States Cyber Command en plus de diriger la NSA, a confié, samedi, avoir été surpris que le gouvernement chinois accepte de signer cet accord. Mais quelques semaines après la conclusion de l'entente, la compagnie californienne CrowdStrike, qui est spécialisée dans la cybersécurité, a rapporté avoir détecté au moins sept attaques en ligne menées par la Chine contre des entreprises technologiques et pharmaceutiques américaines. Presse Canadienne (Le Soleil, Acadie Nouvelle) (2015-11-23)

Feds punt DND procurement cash to 2022, acknowledge delays

The Liberal government gave Department of National Defence the propellor shaft in this year's budget, punting money earmarked for procurement into the future and essentially acknowledging what defence industry experts have been suggesting that major projects like the CF-18 replacements and shipbuilding are going to take longer than initially thought. Overall, when it comes to security issues Budget 2016 focuses internationally on providing targeted aid for those on the frontlines of conflict and crises, and domestically on strengthening existing law enforcement and cyber security resources. BOOSTING SHARED SERVICES. While there is no new funding specifically for agencies like CSIS and the CSE, the bulk of money for domestic cyber security will be funnelled through Shared Services. The former Conservative government created the department in 2012. It is responsible for managing the government's networks and systems, such as email. Budget 2016 allocates $77.4 million over five years, starting this year, for Shared Services to update its cyber security network, patch existing problems and make sure government networks are protected from cyber threats, malicious software and unauthorized access. As well, Shared Services will also get $383.3 million over the next two fiscal years to transform the government's information technology systems, data centres and communication networks. That decision comes on the heels of an Auditor General report that suggested Shared Services was having problems maintaining and improving government IT services. COUNTER-RADICALIZATION OFFICE. On that front, the Liberals ticked off an election promise by announcing funding for the creation of an Office of the Community Outreach and Counter-Radicalization Coordinator. That office will be responsible for coordinating national counter-radicalization initiatives and assessing what works and what doesn't as various municipalities and provinces implement their own efforts. The office will get $35 million over five years, with $10 million each year after that. iPolitics (2016-03-22)

Spy agencies expect more funding in government's upcoming budget CSIS, CSE forecast additional $95 million from Ottawa to address security mandate

Canada's spies are expecting a budget boost when the Liberals table their first fiscal plan next month, documents released Tuesday show. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) and the Communications Security Establishment (CSE) have estimated an additional $95 million for intelligence and cyberdefence operations next year. The figures were released in the government's main estimates document, a best-guess scenario for departments and agencies released a month before the Liberals table their first budget. CSIS expects to see an additional $35.5 million "in support of Canada's national security and the safety of Canadians." A breakdown of CSIS budget - grouped vaguely into "intelligence" and "security screening" - shows most of the increase will go to intelligence operations. CSE, the electronic spying and cyberdefence agency, is expecting a net increase of $59.5 million "in support" of its mandate. Specifically, CSE expects to spend the money to increase its "capacity to address cyber threats and advancements in technology." Together, the two spy agencies estimate they'll spend $1.2 billion in 2016-17, a slight increase compared with the 2015-16 estimates of $1.075 billion. CSE spokeswoman Lauri Sullivan said in a statement that the funding will go to addressing several "key vulnerabilities" in government networks, as well as moving forward with the national Cyber Security Strategy. "CSE's mandate, including our unique skills in areas like cyber defence, are critical in advancing Canada's national security priorities," Sullivan wrote. Toronto Star, A12 (2016-02-24)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

From November 1, 2015 to April 18, 2016, these topics generated a significant amount of broadcast media coverage with over 1000 reports. Reports focused on cyber threats and cyber security in the business world.

Of note:

Newstalk 1010-Toronto - Tech Talk interviewed Mark Matz, Cyber security expert at Public Safety Canada, regarding cyber safety for small and medium sized businesses. Transcript (2016-03-27)

Public Safety Minister, Ralph Goodale was interviewed on CBC Radio's The House. Representatives of the Five Eyes countries, the United States, Canada, UK, Australia and New Zealand, met in Washington

DC to discuss ways of cooperating even more closely on cyber security and combating violent extremism. The minister noted positive work was done on issues around counter radicalization and on cyber security. Information sharing is an important priority for Canada's allies. Transcript (2016-02-20)

CTV News reports on the release of reports on CSIS and CSEC. Rough Transcript (2016-01-28)

CBC News The Exchange interviewed CEO of Agari Data, Patrick Peterson, regarding artisanal spam. Rough Transcript (2016-01-25)

CTV News Power Play interviewed Ontario Attorney General Madeleine Meilleur regarding a meeting of Canada's Justice Ministers. They discussed and promised to collaborate on cyber security. Rough Transcript (2016-01-21)

Radio-Canada, Sur le Net présente un reportage sur les jeux vidéo et les réseaux terroristes. Transcription (2015-11-18)

Social Media / Médias sociaux

Due to technical limitations, social media analyses can only be compiled for a 90-day maximum period. Therefore, results will be presented in two sections based on the requested time period.

This analysis was compiled using the following keyword combinations:

"Canada" AND "cyber" AND "threat"
"Canada" AND "cyb ernetique" AND "menace"
"Canada" AND "cybersecurity"
"Canada" AND "cybersecurity" AND "threat"
"Canada" AND "cybersecurit "
"Canada" AND "cybersecurit " AND "menace"
"canadian" AND "cyber" AND "threat"
"canadien" AND "cybern tique" AND "menace"
"cctx" AND "cybersecurity"
"cctx" AND "cybersecurit "
"cybersecurity" AND "Canada" AND "strategy"
"cybers curit " AND "Canada" AND "strat gie"

1) November 1, 2015 – January 31, 2016

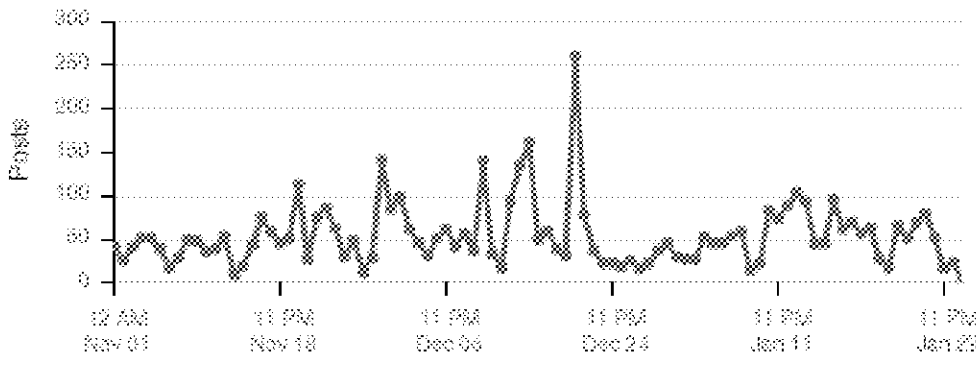

For this period, social media activity on cyber-security and threats was fairly significant, with a total of 5058 posts on the topic.

Below is a graph illustrating social media activity by platform:

There were approximately 1421 tweets, 1368 blog posts, 1211 news site posts and 1058 other posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout this period:

Activity peaked on December 20 with 260 posts, due to a number of posts referring to cyber security concerns, namely the discovery of a vulnerability in Bell Canada routers.

2) February 1, 2016 – April 18, 2016

For this period, social media activity on cyber-security and threats was fairly significant, with a total of 4546 posts on the topic.

Below is a graph illustrating social media activity by platform:

There were approximately 1631 tweets, 1266 blog posts, 754 news site posts, and 895 other posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout this period:

Activity peaked at various times, most specifically April 1-2 with a number of posts and tweets on responses from the U.S. and Canada on increases in ransomware attacks, specifically on hospitals.

Overall, social media trends focused on the increased global cyber-threat environment, gaps in information sharing between countries (especially the U.S. and Canada) and measures for private enterprises to take to ensure their cyber-security.

Tweets of note

@Andrew_Flick

New report gives Canada a 77% grade for #cybersecurity readiness <http://bit.ly/1MZyzQi> (2015-11-20)

@Safety_Canada

We'll be working w/ #CCTX on id-ing & preventing #cybersecurity threats (2015-12-11)

@SecRecon

Critical WPS vulnerability discovered in Bell Canada Home Hub routers. #CyberSecurity #InfoSec @SecRecon <http://www.neowin.net/news/critical-wps-vulnerability-discovered-in-bell-canada-home-hub-routers...> (2015-12-21)

@globeandmail

Can business and government ensure Canada's cybersecurity? <http://trib.al/R8Q567K> from @GlobeBusiness (2016-02-22)

@LazyConsultant

#Canada stops sharing some spy info with allies after #breach <http://buff.ly/23x66bP>. #cybersecurity (2016-01-29)

@rickjtaylor

Cybercrime is evolving to be more personal and surreptitious | IT World Canada News
<http://ift.tt/1UwOZmy>. #cybersecurity #cyber #infosec (2016-03-16)

@InfosecurityMag

Ransomware Threat Hits Critical Mass: US Department of Homeland Security and the Canadian Cyber Incident Respo... bit.ly/1SGitw7 (2016-04-01)

@edelsonpc

U.S., Canada issue joint alert on #ransomware after hospital attacks #cybersecurity #HIPAA
<http://reut.rs/1MXOTho> via @RossMorley (2016-04-01)

@FireEye

Our GM of Canada, @akssecure, talks about cyber security in the Canadian market on the @sectorca conference blog (2016-04-11)

@WSJcanada

IBM cybersecurity researchers find new type of malicious software used to steal $4 million at U.S., Canada banks on wsj.com/1qKuvf8 (2016-04-15)

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Media Analysis | Analyse médiatique
R. v. Spencer and Teksavvy/Rogers Reports on Government Data Requests
2014-04-01 – 2014-11-24

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- PRESS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS DE PRESSE
- CANADIAN PRINT & ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS CANADIENS IMPRIMÉS ET EN LIGNE
- INTERNATIONAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS INTERNATIONAUX
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- On June 13 2014, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled in the case of R. v. Spencer that police obtaining basic subscriber information from an ISP without a warrant was a violation of Charter rights. The effect of this decision on government policy is still being examined.
- In June of 2014, telecommunications companies TekSavvy Solutions Inc. and Rogers Communications Inc. both released reports on the number of requests for data made to them by government agencies. TekSavvy's report cites a correlation between its report and allegations by Edward Snowden regarding data surveillance by the U.S. government and its "Five Eyes" partners, including Canada. This was highlighted in several media reports.
- Following the release of their reports and the R. v. Spencer decision, both Rogers and TekSavvy stated that they would not disclose subscriber information to police without a warrant.
- Several reports mentioned that other telecommunications companies would produce their own reports on government-requested data, which happened in September with Telus Corp.
- A good deal of coverage also focused on how the Spencer decision and change in policy from telecommunications providers would negatively impact the proposed Bill C-13.
- Coverage of both topics was light to moderate, with the tone ranging from neutral to critical of the government for collecting data on its citizens.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

- "Our Office welcomes this seminal decision for privacy protection in Canada. In its decision today, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized that anonymity on the internet is a critical component of informational privacy. The Court ruled that there is indeed a reasonable expectation of privacy in subscriber information. The Court agreed that this information could, in many cases, be the key to unlocking sensitive details about a user's online activities and is therefore worthy of constitutional protection." ~ Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien regarding the Supreme Court decision in R. v. Spencer

- "The Edward Snowden leaks based in the U.S. ... have helped underline a key commitment that is required to achieve this mission, which is strong data privacy and transparency." – Bram Abramson, Chief Legal and Regulatory Officer, TekSavvy Solutions Inc.
- "Rogers's decision shows even though that liability shield is being offered, some telecoms may decline to take advantage of it. Rogers is not the entire industry, of course. But if we see [others] start to take a similar position, maybe that would defray the impact of C-13, although it wouldn't mean that C-13 was a better law." - Christopher Parsons, Research Fellow, Citizen Lab

Press Releases / Communiqués de presse

The Privacy Commissioner of Canada issued the following statement regarding the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in R. v. Spencer

Statement from Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien: "Our Office welcomes this seminal decision for privacy protection in Canada. In its decision today, the Supreme Court of Canada recognized that anonymity on the internet is a critical component of informational privacy. The Court ruled that there is indeed a reasonable expectation of privacy in subscriber information. The Court agreed that this information could, in many cases, be the key to unlocking sensitive details about a user's online activities and is therefore worthy of constitutional protection. The decision has important implications for Bill C-13, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Canada Evidence Act, the Competition Act and the Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters Act. In particular, it confirms that an immunity clause that protects a person who voluntarily discloses personal information to police does not in itself constitute any 'lawful authority' for the state to obtain that information under Canada's federal private sector privacy legislation, the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act (PIPEDA). We would encourage Parliamentarians to carefully consider the implications of this ruling as they deliberate on Bill C-13 as well as Bill S-4, the Digital Privacy Act." Statement from the Privacy Commissioner of Canada (2014-06-13)

Canadian Print & Online Media / Médias canadiens imprimés et en ligne

Teksavvy and Rogers publish transparency reports highlighting the extent of government data requests

Third-party internet provider Teksavvy and Rogers, one of the largest ISPs in Canada, have published the first Canadian telecommunications transparency reports. Both Teksavvy and Rogers have released documents detailing the subscriber information both companies have released to police and spy agencies over the last few years. Teksavvy disclosed their transparency report first and then Rogers followed soon after. According to Teksavvy's transparency report, the company rejects two out of every three police requests for information. In Roger's case, the company received 174,917 requests in 2013 for customer information from government and law enforcement agencies. This is 480 requests a day and one request per every 11 Rogers subscribers. 74,000 of these requests were court orders which means approximately 100,000 did not include warrants. This number is much larger than the amount of information requests Teksavvy received, which is expected considering it's a smaller, privately shared internet service provider. Between 2012 and 2013 Teksavvy received a total of 62 requests for information related to subscriber information. Rogers considerably shorter report doesn't include information related to how many requests the company actually complies with, in many ways defeating the purpose of a transparency report. In Teksavvy's case, the ISP states it's complied with 35 of the 62 information requests it has received. Teksavvy does not specify in its report why the company rejected certain information requests. Of all Teksavvy's requests only one pertained to a court order. Canada.com (2014-06-05)

In shadow of NSA revelations, Rogers, TekSavvy open up on government data requests

In the wake of blockbuster revelations by former NSA contractor Edward Snowden, Canada's telecommunications companies are starting to pull back the curtains on their relationships with government authorities around the sharing of customer information. Rogers Communications Inc. on Thursday released what it called its 2013 Transparency Report, a brief four-page document detailing the number and types of requests the company has received, and the legal framework governing its response. The Rogers report comes on the heels of similar disclosure from independent communications provider TekSavvy Solutions Inc. Other providers are expected to follow suit later this year. Rogers said it received a total of 174,917 requests for information last year, or the equivalent of about 1.75% of the company's roughly 10 million individual customers. In the vast majority of cases, the authorities - typically, the police - were asking for fairly basic data, like customer account information, address, payment history and, occasionally, call records. Canada's biggest telecom provider noted that if it considers the request "too broad," it has sometimes declined, even going to court on occasion. National Post (2014-06-05)

Canada's ISPs Are Finally Revealing How Often the Government Requests User Data

Two Canadian telecommunications companies—Rogers Communications and TekSavvy Solutions—are the country's first to disclose the number of requests they receive from government agencies each year, and also detail what customer data they will and will not hand over upon request. On Thursday morning, Rogers Communications revealed that it had received a total of 174,917 requests in 2013, but omitted the number of those requests the company had responded to. The night before, Chatham, Ontario-based cable and DSL internet service provider TekSavvy revealed that it had received 52 requests for subscriber information from government agencies in 2012 and 2013, and responded to 17—or 33 percent. Motherboard (2014-06-05)

TekSavvy opens books on government data requests - "This is the first time any telecommunications carrier in Canada has, in a public way, identified the conditions and the laws under which it may be required to preserve or capture or disclose information,"

TekSavvy Solutions Inc. – an upstart communications company whose motto is "We're different. In a good way" – has published what is effectively Canada's first telecommunications transparency report. The company is publicly detailing just what customer data it gives, and doesn't give, when police and spy agencies come calling for information. Statistics released by the company on June 4 reveal the volume of handovers to government agents are very small and quite strict. In fact, the privacy-oriented phone-and-Internet provider says it rejects two out of every three police requests for information. Yet the company's new 16-page document amounts to a broader challenge of grey-area handovers of customer information within Canada. Posted online today at Globeandmail.com, this document about TekSavvy's procedures throws down the gauntlet for those larger Canadian telcos who share less information with the public and more information with government agencies. It also picks an implicit fight with the motivations behind federal legislation geared to facilitate information handovers. Chatham-based TekSavvy even goes so far as to invoke the transparency principles of Edward Snowden, the U.S. security contractor – now charged with espionage – who one year ago started leaking top secret documents about Washington's access to American citizens' phone records. "The Edward Snowden leaks based in the U.S. ... have helped underline a key commitment that is required to achieve this mission, which is strong data privacy and transparency," writes Bram Abramson, the company's chief legal and regulatory officer "TekSavvy has taken steps to strengthen our internal team dedicated to legal and regulatory matters," he adds. Globe and Mail (2014-06-05)

Rogers received 175,000 requests for customer information last year

Rogers Communications says it received almost 175,000 requests for customer information from government and police agencies last year, becoming the first major Canadian service provider to divulge the extent of its data-sharing with authorities. About half of the requests in 2013 were to confirm a customer's name and address, Rogers said Thursday in a report that comes amid public pressure on Internet and phone companies to disclose details of their dealings with law enforcement. Rogers says it responds to name and address requests - which totalled 87,856 last year - so police do not issue a warrant to the wrong person... This week the coalition received an updated response from Internet provider TekSavvy Solutions - one of Rogers' smaller competitors - saying it received 52 requests from government authorities in 2012 and 2013. It made 17 disclosures related to criminal investigations and denied the remaining 35. Christopher Parsons, a postdoctoral fellow with The Citizen Lab, said the Rogers and TekSavvy reports are "positive steps in the right direction." He singled out TekSavvy's response as "the gold standard" for company transparency on handling of subscriber information due to the extensive detail in its report Canadian Press (Victoria Times-Colonist, B4; 2014-06-06)

TekSavvy, Rogers break silence over government requests for data

Two telecommunications companies have released details regarding the number of demands for customer data they receive from police and government authorities, signalling a shift in how communications providers plan to deal with subscribers' privacy concerns. TekSavvy Solutions Inc., a privately owned Internet service provider based in Chatham, Ont., was the first company to break with convention, saying it handled 52 requests for customer information in 2012 and 2013. The company said it made 17 disclosures in response to law enforcement requests and refused to reveal information in 35 instances (read a PDF of the full report). Rogers Communications Inc., Canada's largest cellular carrier and one of the country's biggest Internet providers, released its own report \(PDF\) shortly after the TekSavvy disclosure on Thursday, revealing it received a total of 174,917 requests for customer information in 2013. It did not specify how many of those requests were fulfilled. Globe and Mail (2014-06-06)

Vodafone releases massive transparency report on government spying

Telecom giant Vodafone has become the latest in a growing list of companies bowing to public pressure to reveal how often government authorities request citizens' personal details, releasing a massive transparency report on Friday. Vodafone, which does not operate in North America, revealed that authorities in 29 countries requested their customers data hundreds of thousands of times in 2013. Rogers Communications, the only major Canadian telecom to release a transparency report, reported almost 175,000 requests that year. Unlike warrantless access reported in Canada, however, Vodafone admitted that a small number of countries require direct access to their network - allowing government authorities to spy on their citizens' communications directly... On Thursday, Rogers Communications became the first major Canadian telecom company to release a transparency report. It revealed that Rogers was asked almost 175,000 times for customers' information in 2013, but the company could not say how often authorities' requests were granted. Ken Engelhart, Rogers' vice president of regulatory affairs, told the Star on Thursday that no authorities have direct access to their network. On Wednesday, internet and landline provider TekSavvy reported 52 requests from authorities in 2012 and 2013 combined. Privacy experts expect more telecom companies to follow with their own transparency reports soon. Toronto Star (2014-06-06)

Which agency is listening on your phone line?

An opinion piece states "At last, there is a growing and welcome trend among telecommunications companies to publish numbers on the requests and demands of the police, and other government authorities, for their customers' data. Internet service provider TekSavvy Solutions and Rogers Communications Inc. released their information last week, and Telus Corp. says it is working on such a report. Meanwhile in Britain, international telco Vodafone Group PLC on Friday published a report saying that in 'a small number of countries' in which it operates, it must by law give governments a "direct link" to the data. At least Canadians have been spared that. Still, Rogers did not provide numbers on its responses to the authorities' requests. Sooner or later, that information should be made public, too. But one reason for its absence is that the company says, 'We don't keep track of it. Our tracking to date has really been for internal management purposes, not for creating a transparency report.' That is confusing. Do they track their responses or not? More importantly, telecommunications firms should always insist on a judge's warrant before they provide customer data to the police or intelligence agencies – possibly with exceptions for the most neutral information, such as cellphone numbers. And Canadian law should demand as much. Right now, it does not." Globe and Mail (2014-06-09)

Canada's Top Court Just Ruled Online User Data Is Inherently Private

In a unanimous decision, Canada's top court found that requesting Canadians' personal information from telecommunications companies in order to obtain a search warrant is unconstitutional. The ruling, released today, can only be seen as a stiff rebuke to the federal Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act (PIPEDA). That has huge implications for the Conservatives' two controversial bills that would have allowed private corporations to pass on your private information to law enforcement without a warrant. Thanks to the SCOC, when the bills finally passed through the Conservative controlled Parliament, their most expansive powers will be dead on arrival. Motherboard (2014-06-13)

Ruling cheered by privacy advocates - Warrant needed for online records: Supreme Court

Proponents of stronger privacy laws hailed a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada requiring police and other government authorities to get a warrant before asking telecommunications companies to hand over information on their customers. The court ruled on Friday that police must seek judicial approval before they can request data about individuals' Internet identities, even in the case of serious crimes such as child pornography. "This is an amazing ruling for Canadians who are concerned about privacy," said Christopher Parsons, a postdoctoral fellow at the Citizen Lab at the Munk School of Global Affairs and a frequent critic of government policy on electronic privacy. Recent revelations of widespread Internet surveillance by police across much of the world have caused alarm among academics and others concerned about lack of information around the extent to which governments snoop on citizens. The Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada in April released a report showing that nine Canadian telecommunications companies collectively receive an average 1.2 million requests for information every year, reflecting about 800,000 individual customers. In response to rising public concern, Canada's telecom sector has for the first time begun disclosing details about the number and type of requests they've received. Rogers Communications Inc. and TekSavvy Solutions Inc. recently came forward and others are expected to follow. National Post, FP6 (2014-06-14)

Now this is why we have an independent judiciary

An opinion piece states "If there's one thing every political science graduate knows, it's that the separation of powers is sort of a big deal in democratic governments. Dividing up power between the executive branch, the legislature and the judiciary is supposed to keep everyone honest. With everyone watching everyone else, it's much harder to get around the rules. Admittedly, Canada's parliamentary system doesn't have a perfect separation of powers - and that's generally a good thing. Unlike our neighbours to the south, our government doesn't have a tendency to shut itself down when the executive branch and the legislature lock horns. That's in part because of the overlap between our executive and legislative branches. But the ability of parliamentary governments to act quickly means that an independent judiciary, able to review Parliament's decisions, is even more important. And with the Supreme Court's rulings lately, Canadians are getting a close-up look at what it looks like when Parliament and the judiciary clash. Take the Supreme Court's decision in R. v. Spencer, released last Friday. Mr. Spencer was convicted at trial of possessing child pornography. The police tracked him down using methods with which most of us are, by now, familiar. They identified an IP address that had been used to download child pornography; the police took that IP address to the Internet Service Provider (ISP) responsible for it and asked them to provide the associated subscriber information. The key factor in this case is that the police didn't go to the ISP with a warrant - they just showed up and asked nicely. And the ISP, law-abiding corporate citizen that it is, turned over that information without a fight." iPolitics (2014-06-18)

Rogers to require warrant to disclose data - In wake of court decision, telecom giant says police, government will have to use 'lawful authority' to obtain customer information

In the wake of a landmark court ruling last month that upheld Canadians' right to online privacy, telecommunications companies are tightening their policies on when they will share customer information with police and government authorities. The Supreme Court of Canada unanimously ruled in June that police must obtain a search warrant before asking Internet providers for details that would identify their customers, and Rogers Communications Inc. said Wednesday it has overhauled its policies to comply with the decision. The move by one of Canada's biggest cellphone, Internet and home-phone companies comes as the federal government works to pass legislation that academics and privacy advocates warn will erode protections around Canadians' personal information. The Conservatives' anti-cyberbullying bill is still before the House of Commons, but if passed in its current form, Bill C-13 would give legal immunity to telecommunications companies that voluntarily hand subscriber information to police and other public officials. However, if telecom providers refuse to voluntarily disclose information without a warrant or court order, that could weaken the effect of the legislation, said Christopher Parsons, a research fellow with Citizen Lab, part of the University of Toronto's Munk School of Global Affairs. "Rogers's decision shows even though that liability shield is being offered, some telecoms may decline to take advantage of it," he said Wednesday. "Rogers is not the entire industry, of course. But if we see [others] start to take a similar position, maybe that would defray the impact of C-13, although it wouldn't mean that C-13 was a better law." Globe and Mail, A1 (2014-07-17)

Protect our privacy

An editorial states "The change came late, and only after a Supreme Court ruling indicated which way the winds were blowing, but some of Canada's largest telecommunications companies deserve praise for taking new steps to protect their customers' privacy. On Wednesday, Rogers Communications Inc. revealed it would no longer turn over its cable, Internet and mobile subscribers' names and addresses to police and government officials without seeing a court order or search warrant first. They received 175,000 requests from authorities in 2013 alone, and more than half of those came without the aforementioned documentation. Telus Corp. also changed its sharing rules a few weeks ago, after the Supreme Court ruled in June that police must get a warrant before asking Internet service providers for details that would identify their customers. Independent ISP TekSavvy made the move in June, while Bell and Shaw have yet to say how they're reacting. The move comes at an important time, given Parliament is currently considering Bill C-13. The federal Conservatives say it will help police fight cyberbullying and other online crimes, but privacy experts are concerned that the bill goes too far because it would give legal immunity to telecommunications companies that voluntarily hand over customers' information. With that disincentive removed, they argue, businesses would be more willing to co-operate with authorities who might be on fishing expeditions." Ottawa Citizen, C5 (2014-07-18)

Judge to hear Charter plea by Telus, Rogers

An Ontario judge has agreed to hear a Charter of Rights challenge brought by Telus and Rogers after they were asked by police in April to release cellphone information of about 40,000 to 50,000 customers as part of an investigation. Justice John Sproat says the case has highlighted important issues about privacy and law enforcement that should be challenged in court. "The privacy rights of the tens of thousands of cellphone users is of obvious importance," Sproat wrote in a ruling released Friday. "Counsel for Rogers-Telus will be able to identify and argue Charter issues that might not otherwise be evident." Telus told the court the order would require it to disclose the information of at least 9,000 individuals. Rogers estimated it would need to retrieve about 200,000 records related to 34,000 subscribers. Canadian Press (Waterloo Region Record, A4; 2014-07-26)

Justice Dept has sought customer data from online dating sites, children's game – documents

The Justice Department asks Canadian technology companies for information on their subscribers dozens of times each year on behalf of foreign countries, seeking records from wireless carriers, messaging services and even online dating sites, according to newly released documents. The disclosure was in response to an inquiry from Liberal MP Irwin Cotler, who earlier this year asked federal departments and agencies for details on when and how often they seek subscriber data from various telecom and service providers. Cotler shared the documents he received on the Liberal Party's website, including responses from departments including Justice, National Defence and Public Safety, as well as numerous departments such as the Canadian Radio-television Commission and Environment Canada...

It's also unclear how closely federal bodies are following Supreme Court of Canada's recent Spencer decision. The ruling by Canada's top court in R. v. Spencer in June appeared to mandate search warrants for law enforcement requests for subscriber information, but as Geist notes, the Department of Public Safety has not made judicial authorization necessary for access requests and that it is "still examining this decision." Canada.com (2014-09-18)

Telus opens up on spy, police data requests - 100,000 queries

At a time of heightened concern about governments snooping on our online activities following Edward Snowden's National Security Agency revelations, more and more Canadian telecommunications companies are voluntarily releasing information about requests for customer data. Telus Corp. is the latest to join in, revealing in a report released Thursday that it received more than 100,000 requests for customer data from the government and law enforcement agencies in 2013. Eros Spadotto, executive vice-president of technology strategy with Telus, said the company released the report because customers and the general public were asking questions about the privacy of their data, given the spotlight on the issue... Rogers Communications Inc. and the Internet provider TekSavvy Solutions Inc. have released similar reports in response to concerns about widespread Internet surveillance by police and spy agencies. In June, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that authorities must get a warrant before asking telecommunications companies to hand over information about their customers. National Post, FP4 (2014-09-18)

Telus joins transparency push - In issuing report on authorities' requests for customer information, firm urges an industry-wide approach

Telus Corp. is joining Rogers Communications Inc. in sharing figures that shed light on the frequency of state demands from government authorities for customer information and is calling for an industry-wide approach to reporting such data. The Vancouver-based company is publishing its first so-called "transparency report" Thursday morning, revealing that it received 103,462 requests for customer information from government officials and law enforcement agencies in 2013. That figure covers six categories, including requests accompanied by court orders or warrants, name and address checks and emergency requests from police. The company has not disclosed how often it complied with demands for information about its subscribers. "We're reacting to what we see as public sentiment. With modern telecoms and the Internet, people are curious about how much of that information is shared and under what circumstances," Eros Spadotto, Telus executive vice-president of technology strategy, said in an interview explaining the decision to reveal the numbers. "We'd like to come up with a common structure of reporting. Every operator has their own independent operating systems and each is different," he added. "The population at wide wants this information and it would be good if we can all provide the same kind of information." Before Telus's disclosure, the only Canadian telecom companies that had shared such information were Rogers and independent Internet provider TekSavvy Solutions Inc. In the United States, Verizon Communications Inc. and AT&T Inc. have begun publishing transparency reports and British telecom giant Vodafone Group PLC issued a lengthy report of its own this June. Globe and Mail, B3

The Harper justice agenda: When in doubt, blur the facts

An opinion piece states "See, there are a few problems with that sentence. First, C-13 is only tangentially about online harassment; it's really a surveillance bill. Second, although there's no question about passing it, the bill likely will only be a law long enough for it to get overturned by the courts... Over and over, we've seen the Harper government introduce laws that any law firm's greenest intern could have told them would be found unconstitutional. Minimum sentences, mandatory victim fines, the retroactive elimination of parole and new limits on pre-sentence custody credit - all struck down by the courts. The Conservatives have offered up C-13 as a necessary tool to attack the problem of online harassment. And there's a strong and justifiable interest among Canadians to tackle the serious problem of Internet harassment - and the tragic consequences it sometimes produces. But C-13 is a wolf in sheep's clothing; most of the bill is devoted to recklessly expanding the state's powers over the search and seizure of personal Internet data. It sacrifices personal privacy and is wildly inconsistent with recent Supreme Court of Canada jurisprudence. The Conservatives know this, of course. Why else would they have shut down committee study of the bill one day before the Supreme Court released one of the most important privacy decisions since the advent of the Charter of Rights: R. v. Spencer? Not only did the Supreme Court rule that voluntary disclosure of subscriber information to the police violates the charter, but in doing so the court gutted a key Conservative talking point." iPolitics (2014-09-25)

Child-porn bust a drop in bucket

In this happy era of dropping crime rates, there's one category of offences that is the gift that keeps on giving - child pornography. Despite the Ontario Provincial Police Thursday announcing the fruits of its latest major investigation - 249 charges against 60 people from the province's big cities and prosperous suburbs, small towns and mere dots on the map - the police are just scratching the surface, and no one knows it better than they do... Not mentioned at the OPP press conference are two other recent developments that will only serve to make the job of stopping online predators more difficult for the police. The first is a June 13 Supreme Court of Canada decision in a child-porn case called R v. Spencer, which basically creates a new sort of privacy right - online anonymity - and deems protected the sort of tombstone information police once were able to get by merely requesting Internet Service Providers to hand over subscriber names and addresses. Now, Canadian police must get a search warrant to obtain phone data approved by a judge; later the same month, the U.S. Supreme Court made a similar ruling. But those decisions were effectively rendered moot by developments announced last week by Apple and Google. Largely lost in the hullabaloo about the release of Apple's new operating system - iOS8 - was the company's boast on its website that with the new system, Apple can't bypass a user's passcode and therefore "it's not technically feasible for us to respond to government warrants for the extraction of this data..." With its older systems, Apple could unlock some content on devices for police bearing warrants, but not anymore. National Post, A1 (2014-09-26)

Canadians deserve to participate in informed conversation on privacy, surveillance

An opinion piece states "A multi-year conversation about privacy and surveillance is finally coming to a head, and it may be one of the defining issues of our time. This is a pivotal aspect of the relationship between citizens and the state, and Canadians have a right to sufficient information about the government's activities to contribute to an intelligent conversation. The topic of privacy and government surveillance has been making headlines in Canada for the last several years. Huge numbers -millions of requests- grab attention, but there is little understanding of the circumstances under which information is requested and disclosed from telecommunications service providers, the extent to which law enforcement seeks information, or even the nature of the information... Ever since the first efforts at legislating 'lawful access' years ago, civil society groups have attempted to engage law enforcement and government in a dialogue to understand privacy and warrantless access to information about citizens. Their efforts have reached a crescendo as leaks from Mr. Snowden, furor over Bill C-13 and the Supreme Court of Canada decision in R. v. Spencer draw further attention to the issue. More recently, it has been reported that Rogers and Telus are challenging an order that they turn over call records of more than 40,000 customers in one 'tower dump.'" Hill Times (2014-10-06)

RCMP failed to keep records on warrantless access, watchdog says

There's no way to know if the RCMP complied with privacy laws in requesting Canadians' personal information without a warrant, or even how often the Mounties made such requests, according to Ottawa's privacy watchdog. Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien said his office was not able to track how often the national police force requested access to Canadians' personal information without a warrant - because the RCMP don't track that information themselves... The question of warrantless access to Canadians' personal information was complicated by the Supreme Court last June. The top court ruled in a case known as Spencer that searches for "basic subscriber information" - names, addresses, internet protocol (IP) addresses, telephone numbers - without a warrant violated Canadians' rights against unreasonable search and seizure. The RCMP note that the Department of Justice and Public Safety Canada are still working on a unified interpretation of Spencer and its implications. "While it is anticipated that the number of warrantless requests will be reduced in light of the R. v. Spencer decision, warrantless access will continue to be sought in specific situations, such as exigent circumstances or where authorized by a reasonable law," the police said in Therrien's report. TheStar.com (2014-10-30)

Proposed bill calls for more oversight and accountability for Canada's electronic spy agency

There will be a second reading of the CSEC Accountability and Transparency Act this afternoon in the House of Commons (as this is being posted). The bill is proposed by Joyce Murray the MP for Vancouver Quadra and the Liberal Critic for National Defence. Here is a backgrounder her office produced about the bill and what it would mean... Privacy and surveillance - The privacy of Canadians' communications has been eroded, sometimes through social media sites like Facebook, but also by the sharing of cell phone and internet information by the providers of those services. Surveys of Canada's major providers of phone and internet services have shown a reluctance to discuss their reaction to requests from government agencies for information on Canadians. Some Canadian telecommunications companies have begun to respond to Canadians' concerns about how their information is shared with government agencies without a warrant. But so far only Rogers and TekSavvy have released such "transparency reports." The reality is that in Canada today, if you want to wire-tap a telephone you need a court order-similar protections are needed with respect to the monitoring of our internet activity and the acquisition of our meta-data. Ottawa Citizen (2014-10-31)

International Media / Médias internationaux

Canada's top court upholds Internet users' privacy protection

The Supreme Court of Canada ruled on Friday that authorities cannot legally ask an Internet provider to give them the names of customers and other personal information without a warrant, a victory for online anonymity that puts up obstacles for police. The country's top court brought down the unanimous ruling in the case of Matthew David Spencer, who was convicted of possessing child pornography by a

Saskatchewan provincial court. The court ruled that in the Spencer case, police conducted a search when they requested and obtained subscriber information attached to a publicly available IP address from cable company Shaw Communications Inc. It also said that Web surfers have a reasonable expectation of privacy that was breached by the request. The information obtained from Shaw by police connected the IP address to Spencer and revealed much about his online activity. Reuters (2014-06-13)

TekSavvy, Rogers open books on government data requests

TekSavvy Solutions Inc. – an upstart communications company whose motto is “We’re different. In a good way” – has published one of Canada’s first telecommunications transparency reports. The company is publicly detailing just what customer data it gives, and doesn’t give, when police and spy agencies come calling for information. Statistics released by TekSavvy on June 4 reveal the volume of handovers to government agents are very small and quite strict. In fact, the privacy-oriented phone-and-Internet provider says it rejects two out of every three police requests for information. Yet the company’s new 16-page document amounts to a broader challenge of grey-area handovers of customer information within Canada. This document about TekSavvy’s procedures throws down the gauntlet for those larger Canadian telcos who share less information with the public and more information with government agencies. It also picks an implicit fight with the motivations behind federal legislation geared to facilitate information handovers. Shortly after the TekSavvy disclosure, Rogers Communications Inc., Canada’s largest cellular carrier and one of the country’s biggest Internet providers, released its own transparency report Thursday. The report from Rogers says the Toronto-based company received a total of 174,917 requests for customer information from government and law enforcement authorities in 2013. The sheer volume of requests goes far beyond that reported by TekSavvy, which is a much smaller, privately owned Internet service provider. However, at just three pages long, the Rogers report does not go into the same level of detail as the TekSavvy document and does not disclose how many times it complied with requests for customer information. Business News Network

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

CTV News reported on the impact on policing of the R.v. Spencer decision (2014-06-13)

CBC News - Power & Politics interviewed privacy commissioner Daniel Therrien regarding Bill C-13 and the impact of the Spencer case. Rough transcript (2014-06-19)

Social Media / Médias sociaux

R. v. Spencer

There were approximately 872 social media posts regarding the Supreme Court decision of R. v. Spencer from April 1st – November 22nd, 2014. (Note: Our social media software can only do searches in 3-4 month increments.)

April 1st – July 2nd, 2014:

Below is a graph demonstrating social media activity broken down per platform:

In total there were approximately 297 Twitter posts, 125 news site posts, 92 Facebook posts, 3 comments and 3 forums posts.

Below is a graph demonstrating the progression of social media activity from April 1st – July 2nd, 2014:

Activity peaked on June 13th with approximately 215 social media posts reporting on the Supreme Court's decision in R. v. Spencer.

The conversation cloud below shows the most commonly used keywords associated with the R. v. Spencer decision from April 1st – July 2nd, 2014:

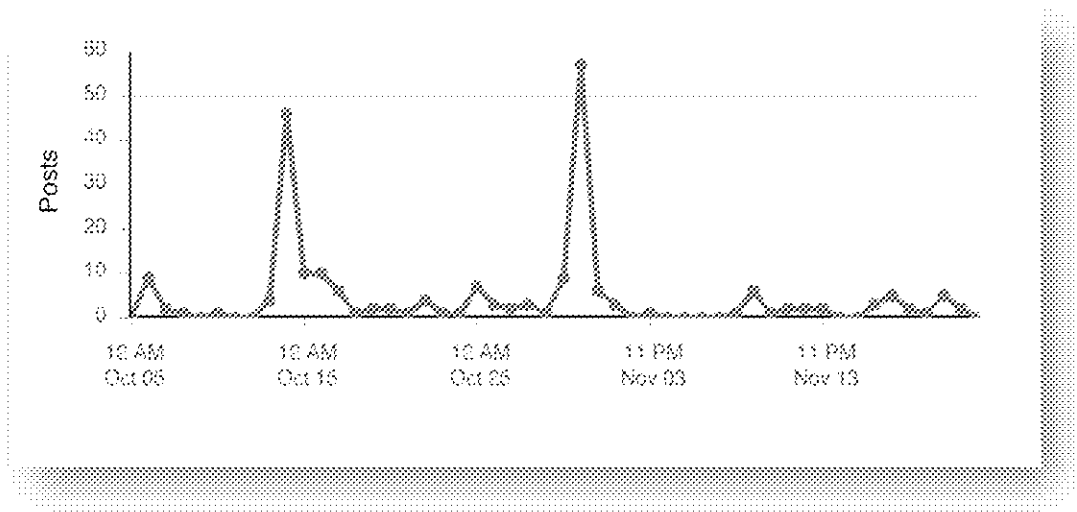

July 3rd – October 4th, 2014:

Below is a graph demonstrating social media activity broken down per platform:

In total there were approximately 83 Facebook posts, 35 Twitter posts and 9 news site posts.

Below is a graph demonstrating the progression of social media activity from July 3rd – October 4th, 2014:

The conversation cloud below shows the most commonly used keywords associated with the R. v. Spencer decision July 3rd – October 4th, 2014:

October 5th – November 22nd, 2014:

Below is a graph demonstrating social media activity broken down per platform:

In total there were approximately 182 Facebook posts, 33 Twitter posts and 10 news site posts.

Below is a graph demonstrating the progression of social media activity from October 5th – November 22nd, 2014:

The conversation cloud below shows the most commonly used keywords associated with the R. v. Spencer decision October 5th – November 22nd, 2014:

Rogers / TekSavvy

April 1st – July 2nd, 2014:

Below is a graph demonstrating social media activity broken down per platform:

In total there were approximately 5 Facebook posts and 5 news site posts.

Below is a graph demonstrating the progression of social media activity from April 1st – July 2nd, 2014:

The conversation cloud below shows the most commonly used keywords associated with Rogers / TekSavvy April 1st – July 2nd, 2014:

July 3rd – October 4th, 2014:

Below is a graph demonstrating social media activity broken down per platform:

In total there were approximately 3 Facebook posts and 2 news site posts.

Below is a graph demonstrating the progression of social media activity from July 3rd – October 4th, 2014:

The conversation cloud below shows the most commonly used keywords associated with Rogers / TekSavvy July 3rd – October 4th, 2014:

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Paris Terrorist Attacks | Attaques terroristes à Paris
2015-11-19

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT AND ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE ET IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- The highest level of media coverage today spiked early this morning; At 7am ET, France announced that the Paris attacker, Abdelhamid Abaaoud was confirmed dead.
- Yesterday, a media advisory was released that the Honourable Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, and other Canadian officials would provide context about Canada's current threat environment.
- Comments reiterated by Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale from the press conference focused on Canada having no reason to raise Canada's threat level, even after the Paris attacks." This generated a substantial level of media coverage. Goodale also reassured Canadians the Syrian refugee timetable would not compromise safety.
- During the conference, Michel Coulombe Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) outlined Cyber security as one of their top priorities; Bob Paulson, Canada's RCMP Commissioner focused on answering questions regarding refugees and also the Paris attacks where he noted our Liaison Officer (LO) in Paris is taking briefings and is available to provide immediate access to the force's resources if required."
- The provincial and municipal leaders' concern for the Syrian refugees operation gathers medium coverage in the media.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

"There's no reason to raise Canada's threat level, even after the Paris attacks" – Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety Canada

"There's no reason to raise Canada's threat level, even in the wake of the deadly attacks in Paris last week, says Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale." - Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety Canada

"Now more than ever is a time for all of us to support our fellow citizens. We need to demonstrate to each other and to the world our values of diversity and inclusion," - Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety Canada

"Canadians will stand together and face these times with skill, with resolve, courage and fortitude. Terrorists will not change our values or the quality of Canadian life." - Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety Canada

"Our mandate is to investigate threats to the security of Canada and Canadians, and as always, Canadians can be assured we are working very closely with our domestic and international partners in that regard." - Michel Coulombe, Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS)

"Cyber is one of our top priorities," Michel Coulombe, Director of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS)

"I want Canadians to know that as director of CSIS I am confident that the measures in place are robust and appropriate." Michel Coulombe, Director the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS)

"The RCMP, like CSIS and CBSA, have liaison officers around the world, including Paris. In our case, this is a senior experienced law enforcement officer who has relationships with law enforcement and security services. Our LO in Paris is taking briefings and is available to provide immediate access to the force's resources if required." Bob Paulson, RCMP Commissioner

"I would urge Canadians themselves to be alert in the wake of these very troubling circumstances. We also need to reject and condemn acts of perverted vigilante retribution, the hateful abusive intolerance that has marred several Canadian communities over the past few days. Now, more than ever, is a time for all of us to support our fellow citizens. We need to demonstrate to each other and to the world our values of diversity and inclusion. Canadians will stand together in and face these times with skill and with resolve." - Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety Canada

"We do not generally discuss operational matters related to national security" but that police and security agencies "continue to monitor the situation in Paris very closely." - Public Safety Canada Spokeswoman

News Releases / Communiqués

Media Advisory: Public Safety Minister to speak to media

The Honourable Ralph Goodale, Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, and officials will provide context about Canada's current threat environment. (2015-11-18)

Print Media / Médias imprimés

Why it's hard to draw a line between Edward Snowden and the Paris attacks

In a pair of public appearances this week, CIA Director John O. Brennan made clear that he blames leaks by former intelligence contractor Edward Snowden for enabling terrorists to evade detection. "Because of a number of unauthorized disclosures, and a lot of hand-wringing over the government's role in the effort to try to uncover these terrorists," Brennan said, the CIA and others agencies have lost use of critical tools needed "to find these terrorists." Brennan's assertion has become a refrain in the two years since Snowden exposed details about a range of U.S. surveillance programs. And former CIA director R. James Woolsey went further, saying on Sunday, "I think Snowden has blood on his hands from these killings in France." Washington Post (Hamilton Spectator)

Alleged plotter remains shadowy figure

Much about Abdelhamid Abaaoud's path to armed Islamic radicalism remains mysterious. In the words of Koen Geens, the Belgian justice minister, he mutated from a student at an upscale Brussels school into "an extremely professional commando," one seemingly able to slip across borders at will, someone who openly mocked the inability of Western law enforcement agencies to catch him. On Wednesday, the fate of the son of an immigrant shopkeeper from Morocco remained unclear. Police raided a suburban Paris apartment where they believed he was hiding. The siege ended with two deaths and seven arrests but no definitive information on Abaaoud, who French authorities have called the mastermind of the violence that killed at least 129 in Paris last week. The wanted jihadi's own father believes prison - where he served time for petty crimes - changed him for the worse. After his son got out, Omar Abaaoud noticed "signs of radicalization," the elder Abaaoud's lawyer, Nathalie Gallant, told RTBF broadcasting Wednesday. If so, that would fit the pattern of a number of jihadis who were radicalized in prison. Associated Press (Chronicle-Herald, A15, Ottawa Sun, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript); * Agence France Presse (Le Nouvelliste, 3, La Tribune)

* Le cerveau des attaques mort ?

L'Europe nageait en pleine confusion hier, alors que tous s'interrogeaient à savoir si le présumé «cerveau» derrière les attentats de Paris était bel et bien mort lors de l'assaut de sept heures à Saint-Denis. «Le présumé chef des attentats de Paris (Abdelhamid Abaaoud) a été tué hier lors de l'assaut de la police française, ont affirmé deux hauts responsables des autorités européennes», a écrit le Washington Post hier. Mais aucun autre média ni les autorités françaises n'ont confirmé cette information, ce qui a soulevé plusieurs questionnements dans la population. L'opération a été «extrêmement difficile » en raison de «l'usage de fusils d'assaut, de tirs de sniper et d'une grande offensive d'explosifs», a lancé le procureur de Paris, François Molins. L'opération qui a duré sept heures visait bel et bien le présumé «cerveau» des attentats de vendredi. Au moins deux personnes sont mortes, dont une kamikaze qui «a activé son gilet explosif au début de l'assaut», a précisé la police qui n'a pas confirmé les noms. De plus, huit personnes ont été placées en garde à vue après l'opération, mais ni Abaaoud, ni Salah Abdeslam, l'un des suspects des attaques toujours en fuite, ne figurent parmi elles. Une information qui laisse donc croire qu'Abaaoud serait le deuxième mort. Le Journal de Québec, 5 (Journal de Montréal); * Daily Gleaner, B1 (Telegraph-Journal); Associated Press (Toronto Star); 1 (Ottawa Sun, Calgary Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Toronto Sun); CNN

AIR FRANCE FLIGHT DIVERTED

Passengers aboard Air France Flight 055 didn't learn that a bomb threat was the reason their Paris-bound flight was being diverted to Halifax until after they landed Tuesday night. Genevieve Lapeyre, a pediatric anesthesiologist from Geneva, was flying back to Europe after a meeting in Washington, D.C. She is half-Swiss and half-French, and planned a three-day layover in Paris. The terrorist attacks Friday gave her a strong wish to be in the city. (...) None of the passengers panicked, but they felt something odd was going on, she said. At one point, she wondered if there had been another attack against Paris and the aircraft couldn't go there. After the Boeing 777 touched down at about 10:15 p.m., she soon realized there was something happening regarding her flight. "I saw the firemen and everything, and I said, 'OK, there is something else.'" Lapeyre said the pilot seemed to be trying to control his emotions. "He said, 'Don't worry.' He was too much trying to reassure us." On the tarmac, passengers were told to grab their belongings and get off the plane, which they did quickly. However, they were then housed for about 30 minutes in a bus parked alongside the aircraft, which some considered dangerous, she said. Halifax RCMP spokesman Cpl. Greg Church said 262 passengers and crew got off the jet within 15 minutes of landing, which is when officers began checking for explosives; none were found. The jet was declared explosives-free at 4:28 a.m. Wednesday. The passengers were taken to a secure area to pass through customs. Postmedia Network (Chronicle-Herald, A1, Guardian, Whitehorse Star, Acadie Nouvelle); Postmedia Network (Cape Breton Post, A9)

'Like A War Zone'

2 Dead, 8 in custody after paris police launch a massive early-morning raid against a suspected terror cell located in a reinforced apartment When Tagara Traoré, a former revolutionary soldier in his native Burkina Faso, was jolted awake by a boom early Wednesday, his "military reflex" kicked in. "You get up quickly and either hide or try to get out," he said. In socked feet and wearing the sweatpants he was sleeping in, he grabbed his key and ran out the door of his fourthstorey apartment, only to find a battalion of police rushing up the stairs, headlamps glaring. "I started sensing tear gas that was coming up the stairwell. I thought the building was on fire," he said. "The police told me, 'Go down, down, down!' There were so many they had to move aside to let me out." It was 4:20 a.m., and he had been caught in the middle of a massive anti-terror operation that quickly became a protracted gun battle between police and terror suspects. A woman in the targeted apartment in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis, identified by French media as a native of nearby Clichy, was one of the dead. Initial reports said she killed herself by detonating an explosive vest, but the French prosecutor's office later said the "point needs to be verified by an analysis of the body and human remains." At least one other suspect in the apartment was killed and eight people were taken into custody. Five police officers suffered minor injuries, and a police dog - Diesel, a Belgian shepherd - was killed by the terrorists, according to the national police. Paris prosecutor François Molin said the targeted apartment had a fortified door that withstood initial police attempts to break in and gave the terrorists time to mobilize and return fire. Daily Telegraph (Windsor Star, N1/Front, National Post, StarPhoenix, Gazette); 1 (Vancouver Sun, B1/Front, Leader-Post, National Post, Edmonton Journal, Ottawa Citizen, Whig-Standard, Calgary Herald); Toronto Star, A1; Globe and Mail, A1; * Agence France Presse (Le Soleil, 22); * Associated Press (Times Colonist, A13, Times & Transcript)

Prochaine station, la guerre

Il devait être 4h20 quand Fares s'est mis à crier. «Maman! Maman! La guerre commence! Il y a des bombes!» Fares a 7 ans. De grands yeux noisette dans lesquels on lit l'effroi. «Il ne sait même pas c'est quoi, la guerre», me dit sa mère Souhila, 38 ans. Souhila, elle, sait. Elle est née en Algérie... J'étais dans l'avion quand l'assaut antiterroriste a été donné à Saint-Denis, dans la banlieue nord de Paris, non loin du Stade de France. Dès que l'avion s'est posé, des cellulaires de passagers ont sonné. «C'est la pagaille à Saint-Denis.» La «pagaille», le mot est faible. C'est Fares qui avait raison. Ça ressemblait plus à une guerre. Rue Corbillon, à l'angle de la rue de la République, au moins deux personnes ont été tuées, dont une femme kamikaze qui a activé sa ceinture d'explosifs. Un commando, lourdement armé, qui semblait prêt à passer à l'acte, a été démantelé. Pendant une heure, les habitants du quartier ont entendu des tirs nourris. Le bruit était si fort que certains ont cru qu'il y avait un bombardement. Il y a eu au moins 5000 munitions tirées par la police. Un immeuble éventré, criblé de balles. Des voisins terrorisés. Comme si on était à Gaza et non en banlieue parisienne. L'assaut a duré sept heures, durant lesquelles le quartier a été bouclé, le métro, fermé, les écoles aussi. Des résidents ont été évacués. Les riverains ont été sommés de ne pas sortir de chez eux. Une fois l'assaut terminé, j'ai pu prendre le métro pour la guerre. La Presse, A4/Front

Mission

Ce sont des spécialistes des assauts risqués, qui montent au front contre les pires terroristes. Le RAID, le commando de la police française qui est intervenu hier à Saint-Denis, est constamment sollicité depuis un an. A Paris, La Presse s'est entretenue avec l'ancien chef des négociateurs de l'unité, Christian Caupenne, pour dresser le portrait d'une équipe devenue mythique. Fondé il y a 30 ans, le RAID (pour Recherche, Assistance, Intervention, Dissuasion) est l'unité d'élite de la police nationale, destinée à intervenir partout en France pour contrer le terrorisme et le «grand banditisme». Elle est notamment intervenue lors de l'attaque du marché Hyper Cacher en janvier et à la salle de spectacle Bataclan, vendredi dernier. Selon le chef de la police nationale, Jean-Marc Falcone, l'assaut à Saint-Denis a été l'un des plus difficiles que ses troupes ont connu. «Les scènes vécues par le RAID sont très dures. Même ces hommes rodés à la violence ont été marqués», a-t-il déclaré hier à ce sujet. La Presse, A5/Front

 Paris attacks: Extremists may strike next with chemical, biological weapons, French PM says

With France still reeling from last week's deadly attacks in Paris, Prime Minister Manuel Valls warned Thursday that Islamic extremists might at some point use chemical or biological weapons, and urged lawmakers to extend a national state of emergency by three months. "Terrorism hit France not because of what it is doing in Iraq and Syria ... but for what it is," Valls told the lower house of Parliament. He added, "We know that there could also be a risk of chemical or biological weapons." Valls did not say there was a specific threat involving such weapons. The French Interior Ministry and Paris prosecutor's office, meanwhile, said it still remains unclear whether the suspected mastermind of last week's attacks, in which 129 people were killed and hundreds of others wounded, has been killed or is still at large. Officials said authorities are working on determining whether 27-year-old Belgian Abdelhamid Abaaoud was among those killed in a chaotic and bloody raid on an apartment in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis on Wednesday. Associated Press (CBC News)

 Belgium vows crackdown on terrorists, boost security spending

Belgium's prime minister on Thursday called for changes to the country's constitution to combat extremists, and promised hundreds of millions of euros to boost the security forces. Addressing the federal parliament as security forces were conducting raids around the capital Brussels, Charles Michel pledged to use changes to the constitution to extend preventive detention times for suspects from 24 hours to 72 hours. He also affirmed that Belgium would move forward alone on a system of airline passenger information sharing that European Union nations have been incapable of agreeing in four years. Associated Press (CTV News, Times Colonist)

 EU to tighten anti-terror laws

The European Commission, the EU's executive arm, will expand its anti-terrorist legislation early next year to target fighters like those involved in the Paris attacks. The new measures will widen the range of actions punishable under the legislation to include travelling for the purpose of carrying out a terrorist act, facilitating travel or receiving training to carry out an attack. In a direct response to the Paris killings, EU citizens who travel outside the bloc and then return to carry out attacks will be considered as foreign fighters, and those helping their movement will also face prosecution. The bloc's Migration, Home Affairs and Citizenship Commissioner, Dimitris Avramopoulos, told a news conference Wednesday that the Commission would have proposals ready by the end of November and wants to see them enacted "within the first two months of the next year." Toronto Sun, A56 (Calgary Sun)

 Killer's passport fueling fear of refugees

After the bombs and Kalashnikov fire of the Paris attacks, a mere document - a passport - found near the body of an attacker is generating a new wave of dread throughout Europe and beyond. But whether the document ended up there by chance, or was part of an elaborate plot to sow panic, is not clear. Regardless of the answer, the passport has played into the Islamic State group's hands by raising concerns that militants may be marching alongside the thousands of asylum seekers flowing into Europe. That possibility is redefining the debate over immigration in Europe and even the United States, and prompting a backlash against Muslim refugees. The far-right French leader Marine Le Pen called for an immediate end to the flow of migrants into France, while across the Atlantic about half of U.S. governors are taking steps to prevent absorbing Syrian refugees in their states, citing the passport. "This terrorist attack will clearly change Europe's refugee policies and how the arrivals in Europe are treated," said Konrad Pedziwiatr, a sociologist and expert on Islam in Europe at the Krakow University of Economics. "Already the open-door policy (in Germany and Sweden) of welcoming refugees was going to be reformed because the inflow is so significant that countries cannot cope with the numbers," he said. "What the Paris attacks add to this difficult situation is the additional element of fear." A passport bearing the name of Ahmad Al Mohammad, 25, was found near one of the suicide bombers who blew himself up outside the Stade de France football stadium. It indicates that he entered Greece from Turkey on Oct. 3 and later passed through Serbia and Croatia, getting registered in every new country. The passport's authenticity has not been determined, but fingerprints of the attacker match those taken by Greece and Serbia. The other attackers who have been identified so far are all European citizens. The oddness that a passport - an intact one - was found near a man who blew himself up is creating suspicions that it is part of a plan by the Islamic State to create a backlash against the refugees. "I have never heard of terrorists carrying passports with them," Pedziwiatr said. Associated Press (Whig-Standard, B5, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript)

 ISIS is slowly killing the European experiment

As neighbours and allies declare solidarity with France, few are facing up to the inevitable: the fact that fallout from Friday's terrorist attack in Paris will stall - perhaps even reverse - the political integration of Europe. The discovery that most of the terrorists identified so far were Muslims born in France, using neighbouring Belgium as a base, will add volume to loud demands for an end to the open-border policy among the 28 members of the European Union. Pressure to terminate what is known as the Schengen Area - a pillar of the EU political integration project, along with the now-debased euro and attempts to unify foreign and defence policies - has been building as about a million refugees from the Middle East and North Africa have flooded into Europe (...) While ISIS has taken responsibility for the outrage and was, at the very least, the inspiration for it, the Paris killings were, like almost every other terrorist attack in Canada, the United States and Europe in the last 14 years, a home-grown affair. Neither Canada nor the U.S. is immune to the popular suspicion that the floods of Syrian and Iraqi refugees are an easy route for ISIS to plant terrorists in target countries. The governors of over half the 50 states in the U.S. have said they will not participate in settling Syrian refugees. And the new government of Prime Minister Justin

Trudeau is facing growing pressure from both the public and provincial governments - on whom much of the responsibility for resettling refugees will fall - to rethink his campaign pledge to allow 25,000 Syrian migrants into Canada by the end of the year. iPolitics

 French expats still feel sting an ocean away

Juliette Elchinger was home in Montreal on Friday evening when her Twitter feed lit up with news of the terrorist assaults in Paris. "I went into a state of shock," the native Parisian said. "I just started to shake and cry." Five days later, the 19-year-old was still struggling to make sense of the violence visited on her cherished city. She stood on Wednesday surrounded by knots of other students and staff at the University of Montreal, some holding hands and wiping tears off stricken faces, for a sombre gathering of commemoration. In the days since the shocking attacks took the lives of 129 people, Ms. Elchinger has attended solidarity marches and commemorations, monitored news from Paris obsessively and joined other members of Montreal's large expatriate French community. Some have connections to the tragedy; Ms. Elchinger's best friend lost a professor, who was slain at the Bataclan theatre along with 88 others who had attended a rock concert there. For the expats, separation from events back home has fed feelings of loss and helplessness, along with a deepened call to their French identity. Globe and Mail, A9

 Free world solidarity after Paris

An editorial states, "There aren't a lot of game-changing moments in international affairs, says Peter Van Praagh. But the ISIS terrorist attacks on Paris last weekend, like the 9-11 attacks on New York and Washington in 2001, fall into that rare category. It is, he says, one of those "events that turn things." It has acutely heightened the public sense of "how vulnerable open societies are." But it has also produced, he believes, "a fundamental solidarity and common understanding that something has to be done to address it." "We are all affected now," the security specialist told our editorial board on Wednesday, after arriving in Nova Scotia to chair, for the seventh time, the annual Halifax International Security Forum. The forum will bring 300 delegates from 60 democratic countries to the city this weekend to brainstorm the complex angles of peace and security - military, political, economic, educational and cultural. The group ranges from four-star generals to ministers to aid organizations, journalists and scholars. Their agenda runs the gamut from building new anti-terror alliances to cutting off the financing of terrorism through drug and human trafficking. There was plenty of evidence in Halifax and elsewhere this week to show security issues now touch us all." Chronicle-Herald, A6

 Hollande faces the enemy from within

The streets of Paris are no strangers to mass bloodshed. The City of Light has borne witness to more than its share of extreme violence over the centuries. The worst of it has not been perpetrated by a foreign army. The enemy has most often come from within. From the Wars of Religion, through the Revolution and the Reign of Terror, to the Paris Commune, the French often worked through their differences in the bloodiest ways possible. Since the 1960s, Paris has been a repeated target of terrorists, often French citizens or immigrants, aggrieving in some way France's unresolved colonial past in North Africa or its mandates in the Middle East. The inspiration for the most recent attacks may have come from Iraq or Syria, but their perpetrators came from the Paris suburbs. The January assaults on the satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo and a kosher supermarket were conducted by French-born radicalized Muslims. Most of those involved in Friday's sickening attacks on cafés and a concert hall appear to have had similar backgrounds. "We know, and it's cruel to say it, it was French people who killed French people on Friday," President François Hollande said in a speech for the ages. "There are, living on our soil, individuals who move from delinquency to radicalization and then to terrorist criminality." Globe and Mail

 La vie doit reprendre, dit Hollande

Dans la foulée de la série d'attentats à Paris, le président français François Hollande a encouragé ses compatriotes à «défier les terroristes» en continuant de vivre normalement, en fréquentant les cafés, les musées, et les stades sans tomber dans la crainte et la xénophobie. Les terroristes prennent la vie des innocents, mais ils veulent aussi suspendre celle des autres, a soutenu le président, mercredi, lors d'un discours télévisé devant les maires de partout au pays. Il estime que les Français ont le «devoir» de poursuivre leurs activités normales. Il a martelé que la vie «devait reprendre pleinement», ajoutant que la sécurité serait resserrée dans les lieux publics. Le président français a assuré que la France resterait un pays «de liberté, de mouvement, de culture» qui ne «pliera pas à la peur». François Hollande s'est engagé à travailler avec ses alliés pour détruire le groupe armé État islamique, qui a revendiqué la responsabilité des attaques dans la capitale française qui ont fait 129 morts et 368 blessés. Dans une allocution prononcée quelques heures après une opération antiterroriste de la police en banlieue de Paris, le président a réitéré que la France était «en guerre avec les terroristes», mais il a aussi appelé les Français à la retenue. Associated Press (Le Droit, 17)

Online Media / Médias en ligne

Jokers, terrorists and why we'll always have Paris

Canadians do not live in a police state. But as at least one person who is alleged to have donned a Joker mask and threatened to kill an Arab a week recently discovered, we do live in a state that has police. And it seems those cops know their way around the internet. Yesterday afternoon, less than 48 hours after the appearance of a video depicting an individual wearing the mask, citing the Paris massacres and claiming the killings would begin next week, a 24-year-old man was arraigned at the Montreal courthouse in connection with the incident. Montreal Gazette

ISIS aggressively pursuing development of chemical weapons: U.S. official

The Islamic State group is aggressively pursuing development of chemical weapons, setting up a branch dedicated to research and experiments with the help of scientists from Iraq, Syria and elsewhere in the region, according to Iraqi and U.S. intelligence officials. Their quest raises an alarming scenario for the West, given the determination to strike major cities that the group showed with its bloody attack last week in Paris. On Thursday, French Prime Minister Manuel Valls warned that Islamic extremists might at some point use chemical or biological weapons. "Terrorism hit France not because of what it is doing in Iraq and Syria ... but for what it is," Valls told the lower house of Parliament. "We know that there could also be a risk of chemical or biological weapons," he added, though he did not talk of a specific threat. U.S. intelligence officials don't believe IS has the capability to develop sophisticated weapons like nerve gas that are most suited for a terrorist attack on a civilian target. So far the group has used mustard gas on the battlefield in Iraq and Syria. Associated Press (Global News)

Islamic State gathering chemical weapons knowledge

The Islamic State group is aggressively pursuing development of chemical weapons, setting up a branch dedicated to research and experiments with the help of scientists from Iraq, Syria and elsewhere in the region, according to Iraqi and U.S. intelligence officials. Their quest raises an alarming scenario for the West, given the determination to strike major cities that the group showed with its bloody attack last week in Paris. On Thursday, French Prime Minister Manuel Valls warned that Islamic extremists might at some point use chemical or biological weapons. "Terrorism hit France not because of what it is doing in Iraq and Syria ... but for what it is," Valls told the lower house of Parliament. "We know that there could also be a risk of chemical or biological weapons," he added, though he did not talk of a specific threat. U.S. intelligence officials don't believe IS has the capability to develop sophisticated weapons like nerve gas that are most suited for a terrorist attack on a civilian target. So far the group has used mustard gas on the battlefield in Iraq and Syria. But Iraqi officials expressed concern that the large safe haven the extremists control since overrunning parts of Iraq and Syria last year has left Iraqi authorities largely in the dark over the IS program. Associated Press (Hamilton Spectator)

Who is Abdelhamid Abaaoud, suspected ringleader of the Paris terror attack?

The suspected ringleader of the Paris attacks has been on the counterterrorism radar for some time and was targeted in French airstrikes on Syria last month, a French counterterrorism source told CNN. Abdelhamid Abaaoud, in his late 20s, is believed to be close to ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, and is probably the link between the senior ISIS leadership and ISIS operatives in Europe, European counterterrorism officials have said. Authorities raided a building Paris suburb of Saint-Denis that is linked to Abaaoud. French police on Wednesday were trying to determine if Abaaoud had been in the apartment, or if he is even still alive. Investigators were using DNA to analyze the body parts found in the Saint-Denis building where a female suspect first blew herself up, then French forces used powerful munitions to combat others, which led to one floor of the building collapsing. French military forces carried out airstrikes in October targeting an ISIS training camp for foreign fighters in Raqqa, Syria, in an effort to kill Abaaoud, the French counterterrorism source said. CNN

No need to raise threat level: Goodale

There's no reason to raise Canada's threat level, even in the wake of the deadly attacks in Paris last week, says Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale. The minister appeared at a news conference — flanked by key security officials — to assure Canadians that authorities are being especially vigilant and doing everything possible to keep the public safe. The threat level has remained at "medium" since October 2014. Canadian Security Intelligence Service director Michel Coulombe and RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson said they had found no Canadian links to the assaults in France by militants from the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant that killed some 129 people and wounded hundreds of others. Officials also stressed that the thousands of refugees Canada has agreed to accept from strife-torn Syria would undergo thorough security checks. Goodale urged people to be alert following the Paris attacks, but said Canada is basically safe and peaceful. The minister said now is not the time for what he called "vigilante retribution" — a reference to a deliberately set fire at an Ontario mosque and an assault against a veiled woman in Toronto. "Now more than ever is a time for all of us to support our fellow citizens. We need to demonstrate to each other and to the world our values of diversity and inclusion," Goodale said. "Canadians will stand together and face these times with skill, with resolve, courage and fortitude. Terrorists will not change our values or the quality of Canadian life." In the days ahead we will continue to take every possible step to keep Canadians safe, and do so "in a way that respects our national character," he said. Canadian Press (Hamilton Spectator, City News, CFRA, MacLean's, CBC News); La Presse Canadienne (La Presse)

#JeSuisChien goes viral in tribute to police dog killed in France

Amidst a flurry of social media posts and breaking news, the death of one beloved police dog has taken over Twitter today, drawing condolences from around the world. The Independent reports that Diesel, the seven-year-old Belgian Malinois, was killed earlier Wednesday during a raid on suspected terrorists in the Parisian suburb of Saint-Denis. Diesel was a trained assault and explosive search dog. Yahoo News; Independent News

Paris attacks raise travel jitters among some Canadians

Some Canadians are thinking twice about travelling abroad for now, as last week's attacks in Paris and other recent incidents have raised fears among travellers and people working in the travel industry. Despite assurances from authorities that it's safe to travel, Friday's attacks in Paris, Thursday's twin bombings in Beirut and the recent bombing of a Russian passenger plane have prompted some to cancel or reschedule their trips (...) But Anthony Roman, an aviation security expert and former commercial pilot based in New York, said he doesn't think passengers or airline crews should change their travel plans. "From a geopolitical or counterterror point of view, I think it's a mistake," he said. "This is what ISIS is looking for. It's looking to disrupt the West, disrupt the transportation system, disrupt individuals' lives (...)" Canada's Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said on Wednesday that there's no reason to raise the country's threat level, as authorities are being extra vigilant and doing everything they can to keep Canadians safe. CBC News (2015-11-18)

UPDATE - Paris attacks: RCMP investigating whether voice on ISIS recording is Canadian

The RCMP is examining whether the voice on an audio recording attributed to ISIS and released in the wake of the Paris attacks belongs to a Canadian. ISIS released audio statements in English and Arabic on Saturday, claiming responsibility for the co-ordinated Paris attacks Friday that claimed 129 lives. Const. Annie Delisle, a spokeswoman for the RCMP, confirmed to CBC News on Wednesday that the police force is aware of media reports about the apparently Canadian voice, "and are following up." On Monday, CBC News asked three linguistics specialists to analyze the recording, and all said the voice has some distinctly Canadian speech patterns. Security experts and the linguists say the voice on the audio recording has telltale inflections and characteristics of Canadian English. "The fellow on it sounded to me like he was ... Canadian, and probably specifically from Ontario," Erik Thomas, a linguistics professor at the University of North Carolina, told CBC News. CBC News; Global News; Canadian Press (Yahoo! News) (2015-11-18)

Suspected architect of Paris attacks is dead, according to two senior intelligence officials

A massive police raid Wednesday killed the suspected ringleader of the Paris attacks during a blitz-style sweep, two senior European intelligence officials said, after investigators followed leads that the fugitive militant was holed up north of the French capital and could be plotting another wave of violence. More than 100 police and soldiers stormed the building during a seven-hour siege that left two dead including the suspected overseer of the Paris bloodshed, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, who had once boasted he could slip easily between Europe and the Islamic State strongholds in Syria. The confirmation was made after forensic experts combed through the aftermath — blown-out windows, floors collapsed by explosions — presumably seeking DNA and other evidence. The intelligence officials spoke on condition of anonymity before announcements from authorities. The death of the Belgian extremist Abaaoud closed one major dragnet in the international search for suspects from Friday's carnage that killed at least 129 people and wounded 350 others. At least one other suspect believed closed linked to the Paris attacks remains at large. But it raised other worrisome questions, including the apparent ability of Abaaoud to evade intelligence agencies while traveling through Europe and whether other possible Islamic State cells could be seeking to strike again. Washington Post; New York Daily News; Telegraph; Daily Mail

Suspected Paris attack mastermind, now targeted in police operation, bragged about movements

The presumed mastermind of last week's devastating attacks in Paris once bragged about being so slippery he could move undetected between Syria and Belgium, his home country. On Wednesday he was targeted in a police operation in Paris. Explosions and gunfire rang out as French police stormed a building in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis where Abdelhamid Abaaoud was believed to be hiding, a senior police official told The Associated Press. Authorities said a woman blew herself up and a man was killed. Seven people were arrested. Police did not identify them. The official was not authorized to be publicly named according to police rules, but is informed about the operation. On Monday, French authorities identified Abaaoud, the child of Moroccan immigrants who grew up in the Belgian capital's multiethnic Molenbeek neighbourhood, as the presumed mastermind of last Friday's attacks that killed 129 people and wounded over 350. He also is believed to have links to earlier attacks that were thwarted: one against a Paris-bound high-speed train that was foiled by three young Americans in August, and the other against a church in the French capital's suburbs. Associated Press (Cape Breton Post, Charlottetown Guardian, Calgary Sun, Ottawa Sun, Edmonton Sun, The Telegram, Winnipeg Sun, Toronto Sun) (2015-11-18)

Paris attacks: 2 killed as police target alleged plotter Abdelhamid Abaaoud

A woman suicide bomber blew herself up and another militant died on Wednesday when police raided an apartment in the Paris suburb of Saint-Denis seeking suspects in last week's attacks in the French capital. Three sources told Reuters the raid stopped a jihadist cell that had been planning an attack on Paris's business district, La Defense, after co-ordinated bombings and shootings killed 129 across the city. Officials said police had been hunting Abdelhamid Abaaoud, a Belgian Islamist militant accused of being the ringleader of the Nov. 13 carnage, but more than nine hours after the launch of the pre-dawn raid it was still unclear if they had found him. Seven people were arrested in the operation, which started with a barrage of gunfire, including three people who were pulled from the apartment, officials said. "It is impossible to tell you who was arrested. We are in the process of verifying that. Everything will be done to determine who is who," Paris prosecutor François Molins said at the end of the operation. CBC News (CBS News); Toronto Star; New York Post; Reuters; Quartz; Guardian; New York Times (2015-11-18)

The Alleged Mastermind Of The Paris Attacks Praised Canadian Terrorists As "Martyrs"

The man police have identified as the mastermind of the Paris terror attacks called Canadian terrorists "martyrs" in a recent issue of an ISIS magazine. Abdelhamid Abaaoud, the internationally wanted Belgian jihadi who goes by the nom-de-guerre Abu Umar Al-Baljiki, was featured in the February issue of Dābiq. "I ask Allah to accept the fruitful deeds of the shuhadā' [martyrs] who terrorized the crusaders of America, France, Canada, Australia, Germany, and Belgium," he reportedly told the ISIS propaganda publication. Buzzfeed News (2015-11-18)

Defence Minister Sajjan on fear of ISIS after Paris attacks

Defence Minister Harjit S. Sajjan, an ex-soldier who confidently declared prior to the Paris terror attacks that Canadians shouldn't fear ISIS, said Wednesday he wasn't trying to suggest Canada is immune from that kind of carnage. The B.C. minister said he was only trying to send both a reassuring signal to the public and a defiant one to an organization that is increasingly spreading its terror web outside Iraq and Syria. "I want to give confidence to the Canadian population that we have some phenomenal capabilities" in terms of military, police and intelligence resources working to prevent an attack, the rookie MP for Vancouver South said in an interview. He also didn't want to give "ISIS that satisfaction that we fear them, and that we're going to change our way of life because of them." No one can guarantee Canada won't face a Paris-like assault, he said. But "if an attack does occur we have the resources and people in place to be able to deal with it." Sajjan cited his experience in Afghanistan, where Canada lost 158 soldiers between 2002-2011. Some days there were casualties as a result of Taliban ambushes and roadside bombs. "Were we afraid of the Taliban? No. One day we would take a hit, but we would be out patrolling again the next day." Postmedia Network (Vancouver Sun) (2015-11-18)

Eagles of Death Metal Make First Statement on Paris Attacks

Eagles of Death Metal, the American rock band that headlined the Bataclan last Friday, and was performing when three gunmen began their attack, has made its first public statement since then. Posting on Facebook, the band wrote that it had returned home but was "still trying to come to terms with what happened in France." It also included an image of hand signs from the band's first album, "Peace, Love, Death Metal," superimposed over the French flag. New York Times; Guardian (2015-11-18)

Two Suspects Sold Bar in Brussels Not Long Before Paris Attacks

Two suspects in the Paris attacks sold the bar they owned in Brussels six weeks before the onslaught, according to public records seen by The Wall Street Journal, and it was shut down shortly after the sale over concern drugs had been sold and consumed there. Brahim Abdeslam, who blew himself up outside the stadium in Paris, and his brother Salah—the subject of an international arrest warrant issued by Belgium because of suspicions he rented the car used in the attack—sold their stakes in the Les Beguines bar on Sept. 30, according to public documents. The records show they transferred ownership of the bar to a person based in a Belgian town on the French border. The documents didn't say how much it was sold for. Wall Street Journal (2015-11-18)

Paris restaurants defy terrorism in the most French way possible

Paris is on edge once again today, after police launched a predawn raid against suspected terrorists involved in last week's attacks. Two suspects have been killed and several others have been arrested, but for a few fleeting hours last night, it seemed as if normalcy was within reach. On Tuesday, Parisians flocked to local restaurants and bars in a uniquely French display of solidarity. It was all part of a social media campaign called #TousAuBistrot ("everyone to the bar"). Led by the restaurant reviews site Le Fooding, the campaign called on Parisians to spend their Tuesday evening at bars, restaurants, and cafe terraces around the city, as an act of defiance against terrorists who directly targeted a cornerstone of French culture Friday night. Among the six sites attacked last week were five restaurants and bars in the city's trendy 10th and 11th arrondissements. The attacks left 129 dead and 352 injured. The Verge (2015-11-18)

Anonymous Publishes Three Guides To Teach You "How To Hack" And Fight ISIS

The war between the hackers and terrorists is escalating quickly in the wake of the recent Paris attacks. In the short time frame of past two days, Anonymous hacktivist group has declared an open war on ISIS. In response, ISIS was quick to retaliate and called Anonymous 'idiots' who just know how to 'hack email and Twitter accounts'. In another development, Anonymous has released a series of guides urging the people to take part in their biggest ever operation called #OpParis. The guides include how-to instructions that tell the ways to hack the ISIS-affiliated websites and social media accounts. The rivalry of ISIS and Anonymous dates back to the Charlie Hebdo massacre in January. Anonymous has continued its attacks on ISIS and already exposed more than a thousand Twitter accounts. To train and bring the newer generation of hacktivists, Anonymous has released three how-to guides. These guides were posted on an IRC channel and Anonymous encouraged everyone to join this war against ISIS regardless of their computer skills. FossBytes (2015-11-18)

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

CTV News interviewed Pierre-Yves Bourduas, President, P-Y Public Safety Management Inc., former Deputy Commissioner of Federal Services and Central Region, Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He discussed the police raids in France following the Paris attacks. Rough Transcript (2015-11-18, 15h30)

CTV News - interviewed Pierre-Yves Bourduas, former Deputy Commissioner RCMP - Paris attacks - police raids Rough Transcript (2015-11-18, 15h30 ET)

CP24 covered Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale speaking about national security following the Paris attacks last week Rough Transcript (2015-11-18, 16h05 ET)

CBC News Power & Politics interviewed Francois Audet from the Canadian Research Institute on Humanitarian Crisis and Aid on the security screening process for Syrian refugees, as well as timelines and logistics associated with bringing them to Canada. Rough Transcript (2015-11-18, 18:30 ET)

CBC News Power & Politics interviewed security analyst and former assistant director of intelligence at CSIS, Ray Boisvert, on the current security situation in Canada in light of Friday's attacks in Paris and how Syrian refugees coming to Canada will be security screened. Rough Transcript (2015-11-18, 17h05)

CTV News presented a news panel with Matt Gurney from the National Post, and Andrew Cullen with the Ottawa Citizen. French police raids following the Paris attacks were discussed as well as the issue of Syrian refugees coming to Canada. Rough Transcript (2015-11-18, 10:35 ET)

RDI covered the mastermind behind the Paris massacre, Abdelhamid Abaaoud, is dead, according to two senior intelligence officials. The 27-year-old Belgian jihadi leader is said to have been killed by French commandos when a flat was raided in the early hours of this morning. (CBC News, 13h10; CTV News, 13h10 ET; RDI, 13h10 ET)

CBC / CTV covered explosions and heavy gunfire that were heard in Paris as armed police searching for suspects from Friday's attacks raided a flat in the suburb of Saint-Denis. Two people were killed in the raid, including a female suspect who blew herself up with a suicide belt. Seven people have been arrested. (CBC News, 9h ET; CTV News, 9h ET; RDI, 9h00 ET)

Reuters News Agency quoted a French police source as saying that a new attack was being planned. This one targeting a business district in Paris. (CBC News, 9h15 ET)

RDI a annoncé Le président de la France entend prolonger l'état d'urgence jusqu'en février 2016. (RDI, 9h15 ET)

CBC covered French President François Hollande this morning heralding the raid saying it neutralized terrorists with links to the attacks here in Paris last week. (CBC News, 10h04 ET)

CTV News covered France's Interior Minister, Bernard Cazeneuve announcing that Abdelhamid Abaaoud was among those killed in a French police raid yesterday Rough Transcript (2015-11-19, 9h05 ET)

Social Media / Médias sociaux

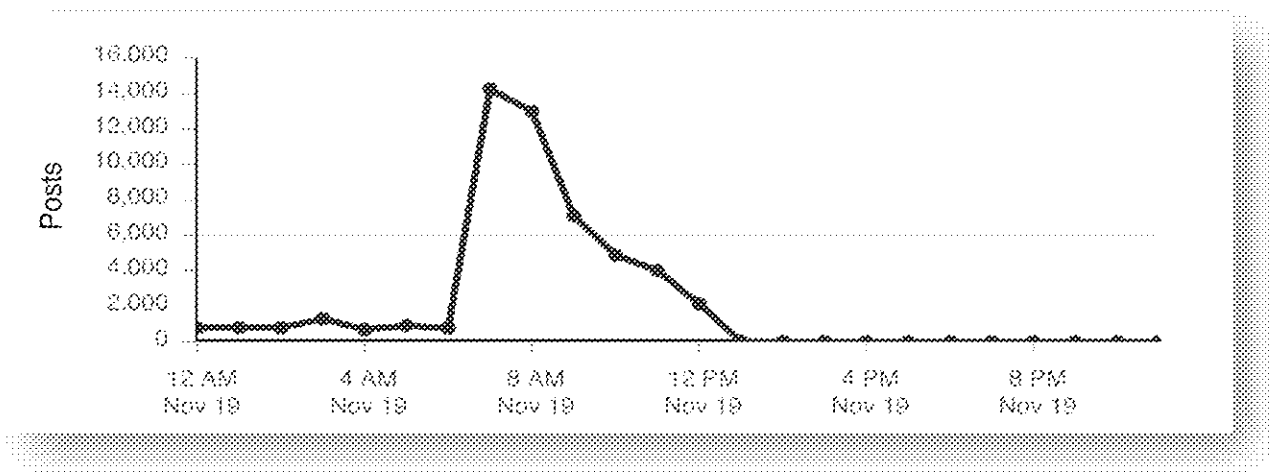

Social media activity regarding Canada's reaction to the Paris terrorist attacks is extensive. There have been approximately 51,484 social media posts on this topic between 12:00 am and 12:00 pm ET, November 19.

The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

There have been approximately 43,346 tweets, 3,647 mainstream news site posts, 16 Facebook posts, 1,451 blog posts, and 2,803 comment/forum posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout yesterday's evening and into this morning:

Social media activity peaked at approximately 7:00 am and 11:00 am ET, with 14,246 posts regarding the Paris attacks as well as Canada's response.

Tweets of note:

TheEconomist

France responds to an attack on its way of life. Our briefing on the Paris attacks <http://econ.st/1Xb0r5n>

tvanouvelles

EN VIDÉO | Attentats de Paris: les images de l'intérieur d'un café pendant la tuerie. <http://bit.ly/117wWfW>

globalnews

France says it got tip about where mastermind of Paris attack was hiding <http://glbn.ca/UQDR>

cnnbrk

Nine detained in Belgium raids connected to #ParisAttacks probe, Belgian authorities say.

<http://cnn.it/117hgSr>

mtlgazette

Jokers, terrorists and why we'll always have Paris <http://bit.ly/1MVS7ox>

globalnews

Paris attacks: Video of 'London Muslims celebrating terror attacks' is fake <http://glbn.ca/UQSXV>

NahlahAyed

France National Assembly votes overwhelmingly in favour of extending state of emergency by three months. #cbc #parisattacks

Reuters

France says it never received information that attack mastermind Abaaoud was in the country:

<http://reut.rs/1MpcCIT>

metromontreal

Des milliers de chiens du monde entier rendent hommage à un chien tué à Paris #JeSuisDiesel

<http://bit.ly/1MXdzW3>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Parliamentary Oversight on National Security | Comité parlementaires concernant la sécurité nationale
2016-06-16

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale announced on June 16 the tabling of "An Act to establish the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians" to create a multi-party Parliamentary committee to oversee national security activities.
- The legislation outlines how a security-cleared committee of seven MPs and two senators would review the activities of national security agencies, with no more than four members from the party forming the government. The committee would have wide authority to "scrutinize any national security matter", with the Public Safety Minister having authority to stop any review that could jeopardize national security.
- Media coverage was fairly significant at the time of the announcement with articles appearing across online and print media, as well as television coverage of Ministers Goodale and Leblanc making the announcement. Minister Goodale was also interviewed by CTV News' Power and Politics. Tone of coverage was neutral in most news items and no opinion pieces appeared on the day of the announcement. Coverage dropped significantly over the course of the day.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

- "We have written the legislation to withstand the test of time and if some future hypothetical prime minister were in the process of abusing his or her powers, this committee would be in a position to say very loudly to Canadians, 'something that shouldn't be happening is going on and you ought to be concerned. If that eventually happens at some time in future, this committee would be extraordinarily valuable.'" ~ Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale (iPolitics)
- "We need to make sure our security and intelligence agencies are doing everything that is necessary and appropriate to keep Canadians safe and ... are conducting themselves in a way that safeguards the rights and freedoms of Canadians." ~ Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale (Reuters)
- "[Members of the committee] will have to swear an oath with respect to the information that they obtain, and violation of that oath is a criminal offence and a breach of trust. Illegally, improperly divulging information that is contrary to the national security of Canada is a serious criminal offence." ~ Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale (Globe and Mail)

- "This new oversight committee would allow members of the Senate and the House of Commons to scrutinize how departments and agencies across the government of Canada - with national security and intelligence responsibilities - are operating and report to Parliament on their findings and their recommendations." ~ Government House Leader Dominic LeBlanc (CBC News)
- « Ce nouveau comité de surveillance permettra à des membres du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes d'examiner comment fonctionnent les ministères et les agences de l'ensemble du gouvernement canadien dotés de responsabilités touchant à la sécurité nationale et au renseignement » ~ Leader du gouvernement à la Chambre des communes, Dominic LeBlanc (Radio-Canada)
- "It's basically a PMO extension with a whole range of exclusions... [t]his should report to Parliament. They're also making it very easy for a lot of ministries and agencies to avoid sharing information with this committee." ~ Conservative MP and public safety critic Erin O'Toole (National Post)
- "The ability of the PM to redact final committee reports is broader than ideal — at the very least there should be a capacity for the committee to signal that redactions have been made." ~ National security law professor Craig Forcese (iPolitics)
- "It would be very nice to address some of the issues noted above, but on paper at least, this will be a stronger body than the UK and Australian equivalents. And a dramatic change for Canadian national security accountability." ~ National security law professor Craig Forcese (iPolitics)

Online Media / Médias en ligne

Special committee of MPs, senators would monitor intelligence agencies

The Liberal government is moving to create a multi-party committee of parliamentarians — bound forever to secrecy — to serve as another set of eyes on federal intelligence activities. Legislation tabled Thursday would authorize the security-cleared committee of seven MPs and two senators to scrutinize the intelligence work of more than a dozen agencies. A maximum of four MPs from the governing party could be members. The goal is to ensure security and intelligence organizations are effective while protecting Canadian values, rights and freedoms, said Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale, who called it the most important Liberal promise on national security. All of Canada's major allies — including the United States, Britain and France — have such committees. "We have studied what those other countries do," Goodale told a news conference, adding Canada has learned from the examples — both good and bad. The Canadian committee would have a high degree of independence, power to delve into any national security matter and access to classified government information. However, ministers could withhold information from the members if handing it over would harm national security... On paper at least, the proposed committee is a stronger body than the equivalents in Australia and Britain, said Craig Forcese, a law professor at the University of Ottawa who specializes in national security. However, Forcese has concerns about the government's ability to veto the committee's plans, limit its ability to see secret materials and redact its reports. Overall, the legislation is "a very good bill" that would create a long overdue role for parliamentarians, said Wesley Wark, an intelligence historian who also teaches at the University of Ottawa. However, Wark added, the real test will be finding the right members, setting up a secretariat to support the committee, actually doing good work, earning the trust of the security and intelligence community and "finding ways to really inform the Canadian public about sensitive intelligence and security issues." Canadian Press (Metro News)

New spy watchdog will have power to examine 'any activity, any operation': Goodale

Sweeping powers to scrutinize "any issue, any activity, any operation" will be granted to a new committee of parliamentarians to watch over federal spying and other clandestine security and intelligence activities, the government has announced. The long-promised Bill C-22, tabled in the Commons Thursday, proposes creation of an unprecedented "national security and intelligence committee of parliamentarians" to hold to greater account the nation's two chief spy services and at least 15 other departments and agencies with national security responsibilities. The move fulfils a major Liberal election promise to increase parliamentary scrutiny of national security operations to offset the expansive and controversial counterterrorism powers under the Anti-terrorism Act of 2015, formerly Bill C-51, to investigate, detain, arrest, silence or otherwise thwart individuals suspected as threats to the security of Canada. The all-party committee of nine MPs and two Senators, to be chosen by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and supported by a small secretariat, would be sworn to permanent secrecy and handed a broad mandate to probe, mainly ex post facto, any and all national security activities to gauge whether they are effective, efficient and legal. Its primary investigative tool would be a statutory power to access many of the nation's most guarded secrets. "They are going to have the ability to look at any issue, any activity, any operation, any document in the government of Canada that relates to security and intelligence matters," Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale told reporters after the bill's unveiling. "They will be able to ask questions and conduct inquiries and satisfy themselves that two important objectives are being met: to make sure our security and intelligence agencies are being effective in keeping Canadians safe and to make sure they are safeguarding the rights and freedoms of Canadians."... Goodale responded to that concern: "If the minister believes that a particular examination at a particular point in time will be injurious to national security then the minister has to give reasons. It's not just a capricious judgment. "If this committee makes it known in the public domain that they are unhappy with what they have seen and that there is something in the security intelligence operations that they believe is unfolding in an improper way, putting that comment in the public domain will, quite frankly, set off alarm bells right across the country and it will then be incumbent upon the prime minister to explain himself or herself to Canadians. This puts an extraordinary public discipline on the process."... But Conservative MP and public safety critic Erin O'Toole said that is one of several flaws. "It's basically a PMO extension with a whole range of exclusions" for the government to deny it access to needed top-secret information. "This should report to Parliament. They're also making it very easy for a lot of ministries and agencies to avoid sharing information with this committee," he said. Current review of the national security apparatus and the handling of public complaints is now siloed within three small watchdog agencies, led by the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC), which conducts after-the-fact reviews of the operations of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, the country's human spy service. There is no independent oversight or review of the Canada Border Services Agency, which has a dual intelligence and law-enforcement role, and several other arms of government with national security duties. Depending on how transparent a government chooses to be, sending controversial national security issues to a secret committee could effectively launder executive decisions by purposely routing them to the committee to limit or eliminate further public exposure, say some experts. It also could potentially hamper the opposition's ability to critique government. National Post

Bill to create spy oversight committee introduced in House of Commons

A nine-member, multi-party committee of parliamentarians would oversee federal intelligence activities under a long-anticipated bill tabled Thursday. The legislation would authorize a security-cleared committee of seven MPs and two senators to scrutinize the intelligence work of more than a dozen agencies. A maximum of four MPs from the governing party could be members. The goal is to ensure security and intelligence organizations are effective while protecting Canadian values, rights and freedoms, said Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale. All of Canada's major allies — including the United States, Britain and France — have such committees. "We have studied what those other committees do," Goodale told a news conference, adding Canada has learned from the examples — both good and bad. The Canadian committee would have power to delve into any national security matter. However, ministers could withhold information from the members if handing it over would harm national security. Canadian Press (Times-Colonist)

Liberals to create new committee to oversee Canadian security agencies

Canada's new committee of parliamentarians overseeing national-security operations will be made up of seven MPs and two senators. The legislative oversight committee overseeing agencies like the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the RCMP will have wide-ranging authorities to "scrutinize any national security matter," the federal government announced on Thursday, after legislation to create the committee was tabled. However, the minister of public safety "would have the authority to stop such a review if it would be injurious to national security," the government said. Public Safety Minister Ralph

Goodale told reporters on Wednesday that everyone on the permanent committee will swear an oath of secrecy. The committee was inspired by a number of foreign models, especially the nine-member Intelligence and Security Committee of Parliament in Britain. Mr. Goodale added that he does not want a system like the one in the U.S. Congress, which is prone to leaks. "[Members of the committee] will have to swear an oath with respect to the information that they obtain, and violation of that oath is a criminal offence and a breach of trust," he said. "Illegally, improperly divulging information that is contrary to the national security of Canada is a serious criminal offence." The committee will have "extraordinary authority to examine all of the security and intelligence operations of the government of Canada," with access to classified information from agencies such as CSIS and the RCMP, Mr. Goodale said. Globe and Mail

Liberals propose joint oversight committee on national security

The federal government today introduced new legislation to create a joint committee to oversee national security matters, one of three public safety-related bills the Liberals are tabling this week. "This new oversight committee would allow members of the Senate and the House of Commons to scrutinize how departments and agencies across the government of Canada - with national security and intelligence responsibilities - are operating and report to Parliament on their findings and their recommendations, Government House leader Dominic LeBlanc said in Ottawa on Thursday. The nine-member committee would be made up of seven MPs and two senators who would have the clearance to delve into all matters of national security. LeBlanc served notice on Wednesday that he would table the bill, titled "An Act to establish the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians and to make consequential amendments to certain Acts." The Liberals campaigned on a promise to create a committee tasked with overseeing all of Canada's national security agencies. CBC News

National security committee bill tabled

The government's long-awaited all-party national security committee should be up and running by fall, Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said Thursday after tabling the bill creating the intelligence review body. The formation of a committee of legislators to review intelligence activities was a key demand of opponents of the Harper government's security legislation, C-51. All of Canada's major allies, including the United States, Britain and France, have such committees. While the government will have the power to shut down the committee's reviews, withhold information and review committee reports, Goodale says it will still be able to hold governments to account. "We have written the legislation to withstand the test of time and if some future hypothetical prime minister were in the process of abusing his or her powers, this committee would be in a position to say very loudly to Canadians, 'something that shouldn't be happening is going on and you ought to be concerned,'" Goodale said in a press conference. "If that eventually happens at some time in future, this committee would be extraordinarily valuable." The new legislation will create a nine-member joint committee that includes two members appointed from the Senate and seven members from the House of Commons. The appointments will be made by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the prime minister and no more than four of the members from the House of Commons can be from the governing party. The committee will have a mandate to scrutinize activities, including ongoing operations, by any of the 17 government departments and agencies that deal with national security, including the RCMP, CBSA, CSIS, CSE and others such as the Department of Foreign Affairs. iPolitics

Canada to give MPs oversight of security, intelligence agencies

Canada will set up a committee of legislators to oversee security and intelligence agencies and ensure their work does not infringe upon civil liberties, a top official said on Thursday. The Liberal government is acting in the wake of global concerns about the reach of security agencies. Former U.S. intelligence contractor Edward Snowden leaked details about mass surveillance by British and U.S. spies in 2013. "We need to make sure our security and intelligence agencies are doing everything that is necessary and appropriate to keep Canadians safe and ... are conducting themselves in a way that safeguards the rights and freedoms of Canadians," said Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale. Canada is the only one of the so-called Five Eyes intelligence-sharing network to lack such a parliamentary review committee. The other members are Britain, the United States, Australia and New Zealand. Most Canadian agencies have small individual review bodies, which critics complain are impotent and can only look at old cases. Goodale told reporters the new nine-person committee would have robust powers to probe any file it wanted, including active ones. Reuters (UK Daily Mail)

Ottawa crée un comité parlementaire sur la sécurité nationale et le renseignement

Le gouvernement libéral de Justin Trudeau a déposé jeudi un projet de loi qui donnera naissance à un comité de parlementaires chargé de veiller à la sécurité du pays et de protéger les droits des Canadiens. Le leader du gouvernement à la Chambre des communes, Dominic LeBlanc, et le ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile, Ralph Goodale, en ont fait l'annonce à Ottawa, en précisant que ce comité jouira d'un « vaste mandat ». « Ce nouveau comité de surveillance permettra à des membres du Sénat et de la Chambre des communes d'examiner comment fonctionnent les ministères et les agences de l'ensemble du gouvernement canadien dotés de responsabilités touchant à la sécurité nationale et au renseignement », a affirmé Dominic LeBlanc. C'est donc dire que la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) ou encore le Centre de sécurité des télécommunications seront dans la ligne de mire du comité. Radio-Canada

What do you think about the proposed security oversight committee?

The Liberal government is tabling multiple public safety-related bills this week, including the bill "An Act to establish the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians" tabled on Thursday. The bill proposes a joint oversight committee, composed of seven MPs and two senators, which will have the ability to "scrutinize" any national security matters. Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale, who helped draft the bill, stated the goal of the committee would be to help ensure Canada's security and intelligence agencies are protecting Canadians and to protect Canadians rights and freedoms. Rabble.ca

Un nouveau comité à Ottawa pour surveiller toutes les activités de renseignement

C'est finalement un comité formé de neuf parlementaires de toutes allégeances qui surveillera les différentes agences fédérales impliquées de près ou de loin dans le renseignement et la sécurité nationale. En vertu du projet de loi déposé jeudi aux Communes par le leader du gouvernement, Dominic LeBlanc, le comité sera composé de sept députés, dont quatre du parti ministériel, et de deux sénateurs. Ces parlementaires pourront discrètement scruter le travail d'une quinzaine d'agences et ministères concernés. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Ralph Goodale, a indiqué jeudi en point de presse à Ottawa que son gouvernement souhaite ainsi s'assurer que toutes ces organisations sont efficaces, mais aussi qu'elles respectent les valeurs fondamentales, les droits et les libertés des Canadiens. De tels comités existent déjà chez les principaux alliés du Canada - dont les États-Unis, la France et le Royaume-Uni - et le ministre Goodale a indiqué que son gouvernement s'était inspiré de ce qui se fait ailleurs dans le monde. Presse Canadienne (La Presse)

Un projet de loi fédéral pour créer un comité chargé de surveiller les espions canadiens

Le gouvernement Trudeau a déposé un projet de loi, aux Communes jeudi, pour créer un comité parlementaire chargé de surveiller les opérations des espions canadiens. Cette mesure législative se veut une réponse des libéraux de Justin Trudeau à la controversée loi 51 antiterroriste adoptée par le gouvernement Harper. Ce comité aura à s'assurer « que les organismes responsables de la sécurité et du renseignement sont en mesure de protéger efficacement les Canadiens » indique le gouvernement. Ce comité multipartite sera formé de représentants des Communes et du Sénat et aurait un mandat pangouvernemental ainsi qu'un accès spécial à des renseignements « hautement classifiés », afin de pouvoir examiner les opérations de sécurité nationale et relatives au renseignements. Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal)

Attacks shift perception of C-51 - Desire to weaken anti-terror laws diminishing

An opinion piece states "In the general election campaign, the Liberals were vocal about repealing the 'problematic elements' of the Conservative government's anti-terror legislation. In the wake of the carnage in Paris last November, and now in Orlando, Fla., it is fair to say there is much less enthusiasm to overturn many of its provisions, particularly those that allow the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to disrupt potential terrorist activity. Ralph Goodale, the public safety minister, will introduce a bill creating an all-party committee of parliamentarians to provide oversight to the expanded national security apparatus before the House of Commons rises this summer, as the Ottawa Citizen's Ian MacLeod reported this month. The government will also review all appeals by Canadians to the no-fly list and create a counter-radicalization office to work in vulnerable communities, as promised in the election platform... Goodale has further said he intends to engage in public consultations on the entire national security framework over the summer, to look at areas where the current legislation might be improved. But, after the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant-inspired outrages in Paris and Orlando, there does not seem to be an appetite to roll back the substantive parts of the bill that allow CSIS to use loosely defined disruptive 'measures,' or attempt to raise the threshold for preventive detention... Public outrage may yet be ignited when the first annual report covering the new legislation is released by CSIS's watchdog, the Security Intelligence Review Committee. As security expert Wesley Wark pointed out, if the report suggests CSIS has been abusing its new powers, or if the CSE commissioner claims the organization has not been complying with Canadian law in collecting metadata, the public's concern about rights may trump fears about security. But for now, public sentiment appears to be governed by a sense that all that protects them from a disaffected Omar Mateen-type figure is a vigilant security service, standing on guard..." Ottawa Citizen

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Broadcast media for this period was significant at the time of the announcement with major networks providing coverage of Ministers Goodale and Leblanc presenting the legislation and responding to questions from media.

Of note:

- CTV News broadcast the creation of a national security and intelligence committee of parliamentarians announced by government House Leader Dominic Leblanc and Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale. Rough Transcript
- CP24 broadcast a question and answer session with Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale following his announcement of the creation of a national security and intelligence committee of parliamentarians. Rough Transcript
- CTV News' Power Play interviewed Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale on the introduction of legislation to establish a national security oversight committee of parliamentarians. Rough Transcript
- CBC News' Power & Politics interviewed Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale on the introduction of legislation to establish the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians. Rough Transcript

Social Media / Médias sociaux

Public Safety Accounts

- Activity on the department's channels were extremely minimal in terms of mentions and retweets. Only 1 user replied:
 - We tweeted two original tweets per language

Public Safety Canada @Safety_Canada
Proposed Nat'l Security & Intel. Cmte of Parliamentarians is "a uniquely CAN model that reflects our own values & ideals." - Min. Goodale

- This tweet gained 1626 impressions
- 4 RTs
- 1 Like

Sécurité publique @Securite_Canada
Le Comité des parlementaires sur la sécurité nationale proposé est « un modèle CAN qui reflète nos valeurs, «libaux». » - Min. Goodale

- This tweet gained 289 impressions
- 1 RT

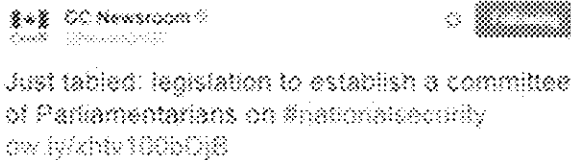

Public Safety Canada @Safety_Canada
Want to get up to speed on the proposed Nat'l Security & Intelligence Cmte of Parliamentarians? Here's a primer <http://ow.ly/NNE301kMaH>

- This tweet gained 1346 impressions
- 6 click-throughs
- 3 RTs
- 2 Likes

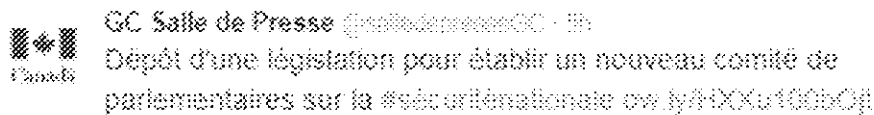

Sécurité publique @Securite_Canada
Vous voulez vous + d'infos sur Comité des parlementaires sur sécurité nationale proposé? Voici notions élémentaires <http://ow.ly/XFYu301kMrv>

- This tweet gained 231 impressions
- 1 click-through

- We retweeted the official announcement from NewsroomGC, which received 7 retweets and 4 likes in English, and 2 retweets and 1 like in French overall (i.e. not caused by PS's retweeting alone).

GC Newsroom @GCNewsroom
Just tabled: legislation to establish a committee of Parliamentarians on #nationalsecurity ow.ly/zhtv100b0j6

GC Salle de Presse @SalledePresseGC
Dépôt d'une législation pour établir un nouveau comité de parlementaires sur la #sécuritéinternationale ow.ly/4DXu100b0j6

- Activity on the department's channels were extremely minimal in terms of mentions and retweets. Only 1 user replied:

@Safety_Canada get rid of c51

Tweets of note

Ralph Goodale

Have just intro'd legislation to implement our single most important commitment to Cdns on National Security (1/2) #cdnpoli

Ralph Goodale

New "Committee of Parliamentarians" will have extraordinary access to scrutinize security+intell activities of the GoC (2/2)

Ralph Goodale

Nous venons de présenter un projet de loi pour mettre en place notre engagement clé aux Canadiens sur la sécurité nationale (1/2)

Ralph Goodale

Nouveau "Comité des parlementaires" aura un accès extraordinaire pour scruter-activités en matière de renseignement- sécurité du GoC (2/2)

Safety Canada

Want to get up to speed on the proposed Nat'l Security & Intelligence Cmte of Parliamentarians? Here's a primer <http://ow.ly/aNNI301kMaH>

Securite Canada

Vous voulez vous + d'infos sur Comité des parlementaires sur sécurité nationale proposé? Voici notions élémentaires <http://ow.ly/XTYu301kMnw>

Safety Canada

Proposed Nat'l Security & Intel. Cmte of Parliamentarians is "a uniquely CDN model that reflects our own values & ideals." - Min. Goodale

Securite Canada

Le Comité des parlementaires sur la sécurité nationale proposé est « un modèle CDN qui reflète nos valeurs, idéaux . » – Min. Goodale salledepresseGC

Dépôt d'une législation pour établir un nouveau comité de parlementaires sur la #sécuriténationale
<http://ow.ly/HXXu100bOjt>

NewsroomGC

Just tabled: legislation to establish a committee of Parliamentarians on #nationalsecurity
<http://ow.ly/xhtv100bOjB>

PnPCBC

Now on #pnpcbc: @RalphGoodale discusses the proposed security & intelligence parliamentary oversight committee #cdnpoli

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: they have a very broad mandate to scrutinize the intelligence activities of the whole of the gov't of Canada. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: they will be able to look at any activity, any material of any intelligence/security agency. #cdnpoli #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: committee would get involved if there was something that had a very direct, immediate impact on national security. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: the ultimate safeguard: Canadians would know if there was something the committee wasn't happy about.

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: it's the PM who's responsible and carries ultimate burden of safety and security of Cdns. That is where the buck stops.

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: selection of comm. members: David McGuinty will be chair. Other members yet to be selected, will involve all parties.

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: they'll be required to take an oath respecting classified nature of material they'll be dealing with. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@RalphGoodale: we expect good people will come out of consultation process and they'll discharge responsibilities in a responsible way.

CTV PowerPlay

ICYM: Public Safety Minister @RalphGoodale announced the long-awaited spy oversight committee today goo.gl/IXYVZC #cdnpoli

DonMartinCTV

On @CTV_PowerPlay, @janephilpott and @Puglaas on assisted dying bill, @RalphGoodale on spy oversight and @nathancullen on friend Jo Cox.

nationalpost

New spy watchdog will have power to examine 'any activity, any operation': Ralph Goodale natpo.st/1W28xAR

YahooCanadaNews

Special committee of MPs, senators would monitor intelligence agencies yhoo.it/1PwTpEJ pic.twitter.com/WO2SgPjj7

TondaMacC

New Parl'ty nat security oversight cttee w hv 2 senators, 7 MPS, cannot claim parl immunity if they divulge secrets.

TondaMacC

Cttee to hv 4 MPs fr Govt side. Will hv power to scrutinize "any nat security matter" including ongoing operations.

TondaMacC

Pub Safety minister wd be able to shut down review to protect 3rd parties, prevent interference inactive military ops.

TondaMacC

Cttee wd be limited in reviews to protect law enforcement functions. MPs wd hv right of access to info ex where it wd harm nat security.

TondaMacC

PS Minister wd hv to provide rationale for withholding info fr cttee. Not clear if that decision subject to judicial review.

TondaMacC

Nat security parliamentary oversight cttee to be housed within executive, not legislative, branch to control use/disclosure of secret info.

TondaMacC

@RalphGoodale: "extraordinary access" to any national security matter across all depts, agencies = Cdn model.

TondaMacC

Tech briefing: PCO official says nat secy cttee w NOT have access to cabinet confidences, informants identity, commercially sensitive info.

TondaMacC

Other exclusions: names of protected witnesses, defence intel activities in support of ongoing military ops, FINTRAC info not yet acted on.

HuffPostCanada

Liberals table bill to create spy oversight committee #cdnpoli <http://huff.to/1Yuj1nW>

David Akin

I asked @ralphgoodale almost exactly that question. He says this was designed as a check on any future PMO abuse.

Craig Forcese

@davidakin @RalphGoodale Key ques: subsequent obligations on PM to submit report to Parliament. Delay in submission been issue in Aus.

David Akin

"I would be very happy if this bill could be passed early in the fall," @RalphGoodale says of security committee legislation.

David Akin

@RalphGoodale Security committee "not a complaints forum per se" but can take up matters of public concern

David Akin

New security committee will be given secretariat and resources to support their work, @RalphGoodale says

David Akin

David Akin Retweeted Ralph Goodale
Hope! For you #C51 objectors.

Claire Wahlen

@davidakin Not necessarily, yet. They promised a summer of consultation before putting a new bill out to make #C51 amendments. Wait til then

Ralph Goodale

@davidakin -Not so David. One key pledge was new Cmte of Parliamentarians to scrutinize Sec+Intell activities - intro'd today. More to come.

David Akin

If you objected to #C51 and bought #LPC promises they would change offending bits, u may be a bit disappointed today.

David Akin

In scrum, @RalphGoodale says oversight committee is "cornerstone" of several initiatives to change objectionable #C51 bits

PhilippeVincentFoisy

À propos des pouvoirs du ministre : le ministre de la Sec Pub dit le comité peut le dire publiquement et ca, ca peut faire mal. #polcan

Vassy Kapelos

Goodale: we are fulfilling the single most important campaign commitment...w/ respect to national security #cdnpoli

Amanda Connolly

Committee can review ongoing ops but minister can stop them at any time if "such a review would be injurious to Nat Sec."

CPAC

10amET: @RalphGoodale & @Min_LeBlanc discuss the proposed national security oversight committee. #cdnpoli <http://www.cpac.ca/en/direct/cpac2>

Jim Bronskill

Nine-member, multi-party committee would scrutinize security activities under bill tabled today <http://www.nationalnewswatch.com/> #cdnpoli

National Newswatch

Liberals propose joint oversight committee with 'extraordinary access' to scrutinize national security

David Akin

Ministers will have power to shut down investigation by #c51 oversight committee on national security grounds.

David Akin

Before oversight committee can tell Parliament anything, PMO gets to edit and censor. #C51

David Akin

New #C51 oversight committee to report to PM, not to Parliament.

David Akin

New security and intelligence committee will have 9 on it: 2 Senators, 7 MPs incl 4 from governing party. #C51

Amanda Connolly

Not clear if here would be any kind of review or challenge function for this refusal mechanism

Amanda Connolly

Committee will have "right of access" to info it requests but minister can withhold "special operational info" if disclosure would harm NS

PhilippeVincentFoisy

Comme les libéraux n'ont pas le contrôle sur le sénat, ils ne seront pas majoritaire au comité. Mais avec 4 élus + 1 sénateur, les consv...

PhilippeVincentFoisy

LE comité aura un mandat pangouvernemental et se pencherait sur toute question ayant trait à la sécurité nationale. #polcan

PhilippeVincentFoisy

Le gvt formera un comité pour superviser les agences de sécurité. Mais le ministre se garde BCP de pouvoirs <http://nouvelles.gc.ca/> #polcan

Craig Forcese

Because new bill imminent, time to re-up paper on what to look for in nat'l security committee of parliamentarians: <http://papers.ssrn.com/>

Claire Wählen

Lots of national security legislation out this week before the House breaks for summer. Silver lining? At least it's not an omnibus #cdnpoli

Globe Politics

Liberals to create new committee to oversee Canadian security agencies <http://trib.al/JshzmLn> #cdnpoli

MrMubinShaikh

Excellent. NationalSecurityOversight in Canada is closer2becoming reality. #cdnpoli #C51
<https://t.co/ozYQfQYbsR>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@Canada.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
January 30, 2015 / le 30 janvier, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Foundation embankment failure to blame for Mount Polley disaster: government report

Failure in the foundation embankment is what led to the tailings pond breach at Mount Polley site that sent millions of cubic meters of waste into Hazeltine Creek, Quesnel Lake and Polley Lake last year. That's the conclusion of a report released by the B.C. government this morning. An independent panel of engineers was formed to find out why the tailings pond burst last August. The panel concluded that the dominant contribution to the failure resides in the design, particularly the glacial lake deposit in the foundation embankment that was not taken into consideration. "The design did not take into account the complexity of the sub-glacial and pre-glacial geological environment associated with the perimeter embankment foundation," said panel chair Norbert Morgenstern. "As the result, foundation investigations and associated site characterization failed to identify this continuous layer in the vicinity of the breach and to recognize it was susceptible to failure when subject to the stresses associated with the embankment." Global News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Government tables anti-terror bill to prevent, crack down on violent extremists

Sweeping new anti-terrorism powers introduced by the Conservative government Friday include giving Canadian spies police-like powers to disrupt terrorist operations, allow authorities to remove terrorist propaganda from the internet and make it a crime to promote or to advocate others to engage in terrorism. Many of the measures will affect the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service. The plan to boost CSIS's ability to counter terrorist threats flows from a federal review of fatal attacks on two Canadian soldiers last October. As expected, the bill would also make it easier for the RCMP to obtain a peace bond to restrict the movements of a suspect, and it extends the period for preventative arrest and detention. In addition, the legislation would expand the no-fly regime to cover those travelling by air to take part in terrorist activities, whereas currently there must be an immediate risk to the plane. Ottawa Citizen

Spy service to get stronger under federal bill

Newly tabled anti-terrorism legislation would give Canada's spy agency more power to thwart a suspected extremist's travel plans, disrupt bank transactions and covertly interfere with radical websites. The plan to boost the Canadian Security Intelligence Service's ability to counter terrorist threats flows from a review of fatal attacks on two Canadian soldiers last October -- incidents the government believes were fuelled by Islamic extremism. As expected, the bill would also make it easier for the RCMP to obtain a peace bond to restrict the movements of a suspect and it extends the period for preventative arrest and detention. In addition, the legislation would expand the no-fly regime to cover those travelling by air to take part in terrorist activities, whereas currently there must be an immediate risk to the plane. The bill proposes giving the RCMP power to seek a judge's order to remove terrorist propaganda from the Internet. CTV News (Global News, MyKawartha.com, News 1130, Thompson Citizen)

Lutte contre le terrorisme : Harper présente son projet de loi

CBC a appris que le projet de loi devrait changer le mandat du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), qui se limitait à collecter des informations pour les transmettre à la police. Le SCRS pourra agir dans certaines opérations jusqu'ici dévolues à la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), sans toutefois pouvoir procéder lui-même à des arrestations. Ces nouveaux pouvoirs permettraient au Service d'obtenir des mandats pour empêcher des sympathisants djihadistes de quitter le pays et annuler des réservations de vols qu'ils pourraient faire pour rejoindre des groupes extrémistes outremer. Le Service pourra aussi bloquer des transactions financières liées à de possibles activités terroristes et intercepter des livraisons d'équipement ou de matériel qui pourraient être utilisées dans d'éventuelles attaques. Radio-Canada.ca

Government tables sweeping Anti-Terrorism Act, increasing powers of security agencies

People who encourage terrorism attacks, even if they don't counsel a specific act, could face up to five years in prison under new legislation the federal government wants to pass into law. For instance, an individual in Canada who posts a video online that includes the phrase "Attack Canada" could be charged with advocating or promoting "terrorism offences in general." Individuals could be charged even if they're advocating attacks against countries or people other than Canada. The new criminal code offence is a marked departure from the current situation, in which police can only take action when an online posting refers to a specific attack, such as killing a particular category of individuals or targeting a precise location. The proposed new charge is part of a series of anti-terror measures the Harper government introduced Friday in a bill it says is necessary to protect Canadians in the wake of deadly attacks on soldiers last October that also led to a gunman storming Parliament. Globe and Mail

Dépôt d'un projet de loi antiterroriste qui ratisse large

Le gouvernement fédéral a finalement déposé vendredi son projet de loi qui répond aux attaques d'Ottawa et de Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu en octobre. Le projet de loi de plus de 60 pages élargit de manière importante les pouvoirs d'agences de sécurité comme le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) pour prévenir des actes terroristes. En voici un bref survol : - Mandat plus large au

SCRS: Le SCRS se voit accorder le mandat de perturber les menaces à la sécurité du pays - au Canada et à l'étranger. Actuellement, son mandat se limite à la collecte de renseignements, qu'elle doit communiquer à d'autres organismes comme la GRC. Le SCRS pourrait maintenant passer lui-même à l'action en empêchant des déplacements potentiels, entre autres, en interceptant des déplacements d'armes ou en bloquant des communications incitant au terrorisme. La Presse

Conservative government's terror bill increases spy agency powers

The Conservative's new anti-terror legislation would dramatically increase powers for Canadian spies, giving them police powers to detain, surveil, and disrupt suspects' activities. The terrorism bill, tabled Friday in Parliament, allows the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to directly intervene to dissuade and disrupt their targets' plans. Currently, CSIS is limited to gathering intelligence, which can be handed over to police agencies. It also gives the agency new powers to "disrupt radical websites and Twitter accounts" used by organizations deemed threats to Canada. The bill allows CSIS to get a 120-day court order to directly disrupt communications — such as blocking calls to mobile phones, or providing "counter-messaging" online. Toronto Star

Government tables sweeping Anti-Terrorism Act, increasing powers of security agencies

People who encourage terrorism attacks, even if they don't counsel a specific act, could face up to five years in prison under new legislation the federal government wants to pass into law. For instance, an individual in Canada who posts a video online that includes the phrase "Attack Canada" could be charged with advocating or promoting "terrorism offences in general." Individuals could be charged even if they're advocating attacks against countries or people other than Canada. The new criminal code offence is a marked departure from the current situation, in which police can only take action when an online posting refers to a specific attack, such as killing a particular category of individuals or targeting a precise location. The proposed new charge is part of a series of anti-terror measures the Harper government introduced Friday in a bill it says is necessary to protect Canadians in the wake of deadly attacks on soldiers last October that also led to a gunman storming Parliament. Globe and Mail

Canada spy agency given more powers to disrupt terror attacks: media

Canada's main spy agency will get new powers aimed at disrupting potential terror attacks under security legislation to be unveiled on Friday, Canadian media said on Thursday. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), which currently only gathers information and then hands it over to police for action, will be given powers to act itself to prevent potential attacks, Canadian media said. Under the new law, which will be presented in Parliament, CSIS will be able to block financial transactions, stop people from traveling abroad to join extremist groups and intercept material that can be used in an attack. It would need to obtain a judicial warrant first. "The goal is for CSIS to move from an intelligence-gathering service to an agency that will have the power to disrupt or diminish potential terrorist threats under appropriate judicial oversight," CBC News quoted an unnamed source as saying. Reuters.com

CSIS to get stronger anti-terror powers under federal bill

Canada proposed wide-ranging changes to its national security laws on Friday that would give the country's main spy agency new powers to disrupt potential terrorist threats. The changes, which experts said are the most significant amendments to Canada's security laws since the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks in the U.S., come three months after two terror-inspired attacks in Canada that killed two soldiers and saw a shooter storm the country's parliament buildings. Those attacks, as well as other recent attacks in Australia and France, suggest "the world is a dangerous place and Canada is not immune to the threat of terrorism," Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper said in a statement. Wall Street Journal

Bill brings stiffer terrorism penalties, but lowers threshold of proof

Endorsing a terrorist attack would be made illegal under sweeping new legislation that also gives the government broad new detention powers. The Conservative government unveiled a bill Friday that will allow the government to jail someone for up to a week without charges, block suspected terrorists from boarding airplanes, and "disrupt" possible security threats. The bill would also criminalize "advocacy or promotion of terrorism offences in general." Current laws give police the power to arrest people who call for a specific attack. This bill would allow police to arrest people who broadly call for terrorism attacks. If convicted of supporting terrorism, someone could face up to five years in prison. Preventative detention powers will be more expanded under the bill. Police will be able to detain people for up to seven days without charges as long as a judge signs off. Chronicle Herald

CSIS to be given more powers to disrupt terror attacks

Canada's main spy agency will get new powers aimed at disrupting potential terror attacks under security legislation to be unveiled on Friday, sources said on Thursday. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), which currently only gathers information and then hands it over to police for action, will be given powers to act itself to prevent potential attacks, Canadian media said. Under the new law, which will be presented in Parliament, CSIS will be able to block financial transactions, stop people from travelling abroad to join extremist groups and intercept material that can be used in an attack. It would need to obtain a judicial warrant first. Toronto Sun (The Observer, Canoe.ca)

Spy Agency to Be Given New CounterTerrorism Powers

The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) is expected to be given more powers in new anti-terrorism measures to be unveiled Friday, CBC News reported. Sources familiar with the proposal told CBC that the CSIS will receive certain legal tools to prevent extremism, including canceling travel reservations made by Canadian citizens suspected in fighting for extremist groups overseas, blocking financial transactions connected with terrorist activity, and intercepting suspicious shipments. Under existing laws, the CSIS must first get permission from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to perform any of the aforementioned procedures, a process that the intelligence service claims can lead to costly delays. "The goal is for CSIS to move from an intelligence-gathering service to an agency that will have the power to disrupt or diminish potential terrorist threats under appropriate judicial oversight," a source told CBC News. Sputnik News

Canada to criminalize online terror threats

Canada will introduce new anti-terror laws that will make it a crime to promote terrorism against Canadians online. The laws will also allow anyone suspected of being involved in a terror plot to be detained without charge for up to seven days, and empower Canada's spy agency to thwart attacks directly. A senior government official provided details to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak ahead of Friday's announcement. Work on the law began in October after a gunman killed a soldier at Canada's national war memorial and then stormed Parliament. The attack in Ottawa came two days after a man, said to be inspired by the Islamic State group, ran over two soldiers in a parking lot in Quebec, killing one and injuring the other before being shot to death. KLKN TV (Seattle Times, WAOV.com, WKRG-TV, WJTV)

CSIS To Be Given 'Power To Disrupt,' Not Arrest, In New Anti-Terror Bill

Canada's spy agency is expected to be given new powers to stop would-be Canadian jihadists before they leave the country as part of sweeping new anti-terrorism measures being unveiled Friday. Sources familiar with the proposed legislation tell CBC News the goal is to give the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service the kinds of legal tools that are available to intelligence services in other Western countries. The expected new powers would allow CSIS agents to obtain court orders to: - cancel plane or other travel reservations made by Canadians suspected of wanting to join the Islamic State or other extremists groups overseas; - block any financial transactions linked to suspected terrorist activity; - intercept shipments of Canadian-made equipment or material to Canadian individuals or groups that could be used in an attack; - switch, or make suspect equipment being shipped unusable as part of an on-going investigation. Under existing law, CSIS must rely on the RCMP to do these things, and government officials say that can lead to costly delays and, in some cases, an inability to act because the RCMP requires a higher standard of proof to arrest or detain suspects. Huffington Post

Reports Claim CSIS to Receive More Powers in Anti-Terror Bill

Several sources are reporting that Canada's main spy agency, The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), is slated to receive more powers through the government's upcoming bill to be discussed on Friday. According to the proposed legislation, the CSIS is anticipated to be given powers to act itself to prevent potential attacks rather than only gathering information and handing it over to police for action. The law to be presented in Parliament will allow CSIS to block financial transactions, stop people from

Today's News / Actualités
January 30, 2015 / le 30 janvier, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

NIL

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Foundation embankment failure to blame for Mount Polley disaster: government report

Failure in the foundation embankment is what led to the tailings pond breach at Mount Polley site that sent millions of cubic meters of waste into Hazeltine Creek, Quesnel Lake and Polley Lake last year. That's the conclusion of a report released by the B.C. government this morning. An independent panel of engineers was formed to find out why the tailings pond burst last August. The panel concluded that the dominant contribution to the failure resides in the design, particularly the glacial lake deposit in the foundation embankment that was not taken into consideration. "The design did not take into account the complexity of the sub-glacial and pre-glacial geological environment associated with the perimeter embankment foundation," said panel chair Norbert Morgenstern. "As the result, foundation investigations and associated site characterization failed to identify this continuous layer in the vicinity of the breach and to recognize it was susceptible to failure when subject to the stresses associated with the embankment."

Global News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Government tables anti-terror bill to prevent, crack down on violent extremists

Sweeping new anti-terrorism powers introduced by the Conservative government Friday include giving Canadian spies police-like powers to disrupt terrorist operations, allow authorities to remove terrorist propaganda from the internet and make it a crime to promote or to advocate others to engage in terrorism. Many of the measures will affect the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service. The plan to boost CSIS's ability to counter terrorist threats flows from a federal review of fatal attacks on two Canadian soldiers last October. As expected, the bill would also make it easier for the RCMP to obtain a peace bond to restrict the movements of a suspect, and it extends the period for preventative arrest and detention. In addition, the legislation would expand the no-fly regime to cover those travelling by air to take part in terrorist activities, whereas currently there must be an immediate risk to the plane. Ottawa Citizen

Spy service to get stronger under federal bill

Newly tabled anti-terrorism legislation would give Canada's spy agency more power to thwart a suspected extremist's travel plans, disrupt bank transactions and covertly interfere with radical websites. The plan to boost the Canadian Security Intelligence Service's ability to counter terrorist threats flows from a review of fatal attacks on two Canadian soldiers last October -- incidents the government believes were fuelled by Islamic extremism. As expected, the bill would also make it easier for the RCMP to obtain a peace bond to restrict the movements of a suspect and it extends the period for preventative arrest and detention. In addition, the legislation would expand the no-fly regime to cover those travelling by air to take part in terrorist activities, whereas currently there must be an immediate risk to the plane. The bill proposes giving the RCMP power to seek a judge's order to remove terrorist propaganda from the Internet. CTV News (Global News, MyKawartha.com, News 1130, Thompson Citizen)

Lutte contre le terrorisme : Harper présente son projet de loi

CBC a appris que le projet de loi devrait changer le mandat du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS), qui se limitait à collecter des informations pour les transmettre à la police. Le SCRS pourra agir dans certaines opérations jusqu'ici dévolues à la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), sans toutefois pouvoir procéder lui-même à des arrestations. Ces nouveaux pouvoirs permettraient au Service d'obtenir des mandats pour empêcher des sympathisants djihadistes de quitter le pays et annuler des réservations de vols qu'ils pourraient faire pour rejoindre des groupes extrémistes outremer. Le Service pourra aussi bloquer des transactions financières liées à de possibles activités terroristes et intercepter des livraisons d'équipement ou de matériel qui pourraient être utilisées dans d'éventuelles attaques. Radio-Canada.ca

Government tables sweeping Anti-Terrorism Act, increasing powers of security agencies

People who encourage terrorism attacks, even if they don't counsel a specific act, could face up to five years in prison under new legislation the federal government wants to pass into law. For instance, an individual in Canada who posts a video online that includes the phrase "Attack Canada" could be charged with advocating or promoting "terrorism offences in general." Individuals could be charged even if they're advocating attacks against countries or people other than Canada. The new criminal code offence is a marked departure from the current situation, in which police can only take action when an online posting refers to a specific attack, such as killing a particular category of individuals or targeting a precise location. The proposed new charge is part of a series of anti-terror measures the Harper government introduced Friday in a bill it says is necessary to protect Canadians in the wake of deadly attacks on soldiers last October that also led to a gunman storming Parliament. Globe and Mail

Dépôt d'un projet de loi antiterroriste qui ratisse large

Le gouvernement fédéral a finalement déposé vendredi son projet de loi qui répond aux attaques d'Ottawa et de Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu en octobre. Le projet de loi de plus de 60 pages élargit de manière importante les pouvoirs d'agences de sécurité comme le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) pour prévenir des actes terroristes. En voici un bref survol : - Mandat plus large au

SCRS: Le SCRS se voit accorder le mandat de perturber les menaces à la sécurité du pays - au Canada et à l'étranger. Actuellement, son mandat se limite à la collecte de renseignements, qu'elle doit communiquer à d'autres organismes comme la GRC. Le SCRS pourrait maintenant passer lui-même à l'action en empêchant des déplacements potentiels, entre autres, en interceptant des déplacements d'armes ou en bloquant des communications incitant au terrorisme. La Presse

Conservative government's terror bill increases spy agency powers

The Conservative's new anti-terror legislation would dramatically increase powers for Canadian spies, giving them police powers to detain, surveil, and disrupt suspects' activities. The terrorism bill, tabled Friday in Parliament, allows the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to directly intervene to dissuade and disrupt their targets' plans. Currently, CSIS is limited to gathering intelligence, which can be handed over to police agencies. It also gives the agency new powers to "disrupt radical websites and Twitter accounts" used by organizations deemed threats to Canada. The bill allows CSIS to get a 120-day court order to directly disrupt communications — such as blocking calls to mobile phones, or providing "counter-messaging" online. Toronto Star

Government tables sweeping Anti-Terrorism Act, increasing powers of security agencies

People who encourage terrorism attacks, even if they don't counsel a specific act, could face up to five years in prison under new legislation the federal government wants to pass into law. For instance, an individual in Canada who posts a video online that includes the phrase "Attack Canada" could be charged with advocating or promoting "terrorism offences in general." Individuals could be charged even if they're advocating attacks against countries or people other than Canada. The new criminal code offence is a marked departure from the current situation, in which police can only take action when an online posting refers to a specific attack, such as killing a particular category of individuals or targeting a precise location. The proposed new charge is part of a series of anti-terror measures the Harper government introduced Friday in a bill it says is necessary to protect Canadians in the wake of deadly attacks on soldiers last October that also led to a gunman storming Parliament. Globe and Mail

Canada spy agency given more powers to disrupt terror attacks: media

Canada's main spy agency will get new powers aimed at disrupting potential terror attacks under security legislation to be unveiled on Friday, Canadian media said on Thursday. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), which currently only gathers information and then hands it over to police for action, will be given powers to act itself to prevent potential attacks, Canadian media said. Under the new law, which will be presented in Parliament, CSIS will be able to block financial transactions, stop people from traveling abroad to join extremist groups and intercept material that can be used in an attack. It would need to obtain a judicial warrant first. "The goal is for CSIS to move from an intelligence-gathering service to an agency that will have the power to disrupt or diminish potential terrorist threats under appropriate judicial oversight," CBC News quoted an unnamed source as saying. Reuters.com

CSIS to get stronger anti-terror powers under federal bill

Canada proposed wide-ranging changes to its national security laws on Friday that would give the country's main spy agency new powers to disrupt potential terrorist threats. The changes, which experts said are the most significant amendments to Canada's security laws since the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks in the U.S., come three months after two terror-inspired attacks in Canada that killed two soldiers and saw a shooter storm the country's parliament buildings. Those attacks, as well as other recent attacks in Australia and France, suggest "the world is a dangerous place and Canada is not immune to the threat of terrorism," Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper said in a statement. Wall Street Journal

Bill brings stiffer terrorism penalties, but lowers threshold of proof

Endorsing a terrorist attack would be made illegal under sweeping new legislation that also gives the government broad new detention powers. The Conservative government unveiled a bill Friday that will allow the government to jail someone for up to a week without charges, block suspected terrorists from boarding airplanes, and "disrupt" possible security threats. The bill would also criminalize "advocacy or promotion of terrorism offences in general." Current laws give police the power to arrest people who call for a specific attack. This bill would allow police to arrest people who broadly call for terrorism attacks. If convicted of supporting terrorism, someone could face up to five years in prison. Preventative detention powers will be more expanded under the bill. Police will be able to detain people for up to seven days without charges as long as a judge signs off. Chronicle Herald

CSIS to be given more powers to disrupt terror attacks

Canada's main spy agency will get new powers aimed at disrupting potential terror attacks under security legislation to be unveiled on Friday, sources said on Thursday. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), which currently only gathers information and then hands it over to police for action, will be given powers to act itself to prevent potential attacks, Canadian media said. Under the new law, which will be presented in Parliament, CSIS will be able to block financial transactions, stop people from travelling abroad to join extremist groups and intercept material that can be used in an attack. It would need to obtain a judicial warrant first. Toronto Sun (The Observer, Canoe.ca)

Spy Agency to Be Given New CounterTerrorism Powers

The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) is expected to be given more powers in new anti-terrorism measures to be unveiled Friday, CBC News reported. Sources familiar with the proposal told CBC that the CSIS will receive certain legal tools to prevent extremism, including canceling travel reservations made by Canadian citizens suspected in fighting for extremist groups overseas, blocking financial transactions connected with terrorist activity, and intercepting suspicious shipments. Under existing laws, the CSIS must first get permission from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to perform any of the aforementioned procedures, a process that the intelligence service claims can lead to costly delays. "The goal is for CSIS to move from an intelligence-gathering service to an agency that will have the power to disrupt or diminish potential terrorist threats under appropriate judicial oversight," a source told CBC News. Sputnik News

Canada to criminalize online terror threats

Canada will introduce new anti-terror laws that will make it a crime to promote terrorism against Canadians online. The laws will also allow anyone suspected of being involved in a terror plot to be detained without charge for up to seven days, and empower Canada's spy agency to thwart attacks directly. A senior government official provided details to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak ahead of Friday's announcement. Work on the law began in October after a gunman killed a soldier at Canada's national war memorial and then stormed Parliament. The attack in Ottawa came two days after a man, said to be inspired by the Islamic State group, ran over two soldiers in a parking lot in Quebec, killing one and injuring the other before being shot to death. KLKN TV (Seattle Times, WAOW.com, WKRG-TV, WJTV)

CSIS To Be Given 'Power To Disrupt,' Not Arrest, in New Anti-Terror Bill

Canada's spy agency is expected to be given new powers to stop would-be Canadian jihadists before they leave the country as part of sweeping new anti-terrorism measures being unveiled Friday. Sources familiar with the proposed legislation tell CBC News the goal is to give the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service the kinds of legal tools that are available to intelligence services in other Western countries. The expected new powers would allow CSIS agents to obtain court orders to: - cancel plane or other travel reservations made by Canadians suspected of wanting to join the Islamic State or other extremists groups overseas; - block any financial transactions linked to suspected terrorist activity; - intercept shipments of Canadian-made equipment or material to Canadian individuals or groups that could be used in an attack; - switch, or make suspect equipment being shipped unusable as part of an on-going investigation. Under existing law, CSIS must rely on the RCMP to do these things, and government officials say that can lead to costly delays and, in some cases, an inability to act because the RCMP requires a higher standard of proof to arrest or detain suspects. Huffington Post

Reports Claim CSIS to Receive More Powers in Anti-Terror Bill

Several sources are reporting that Canada's main spy agency, The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), is slated to receive more powers through the government's upcoming bill to be discussed on Friday. According to the proposed legislation, the CSIS is anticipated to be given powers to act itself to prevent potential attacks rather than only gathering information and handing it over to police for action. The law to be presented in Parliament will allow CSIS to block financial transactions, stop people from travelling abroad to join extremist groups and intercept material that can be used in an attack. However, prior to any such action, it will still have to obtain a judicial warrant first. Quoting an unnamed source, CBC reported that "the goal is for CSIS to move from an intelligence-gathering service to an agency that will have the power to disrupt or diminish potential terrorist threats under appropriate judicial oversight." Oye! Times

Canada gives spy agency new anti-terror powers

Canada's spy agency will be granted new powers Friday to thwart terror plots in a security overhaul precipitated by twin jihadist attacks three months ago. The October 20 and 22 attacks in Quebec province and in the capital Ottawa, targeting soldiers and Parliament, revealed gaps in Canadian defenses against terrorism. In the aftermath of the terror attacks -- the first ever on Canadian soil -- Prime Minister Stephen Harper pledged to beef up security, recently giving hints of the changes to come in speeches and public appearances. The new legislation will contain measures "designed to help authorities stop planned attacks, get threats off our streets, criminalize the promotion of terrorism and prevent terrorists from traveling and recruiting others," he said last week. The Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS), Canada's spy service, is widely expected to be granted additional powers to track and detain suspected jihadis, including preventing them from travelling abroad for terror purposes. Whitehorse Daily Star (Business Standard)

Anti-terror bill to prevent, crack down on violent extremists

Canada's spy agency was expected to get new powers Friday, with Prime Minister Stephen Harper poised to unveil details of a bill that would provide Canada's government with new powers to fight terrorism. Many of the measures will likely affect the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service. Harper announced Friday morning, hours before the bill, that CSIS's oversight committee is gaining a fourth member, though it remains understaffed. Ian Holloway was named a member of the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC). He is currently the Dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Calgary. At the moment, CSIS is a spy agency with no enforcement powers. When CSIS agents suspect criminal activity, they pass on their findings to the RCMP to investigate and lay charges if needed. Ottawa Citizen

Stephen Harper to make case for new powers to combat terror

Prime Minister Stephen Harper will unveil the details of his government's latest bid to boost the anti-terror powers of Canada's law enforcement and intelligence agencies when he appears at a Richmond Hill, Ont., community centre this afternoon. As reported by CBC News last night, the new bill is expected to give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) the authority to monitor, track and even preemptively disrupt the activities of suspected terrorists and terrorist sympathizers. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News provided coverage and analysis of Prime Minister Stephen Harper announcing new anti-terror measures. Rough Transcript

Broadcast media provided live coverage of the federal government's proposed anti-terror legislation. (CBC News, CTV News, RDI, CP24, 12:30 ET)

CTV News provided a preview of an upcoming episode of W5 to air this weekend called The Phantom Menace. The latest investigation by W5 puts the spotlight on a Vancouver man who saw his life ruined after false allegations of terrorism were leveled against him. He was charged with exporting technology with military capabilities to enemies of Canada. He had companies in Delta, B.C. and a little bit of a subsidiary in Washington State where they were making things with printed circuit boards. He had the printed circuit boards and as they were being shipped out at the Vancouver Airport the Canada Border Services Agency seized them and declared them after an investigation to be military standard and he should not have been shipping them at all. Then they went after him with all guns blazing and arrested him, charged him and he could have faced ten years in prison but all of this was made up. Wikileaks reports and internal documents in e-mails from the department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, the Canada Border Service Agency and the department of National Defense which made it look like they were out to target someone, anyone to appease the American government because we weren't going after anyone aggressively. So they nailed him. But the point is that once the horse blinders were on, they kept going despite the fact that this stuff was readily available on the internet for anyone and had nothing to do with military standard or military hardware. (CTV News, 11:00 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Canadian Border Services Report on Pigeon River December Stats

It was a slightly busier month in January at the Pigeon River port of entry. In December 2014, Canadian Border Services Agency officers at the Pigeon River port of entry (POE) processed 35,158 travellers in 19,009 vehicles, which represent no change in travellers and a three-percent increase in vehicles from December 2013. More than 1,312 international travellers entered by bus. NetNewsLedger.com

Alberta could see rise in illegal immigrants as thousands of TFWs face deadline to return home

Alberta could see a significant increase in undocumented, illegal immigrants as thousands of temporary foreign workers grappling with the looming loss of their work permits try to find a way to stay in the province. That's the message from immigration lawyers and migrant worker advocates, who warn the federally imposed deadline of April 1 - the date on which any TFW who arrived in 2011 or earlier will see their contract expire - is creating a glut of panicked foreign nationals trying desperately to secure permanent residency before they are forced home. "People are just going to run out of time," said Mark Holthe, a partner at immigration law firm Holthe Tillman LLP. "My question is, how many of them are going to say, 'I might as well just stay and keep working illegally, because I have to provide for my family.'" "They've built their lives here. They've got family, they've bought a house," said Marco Luciano, spokesperson for TFW advocacy group Migrant Alberta. "Our fear is that a lot of these people are not going to go home - they're going to go undocumented." It's unclear exactly how many foreign workers currently living in Alberta will be affected by the April 1 deadline date, which has been in place since 2011 when the federal government first imposed a four-year limit on the length of time TFWs may work in Canada. But that year, there were 50,765 positive LMOs (government approvals) issued for Alberta TFWs, and it's fair to assume a significant number of those workers are still in the province. Calgary Herald

Daredevil Will Gadd climbs Niagara's Horseshoe Falls ice wall

Daredevil adventurer Will Gadd has become the first person to climb a wall of spray ice at the edge of Niagara's Horseshoe Falls. The Alberta man - named National Geographic's adventurer of the year in 2015 - made the climb Jan 27. Gadd, 47, was followed by another Canadian, Sarah Hueniken, 34, who grew up near the falls. The climb was started on the American side of the falls, the National Geographic reported on its website. "The power of the falls is staggering," Gadd told National Geographic. "It vibrates your intestines and makes you feel very, very small. I've never experienced anything like it." Gadd says he followed a route almost exactly along the border between the Canadian and U.S. sides. Gadd is a professional climber who has scaled the glaciers of Kilimanjaro. CBC News; Canada.com (National Post)

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

B.C. Mountie fatally shoots suspected drunk driver

An independent investigation has been launched after an RCMP officer fatally shot a suspected drunk driver in Castlegar, B.C., Thursday night. RCMP said it received a complaint about a possible impaired driver at a Castlegar business. Later, a police officer located the vehicle and tried to stop the driver on

Hwy. 3. "The RCMP member exited the police vehicle and ultimately discharged his service pistol at the vehicle," RCMP said in a statement early Friday. Mounties declined to provide further details. The Independent Investigations Office of B.C. (IIO) said the man died in hospital. His identity hasn't been released. A team of five investigators, including a forensic specialist, was scheduled to arrive in Castlegar Friday morning. QMI Agency (Canoe.ca, Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Calgary Sun, London Free Press, Ottawa Sun, Kingston Whig Standard); CBC News; Kelowna Now; The Province; Metro News

Search and rescue crews attempt to recover body from Deer Lake

Crews are attempting to locate and recover the body of a missing snowmobiler who police believe drowned after falling through the ice earlier this week. Search and rescue staff and RCMP divers were seen bringing recovery gear to an area on Deer Lake Friday morning where snowmobile tracks lead straight into open water. That's where the RCMP believe a 79-year-old man went through the ice. He was reported missing to Deer Lake RCMP supertime Wednesday. The man was last seen leaving St. Jude's on snowmobile around 2:30 p.m. that same day. RCMP Cpl. Dean Hyde said the accident happened close to the man's hometown of St. Jude's. "Even though some people may be very familiar with that area, but you know, accidents can and do happen," Hyde said. "This unfortunately is an example of that." CBC News

Saskatchewan RCMP charge man in violent sexual assault that left woman injured

A man is facing charges after a violent sexual assault that left a woman injured in Battleford, Sask. Around 4:30 a.m. Monday, RCMP responded to a home in the west-central Saskatchewan community for a report of a sexual assault. Officers found a woman outside the home, who told police she had been sexually assaulted earlier that morning. The woman was taken to hospital with injuries to her head, torso, arms and legs. Mounties arrested a 33-year-old man Tuesday afternoon. Cory Smockum has been charged with sexual assault, assault and choking to overcome resistance. CTV News

Escaped Saskatchewan prisoner taunts police on Facebook to "catch me if you can"

A 21-year-old man being sought by police after escaping custody appears to have been taunting police online. RCMP say Solomon Toutsaint ran away from the courthouse in Black Lake, Sask., on Jan. 21 while officers were taking several people in custody to their court appearances. Since then, RCMP say it appears Toutsaint has been posting updates on his Facebook page saying "Catch me if you can lol" and "Imma bad boy." Sgt. Cory Niedzielski of the Stony Rapids detachment says Toutsaint is "sort of treating everything a little bit like a game." However, Niedzielski says the posts and information being supplied by the public may be giving investigators some idea of where Toutsaint might be. Canadian Press (Global News)

Fort Saskatchewan RCMP officer charged with assault after on-duty incident

A Fort Saskatchewan RCMP officer has been charged with assault in relation to an on-duty incident that occurred last year. The RCMP charged one of their own, Const. Brendon Plamondon, on Jan. 16 with one count of common assault. He is scheduled to make his first court appearance in Fort Saskatchewan on Feb. 19. Plamondon was responding to a noise complaint somewhere outdoors in the City of Fort Saskatchewan when the assault occurred on April 2, said RCMP spokesman Insp. Gibson Glavin Friday morning. The victim of the assault was a woman. "We were advised by the Crown on Jan. 5 of this year that there was sufficient evidence to support a charge of assault," he said. Glavin did not know how long Plamondon has been with the RCMP nor his age. Edmonton Journal; CBC News; Edmonton Sun

Terrace RCMP investigate Facebook post declaring "open season" on First Nations

Terrace RCMP are investigating allegations that a hate crime was committed when someone posted a racist tirade on Facebook declaring "open season" on First Nations people. The comments appear to have come from a local man's Facebook account and were a response to a recent Terrace Standard news article. The newspaper's blocking software quickly removed the comment but not before a screenshot was taken and posted on a Facebook page belonging to West Coast Native News. The screenshot has been shared more than 1,500 times and appears to show a comment that says the "only good Indian is a dead Indian" and "let's have open season on 'em." RCMP Const. Angela Rabut says Mounties are now looking into it, but she adds it's unfortunate that negative comments attract so much attention and spread so quickly. Canadian Press (Vancouver Sun, Castanet.net, The Province); APTN

Paid duty policing costs are 'killing' us: Hess Village bar

Another Hess Village nightclub was hauled before the city's licensing tribunal Thursday, as businesses in Hamilton's entertainment district struggle to cope with a controversial bylaw that forces them to hire paid duty police officers. Social Bar and Nightclub is the latest establishment in danger of losing its license for falling behind in payments for those officers, and joins a steady parade of bar owners in Hess who have said in tribunal hearings that the city's current bylaw is unfair and oppressive. The Gown and Gavel, Viva, Ceilidh House, Hush, Che and Sizzle/Koi have all been before the tribunal over past due paid duty fees in recent years. "In 20 years of business I've never been in this position - where a city was billing me for a service I didn't request," said owner Darwin Tchir, who along with his brother Darryl took over the bar last January. The bar has only been billed for about a cumulative four months, Tchir says - but they've still managed to amass over $11,000 in paid duty police fees and interest in that time. CBC.ca

Serial robber strikes again in B.C., just days after police warning about eight other robberies

A serial bank robber strikes again, this time in northeastern British Columbia. Police and RCMP issued a warning earlier this week saying the man has robbed eight banks over an eight-week period in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. RCMP in Dawson Creek say a man fitting the exact same description walked into a bank on Wednesday, produced a firearm and demanded money. Canadian Press (Vancouver Sun)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Death of an inmate at Dorchester Penitentiary

On Jan. 29, 2015, Garnet Cole, an inmate at Dorchester Penitentiary died at the institutional hospital. At the time of his death, Cole, 82 years old, had been serving a sentence of 12 years, since March 28, 2013, for rape, indecent assault, sexual assault and sexual interference with a female under 14. The inmate's next of kin have been notified of his death. As in all cases involving the death of an inmate, the police and the coroner have been notified, and the Correctional Service of Canada will review the circumstances of the incident. Sackville Tribune-Post

Youth murderer wins early release, plans fresh start

A BC Supreme Court judge has ordered the release of the now 20-year-old man who stabbed James Denton, 19, to death. Pointing to the "life-changing results" of 3-and-a-half years in custody, Justice Trevor Armstrong said the second-degree murderer can begin his reintegration into society Jan. 30. "Young people can make progress to justify changes in the length of their sentence," Justice Armstrong said Jan. 28 at the close of a two-day youth sentence review held at the Courtenay Courthouse. "He was at a very low risk to reoffend." (...) Last January the man got permission to transfer from youth jail to the federal prison system. He could have applied for early release at that time but chose not to. On Jan. 27, the first day of the hearing, the man's institutional parole officer testified the offender had completed all available programming within the federal corrections system. In fact, because he's at such a low risk to reoffend, he was ineligible for some rehabilitative measures and instead was escorted to community-based programs such as Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous (despite the availability of programming having been cited as a major factor in wanting to switch to the federal prison system). Comox Valley Echo

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Abdille triple homicide prompts renewed calls for change in Ontario domestic-violence system

Zahra Abdille and her two young sons officially became a statistic on Nov. 29, when they were added to a long list of preventable domestic homicides in Ontario, according to the chair of the Domestic Violence Death Review Committee. Every year for more than a decade, the committee has made recommendations to help prevent domestic homicide - some repeated annually - but it has no power to put them in place. Critics are calling for the committee to be given authority to enforce these recommendations and stop women being murdered at the hands of their abusive partners. Abdille, a 43-year-old Toronto Public Health nurse, was slain alongside her two young sons in their East York home two months ago; her husband, suspected in the killing, died after plummeting off a nearby bridge. The Abdille family tragedy could be identified "as a homicide waiting to happen," the death review committee's chair, Dr. William Lucas, told the Star. The case is still being investigated by police and is likely to be reviewed by the committee next year, but Lucas said, based on media accounts, a number of risk factors indicate that "her death and the children's were clearly preventable." Up to 80 per cent of all domestic homicides could be prevented if the committee's recommendations were properly enforced, said Dr. Peter Jaffe, academic director of the University of Western Ontario's centre for research and education on violence against women and children. Jaffe wants to see routine audits carried out to assess whether the committee's recommendations are actually being implemented. "These are life and death issues. People are falling through the cracks and someone should be taking charge." The committee, made up of coroners, health care professionals, Crown attorneys, police, counsellors and advocates, has called for this before. Toronto Star

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Saudi blogger Raif Badawi spared from flogging for a third week

A Saudi blogger whose family live as refugees in Canada has been spared again from his weekly flogging sentence, his wife told Agence France-Presse on Friday. For the the crime of criticizing clerics and "insulting Islam," Mr. Badawi, 31, has been sentenced to be flogged 20 times over on successive Fridays, for a total of 1,000 lashes. He has also been given a 10-year prison sentence and fined about $319,000. As of Thursday, the lashings had been meted out just once, on Jan. 9. The Saudis determined that Mr. Badawi was not healthy enough to undergo beatings in the two weeks that followed. His wife, Ensaf Haidar, was in Ottawa on Thursday to back federal politicians and Amnesty International in requesting that Prime Minister Stephen Harper personally demand Mr. Badawi's freedom. Representatives of all political parties stand united in common cause with Mr. Badawi, Liberal MP Irwin Cotler told a news conference. Mr. Cotler, who is acting as the legal counsel for Mr. Badawi and Ms. Haidar, is also enlisting politicians from different countries to press the Saudis to end the "cruel and inhuman" floggings and to release both Mr. Badawi and the lawyer who was jailed for acting on his behalf. Globe and Mail, CBC News, Canadian Press (iPolitics)

INTERNATIONAL

7,500 troops needed to fight Boko Haram, African Union says

African leaders want a strengthened force of 7,500 troops, mainly from Nigeria and neighbouring countries, to help combat Boko Haram's growing Islamist insurgency, the African Union's peace and security commissioner said. Forces from Nigeria, Cameroon, Niger, Benin and Chad will make up the bulk of a mission that will have to be approved by the United Nations Security Council, Smail Chergui told reporters late on Thursday in Ethiopia's capital, Addis Ababa. "Hopefully now with this concept, this force will be better organized, and we can achieve the goal we are looking for, which is to stop the killing and barbaric acts of Boko Haram," he said after a meeting of the AU Peace and Security Council, attended by continental leaders. Boko Haram has killed more than 13,000 people, according to Nigeria's government, since it started a violent campaign in 2009 to impose Islamic law in Africa's biggest oil producer. The group has declared a caliphate in northeastern Nigeria that's the size of Belgium and its advances are intensifying pressure on President Goodluck Jonathan as he seeks re-election in a vote next month. Bloomberg (Toronto Star)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Jamesontheradio

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney opens speech by saying #Canada must do more to 'keep Canadians safe.' #CDNpoli

CityNews

Minister Blaney says we can be proud of example Harper is setting on world stage. Calls him a "great Canadian" #cdnpoli

kkirkup

Public Safety Minister Stephen Blaney: the reality is we must do more to keep Canada secure. #cdnpoli

spaikin

Blaney: "we said after the attack on parliament hill we wouldn't overreact. But we wouldn't under react. Then Australia & Paris happened."

UniforTheUnion

How many more armoured car workers need to be attacked before @MinStevenBlaney will introduce regulations? cbc.ca/news/canada/mo...

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Justin_Ling

The Prime Minister finally appointed a new member to the Security Intelligence Review Committee, that oversees CSIS!

ipoliticsca

CSIS oversight committee gets new member, needs one more | iPolitics ipolitics.ca/2015/01/30/csi...

bcfipa

Terror bill listed on Legisinfo, but "electronic version of bill currently not available." http://www.parl.gc.ca/LegisInfo/BillDetails.aspx?Language=E&Mode=1&billId=6842344 ...

RosieBarton

New bill increases preventative detention from 3 days to 7 days. Peace bond threshold goes from "will commit" an offence to "may commit" #hw

RosieBarton

New bill allows warrants of seizure of terrorist propaganda. "Advocates or promotes terrorism offences in general" #hw

RosieBarton

New powers to CSIS to "disrupt a threat" and share information with RCMP. #hw

RosieBarton

PMSH: troops mission in Iraq is to advise or assist. Some have criticized them for firing back. I have another word: common sense. #hw

Perkel

#pmsH announces new anti-terror measures. #cdnpoli

CP24

WATCH LIVE: Conservatives unveil new anti-terrorism laws
http://www.cp24.com/video?clipId=68596&binId=1.1127680&playlistPageNum=1 ...

CdnPress_Ott

Spy service to get stronger anti-terror powers under federal bill. More coming

TorontoStar

5 things to know about Ottawa's new anti-terrorism measures on.thestar.com/1zmvBNR #topstories

TorontoStar

Anti-terror legislation flows from a review of fatal attacks on 1 Canadian soldiers. #cdnpoli on.thestar.com/1HrBCzA

kady

Inside sources reveal reporters in the anti-terror bill lockup will NOT be given copies of the bill itself. Just PR handouts. #hw

kady

So, that's pretty much a wash. I wonder if MPs/staffers will have better luck in their technical briefing. #hw

globeandmail

Globe editorial: Snowden and the dark sophistry of CSEC trib.al/jZzEEXw From @GlobeDebate

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

GetCyberSafe

Be careful about broadcasting your #travel plans. Avoid posting updates on your whereabouts on social networks.

SCMagazine

Zeus variant targeting Canadian banks, U.S. banks may also be a target | ow.ly/ldC1K

mgeist

Canadian Government's Cloud Computing Strategy Focused on Keeping Data in Canada michaelgeist.ca/2015/01/govern

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

nationalpost

If Canadian prisoners want milk, it will have to be powdered. On the plus side: it'll save about $3.1/year natpo.st/1yL2H6f

INTERNATIONAL

TorontoStar

7,500 troops needed to fight Boko Haram, according to the African Union. on.thestar.com/1Hrq2o3

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
February 3, 2015 / le 3 février, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Blaney dismisses opposition concerns over CSIS oversight

Opposition MPs and civil rights groups say they are worried that the Conservative government's new anti-terror legislation does not boost oversight of Canada's spy agency, but the public safety minister is dismissing their concerns. Several MPs voiced their unease Monday, with legislation that would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service powers to actively disrupt terrorist threats. The new rules would also make it easier for police to control the movements of terror suspects and to detain them longer without warrant. "This Parliament must not allow the Conservatives to turn CSIS into a secret police force," Green Party Leader Elizabeth May said during the daily House of Commons question period Monday. NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair said other countries, like the U.S. and the U.K., have "serious oversight" over their intelligence agencies, "and that's done by elected officials." But Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said the government-appointed Security Intelligence Review Committee, which oversees CSIS, is well-established and doing a fine job. Some experts also fear that, with little oversight and expanded powers, CSIS operations may infringe on civil rights. CTV News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

In the House of Commons Monday, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney was asked about the Security Intelligence Review Committee, stricter oversight of intelligence agencies, in light of the government's new anti-terror legislation he says, "The security intelligence review committee will cover all activities that CSIS will be mandated by this Parliament to accomplish." (580 CFRA, 6:06; CFNO-FM, 7:32 ET)

En vertu du projet de loi antiterroriste du gouvernement, le chef néodémocrate Thomas Mulcair soutient que le comité de surveillance en charge de superviser le Service Canadien du Renseignement de Sécurité n'est pas crédible. (CJRG-FM Gaspé, 7 :01 ET)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

New Brunswick weather: Snowfall hits yearly average with 6 weeks of winter left

Some parts of New Brunswick have already broken normal winter snowfall totals, according to Environment Canada. Saint John, which has declared a local state of emergency, has seen 166 centimetres of snow so far this winter. On average, Saint John usually gets 162.6 cm between December and the end of February. The latest blizzard Monday dumped about 30 cm on the city, pushing the city's total snowfall from three storms in the last week to 128 cm. Moncton has had the most snowfall in the province at 201 cm to date, just shy of its normal winter total of 205.2 cm, according to the weather agency. CBC News; Global News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A state of emergency was declared in Saint John's southern peninsula early Tuesday as forecasters predicted blizzards, flash freezing and extreme cold across Atlantic Canada. (CBC News, 10:00, 12:00; CTV News, 10:00, 12:00; CP24, 10:00 ET)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Imam Hamza Chaoui denies accusations of Mayors Ménard, Coderre

Imam Hamza Chaoui is responding for the first time since Montreal city officials announced he will not be given an operating permit to open an Islamic Community Centre called the Ashabeb Centre. On Saturday, Montreal Mayor Denis Coderre, alongside Mercier-Hochelaga-Maisonneuve Mayor Réal Ménard, announced they would not grant an operational permit to the community centre, saying it was an issue of public safety. "I categorically refute allegations of Mayors Ménard and Coderre," writes Chaoui on his Facebook page. "I'm not an 'agent of radicalization.' I've never included hatred or violence against a group in my preaching or my classes." He says he encourages young people to integrate harmoniously into Quebec society. CBC News; Canadian Press \(The Gazette\); CTV News

Harper got spy powers right, but civilian oversight very wrong

An opinion piece by Bob Rae states, "Sometimes Stephen Harper is his own worst enemy. Recent events in Europe should bring home to all of us that there are indeed people in the midst of democratic, multiracial societies who are ready and willing to kill others in the pursuit of their religious and political beliefs. They are terrorists. They plot and communicate with others of a similar mind, and with similar intentions. They receive encouragement, and sometimes even instructions, from foreign entities and governments. Canada is not somehow magically aloof from these realities. Our large cities are the home of millions of people from all over the world. There is no foreign conflict that does not have a direct influence on the lives and feelings of many Canadian citizens and, indeed, there are events and proposals in Canada itself to which some in Canada are strongly and irrevocably opposed. Whether these feelings give rise to a direct threat to the lives of their fellow Canadians is a matter of fact and evidence. But it would be simply foolish to argue that such threats could never happen here." The Globe and Mail

Projet de loi antiterroriste : les Canadiens doivent être « extrêmement vigilants », selon Snowden

Le dénonciateur américain en exil Edward Snowden a profité d'une allocution par vidéoconférence avec des élèves torontois, hier soir, pour mettre les Canadiens en garde contre le projet de loi C-51 du gouvernement Harper. L'agence d'espionnage canadienne verrait ses pouvoirs considérablement accrus, grâce à la nouvelle législation. Les partis d'opposition à Ottawa demandent une plus grande supervision. De son côté, M. Snowden dit que les droits des citoyens sont de plus en plus brimés par les gouvernements occidentaux. Edward Snowden est un ex-consultant de l'Agence de sécurité nationale aux États-Unis qui vit en exil en Russie depuis qu'il a révélé des détails secrets sur des programmes d'écoute électronique américains. Il prenait la parole par vidéoconférence, hier soir, devant plus de 1000 élèves du secondaire du prestigieux Upper Canada College. Radio-Canada

Via Rail terror plot trial continues in Toronto

Testimony continues today in a Toronto court at the trial of two men accused of planning a terrorist attack on a passenger train travelling between Canada and the U.S. Raed Jaser and Chiheb Esseghaier both face multiple charges in the alleged Via Rail plot(<http://montrealgazette.com/tag/Chiheb-Esseghaier>) and not-guilty pleas have been entered for both of them. The Crown alleges they were motivated by Islamic extremism and spent months plotting to murder as many people as they could. Crown lawyer Croft Michaelson told court Monday that Esseghaier travelled to Iran in early 2012 and met with people who were "carrying out Jihad for the sake of Allah." And Michaelson said he returned to Canada intent on establishing a terrorist cell to carry out terrorist acts in Canada. Jaser, he said, got involved with Esseghaier and wanted to make Canadians realize they would not be safe until they left Muslim lands overseas. Canadian Press (The Gazette)

FBI agent testifies at Via Rail terror plot trial

An undercover FBI officer who gained the trust of two men accused of planning a terrorist attack on a train travelling between Canada and the U.S. is telling their trial how he first came to learn of the alleged plot. While travelling from Montreal to Toronto with one man to meet the other, he says he was told the pair had a plan "to derail a commuter train from New York to Toronto." Raed Jaser and Chiheb Esseghaier face multiple charges in the alleged Via Rail plot. Canadian Press (The Gazette)

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Speaking via Google Hangout from Russia, Edward Snowden, the fugitive American who leaked state secrets, mentioned anti-terrorism laws. He told high school students at Upper Canada College that they should "always be extraordinarily cautious when see governments trying to set up new secret police." He said, "People die from lightning strikes, car accidents, and cheeseburgers, and heart attacks more than terrorists, but we commit a disproportionately large amount of national effort and national resources to combating this relatively limited terrorist threat." (CTV News, 9:30, 12 :00; CP24, 10:00; CBC Radio One, 6:08, 7:09, 8:08; CIWW-AM, 8 :39 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Customs recordal now available in Canada to combat counterfeit goods

In January 2015, portions of the Canadian Combating Counterfeit Products Act ("CCPA") came into force enabling IP rights holders to record their copyright and registered trademark rights with the Canada Border Services Agency ("CBSA") in an effort to stop counterfeit goods before they enter the Canadian market. Amendments to the Canadian Trade-marks Act, which stem from the CCPA, create a new statutory prohibition against the import or export of goods whose labels or packaging bear, without the consent of the owner of a registered trademark for such goods, a trademark that is identical to, or that cannot be distinguished in its essential aspects from, that registered trademark (i.e. counterfeit goods). Similar amendments to the Copyright Act create a statutory prohibition against importing or exporting infringing copies of a work. A new border regime has been adopted by the CBSA to assist rights holders in enforcing the new statutory prohibition against the importation of counterfeit goods. Under the new regime, owners of copyright protected works (registered or unregistered) and/or a registered Canadian trademark ("rights holders") can record these rights with the CBSA by filing a Request for Assistance ("RFA"). Lexology.com

Canada Pays Hefty Financial Settlement To Businessman Wrongly Targeted By Border Agencies

Canada's federal government reportedly paid a hefty financial settlement to a businessman to compensate his claims of loss after he was wrongly accused by Government agencies for dealing in goods that posed a "threat to national security." The former Vancouver businessman Steven de Jaray was charged in 2010 and the charges were withdrawn a year later. However, the aggrieved businessman moved court with a civil suit, claiming that he lost millions in personal wealth after his electronics export business perished after the charges made on his integrity by the Government officials, who misinterpreted his products to be military weapons. The businessman held the Canada Border Services Agency, which framed the charges against him, solely responsible for the collapse of his company besides the loss in other business interests. Finally, the Federal government initiated an out-of-court settlement with Jaray in 2013, reports National Post. Though the businessman was restrained from revealing the amount, W5 channel reported that Jaray received the second-highest government settlement in Canadian history, which is about $10 million. International Business Times

Man offered $10,000 to sneak illegal immigrant into Detroit from Canada

A local man is speaking only to 7 Action News after he was offered $10,000 to smuggle an illegal immigrant into Detroit from Canada. We learned, it's a growing problem. "He said, 'I'll give you ten grand cash right now,' and he pulled it out," said the man who wants to remain anonymous. It was an innocent hobby that inspired the offer. The wrong person had learned he had a boat that he often took out fishing near the U.S.-Canadian border. That person wanted him to pick a relative up anywhere on the Canadian border and smuggle that relative into the United States. "They're asking anybody out there with boats, 'Will you bring my family over?' and some people will do it," our anonymous source said. WXYZ.com

Peace Bridge pre-inspections reveal outdated Customs effort

An 11-month experiment in clearing some U.S.-bound cargo on the Canadian side of the Peace Bridge has ended with an unexpected lesson: that U.S. Customs and Border Protection's outdated ways and outdated technology are contributing to mammoth backups for trucks entering the U.S. The pilot project was a test to see if it would be more efficient to move the processing of U.S.-bound cargo to the Canadian side of the Peace Bridge, a move that advocates such as Sen. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., say is essential to ending bridge backups. Sources with intimate knowledge of how the pilot project proceeded said it worked very well and likely could be implemented broadly if the U.S. and Canadian governments strike an agreement for doing so. More immediately, though, sources said the pilot project revealed that U.S. Customs and Border Protection has, by sticking to its old ways, made the bridge backups even worse. Buffalo News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP expected to announce another terrorism arrest in Ottawa

RCMP in Ottawa are expected to announce another terrorism-related arrest later Tuesday. In a brief statement issued Tuesday, police said they will "provide details into an arrest made and charges laid following a national security criminal investigation." Last month, RCMP made three similar arrests in as many days; twin brothers Carlos Larmond and Ashton Larmond, 24, were arrested on a Friday, and Suliman Mohamed, 21, was arrested three days later, on Monday. Global News; Ottawa Citizen

Missing 14-year-old girl located safe and sound near Regina

RCMP say a missing 14-year-old girl has been located safe and sound near Regina. Brooklynn Paige

Saint was found at a home in the Rural Municipality of Edenwold on Tuesday morning. Saint had been missing since last Thursday. CTV News

Nanaimo council nixes new RCMP officers

New hires for the Nanaimo RCMP have been chopped from the budget as politicians look to lower city taxes. In a special committee of the whole meeting Friday, Nanaimo city council nixed plans to grow the local police force in a bid to reduce taxes, despite news of mounting pressures faced by the RCMP. Three new RCMP members – a $327,000 expense – topped the list of more than $744,000 worth of staff-proposed budget cuts aimed at trimming this year's tax hike to one per cent. City council also agreed to cut $91,510 from management consulting budgets and $50,000 to develop Linley Valley Park, and delay decisions around a new Hammond Bay fire hall until a core review is completed. Nanaimo News

Escapee with 'Catch me if you can' on Facebook page arrested

An escaped prisoner whose Facebook account said "Catch me if you can" has been caught. Solomon Toutsaint, 21, was arrested Sunday in Black Lake, Sask. He had previously been in custody making a court appearance in Black Lake on Jan. 21, but got away. While he was at large, messages appeared on Toutsaint's Facebook account, including "Catch me if you can lol" and "Imma bad boy." Police had earlier noted that Toutsaint is not a violent offender and was before the court on two charges of breaking and entering. Stony Rapids RCMP said they got a tip about Toutsaint's whereabouts on Sunday morning and located him at a home in Black Lake, which is in the province's north, close to the border with the Northwest Territories. CBC News; CTV News; Global News

Man allegedly wields a hatchet during three Kelowna robberies

Kelowna RCMP are looking for a single suspect after three local businesses reported last week they'd been robbed by a man wielding a hatchet-like weapon. The first incident happened January 25 at 6:22 p.m. at Okanagan Video located at 431 Highway 33 west. Officers were told a man came in with a hammer in hand demanding money. He then fled with an undisclosed amount of cash. Mounties used a police service dog, initiating a short track, but a suspect wasn't located according to an RCMP media release. Infotel.ca; BC Locals News

Yellowknife RCMP seize crack, handgun in motel drug bust

RCMP in Yellowknife seized a handgun, crack cocaine and a large amount of cash in a drug bust Friday at the Northern Lites Motel. Police seized about 28 grams of crack cocaine, a small quantity of marijuana, scales, packaging, and cash. Police also located and seized a 9mm handgun. Three men — one from Toronto, one from Edmonton and one from Yellowknife — are facing a total of 33 charges. They include drug possession and trafficking as well as several gun-related charges. "They're now facing a combined total of 33 charges, the three people, which is a large number of charges," said Yellowknife RCMP spokesperson Const. Elenore Sturko. CBC News

2 employees charged with stealing $60K from Yellowknife Legion

Two employees of the Royal Canadian Legion branch have been charged with taking alcohol and $60,000 from the branch in Yellowknife. Yellowknife RCMP arrested and charged Mary Charles, 42, and Hellen Leaman, 49, with theft over $5,000 on Friday. Police began investigating after complaints from the legion about missing funds. The alleged thefts happened over a six-month period. Police say the women were released from custody. They are scheduled to appear in court March 3 in Yellowknife. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Const. Alice Fox, one of 20 Mounties who told their stories in a video for the "It Gets Better" campaign, is suing a superior officer for alleged harassment and bullying. In a B.C. Supreme Court notice of civil claim, Fox alleges Staff Sgt. Marc Alexander subjected her to years of humiliating comments and behavior (...) The RCMP said they had not seen the claim and could not comment. None of the allegations have been proven in court. (CBC News, 10:00 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Regional Psychiatric Centre could face eviction under Saskatchewan laws

A student group at the University of Saskatchewan says there are legal grounds to close a federal prison that operates on university lands. Solidarity for Those in Solitary is a student group at the U of S that advocates ending the practice of placing mentally ill inmates in solitary confinement. It says the ongoing use of segregation at Saskatoon's Regional Psychiatric Centre, which is a tenant of the university, could be grounds for eviction under the province's community safety laws. The centre, which operates as a hospital and prison, was opened in 1978 and houses about 200 federal inmates – men and women – serving sentences of at least two years. "Most people think it's a reasonably strong case to make," said Dan LeBlanc, a third-year law student and member of Solidarity for Those in Solitary. LeBlanc, who made the case in a recent legal paper, says under Saskatchewan's Safer Communities and Neighbourhoods (SCAN) laws, Correctional Service Canada could be evicted from the university grounds because it engages in activities that harm those housed in the prison. (...) Officials with Correctional Service Canada declined to comment or be interviewed on the issue. In a statement emailed to CBC News, a spokesperson wrote that segregation is a legitimate practice that is used when there is no alternative. It called it a way to "help ensure the safety of staff and visitors and inmates." "It is not a form of punishment and every effort is made to alleviate the segregation status at the earliest appropriate time," the statement said. CBC News

105 g de haschich saisis à la prison Archambault

Des agents correctionnels de la prison Archambault, à Sainte-Anne-des-Plaines, ont saisi 105 grammes de haschich qu'un détenu aurait tenté d'introduire dans l'établissement, vendredi. La drogue aurait une valeur de 10 500$ à l'intérieur des murs de la prison. Dans un communiqué émis lundi après-midi, le Service correctionnel du Canada (SCC) a fait savoir que le détenu en question avait tenté d'introduire «des objets interdits» dans l'unité à sécurité moyenne de l'établissement carcéral. Le SCC n'a toutefois pas révélé si les objets saisis se limitent à des stupéfiants ou si d'autres choses ont été saisies. Agence QMI (TVA Nouvelles) (2015-02-02); Montreal Gazette

Police arrest parolee who skipped out on Vancouver halfway house

UPDATE: Marcus Sheena was arrested by Vancouver police at a hotel on West Pender Street without incident late Monday. He was the subject of a Canada-wide warrant for being unlawfully at large earlier in the day.

Vancouver police are seeking the public's help in finding a man with a long criminal record who failed to return to his halfway house in Vancouver. Thirty-year-old Marcus Wilfred Sheena is wanted on a Canada-wide warrant for being unlawfully at large. Police said he has "an extensive criminal history" and recently served jail time for assault. He didn't return to his halfway house on Jan. 1. The Province, Castanet

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

NIL

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

There are reports 40-year-old Canadian Mohammed Fahmy could be released from a Cairo prison as early as today. (CP24, 11:00 ET) Al Jazeera reporting he has renounced his Egyptian citizenship, so he can be deported under decree. (Sun News, 10:30 ET)

INTERNATIONAL

French soldiers on anti terror patrol attacked by man with knife in southern city of Nice

Three soldiers on an anti-terror patrol in the southern French city of Nice were attacked by a man with a knife Tuesday, a French police union official said. Sarah Baron said the extent of the soldiers' injuries is not yet clear. She said the attacker was detained but two people with him are believed to have fled after the stabbing in the city centre, near the Galeries Lafayette department store. France has been on high alert since the attacks in the Paris region by three Islamic extremists that left 20 people dead, including the gunmen. More than 10,000 soldiers have been deployed around the country to protect sensitive locations, including major shopping areas, synagogues, mosques and transit hubs. Earlier Tuesday, French authorities arrested seven men and a woman suspected of involvement in a network to send fighters to join Islamic extremists in Syria. Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said those arrested in the Paris and Lyon areas are not suspected of links to the Jan. 7-9 attacks. Associated Press (Cedar Valley Courier); CBS News; NBC News

Official: Man who attacked 3 French soldiers on anti terror patrol had travelled to Turkey

A French security official says a man who allegedly attacked three soldiers with a knife had been sent home by Turkish authorities last week after flying in on a one-way ticket. Turkey is a transit point for jihadis from Europe to join up with Islamic extremist groups fighting in Syria and Iraq. Police detained Moussa Coulibaly and a suspected accomplice on Tuesday after the attack on the soldiers in front of a Jewish community centre in Nice. Border police had flagged Coulibaly to their Turkish counterparts on Jan. 28, who promptly returned him home, the French security official said on condition of anonymity because she wasn't authorized to speak on the record. French authorities, however, were unable to turn up enough evidence against Coulibaly to open a legal case against him. Associated Press (CTV News)

Islamic State video appears to show burning death of Jordanian pilot

The Islamic State released a video on Tuesday that appears to show the death of Jordanian pilot Lt. Muath al-Kaseasbeh. The video appears to show Kaseasbeh being burned alive by his captors. According to a release from SITE intelligence, the 22-minute video, titled "Healing of the Believers' Chests," was released on social media on Tuesday by the extremist group. The Islamic State released a video over the weekend that appeared to show the beheading of Kenji Goto, a Japanese journalist. The video did not mention Kaseasbeh's fate. However, the Islamic State had previously said it would kill both Kaseasbeh and Goto if an Iraqi woman who is on death row in Jordan was not released by sunset on Thursday. Washington Post; BBC News; Reuters; NY Times; CNN

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A look at The Rise of the Islamic State by Patrick Cockburn. He spotted this a long time ago and he's the one who pointed out that the entire war on terrorists failed since 9/11 because Saudi Arabia and Pakistan were allies that America didn't want to offend and so no one paid much attention to the two. (CJAD, 7:55 ET)

Some foreigners who joined the Islamic State group had become disillusioned but they're finding it hard to leave the Islamic State group has killed one hundred twenty of its own members in the past six months, most of them for the fighters hoping to return home, according to the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights and thousands of returning fighters are now under surveillance or in jail in North Africa (AM 770, 6:06; 660 News, 6:19; CHQT-AM, 7:49 ET)

France's Interior Minister is trying to push through a new anti-terrorism bill for the whole European Union. It would require airlines to maintain and share data on all passengers entering and leaving countries that are part of the E.U. (CNN, 11:30 ET)

Today in France, anti-terror police say they arrested eight people. All are accused of having ties to jihadist cells. The arrests come a month after those deadly Paris attacks and these new suspects are accused of helping to recruit young jihadists and deploying them to Syria for a holy war. For now there's no known link to last month's terrorism but there are similarities (...) France's government has been stepping up efforts to fight radical propaganda. They launched an online campaign targeting the militants recruiting efforts. (CNN, 11:00 ET)

Boston declared a snow emergency once again setting a record for the snowiest week in history. Ice litters the roadways. (CNN, 9:30 ET)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

CTVNationalNews

Blaney dismisses opposition concerns over CSIS oversight <http://ow.ly/lqKoN> #cdnpoli

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CdnPress

State of emergency declared in Saint John as snow chokes Maritime city <http://bit.ly/16rELiv>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBCMontreal

Imam denies being 'agent of radicalization' after turned down for community centre permit http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/montreal/imam-hamza-chaoui-denies-accusations-of-mayors-ménard-coderre-1.2942852?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter...

mtlgazette

Controversial imam denies accusations of radicalization <http://bit.ly/1x5FbAq>

globepolitics

Harper got spy powers right, but civilian oversight very wrong <http://bit.ly/1x6QHLLR> #cdnpoli

ipoliticzca

Is Harper's terror bill terrifying — or just redundant? | iPolitics <http://bit.ly/1DtXZ0U> #cdnpoli

globalnews

RCMP expected to announce another terrorism-related arrest in Ottawa <http://globalnews.ca/news/1809129/rcmp-expected-to-announce-another-terrorism-arrest-in-ottawa/...> #cdnpoli

ottawasuncom

RT @dprouss: The Mounties in Ottawa will announce a new terrorism-related arrest in roughly two hours <http://www.rcmp-grc.gc.ca/news-nouvelles/2015/02-03-media-eng.htm...> #cdnpoli

QMInews

#BREAKING – RCMP set to announce terrorism arrest and charges

StuMillsCBC

RCMP will announced details around a terrorism arrest made by the Integrated National Security Enforcement Team at 3pm

RosieBarton

RCMP make terror arrest. Presser will be at 1500 in Ottawa. #hw

TondaMacC

#RCMP to speak of new arrest in terror charges in Ottawa today. pic.twitter.com/qC8ko277Hq

CTVMercedes

#Breaking the RCMP announce another terror arrest and charges, details at 1500

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

TimesTranscript

Exclusive: Doaktown motel owners say RCMP missed chance to arrest wanted couple considered dangerous

@GleanerHeather ow.ly/lq67Y

grcrmpolice

Dans le dernier numéro de la #gazettegrc : préparation et intervention des policiers en cas d'incident inattendu.

<http://grc.ca/-Nsl>

YahooCanadaNews

RCMP officer claims bullying over learning disability 'destroyed' her career bit.ly/1LI5JCv pic.twitter.com/3V7Z0xldM3

GlobalRegina

Escaped prisoner captured by #Saskatchewan RCMP > gln.ca/lqpJ8 pic.twitter.com/SqrKsdDO7R

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

CBCNews

Federal prison could face eviction for treatment of mentally ill inmates <http://ift.tt/1Aoj4wc>

INTERNATIONAL

AFP

#BREAKING Man who attacked French troops expelled by Turkey last week: security source

CKNW

Unverified video apparently from #ISIS shows the militants burning captured Jordanian pilot Moaz al-Kasasbeh alive.

tvanouvelles

DERNIÈRE HEURE: L'État islamique affirme avoir brûlé vif le pilote jordanien qu'il avait capturé

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Government of CanadaGouvernement du CanadaNewsDeskTreasury Board SecretariatHome → Article

Canada

published: 2018-01-11

received: 2018-01-11 01:35 (EST)

Ottawa Citizen (EARLY)

CITY | A2, Words: 1,046

Government whistleblower remembered as scientist 'speaking truth to power'

Shiv Chopra spent most of his later years fighting to overturn his 2004 dismissal

by: Joanne Laucius

Shiv Chopra did not fear wading into controversy. He would do it again and again. The government scientist said it was his job to blow the whistle when the evidence showed that drugs used for animals posed a danger to the safety of Canada's food system. Chopra died Sunday at the age of 84 after spending much of the past three decades in the spotlight. He was a crank to some and a hero to others. In 1989, he sparked debate over Canada's veterinary drug approval process after he and fellow scientist Margaret Haydon testified before a Senate committee that they were being pressured to approve bovine growth hormone (BGH), a product aimed at boosting milk production in dairy cows.

BGH was never approved in Canada, and some credit the actions of the scientists. Maude Barlow, national chairperson of the Council of Canadians, said Chopra contacted her to go public with the BGH issue and called Chopra "a true national hero." "Shiv put his career and future on the line to resist. He literally blew the whistle on this shameful fact and contacted me to go public. Together with the Canadian Health Coalition and the Council of Canadians, Shiv led a national campaign to halt the BGH patent approval process, which was successfully blocked in the Senate. Canadians owe Shiv Chopra a great deal." Born in India, where he earned a degree in veterinary science, Chopra came to Canada to do a PhD in microbiology at McGill University and worked in England briefly before returning to Canada in 1969 to work for the federal government. He was a Hindu and grew up on a vegetarian diet. Chopra's son, Anil, said his father always led by example. Science and whistleblowing were a constant topic of discussion around the family's dinner table. "He taught us from an early age to always seek truth in everything. And I mean everything. It wasn't just science, it was religion, spirituality and philosophy," Anil said. "If he saw injustice, he would speak up about it. He saw it as his duty. He always said he worked for the people of Canada, not for his direct supervisors or the government of the time. He always said civil servants were there to be the defenders of the people. It's what kept him going." In the years that followed the BGH controversy, Chopra and his fellow scientists would remain perennially in the headlines, speaking out about other veterinary drugs and practices.

They wrote directly to then-health minister Anne McLellan, urging a total ban on animal feeds containing rendered materials of other animals after the discovery of a case of bovine spongiform encephalopathy, known as "mad cow disease" in Alberta. They spoke out against approving the antibiotic Baytril for animal use, arguing it could produce antibiotic resistance in humans. Their actions sparked public debate not just about food safety, but also the role of whistleblowing in the public service - and a long round of cases and appeals before courts, boards and tribunals. In 2001, the Federal Court ruled that the scientists had the right to voice their concerns about the approval of BGH because the public interest overrode loyalty to their employer. In 2004, Chopra, Haydon and Gérard Lambert were fired for "insubordination." A few months later, then-prime minister Paul Martin said the firings had nothing to do with whistleblowing. "First of all, Health Canada made it very clear at the time that that happened that this had nothing to do with whistleblowing, that their reasons for taking their actions had nothing to do with calling attention to any problem, and I certainly accept Health Canada's word on that," Martin said. By that time, Chopra was near retirement age, but he would spend almost the rest of his life doggedly fighting to be reinstated. In 2014, Chopra founded the Canadian Council for Food Safety and Health, saying he still had concerns about what he called the "five pillars of food safety" - hormones, antibiotics, slaughterhouse byproducts used in animal feed, pesticides and genetically modified organisms. Chopra held some controversial views, including reservations about vaccinations, which prompted critics to dub him an "anti-vaxxer." Anil Chopra said his father believed that all drugs should be stringently tested and there should be an open dialogue about their use. "My father was all about having proper science done, especially when it came to children. He was an expert on this. He saw a lot of data pass his desk," Anil said. "He was a man of science and a man of truth. If it was well-tested and safe, he was for it." Haydon and Lambert were eventually ordered reinstated in 2016, but the Public Service Labour Relations and Employment Board upheld Chopra's dismissal. Chopra sought to appeal that decision, but the Federal Court of Appeal decided last September that the adjudicator's decision was not unreasonable and it would not hear the case. In an interview with the Citizen on the day of the decision, Chopra argued that the real issue was Canada's food-safety system - and the tribunals and courts had never answered the question of whether he was right. "If today I had won, I would be compensated for my loss of salary.

But the issue of public food safety would still remain," he said. Chopra was diagnosed with cancer in October, only a few weeks after he learned that the court wouldn't hear his appeal, said Anil Chopra. Ken Billings, the executive director of the Canadian Council on Food Safety and Health, said Chopra will be remembered for "speaking truth to power" and in inspiring food safety activism around the world. Chopra maintained a busy schedule of speaking engagements until recently, said Billings. "Getting safe food in the system was his major focus, as well as getting healthy, safe food on the school curriculum." The Canadian Council of Food Safety and Health has been pushing for a pilot project to demonstrate permaculture at the Central Experimental Farm and still wants to pursue the project, said Billings. "In some parts of the world, a couple of acres can feed a village. This is do-able." Chopra is survived by his wife, Nirmala, sons Sandeep and Anil, and five grandchildren. Plans for a memorial have not yet been completed.

jlaucius@postmedia.com

© 2018 Postmedia Network Inc. All rights reserved.

Today's News / Actualités
February 3, 2015 / le 3 février 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Awso Peshdary, charged with paying for Canadians' trips to fight with ISIS, complained of 'discrimination' at Ottawa college

An "organized network associated with ISIS" was disrupted by the RCMP on Tuesday with the arrest of an Ottawa man allegedly involved in financing the travel of recruits and charges against two of his associates, who remain abroad. Awso Peshdary, 25, was charged with three terrorism counts for allegedly conspiring with John Maguire, 24, to send Canadians to Syria to join ISIS. Among them was allegedly Khadar Khalib, 23, who traveled to the region last year... Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney commended the RCMP and CSIS for the case. "Their diligence and dedication serve to protect Canadians from those who wish to cause harm and threaten our freedom," he said. The charges came four days after the government introduced new counter-terrorism legislation that would give security agencies new powers to disrupt terror plots and make arrests. National Post

Omar Khadr applies for bail

A Christian university in Edmonton has offered to admit former Guantanamo detainee Omar Khadr if he wins his bid for freedom next month after 12 years in custody. "What better way to prepare someone for success in life than with education," said Dan Vankeeken, vice-president of The King's University, in an interview Tuesday as he visited Toronto. Although the Khadr case has been highly politicized and has divided Canadians, Vankeeken says the university's decision has been well received by the community. "It has been largely positive — only a couple of random emails from people not connected to King's saying, 'Why are you giving free education to a terrorist?' " he said... The federal government, which has consistently portrayed Khadr as an unrepentant terrorist and murderer, has not yet responded to the bail request, but a spokesperson for the public safety minister said the federal government would "vigorously defend against any attempt to lessen punishment." Khadr's bail application on March 24 relates to his U.S. appeal of his Guantanamo conviction. Toronto Star

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News provided a brief report on the RCMP's upcoming national security investigation announcement featuring comments by Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney. Rough Transcript

CBC News provided a brief report featuring comments made by Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney regarding the RCMP's national security investigation announcement. Rough Transcript

TVA nouvelles a rapporté la réaction du Ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, au sujet d'une nouvelle vidéo qui montre un pilote jordanien brûlé vif par l'EI. Transcription ébauche

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Three men caught up in avalanche near B.C. resort

RCMP in Golden say three men were rescued after they were caught up in a snow slide on Tuesday afternoon near the Kicking Horse Resort. Police say three males from Saskatchewan were skiing out of bounds south of the Terminator 2 peak when the avalanche happened. One of them had a cell phone and was able to call for help. The safety team from the resort initially responded to the call and found the men shortly after 2:00 p.m. Golden District Search and Rescue took over from there and was able to transport the trio off of the mountain. Two of the men are reported to have suffered serious but non-life threatening injuries while the third is apparently uninjured. CTV News

BC Hydro bracing for rare February subtropical storms

B.C. Hydro is bracing for a rare series of February subtropical storms that are scheduled to hit the B.C. coast Wednesday night. "In my 15 years of involvement on B.C. Hydro operations on the Campbell River system it's hard to recall large subtropical storm systems hitting the area in February," said B.C. Hydro's Stephen Watson. "The last such storm was in 2003. Typically they are in the November to January timeframe." Watson said B.C. Hydro's forecasters are following a series of subtropical storms that will be hitting the West Coast of North America beginning Wednesday night. He said that unlike a relatively narrow band of precipitation directed at the coast from the Southwest with high precipitation levels, known as an atmospheric river, these systems look to have a very wide band of heavy rain that will hit the United States and Canada from the South. The Province

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Une «cellule Ottawa» de l'État islamique

Khalib Peshdary, 25 ans, a été arrêté pour avoir trouvé le financement afin de permettre aux deux Ottavien de s'envoler vers le Moyen-Orient pour participer aux activités du groupe armé islamiste. Ces deux hommes partis à l'étranger sont John Maguire, 24 ans, dont la rumeur du décès a déjà circulé sur les réseaux sociaux, et Khadar Khalib, 23 ans, lui aussi un ancien résident d'Ottawa. Peshdary est accusé d'avoir participé à une activité d'un groupe terroriste et d'avoir facilité une activité pour un groupe terroriste. Khalib est accusé d'avoir quitté le Canada afin de participer aux activités d'un groupe terroriste et pour avoir conseillé à une personne de participer à une activité d'un groupe terroriste. Maguire est recherché pour des accusations de facilitation d'une activité terroriste. Le projet «Servant», qui a mené à cette arrestation et à l'émission de ces mandats, a été entamé il y a deux ans. «Nos preuves démontrent que Awso Peshdary fournissait un appui financier aux deux autres, afin qu'ils aillent rejoindre l'État islamique», a résumé le commissaire James Malizia. Arrêté mardi, Awso Peshdary serait à l'origine de la radicalisation de John Maguire. Il aurait aussi convaincu Khader Khalib de se joindre à l'État islamique. Ces développements surviennent à la suite d'une enquête criminelle sur la sécurité nationale de l'Équipe intégrée de la sécurité nationale. Maguire est cet ancien étudiant de l'Université d'Ottawa qui a parlé au nom de l'ÉI sur les réseaux sociaux, en incitant les musulmans à attaquer de cibles canadiennes. Le jeune homme a été déclaré mort quelques semaines plus tard sur les réseaux sociaux, mais la GRC maintient son mandat d'arrestation contre cet individu. «Une information qui circule sur ces médias n'est pas une preuve suffisante pour confirmer son décès», a déclaré la surintendante de la GRC, Jennifer Srachman. Dans le cas de Maguire comme dans celui de Khadar Khalib, l'agence INTERPOL a diffusé les mandats d'arrestation à l'échelle mondiale. Khadar Khalib a quitté le Canada le 29 mars 2014, à partir de Toronto, vers la Syrie. Les deux jeunes seraient en Syrie ou en Irak. La Police provinciale de l'Ontario et le Service de police d'Ottawa ont joué un rôle important dans cette affaire, souligne la GRC. La GRC encourage les citoyens à signaler toute information sur le terrorisme ou sur des activités suspectes au Réseau info-sécurité nationale au 1-800-420-5805 ou au service de police de local. La Presse ; Canadian Press (Chronicle Herald, Huffington Post, Globe and Mail); QMI Agency (Ottawa Sun, London Free Press); CBC News; Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, StarPhoenix); Agence France-Presse (Yahoo! News)

Who is Awso Peshdary?

AwsoPeshdary's name has come up in a terrorism investigation prior to Feb. 3, 2015, when RCMP announced terrorism-related charges against the Ottawa man. Five years ago, when he was 20 years old and newly married, Peshdary found himself caught up in a major national security investigation. The investigation, code-named Project Samossa, ultimately led to the conviction of two Ottawa men on terrorism charges, and the first-ever acquittal of a Canadian on terrorism charges for Dr. Khurram Sher, of London, Ont., who made a brief appearance on Canadian Idol. During the investigation, RCMP had placed a bug in Peshdary's home, and believed they had recorded him assaulting his wife. Concern for her safety led investigators to end Project Samossa earlier than anticipated. Domestic assault charges against Peshdary were eventually dropped when his wife refused to testify against him. Husband and wife underwent counselling at an Ottawa mosque, but separated some time later... CBC News has learned that Peshdary had attempted to persuade some leaders in the Ottawa Muslim community that he had been given an unfair rap - telling some that he had previously been radicalized by a CSIS informant but that he had since seen the error of his ways. CBC News

Two girls from Mississauga, Ontario tried to get into Syria, Senate committee hears

Two teenagers from suburban Toronto recently tried to get into Syria but were stopped in Turkey and returned home, a Senate committee has heard. Calgary-based Imam Syed Soharwardy provided details of the alleged trip on Tuesday to the Standing Senate Committee on National Security and Defence. Soharwardy is harsh critic of ISIS, the ultra-violent terrorist organization that occupies large swaths of Syria and Iraq. Several Canadians are believed to have joined ISIS in recent years, including reports of some young women who have tried to cross into Syria to marry ISIS fighters. Soharwardy said the two girls from Mississauga, west of Toronto, left Canada and ended up in Turkey. Sun News Network

Train derailment plot 'very simple idea,' Via Rail terror trial hears

A plan to derail a train travelling between Canada and the U.S. was a "very simple" idea that would kill scores of people and pave the way for more acts of terrorism, the trial of two men accused in the alleged plot heard Tuesday. The attack was characterized that way by Chiheb Esseghaier in an audio recording of a conversation he had with an undercover FBI officer while the pair were on their way to meet his co-conspirator, Raed Jaser. Jaser and Esseghaier both face multiple terrorism-related charges in the alleged Via Rail plot, which sought to target a train between New York and Toronto. Not-guilty pleas have been entered for both men. An undercover FBI officer who gained the pair's trust told their trial he first came to learn of the train plot while driving from Montreal to Toronto with Esseghaier to meet Jaser. Canadian Press (Montreal Gazette)

Calgary imam warns against preaching 'open intolerance'

Terrorist ideology is being preached in Canadian mosques and universities and Ottawa is slow to stop the "brainwashing," a Senate committee has heard. Calgary imam Syed Soharwardy made the comments on Monday to the Standing Senate Committee on National Security and Defence. He said Canada is under threat as intolerance is preached to youths across the country. "I was in a Friday prayer in Toronto, and the imam there, with almost 300 to 400 people praying, openly said: 'When you see a non-Muslim coming on a street from the opposite side, don't give him a way; try to block it so he or she can just go against the wall,'" Soharwardy told MPs. QMI Agency (Calgary Sun, London Free Press, Whig-Standard, Edmonton Sun)

Better questions for C-51

An opinion piece states, "The good news out of Tuesday's RCMP presser announcing more terror charges: The law works. The RCMP take their terror probes seriously and get results. Maybe not as proactive, encompassing or fast as some would wish. But they're results nonetheless. The bad news: There's always more. We knew about John Maguire. But we didn't know he was part of an alleged Ottawa cell. And while Awso Peshdary was arrested in the Project Samosa raids in 2010, he was never charged with terror offences. But this is the first we're hearing of Khadar Khalib. So following this, Canadians' views on the new anti-terror bill, C-51, will likely be filtered through one of two prisms: 1) that the law is just fine as it is because when these alleged bad guys act, our law enforcement is ready pounce; 2) that more preventative measures need to be put in place to stop these guys from even walking around with as much swagger as they do..." QMI Agency (Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun, Winnipeg Sun, Calgary Sun, Ottawa Sun)

Edward Snowden is right to urge caution on anti-terror measures

An editorial states, "Edward Snowden, the security service whistleblower and international fugitive, has warned Canadians to be "extraordinarily cautious" in accepting new anti-terrorism laws. And he's right. Legislation introduced by the federal government at the end of last week represents the largest overhaul of Canada's security laws in more than a decade. Broadly speaking, Ottawa's Anti-Terrorism Act 2015 ratchets up the power of police and spy agencies while loosening civil rights protections. And it does so without including any new mechanism that would allow Parliament to effectively oversee to work of security services. That's a troubling combination..." Toronto Star

CSIS oversight is alive and well

An opinion piece by Ron Atkey, the first chair of the Security Intelligence Review Committee from 1984 to 1989, states, "Some of the instant critics of the Harper government's Bill C-51, introduced last Friday, have missed the mark in decrying lack of oversight. While there is much in the bill that will require careful scrutiny by parliamentarians, security intelligence specialists and lawyers going forward, oversight or "review" has not been forgotten. Indeed, the whole notion of accountability for the dangerous but important new powers for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service has been enhanced. First, the bill rightly expands judicial control now in place for wiretap warrants. Henceforth, when CSIS uses its new powers to reduce threats to Canada's security, within and outside the country, it will in most cases require the prior authorization of a designated Federal Court judge. This is no simple procedure: Detailed affidavits that take CSIS months or years to prepare are presented to the judge in closed proceedings. They are then subject to aggressive questioning by the judge (and sometimes a special advocate in complex cases) to ensure they meet statutory thresholds, including compliance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Only then can the measure be authorized within terms specified by the judge..." Globe and Mail

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News reported live from Ottawa where the RCMP held a press conference concerning a national security investigation. The press conference was followed by a Q&A with media. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Power & Politics held a panel discussion with Roxanne James, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Safety as well as other MPs regarding the announcement made today by the RCMP on terrorism-related charges against 3 Canadians. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Adrienne Arsenault discusses the announcement made today by the RCMP regarding terrorism-related charges against 3 Canadians. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Some temporary foreign workers in Alberta to get reprieve

Some temporary foreign workers in Alberta are getting more time to become permanent residents as they face a deadline for leaving the country. The transitional measure will offer a reprieve to some employees in Alberta working in the Temporary Foreign Worker (TFW) program as they wait for their permanent residence applications to be processed, Employment Minister Jason Kenney said in a letter to Conservative MPs obtained by CBC News. CBC News

Update - Bridge tolls likely to pay for new U.S. customs plaza

A new $250-million U.S. customs plaza likely will be paid for by tolls, a source close to the project said Tuesday. Canada will probably help fund the U.S. customs plaza - on top of the $550 million Canada has already pledged to help pay for Michigan access roads - through a public-private partnership, known as a P3. Canadian officials have said in the past the U.S. should pay for its own plaza, though it seems less and likely that President Barack Obama will kick in cash. The Obama administration has repeatedly declined to earmark any money for the U.S. customs plaza, including as recently as Monday. The most recent U.S. budget is almost $4 trillion, but again does not mention funding for the proposed bridge or the Detroit-based plaza... Engineering work on the Windsor-Detroit bridge, which would be built roughly two kilometres south of the Ambassador Bridge, has already started. The Windsor-Detroit Bridge Authority has begun hiring staff and has signed a six-year deal with an engineering consultant. Windsor Star

Westphal man pleads guilty to drug, weapons and customs charges

A Westphal man will be sentenced in late March on drug, weapons and Customs Act charges. Nicholas Donald Surette, 30, pleaded guilty recently in Dartmouth provincial court to a variety of charges stemming from his arrest last April. He accepted responsibility for: possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking; a Customs Act charge of importing illegal goods; and Criminal Code charges of importing prohibited weapons, unauthorized transfer of prohibited weapons, possession of prohibited weapons and breaching a weapons prohibition... Surette was already under investigation by the Canada Border Services Agency, which had intercepted two parcels from China at the international mail centre in Vancouver. Although the contents were declared to be belt buckles, each parcel contained 10 brass knuckles. Chronicle Herald

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Intel chief warns US tech threatened by China cybertheft

The U.S. defense intelligence chief warned Tuesday that America's technological edge over China is at risk because of cybertheft. Lt. Gen. Vincent Stewart, director of the U.S. Defense Intelligence Agency, told a congressional hearing the U.S. retains technological superiority. But he said China had stolen "a lot" of intellectual property from U.S. defense contractors and that effort continues. Associated Press (Yahoo! News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Man killed by RCMP gunfire identified as resident of Yahk

The coroners service has identified a man who was fatally shot by police in Castlegar. Thirty-nine-year-old Waylon Edey, of Yahk, was killed following an encounter with RCMP officers near a bridge on Highway 3. Mounties have said officers responded to a complaint of a possible impaired driver last Thursday and attempted to stop him. Canadian Press (The Province)

'Dangerous' missing Ontario patients slipped by N.B. RCMP, says motel owner

A motel owner in Doaktown, N.B., says she and her husband are frustrated after trying to help police catch two patients missing from a mental health facility in Ontario over the weekend. Glenna Taylor says she told the RCMP exactly what time Cara Duval and Joseph Pepin would be at the Taylor Motel on Sunday, but officers showed up late, after the pair had already left. CBC News

2 drivers clocked at 200 km/hr west of Calgary

It could be a very costly weekend for two young men from Calgary. RCMP say they caught the pair hitting speeds of up to 200 km/hr during a speed trap set up Sunday afternoon on Highway 1A between Calgary and Cochrane, Alta. The posted speed limit on the stretch of road is half that amount. The 21- and 26-year-old men are now facing racing and speeding charges and will make a mandatory court appearance on March 27 in Cochrane Provincial Court. CBC News

RCMP looks for help naming new puppies

RCMP are asking for the public's assistance - in naming some adorable new recruits. Children across Canada are being asked to suggest names for 10 German shepherd puppies recently born at the RCMP's police dog training school in Innisfail, Alta. According to contest rules, the names, either male or female, must start with the letter H, must have no more than nine letters and must be one or two syllables. Officers are looking for names that are suited for working police dogs, not pets, according to RCMP in a press release. StarPhoenix

Halifax cop who drove drunk still pushing paper during review

A Halifax Regional Police officer caught driving drunk in Kings County last fall is still on administrative duties while its professional standards office investigates the matter. Const. Pierre Bourdages, a Halifax Regional Police spokesman, said there is no set time by which the investigation into Const. Blair William Hickey's conduct must be concluded. Hickey, 48, was arrested after RCMP pulled over his vehicle on Highway 101 near New Minas on the night of Nov. 27. Chronicle Herald

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Impasse judiciaire : Richard Charlish libéré malgré un risque très élevé de récidive violente

Le prédateur sexuel originaire de Mashteuiasth, Richard Charlish n'a pas respecté les conditions de son ordonnance de surveillance à au moins deux reprises depuis sa sortie du pénitencier en novembre 2011, en plus d'être toujours considéré comme dangereux. Richard Charlish est celui qui a battu, séquestré et agressé sexuellement une femme en 2001 à Montréal. Soumis à une ordonnance de surveillance depuis 3 ans, l'autochtone de 49 ans n'a pas su résister à la tentation de consommer de l'alcool. En brisant ses conditions, Charlish s'est vu imposer une première sous peine de détention de trois mois en 2012 et une seconde de huit mois en août dernier. Risque élevé. On lui reproche aussi son attitude menaçante envers le personnel des centres communautaires où il a séjourné et des altercations verbales avec les autres résidents. «On reçoit sans cesse des appels de la commission nous informant de ce qui se passe, qu'il n'a pas respecté ses conditions, qu'on le cherche, qu'on l'a retrouvé, etc, explique l'avocat de sa victime, Me Marc Bellemare. Pour la victime, c'est un véritable enfer.» La commission des libérations conditionnelles note dans son dernier rapport que tous les professionnels qui se sont penchés sur son dossier ont conclu qu'il présentait un risque très élevé de récidive violente, sexuelle ou non, à court, moyen et long terme. Condition sévère. À l'approche de la fin de sa deuxième sous peine, la commission a décidé de resserrer ses conditions sous les recommandations du Service correctionnel du Canada. Agence QMI (Journal de Québec, Journal de Montréal)

Allan Legere's transfer to lower security raises fears in Miramichi

The deputy mayor of Miramichi and former New Brunswick public safety minister, John Foran, is raising concerns about the transfer of serial killer Allan Legere to a lower-security facility and the risk of escape. Foran plans to ask Miramichi city council to approve a motion that the mayor contact the Correctional Service of Canada on behalf of the citizens of Miramichi and request Legere be returned to the special handling unit at the maximum security prison in Ste-Anne-Des-Plaines, Que. Legere, who has escaped custody twice before, has reportedly been moved to a regular maximum security facility in Edmonton. CBC News

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Accused child pornographer let out on bail

A Saskatoon man accused of sexually assaulting multiple young girls more than a decade ago has been released on $3,000 bail. Russell Dennis Wolfe, 56, will wear an electronic monitoring bracelet, will not be allowed to contact anyone under the age of 16 and will also be heavily restricted in his computer use. Among other things, he will also have a 24-hour curfew. Wolfe faces more than 25 new charges relating to 10 different complaints covering a time span from 1997 to 2005. StarPhoenix

Couillard doit expliquer ses liens avec l'Arabie saoudite, dit Khadir

Le premier ministre Philippe Couillard doit faire preuve de transparence et s'expliquer sur ses liens avec l'Arabie saoudite, a déclaré mardi le député de Québec solidaire Amir Khadir. Dans le contexte de la détention par le régime saoudien d'un blogueur dont la famille est à Sherbrooke, M. Khadir s'étonne de la «banalisation» de la situation par M. Couillard, qui a travaillé il y a 20 ans comme médecin puis comme conseiller du ministre de la Santé de ce pays entre 2009 et 2011. La semaine dernière, M. Couillard a insisté sur l'importance de maintenir des liens avec l'Arabie saoudite, pour éviter d'isoler ce pays, dénoncé pour ses violations des droits de la personne, où des opposants tentent de faire changer la situation. Le Devoir

Cape Breton reservist a no show on Camp Aldershot child porn charge

A warrant is being held for a Cape Breton reservist accused of possessing child pornography at Camp Aldershot who didn't appear for court and didn't give his lawyer any instructions. Cpl. Lawrence Arthur Jordan, 27, of Sydney, was not present in Kentville provincial court for election and plea on Feb. 2. Jordan had earlier filed a designation of counsel to be represented by Nova Scotia Legal Aid lawyer Ken Greer. Cape Breton Post

Un amateur de porno juvénile vivra un an l'horreur des prisons

En imposant une peine d'un an de prison à un collectionneur de porno juvénile, un juge l'a prévenu que sa prochaine année sera «horrible et terrible». «La prison, c'est épouvantable, a expliqué le juge Jean-Paul Braun à Denis Lepage. C'est vivre avec des gens avec qui l'on ne veut pas être, c'est surveiller ses arrières à chaque minute, à chaque seconde.» Mais cette année en prison représente le prix que doit payer cet informaticien de la Ville de Montréal pour avoir téléchargé pendant cinq ans près de 24 000 fichiers montrant des garçons de 7 à 13 ans dans des positions sexuellement explicites. Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, Journal de Québec)

OSC whistleblower program to offer rewards of up to $1.5M for info

Ontario's securities regulator plans to create a reward program that would pay whistleblowers up to $1.5 million for anonymous information that leads to prosecutions for major financial crimes. The Ontario Securities Commission said Tuesday it wants to set up a fund to pay people to provide it with crucial evidence of financial misdeeds that would otherwise be difficult if not impossible to obtain. CBC News

Edmonton man claims he was too high on drugs to remember driving rampage he pleaded guilty to

An Edmonton man was apparently too high on drugs to remember hitting four pedestrians during a downtown driving rampage, but he still owned up to it on Tuesday. Brandon James Hudson, 22, pleaded guilty in Provincial Court to three counts of dangerous driving causing bodily harm, two counts of hit and run, theft of a vehicle, failing to stop after an accident, assault and two breaches. Crown prosecutor Jody Fraser told court Hudson became involved in a "melee" on Sept 24 about 3:30 p.m. after breaching a release condition to not have any contact with his stepfather by stealing the man's car. Edmonton Sun

Gangster gets seven-year sentence in 2011 kidnapping

Long-time gangster Troy Dax McKinnon was sentenced to seven years Tuesday after pleading guilty to playing a "significant leadership role" in a 2011 Vancouver kidnapping thwarted by police. B.C. Supreme Court Associate Chief Justice Austin Cullen called the plan to kidnap drug trafficker Eric Low "a coordinated sophisticated scheme involving communication by encrypted cell phone and the use of computers and tracking devices." Vancouver Sun

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

NIL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MinStevenBlaney

Je viens de m'entretenir avec la ministre @LiseT_ALR. Discussion productive. Nous travaillons ensemble pour lutter contre le terrorisme.

MinStevenBlaney

Just spoke with Minister @LiseT_ALR. Productive discussion. We are working together to fight terrorism.

RichardMadann

Public Safety Min Blaney condemns killing of Jordanian pilot by #ISIS: "disgusting... barbaric attack" #cdnpoli

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

cbcnewsbc

BREAKING: #RCMP say 3 men in avalanche near Kicking Horse Resort near Golden. 2 with serious, but non-life threatening injuries. 1 uninjured

CBCNB

RT @BJMCBC: Brace yourselves NBers. @environmentca says more snow could be on the way Wednesday, potentially heavy snow in south <http://t.cbc.ca/news/1.2942918>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Maikeepsgoing

Here's the #RCMP release about the 3 #Ottawa men arrested on terrorism charges today: rcmp-grc.gc.ca/on/news-nouvel... #ottnews #ISIL #ISIS

globeandmail

BREAKING: The RCMP have arrested one and charged three in a terrorism investigation trib.al/Fo63QWg

TheStarPhoenix

Two charged in alleged Maguire terror plot thestarphoenix.com/News/canada/RC... #SPnews

680News

STORY: Police make arrest, charge 3 in connection with ISIL recruitment ow.ly/lrbYz #CANpoli

HuffPostCanada

UPDATE: RCMP have laid terror charges against three people huff.to/1x8QaZH

TondaMacC

Chief Supt Strachan said today's trio are linked by "social activity" to Larmond bros, Suliman Mohamed. But separate investigations.

TondaMacC

Interesting thing about today's #RCMP announcement is that charges laid under current laws.

yowflie

RCMP say there was no immediate threat to Canada but said its another reminder of radicalization happening in Canada.

yowflie

RCMP say they have no evidence to confirm that Maguire is dead.

yowflie

Khadar Khalib is also charged in absentia.

yowflie

One of those charges is John Maguire, believed to have been killed fighting with IS. He is charged in absentia.

yowflie

RCMP charge three men, two in absentia, for conspiring to participate in IS fight

crimegarden

BREAKING: Khadar Khalib, 23, Awso Peshdary, 25, charged in alleged terrorism conspiracy linked to John Maguire and Larmond twins. #ottnews

crimegarden

RCMP terrorism probe: Khalib, 23, allegedly conspired with Peshdary in Ottawa, Syria and Iraq to participate in terrorist activity. #ottnews

OttawaCitizen

RT @crimegarden: RCMP say Khalib and Peshdary conspired between March 1, 2014 and Feb. 2, 2015. #ottnews

crimegarden

RCMP say Khalib and Peshdary conspired between March 1, 2014 and Feb. 2, 2015. #ottnews

crimegarden

RCMP say that Khalib left Canada on March 29, 2014, from Toronto to participate in a terrorism group.#ottnews

crimegarden

RCMP have also charged Khalib, 23, with counseling Abdul Milton to participate in terrorism. #ottnews

CBCNews

The RCMP has issued warrants for John Maguire and Khadar Khalib, obtained an Interpol Red Notice for their arrest: cbc.ca/news/canada/3-...

OttawaCitizen

Khadar Khalib, 23, Awso Peshdary, 25, are charged in an alleged terrorism conspiracy linked to John Maguire
#ottnews ow.ly/lrfbR

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

theprovince

Man killed by RCMP gunfire identified as resident of Yahk theprovince.in/1xaGZYM

CBCCanada

'Catch me if you can' escaped prisoner arrested ift.tt/1zyOjlf pic.twitter.com/bTd0TyoarX

CBCCalgary

2 men charged after RCMP catch them driving 200km/hr west of Calgary cbc.ca/news/canada/ca...

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

TorontoStar

Omar Khadr applies for bail on.thestar.com/16uS95v #topstories

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
February 4, 2015 / le 4 février, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Le Parti libéral appuiera le projet de loi antiterroriste, dit Justin Trudeau

Le chef libéral Justin Trudeau a annoncé mercredi que sa formation appuierait le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 déposé vendredi dernier par le gouvernement conservateur. Il a soutenu que le projet de loi comportait des lacunes, notamment au chapitre de la supervision de l'agence d'espionnage qui verrait ses pouvoirs considérablement accrus, mais que cela n'empêcherait pas les libéraux de donner leur feu vert. M. Trudeau a ajouté que sa formation politique proposerait des amendements au projet de loi et invité les conservateurs à travailler en collaboration avec l'opposition. Le projet de loi C-51 donnerait notamment au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) le pouvoir de contrer les projets de voyage de présumés extrémistes, d'interrompre des transactions bancaires et d'intervenir secrètement sur des sites web radicaux. Le Parti libéral et le Nouveau Parti démocratique (NPD) estiment que l'organe actuellement chargé de sa supervision, le Comité de surveillance des activités de renseignement de sécurité (CSARS), n'a pas la crédibilité requise pour accomplir cette tâche. Les deux formations d'opposition plaident en faveur de la mise sur pied d'un comité de supervision composé d'élus. Dans un courriel envoyé à La Presse Canadienne, le bureau du ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a fermé la porte à l'idée de mettre sur pied un tel comité, lundi. Le NPD a indiqué mercredi qu'il poursuivait son étude du projet de loi et ses consultations avec des experts. La Presse Canadienne

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Miramichi MP Tilly O'Neil-Gordon has reached out to the Federal Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney about the transfer of Allan Legere to a less secure prison. Correctional Service Canada doesn't comment due to privacy reasons. O'Neil-Gordon says she only found out when word got around the notorious local serial killer is moving from a Québec special handling unit to the regular maximum Edmonton Institution. (The River 99.3 FM, 7:33 ET)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

New Brunswick braces for another blast of winter

New Brunswick is bracing for another blast of snow after being battered by a third storm in less than a week. Environment Canada says the snow is expected to begin overnight in some areas and will continue well into tomorrow. A state of emergency has been declared in Saint John, where the port city's streets are choked with 126 centimetres of snow. Normally, Saint John has 15 to 20 centimetres of accumulation for this time of year. Canadian Press (CTV News); CBC News; Radio-Canada

Prince Edward Island digs out, but another system is coming

Plows and blowers worked to clear out government offices and private businesses from Tuesday's snowfall. Snow-clearing crews are working at pushing back the 66 cm of snow that fell in Charlottetown Tuesday. The City of Charlottetown has issued an advisory that parking in the downtown core will be limited today due to the amount of snow that has accumulated on city street. CharlottetownGuardian.ca

Subtropical storm system to hit B.C. coast Thursday with heavy rain, wet snow inland

A subtropical storm is due to hit British Columbia, dumping heavy rain on the Lower Mainland and snow on the Interior. The moist Pacific frontal system will move through the province Thursday afternoon, while a second wave is expected Thursday night and Friday, soaking the South Coast with more than 75 millimetres of rain and bringing 150 mm or more to west and inland Vancouver Island, according to Environment Canada. Areas in the B.C. Interior will get 15 mm of snow, and wet snow is expected in Whistler early Thursday before it turns to rain. Meanwhile, extreme cold warnings are in effect for two areas near the B.C.-Yukon border. Vancouver Province

New Coast Guard centre gets go-ahead

Charlottetown is getting a new Integrated Service Centre for the Coast Guard. A 15-year lease has been awarded to a Charlottetown company to construct the new centre for Canadian Coast Guard operations in P.E.I. the project is valued at $4.5 million. The building will be located on John Yeo Drive in Charlottetown, next to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans' area office. Once constructed, work done at the centre will include maintenance of buoys and other aids to navigation, carpentry and repairs to electronic equipment. There will also be office space at the centre. Environmental response equipment will be located on site for use in the event of an oil spill or other environmental disaster.

CharlottetownGuardian.ca

Large power outage in Central Okanagan

BC Hydro has says power has been restored to all its customers in the Okanagan. The light went out for about 7,000 homes and businesses between 7:20 and 8:16 a.m. Hydro spokesperson Dag Sharma says the outage originated in a Fortis BC sub-station in Lake Country which supplies BC Hydro customers in the area. FortisBC reports power has been restored to about 15,000 customers in the Kelowna area. A spokesperson says they're investigating the cause of the outage. Global News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

The RCMP are to take the helm in guiding security on Parliament Hill, with House and Senate security forces reporting to one Mountie.

The change essentially puts one person in charge of protecting the Hill, rather than the three representatives – one from the House of Commons, one from the Senate and a third from the RCMP – who have been meeting every morning for years in the Hill's central command post. A unified security force inside the parliamentary buildings would report to the officer put in charge of Hill security and be accountable to the RCMP for its actions. The new command structure, which was to be announced Wednesday, would still see the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate in charge of security on Parliament Hill, and inside the buildings of the parliamentary precinct. "What we want, they (the RCMP) will decide how it will be done," said a source with knowledge of the changes. Getting the change in place, however, could be tricky without Parliament approving legal changes to the act that guides the Mounties. Parliament would have to allow the Mountie in charge of the Hill to report to the two Speakers; the RCMP Act only allows officers to report up the line to the RCMP commissioner. Ottawa Citizen; Global News; CBC News

Near-century of tradition at an end with Mounties taking over Hill security

Nearly a century of parliamentary tradition is coming to an end with the RCMP poised to take control of security inside the Parliament Buildings. The Conservative government is giving the Mounties power over what used to be an entirely independent security team patrolling the halls of the House of Commons and Senate, sources familiar with the plan tell The Canadian Press. Members of that tight-knit Commons team, led by former sergeant-at-arms Kevin Vickers, were responsible for stopping a gunman's rampage in the Centre Block last October. The gunman made it past RCMP officers stationed on Parliament Hill on the morning of Oct. 22; the force has long had control over the parliamentary grounds, but not inside the buildings. Canadian Press (580 CFRA, PG Citizen, CTV News, Norfolk News, Lethbridge Herald, iPolitics, Huffington Post); Toronto Star

Undercover RCMP informant infiltrated a suspected ISIS recruiting network in Ottawa, leading to arrest

An undercover informant infiltrated a suspected ISIS recruiting network in Ottawa, helping RCMP counter-terrorism officers disrupt the operation and bring charges against at least one of the members, the National Post has learned. Abdullah Milton's family confirmed Wednesday that he was in witness protection following the arrest of alleged ISIS facilitator and financier Awso Peshdary and two associates, John Maguire and Khadar Khalid, both suspected ISIS fighters. The charge sheet filed in Ontario court by the RCMP alleges that between April 1 and December 7, 2014, Mr. Khalid had counseled Mr. Milton to "knowingly participate in or contribute to, directly or indirectly an activity of a terrorist group." Postmedia News (National Post, Windsor Star, Calgary Herald)

Des employés de la NSA ont espionné leurs proches

La révélation de telles pratiques au sein de la NSA - qui parle d'un phénomène marginal - suscite des questions au Canada. Bill Robinson, qui chapeaute un blogue consacré aux services de renseignement du pays, affirme qu'il serait «surprenant que ça ne soit pas arrivé» au sein du Centre de la sécurité des télécommunications (CST), pendant canadien de la NSA. Difficile d'en avoir le cœur net quand on examine les rapports du Bureau du commissaire du CST, puisque toute référence à un cas de cette nature serait sans doute suffisamment alambiquée pour s'avérer incompréhensible, ironise-t-il. Le porte-parole du Bureau du commissaire, William Galbraith, a indiqué hier que le CST disposait de mécanismes internes de vérification pour assurer le «bon usage» des systèmes de collecte de renseignements. Il a refusé de dire si ces systèmes étaient suffisamment efficaces pour éviter les abus. Toute déficience majeure à ce sujet serait signalée sous le sceau de la confidentialité au ministre de la Défense, puisqu'il s'agit de «systèmes classifiés», a-t-il précisé. La Presse a tenté en vain par ailleurs de savoir du CST si des employés avaient été sanctionnés pour des cas similaires à ceux survenus à la NSA. La Presse

Bill C-51 bars CSIS from committing 'bodily harm,' sexual violation

The government's proposed anti-terror legislation expands the powers of Canadian Security Intelligence Service to allow it to "disrupt" suspected terrorist threats — but it also expressly prohibits CSIS from killing or seriously injuring a subject. What's not clear exactly is where the line between those activities is drawn and what that means for the agency when it comes to interrogation techniques, experts on civil liberties and security point out. CBC News

The Harper Government Still Thinks CSE Is Acting Legally

The Canadian Government says that, despite conclusive evidence supplied by Edward Snowden, CSE is not breaking the rules. News broke on Jan. 28 that Communications Security Establishment Canada (CSE) was running a bulk data collection program targeting users of file sharing sites like Megaupload and Rapidshare, according to Snowden documents from 2012. That program caught Canadians in its web, according to the documents, which is something that CSE is forbidden from doing. But Rob Nicholson, the Minister for National Defence, says that as the minister in charge of CSE, he's not worried about it. "CSE has to abide, of course, by the rules, and the commissioner that has a look at this has confirmed that they have acted within Canadian law," Nicholson said the next day. When VICE pointed out that the documents, which were reported by CBC and The Intercept, appear to directly contradict that they were abiding by the rules, Nicholson was unfazed. "They [the CBC] may report, but all the information from the Privacy Commissioner is that they comply, and they have to comply with it." Nicholson likely meant the CSE Commissioner, who oversees the agency, not his privacy counterpart. But the agency has already allegedly broke its mandate in a questionable spying operation. VICE

Via Rail terror plot trial enters 3rd day in Toronto court

The trial of two men accused of planning a terror attack on a passenger train travelling between Canada and the U.S. enters its third day today in Toronto. Not guilty pleas have been entered for Raed Jaser and Chiheb Esseghaier on multiple terrorism-related charges. Court heard on Tuesday it was hoped the attack on a train travelling from New York to Toronto would kill scores of people and pave the way for more acts of terrorism. That's how it was characterized by Esseghaier in an audio recording of a conversation he had with an undercover FBI officer. Esseghaier is heard saying the attack targeted a train between the U.S. and Toronto to ensure both Americans and Canadians were victims. The undercover officer said he learned of the plot while driving from Montreal to Toronto with Esseghaier to meet Jaser. Esseghaier is heard imploring the officer to keep the plan a secret. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News interviewed former RCMP Deputy Commissioner P.Y. Bourduas regarding reports that the RCMP will oversee security operations on Parliament Hill. Rough Transcript

CBC News reported that the RCMP will oversee security operations on Parliament Hill. Rough Transcript

Broadcast media across Canada provided extensive media coverage of the RCMP laying terror charges against three Ottawa men, two of whom are believed to be in the Middle East and fighting on behalf of the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant. Awso Peshdary, 25, is the only one of the three who is in custody in Ottawa, police say; he is facing charges of participating in, conspiring to participate in and facilitating the activity of a terrorist group. (CHLK-FM, 6:03; CKAP-FM, 6:02; CBC Radio One, 6:07, 6:39, 9:01; 580 CFRA, 6:11, 8:31; Moose FM, 7:00; CIOK-FM, 8:03; CICS-FM, 8:03; AM 900 CHML, 9:03; CHLX-FM, 6:27; 550 CHLN-FM, 6:07; Radio-Canada Première Chaîne, 6:00, 6:30, 7:01, 8:00, 8:30, 9:31; CTV News, 6:06, 6:35, 9:06; Global News, 6:16, 6:33, 7:31; Citytv, 6:36, 7:31; CBC News, 6:32, 7:30, 9:09, 10:06, 11:00; Sun News, 10:02; LCN, 6:05, 7:38; RDI, 7:10, 8:33, 9:00, 10:04 ET)

Questions are being raised about the need for tougher antiterrorism legislation following news of the arrest in Ottawa. NDP MP Jack Harris says this case seems to show police already have the tools they need to catch suspected terrorists. Justice Minister Peter MacKay says legislation introduced by the government will give police greater tools to prevent terrorism and terror related offenses. (580 CFRA, 7:02 ET)

*The RCMP will take over operational command of all security on Parliament Hill, The Globe and Mail quotes a government source of the newspaper saying the RCMP will be solely accountable for protecting MPs and Senators and their staff and will be empowered to make decisions about all future security measures. (Newstalk 1010, 6:05; CJAD, 6:44; 98,5fm, 8:34; Radio-Canada Première Chaîne, 7:28, 7:54; CBC News, 9:03, 10:00, 10:18 ET)*

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Permits extended for Alberta's temporary foreign workers not exemptions, Kenney says

Federal Employment Minister Jason Kenney says Ottawa is willing to extend to other provinces the measures it has given Alberta for some of its temporary foreign workers. In a letter to Conservative MPs last week, Kenney says the federal government is giving a one-time exemption to temporary foreign workers in Alberta from being counted under the cap on low-wage workers, provided they meet strict criteria. National Post

CBSA facilitates Rainy River Customs processes 58854 travelers, 34045 vehicles

The Canada Border Services Agency (CBSA) facilitates the entry of legitimate travellers and goods, while protecting the safety and security of Canadians and ensuring that Canada's border is not used for illegal activity. This work is carried out by CBSA border services officers who ensure that the people, goods and conveyances entering Canada meet all requirements and are compliant with Canadian law. CBSA officers at the Fort Frances port of entry (POE) processed 58,854 travellers in 34,045 vehicles, which represents a four-percent decrease in travellers and a three-percent decrease in vehicles from December 2013. More than 238 international travellers entered by bus. Customs Today

Drunks, guns, one hiding man found at Manitoba border crossings in 2014

Guns, drugs and drunk drivers — all things you'd think people would avoid on a cross-border run — were among the Canadian Border Services Agency's highlights of 2014. At the U.S.-Manitoba border, officers seized 25 undeclared firearms, including 11 prohibited firearms, largely from U.S. citizens trying to come north during the summer. In July, a Florida man spent three days in jail and received a $13,000 fine for smuggling a prohibited and fully loaded .22 calibre revolver. In October, one man was sentenced to 21 days in jail and a $4,000 fine for concealing a 9mm handgun and 10 undeclared prohibited overcapacity magazines in his vehicle. A second man was sentenced to 12 days in jail and a $9,000 fine for attempting to smuggle a prohibited loaded .45 calibre handgun along with 11 undeclared magazines. Both men were from North Carolina. Six impaired drivers were arrested. An astonishing 1.5 kilograms of marijuana was seized from an Ontario woman last February, in addition to multiple other drug seizures. Winnipeg Sun

Brief history of Yarmouth-Maine ferry service

Nova Scotia has spent millions of dollars to keep the ferry service to the U.S. afloat in recent years. Here is a brief look at the history of the seasonal passenger service between Yarmouth, N.S., and Portland, Maine. Metro News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP want Canadian kids to help name 10 new pups

RCMP are once again looking across the country for help naming some furry and four-legged recruits who will serve with Canada's national police force. Police are asking children to submit names for ten German Shepherd puppies soon-to-be-born at the Police Dog Service Training Centre in Innisfail, Alberta. Kids are encouraged to be original and imaginative in finding names, but remember the names are for working dogs, not pets. Each submission must start with the letter 'H' and have no more than nine letters. Global News; Journal Pioneer

Mounties take down 'major' drug trafficking ring in Montreal area

The RCMP say they've taken down a major drug trafficking ring operating in the Montreal area and in Atlantic Canada. A total of 17 people were arrested in pre-dawn raids in the Montreal area this morning — including one person described as a chemist. They face a series of charges including gangsterism and drug trafficking. The Mounties say among those arrested were the group's main leaders, and key players forming the Silvano organized crime cell — linked to two other cells that were taken down in a roundup which took place in June 2014. CJAD; Canadian Press (580 CFRA, Winnipeg Free Press); CBC News; Montreal Gazette; QMI Agency (Sun News); La Presse; Agence QMI (Canoe.ca)

Kelowna RCMP investigate suspicious package on Lawrence Avenue

Kelowna RCMP have cordoned off a section of Lawrence Avenue following the discovery of a suspicious package. The package was found shortly after 7 a.m. on Wednesday, prompting officials to block Lawrence Avenue at Richter Street. The package, with wires sticking out of it, is just inside the gate of the parking lot of the British Columbia Dragoons barracks. The bomb squad from Vancouver has been called to the scene. Global News; Castanet.net; Kelowna Now

Ottawa police draft budget of $293.3M tabled by board, council

City council and the civilian body that oversees the Ottawa Police Service have received and tabled a draft force operating budget for the year that proposes a tax increase of 1.75 per cent, an approximate boost of $11 for the average residence. The proposed gross operating budget is $298.3 million, in line with city council's mandate to draft a budget that comes in under a two-per-cent tax increase. "This budget will allow the Ottawa Police to maintain service and will provide us with the policing tools we need to ensure we can meet expectations of citizens while ensuring our deployment model is efficient and effective," said police Chief Charles Bordeleau in a news release. The force has found $2.5 million in both cost-shaving measures and new revenues to offset operating costs. The budget includes no room for hiring additional officers, for which the chief and police board chair have faced union criticism. Ottawa Citizen

Ottawa police overtime costs for Oct. 22 shootings about $250K

Overtime costs amount to about $250,000 for the Ottawa police officers who worked the Oct. 22 shootings at the National War Memorial and Parliament Hill. Police Chief Charles Bordeleau said the force is working on a request for compensation from the federal government to cover the costs. "What we have done is we're seeking compensation for the costs incurred on Oct. 22 and [during] that investigation, which totals about ... $250,000," Bordeleau told reporters Wednesday following the presentation of the force's draft budget. The police service draft operating budget, the net operating budget rising to $269.9 million on a gross operating budget of $298.3 million, for a property tax increase of 1.75 per cent. CBC News

RCMP Detachment opens in Rawdon

The newest detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is officially open for business. While they have been operating out of the location at 3945 Highway 14 in Upper Rawdon for a couple of weeks, the official grand opening was held on January 29. In attendance was Commanding officer for the RCMP in NS, Assistant Commissioner Brian Brennan, District Commander for East Hants, Staff Sergeant Joe Murano, and Team Leader for the Rawdon Detachment Corporal, Ian Robinson. East Hants Warden Jim Smith along with councilors Eldon Hebb and Norval Mitchell were also in attendance. Corp. Robinson welcomed the assembled guests, and thanked the community for the warm welcome they had received so far. A prayer from Reverend LeBlanc asked for a blessing on all who would serve at the detachment. Assistant Commissioner Brian Brennan was the first to speak. Weekly Press

Over 500 movies stolen in central Alberta town

RCMP are searching for suspects after over 500 DVDs and Blu Rays were stolen in Rocky Mountain House on Saturday. Police say someone drilled off the lock on a Redbox video rental machine outside of a Sobey's grocery store, stealing 537 movies. All of the videos were in slim red cases; DVDs had a bar code. Global News

55-year-old woman dead in apparent homicide in Ladysmith

The Vancouver Island Integrated Major Crime Unit and the Ladysmith RCMP are currently investigating a suspicious death in Ladysmith. Police and paramedics were called to a home in the 10000-block of the Trans Canada Highway just after midnight on Feb. 3, after receiving a 9-1-1 call saying a group of people were fighting. When they arrived they found a 55-year-old woman from Ladysmith. Police say, despite efforts of first responders, the woman died at the scene. Investigators are treating her death as an apparent homicide. A 50-year-old man from Ladysmith, known to the deceased, was taken into custody. No charges have been laid at this time. "Investigators are in the very early stages of this investigation," says Cpl. Darren Lagan, spokesperson for the Vancouver Island RCMP. "While their investigation is in its infancy, there is no evidence to suggest there is any risk to the public." Global News; Times Colonist

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Radicalisation en prison : entrevue avec un imam

Y a-t-il des détenus qui se radicalisent dans les pénitenciers fédéraux? « Pas vu, mais le potentiel est là », estime Hamdi Ben Aissa, imam dans les prisons du fédéral au Québec depuis un an. Il croit que le système carcéral gagnerait à donner accès à plus d'imams, « bien formés » précise-t-il, pour désamorcer la frustration et déceler les signes de radicalisation. Il a discuté avec Hugo Lavoie. M. Ben Aissa est à l'emploi de la firme Kairos Pneuma Chaplaincy Inc., un sous-traitant du Service correctionnel du Canada, qui fournit des aumôniers de différentes confessions aux détenus fédéraux. Il y a actuellement 8 imams à temps partiel au Canada, dont seulement 2 au Québec, ce qui porte à environ 160 détenus de confession musulmane les visites potentielles de M. Ben Aissa. Il constate que les détenus musulmans sont frustrés par la couverture médiatique de l'islam et des moqueries dont ils font l'objet durant leur prière. Radio-Canada

Dangerous offender Robert Lionel Hatt denied parole

Almost seven years into his sentence, Robert Lionel Hatt, a convicted killer and child molester, is too dangerous to be released from prison. The Parole Board of Canada, in a recent decision, denied Hatt both day parole and full parole. "Your (Case Management Team) believes your risk is not manageable in the community at this time," the board wrote in a Jan. 26 decision. Hatt, 53, is a first-time federal offender jailed indefinitely for assault with a weapon. In 2008, a Dartmouth judge designated Hatt, also a convicted wife beater, a dangerous offender — meaning he'll remain behind bars until he's no longer considered a danger to the public. Chronicle-Herald

Educating Omar Khadr: 'Just doing what we do,' Christian university says

Taking in former Guantanamo Bay inmate and government-branded terrorist Omar Khadr as a student would dovetail perfectly with how King's University sees itself, the school says. The small Christian-principled university in Edmonton, which has developed a relationship with the prisoner over the past six years, has offered admission as part of Khadr's bail application. "This completely matches what we're about: Our mission is about inspiring and educating learners to be agents of reconciliation and renewal," Dan VanKeeken, the school's vice-president, said in an interview in Toronto this week. "We don't have a position on Omar. We're just doing what we do." Khadr, 28, pleaded guilty in 2010 before a widely maligned U.S. military commission to five war crimes he was accused of committing as a 15-year-old in Afghanistan in July 2002. He is now serving out the rest of his eight-year sentence in Bowden, Alta., as a medium security prisoner. He is applying for bail — to be heard in March — pending an appeal of his conviction based on U.S. legal rulings that what he did was not a war crime under either international or American law. Canadian Press (Brandon Sun, Mississauga News)

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

The federal government will delay parole eligibility for a decade or more beyond the current 25 years for some murderers, backing off a plan to make life truly mean life in prison by denying some convicted killers any hope of parole. (Newstalk 1010, 6:05 ET)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

SUMA calls for missing, murdered aboriginal women inquiry

Delegates at the annual Saskatchewan Urban Municipalities Association (SUMA) conference want an inquiry held into missing and murdered aboriginal women. A substantial majority voted in favour of the resolution Tuesday at the conference taking place in Saskatoon. In Saskatchewan, aboriginal women make up 55 per cent of all homicide victims. Monica Burns, 28, is the latest victim. Burns, who lived in Prince Albert but was from the Sturgeon Lake First Nation, was found dead on a snowmobile trail in a remote area northwest of the city on Jan. 17. SUMA's vote adds to growing calls from across the country calling on the federal government to hold an inquiry. The motion was put forward by North Battleford city council. Global News, Radio-Canada (2014-02-03)

Athletes fight domestic violence with new public service announcement

It's a simple message: "Never, ever lay your hand on a woman." Bruno Heppell, Georges Laraques and Chris Nilan have come together in a new public service announcement to condemn violence against women. The campaign was led by the Shield of Athena, a nonprofit organization that helps battered women and children rebuild their lives. Global Montreal also played a part — its creative team helped produce the video. "We want to have men involved in the fight against violence against women, so this is extension of that," said Melpa Kamateros, Executive Director of the Shield of Athena. The PSA was unveiled at the Guzzo Theatre Marche Central. It will be broadcast in both French and English before every movie, and at all Guzzo cinemas. Global News

'Tough' guys tackle violence against women

Getting men to talk about it is the first and, dare it be said, "toughest" step. Domestic abuse is the delicate topic of discussion; a talking point that a Richmond-based organization is challenging men to take ownership of. As part of Chimo's aptly-named "BC's Toughest Men" campaign, which was launched over the Super Bowl weekend, several of the province's perceived "hard men" are lending their voices to the issue. Richmond News

BUDGET PRÉLIMINAIRE 8 millions $ de plus pour le Service de police d'Ottawa

Le Service de police d'Ottawa a déposé son budget préliminaire aujourd'hui pour l'année 2015. Le budget prévu est de 269,9 millions de dollars, une hausse de 8 millions par rapport à 2014. Ça représentera une augmentation de 11 dollars par année pour un foyer moyen. Les gangs de rue et la violence faite aux femmes sont parmi les priorités du Service de police. Rouge FM

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Canada Muslims Defend Faith Against Terror

Recent terror charges against some Ottawa Muslims have sent alarm bells among members of the religious minority, rejecting those charged for giving their peaceful religion a bad image in the Canadian society. "We believe they are not Muslims and are abusing the name of Islam, our teachings are based on love and saving lives. We are told to be people of compassion and love," Syed Zaidi, a Muslim leader in Ottawa, told Toronto Sun. "We love this country, and we need to give positive energies to the community," he added. Like other Ottawa Muslims, Zaidi was affected by the latest terror-related charges issued on Tuesday against Ottawa's Khadar Khalib, John Maguire and Awso Peshdary. For them, the arrested members of the community would not be allowed to define their faith. "It's becoming very painful to watch, "It makes me feel sick because they're brainwashed," Zaidi said. "Things are deteriorating somehow. We need to design a system with our government so our youth aren't brainwashed," he explained. Adam Gilani, the former president of the Muslim Student Association at the University of Ottawa, said the recent arrests were a result of fruitful cooperation between Muslims and security authorities. On Islam

Peter Greste, Mohamed Fahmy's colleague at Al-Jazeera, returns to Australia

An Al-Jazeera reporter who spent more than a year in an Egyptian prison returned home to Australia on Thursday, where he was greeted by friends and relieved family members who had tirelessly campaigned for his release. Peter Greste, 49, who was released on Sunday after 400 days behind bars in a case widely condemned as a sham by human rights activists, landed in the Queensland state capital of Brisbane early Thursday morning after spending the past two days recuperating in Cyprus. Supporters held up signs at the airport saying, "Journalism is not a crime." "I can't tell you how ecstatic I am to be here," Greste told reporters. "This is a moment I've rehearsed in my mind at least 400 times over the past, well, 400 days. But this is all tempered ... by real worries for my colleagues." The fate of Greste's still-jailed Egyptian colleagues remains unknown. Egyptian-Canadian Mohammed Fahmy and Egyptian Baher Mohammed were arrested along with Greste in 2013 over their coverage of the violent crackdown on Islamist protests following the military overthrow of President Mohammed Morsi. iPolitics

INTERNATIONAL

ISIS Has Killed 50 Captives In Syria This Year, Monitor Says

Islamic State has killed 50 people this year in Syria who it accused of insulting God, spying or being enemy fighters, including a Jordanian pilot it burned alive, a monitoring group said on Wednesday. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said the ultra hardline group killed them mainly through beheadings and shootings. Reuters (Huffington Post)

Jordan executes 2 al-Qaeda prisoners after ISIS kills captured pilot

Jordan executed two al-Qaeda prisoners before dawn Wednesday, just hours after an online video purported to show Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) militants burning a captured Jordanian pilot to death in a cage. The gruesome death of 26-year-old Lt. Muath Al-Kaseasbeh, captured while participating in airstrikes by a U.S.-led coalition targeting the militants, sparked outrage across the Middle East and anti-Islamic State group demonstrations in Jordan. The pilot's father called on the government to avenge his son, and officials threatened a tough response, as King Abdullah II, a staunch Western ally, rushed back to his kingdom from Washington. Associated Press (CBC News)

Passenger plane clips bridge in Taipei, smashes into river and leaves at least 25 dead

Rescuers used a crane to hoist a wrecked TransAsia Airways plane from a shallow river in Taiwan's capital late Wednesday as they searched into the night for 18 people missing in a crash that killed at least 25 others. Flight GE235 with 58 people aboard — most of them travellers from China — banked sharply on its side shortly after takeoff from Taipei, clipped a highway bridge and then careened into the Keelung River. Rescuers in rubber rafts pulled 15 people out alive from the wreckage during daylight. After dark, they brought in the crane, and the death toll was expected to rise once crews were able to search through previously submerged portions of the fuselage, which came to rest a few dozen metres from the shore. Speculation cited in local media said the pilot may have turned sharply to follow the line of the river to avoid crashing into a high-rise residential area, but Taiwan's aviation authority said it had no evidence of that. Taiwanese broadcasters repeatedly played a recording of the plane's final contact with the control tower in which the pilot called out "Mayday" three times. The recording offered no direct clues as to why the plane was in distress. Associated Press (The Province); Wall Street Journal; AFP (L'Obs); Reuters (Canoe.ca)

France and Canada sign defence agreements

French Minister of Defence Jean-Yves Le Drian and Canada's Defence Minister Rob Nicholson have signed a Memorandum of Understanding to allow the Canadian and French Armed Forces to facilitate a reciprocal exchange of senior military officers at the Canadian Forces College in Toronto and the French École de guerre and Centre des hautes études militaires in Paris. In addition, a technical arrangement to establish a Franco-Canadian Defence Cooperation was signed. That, according to the DND news release, will further strengthen high-level defence dialogue between Canada and France, and enhance defence and security cooperation on a range of priorities. OttawaCitizen.com

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PostmediaNews

Undercover RCMP informant infiltrated a suspected ISIS recruiting network in Ottawa,... <http://ow.ly/lurzu> via @nationalpost

globeandmail

RCMP to take over security on Parliament Hill: @stevenchase <http://trib.al/5ArDPos> #cdnpoli

globalnews

Global News has learned the #RCMP is set to take over #ParliamentHill security <http://gln.ca/ltlgf> #CdnPoli

crimegarden

Terrorism accused Khadar Khalib counselled Abdullah Milton between April and Dec/ 2014 in Syria and Iraq to wage terror: RCMP say #ottnews

jpress

RCMP to take lead on protecting Parliament Hill under security shakeup <http://ottawacitizen.com/news/politics/rcmp-to-take-lead-on-protecting-parliament-hill-under-security-shakeup/> ... #cdnpoli #ottnews #ottawashooting

PostmediaNews

RCMP to decide how to protect Parliament Hill under security shakeup <http://ow.ly/luftl> via @OttawaCitizen

hscoffield

Ending a century-old tradition, RCMP set to take over security in Parliament Buildings ow.ly/lug4a via @StephanieLevitz #cdnpoli

CBCNews

RCMP takes security reins on Parliament Hill <http://ift.tt/1zRQjbc>

accessd

The government's anti-terror bill gives up liberty for a little security. Do we deserve either? <http://natpo.st/1F5tlfP> #cdnpoli

SunNewsNetwork

WATCH & READ: Latest Canadian terror suspect linked to others: RCMP <http://ow.ly/ltl3N>

vicecanada

The Harper Government Still Thinks CSE Is Acting Legally: <http://bit.ly/1BUvnfe>

SunNewsNetwork

#BREAKING - The trial of two men accused of plotting to derail a Via Rail train has learned they planned to kill ex-Toronto Mayor Rob Ford.

MandelSun

Agent says Jaser also said: "we may be viewed as extreme and radical. The thing is, we are." Jaser has denied any terrorist activities.

MandelSun

Agent says Jaser told him he had a sniper plot to kill government leaders incl TO mayor (Rob Ford at the time) because little security

MandelSun

Jaser said TO mayor was easy to assassinate because he takes the subway: FBI agent

CBCAlerts

#Ottawa terror suspect ordered not to communicate with more than a dozen potential witnesses. Awso #Peshdary stays in jail, to appear Feb 9.

CBCAlertsnow

More @CBCNews on #Ottawa terror suspect's 1st court appearance. Also #Peshdary ordered held, to reappear Feb 9. <http://cbc.ca/1.2944557>

KatieSimpsonCTV

Peshdary will remain in custody until Monday. He's scheduled to return to court then. Long list of people he can't communicate with.

globalnews

Via Rail terror suspect said 'we are being watched,' trial hears <http://bit.ly/112etE3>

ldebacher

Peshdary

La juge croit que la Couronne a raison d'imposer cette liste de 14 personnes à ne pas communiquer.

Fin de la comparution #ledroit

jasonfekete

Trudeau says the Liberals will vote in favour of the Conservatives' new anti-terrorism bill

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBCOttawa

VIDEO | Ex CBSA investigator shows us how easy it is to hide a gun in a car facebook.com/video.php?v=10...
#cbcOTT #OTTnews pic.twitter.com/x3JeGp64ZK

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

AM1150

RCMP have cordoned off section of downtown #Kelowna this morning. Reports of a suspicious package. Bomb squad en route from #Vancouver.

KelownaNow

#Vancouver Bomb Squad Called to #Kelowna for Suspicious Package kelownanow.com/watercooler/ne...

ChrisWalkerCBC

Military official says rcmp bomb squad en route to deal w suspicious pkg inside BC dragoons armoury in #kelowna pic.twitter.com/Hb1am90S0P

nationalpost

Vancouver RCMP now patrolling trails to keep nature lovers from attacking each other <http://natpo.st/1KchfUM>

grcrmpolice

La #GRC embauche! Apprenez-en plus sur les carrières à la GRC. #recrutementgrc <http://grc.ca/-a64>

GlobalCalgary

RCMP want Canadian kids to help name 10 new pups: bit.ly/1zK6whq #Cute

CBCCalgary

RCMP puppies to be named through contest for kids cbc.ca/news/canada/ca...

sidhartha_b

Drug traffickers in Quebec mixed cocaine with asphalt powder to hide drugs: RCMP:

http://www.winnipegfreepress.com/canada/drug-traffickers-mixed-cocaine-with-asphalt-powder-to-hide-drugs-rcmp-290786971.html?cx_navSource=d-more-news...

mtlgazette

Gazette Midday: RCMP busts cocaine ring linked to Montreal mafia <http://bit.ly/111Fs5>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Perkel

Educating Omar Khadr: 'I hope the government doesn't intervene and foment that fear' <http://j.mp/1zfQcUY> #cdnpoli

globeandmail

Ottawa to delay parole eligibility for convicted killers: @seanfineglobe <http://trib.al/k5fHkI9> #cdnpoli

INTERNATIONAL

BBCBreaking

Jordan to "intensify efforts" to "undermine, degrade & eventually finish" Islamic State militants after pilot killed
<http://bbc.in/1z9K7F3>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
February 6, 2015 / le 6 février 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Blaney says privacy rights won't be trampled in terror fight

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney says the privacy rights of Canadians will be respected under new anti-terrorism legislation that would allow more information-sharing with the United States. Blaney has been discussing security issues in London with U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson and ministerial counterparts from Britain, Australia and New Zealand. He and Johnson talked about strengthening bilateral information exchanges, including case-specific sharing on citizens suspected of terrorism-related activity. Blaney says he pointed out that the new bill would allow sharing of information from Canada's no-fly list with close allies. But the minister says that doesn't mean handing U.S. officials the full list of people suspected of being a threat to the skies. Blaney says only information about high-risk travellers would be shared under a memorandum of understanding that respects Canadian privacy law. Canadian Press (iPolitics); Presse canadienne (La Presse)

Conservatives have lost his vote

A letter to the editor states "Editor: As long as I can remember, I have been supporting the Reform/Alliance/Conservative Party of Canada. I've always voted for fine men such as Randy White and Mark Warawa. Although I see some value in socialism, the free enterprise system just makes more sense to me. Therefore I always vote right-of-centre. But that has now changed. I will not be voting Conservative in the next federal election. This government has continued to refuse to deal with the situation of an outstanding member of society, Jose Figueroa. He is still in sanctuary at the Walnut Grove Lutheran Church after one and one-half years. The Canada Border Services Agency has still not dropped the arrest warrant against Figueroa, but continues to perform surveillance of the church parking lot. The deportation order has not been cancelled, despite a Federal Court ruling in his favour. This government, particularly the ministers responsible — Steven Blaney (Minister of Public Safety), and Chris Alexander (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) — have the power to override the decision and right the situation for the Figueroa family. They have been silent, ignoring the cries of the family and public." Langley Times

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

CBC News' Power and Politics featured an interview with Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney on anti-terror legislation and security on Parliament Hill. Rough Transcript

CTV News interviewed Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney from London regarding terrorism, Bill C-51 and meeting with his national security counterparts. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Banff avalanche sweeps away climber on military training exercises - Bad weather and dangers of more avalanches causing ground search delays

A missing climber in Banff National Park was on a winter training exercise with the Canadian military, CBC News has confirmed. A military spokesperson said the man is a Royal Canadian Air Force search and rescue technician from 17 Wing in Winnipeg. The man was swept away in an avalanche Thursday night, but rescue crews can't get to him because of the weather and the danger of more avalanches. An aerial search is underway but there has been no sign of the climber who disappeared while on the Polar Circus, a popular route near the Weeping Wall area of the park. "[We are] looking for any clues from the air, so anything on the surface that might give an indication as to where this person might be," said Tania Peters, a spokesperson with Parks Canada. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Muslim student group faces scrutiny after arrests

The trial of alleged terrorist recruiter Awso Peshdary promises to turn a spotlight on the Algonquin College Muslim Students Association. Two of the three people charged this week with terrorism-related offences by the RCMP — Peshdary, 25, and Khader Khalib, 23 — are both former members of the association and took part in its events. Khalib was charged in absentia because it's believed the former Algonquin business student is now fighting on behalf of the Islamic State in Syria. After Peshdary was arrested Tuesday by the RCMP, the Crown sought and received a non-communication order from an Ottawa justice of the peace. Such orders are normally used to prevent an accused person from communicating with victims and witnesses. The order prohibits Peshdary from communicating with a list of 14 people. The list includes the names of five other people — Khalib, John Maguire, Ashton Larmond, Carlos Larmond and Suliman Mohamed — whom the RCMP have identified as members of the alleged conspiracy to aid a terrorist group. The non-contact list issued by the court also includes the names of three executives from Algonquin's Muslim Students Association, and at least one other former MSA member. Ottawa Citizen

Accused terrorists considered blowing up bridge, court hears

Two alleged terror plotters considered blowing up a rail bridge in southern Ontario after hitting a setback in their original plan to derail a Via Rail train travelling from New York to Toronto, their trial heard Friday. Raed Jaser and Chiheb Esseghaier face multiple terror-related charges in the alleged scheme that culminated in their arrest in April 2013. Not-guilty pleas have been entered for both. In recordings played at their trial on Friday, Jaser is heard telling an undercover FBI officer that they initially meant to weaken the bridge with jackhammers but found the structure too solid during a recent reconnaissance mission. Canadian Press (CP24; Globe and Mail)

Imam calls for national inquiry into radicalization

A prominent Canadian imam has called on the federal government to launch a national inquiry into the radicalization of young Muslim men in this country. Imam Syed Soharwardy, founder of the Islamic Supreme Council of Canada, said he's concerned that impressionable young people are falling prey to shadowy recruiters selling a false interpretation of Islam. Ottawa Citizen

Liberals support handing control of Hill security to RCMP

The federal Liberals say they'll support the Conservative government's plan to put the RCMP in charge of Parliament Hill security, but the NDP says the plan is "irresponsible" and wants to keep security under Parliament's wing. On Friday, MPs debated a Conservative motion to have the RCMP lead an integrated operational security team for the entire parliamentary precinct. The NDP says that would strip ultimate authority from Parliament and its separate Commons and Senate security forces. The New Democrats tabled an amendment calling for a fully integrated security force throughout the parliamentary precinct and on Parliament Hill, but maintaining "the ultimate authority of the Speakers of the Senate and House of Commons over access and security of Parliament." The government's plan, which surprised parliamentarians this week, would see one Mountie oversee protection of the grounds and buildings on Parliament Hill, with a transition team redrawing security plans for the precinct. Ottawa Citizen

NDP counter motion on Hill security with one of their own

New Democrats have countered the government's effort to put the RCMP in charge of policing Parliament with a motion of their own, one that would protect the "the ultimate authority" of the House and Senate speakers to control access and security on Parliament Hill. Introduced by NDP Whip Nycole Turmel Friday morning with several dozen guards visible in the House to hear, the new motion calls on the speakers to "prepare and execute, without delay," a plan to integrate the work of all agencies that provide operational security on and around Parliament Hill. The NDP motion also has the support of the Green party, with both cautioning that anything less would border on unconstitutional. The original motion put forward by government whip John Duncan would see control of security in the House of Commons and Senate, traditionally independent of government oversight, go to the RCMP. The president of the association representing Hill security was quoted by NDP House leader Peter Julian, saying the original proposal is, "in the view of the association, an indefensible and dangerous interference of government into the independent legislative function, as well as a solid breach into one of the fundamental pillars of our democratic system, the principle of separation of powers." Julian himself said that if the government were serious about working with the Opposition on improving security in Parliament and respecting the autonomy of the security forces, they would have put forward a motion similar to what the NDP ultimately did. iPolitics.ca

Complot terroriste contre VIA Rail: les coaccusés voulaient faire sauter un pont

Les deux hommes accusés d'avoir comploté pour faire dérailler un train de VIA Rail ont songé à faire sauter un pont ferroviaire pour arriver à leurs fins, a-t-on entendu vendredi au procès. Raed Jaser et Chiheb Esseghaier ont plaidé non coupables aux nombreuses accusations liées au terrorisme qui pèsent contre eux. Dans des enregistrements entendus vendredi à leur procès, à Toronto, Raed Jaser explique à un agent d'infiltration de la police fédérale américaine (FBI) que Chiheb Esseghaier et lui voulaient à l'origine affaiblir un pont ferroviaire entre New York et Toronto à l'aide d'un marteau pneumatique, mais ils ont ensuite estimé que la structure était trop solide. Ils ont alors songé à utiliser plutôt un chalumeau industriel, ou tout simplement à faire sauter le pont ferroviaire. Ces conversations ont été enregistrées à leur insu par l'agent du FBI se faisant passer pour un riche homme d'affaires américain aux idées radicales, qui avait gagné l'amitié des coaccusés. La Presse Canadienne (La Presse); Radio-Canada; Canadian Press (Global News)

From JMag to Jihad John: the radicalization of John Maguire

Ottawa's John Maguire understood that his enlistment as a foot soldier in the Islamic State would confound his friends, family and countrymen. So in his now infamous video, a six-minute screed in which he called upon Canadian Muslims to launch new attacks on their native soil, Maguire, 24, addressed his own unlikely radicalization. Released in early December, the video showed him in a shattered Syrian town, wrapped in a keffiyeh with a Kalashnikov rifle at his side. He spoke with strident conviction and careful enunciation. "I was one of you: I was a typical Canadian," said Maguire, who styled himself Abu Anwar al-Canadi. "I grew up on the hockey rink and spent my teenage years on stage playing guitar. "I had no criminal record. I was a bright student and maintained a strong GPA in university. So how could one of your people end up in my place? And why is it that your own people are the ones turning against you at home? The answer is we have accepted the true call of the prophets and the messengers of God." The video today serves as Maguire's last testament: the former University of Ottawa business student was reportedly killed in fighting near Kobani, on the Syrian-Turkish border, last month. He leaves behind a shattered family and a host of questions, including the one raised in his propaganda video: How could one of us become one of them? How could a young Canadian, who converted to Islam only five years ago, become so radicalized so quickly? Who convinced him that the West was at war with his religion? What motivated him to join the Islamic State's barbaric cult? Canadian authorities are urgently pursuing answers to those questions as they seek to stanch the flow of young men to the battlefields of Syria. Maguire will never return to Ottawa, but the strange story he authored here deserves careful reading by all those who would ensure it's not repeated. Ottawa Citizen

Une école islamique suspendue d'un cégep

Le Collège Rosemont suspend les activités d'une école islamique qui lui louait des classes la fin de semaine. Notre Bureau d'enquête vient d'informer la direction que l'école publiait des liens vers des textes intégristes sur son site Internet. « Nous allons prendre des mesures immédiates pour suspendre les activités de cette école-là », dit le directeur général du cégep, Stéphane Godbout... Le cégep fait déjà tout en son pouvoir pour éviter et comprendre la radicalisation des jeunes, assure Habib El Hage, intervenant social au Collège. Il ne croit pas que l'établissement soit un incubateur à radicaux, mais il a néanmoins demandé à la GRC de venir former le personnel pour savoir y faire face. Journal de Montréal

Mere oversight won't fix Tory surveillance bill: Geist

An opinion piece states, "The past 10 days have been a difficult time for Canadians concerned with privacy and civil liberties. Strike one came with new Edward Snowden revelations regarding Canada's role in the daily tracking of the Internet activities of millions. Strike two was the introduction of Bill C-51, the anti-terrorism legislation, which sparked concern from observers across the country. Strike three came with the response to those developments, with the government dismissing oversight mechanisms as "red tape" and the opposition parties choosing to focus on process rather than substance. The opposition parties' decision to focus on oversight is unsurprising given the weakness of the current system and the absence of any meaningful reforms within the proposed legislation. Yet the problem with focusing chiefly on oversight and is that it leaves the substantive law (in the case of CSE Internet surveillance) or proposed law (as in the case of C-51) largely unaddressed. If Canada fails to examine the shortcomings within the current law or within Bill C-51, there is no amount of accountability, oversight, or review that will restore the harm to privacy and civil liberties." Toronto Star

Unified command for Parliament security is long overdue

An editorial states "It took an armed attack on Parliament Hill to prompt the change, but the heart of our democracy will soon be protected by a proper security force under unified command. The change was proposed this week and it comes not a moment too soon. The attack on Oct. 22 highlighted the heroism of security officials on the Hill (former sergeant-at-arms Kevin Vickers being only the most heralded). But it also exposed obvious weaknesses in the system meant to protect Parliament. In fact, the security response was by all appearances a shambles. A lone gunman managed to assassinate Cpl. Nathan Cirillo at the National War Memorial and then run unchallenged to the main door of Parliament, brandishing a rifle all the way. He was able to force his way into the building and terrorize politicians — including the prime minister — before being shot dead. Security officials frankly told the Star's Tonda McCharles at the time that 'we were f---ing lucky' the damage was not much worse. We mustn't depend on luck to ensure the safety of our national leaders. There should be an effective, accountable and unified security system for Parliament and its surroundings." Toronto Star

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Canadian veteran who fought ISIS in Iraq reveals his near-death — and surprise return home

Dillon Hillier sat at the kitchen table in his family's stone farmhouse at the end of a long driveway. His mother poured coffee. His father fed the wood stove. Out the windows, the sun glared off snowy fields as clean and bright as a blank sheet of paper. It was winter heaven but Mr. Hillier didn't really want to be back in Lanark County, "Maple Syrup Capital of Canada." He still wanted to be in northern Iraq, where he had just spent two months putting his military skills to use, sticking it to ISIS. "I went there planning on a much longer trip," he said. "And the political climate did not allow me to stay any longer." A veteran of the Canadian Forces, Mr. Hillier landed in Iraq in November and fought alongside the Kurdish peshmerga, motivated to volunteer by the October attacks in Ontario and Quebec and the unseemly flow of radicalized Canadians into the ISIS ranks... He flew back the way he'd come, through Doha and London. He was sure he was in for a grilling at Canadian customs at the airport in Toronto. He was upfront with the Canada Border Services Agency officer, admitting he had been in Iraq fighting with the peshmerga. But he said he was simply asked if he had any alcohol or tobacco to declare and waved through. National Post

CBSA says more than 11 kg of suspected cocaine found in bags at Pearson

The Canada Border Services Agency says more than 11 kilograms of suspected cocaine has been seized at Toronto's Pearson International Airport following a flight from Curacao. The agency says the seizure happened Jan. 30 when officers were watching baggage being unloaded from a flight from the southern Caribbean country. A detector dog was brought in and the border agency says the animal indicated to two suitcases. It's alleged that upon further inspection of the suitcases, officers discovered 11 bricks containing a substance that field tested positive for suspected cocaine. Daily Courier

Bridge plaza funding doesn't matter

A column states "Some of us are far too obsessed with who pays for the customs plaza on the U.S. side of the new bridge between Windsor and Detroit. How the Americans pay for it or when they pay for it is immaterial - although Canadians would have a right to be outraged if our tolls also help pay for the U.S. half of their highway infrastructure. But that's not likely. Tolls could be set at $5 for vehicles with Canadian plates, and $5.25 for U.S. registrations, to pay for their plaza. We'll cross that bridge, literally, if and when we come to it. Otherwise, how and when the Yanks pay for a big parking lot in southwest Detroit doesn't matter a bit. Who cares in which year the funding for the plaza officially flows for political and bookkeeping purposes? The reality is, it doesn't matter when or even if the funding comes through for the U.S. plaza, which won't be in use until approximately 2020 anyway." Windsor Star

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Anthem cautions about scam emails seeking personal data after hack of its customer records

After a huge hack, Anthem is warning about "phishing" scam emails that are targeting people it insures or has insured in the past. The company behind Blue Cross Blue Shield insurance this week said hackers accessed records of about 80 million people, including their names, Social Security numbers and email addresses. Anthem Inc. said Friday that the scam emails did not come from Anthem, but are meant to look like they do. The emails instruct individuals to click on a link for credit monitoring services. Anthem, which is the country's second-biggest insurer, told individuals that they should not click on any links in suspicious emails as well as to not open attachments or reply to the emails. Anthem said that it will send physical mail through the U.S. Postal Service with information on how to sign up for credit monitoring. CharlottetownGuardian.ca

Cyber-attacks on the rise against state computers in Utah, NSA data centre likely the target

Utah state officials have seen what they describe as a sharp uptick in attempts to hack into state computers in the last two years, and they think it related to the NSA data centre south of Salt Lake City. The increase began in early 2013 as international attention focused on the NSA's $1.7 billion warehouse to store massive amounts of information gathered secretly from phone calls and emails. "In the cyber world, that's a big deal," Utah Public Safety Commissioner Keith Squires told a state legislative committee this week. While most of the attempts are likely innocuous, cyber experts say it is possible low-level hackers, "hactivists" unhappy with the NSA's tactics, and some foreign criminal groups might erroneously think the state systems are linked to the NSA. Associated Press (Winnipeg Free Press)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Plan for RCMP to run Parliament Hill security sparks NDP counter-proposal

New Democrats have made a counter-proposal to the government's push to put RCMP in charge of policing Parliament Hill, one that would enshrine "the ultimate authority" of the House and Senate speakers to control access and security within the parliamentary precinct. The proposed amendment, introduced by NDP Whip Nycole Turmel Friday morning, calls on the two speakers to "prepare and execute, without delay," a plan to integrate the work of all agencies that provide operational security on and around Parliament Hill. CBC News

Incident involving 'missing snowmobilers' confirmed as hoax

A report of missing and possibly injured snowmobilers that sent numerous rescuers on a lengthy search has been confirmed as a hoax, Saskatchewan RCMP said. RCMP said Friday that a multi-hour search involving numerous people had to be done after a resident of the Carrot River area received a call Jan. 31 from someone named "Cassandra" who said she had crashed her snowmobile into a tree near the town. CBC News

Man arrested after death threats emailed to federal politician

Toronto police have laid charges against a 51-year-old man after five people around the province – including a federal politician – received threatening and harassing emails and phone calls. In a news release Friday, police said the suspect has been "continually calling and harassing people via telephone." Police also said the suspect emailed death threats and hate propaganda to a number of people. CP24

Mike Duffy's lawyer says no deal as trial preparation begins - Suspended senator faces 31 criminal charges, including fraud, breach of trust and bribery

Two months before Mike Duffy's trial is set to begin, his lawyer says there is no deal in the works for the suspended senator. There has been speculation in Ottawa this week that a plea deal was being arranged and Duffy was considering accepting it. But Duffy's lawyer, Donald Bayne, quashed those rumours Friday. "Absolutely untrue. Senator Duffy is not interested in any deal," Bayne said in an email to CBC News. The RCMP laid 31 charges against Duffy last July, including 15 counts of fraud totalling more than $200,000, 15 counts of breach of trust and one count of bribery. CBC News

Judge says Kelowna RCMP were ignorant when broadcasting strip search

The Kelowna RCMP says its reviewing how it handles strip searches following a recent provincial court ruling. Judge Ellen Burdett says Kelowna Mounties demonstrated an ignorance of a 14-year-old law by videotaping and monitoring a strip search of repeat drug offender Madison Fine in February of 2014. According to court documents, Fine was arrested and charged with possession of cocaine and heroin for the purpose of trafficking. However, no one told her she was being recorded and broadcast to a room where guards and officers monitor the cells when she was asked to remove her shirt, pants and underwear. She was attended by a female Mountie and a female guard. Kelowna RCMP Spokesperson Kris Clark wouldn't say if their procedures have now changed because of the court ruling that was handed down two weeks ago. AM 1150

RCMP death prompts Edmonton police to reconsider officers at bail hearings

Lawyers, not police, should be handling bail hearings, say Edmonton police after a Mountie was shot and killed by a career criminal who had been released. "Most citizens expect that police officers will do police work and lawyers will do legal work," acting deputy chief Deb Jolly said in a release Friday. "That's just not happening in justice of the peace bail hearings." It was at a hearing involving officers that career criminal Shawn Rehn was released on $4,500 bail. While free, Rehn shot and killed RCMP Const. David Wynn and severely wounded an RCMP police volunteer as they investigated a routine stolen vehicle complaint in St. Albert north of Edmonton last month. Canadian Press (Westman Journal); QMI Agency (Sun News Network)

RCMP treating Oxford House toddler death as homicide

RCMP say they are treating the death of a toddler on Oxford House First Nation as a homicide after the child died earlier this week. The two-year-old boy was transported to Winnipeg from the Manitoba First Nation on Jan. 31 suffering from life-threatening injuries. The boy died of his injuries four days later in a Winnipeg hospital. Authorities continue to investigate. RCMP confirmed they are treating the case as a homicide. The name of the boy won't be released. No more details are available at this time. CBC News

Man faces criminal negligence charges in New Brunswick python case, lawyer says

The lawyer for the man arrested in connection with the deaths of two New Brunswick boys killed by a python says his client faces two charges of criminal negligence causing death. Leslie Matchim says Jean-Claude Savoie has yet to be charged but will appear in court in Campbellton, N.B., on April 27 to face those charges. Matchim says Savoie was arrested Thursday in Montreal and released from custody. He says the nature of the charges is disheartening but Savoie is holding up well. Four-year-old Noah Barthe and his six-year-old brother Connor were found dead on Aug. 5, 2013, after an African rock python escaped its enclosure inside Savoie's apartment in Campbellton, where they were staying for a sleepover. The RCMP said at the time that the 45-kilogram snake escaped a glass tank through a vent and slithered through a ventilation pipe, but its weight caused the pipe to collapse and it fell into the living room where the boys were sleeping. Daily Courier

Arrest in Shamattawa homicide

Police have made an arrest in a Shamattawa homicide. RCMP were called to a reported stabbing Feb. 4 in the northern Manitoba community. They found Louis Crane, 65, dead inside a home. Frank Thomas, 38 and of Shamattawa, has been charged with second-degree murder for his alleged involvement. He has been remanded in custody and will be appearing in Thompson Provincial Court on February 9, 2015. The victim and accused were known to each other, RCMP say. Winnipeg Sun; CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

NIL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

B.C. government to use proceeds of crime to fight domestic violence

Premier Christy Clark says her government is diverting money from "the bad guys" to their victims as the province upgrades its strategy towards ending violence against women. The province will apportion $3 million in civil forfeiture funds this year to pay for a new Domestic Violence Unit in Surrey, local support services and an awareness campaign. The government says more than 12,300 instances of intimate-partner violence were reported to police in 2013, while 113 woman died as a result of domestic violence in the past decade. The new "Violence Free B.C." strategy will also boost prevention programs in schools, develop a provincial sexual assault policy and improve culturally-appropriate job programs for aboriginal women who are rebuilding their lives after experiencing violence. Clark says the province is also committed to fulfilling recommendations from the Missing Women's Inquiry, although she said she didn't want to criticize the RCMP for reducing the number of officers on an investigative task force. Vancouver Sun; Surrey Now

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

Un fonctionnaire fédéral sur cinq se dit harcelé au travail

Près d'un fonctionnaire fédéral sur cinq dit avoir été victime de harcèlement au travail au cours des deux dernières années, révèle un sondage publié par le Secrétariat du Conseil du Trésor du Canada. Radio-Canada

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

ISIS claims U.S. hostage killed in Jordan airstrike

The Jordanian military has struck hard at ISIS targets in Syria, parts of its efforts to avenge the death of one of its pilots. But did it end up killing an American hostage in the process? That's what ISIS said in an online posting Friday, claiming that a female American it was holding captive had died in a Jordanian airstrike on ISIS's de facto capital, Raqqa. The posting included a picture of a collapsed building that ISIS claimed the woman was being held in. But it did not show her or provide any proof of her death. Jordanian Interior Minister Hussein Majali swiftly and firmly knocked down the report, calling it another "PR stunt" by ISIS. The American's family on Friday identified her as Kayla Mueller, a Prescott, Arizona, native taken captive in 2013 in Aleppo, Syria, while leaving a Doctors Without Borders hospital. The family communicated through a spokeswoman. CNN

Robot ready to explore Fukushima nuclear remains

A snake-like robot designed to examine the inside of one of three melted reactors at the Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant is ready to begin its expedition. Assessing the damage inside the reactors is a crucial step in the decommissioning of the plant, which was badly damaged by a 2011 earthquake and tsunami. Use of a remote-controlled robot is essential because no humans can go close to the reactor chambers because of their fatally high radiation levels. Using information gathered by the robot, the plant operator, Tokyo Electric Power Co., plans to repair the damaged chambers enough so they can be filled with water in preparation for the removal of melted radioactive debris, planned in about a decade. Associated Press (CTV News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MinStevenBlaney

J'ai participé à la réunion des 5 partenaires pour discuter de la réponse internationale à la menace de l'ÉIIL & des terroristes.

MinStevenBlaney

Canada collaborating with Five Countries partners to discuss international response to real global threat of ISIL and Jihadi terrorists.

MinStevenBlaney

Propos positifs de nos alliés sur la Loi antiterroriste. Nos 5 partenaires appuient le mandat élargi du SCRS pour lutter v.s. le terrorisme.

MinStevenBlaney

Positive feedback from Allies on Anti-Terrorism Act 2015. Five Countries agree updated CSIS mandate important tool to fight terrorism.

MinStevenBlaney

Le @Canada ne sera pas passif et a rejoint nos alliés pour soutenir la coalition internationale dans la lutte contre l'ÉIIL.

MinStevenBlaney

@Canada not sitting on sidelines -- instead joining our Allies to support international coalition in the fight against

Justin_Ling

Minister Blaney has taken to calling the Five Eyes the "Five Countries" for some reason. news.gc.ca/web/article-en...

TheSpec

Privacy rights won't be trampled in terror fight, says public safety minister bit.ly/18VAGE7

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CKNW

More bird flu in the Fraser Valley bit.ly/1CBYklt

CBCNews

Canadian military member from Winnipeg missing after Alberta avalanche ift.tt/1DJQrXW

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PostmediaNews

Imam wants federal inquiry into radicalization ow.ly/IDhK4 via @OttawaCitizen

ipoliticsca

NDP counter motion on Hill security with one of their own | iPolitics http://bit.ly/16OyTQp #cdnpoli

CP24

Accused terrorists considered blowing up bridge, court hears cp24.com/news/accused-t...

globeandmail

Two accused terrorists considered blowing up bridge, court hears trib.al/kuBRW8D

ElizabethMay

May calls #C-51 Secret Police Act globalnews.ca/video/1816038/... #GPC

PostmediaNews

Liberals agree RCMP can handle Hill security ow.ly/IDJtk via @OttawaCitizen

MacleansMag

Why Canada's no-fly list is about to get much bigger: ow.ly/IDCL3

journo_dale

Judicial oversight is great when CSIS doesn't mislead the courts. You know, like they did in a case the #SCC just agreed to hear. #PnPCBC

PnPCBC

.@MinStevenBlaney on what the Five Eyes have planned to combat jihadism & comments on move to have #RCMP take over security Hill security

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CTVToronto

More than 11 kg of cocaine found in bags at Pearson: CBSA ow.ly/ICXyq

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Bernardo980

#Surrey #RCMP's Bill Fordy: newly integrated Domestic Violence Unit is team effort w shared goal to 'stop the pain.'

RCMPAlberta

Warrant issued for Timothy Knowles of Red Deer. Do not approach. Contact #RCMP if seen. bit.ly/1CZcUlx rcmpmb

Shamattawa RCMP charge man in homicide: rcmp-grc.gc.ca/mb/news-nouvel... #shamdet #rcmpmb

bcRCMP

Thirty-Two More Charges Laid in Investment Fraud bit.ly/1ljX0XQ

CTVNationalNews

A judge has ruled that #Kelowna Mounties were wrong to broadcast a strip search without telling the prisoner fb.me/3zYunR2Ur

COMMUNITY SAFETY AND PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

VancouverSun

B.C. government to use proceeds of crime to fight domestic violence ow.ly/2UmpDm

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

RadioCanadaInfo

Un fonctionnaire fédéral sur cinq se dit harcelé au travail rc.ca/8QmCT3

INTERNATIONAL

Reuters

Islamic State says hostage Kayla Mueller killed in Jordanian air strike; U.S. not confirmed: reut.rs/1C1NRu9

SunNewsNetwork

WATCH: Is Barack Obama preparing to ask Congress to authorize a full-scale war against #ISIS? ow.ly/ICFaS

CTVNationalNews

Robot ready to explore Fukushima nuclear remains ow.ly/IDSkB

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
February 23, 2015 / le 23 février 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Le ministre Blaney incite les gens à magasiner

Le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, invite la population à ne pas éviter les centres commerciaux comme le West Edmonton Mall en Alberta ciblé dans une vidéo du groupe Al-Shabab. «Si j'étais à Edmonton aujourd'hui, j'irais magasiner au Edmonton Mall», a réagi le ministre lundi après-midi. Journal de Québec

Les menaces d'Al-Shabab prouvent la nécessité d'adopter C-51, dit Steven Blaney

Le ministre de la Sécurité publique a deux messages à lancer dans la foulée des menaces formulées par le groupe islamiste Al-Shabab: aux citoyens, il dit de continuer à magasiner, et aux parlementaires, il demande d'adopter le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51. Selon Steven Blaney, les habitudes de magasinage des Canadiens ne devraient pas être perturbées par le groupe extrémiste somalien, qui a proféré dans une vidéo des menaces à l'endroit de plusieurs centres commerciaux, dont le West Edmonton Mall, en Alberta. Mais les avertissements contenus dans l'enregistrement, qui fait l'objet d'une enquête de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), témoignent de l'urgence d'adopter sans plus tarder le projet de loi C-51, a plaidé le ministre Blaney en point de presse, lundi. Presse canadienne (L'actualité)

Bill's terrorist propaganda provisions overly broad: law professors

A federal proposal to scrub terrorist propaganda from the Internet risks sweeping in too much speech that has no ties to violent threats, says a new analysis. The definition of propaganda in the government anti-terrorism bill is dangerously broad, law professors Craig Forcese and Kent Roach say in their paper. The bill, introduced late last month, proposes giving the RCMP power to seek a judge's order to remove terrorist propaganda from websites. Forcese, of the University of Ottawa, and Roach, who teaches at the University of Toronto, say while they support the idea in principle, it should be rooted in actual or threatened violence. The Conservatives brought in the bill — which would also significantly expand the powers of Canada's spy agency — following the daylight murders of two Canadian soldiers last October. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service would become an agency that actively tries to derail terror plots, not just one that collects and analyzes information. The bill would also create a new criminal offence of encouraging someone to carry out a terror attack. The New Democrats oppose the legislation, calling it a serious infringement of civil liberties that will not be effective in reducing terrorism. The Liberals have agreed to support the bill with the caveat that they will bring in stronger oversight of the intelligence agencies should they form the next government. In the House of Commons, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said the jihadi extremists' threat is real. "That is why we need to move on and put measures in place to keep Canadians safe." In their paper, Forcese and Roach support a provision in the bill for deleting Internet material "that counsels the commission of a terrorist offence," saying it deals with well-understood legal concepts. Canadian Press (CKTB Newstalk 610); Presse canadienne (L'actualité)

Five things to know about developments with the federal anti-terror bill

Five things to know about Monday's developments in the debate about the federal government's proposed anti-terrorism bill:— Law professors Craig Forcese and Kent Roach published a paper saying provisions in the legislation aimed at terrorist propaganda are too broad.— The professors also expressed concern about a clause that would give border agents power to seize terrorist propaganda.— During question period in the House of Commons, the New Democrats continued to press the government to create stronger oversight of Canada's intelligence agencies.— Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney insisted the jihadi terrorist threat is real, and the bill is needed to make Canadians safer.— The legislation passed second reading Monday in the Commons by a margin of 176-87. It now goes to committee for further study. Canadian Press (Battlefords News-Optimist)

Spy agency's review group can't perform 'oversight' role

The small group watching over Canada's spy agency says it was purposely devised to be a limited, after-the-fact "review" body — not an all-seeing "oversight" committee that would vet spy operations. During three days of lively debate in the Commons over the controversial anti-terror Bill C-51, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney, Justice Minister Peter MacKay and other Conservative MPs have repeatedly characterized the Security Review Intelligence Committee (SIRC) as providing oversight of the spy agency, known as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS). Prime Minister Stephen Harper has done the same. Yet SIRC has no such mandate, its spokeswoman said Monday. "We review CSIS. We look at past activities," to ensure they are lawful, appropriate and effective, SIRC's Lindsay Jackson said. "Recently the terms 'oversight' and 'review' have become almost interchangeable but they do actually mean separate things. Ottawa Citizen

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Radio-Canada En direct a interviewé le ministre de la sécurité publique Steven Blaney au sujet de la menace d'Al-Shabab au West Edmonton Mall. Transcription ébauche

RDI rapporte que le ministre Steven Blaney s'est adressé aux médias concernant la sécurité au West Edmonton Mall et les menaces du groupe Al-Shabab. Transcription ébauche

CBC News reported on an exchange between Peter Julian of the NDP and Minister Steven Blaney during Question Period today on the topic of bill C-51. The bill will pass second reading and head to committee early tomorrow morning. Rough Transcript

CTV News – Power Play interviewed security expert John Thompson regarding Al-Shabaab's threat against the West Edmonton Mall. Rough Transcript

CTV News – Power Play interviewed Chuck Strahl, former Chair of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, regarding Bill C-51. Rough Transcript

CBC News's Power and Politics featured an MP discussion on Bill C-51 and threats to the West Edmonton Mall. Rough Transcript

CBC News's Power and Politics featured a discussion with security experts on threats to North American security. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CN derailment shows inadequacy of new tank cars, watchdog says

A train derailment in Canada this month that set ablaze several new-model tank cars carrying crude oil shows the need for tougher rail car standards, Canada's safety watchdog said on Monday. The Canadian National Railway Co. train, carrying crude and petroleum distillates, derailed in northern Ontario on Feb. 14, setting seven of its 100 cars on fire. The accident blocked traffic on its main cross-country line for several days. The 29 cars that derailed were CPC-1232 tankers, meant to be safer than the older DOT-111 crude tankers that derailed and burned in downtown Lac-Mégantic, Que., in 2013, killing 47 people. The Transportation Safety Board of Canada, however, said the derailed CN cars performed much like the older cars. Reuters (Globe and Mail); Radio-Canada; TheRecord.com

Alberta woman hopes report on train derailment, fire leads to better safety

An Alberta woman forced from her home by a fiery explosion of train cars following a derailment hopes a report will lead to better rail industry safety. On Tuesday, the Transportation Safety Board is to release the findings of its investigation into what caused 13 Canadian National Railway (TSX:CNR) freight cars carrying propane and oil to derail near Gainford, Alta., west of Edmonton. Although no one was hurt, the flames from the derailment on Oct. 19, 2013, forced more than 120 people to evacuate the hamlet for four days. Charlottetown Guardian

Spring flood risk low in Red River Valley: U.S. National Weather Service

There's little threat of a spring flood in the Red River Valley south of the border due to low soil moisture and a very low, relatively dry snowpack. In its February spring flood outlook, the U.S. National Weather Service declared the risk of "significant, impactful snowmelt flooding" in the Red River Valley to be "quite low," thanks to average flows on most rivers and streams, below-average soil moisture, deep frost depth and a very low snowpack, especially south of Grand Forks, N.D. Winnipeg Free Press

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Experts discouraged by early stages of C-51 debate

With the biggest and broadest changes to Canada's anti-terrorism legislation since 9/11 going to committee after only three days of debate in the House, critics are unimpressed — with the Liberals, the government, and most importantly with the bill itself. "I think it's obvious that the government wants this to be whisked through with as little attention as possible, because any attention focused on this bill keeps pointing to all the problems and the dangers in it," says Reg Whitaker, a political science professor at York University and the University of Victoria specializing in security and terrorism. To Whitaker, the bill is being forced through the legislative process at breakneck speeds and for nothing more than votes, best illustrated by the politicized introduction of the bill. "Harper spoke to a party rally and spoke in the most apocalyptic terms: a great evil is descending upon our world, the barbarians are at the gates, they're coming in through the windows and are under the bed, and only I can stand up for you," said Whitaker of Harper's campaign-style appearance in Richmond Hill announcing the bill. Stuart Farson is a terrorism expert at Simon Fraser University who has followed CSIS closely since 1990 when the agency was last reviewed. "I really hope that they won't set this up as an election issue because I think that this is a very serious piece of legislation which does need an evaluation in what is the public interest rather than the partisan interest," said Farson. iPolitics

Watch for Islamist infiltration, blogger tells Senate inquiry

Canada needs to ensure radical Islamists don't infiltrate law-enforcement institutions, a controversial blogger told a Senate committee Monday. Marc Lebus has tracked radical Islam in Canada on his blog, Point de Bascule, since 2010. With the help of roughly 10 people, Lebus documents both tenuous and strong links between Muslim leaders and radical groups. "Leading influential Islamist leaders have specifically targeted Canada," Lebus told the Senate national security committee, noting that Islamist groups abroad have called on their supporters in the West to join police forces and spy agencies. Lebus gave numerous examples of prominent Muslims in Canada whom he said supported Islamist groups, such as a prominent scholar of Islam who suggested Muslim judges in secular countries could use their jurisprudence to make verdicts that favoured the principles of Sharia law. He also took aim at remarks senior CSIS official Michael Peirce gave to the same committee last October, when Peirce discussed "individuals whose activities may be associated with a particular institution, but it's the individuals we investigate. For instance, we don't investigate mosques." Ottawa Citizen

Al-Shabab threat 'disgusting' says leader of Edmonton's Somali community

Edmonton's large Somali community is "disgusted" and "insulted" to be mentioned in a recent video allegedly released by Somali-based extremist group Al-Shabab. "This group is known to have caused a lot of destruction and death back in Somalia," said Jibril Ibrahim, the president of the Somali Canadian Cultural Society of Edmonton. "They are despised both inside and outside [of Somalia]." "This is kind of an act of desperation on their side," he added. Global News

Edmonton's Somali community working closely with police after threat against West Edmonton Mall

Edmonton's Somali community is working closely with city police following a call from the al-Shabaab terrorist group to target shopping malls -- and they are bracing for a backlash from citizens who want to blame anyone with ties to the largely Muslim country. The al-Shabaab terrorist group - which has pledged allegiance to al-Qaeda -- recently posted a video online talking about its September 2013 attack at an upscale mall in Nairobi, Kenya, which killed 67 people and wounded more than 175. The video calls for similar attacks on a number of other shopping centres, including West Edmonton Mall. Jibril Ibrahim, president of the Somali Canadian Cultural Society of Edmonton, was surprised to hear about the threat and found it insulting -- he said the terrorist group has been killing Somalis in their homeland for years and has little support. Edmonton Sun; CBC News

'I'm going to snap their necks' - Accused in B.C. terror plot allegedly threatened to kill motel cleaners during bomb-making

Terrorist suspect John Nuttall is shown on police surveillance video threatening to kill any motel cleaners who enter a room where he and his wife, Amanda Korody, are preparing to build bombs to carry out an attack on the Victoria legislature. The video shows Nuttall and Korody in a Delta motel room on June 27, 2013, only four days prior to what RCMP allege was a plan to explode bombs at the legislature on Canada Day. The accused, who have each pleaded not guilty to four terrorism-related charges, have finished shopping for items, including pressure cookers, clocks and wires, and can be seen arranging the items on a motel room table. Vancouver Province

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

CBC News's Power and Politics featured an MP discussion on Bill C-51 and threats to the West Edmonton Mall. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Contraband tobacco-sniffing dogs a bust for border agency

The Harper government spent $1 million on dog teams specially trained to sniff out contraband tobacco entering Canada, but the pooch patrols were a bust, suggests a newly released report. The dogs' noses led to nine small seizures worth just $1,000 in unpaid federal tobacco taxes over the three-year program. "Based on seizure results alone, the two dog teams were not found to be cost effective," says a detailed evaluation by Public Safety Canada. The contraband-tobacco dog teams quietly ceased operations in 2013, but an unvarnished accounting of their effectiveness was only posted on the department's website. The dogs were part of a $17-million initiative begun in 2010 to stop the flow of contraband tobacco into Canada, known as MACT (Measures to Address Contraband Tobacco). The three-year project, sunsetted in March 2013, was not renewed... A spokeswoman for CBSA said in an email the two dogs were "subsequently reassigned to other functions or retired." CBC News

Stay-at-home dad accused of smuggling cocaine into B.C. held in Oregon jail over flight risk concerns

A B.C. resident has been ordered detained in an Oregon jail while he awaits his upcoming trial for allegedly attempting to transport 42 kilograms of cocaine from Portland to Canada. Kevin Maurice Landers, 51, was arrested in early December following a traffic stop by Portland police officers. Landers was driving a 2013 Nissan Quest minivan northbound on the I-205 when he was pulled over at Northeast Airport Way for a traffic violation. He allowed officers to search the van, including a drug-sniffing dog named Nikko and his handler. Officers found four duffel bags in a hidden compartment in the van's floor. The bags held 42 kilograms of cocaine. Vancouver Province

Drug smuggling efforts thwarted by border guards

A Kelowna woman is now facing drug charges following a thwarted summertime attempt to smuggle a high volume of cocaine into Canada. Mounties alongside Canadian Border Service Agency representatives held a press conference Monday morning to announce that Caitlin Christine Gladdish, 26, is facing charges of importation of a controlled substance and possession for the purpose of trafficking. The Kelowna woman allegedly had 35 kilograms of cocaine in a secret compartment of her Volkswagen Jetta, when she was caught July 26, 2014 at the Waneta port of entry near Trail. Supt. Brad Britton said they don't believe that Gladdish was acting alone, however, no other arrests have been made. It's also unclear what south-of-the-border city, or even country, the drugs originated from. He also couldn't say where Gladdish's alleged drug connection. The woman caught the attention of border service guards when they noticed an irregularity in her trunk, said Lorne Black, Chief of the CBSA. Kelowna Capital News; CTV News

US Supreme Court rejects appeal in challenge to 2nd Detroit-Windsor bridge

The U.S. Supreme Court has decided it won't intervene in a lawsuit that challenges the selection of a Detroit neighbourhood for a new bridge to Windsor, Ont. Neighbourhood groups and the private owners of the Ambassador Bridge the aging span that currently links Windsor and Detroit claim the U.S. federal government violated environmental law, among other legal standards. But the work of the Federal Highway Administration has been upheld by a federal judge and an appeals court. The Supreme Court turned down an appeal in the lawsuit on Monday, saying it won't get involved. Charlottetown Guardian

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Superfish defends hacker-helping software on Lenovo laptops

A little-known Silicon Valley startup was caught in a firestorm of criticism this week for making software that exposed Lenovo laptop users to hackers bent on stealing personal information. But Superfish Inc. has also won praise for producing visual search technology that many see as the next big thing in online shopping. Associated Press (CBC News)

The top reason companies are still getting hacked

Old software security holes are more stubborn than many think. A report issued Monday by HP shows that almost half of the companies who suffered a cyber attack in 2014 were hit by hackers taking advantage of old exploits. In fact, 44 percent of known breaches in 2014 stemmed from vulnerabilities caused by unpatched code that was two to four years old, showing that many companies are not adequately updating security patches, according to HP's Cyber Risk Report. CNBC

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Woman sues RCMP over wrongful human trafficking prosecution

A West Vancouver woman acquitted of human trafficking charges is taking the B.C. and federal governments to court. Mumtaz Ladha is suing the RCMP and B.C.'s director of civil forfeiture, saying her reputation and finances have suffered as a result of what she says was a wrongful criminal prosecution. Ladha was accused of enslaving a Tanzanian woman who worked as a maid in her multimillion-dollar home, and some of her assets were frozen. Canadian Press (CTV News)

Former Richmond Mountie sentenced for breach of trust

A former Richmond RCMP officer and B.C. Lions player has been sentenced for breach of trust. A provincial court judge in Richmond has sentenced 49-year-old Kenrick Whitney to a suspended sentence and 12 months probation for breach of trust. CKNW 980

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Bath inmate, 67, dies

An inmate at Bath institution has died, according to a news release from Correctional Service Canada. On Feb. 22, Ronald Lauzon, an inmate at Bath Institution, died at the Regional Hospital in Bath, the release said. At the time of his death, Lauzon, 67, had been serving an indeterminate sentence since May 8, 1980, for second degree murder and sexual assault. Kingston Whig-Standard

Que. jails still vulnerable to chopper jailbreaks, documents say

Nearly all of Quebec's jails remain vulnerable despite two embarrassing helicopter jailbreaks, QMI Agency has learned. Access to Information requests reveal that security gaps remain after inmates flew away from jails in March 2013 and again last June. None of Quebec's 18 provincial jails have "anti-escape" nets that could block helicopters. The public security department has instead decided to implement "mesh fences and/or poles" in four facilities to reduce the risk of helicopter escapes, documents show. The department wouldn't say which jails received the upgrades. "Places are a priority when there are (inmates) that are linked to organized crime, such as defendants awaiting criminal trial, who would have the means to be able to organize escapes," said spokesman Jean-Philippe Guay. QMI Agency (Ottawa Sun)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Why don't women report rape? Because most get no justice when they do

Chances are a woman in Canada will be sexually assaulted while you're reading this and never tell police. Decades after the Criminal Code was changed to better protect rape survivors and punish their assailants, fewer than one in five victims of sexual assault say they reported their violation to authorities. An Ipsos poll for Global News found that while 30 per cent of those surveyed said they'd experienced sexual assault in their lifetimes, fewer than one in five (about 18 per cent) of those had told police. Some felt young and powerless, or ashamed, or they blamed themselves or just wanted to move on. Many felt reporting would do little good. And in that last respect the evidence bears them out, at least when it comes to conviction. Twenty-three per cent of sexual assault charges in 2011-12 adult criminal court resulted in a guilty verdict, according to Statistics Canada. Global News

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Mystery tunnel found near Pan Am Games venue - Digging tools and generator found in tunnel near Rexall Centre and York University

National security officials have been notified that an underground tunnel was discovered near a venue for this summer's Pan Am Games in Toronto, CBC News has learned. The tunnel was dug in the woods near Toronto's Rexall Centre and York University. It was large enough for a person to stand in, at around 2.5 metres in height, and was about seven metres long. The tunnel had lights inside, powered by a generator, and the walls were reinforced. Sources told CBC News that the tunnel has now been filled in by authorities. A Toronto and Region Conservation Authority employee reportedly found the tunnel while walking near the TRCA headquarters at 5 Shoreham Dr. in January. CBC News

INTERNATIONAL

NSA: Snowden leaks hurt ability to track terrorists

The head of the National Security Agency expressed deep concerns about terrorists' ability to avoid NSA surveillance, explaining that Edward Snowden's revelations of surveillance techniques and capabilities have had a "material impact" on NSA ability to prevent and detect terror plots. CNN

Obama warns against Homeland Security Department shutdown with Congress at an impasse

President Barack Obama warned Monday that states will feel the pain of a Homeland Security Department shutdown if Congress can't break an impasse by week's end. But on Capitol Hill, no solution was in sight. "It will have a direct impact on your economy, and it will have a direct impact on America's national security," Obama told the nation's governors as they visited the White House as part of their annual conference. With tens of thousands of workers in line to be furloughed if the agency shuts down at midnight Friday, and many more forced to work without pay, the president cast the standoff in starkly economic terms. "These are folks who, if they don't have a paycheque, are not going to be able to spend that money in your states," the president said. "And as governors, you know that we can't afford to play politics with our national security." The president's words appeared to have little impact on Capitol Hill, where Senate Republicans lined up a fourth procedural vote on House-passed legislation that funds the Homeland Security Department through the Sept. 30 end of the budget year, while also rolling back Obama's executive actions granting work permits to millions of immigrants in this country illegally. Associated Press (Cape Breton Post)

Ebola drug shows some promise in first tests in West Africa

An experimental antiviral drug shows some early, encouraging signs of effectiveness in its first human test against Ebola in West Africa, but only if patients get it when their symptoms first appear. A study of the drug, favipiravir, is still in early stages in West Africa, and too few people have been treated to really know whether the drug helps. Other factors, like better health care, may be making a difference, and there was no comparison group of patients who got no treatment or a different drug. Results for the first 69 adults and teens in Guinea were released Monday. Among those who got the drug when virus levels were still low, survival was 85 per cent. That seems better than the roughly 70 per cent survival for patients treated in the same clinics two months before the study began, researchers said at the Retrovirus Conference in Seattle. Associated Press (Global News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MinStevenBlaney

Ce soir, j'encourage les députés à appuyer la Loi antiterroriste 2015 pour mieux protéger les Canadiens du terrorisme <http://bit.ly/1w3UKTm>

MinStevenBlaney

Tonight, I'm urging all MPs to support the Anti-terrorism Act 2015 to better protect Canadians from the terror threat <http://bit.ly/1BEmnNv>

MPRandyHoback

Representing @MinStevenBlaney at this afternoon's RCMP troop graduation ceremony #skpoli #cdnpoli

MBegin_RC

Le @MinStevenBlaney laisse au comité parlementaire qui étudiera c-51 le soin d'adopter ou non des amendements #polcan

RadioCanadaInfo

Les menaces d'Al Shabab prouvent la nécessité d'adopter C 51, dit Steven Blaney

RadioCanadaInfo

Blaney s'appuie sur la menace contre le West Edmonton Mall pour promouvoir C-51 <http://rc.ca/8jBKrw>

RadioCanadaInfo

«Des installations canadiennes sont ciblées. Donc j'invite l'ensemble des parlementaires à appuyer C-51», dit Blaney <http://ici.radio-canada.ca/nouvelles/politique/2015/02/23/004-projet-de-loi-c-51-steven-blaney-terrorisme.shtml>

...

Lactualite

Les menaces d'Al-Shabab prouvent la nécessité d'adopter C-51, dit Steven Blaney #polcan <http://bit.ly/1Blxs30>

GlobalNational

WATCH: Public safety min. says threat on West Edmonton Mall proves new anti-terror laws needed. @VassyKapelos reports <http://glnb.ca/JxZbx>

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

reutersLjungg

#Canada watchdog says fiery CN derailment last month shows inadequacy of new tank cars <http://www.reuters.com/article/2015/02/23/canada-derailment-regulator-idUSL1N0VX1JD20150223...> #cdnpoli

RadioCanadaInfo

Déraillement de Gogama: Les wagons ont réagi de manière semblable à ceux de Lac-Mégantic <http://ici.radio-canada.ca/regions/ontario/2015/02/23/008-securite-ferroviaire-normes-inadequates-deraillement-gogama.shtml> ... pic.twitter.com/9xz24CGjj5

globeandmail

Measles virus circulating in Ontario is a variant previously unknown to WHO <http://trib.al/7Bv1B11>

CBCAlerts

Officials say air quality being monitored in #FortMcMurray apartment where 5 children poisoned. All other units in building deemed safe.

CBCNews

First Nation fire safety hurt by lack of standards, chief says <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2966701> pic.twitter.com/KF1wqfQnp

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

ipoliticsca

Experts discouraged by early stages of C-51 debate | iPolitics <http://bit.ly/1GmlHyd> #cdnpoli #C51

journo_dale

No, that's not what judicial oversight means, and hey, it's not like CSIS has never misled the court. Oh, wait...

#PnPCBC

PnPCBC

Now on #pnpbc: MPs debate Bill C-51 - & a new terror threat from Somalia-based al-Shabaab. Are Canadians in danger of a terrorist attack?

CTV PowerPlay

LIVE: @DonMartinCTV with John Thompson, VP of Strategic Capital Intelligence Group on mall threats.

CTV PowerPlay

John Thompson on preventing terrorism: "The first line of defense is intelligence."

Lactualite

La définition de «propagande» du gouvernement fédéral serait «dangereusement» trop large <http://bit.ly/17rxfE2> pic.twitter.com/h2TCMd4BNX

PnPCBC

Now on #pnpbc: Ziyaad Mia of the Canadian Muslim Lawyers Association talks #C51 as the vote unfolds live.
#cdnpoli

OttawaCitizen

Spy agency's review group can't perform 'oversight' role #cdnpoli <http://ow.ly/JxWXF>

CBCAlerts

Harper government's anti-terror bill passes 2nd reading in House of Commons. MPs voted 176 to 87 in favour of C-51.

TondaMacC

So Bill #C51 is off to Commons committee for further study. Stay tuned as they say.

mgeist

MT @Justin_Ling: #BillC51 passed and referred to Public Safety committee [CPC & Lib support, NDP oppose]. Stay tuned for that.

ipoliticsca

Canada lacks data and desire to confront radicalization, Senate committee told | iPolitics <http://bit.ly/1B6xpNb>
#cdnpoli

CBCAlerts

Somali-Canadians upset by terrorist video that names West Edmonton Mall as possible target:
<http://www.cbc.ca/1.2968528>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

theprovince

Stay-at-home dad accused of smuggling cocaine into B.C. held in Oregon jail over flight risk concerns
<http://theprovince.in/1DfDJ49>

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

FrancoisGuimont

RT @cyber_sécurité Participe au mouvement pour dire non à la #cyberintimidation cette Journée du Chandail Rose....

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

globalnews

Vince Li back before review board for Greyhound slaying of Tim McLean <http://glnb.ca/JxhS2>

CTVVancouver

West Vancouver woman sues RCMP over wrongful human trafficking prosecution: <http://bc.ctvnews.ca/woman-sues-rcmp-over-wrongful-human-trafficking-prosecution-1.2249825> ...

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

globalhalifax

Springhill Institution remains on lockdown to allow staff to conduct an "exceptional search." <http://glnb.ca/JvWdr>

theprovince

Police nab high-risk sex offender who went missing from #Vancouver halfway house <http://thepro.in/1DeaHSH>

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

APTNNews

This week APTN will be covering the MMIW roundtable in Ottawa. If you're going (or if you're not going but have... <http://fb.me/537iqzu3T>

globalnews

Why don't women report rape? Because most get no justice when they do <http://ow.ly/JxzyT>

TonyclementCPC

Bill C-32, Victims Bill of Rights Act, passes the Commons at 3d Reading with unanimity and goes to the Senate for further debate.

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

CdnPress_Ott

Lid on cabinet secrets quietly tightened under new federal policy #cdnpoli

INTERNATIONAL

HuffingtonPost

Obama warns that a security funding lapse would hurt the economy <http://huff.to/1whHJ4O>

rabbleca

A Canadian in Paris: Hassan Diab's indefinite jail journey via Matthew Behrens #cdnpoli

jaketapper

Mall of America steps up security after terror threat <http://cnn.it/1EoQaN2> - @BrianToddCNN reports #TheLead

GlobalNational

#Ebola drug shows some promise in first tests in West Africa <http://ow.ly/Jy0Lx>

cnnbrk

A least 40 people executed in two months in city ISIS claims as its capital, activist says. <http://cnn.it/1DP4ZYA>

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
February 25, 2015 / le 25 février, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Conservatives want to limit testimony in study of terror bill

The Conservatives are seeking to limit testimony on their wide-ranging terrorism bill to just four days, sources say, with Prime Minister Stephen Harper urging MPs to pass the bill "as quickly as possible." The parliamentary committee studying Bill C-51 met for several hours behind closed doors Tuesday to discuss potential witnesses and schedule meetings. Because the discussion was held in secret, MPs are prohibited about speaking publicly about the debate. But multiple sources told the Star the government wants only three meetings to hear expert witnesses, plus one appearance between Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and Justice Minister Peter MacKay. That would amount to only four days to study the most dramatic changes to Canada's national security legislation since 2001. No decisions were made on Tuesday, and Blaney's office said it's up to the committee - where the government enjoys a majority - to determine how many meetings they'll hold. In the House of Commons, NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair demanded that the bill be given a full study. "Ramming C-51 through without improved oversight is reckless," Mulcair said, urging the government to listen to human rights and security experts. Hamilton Spectator

Projet de loi antiterroriste: le gouvernement Harper appuie sur l'accélérateur

Après avoir coupé court aux débats à la Chambre des communes, le gouvernement Harper s'apprête à récidiver en limitant à trois jours l'étude du projet de loi antiterroriste par un comité parlementaire. La rapidité avec laquelle le gouvernement conservateur tente de faire adopter ce projet de loi, qui accorderait de nouveaux pouvoirs au Service canadien de renseignement et de sécurité (SCRS), soulève l'indignation des partis de l'opposition, en particulier le NPD. La députée néo-démocrate Rosane Doré Lefebvre a indiqué que son parti souhaite faire entendre une soixantaine de témoins, dont les quatre anciens premiers ministres et les anciens juges de la Cour suprême du Canada qui ont signé une lettre dans laquelle ils réclamaient de meilleurs mécanismes de surveillance du SCRS. Le NPD voudrait aussi entendre les experts dans le domaine de la protection de la vie privée ainsi que les représentants des Premières Nations, entre autres. Entendre tous ces témoins, et ceux que souhaitent inviter les autres partis, nécessiterait au moins une cinquantaine d'heures d'audience. «On sait que le projet de loi C-51 dans sa forme actuelle est mal ficelé. Le gouvernement, avec la complicité des libéraux, joue avec ce qu'on a de plus précieux: nos droits et notre sécurité. Or, après avoir fait adopter le projet de loi à toute vapeur en deuxième lecture, voilà que le gouvernement voudrait qu'on adopte le projet de loi C-51 les yeux fermés en comité», a tonné Mme Doré Lefebvre. Elle a invité le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, à s'assurer que les Canadiens qui le souhaitent puissent être entendus, notamment les anciens premiers ministres et ex-juges de la Cour suprême «qui prônent la prudence». Mais derrière les portes closes, en matinée, les députés conservateurs qui siègent au comité de la sécurité publique de la Chambre des communes ont fait savoir qu'ils envisagent seulement trois jours d'audience. Et la première journée verrait le ministre Steven Blaney défilé devant le comité en compagnie de ses hauts fonctionnaires. Le comité doit se réunir de nouveau pour déterminer la liste des témoins. La Presse

How to end the fear economy - The best response to a terrorist threat? Travel tips and laughter

There is a reason terrorists spend so much time making threats. Hiding in the Somali desert or Syrian ruins, they are separated from the West by armies, oceans and a trillion-dollar security industry. The only thing that can reliably reach us from there is menacing email. This is why terrorists mostly trade in fear. The truth is that they simply are not very good at actually killing people. There were approximately 18,000 people killed by terrorists globally in 2013. Car accidents killed 70 times more. In Canada, only two people have died in terrorism attacks over the last decade. Moose are far more likely to kill you. [...] Canada's Minister of Public Safety Steven Blaney also found the threat valuable. He used it to procure support for the military mission against Islamic State (a different group in a different country), and to defend the new anti-terrorism bill. For our leaders, fear is a currency that buys support for budgets and legislation. Macleans

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Portage chamber brings flood talks to feds

The Portage la Prairie Chamber of Commerce held a meeting in early February with Manitoba Chambers and two federal ministers to discuss the Assiniboine flood issues the province is facing. "The Portage Chamber is definitely throwing their voice behind this issue, because it's such an important issue. It affects the whole province," said Cindy McDonald, chamber executive director. "It was important for us to let the federal government know that this is not only a provincial issue, this is a national and international issue, and that it's happening more regularly, not only once in 300 years, it's happening every couple of years, so the feds need to start pressuring the province and the province needs to step up and start doing something to fix the problem." The meeting was held with Manitoba Chambers CEO Chuck Davidson and MCC Cory Kolt, director of policy and communications and federal ministers Shelley Glover and Candice Bergen. The group discussed the continued issues and long-term solutions needed to address the Assiniboine flood issues. Talk of how to mitigate long-term flooding issues and the programs available to help those affected highlighted the meeting. Portage Daily Graphic

AFN chief meeting Aboriginal Affairs minister over Sask. reserve fire - Bellegarde calls for more money for First Nations

Assembly of First Nations (AFN) National Chief Perry Bellegarde and Aboriginal Affairs Minister Bernard Valcourt will meet face to face in the wake of a deadly fire that killed two toddlers on the Makwa Sahgaiehan First Nation. Bellegarde sent a letter to Valcourt's office on Friday asking for an immediate meeting to discuss the challenges First Nations face providing fire protection to their communities. Bellegarde's request for a meeting was granted. "We have received National Chief Bellegarde's letter, and yes the Minister will meet with the National Chief," said a statement from Valcourt's office. In the letter, Bellegarde writes the federal government is providing "insufficient funding" for First Nations to provide their members with a safe and healthy environment. He said the situation has reached a "critical level." News Talk 650 CKOM

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

In terrorism bills, the Canadian government goes shopping for laws

There is so much packed into the government's current national security law reform, it is hard to know where to focus. Bills C-44 and C-51, currently before Parliament, constitute the most substantial and controversial overhaul of Canada's national security landscape since the 2001 terrorist attacks. The weeks to come will see much debate about the human rights consequences of CSIS's unprecedented new powers to act to reduce security threats and to apply for Federal Court warrants authorizing Charter violations as part of that process. There will be discussion of the vagueness of the new criminal offence of advocating or promoting the commission of terrorism offences in general and the certainty that this will both intrude on and chill free expression in the country. Indigenous peoples, environmental activists, human rights campaigners and others will worry that the new measures only protect "lawful" advocacy, dissent and protest, an intentional retrenching from current laws that recognize that protests that are not lawful in the sense of having a City Hall permit are nonetheless not criminal, are protected under the Charter and should not, by any twisted interpretation, be lumped in with terrorism. Ottawa Citizen

Accused in B.C. legislature terror plot discussed whether to dig, drop or hide bombs

A terror suspect boasted that shrapnel from a bomb he was allegedly building to explode at the legislature in Victoria would be spinning "like little ninja stars" before maiming people. John Nuttall, who has pleaded not guilty to four terrorism-related charges, made the comment to his co-accused, Amanda Korody, several days prior to what the Crown says was a conspiracy to attack the Parliament buildings on Canada Day 2013. The Surrey couple had spent several hours in a Delta motel room with items they'd purchased, including pressure cookers, nails, batteries, clocks and wire, to construct several bombs. Nuttall is captured on surveillance video telling Korody that shrapnel from the nails was going to injure people hundreds of feet away. "Those nails are going to be spinning like the speed of sound, about 6,000 feet per second," he said. "These things are going to be spinning like little ninja stars. Get it? These are so the initial blast will kill, yes. But the nails are going to maim." On the video, Nuttall and Korody are also heard discussing how to minimize the risk and debating where to best place the bombs. Nuttall tells Korody and an undercover police officer that there would be less risk if they detonated bombs on a day other than Canada Day. "But if we do it on Canada Day, that's sending a pretty big message," Nuttall says. "That's the biggest celebration of tribalism ever." The Province

Expert warns about controls on Dark Web

An expert on Internet governance is warning policy makers to carefully consider the range and scope of new security powers aimed at patrolling the illegal underbelly of the World Wide Web. Eric Jardine, a research fellow at the Centre for International Governance Innovation, says an increasing number of criminals are moving away from the top-level Internet most citizens use every day and shifting towards the more anonymous Dark Web. His comments come as the Canadian government is considering a new anti-terror bill, C-51. Technology and government policies have not kept pace with the shift, meaning as legislation is developed to better police the web, it is average citizens and not criminals that are most likely to lose their civil liberties. "Over-policing that top level (of the Internet) will only end up impinging upon individuals' rights without causing a real reduction in the occurrence of crime," said Jardine. Waterloo Chronicle

Replacing fear with acceptance

It was undoubtedly unsettling for Albertans to hear that a landmark like the West Edmonton Mall was listed as a target by the militant Muslim Somali group al-Shabaab. We're more likely to set foot there than the hallowed democratic grounds of parliament that was attacked this Fall. While unsettling, the threat should be taken with a grain of salt— as National Post writer Jen Gerson noted on Twitter, “You kinda get the sense that al-Shabaab chose its target by Googling ‘famous malls in Canada.’” But rational risk assessment seems to go out the door when the topic of terrorism comes up. Take the fact that women in North America are more likely to be killed by their partners than by any terrorist attack. Yet Canada’s women’s shelters see a fraction of the funding that’s funneled into CSIS and anti-terrorism efforts. Or how when the numbers are actually crunched, the most common perpetrators of mass murders, (at least in the U.S.) are white males. Often middle to upper class. Yet there’s no call to deport white men — and rightly so. That would be ridiculous. Deporting Muslims though, that’s a favourite talking point amongst many.

Medicine Hat News

RCMP called on to lead security on Parliament Hill

The House of Commons and the Senate are calling on the RCMP to oversee a tighter security system on Parliament Hill, while preserving access to visitors. In a statement on Wednesday, the speakers of both chambers said they have called for a meeting with the national police force to enact a motion that called on the RCMP to lead operational security throughout the Parliamentary precinct and the grounds of Parliament Hill. The plan is to correct the flaws that were exposed on Oct. 22 when a gunman was able to run through Centre Block before being killed. “Parliament’s Protective Services will continue to work closely with all of their security partners to continuously improve security in the Parliamentary Precinct,” said the statement from House Speaker Andrew Sheer and Senate Speaker Pierre Claude Nolin. “The requirement to provide security for all parliamentarians, employees and visitors will continue to be balanced with the requirement of ensuring reasonable access to the Parliamentary Precinct for all Canadians,” they added. Globe and Mail

RCMP taking over Parliamentary security will invite constitutional challenge, says Liberal Senator Campbell

Conservative Senators cut short debate in the Upper Chamber Tuesday to pass a controversial government motion calling for the RCMP to take command of Parliamentary security, over the protests of Liberal Senators and warnings of a constitutional challenge because the federal police force takes its orders from Cabinet. The Conservative majority in the Senate passed a time allotment motion the government had introduced last week after only an opening round of debate and other than an opening speech and debate from Senate government leader Claude Carignon, no Conservative Senators spoke on the motion calling on Senate Speaker Pierre-Claude Nolin to “invite” the RCMP to lead what will be a unified security force within the Parliamentary buildings and on the Hill grounds outside. House Speaker Andrew Scheer’s (Regina-Qu’Appelle, Sask.) office confirmed Wednesday the two Speakers had already written RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson requesting a meeting to begin discussions. “The essence of the letter is to invite Commissioner Paulson to meet to begin to discuss how we might proceed in a manner consistent with the terms of the motions,” Heather Bradley, Mr. Scheer’s communications director, told The Hill Times in an email. Hill Times

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reveals how a young Canadian woman was radicalized in Canada and lured to join the ranks of ISIS in Syria. They believe that CSIS knew who the recruiter was. Rough transcript

CBC News adds more to the report about a Canadian woman recruited by ISIS by interviewing Jeff Weyers, senior analyst at iBRABO. He suggests the Canadian intelligence agencies are going to have to decide how they’re going to move forward from a policy perspective and how they’re going to deal with the issue of prevention. He states that CSIS should be able to give the family as much information as possible, so that they can take actions on their own part. Rough transcript

Broadcast media provided live coverage of Tom Mulcair addressing the media following an NDP caucus meeting. He answered questions about people leaving Canada to go to Syria to fight with ISIL and the committee reviewing bill C-51. (CBC News, CTV News, 11:21 ET) CBC News rough transcript

Broadcast media provided live coverage of Justin Trudeau speaking to the media following the Liberal caucus meeting. He mentioned the strengthening of the no fly list, bill C-51, and radicalization. (CTV News, CBC News, 12h38 ET) CTV News rough transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports Canada's electronic spy agency collects millions of emails from Canadians and stores them for "days to months" while trying to filter out malware and other attacks on government computer networks. A top-secret document written by Communications Security Establishment analysts sheds new light on the scope of the agency's domestic email collection as part of its mandate to protect government computers. CBC analyzed the document in collaboration with U.S. news site The Intercept, which obtained them from U.S. National Security Agency whistleblower Edward Snowden. Canada's electronic spy agency watched visits to government websites and collected about 400,000 emails to the government every day, storing some of the data for years, according to the 2010 document. (CBC News, 10:05 ET; RDI, 12 :26 ET)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Whitehorse RCMP take 5 suspects into custody after armed robbery

Whitehorse RCMP took five suspects into custody last night after an armed robbery on Elliott Street. According to an RCMP news release, two suspects, armed with a machete and a baton, entered a local business on Tuesday at approximately 5 p.m. The suspects demanded money and the whereabouts of the safe from the on-duty clerk, and were able to make off with an undisclosed amount of cash. Approximately two hours later, RCMP surrounded a vehicle at the intersections of Second Avenue and Hanson Street, where they undertook a "high risk take down," according to the release. Police seized items from the vehicle consistent with those used in the robbery, and its five occupants were taken into custody without incident. CBC News

Officers seize drugs, guns, stolen property from Lethbridge home man is facing numerous charges after officers seized guns, stolen property, and about $25,000 worth of drugs from a southern Alberta residence Friday. Members of the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams, or ALERT, executed two search warrants at a south Lethbridge apartment building following a short-term investigation into suspected drug trafficking. They removed 170 grams of hard and soft cocaine, 88 pills of the opiate fentanyl, 94 ecstasy pills, 16 grams of methamphetamine, and 130 grams of a buffing agent. The total estimated street value of the drugs is $25,000. Calgary Herald

Children reportedly among those killed in southern Manitoba house fire

RCMP are investigating a rural house fire in southern Manitoba that has reportedly killed a number of people, including children. Mounties say the blaze broke out early Wednesday morning near the tiny community of Kane, about 95 kilometres southwest of Winnipeg. Reeve Ralph Groening with the Rural Municipality of Morris tells Winnipeg radio station CJOB that he can confirm there were fatalities. Groening says fire crews have told him that some of the dead are children. He also says some members of a family were able to escape from the home. Firefighters and the province's fire commissioner are still on scene. Canadian Press (680 News, City News); QMI Agency (Portage Daily Graphic); La Presse Canadienne (La Presse); Journal de Montréal; Global News; CTV News Winnipeg

Moncton stabbing leads to 6 arrests

Codiac Regional RCMP arrested six people after a stabbing at a residence on Robinson Street in Moncton on Monday night. Police say they got the call around 10:30 p.m. to a house party at the home. A 43-year-old man from Moncton was taken to Dr. Georges-L.-Dumont University Hospital Centre with serious injuries and was later released. Five men and one woman were arrested on Tuesday in connection with the incident. Two of the men and the woman were later released. CBC News

New sergeant to head RCMP detachment

RCMP Staff Sgt. Kevin Keane handed the reins and reporting over to Sgt. Andrew Hunter at Monday's city council meeting. In introducing Hunter, Keane noted he has been an operational police officer for more than 15 years, and has come from Smithers where he was in charge of operations. Mayor Nancy Cooper thanked Keane for his service to the city, which she said has been marked by an overall decrease in crime. At the detachment for more than six years, Keane said transferring here was a homecoming for his wife who attended Salmon Arm Secondary. Salmon Arm Observer

RCMP text to make drug deal

They may still use old-fashioned police work, but Salmon Arm RCMP were able to arrest a suspected drug dealer after contacting him via text messaging. The accused was suspected of operating a dial-a-dope operation, in which he used an unsubscribed cell phone to arrange meeting places to sell drugs. "Using investigational means, police secured this telephone number and placed an order for drugs," said Staff Sgt. Kevin Keane. Salmon Arm Observer

Combined police forces stage raids in west end

Ontario Provincial Police conducted a number of raids in Ottawa's west end Wednesday morning to execute a number of warrants. Police were close-mouthed about the locations of the raids, although one witness reported a significant police presence at a high-rise apartment building at 3100 Carling Ave., at Bayshore Avenue. Other reports indicated police activity at 130 Doane St., east of Bayshore. There were reports of the use of "flashbang" stun grenades at both locations. The OPP's tactical units were seen preparing for the strikes at Andrew Haydon park at around 5 a.m. on Wednesday. By about 7:30 a.m., the door at the address on Doane had been kicked in and police could be seen inside. Ottawa Citizen

'Wolverine's hand' seized in Waterloo meth raid

Guelph police crackdown on crystal meth dubbed Project Ice has widened to include a Waterloo apartment, where a police raid ended in three arrests and the seizure of drugs, cash, weapons and equipment investigators say was being used to measure out, package and distribute illegal drugs. Officers found small quantities of a number of drugs, such as crystal meth, heroin, marijuana and ecstasy. They seized $2,945 in cash, a bulletproof vest and a number of edged weapons, including hatchets, a machete, and a number of knives. Police also found an odd weapon described as "Wolverine's hand" by spokesman Const. Michael Gatto, referencing the popular Marvel comic character. CBC News

Human trafficking trial was 'hell on Earth,' says B.C. woman acquitted of starving, enslaving Tanzanian maid

Mumtaz Ladha cries as she recalls sitting in a Supreme Court prisoner's box, listening to a former friend testify that she had been enslaved, starved and generally mistreated in the accused's home. It was difficult to listen to the testimony, which Ladha insists was all lies, and even more troubling to face the possibility of conviction during the 22-day trial in 2013. "Every night was a nightmare for me. I couldn't sleep all those 22 days. We didn't know what the verdict would be," Ladha said as she wept in a recent interview... The lawsuit alleges the RCMP pursued the case because the U.S. was pressuring Canada to improve on the "dearth" of human trafficking convictions, quoting documents posted on the whistleblower website WikiLeaks... The RCMP declined to comment Monday, saying its response would be filed in court. Her legal fees were more than $500,000, and during the trial she could not rely on the equity in her house to help pay her lawyer because the B.C. Civil Forfeiture Office started the process to seize her home. The forfeiture office was acting on erroneous information provided by the RCMP and didn't do its own research, which is why the provincial government is also named in the lawsuit, Martin added. The claim on the house was lifted only after the acquittal. Postmedia News (National Post)

Former Regina youth volunteer faces sexual exploitation, child pornography charges

A Regina man who police say actively volunteered with local youth groups is facing charges that include sexual exploitation and possession of child pornography. RCMP began investigating last July after receiving a complaint from a parent who said their son had received inappropriate text messages from an adult. Police later identified a second alleged victim. On Jan. 13, police arrested 24-year-old Nathan Michael Labatt of Regina. Labatt faces charges of sexual exploitation, invitation to sexual touching and possession of child pornography. Investigators have learned that Labatt was an active volunteer with several youth groups, including Scouts Canada and the Roman Catholic and Ukrainian Catholic churches. CTV News; Leader-Post

Mental health calls to police on the rise in Richmond

Richmond RCMP is fielding a growing number of calls related to mental health, according to a new report from the local detachment. Richmond Review

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Some residents in West Ottawa awoke to the sound of explosions this morning. They may have been stunned by grenades used by police in a massive early-morning raid. Several OPP and Ottawa police units arrived at a Wes-End townhouse this morning. A source told our sister station CFRA it's part of an ongoing investigation being conducted by biker gang operation. That investigation is going on right across the province. (CTV News Ottawa, 12:00 ET)

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Libération conditionnelle : Le chauffard Laurent Raymond essuie un nouvel échec

Le jeune chauffard Laurent Raymond a fait des progrès depuis sa condamnation pour sa conduite dangereuse ayant grièvement blessé trois adolescentes, mais ce n'est toujours pas assez pour obtenir une libération conditionnelle totale. C'est que son crime en juillet 2010 était grave. Pour impressionner trois adolescentes, il avait conduit comme un fou dans un quartier résidentiel de Ville Mont-Royal pour finir sa course dans un arbre. Il avait consommé de l'alcool, malgré un permis avec tolérance zéro. Le chauffard de 22 ans, qui avait été condamné à trois ans de pénitencier en juin 2013, avait subi des blessures mineures comparativement aux occupantes du véhicule. Claudia Di Iorio était tombée dans le coma, Évelyne Méthot a eu entre autres la colonne vertébrale fracturée tandis que Justine Rozon a perdu une partie de son intestin. Elle sera nourrie par intraveineuse pour le reste de sa vie. Raymond n'a toutefois passé qu'une année derrière les barreaux, puisqu'il avait été transféré en juin dernier en maison de transition. Et il y restera, a tranché la CLCC qui s'est dite « étonnée » de certaines réponses données par le détenu. Raymond, qui a déjà été jusqu'à consommer du cannabis quotidiennement, a en effet affirmé qu'il comptait arrêter. Mais que s'il recommençait, il serait en mesure de la gérer de façon adéquate. Journal de Montréal (Journal de Québec)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Fighting bullying on Pink Shirt Day 2015

You may see a lot of people wearing pink on Wednesday or find the hashtag #PinkShirtDay popping up frequently on social media. Canadians are being urged to don pink shirts on February 25 as part of an anti-bullying campaign called "Pink Shirt Day." For some people, pink is considered a feminine colour – but some students decided to do their best to break that stereotype. Pink Shirt Day started in 2007, when two Nova Scotia high school students organized a school protest to wear the colour pink to take a stand for a grade 9 boy and fellow classmate, who was bullied for wearing a pink coloured t-shirt to school. The movement was later carried out to other major cities. The campaign is now in its eighth year, and bullying continues to be a major problem in schools, workplaces, homes, and over the Internet. Every seven minutes someone is bullied on a playground in Canada, according to bullying.org. In fact, a recent survey found cyberbullying surpassed drugs and alcohol as the top concern among Canadian parents. Global News

How Pink Shirt Day has evolved

It was started seven years ago by some high school students in Nova Scotia who wanted to stand up for a classmate who was being bullied; it's now a global phenomenon. Travis Price and his friend began the anti-bullying movement, asking people in their high school to wear pink after they noticed a boy getting bullied for wearing a pink shirt. Since then, he's been busy travelling the country speaking to schools. Price says the response to Pink Shirt Day has been overwhelming. "You know, it's awareness, it's key, it's getting celebrities on board," Price said. "It's getting people to just step up and say, you know what, I was bullied too." Pink Shirt Day is now a fixture in 14 different countries. 660 News, News 1130

School District 60 recognizes Pink Shirt Day with anti-bullying campaign

The City of Fort St. John has awarded School District 60 with a Pink Shirt Day proclamation in recognition of the anti-bullying campaign and their work to-date. "I think what School District 60 does – all the teachers and students getting together is huge," says Councillor Trevor Bolin. "You see a lot of stories on social media that may not have those same systems that you guys do – so hats off to you." This Wednesday is National Pink Shirt Day, and as such, Robert Ogilvie Elementary has quite the day ahead of them. "We have an assembly starting at 9:00 a.m. where we will be showcasing some of the students' work and learning around anti-bullying and Pink Shirt Day," explains Principal of Robert Ogilvie Kathy Schek. "We will also have Morgan who is a student from North Peace [Secondary School] come do an interpretative dance, and we will be presenting the students the proclamation from the city for Pink Shirt Day." Energetic City, CJDC

Antibullying day to transform downtown Vancouver with pink shirts

Downtown Vancouver will be turned into a sea of pink on February 25 when hundreds of volunteers take to the streets to raise awareness about bullying. The eighth annual antibullying Pink Shirt Day event will be held in front of London Drugs (710 Granville Street) from 7 to 9 a.m. Special guests include Pink Shirt Day founder Travis Price, CKNW radio personality and Pink Shirt Day spokesperson Simi Sara, Surrey School District Safe Schools' Rob Rai, Boys and Girls Clubs of South Coast BC president Carolyn Tuckwell, and more. Volunteers, dressed in pink of course, will be selling buttons for donation. Straight

Red Cross promoting bully prevention and pink shirts

Bullying is a problem in schools and communities, but the Red Cross is working hard to prevent it. Although the Saskatchewan Day of Pink is April 1, many other provinces will be celebrating it on the National Day of Pink Wednesday. The Saskatchewan team may not be celebrating Pink Shirt Day until April, but they are using the national day as a jumping point to get the word out for their campaign. "Obviously, the pink shirt is the symbol of the day of standing up to bullying," said Richard, provincial development manager for the Red Cross in Saskatchewan. "Of course, we are encouraging schools and businesses to order their pink T-shirts and other merchandise we have available. "We have a new pink shirt design this year, a darker pink than we've had in past years and it has some large lettering on the back that says "No Bullying," which is the tag line of catchphrase that we use to promote our program." Prince Albert Daily Herald

Policing in pink

In support of Pink Shirt Day, Orangeville Police Const. Scott Davis and Chief Wayne Kalinski wore pink shirts on Wednesday (Feb. 25). Pink Shirt Day was originally organized by Nova Scotia students in sympathy of a Grade 9 student who was bullied for wearing a pink shirt. Students took a stand against the bullying by distributing pink t-shirts to several boys in their school. Orangeville Banner

Wear Pink and Take a Stand Against Bullying

Consider wearing pink on Wednesday, February 25th to symbolize you will not tolerate bullying. The annual Pink Shirt Day is back and the Okanagan Boys and Girls Club is marking their 7th year supporting the event, working to increase public awareness here locally and beyond. Wearing pink not only sends a message to bullies but also identifies that you, the wearer, are part of a movement to end bullying. Pink

Shirt Day originates in Nova Scotia when two young men stood up against bullying in their high school when a new student was bullied and harassed for wearing pink shirt. Kelowna Now, Northern View, Langley Advance

It's #PinkShirtDay: Canadians take a stand against bullying

Canadians from coast to coast were proudly sporting pink on Wednesday on a day of protest against bullying. Pink Shirt Day is one of several locally and internationally celebrated anti-bullying days – there are more coming in the spring. Today was all about the signature pink T-shirts made famous by a protest at a Canadian high school in 2007. Various jurisdictions in Canada celebrate anti-bullying days on different dates. The tradition of wearing pink shirts emerged in September, 2007, after a Nova Scotia high-school student was targeted with homophobic insults for wearing a pink shirt to school. Two Grade 12 students, Travis Price and David Shepherd, organized their schoolmates to wear pink in solidarity. After the protest spread to schools across Canada and around the world, Nova Scotia's then-premier, Rodney MacDonald, proclaimed a provincewide Stand Up Against Bullying Day on the second Thursday in September. Globe and Mail

Preparing for pink

Two days in February are now filled with pink. Many don the colour on Valentine's Day, but February 25, known as 'Pink Shirt Day' carries a more powerful meaning. Pink Shirt Day was created to make a visible stand against bullying, and now raises awareness for the issue and promotes resources available to bullying victims. The idea stemmed from Nova Scotia where two high school students organized a protest to wear pink in support of a new Grade 9 student who was bullied for wearing the colour. British Columbia now encourages everyone to show their support by wearing something pink on February 25. It recently created its online 'Erase Bullying' site, which features an anonymous and confidential online reporting tool for students. The province is asking to you join the online conversation Wednesday on Twitter @ERASEbullyingBC using the hashtags #Erasebullying and #pinkshirtday. CTV News \(2015-02-24\)

Boys and Girls of Richmond show their true colours

Some of them may be too young to fully comprehend what's going on. But one thing's for sure, come Pink Shirt Day this Wednesday, the 60 or so kids aged six to 12 at Richmond's Boys and Girls Club (BGC) will know they have lots of friends and will have a good idea of how to treat them. Every month, the local BGC, which is run out of Mitchell elementary at Cambie and No. 5 roads, has grown in number since it opened in 2011. However, the anti-bullying message on Feb. 25 remains the same, even if it sails over the heads of the popular club's younger members. "They know something important is going on," said Richmond club coordinator Kirsten Hamaoki. "We talk a lot about being a good friend and helping out any new kids that come into the club. We are trying to be very pro-active when it comes to the programming." Richmond News

Ranchers step up to offer anti-bullying training

Pink shirt day will move out of the schools and onto the land when staff at a ranch in the Cariboo take an anti-bullying seminar. "All ranches are required to take the course," said Liz Twan who along with her husband Bronc manage the Alkali Lake Ranch where the seminar will be held Wednesday. "When I booked the seminar I knew it was anti-bullying day so I bought pink shirts, pink coffee cups and pink paper plates." The seminar is taught by provincial ranch safety consultant Reg Steward, a contractor with the Farm and Ranch Safety and Health Association (FARSHA). Employers and work places are required through WorksafeBC to be educated in the procedure to report bullying in the workplace, understanding what it is and what it is not, Steward told the Tribune. Williams Lake Tribune

We asked local students to write about the topic: What does Pink Shirt Day mean to me?

An opinion piece states, "I am happy to report that over the last few years I have not only noticed more bullying awareness, but also a decrease in bullying around my high school, as we are not only more tolerant of each other, but also more accepting. Although there are many facets to bullying, and by no means has the problem been solved, I believe we have made huge strides in the right direction. Therefore, on Pink Shirt Day we should not only continue spreading the anti-bullying message, but also take a day to celebrate in our schools all the progress we've made. Finally, I think it's most important for us to all reflect on Feb. 25. We should reflect on how we can personally make a difference beyond just one day." North Shore News

Pitt Meadows teen creates anti-bullying campaign in honour of Amanda Todd

Wednesday is Pink Shirt Day, a time to raise awareness about bullying. For Pitt Meadows high school student Sam Porta, talking about bullying is a year-round affair. Porta is the founder of Hockey Against Bullying, a youth-led initiative that uses hockey to get young people talking about bullying. She was inspired by the death of Amanda Todd, the Coquitlam teen who committed suicide in 2012 shortly after posting a video detailing the bullying she endured at school and online. "When Amanda Todd passed, I was like, this is enough, this shouldn't happen," says Porta. "My friends knew her. This could have been my best friend." Porta reached out to Amanda's mother Carol Todd, saying she wanted to start a pink shirt campaign in Amanda's honour. The two have since become good friends. The Hockey Against Bullying campaign started with pink t-shirts and jerseys and has now expanded through social media. Porta has found more ways to raise money and awareness, hosting a bake sale to raise funds for the Amanda Todd Legacy Fund. Global News

Positive action a way of tackling bullying

As the nation recognizes Pink Shirt Day Wednesday, Feb. 25, adults and youth in Williams Lake actually work year-round to curb bullying. For several years schools in Williams Lake have been promoting positive action to help prevent bullying, said Carla Bullinger, a facilitator with Communities that Care. "The positive action program encourages students to feel good about themselves, but it also teaches them how to build healthy relationships with others." Bullinger provides an orientation for teachers, but said it's the teachers and principals who carry out the work. Communities that Care has purchased kits for principals to use in the schools and each week Bullinger distributes a word of the week for the students. Williams Lake Tribune (2015-02-24)

No one is born to bully

Schools across the province stand united today in hopes of bringing an end to the devastating effects bullying can have on young lives. Pink Shirt Day takes place across B.C. today. The movement aims to eliminate schoolyard bullying and alleviate the negative consequences bullying can have on children in school. And the consequences of bullying can be life-altering, not just for the victims but for their families, schoolmates and community. The statistics tell a frightening tale. Bullying is not just an occasional event. According to a report from the Canadian Institutes of Health Research, at least one in three teenaged students in Canada report being bullied, while 47 per cent of Canadian parents report having a child who has been a victim of bullying. Among adult Canadians, 38 per cent of males and 30 per cent of females report having experienced occasional or frequent bullying during their school years. Victoria News (Penticton Western News)

Cornwall and area bathed in anti-bullying colours

It's a bright day in Cornwall, but it has little to do with the sunshine. It's Pink Shirt Day and thousands of individuals are wearing colourful shirts, pants and even shoes to mark the occasion that draws awareness to a growing anti-bullying message. Students at Holy Trinity Catholic Secondary School were decked out in their best pink outfits - and for good reason. The all-boys Grade 7-8 class was named winner of the Cornwall Boys and Girls Club PSA Contest. The class put together a public service announcement with a theme of 'Belonging' to capture the award. Cornwall Seaway News

Police turning to social media to offer tips on protecting property

Police plan to send out a flurry of crime prevention tips via social media Wednesday as part of a provincial "protect your property" campaign. Organized by the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police, the one day campaign aims to equip people with ideas on how to protect themselves from a range of crimes - from fraud to break-and-enters. It could come in handy to residents of London's Old South, where London police have noted a rash of break ins to homes. Since Jan. 1, police have received 15 break-and-enter reports from homes bounded by Carfrae St., Ridout St., Wellington Road and Baseline Rd. E. In most cases, culprits got in by forcing rear and side doors open or breaking windows. London Free Press

Le Canada montré du doigt pour le sort réservé aux autochtones

Le rapport 2014-2015 publié par Amnesty International observe au sujet du Canada que «les peuples autochtones» du pays sont «confrontés à des violations systématiques de leurs droits». Il note aussi que «les attentats perpétrés contre deux soldats canadiens ont suscité un débat à propos des lois relatives au terrorisme et à la sécurité nationale». Amnesty International observe que même si le gouvernement s'est rejeté un projet d'exploitation minière sur le territoire ancestral des Tsilhqot'in en Colombie-Britannique, il «a donné la priorité à l'exploitation des ressources naturelles sur les droits des peuples autochtones dans une série d'autres projets de grande envergure, dont ceux de l'oléoduc Northern Gateway destiné au transport de sables bitumineux et du méga-barrage du Site C, approuvés respectivement en juin et en octobre» de l'an dernier.... Un rapport de la GRC a fait état du meurtre d'au moins 1017 femmes et filles autochtones entre 1980 et 2012, «ce qui représente un taux quatre fois et demie supérieur à celui du reste de la population féminine». Amnesty regrette que le gouvernement fédéral refuse de lancer un plan d'action national ou d'ouvrir une enquête publique en cette matière. La question du droit des femmes autochtones a défrayé l'actualité une large partie de l'année sans que des mesures nouvelles viennent corriger la situation. Le Devoir

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Students across Canada will be wearing pink at school today to mark anti-bullying day. A new poll reveals how much of a problem bullying still is in this country. This is also called pink-shirt day. The campaign started back in 2007 with a group of students in Nova Scotia who witnessed a boy being bullied for wearing a pink shirt. A new Angus Reid poll finds three out of four Canadians adults say they were bullied as a student. Well nearly half the parents say their own kids have been bullied at some point. (CTV News, 9:34, 10:04, 10:19, 10:33, 12:13 ET)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

3 Brooklyn Men Who Allegedly Plotted to Travel to Syria to Join ISIS, Attack NYC If They Failed, Arrested in FBI Raid: Officials

Three Brooklyn men who allegedly planned to travel to Syria to join ISIS were taken into custody during FBI terror raids in the borough Wednesday, law enforcement officials tell NBC 4 New York. The men, aged 19, 24 and 30, allegedly planned to return to New York to commit a domestic act of terror if they failed to join the group overseas, law enforcement officials said. The officials say any potential homegrown threat was aspirational, not operational, but authorities moved in because they believed the suspects' plans to travel abroad were imminent and their alleged intent to join ISIS real. NBC New York

Al-Qaida planning kamikaze attacks on ships in Mediterranean, cables claim

Al-Qaida has developed a seaborne unit to attack targets around the Mediterranean, according to a confidential report from Russian intelligence, one of a cache of secret documents from spy agencies around the world tracking jihadi terrorist groups. According to the Russians, North African al-Qaida (Aqim – al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb) has established a 60-strong team of suicide bombers to plant mines under the hull of ships and to use small, fast craft for kamikaze attacks. The claim, in a leaked document from Russia's Federal Security Service (FSB), is one of a string of reports on the rise of Islamic State (Isis) and al-Qaida. UK Guardian

At least 100 feared killed in Afghan avalanches amid winter storm

Avalanches caused by a heavy winter snow killed at least 108 people in northeastern Afghanistan, an emergency official said Wednesday, as rescuers clawed through debris with their hands to save those buried beneath. The avalanches buried homes across four northeast provinces, killing those beneath, said Mohammad Aslam Syas, the deputy director of the Afghanistan Natural Disaster Management Authority. The province worst hit appeared to be Panjshir province, about 100 kilometres northeast of the capital, Kabul, where the avalanches destroyed or damaged around 100 homes, Syas said. TheSpec.com

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MinStevenBlaney

La #Journéeduchandailrose sur la sensibilisation à l'intimidation. Nous ne la tolérons pas. <http://bit.ly/1DaWbZc>

MinStevenBlaney

It's #PinkShirtDay, day to raise awareness about the issue of bullying. We'll not tolerate it. <http://bit.ly/1DaWS4M>

ShellyGloverMIN

Standing with my colleagues as we mark #PinkShirtDay #stopbullying pic.twitter.com/2eSjhMN0jO

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CBCAlerts

Fire chief says 4 children dead in house fire near community of Kane, SW of #Winnipeg. 3 children, parents survived.

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Lactualite

Stephen Harper est pressé de faire adopter le projet de loi antiterroriste #polcan <http://bit.ly/1EQnudJ>

CBCCanada

Assisted suicide debate push, C-51 debate limits on Wednesdays with Kady <http://ift.tt/1zHFB1X>

jpress

Speakers of #HoC and #SenCA have asked RCMP for meeting to discuss security changes. Full steam ahead. #cdnpoli

jpress

Since Oct. 22, Hill security officers have been armed, comms & emerg notifications improved, & security upgrades to buildings #cdnpoli

jpress

Speakers: "Experience & expertise of members of our Protective Services will be vital to shaping this new era of security" on Hill #cdnpoli

rabbleca

Harper's anti-terror law will turn Canada into a police state via @ElizabethMay <http://buff.ly/1A3UomL> #cdnpoli #c51

ipoliticsca

Four years after vowing change, feds still working to improve oversight of spy agencies | iPolitics
<http://bit.ly/1DUgmhM> #cdnpoli

theprovince

Accused in B.C. legislature terror plot discussed whether to dig, drop or hide bombs <http://theprov.in/1DmU1sa>

globepolitics

RCMP called on to lead security on Parliament Hill <http://bit.ly/1akiyV8> #cdnpoli

TheHillTimes

Lib Sen. Campbell says from exp., RCMP only answer to RCMP, not ppl they have contracts with #HillSecurity
<http://bit.ly/1vzkP8i> #cdnpoli

MacleansMag

The best response to a terrorist threat? Pro tip from @Scott_Gilmore via Italy: "Travel tips and laughter."
<http://ow.ly/JE6Lx>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CanBorder

Canada has specific requirements for who can and cannot enter Canada. Find out more here: <http://www.cbsa-asfc.gc.ca/travel-voyage/ivc-rnc-eng.html#a3> ...

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMPNB

RCMP arrest six people following stabbing at house party, #Moncton <http://ow.ly/JDzhv>

GRCONT

GRC célèbre 40e anniversaire de femmes policières a son service! Évènement pour femmes Ottawa 7 mars Inscrit toi: <http://ow.ly/veSsh>

GRCSask

La GRC de la Saskatchewan demande l'aide du public en lien des cas d'exploitation sexuelle. <http://www.rcmp-grc.gc.ca/sk/news-nouvelle/news-nouvelle-2015/feb25-fra.htm> ... ^rd

CTVancouver

B.C.'s privacy watchdog calls for transparency around body cameras <http://bit.ly/1wedzd5>

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICES CORRECTIONNELS

OttawaCitizen

Former soldier sentenced to four years in prison for plot to attack Veterans Affairs office <http://ow.ly/JDwhB>

COMMUNITY SAFETY AND PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

LaureenHarper

Today is National #PinkShirtDay. Take a stand against bullying by wearing pink, talking to loved ones & raising awareness. @Pinkshirtday

GetCyberSafe

Find out how you can help #StopBullying in our blog post about #pinkshirtday!
<http://www.getcybersafe.gc.ca/cnt/blg/pst-20150218-eng.aspx> ...

cyber_securite

Dis non à la #cyberintimidation! Consultez l'article sur la Journée du Chandail Rose: <http://www.pensezcybersecurite.gc.ca/cnt/blg/pst-20150218-fra.aspx> ...

globeandmail

It's #PinkShirtDay: Canadians take a stand against bullying <http://trib.al/OM3KBAE>

GetCyberSafe

If you believe it, retweet it. #StopBullying

bcRCMP

On Pink Shirt day we encourage everyone to wear pink and show your support #PinkShirtDay

MinPeterMacKay

Encouraging everyone to wear pink today in recognition of #AntiBullyingDay. Together we can make a difference to #StopBullying

APTNNNews

Follow @APTNAFrancis @delaneywindigo @JorgeBarrera @afixedaddress @tfennario for coverage of upcoming meetings on #MMIW starting Thursday

APTNNNews

Agenda is out for Friday's #MMIW People's Gathering at Carleton University #roundtable2015

VancouverSun

Bullying still a serious problem, poll says <http://ow.ly/2V9E9L>

INTERNATIONAL

CTVNews

#BREAKING: @CTVMercedes confirms Canadian Special Forces pulled from town in Niger over concerns of Boko Haram

BreakingNews

Paris prosecutors' office: 3 Al-Jazeera journalists are arrested for illegally flying a drone over the city - @AP <http://bit.ly/1BV90eR>

ikenney

#ISIL terrorists are a threat to regional and international security. We are confronting this threat head-on

CTVNews

Three arrested in U.S. on charges they plotted to join Islamic State <http://ow.ly/JEbSS> guardian

Al-Qaida planning kamikaze attacks on ships in Mediterranean, cables claim <http://trib.al/C4hZ1rm>

Blogs

Toronto Jane: The First Woman to be Documented on the Front Lines with ISIS

The first case of a female on the Islamic State (ISIS) front lines has been documented. A Canadian woman has been tracked through every ISIS stronghold in Syria and Iraq over the past month via her cell phone location services and corresponding tweets. Western women traveling to the Islamic State is nothing new, but up until this development, females have only taken a supportive role to the cadre. It appears on the surface that the role of women in the Islamic State battlefield may be evolving. There is evidence from the locations of this woman that coincide with local Islamic State gains, which suggests that she may be involved in reconnaissance on behalf of the Caliphate. iBRABO

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
February 25, 2015 / le 25 février 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

CSIS needs power to stop high-risk travellers, says Steven Blaney

Canada must take action to prevent its citizens from travelling abroad for terrorist purposes, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said after a CBC News investigation revealed a 23-year-old Edmonton woman travelled to Syria after being radicalized. "Clearly, Canada cannot become an exporter of terrorism. This is not the Canadian way of living," Blaney said Wednesday. The woman, whom CBC News is calling Aisha to protect her identity, made the journey to Syria to join up with ISIS last summer, after taking an online course to study the Qur'an taught by a woman based in Edmonton, according to her older sister Rabia (whose name has also been changed). Blaney said the Conservative-backed Bill C-51 — which would bolster CSIS's powers, allowing the security agency to disrupt the travel plans or financial transactions of Canadians the agency believes have been radicalized — is aimed at preventing stories just like Aisha's. "In Bill C-51, there are provisions that enable our intelligence officers to interact with the families and the communities, not only to engage in a discussion but to reduce the threat and prevent individuals from travelling," he said. "Currently, we are not able to prevent a high-risk traveller from boarding an airplane. With the bill, we will be able to prevent those individuals from getting on board.... So that's the threat diminishment measure that is in the bill, that clearly would have helped to avoid that kind of situation." Blaney said the bill — which has prompted vocal opposition from civil libertarians and privacy advocates — would also criminalize the promotion of terrorism. CBC News

Five things to know about developments with the federal anti terror bill

Five things to know about developments Wednesday in the debate about the federal government's proposed anti-terrorism bill: The government says it is working on a means of better monitoring Canadian intelligence agencies — more than four years after having committed to do so. Opposition parties have criticized the government for not bolstering security oversight in Bill C-51, introduced last month. NDP Leader Tom Mulcair accused the government of trying to limit planned committee hearings on the bill, saying it was "reckless and irresponsible to try to ram it through." Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said the opposition was attacking the credibility of security officers working to protect the public. Hearings on the bill are expected to begin next month. The National Union of Public and General Employees, which has about 340,000 members, criticized the legislation and said the government was using it to drum up Conservative support before a federal election. Canadian Press (Courier Islander)

Une Canadienne rejoint l'EI après un cours en ligne organisé à Edmonton

Une Canadienne de 23 ans partie rejoindre le groupe armé État islamique en Syrie s'est radicalisée après avoir suivi un cours en ligne à Edmonton, selon sa sœur. CBC/Radio-Canada a choisi de l'appeler Aisha pour protéger son identité. Certains détails, dont le lieu de résidence de sa famille, sont aussi tus pour des raisons de sécurité. Sa sœur Rabia, dont le nom a aussi été changé, soutient qu'Aisha a été recrutée par l'intermédiaire d'une Edmontonienne organisant un cours en ligne sur le Coran. CBC/Radio-Canada a pu confirmer l'identité de cette femme et a appris qu'elle a été renvoyée d'une mosquée où elle essayait de faire du recrutement. Nous ne dévoilons pas son identité, car elle ne fait l'objet d'aucune accusation. L'inspecteur Dan Jones, de la police d'Edmonton, a confirmé que la situation n'était pas connue de son service avant que la GRC l'appelle pour lui dire qu'un reportage allait être publié. « On ne peut pas être partout. Si on avait été impliqués un peu plus tôt, on aurait peut-être pu faire quelque chose. » « On ne peut pas se permettre d'échouer », a-t-il poursuivi à propos de la radicalisation. Il a demandé à la population d'alerter les autorités si jamais elle observe des cas suspects. Le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a profité du cas pour faire la promotion du projet de loi C-51, qui doit permettre aux juges d'accorder des pouvoirs d'intervention plus importants aux policiers et aux agents du SCRS. « Nos policiers ont besoin d'outils supplémentaires, a-t-il indiqué. Nous souhaitons faciliter cette démarche. » Radio-Canada

Une jeune Canadienne a rejoint l'État islamique

Une Canadienne de 23 ans a rejoint les rangs de l'organisation radicale État islamique en Syrie après s'être radicalisée sur Internet, a indiqué sa famille dans un reportage diffusé mercredi par la chaîne CBC. Selon sa petite sœur, la jeune femme s'était inscrite à un supposé cours en ligne sur le coran donné par une femme d'Edmonton qui en fait expliquait comment se rendre à Raqqa, « capitale » autoproclamée de l'État islamique. À la suite de cela, elle s'est envolée à l'été dernier vers la Syrie, bien que des membres des Services canadiens du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) venaient d'avertir sa famille. « Ils nous ont dit qu'elle était en lien avec des personnes qu'ils pensaient dangereuses et qui l'influençaient dans l'été », a dit à CBC la petite sœur. La Canadienne n'a plus donné de signe de vie depuis plusieurs jours, selon sa famille qui craint pour sa vie. Pour le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique Steven Blaney, cette affaire démontre la nécessaire adoption d'une réforme antiterroriste controversée. À l'étude actuellement au Parlement, elle permettrait d'enquêter et d'interpeller ce genre de candidats au djihad. AFP (La Presse)

Work on better spy monitoring still underway four years after promise: feds

The Conservative government says it is working on more comprehensive monitoring of Canadian intelligence agencies — over four years after committing to do so. In December 2010, the government promised to allow the review of national security activities involving multiple departments and agencies. The goal was to eliminate barriers that prevent spy watchdogs from talking to each other. It also pledged to create an internal mechanism to ensure accountability and compliance with the laws and policies governing national security information-sharing. The commitments were included in the Harper government's response to a federal commission of inquiry into the 1985 Air India bombing that killed 329 people, most of them Canadians. Josée Sirois, a Public Safety Department spokeswoman, says the government is still developing options for inter-agency security review, adding she has no details on when it might be done. "The government of Canada recognizes the importance of independent review in maintaining Canadians' trust in our national security activities," Sirois said. "I don't have any more specific details in terms of a timeline." Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press; CTV News.ca; AM 1150.ca; Metro News.ca; La Presse; mysask.com; Times Colonist; Huffington Post; Blackburnnews.com; Squamish Chief; Baytoday.ca)

Parliament should give Harper's flawed anti-terror bill the scrutiny it merits

An editorial states, "Back in 2001 Parliament took the time it needed to give Canada's first anti-terror legislation after the Al Qaeda attacks a thorough vetting. Jean Chrétien's Liberal government heard from some 80 expert witnesses, many of them critical, at 19 committee hearings before voting an amended version into law. But that was then. Today Prime Minister Stephen Harper is moving with unholy haste to ram Terror 2.0, the new Anti-Terrorism Act 2015, on to the books with scant oversight and no changes. He has urged MPs to pass the hugely flawed Bill C-51 "as quickly as possible." Sober second thought has no place on his agenda. His Conservative government has cut short initial debate in the Commons. And as the Star's Alex Boutilier reports, it is now trying to do the same in committee. The Tory-dominated Public Safety and National Security panel wants to give Public Safety Minister Stephen Blaney and Justice Minister Peter MacKay a hearing to extol the bill. The panel then proposes to hold just three additional meetings to solicit opinion from expert witnesses. That could mean as few as 18 experts get to testify..." Toronto Star

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés:

CBC News provided coverage of debate in Question Period between Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney and Opposition Leader Tom Mulcair on Bill C-51. Rough Transcript

CTV News - Power Play interviewed University of Waterloo professor Lorne Dawson regarding a woman from Edmonton who has reportedly gone overseas to join the terrorist group ISIS. Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney was mentioned during the segment. Rough Transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Canada's new rules could cost railways that cause forest fires

Canada's new rail safety legislation would make it possible for governments to recover costs from railways for any fire they cause, not just accidents that involve crude oil, said Transport Canada, a change that could force railways to pay millions in costs associated with forest fires. Reuters (Yahoo! News)

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

RCMP's Parliament Hill security takeover to begin 'immediately'

After a combined total of just four days of parliamentary debate, both the House and Senate have signed off on a controversial proposal to hand over control of Parliament Hill security to the RCMP. The Conservatives used their majority to curtail debate on the motion in both the House and Senate. In a joint statement, House of Commons Speaker Andrew Scheer and his Senate counterpart, Pierre Claude Nolin, said that they've already sent a letter to RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson to "discuss next steps," but the integration process is expected to begin "immediately." CBC News; Agence QMI (Le Journal de Montréal)

Edmonton police learned about alleged ISIS recruiter from CBC story

Within hours of a CBC News story appearing this morning about a young Canadian woman who travelled to Syria to join ISIS fighters after being radicalized by an Edmonton woman, police in the city held a news conference to discuss the issue. At a noon news conference Wednesday, Insp. Dan Jones with the Edmonton police investigative support branch said he learned about the alleged recruiter after RCMP alerted him to a story published Wednesday morning on CBC websites across the country. "The RCMP made us aware of a news story that came out today," Jones told reporters. CBC News; Metro News; Global News; CBC News; Edmonton Sun; Edmonton Journal

Young Canadian woman joins Islamic State group

A young Canadian woman abruptly left her family to join the Islamic State group in Syria after purportedly being radicalized while studying religion online, public broadcaster CBC said Wednesday. Canada's spy agency warned the family that their daughter had been "interacting with people they thought were dangerous and were influencing her in a negative way," according to the sister. It comes as the Canadian government is set to grant sweeping powers to its spy agency to thwart terror plots and disrupt suspected extremists' travel plans, such as preventing them from boarding a plane to join a banned group abroad. AFP \(Yahoo! News\); Arutz Sheva

Des cégepiens soupçonnés d'avoir rejoint le groupe État islamique

Au moins trois étudiants du Collège de Maisonneuve, dont deux filles, ont quitté le pays et ont vraisemblablement rejoint les djihadistes en Syrie, a appris notre Bureau d'enquête. Noura serait partie avec Ahmed (nom fictif), également étudiant au Collège de Maisonneuve. Le 21 janvier dernier, la GRC a rendu visite à un voisin et à la propriétaire de l'immeuble où il habite, dans Villeray. Le Journal de Montréal

Man accused of being Canadian security threat says weapons purchases fueled by love of guns, not terrorism

A Toronto man federal officials are alleging is a security threat and a member of a Pakistani terrorist group repeatedly professed his love of guns Wednesday as he was questioned about the weapons he once stockpiled. "I love guns," Mohammed Aqeeq Ansari, 30, said at an Immigration and Refugee Board hearing that will decide whether he will be deported back to Pakistan. The hearing began Tuesday and was expected to conclude next week. During his testimony, Mr. Ansari was asked by a Canada Border Services Agency official why someone who was jobless and living in his brother's basement would accumulate $20,000-worth of guns and ammunition in four months. National Post

Canadian Association of Police Governance seeking membership feedback about Anti-Terrorism Act

The Canadian Association of Police Governance (CAPG) has asked the local police services board to participate in a survey regarding the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015, introduced in the House of Commons earlier this year. The proposed legislation, Bill C-51, is meant to strengthen Canadian security forces, says Barry Devolin, MP for Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock. The bill passed second reading on Tuesday (Feb. 24) and has been referred to the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security. "This is an important piece of legislation," says MP Devolin. "I presume this will be completed before we rise in June." In the report to the KLPS board, the CAPG stat's it's seeking feedback from its membership on the proposed anti-terrorism legislation. myKawartha.com

CSE monitors your emails to the government: What you need to know

Canada's electronic spy agency collects and stores millions of emails sent to the government to check for malware and suspicious links, according to documents obtained by NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden. But experts are concerned about the scope of the surveillance. The top-secret documents – obtained by Snowden and published by CBC in collaboration with U.S. news site The Intercept – reveal Communications Security Establishment (CSE) analysts comb through hundreds of thousands of emails a day and store details about those emails for "days to months." According to the CBC report, the emails are collected to protect the government from hackers, cyber criminals and enemy states. The article notes that CSE says "specific communications" are examined if they are "suspected to relate to a cyber-threat that could harm government of Canada systems and networks." Global News

Parents of B.C. man who volunteered to fight ISIS support his 'intense desire' to defend Canadian values

The parents of a British Columbia man who traveled to Syria last week to volunteer in the fight against ISIS said Wednesday they were proud of their son and supported his "intense desire" to defend Canadian values. The former member of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry is the second Canadian veteran known to have volunteered to fight ISIS alongside Kurdish forces, after Ontario's Dillon Hiller. Although he was no longer in the military, Mr. Glossop was upset that terrorists were targeting soldiers inside Canada and began planning a trip to Iraq to "take on ISIS on their own turf," his friend said. He was also "offended" by John Maguire, a former University of Ottawa student who became radicalized and appeared in an ISIS propaganda video last December calling for terrorist attacks in Canada. National Post

B.C. man accused in terror case wanted to be armed for Canada Day attack: trial

A B.C. man accused in a terrorism case appears in surveillance videos to be anxious to be armed with a gun for an alleged Canada Day attack at the provincial legislature. John Nuttall and his wife Amanda Korody were both charged in July 2013 after an RCMP investigation that captured hours of video and audio recordings. The videos have shown Nuttall and Korody developing their plan and discussing the details with an undercover officer, who they believe is an Arab businessman sympathetic to radical Islam. In the latest video played for the jury, recorded in a motel room on June 28, Nuttall curses as he tells Korody they must have guns before executing their plan. Nuttall appears angry that the supposed businessman hadn't yet obtained firearms, and he says he won't do anything without a gun. Previous videos have shown Nuttall repeatedly asking the officer to ensure they have automatic weapons, but the officer has not said whether that will happen. Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press)

Video shows terror suspect wanted to carry gun while planting bombs

A few days before an alleged plot to detonate bombs at the B.C. Legislature in Victoria, terror suspect John Nuttall is captured on police surveillance video saying he needs a gun to help carry out the conspiracy. Nuttall's comment is made after he and his wife, Amanda Korody, have spent several hours working on building bombs to be placed in planters and exploded outside the legislature on Canada Day 2013. The Province

Un Montréalais soupçonné de terrorisme

La Couronne demande une ordonnance préventive de ne pas troubler la paix contre un Montréalais, la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) ayant dit craindre qu'il ne commette un acte terroriste. Une assignation à comparaître a été émise pour Merouane Ghalmi, qui doit se présenter jeudi devant un juge de la Cour du Québec. L'assignation indique que l'homme âgé de 22 ans sera appelé à signer une ordonnance de ne pas troubler la paix. Le Service des poursuites pénales du Canada souligne que le gouvernement fédéral a utilisé à moins de dix reprises ces ordonnances de ne pas troubler la paix dans des cas reliés au terrorisme. Le porte-parole de la Couronne fédérale, Daniel Brien, a rappelé qu'il s'agissait d'une mesure préventive. La GRC au Québec n'a pas voulu commenter, mercredi, et une personne ayant répondu à un appel à la demeure de Merouane Ghalmi a raccroché lorsque jointe par La Presse Canadienne. La Presse Canadienne (La Presse); Canadian Press (mysask.com)

Attentat raté contre VIA Rail : Esseghaier planifiait une attaque à l'anthrax

Le procès des deux hommes soupçonnés d'avoir voulu fomenter un attentat pour le compte d'Al-Qaïda s'est poursuivi, mercredi, avec le témoignage d'un musulman que Chiheb Esseghaier a tenté de recruter pour faire dérailler un train en Ontario en décembre 2012. Un interdit de publication empêche toutefois d'identifier cet important témoin de la Couronne. Radio-Canada

Committee opts to study terror financing over oil, economy

Finance Minister Joe Oliver has gotten his wish: The Commons Finance committee has agreed to study terrorism financing — even though the topic was examined at great length by the Senate banking committee just recently. The committee, with its Conservative majority, voted in favor of the proposed study Tuesday morning. NDP Finance critic Nathan Cullen — who had called on the committee to study the effects of cheap oil on the Canadian economy — called it political opportunism. iPolitics

Ottawa twins charged with terror-related offences applying for Indian status

The Ottawa twins facing terror-related charges for allegedly trying to join ISIS are currently trying to obtain Indian status, APTN National News has learned. APTN National News

Anti-terrorism bill too far reaching: MP Stewart

What do Burnaby Mayor Derek Corrigan, gardening grannies along the Arbutus corridor and truckers serving local ports have in common? They could all find themselves the targets of Canadian Security Intelligence Service or RCMP operations if a proposed anti-terrorism bill is passed in Parliament, says Burnaby-Douglas New Democrat MP Kennedy Stewart. Bill C-51 defines "activity that undermines the security of Canada" as including that which interferes with "the economic or financial stability of Canada" and "critical infrastructure." Burnaby NewsLeader

Unnecessary terror bill to be rammed through Parliament

An opinion piece states, "Stephen Harper's government plans to ram its massive new security bill through Parliament with little debate. This is not exactly a surprise..." Toronto Star

Climate hysterics have wrong 'intel'

An opinion piece states, "Indulge me today while I dispense with a smear campaign some climate hysterics have spread about me in the wake of the leak of an RCMP report on environmental radicalism in Canada. Their smear is the false suggestion I provided "intel" to the RCMP in the preparation of this report, which began on one environmental website I'm not going to give any publicity to, and was then widely referenced on social media by people who had no idea of what they were talking about. Simply put, the suggestion I provided "intel" to the RCMP is a lie and anyone who says it is a liar..." Toronto Sun

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News – Power & Politics discussed the case of a radicalized woman from Edmonton who travelled to Syria to fight for CSIS with Roxanne James, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Safety, along with MPs Chrystia Freeland and Megan Leslie. Rough Transcript

CTV News - Power Play interviewed Conservative MP Stella Ambler, NDP MP Jinny Sims and Liberal MP Yvonne Jones regarding a woman from Edmonton who has reportedly gone overseas to join the terrorist group ISIS. Rough Transcript

CBC News – Power & Politics discussed the impact of Bill C-51 on aboriginal and environmental dissent with Pam Palmater and Jim Emberger. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NY regulators analyze banks' cyber security, plan to examine insurers' protections

New York's top financial regulator says his office is considering tougher cyber security requirements for banks with more complex computer sign-ins and certifications from their contractors of their defenses. The Associated Press (Fox Business); AFP (Yahoo! News)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Cover preview: Inside the RCMP's biggest crisis

Four years after RCMP spokesperson Catherine Galliford shone a light on a crisis of sexual harassment and retribution within the force, female Mounties tell Maclean's that the same old syndrome persists: Faced with a revelations of harassment, they say, the RCMP too often manages to protect the accused harasser while punishing the victim. The Mounties insist they've recognized the problem and, armed with new tools, are poised to act. Laws that came into force two months ago have beefed up Commissioner Bob Paulson's powers to fire perpetrators, while long-awaited processes for resolving harassment complaints are on the books. Yet the accusations keep coming. Maclean's speaks to a female Mountie whose harassment complaint was deemed unfounded by the force, after she complained she was sexually assaulted by a male superior. And Maclean's speaks to RCMP psychiatrist Greg Passey who calls the RCMP a "totally dysfunctional organization." Maclean's

'I put my hand on his head, tried to stop the bleeding': Couple that tried to save St. Albert Mountie

It was 20 minutes until close at the St. Albert Apex Casino in the early hours of January 17. Rodney and Irene Codner were having a night out and were playing slots. They had just contemplated going home but decided to stay. They were having a good night on the machines. It's a decision that will likely haunt them for the rest of their lives. "I heard a commotion," said Rodney. "I look up and I see the two officers... they were chasing the guy and the three were charging towards us." "One officer tried to grab ahold of the guy from behind... and the guy turned around with a gun and he shot the first officer in the head," said Rodney, his voice breaking. The two officers: Const. David Wynn and Auxiliary Const. Derek Bond. The shooter was 34-year-old Shawn Maxwell Rehn. Global News

Former RCMP spokeswoman frustrated by another delay in sexual harassment trial

A court delay means the frustration continues for a former RCMP spokeswoman who was the first to file a sexual harassment claim against the force. Catherine Galliford says the post-traumatic stress has become hard to handle. "I think about it every day." The trial was supposed to start February 16th, but Galliford says the judge felt it was going to take more time in court than they had originally put aside. "I'm waiting for closure, I'm just waiting for a resolution to this and so far that has not [happened]." She's technically still with the force as she continues to wait for a medical discharge. "One of the things that I've asked for is, I would like to go to a PTSD recovery group, and one of the things I've been told by the group is that I'm not treatable as long as I'm attached to the RCMP. Galliford's lawsuit against the feds, province and several officers claims years of abuse, including sex assaults, intimidation and harassment. There are other lawsuits now against the force from women with similar accusations. "I received the PTSD as a direct result of harassment within the RCMP," claims Galliford. So what I'm asking them for is to acknowledge the fact that I have PTSD...I would like the RCMP to help me find new tools to deal with it on a day to day level." News 1130

Whitehorse : un commerce attaqué à la machette

Cinq personnes ont été arrêtées après une attaque à main armée mardi dans un commerce de Whitehorse, a déclaré la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC). Selon un communiqué de la police, deux suspects munis d'une machette et d'une matraque auraient volé de l'argent d'un magasin de la rue Elliott vers 17 h après avoir demandé d'accéder au coffre-fort. Personne n'a été blessé lors de l'incident. Environ deux heures plus tard, la GRC a encerclé un véhicule au coin de la 2e Avenue et de la rue Hanson. Les policiers y ont découvert des objets qui seraient liés au commerce attaqué. Le chauffeur du véhicule et les quatre passagers ont été arrêtés sans incident, a déclaré la police. La GRC demande au public de lui fournir toute information pertinente dans cette affaire. Radio-Canada

Man pleads guilty to threatening to blow up Yorkton RCMP detachment

A man has pleaded guilty to threatening to blow up a RCMP detachment in Yorkton. Shayne James Trowbridge, who is 40, admitted in Yorkton provincial court to uttering threats to harm RCMP members and uttering threats to destroy an RCMP building. Canadian Press (CTV Regina)

Accused in Mob murder in court after extradition

One of the four men accused in the 2012 Mob-style execution of Johnnie Raposo in Little Italy made his first appearance in a Toronto courtroom Wednesday, amid heightened security, after finally being extradited from Greece. Toronto Police allege Rabih "Robby" Alkhalil, 27, and two associates - Nicola Nero, 36, of Niagara Falls, and Martino Caputo, 39, of Toronto - hired accused hitman Dean Wiwchar to carry out the brazen killing. Niagara Regional Police and the Surete du Quebec wanted Alkhalil on drug trafficking and importing cocaine charges. The RCMP wanted him for passport-related offences. Toronto Sun; The Province

Des accusations en lien avec la pornographie juvénile contre Patrick Prud'homme

Un homme de 41 ans, Patrick Prud'homme, a été accusé au palais de justice de Roberval de dix chefs de possession, de distribution et de production de matériel de pornographie juvénile. Depuis sa création il y a douze ans, l'escouade constituée d'enquêteurs de la Sûreté du Québec (SQ) et de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) a mené près de 300 arrestations à travers le Québec en lien avec l'exploitation sexuelle des enfants. Radio-Canada

Two men who robbed gas station armed with handguns sought by Strathmore RCMP

Strathmore RCMP are looking for two men who, armed with handguns, robbed a gas station in Rocky View County. The two men entered The Filling Station in Wrangler Park at about 10:20 a.m. on Saturday, according to police. One then placed a handgun on the counter and demanded money from the employee behind the cash register. When the employee didn't comply right away, the man raised the gun and issued the demand again. Metro News

Legal armed robbery has Alberta RCMP seeking assistance

Officers with the Morinville RCMP are looking for a man who robbed the Super Mart in Legal, Alta. on Wednesday morning. With his face covered, the man entered the store, pulled out a handgun, and demanded money and cigarettes, according to police. He then fled with the cash and tobacco in an "older white domestic vehicle," eastbound on Highway 651, RCMP said in a release. Metro News

Former Sask. youth volunteer charged with sexual exploitation

Police believe there may be more victims after a Regina man was charged with child exploitation last month. An investigation into Nathan Michael Labatt began after a parent of a Lanigan, Sask. youth complained to RCMP in July 2014 that their son had received inappropriate text messages from a man. Labatt, 24, has also been charged with invitation to sexual touching and possession of child pornography. None of the allegations have been proven in court. Global News; CBC News

Kinder Morgan drilling draws protesters

A handful of protesters are keeping watch over a Kinder Morgan drilling site in New Westminster - with several temporarily blocking traffic Tuesday on a Highway 1 on-ramp near the site. Wednesday, a few protesters could be seen gathered on the overpass, including Jakub Markiewicz, who a few months ago crawled under a Kinder Morgan vehicle and told media - using the pseudonym George Khossi - he wouldn't leave until "Kinder Morgan is held accountable and Stephen Harper is put out of power and Christy Clark and any other member of Parliament who is deemed unworthy to represent the people." A few hours later, he voluntarily climbed out. He also crawled up a tree during the Burnaby Mountain protests and had to be removed by RCMP. 24 Hours Vancouver

Ontario chiefs of police target property crime in awareness campaign

Police chiefs from around the province want to crack down on property crime by getting the public more involved in their neighbourhoods and encouraging residents to report all crime, no matter how petty the incident. Windsor Star

La SQ doit abolir au moins 150 postes de cadre

La Sûreté du Québec n'échappera pas aux mesures d'austérité imposées par le gouvernement Couillard pour atteindre l'équilibre budgétaire. De nombreux cadres sont visés par des coupes de plusieurs millions de dollars dans le budget du corps de police provincial. Radio-Canada

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Career criminal Albert Foulston who served 20 years for killing an Edmonton city cop in the '90s is back behind bars

A career criminal who served a 20-year prison sentence for his role in the killing of an Edmonton police officer in the early '90s is back behind bars. Albert Foulston was arrested Tuesday evening and is facing charges of robbery, break and enter and breaching a recognizance. Foulston has spent more than 30 years behind bars on more than 50 convictions, and is described in parole board reports as a remorseless drug addict, caught using heroin both in and out of prison. The former head of the Edmonton Police Association (EPA) called Foulston the poster boy for a failed parole system. His case is the catalyst for the EPA to start compiling files on repeat offenders. Edmonton Sun

Parole Board says convicted Terrace killer making progress

A convicted killer who is on an unescorted absence from prison had one of his release conditions modified to allow him to attend an event on Wednesday. Alexander has been denied parole four times since he became eligible in 2006, but has been granted a number of escorted and unescorted temporary absences. He is currently on a 60-day unescorted temporary absence that began in January. According to a recently released decision from the Parole Board of Canada, Alexander was to attend the Winter Closing Ceremony at the Kwikwèxwelhp Healing Village and return to his halfway house by 11:30 p.m. He attended the Winter Opening Ceremony in November with no concern. The Province

Sudbury PoV: Drunk driving fight an endless battle

An opinion piece states, "When he was sentenced in September 2010, Nicholas Piovesan asked for forgiveness. "I understand how much anger you must have toward me," Piovesan said. "I hope you all find strength to forgive me, not so much for myself, but for yourself, so the anger and hurt does not destroy you," Piovesan said, as he looked at the family and friends of Steven Philippe, 16, Jazmine Houle, 15, and Caitlin Jelley, 15. He struck and killed the teens as they walked along the shoulder of Municipal Road 80 around 12:30 a.m. on June 21, 2009... The tragedy shook the families of everyone involved, the city and the legal community. He was sentenced to seven years for criminal negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle causing death; at the time, it was the harshest penalty of its kind handed out in Canada. Now, however, Piovesan is about to be released from prison. The Parole Board of Canada says the now 31-year-old man will be freed in May and will live in Sturgeon Falls..." Sudbury Star

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Missing and murdered women solution includes grassroots say minister, advocate

B.C.'s Aboriginal Affairs Minister John Rustad said grassroots movements are key to solving the large number of aboriginal women who go missing or are murdered in Canada ahead of a national roundtable on the issue. Starting on Friday, representatives from around the country, including the families of aboriginal women who have gone missing, will meet in Ottawa for the National Roundtable on Missing and Murdered Aboriginal Women. CBC News

Aboriginal chief says Valcourt 'ill-informed' on violence against indigenous women

The country's top First Nations chief says federal Aboriginal Affairs Minister Bernard Valcourt was "ill-informed" when he spoke about how indigenous men have a lack of respect for women on reserves. "I think they were ill-informed. We've got to do a better job of educating not only the ministers in government, but the general public, about the impacts of this situation - about missing and murdered women and girls and the violence in our communities." Ottawa Citizen

Community Safety Plan meeting this week

A stakeholder meeting is set for this week to build on the existing community safety plan for the city of North Battleford. The meeting is set for Thursday and was mentioned at council Monday by City Community Safety Co-ordinator Herb Sutton. He said about 50 people are coming to meet at the Chapel Gallery and it is a "wide cross-section of people from across the city," he said. Represented will various agencies from around the community. There will also be people coming from Public Safety Canada and the provincial Ministry of Justice. The idea is to build on the existing plan with the help of the federal and provincial governments. According to Sutton's report it includes a three-step process: a community leadership commitment, community mobilization and a community safety plan. This was a process by Public Safety Canada in co-ordination with the Building Partnerships to Reduce Crime. According to Sutton, Public Safety Canada approached BPRC to try the process out in a community in the province, and North Battleford was recommended by the province "because they felt our community was well-poised to do this work." News-Optimist

Mayor upset PoCo not consulted ahead of Schoenborn decision

The Mayor of Port Coquitlam is voicing his concern that his community has no say in whether child killer Allan Schoenborn is granted escorted visits into the area. This comes one day ahead of an expected decision on the matter from the BC Review Board. Greg Moore is upset the panel that's making the decision on whether to give Schoenborn the visits hasn't come to city hall and it hasn't asked the community for any input. News 1130

On Pink Shirt Day, Edmonton students create lasting message against bullying

People across Edmonton shared photos on Twitter of their pink attire Wednesday, including councillors, RCMP, and many students at local schools. Edmonton Journal

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

FBI: 3 Brooklyn Men Arrested For Attempting To Join ISIS, Plotting Terror Attacks In U.S.

FBI agents arrested three Brooklyn men for allegedly attempting to travel abroad to join the terror group ISIS, with one man agreeing to kill President Barack Obama if ordered to, according to a criminal complaint. The trio had also discussed launching attacks domestically if they were unable to travel to join the terror group, authorities said. Abdurasul Hasanovich Juraboev, Akhror Saidakhmetov and Abror Habibov face charges of conspiracy to provide material support to terrorists. CBS News; Daily Mail; LA Times

Chinese spies responsible for break-ins at African nuclear site: leaked documents

Chinese industrial spies were responsible for a series of mysterious break-ins by armed robbers at a South African nuclear research site, a leaked intelligence document says. It is the latest revelation from hundreds of leaked "spy cables" obtained by Al Jazeera and released in daily batches this week. The new documents on Wednesday expose how Africa has become a happy hunting ground for Chinese and Russian spies seeking technological and geopolitical advantage. Globe and Mail

3 Al-Jazeera journalists arrested for flying a drone in Paris; other drone flights unsolved

Three Al-Jazeera journalists have been arrested for illegally flying a drone in Paris Wednesday, after unidentified drones flew over the Eiffel Tower and key Paris landmarks for a second night running. It's further baffled French authorities who are investigating a spate of unidentified flying objects in the Paris skies at a time of high security across the country. The Associated Press (The Telegram)

Muslim forum on 'terrorism' seeks education reform

A counter-terrorism conference attended by senior Muslim scholars from around the world on Wednesday called for education reform to tackle religious extremism. AFP (Yahoo! News)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

CBCNews

'Canada cannot become an exporter of terrorism,' says public safety minister ift.tt/1AsiqMV

CBCAlerts

Public Safety Minister Blaney says CSIS needs power to stop Canadians from going abroad for terrorist purposes: cbc.ca/1.2972496 #ISIS

davidakin

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney says C-51 would prevent Cdns from travelling to ISIS territory @... instagram.com/p/ziPIsqkMX/

davidakin

"At this point #CSIS can only collect information," @MinStevenBlaney says. #C51 would give CSIS mandate to "disrupt"

davidakin

This is what Blaney is responding to: ISIS recruited Canadian woman to join fight in Syria cbc.ca/m/news/topstor...

HannahThibedeau

NDP Leader @ThomasMulcair leads of QP ...asking if govt will give more than three days for testimony #cdnpoli

HannahThibedeau

Pub Safety Min @MinStevenBlaney does not answer the question. Only to say imp't legislation ...needs to pass #cdnpoli

HBuzzetti

Pour ceux qui ça intéresse. La loi antiterroriste de 2001 avait fait l'objet de 19 séances de comité (38 heures). @MinStevenBlaney #cdnpoli

HBuzzetti

If you wonder. The antiterror bill of 2001 (9/11) went through 19 committee sessions (38 hours). @MinStevenBlaney #cdnpoli

kady

Today I Learned: "Each time the government introduces a bill, it ensures that bill is constitutional." Thanks, Minister Blaney. #QP

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PnPCBC

MPs Roxanne James, @cafreeland and @MeganLeslieMP talk ISIS female recruitment and if #C51 will help stem recruitment. #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

Roxanne James: CSIS' current mandate does not enable them to intervene. They have no ability to threaten disruption.

PnPCBC

@MeganLeslieMP: There's nothing in #C51 that will actually help us stop this radicalization.

PnPCBC

Roxanne James: can't comment on whether CSIS handed over information on radicalization to RCMP. #cdnpoli #pnpcbc

PnPCBC

@cafreeland: 2015 is a dangerous time. We're supporting the bill, we have serious concerns, but this is the reason why. #C51 #cdnpoli

kady

RCMP's Parliament Hill security takeover to begin 'immediately': After a combined total of just four days ... bit.ly/1LIRnRe #hw

CTV PowerPlay

@jbellava obtained a report saying the RCMP is worried about the use of drones by terrorist groups. #cdnpoli

APTNNews

Ottawa twins charged with terror-related offences applying for Indian status fb.me/4FSrL2y4T

nationalpost

Man accused of being Canadian security threat says weapons purchases fueled by love of guns, not terrorism natpo.st/1zfLYse

CJAD800

RCMP fears Montreal man will commit terrorism offence; seeks peace bond dlvr.it/8ktXZz

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMPAlberta

The #RCMP and @CityofLeduc team up against bullying on #PinkShirtDay rcmp.ca/-1rw

bcRCMP

The BC RCMP is once again proudly supporting Pink Shirt Day #PinkShirtDay

GRCduLMD

Nos services cynophiles intégrés prennent position contre l'intimidation #PinkShirtDay

GlobalEdmonton

Raw video: Full intvu w/ #StAB couple who witnessed #RCMP shooting & tried to help glnb.ca/JENr3#CstWynn ctvregina

Man pleads guilty to threatening to blow up Yorkton RCMP detachment ow.ly/JEHR6

Blogs

Political activist Ken Stone takes CSIS to task for alleged harassment

What is it like to be targeted by Canada's spy agency? Veteran anti-war and environmental activist Ken Stone knows firsthand and is willing to talk about it. The retired school teacher is presently taking the legal route: making a formal complaint against the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS). This action follows the sudden appearance of two agents at his Hamilton home two years ago. "The visit was not warranted under the mandate of CSIS. It caused anxiety for me and my family. It was an attempt to intimidate me, and my family members in lawfully exercising our charter rights, of freedom of speech and association, and my right to criticize the government of Canada, and its policies," said Stone. The Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) will be holding an in-camera hearing on March 26 and 27, where Lawyer Bijon Roy will present Stone's complaint against CSIS and CSIS will offer its rebuttal. Roy says Stone's unusual experience might be a sign of what's to come after the Conservatives push through Bill C-51's controversial measures, which will expand the scope of surveillance, targeting and disruption of dissenting groups in Canada. Rabble.ca

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
March 4, 2015 / le 4 mars, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

La vidéo de Zehaf-Bibeau pourrait être dévoilée vendredi

La vidéo dans laquelle l'auteur de la fusillade au parlement d'Ottawa détaillerait les motifs expliquant son geste sera au coeur d'un témoignage du commissaire de la GRC vendredi. Bob Paulson, qui sera devant le Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale, pourrait alors rendre publique la vidéo de Michael Zehaf-Bibeau. Les parlementaires devraient pouvoir regarder la vidéo - en entier ou en partie -, mais on ne sait pas si la séance sera publique. La Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC) se base sur la vidéo en question pour imputer au tireur des motifs d'ordre « idéologiques et politiques ». Mardi, le gouvernement Harper demandait à son tour la diffusion de la vidéo. En dépit de « la sensibilité de l'enquête » en cours, « la position du gouvernement est que la vidéo devrait être diffusée à la population canadienne », a écrit mardi le porte-parole du ministre de la Sécurité publique Steven Blaney, Jean-Christophe de la Rue, dans un courriel. Quelques semaines après la fusillade, la GRC avait laissé entendre que la vidéo pourrait demeurer secrète, puisqu'elle constitue un élément central de la preuve. Radio-Canada; CBC News; Canadian Press (The Hamilton Spectator, IPolitics, Metro News, CTV News, Huffington Post); La Presse; Postmedia News (National Post, Ottawa Citizen); QMI Agency (Ottawa Sun, London Free Press, Winnipeg Sun, Toronto Sun, Kingston Whit Standard); The Globe and Mail

Stephen Harper says proposed bill would deny parole for some murders

People found guilty in some killings should have to serve life in prison with little or no chance of parole, Prime Minister Stephen Harper said in Scarborough, Ont. today. Harper said the Conservatives are proposing legislation to end parole for those convicted of murders involving: Sexual assault. Kidnapping. Terrorism. A police or corrections officer. Particular "brutality." Currently, those who are convicted of first-degree murder face an automatic sentence of life in prison with no chance of parole for 25 years. Harper said those convicted of the crimes listed in the legislation could voluntarily petition the minister for public safety for release after serving no less than 35 years. "Decisions will not rest with an appointed board but with the federal cabinet," he said. Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said in January the government would introduce legislation to ensure people convicted of the worst crimes have no chance of being released from prison. He said the bill would be introduced before June. CBC News

Le Canada a remis aux États-Unis cinq espions présumés depuis 2004

Le Canada a remis aux autorités américaines, entre 2004 et 2013, cinq personnes soupçonnées d'espionnage contre les États-Unis, a indiqué mercredi le ministère fédéral de la Sécurité publique, sans plus de précisions. "Dans les cas des cinq personnes soupçonnées d'espionnage déportées du Canada vers les États-Unis, il s'agissait pour le Canada de faire retourner aux États-Unis des gens soupçonnés d'espionnage contre les États-Unis", a expliqué à l'AFP Jean-Christophe De Le Rue, porte-parole du ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney. Il faisait écho aux révélations publiées par les quotidiens Toronto Star et La Presse qui, en vertu de la loi sur l'accès à l'information, ont obtenu des documents officiels indiquant qu'entre 2004 et 2014, 21 espions présumés avaient été expulsés du Canada, dont cinq étaient des ressortissants américains. Le rapport de l'Agence des services frontaliers (ASFC) montre notamment que les cinq présumés espions remis aux autorités américaines l'ont été en 2004, 2007, 2008 et 2013. Outre les États-Unis, les autres personnes ont été expulsées du Canada vers la Chine, la Corée du Nord, Cuba, l'Inde, l'Iran, le Malawi, la Mongolie, l'Ouganda, la Russie, le Rwanda, la Suède, la Tunisie et le Venezuela. Les services du renseignement américains et canadiens sont étroitement liés via des accords de défense conclus à la fin de la Seconde guerre mondiale avec les autres alliés des "Fives Eyes", le Royaume-Uni, l'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande. Huffington Post

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

Les audiences sur le projet de loi C-51 commencent mardi et c'est le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney qui va les inaugurer en quelque sorte, c'est le ministre parrain du projet de loi qui vient défendre sa législation. De plus, on est encore à négocier la liste des témoins. Ce qui est acquis, c'est que les quatre anciens premiers ministres, qui étaient quand même signataires d'une lettre qui exprimait beaucoup de réserves à l'endroit du C-51, ne seront pas invités. On ne s'est pas encore entendu, environ 48-50 témoins, un peu plus de la moitié pour le gouvernement, un peu moins de la moitié évidemment pour l'opposition. (RDI, 11h09 ET)

La GRC va dévoiler, vendredi, la vidéo de Michael Zehaf-Bibeau enregistrée avant l'attentat au Parlement. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, l'avait réclamé mardi. Il avait joint sa voix à deux comités de la Chambre des communes et du Sénat qui réclamaient que l'enregistrement soit rendu public. (CBC Radio One Montreal, 7h33 ET; RDI, 7h13 ET; LCN, 8h07 ET)

Canada's spy agency is eyeing the threat of a homegrown anti-Islam movement spreading online. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service advised the office of Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney of its concerns during a secret September briefing. (AM640 Toronto Radio, 6h03 ET; Q107 FM Toronto, 8h14 ET)

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Widespread power outages

Power outages are being reported across the Avalon and Bonavista Peninsulas this morning and as far west as Gander. Newfoundland Power says loss of supply from NL Hydro is the cause of the outages and about 30,000 customers are without power. The power outages affecting many areas of St. John's began around 7:20 a.m. The Telegram; VOCM

Toronto power outage: 15,000 still in the dark

Toronto Hydro is working to restore power to about 15,000 customers. Crews worked through the night after 25,000 customers experienced an outage due to Tuesday afternoon's winter storm. Toronto Sun

Power outages close most schools in Perth

Widespread power outages south of the city have forced the closure of several schools in the Perth area. Hydro One says there are currently about 15,547 customers without power in that area, and will remain without power until at least 10 a.m. They have given no reason for the outage, but the area was hit with snow and freezing rain Tuesday night and into this morning. There is another power outage in the Brockville area, according to HydroOne. About 5,500 customers will remain without power until 9:30 a.m. at the earliest. Ottawa Sun

Thousands without power in Montreal, surrounding areas Wednesday morning

Almost 9,000 Hydro-Québec customers are without power in the province after a series of blackouts overnight Tuesday to Wednesday. As of 9 a.m., the second largest outages are recorded in Montreal: 2,567 customers. Other areas around Montreal: Lanaudière, 2,036 customers; Laval, 1,861 customers; Montérégie, 1,219. Mathieu Rouy, a Hydro-Québec spokesperson, pointed out that this is 8,997 customers out of 4 million province-wide so it is not considered a large outage. Montreal Gazette

TSB still gathering data in Gogama, Ont. train derailment probe

The Transportation Safety Board investigators have left the scene of a CN train derailment near Gogama. Now, they're tasked with sifting through the data they collected to find out why 29 cars from a 100-car Canadian National Railway train carrying diluted bitumen derailed in the remote area of Ontario, south of Timmins on Feb. 14. More than one million litres of crude oil was spilled and caught fire, burning for two days. A spokesperson for the Transportation Safety Board said investigators will be combing through rail components to find out what happened. Meanwhile, CN's clean up efforts continue at the site of the derailment, which is being overseen by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and Climate Change and Environment Canada. CBC News

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Bill C-51: Breaking down a most terrifying debate

When the House of Commons reconvenes next week, the public safety committee will begin its study of Bill C-51, the Conservative government's Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015. That study will be limited to nine hearings, in which MPs will confront a five-part bill that raises questions about national security and civil liberties. In its current form, C-51 would, among other things, give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) a new ability to disrupt potential threats, create a new crime of advocating for or promoting terrorism, and allow for greater sharing of information across government departments. While the parties stake out positions—the Conservatives staunchly in favour, the NDP resolutely against, the Liberals supportive but desiring changes—critics beyond Parliament Hill are raising concerns. To advance that discussion, Maclean's convened a call with two experts: Ray Boisvert, a security analyst who spent nearly 30 years with CSIS, and Craig Forcese, a law professor at the University of Ottawa, who, along with Kent Roach, a professor at the University of Toronto, has written extensively about C-51. Macleans

Projet de loi antiterroriste : les ex-PM ne sont pas invités à témoigner

Radio-Canada a obtenu une liste de témoins qui pourraient être appelés à se prononcer sur le projet de loi C-51 du gouvernement fédéral. La liste comprend entre autres des experts en sécurité et en droit, mais on y note aussi de grands absents. Les audiences sur le projet de loi antiterroriste commenceront dans moins d'une semaine. Neuf séances sont prévues d'ici la fin du mois. Pour respecter cet échéancier, le Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale devra mettre les bouchées doubles. Dans ce marathon d'audiences, les premiers témoins à être entendus seront Steven Blaney, ministre de la Sécurité publique, et Peter MacKay, ministre de la Justice. Radio-Canada

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

A video made by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau just before that rampage will be made public on Friday. A commons and senate committee recently asked the RCMP Commissioner to let the public see it. (CTV News, 9h08 ET; CBC News, 10h21, 11h06, 12h37 ET; RDI 11h09 ET; CP24, 11h30 ET; TVA, 12h00 ET)

The RCMP Commissioner will also be asked to update on the status the investigation. (CBC News, 10h25, 12h37 ET)

CBC News learned that the committee hearing will be open and they will be allowed to televise it and it is understood that they will certainly be making that video available possibly even screening it. (CBC News, 13h09 ET)

Nearly half of Canadians say they feel less safe from terrorism than they did two years ago, according to a survey conducted for CBC News. Two-thirds say it is likely that an attack will occur in Canada within the next five years, including 42 per cent who expect that it will result in mass death and destruction. However, only nine per cent think terrorism and national security should be the top priority for federal politicians, behind unemployment (20 per cent), the economy (19 per cent) and health care (15 per cent). (AM640 Toronto Radio, 6h03 ET; CBC News, 10h19 ET)

The parents of a Quebec teenager thought to have left the country to join jihadists in Syria say they had no idea their son wanted to fight overseas. (CBC News, 12h25, 13h15 ET)

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Unlabeled Botox vials seized from a downtown Vancouver business

Health Canada is issuing a warning after it seized unlabeled bottles of what appears to be Botox from a business in downtown Vancouver. The product was seized from Art Nails Ltd. on 751 Helmcken St. Health Canada says the product was being injected at this location and appears to be unauthorized as it contained no labelling. It says the store owner claimed the product was Botox that had been administered to consumers. Potential risks associated with injecting an unauthorized version of a health product such as Botox can range from mild local paralysis to death. All products administered by injection in Canada must be authorized by Health Canada and must have approved labelling. Art Nails is cooperating with Health Canada and has agreed to no longer import the product. Health Canada is also working with the Canada Border Services Agency to help prevent further importation of this product. Global News

Port Of Entry Statistics Reveal Importance Of Proper Immigration Paperwork

Officers at this POE conducted more than 173 immigration interviews that resulted in two Visitor Records, four Work Permits and eight voluntarily withdrawn applications to enter Canada. Below are some examples that outline the importance of various forms of paperwork you should have to avoid negative consequences. A foreign national arrived at this POE on December 1st and was referred for an immigration interview. In his interview, the foreign national said he intended to enter Canada to get a job to earn money for a plane ticket home. He had paid someone a small fee to drive him from the United States to the Canadian border. The traveller did not have a valid passport or any other identification, so he was given a departure order and was driven back to the United States. The traveller would not have been able to enter Canada to work unless he had a work permit, for which he would have been required to have valid identification. Mondaq.com

Will higher gas prices in Wash. State deter you from going south?

Washington State will soon raise the price at the pump but will that affect how often you hop across the border to save money when filling up the tank? Cross-border gas shopping is nothing new but a major gas tax hike will make it less enticing to head to the Evergreen State to gas up. Washington is raising the state-wide gas tax by almost $0.12 a gallon to pay for a $15 billion transportation improvement plan that was approved by the State Senate earlier this week. Gas analyst Michael Ervin with MJ Ervin & Associates says that likely won't be enough to stop Canadians from heading south to fuel up. "We've seen people cross the street so-to-speak, for even a two-cent price difference in Canada. Any price difference greater than that certainly will create the incentive. Of course the more gasoline you buy times the price difference, translates into more money left in the consumer's pocket." If the new tax were to take effect today, current prices, according to GasBuddy, would mean fuel would still be roughly $0.20 cheaper in Washington State. Ervin says nothing short of even-pricing will completely stop us from getting gas across the line. News 1130

We can finally start building the new bridge to Canada

There's something like 30,000 parts in every car. Here in the nation's auto capital, we know full well that successfully building a car that works is no small matter, requiring experience, patience and a smattering of good luck. Over the last four years, we've seen much the same factors at play in two complex events, both involving a bewildering number of moving parts. The first is the now successfully concluded Detroit bankruptcy, which involved the right people in the right places making the right decisions about a very complicated and contentious matter. The second biggie has at last come together: The New International Trade Crossing, the bridge across the Detroit River, which features complex international economics and also persistent — and ugly — politics. Last week, the U.S. Supreme Court resolved what should be the last real legal hurdle by refusing to hear a lawsuit blocking the bridge brought by the owner of the Ambassador Bridge and some community activists. Douglas George, the new Canadian consul general in Detroit, tells me the current state of play for the bridge is "ready to go." Canadian Transport Minister Lisa Raitt says she expects the bridge to be in operation by 2020, though that may be a trifle optimistic. A public-private partnership will oversee the design, building and operation of the bridge, though financing will ultimately be guaranteed by the Canadian government. Holland Sentinel

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

U.S. Whistleblower Edward Snowden is taking part in a rare public discussion today live on CBC.ca. He'll be discussing privacy and surveillance issues. The panel is taking place at Ryerson University in Toronto moderated by CBC's Anna Maria Tremonti. (CBC News, 10h33, 11h31, 12h13 ET)

Edward Snowden live chat

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Suspect on loose after double-stabbing in Surrey

Surrey Mounties are searching for a suspect following a stabbing that put two men in hospital early Wednesday morning. Officers were called to King George Boulevard near 132nd Street around 12:30 a.m. and found the victims, who said they'd been in a fight with a third man. One victim had a visible stab wound on his leg. The other told police he wasn't hurt, but paramedics examined him and discovered he was also stabbed in the side. Both were taken to hospital for treatment of non-life threatening injuries. Mounties are searching suspect described as a younger man with a dark complexion, about six feet tall, who was wearing a dark shirt and jeans. CTV News

Potato tampering investigation ongoing

The investigation into a food tampering case involving sewing needles inserted into potatoes is still active, reports Prince Edward Island RCMP spokesperson, Sgt. Leanne Butler. The investigation has determined the potatoes have originated from two Prince Edward Island farms, but questions about when and how they were inserted, and by whom, remain unanswered. Butler said the RCMP is still waiting for some lab results in connection with the ongoing investigation. The Prince Edward Island government and the potato industry established a $50,000 reward in November seeking information which would identify and lead to charges against the person(s) responsible for the food tampering incidents. The reward was subsequently doubled to $100,000 and the deadline for providing information extended to the end of April. Journal Pioneer

Town nominates Cst. Porterfield for award

At its regular meeting on Feb. 23, Peace River Town Council passed a motion to nominate Cst. Holly Porterfield for the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire (IODE) Community Services Award. Porterfield, who transferred from Peace River last fall, was the detachment's community liaison officer. "The Town of Peace River has officially drafted a letter in support of all the extra effort Cst. Holly Porterfield (has exhibited)," said Orren Ford, town councillor. "It's an outstanding community services award that goes to RCMP members who go above and beyond the call of duty, doing all that extra work for the community we're in." The IODE Canada established an award to recognize a member, unit or detachment of the RCMP for exemplary public service to their community outside of their official duties. The office of the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police chooses the recipient each year. PR Record Gazette

Police lay bootlegging charges after traffic stops in northern Sask

RCMP seized nearly a hundred bottles of hard liquor during an anti-bootlegging operation in northern Saskatchewan designed to keep booze off of dry reserves. During check stops near the town of Southend, RCMP seized 100 cans of beer, 98 bottles of hard liquor and 28.5 grams of marijuana. According to an RCMP press release, the operation was a "dedicated effort" focused on preventing booze from entering various dry reserves where alcohol is outlawed. RCMP stopped at least 60 vehicles at the intersection of Highway 102 and 905 near the community of Southend and laid seven charges related to bootlegging alcohol. "The results of this initiative speaks to the hard work and dedication of the RCMP members who work at these Detachments with respect to keeping these substances out of our communities," Staff Sgt. Carmela Schneider said in a press release. StarPhoenix

Regina police use Taser during domestic assault call

Regina police used a Taser on a 30-year-old man during a domestic assault call on the 700 block N Vanier Drive Tuesday night. After attending the scene at about 8:30 p.m., police found a 27-year-old female victim had sustained minor injuries from an assault. During the arrest, the male suspect became agitated with police and a struggle ensued at which point the female officer deployed her Taser. He was successfully taken into custody. After being assessed by EMS and treated at the scene, the suspect was transported to RPS detention and subsequently charged. The suspect was charged with assault and two counts of assault peace officer. Leader-Post

No device found following bomb threat at Sir John Franklin

School administration confirmed to Moose FM that they received the threat around 1:20pm Tuesday afternoon. The school and the Northern Arts and Cultural Centre were quickly evacuated. Students were escorted to St. Patrick's High School, where classes were dismissed and parents were asked to pick up their children. RCMP conducted a thorough search of the grounds once children were off the property and are confident that the area is now safe. This is the second time in less than two months that a Yellowknife school has been evacuated because of a potential bomb threat. Yellowknife Now

RCMP on the lookout for missing Strathcona County teen

Strathcona County RCMP are on the lookout for a missing 15-year-old girl. Shayleen Johnson has not been seen since Monday, March 2, at around 3:00 PM, when she didn't return home after a disagreement at school. Police don't believe there's anything suspicious about her disappearance – but Johnson requires medication, and there is concern for her wellbeing. She is described as 6-feet tall, heavy set, caucasian, with short dark pink/purple and blue/green eyes. She was last seen wearing a black jacket, red toque, acid wash blue jeans, and white high-top runners. iNews880

RCMP seeking suspect in attempted abduction

Red Deer RCMP are on the lookout for a suspect after the attempted abduction of a seven year old girl. According to Mounties, it was between 3:00 PM and 3:30 PM on Tuesday, March 2, when the girl was walking north on Keast Way, when an unknown man standing nearby asked where she lived and offered to drive her home. The girl screamed and ran away, and the man got into his vehicle and left the area. The suspect is described as being in his 20's or 30's, with a dark complexion, slim to average build, under 6-feet tall with short brown hair shaved on one side and combed over. He was seen wearing a grey hoodie under a black leather jacket and blue jeans, and he spoke with an accent. He was driving a newer, white, compact four-door car with silver trim. 630 Ched

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Harper va de l'avant avec la prison à vie sans possibilité de libération

Malgré les critiques, le gouvernement va de l'avant avec son plan d'imposer la prison à vie sans possibilité de libération pour certains criminels. Le premier ministre Stephen Harper a annoncé mercredi en banlieue de Toronto qu'un projet de loi sera déposé en ce sens à la Chambre des communes la semaine prochaine. Cet emprisonnement à vie serait imposé dans les cas de crimes de haute trahison ainsi que de meurtre avec agression sexuelle, enlèvement ou séquestration, terrorisme, assassinat de policiers ou d'agents correctionnels ou « tout meurtre au premier degré d'une nature particulièrement brutale ». Les tribunaux auraient la discrétion de choisir cette peine pour tout autre meurtre au premier degré ou lorsqu'un délinquant a déjà été reconnu coupable d'un assassinat à l'étranger. « Je suis fier d'annoncer que la semaine prochaine, notre gouvernement déposera un projet de loi pour que les criminels les plus haineux, ceux qui commettent les crimes les plus horribles reçoivent la peine la plus lourde prévue au Code criminel », a déclaré le premier ministre Harper. Cette mesure donne suite à une promesse faite dans le dernier discours du Trône voulant « qu'une sentence à vie soit bel et bien un emprisonnement à vie ». La Presse, Canadian Press (CTV News, Huffington Post, Brampton Guardian, My Kawartha, Kingston Region), Globe and Mail

Solitary Confinement in Canada's Prisons

A recent lawsuit is challenging the use of solitary confinement in our prison system on the grounds that it violates Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which states "everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment." The John Howard Society of Canada and the B.C. Civil Liberties Association allege that the use of prison segregation is both unconstitutional and discriminatory against mentally ill and aboriginal prisoners, as these populations are over-represented among those in segregation. This does not refer to disciplinary segregation, which occurs with a violation of prison rules and can be considered part of the checks and balances one might expect. Rather, it refers to administrative segregation, which does not allow for legal counsel, disciplinary hearings, time limits, external reviews, etc. According to this article, which makes reference to the Office of the Correctional Investigator's 2011-2012 annual report, "close to one-third of reported self-injury incidents (in federal prisons) occurred in segregation units". In 2011, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Torture, Juan Méndez named solitary confinement as a practice that can amount to torture and argued to the UN General Assembly's committee on social, humanitarian and cultural affairs that it should be banned completely as a punishment technique, as reference was made to areas of noted use, including Guantanamo Bay, Argentina, China and Kazakhstan. According to this article, "about 20 percent of inmates last year were segregated for 120 continuous days," meaning that long-term segregation is increasing in Canada. This is particularly problematic as this practice is disproportionately applied to aboriginal prisoners and inmates with mental health concerns, thereby constituting discrimination. From a mental health perspective, healthy socialization, behavioural activation, sleep, diet, and exercise are encouraged regularly for optimum wellness, all of which, are unlikely to be provided in solitary confinement. A lack of these supports adversely affects the outcomes of inmates as mental health is likely to deteriorate under these conditions, contributing to self harm and even suicide. Even if inmates survive their sentence despite this practice, mental health issues may pose challenges to re-integration into society following release back into their communities. This vicious cycle of dysfunction necessitates change to avoid tragic deaths like Ashley Smith, Kinew James, Edward Showshoe, Kyle Darren Tombaught, Gerald Joseph Cayer, Warren Robert Allen, etc. Social Justice Solutions

Convicted murderer is seeking parole again

One of the three men convicted in a Tsawwassen double murder more than two decades ago is up for parole again this week. Derik Lord, who is now in his early 40s, was one of three teens convicted in the slayings of his friend's mother and grandmother in a murder-for-hire inheritance plot in October of 1990. He was convicted of first-degree murder in 1992 and sentenced to life in prison without a chance for parole for 10 years in the deaths of Sharon Huenemann and Doris Leatherbarrow. As a young offender at the time of his conviction - he was just 16 at the time of the murder - no parole for 10 years was the maximum sentence the judge could hand down. Lord is scheduled to appear before the parole board tomorrow. Throughout the investigation of the murder, his trial and his incarceration, Lord has maintained his innocence. Delta Optimist

Edmonton police issue warning after violent offender released from prison

Edmonton police are warning the public about a man who has been released from prison after serving his six year sentence. Michael Wayne Beauchamp, 32, was released from the Grande Cache Institution Tuesday night after serving time for robbery, overcoming resistance by attempting to choke, suffocating or strangling another person and failure to comply with court conditions. Police consider him to be a violent offender who poses a risk of significant harm to the community. Beauchamp will be residing in the Edmonton area and will be closely monitored by the Edmonton Police Service's behavioural assessment unit. Police issue these warnings after careful deliberation and say it's in the public interest to inform the community. Edmonton Journal

Remorseless ex-cop who beat, sexually assaulted wife undergoing chemo, denied early release

A Winnipeg newspaper says a convicted former city police officer who beat and sexually assaulted his ex-wife at a time when she was undergoing chemotherapy has lost his latest bid for early release. Documents obtained by the Free Press show the Parole Board of Canada has this week denied an appeal by the 59-year-old man, who argued that he does not pose a risk to public safety. The man, who can't be named to protect the identity of his victim, pleaded guilty to aggravated sexual assault and break-and-enter with intent. He was sentenced in 2009 to more than 12 years in prison after admitting to carrying out the attack in 2008. His former wife died of cancer in 2012 and her family told the parole board that they believe her illness was aggravated by the assault and contributed to her death. The former officer, who spent 25 years with the Winnipeg Police Service, is being held in British Columbia where he plans to work as a landscaper. He had been arrested five times since 2006 for breaching a protection order the victim obtained against him. Hamilton Spectator

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News provided live coverage of Prime Minister Steven Harper giving details on new legislation the government will introduce next week regarding mandatory minimum sentences. PM Harper states the proposed legislation will end parole for convicted murderers involving sexual assault, kidnapping, terrorism, a police or corrections officer, particular brutality. Rough transcript

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Public safety centre to be established in Slemon Park

The Atlantic Police Academy and the Slemon Park Corporation are partnering to create a new public safety centre. The Canadian Centre of Public Safety Excellence will move training options beyond the traditional police recruiting and training previously provided at the Atlantic Police Academy. The newly minted public safety centre's programming and facilities will be marketed nationally and internationally. The federal government will provide $347,000 to Holland College for marketing activities and training equipment. The provincial funds will contribute $99,500 over three years through the Department of Innovation and Advanced Learning. The Guardian

Nunavut must do more to reduce violence against women, MLA says

Though the Government of Nunavut doesn't support a national inquiry on missing and murdered indigenous women, MLAs who attended a national roundtable on the issue, Feb. 27, said the territory needs to do more to protect women and children from violence. "The statistics regarding missing and murdered women across Canada are shocking and heart-wrenching," Pat Angnakak, MLA for Iqaluit-Niaqunnguu, said in Nunavut's legislative assembly, March 3. "However Mr. Speaker, it is clear to me that these numbers do not stand alone. Women can face a number of issues and circumstances that put them at risk in the first place," the regular MLA said in her member's statement. Angnakak attended the Feb. 27 national roundtable in Ottawa with Jeannie Ugyuk, the Nunavut minister of family services and minister responsible for the status of women. Nunatsiaq Online

One in three men blame victims of domestic abuse, poll finds

Many Canadians continue to blame victims of domestic abuse and are reluctant to report suspected cases to police, according to a new poll conducted in Ontario. Twenty-four per cent of respondents believe it's possible for women to bring domestic abuse upon themselves, according to the poll conducted by Angus Reid. Victim-blaming is even higher among men, with one in three male respondents (34.3 per cent) claiming women bear some responsibility for the abuse they suffer. That number was lower among women (14.1 per cent). The Angus Reid Forum poll comes in collaboration with Interval House, a women's shelter in Toronto. Interval House commissioned the poll as part of a push to fight violence against women ahead of International Women's Day on Sunday. "There is no action or choice by a victim that can justify abuse," said Renee Weekes, Chair of the Interval House board of directors at Interval House. "Women who experience violence need to know that abuse is never their fault and that there are resources in the community to support them," Weekes said in a statement on Wednesday. The poll also found that only 58.3 per cent of respondents would be willing to intervene if they suspected abuse had taken place. Another 17.1 per cent said they would stay out of the situation because they wouldn't want to interfere. CTV News

Why I'm Disturbed By the Results of This Domestic Violence Poll in Ontario

An opinion piece states, "Last week a friend told me how she was feeling optimistic about the recent progress made in public attitudes to end domestic violence. The media turned up the volume to an unprecedented level in late 2014 to profile celebrity abuse cases. Obama interrupted the Grammy's with a poignant anti-abuse message. The Super Bowl was all about domestic violence ads. It's almost hip and even trendy to speak out against sex assault. We. Are. There. The tides have turned. The tipping point has been reached. Everyone finally gets it and ending domestic abuse is just around the corner. Or is it? I wish I could share her enthusiasm and optimism. But a new Angus Reid poll commissioned by Interval House, Canada's first shelter for abused women, shows that Ontario residents still privately hold some very disturbing and problematic attitudes about domestic violence. I fear we still have a long, long way to go. The study revealed that nearly a quarter (24 per cent) of Ontarians believe that it is possible for someone to bring abuse upon themselves. And this belief is higher among men (34.3 per cent) than among women (14.1 per cent). The term victim-blaming is becoming more widely understood but this is clear evidence that victim-blaming is still entrenched in our community. And the fact that a startling 1 in 4 feel this way gets to the heart of one of the reasons why we have such an enormous issue with domestic violence in our country. It's precisely why many women are trapped and have trouble leaving an abusive relationship; because they are terrified they will be blamed, not believed or have internalized that it is somehow their fault." Huffington Post

REDress exhibit speaks of missing, murdered indigenous women

The issue of missing and murdered indigenous women is on display this week at Confederation College. Winnipeg artist Jaime Black has hung about 100 red dresses around the campus, both indoors and out, as part of The REDress Project, which focuses on the issue of missing or murdered aboriginal women across Canada. Black said the dresses are empty to represent death and absence. She chose the colour red because it symbolizes many different things. "It's the colour of life blood. It's the colour of love, but it's also the colour of spilled blood. So it has connotations of both the positive and the negative aspects of being an aboriginal woman in Canada." Black said she hopes her exhibit can promote discussions around racism and violence. CBC News

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

NIL

INTERNATIONAL

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

L'un des plus importants procès de l'année aux États-Unis commence aujourd'hui. Djokhar Tsarnaev fait face à 30 chefs d'accusation liés à l'attentat du marathon de Boston, le 15 avril 2013. Tsarnaev est âgé de 21 ans, il est d'origine tchéchène, de confession musulmane. S'il est reconnu coupable, les deux seules peines possibles sont la prison à vie ou la peine de mort. (RDI, 9h02, 11h04 ET; CTV News, 9h08, 11h16 ET; CBC News, 10h00, 11h00 ET)

Au Chili, le volcan Villarrica s'est calmé après être entré en éruption hier. La plupart des 3000 habitants qui avaient été évacués d'urgence ont reçu l'autorisation de rentrer chez eux. Une alerte rouge est tout de même encore en vigueur dans un périmètre de 10 km autour du volcan situé dans le sud du pays. (RDI, 10h55 ET)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

MichelleLamarch

Dernière heure: Cabinet @MinStevenBlaney dit se réjouir que la GRC rendre enfin publique la vidéo de Zehaf-Bibeau #polcan #tvanouvelles

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBCAAlerts

Feds now say #RCMP should release video made by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau on eve of his attack on Parliament Hill last October. #cdnpoli

CBCPolitics

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video to be shown to House committee Friday http://www.cbc.ca/news/politics/michael-zehaf-bibeau-video-to-be-shown-to-house-committee-friday-1.2981018?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter... #cdnpoli #hw

jpress

RCMP Commissioner Paulson to appear before House committee Friday to give update on Oct. 22 investigation. #cdnpoli #ottnews #ottawashooting

jpress

It's expected that at committee meeting Friday, Paulson will show Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video. #cdnpoli #ottnews #ottawashooting

jpress

Notice for Friday's meeting is out: Paulson will show, talk about Zehaf-Bibeau video. #cdnpoli #ottnews

jpress

Posting for Friday's meeting has changed: removal of "display" video & word "barbaric." H/T @kady. #cdnpoli #ottnews

Kristie Smith

Friday's special #SECU meeting showing the Zehaf-Bibeau video and featuring RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson set for 11am #cdnpoli

RobertFife

RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson will show Michael Zehaf Bibeau video at 11am on Friday before Commons Public Safety Cmittee. #cdnpoli

CBCAlerts

Update: Parliament Hill shooter's video may not be shown publicly Friday. MPs have right to decide whether to screen privately. #cdnpoli

janicedickson

RCMP to show parliament shooter's pre-attack video to MPs | iPolitics ipolitics.ca/2015/03/04/rcm... #cdnpoli

sphnmaher

Has anyone asked the West Edmonton Mall managers how they feel about @CPC_HQ posting terror threats on Facebook?

CBCPolitics

Terrorism survey: 50% of Canadians feel less safe than 2 years ago http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/terrorism-survey-50-of-canadians-feel-less-safe-than-2-years-ago-1.2978177?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter... #cdnpoli #hw

alexboutillier

Snowden says he's not going to weigh in on C51 & whether it's a good or bad bill, but Canadian spies have weakest oversight in West.

alexboutillier

Snowden calls it astonishing that Canada's agencies are trying to expand their powers in that context.

alexboutillier

He's clearly read up on the debate so far. Mentions the fact that the government is declining to hear from former PMs on C51.

MacleansMag

30-year CSIS vet Ray Boisvert and law prof Craig Forcese break down the C-51 debate: ow.ly/JVtyK#cdnpoli

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CBCNews

TONIGHT @CBCTheNational

@adriarsenault goes inside the RCMP's top secret operations centre and asks: Are we safe? amp.twimg.com/v/051120e8-b56...

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

PostmediaNews

'A life sentence in Canada will henceforth mean just that,' Harper announces new tough-on-crime bill <http://ow.ly/JVQK6>

josh_wingrove

Here's the details of the new no-parole law - unpublished, but announced today by PM Harper - via PMO:

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
March 4, 2015 / le 4 mars 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Attentat d'Ottawa: la vidéo de Zehaf Bibeau sera diffusée vendredi Par Mélanie Marquis

La vidéo qu'a tournée Michael Zehaf-Bibeau avant de perpétrer son attentat à Ottawa en octobre dernier sera dévoilée vendredi matin par le commissaire de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), Bob Paulson, devant un comité des Communes. «La vidéo sera montrée (devant le Comité permanent de la sécurité publique et nationale) et le commissaire répondra aux questions reliées à celle-ci», a résumé mercredi dans un courriel le sergent David Falls, relationniste à la GRC. Il n'était «pas en mesure» de préciser si l'enregistrement serait présenté dans son intégralité ou si certains passages pourraient être censurés pour des raisons de sécurité nationale... La demande émanait du bureau du ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, qui n'a pas visionné l'enregistrement, selon son porte-parole, Jean-Christophe de le Rue, et qui a accueilli favorablement le nouveau développement dans ce dossier. «Nous nous réjouissons que la GRC ait pris la décision de rendre publique et de commenter la vidéo», a réagi le ministre Blaney par l'entremise du même porte-parole. «Cette attaque terrifiante reste un exemple important de la raison pour laquelle nous devons faire adopter notre Loi antiterroriste — afin que la police et les organisations chargées de notre sécurité nationale disposent des outils nécessaires pour protéger les Canadiens», a ajouté M. de le Rue dans son courriel...Le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 aurait-il pu prévenir cette attaque, comme le prétend le ministre Blaney? L'opposition officielle se montre sceptique, et reproche encore une fois au gouvernement d'instrumentaliser ces événements à des fins électoralistes. «Je trouve que c'est pousser le bouchon un peu fort (...) C'est un peu gros de la part du ministre d'utiliser la diffusion de la vidéo pour mousser C-51. Je ne pense pas que ça (la vidéo) cautionne leur projet de loi antiterroriste», a prédit Mme Doré Lefebvre. Presse Canadienne (Journal Métro)

Critics attack Harper's 'life without parole' initiative

The Tory government's latest tough-on-crime initiative to make life sentence a sentence for life without parole appears to be aimed at scoring political points rather than protecting the public, some critics and legal experts said Wednesday. Prime Minister Stephen Harper told a Toronto crowd his government will introduce new legislation next week to ensure that what he called the country's "most dangerous, violent offenders," could not be allowed back on the streets...Harper said that in order to address constitutional concerns, under the new law, some killers serving life without parole will be permitted to petition the minister for public safety for release after serving no less than 35 years. Maclean's

(Update): Stephen Harper proposes bill to deny parole for some murderers

People found guilty in some killings should have to serve life in prison with little or no chance of parole, Prime Minister Stephen Harper says. He made the announcement Wednesday in Scarborough, Ont., accompanied by Justice Minister Peter MacKay, that his government is proposing legislation to end parole for those convicted of murders involving: Sexual assault. Kidnapping. Terrorism. A police or corrections officer. Particular brutality. Currently, those who are convicted of first-degree murder face an automatic sentence of life in prison with no chance of parole for 25 years... Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney said in January that the legislation was coming. Harper has also hinted at it. CBC News

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

RDI présente une entrevue avec Michel Juneau-Katsuya, ancien cadre du Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité. On discute de la vidéo de Michael Zehaf-Bibeau et du projet de loi C-51. Le ministre Steven Blaney est mentionné. Transcription ébauche

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Major chemical fire at Port of Metro Vancouver prompts Hazmat response

A fire at the Port of Metro Vancouver Wednesday afternoon has prompted a Hazmat response and the evacuation of hundreds of people. Trichloroisocyanuric acid (a bleaching agent and industrial disinfectant) is burning in at least one shipping container, forcing hundreds to be evacuated and the closure of the port. Further evacuations are being considered. The fire has been upgraded to a four-alarm blaze and the call has been put out for 21 firefighters to staff multiple alarm fire trucks. At least eight fire trucks and more than 24 firefighters have already responded. "They evacuated all the mechanics out of the maintenance yard," says one witness, Vince De Benedetto. "It's been getting worse by the second." Global News; CBC News; Canadian Press (CTV News)

Fort Saskatchewan gas explosion closes Highway 15

A loud gas explosion near Fort Saskatchewan shook homes kilometres away and caused a fireball near Highway 15. Firefighters and the RCMP arrived at the scene of the leak near 119th Street and Highway 15 just before noon Wednesday. "I heard a boom and the house shook," said Ann Bibby, who lives about 10 kilometres from the explosion. "I thought someone was trying to come in the back door, because the doors were rattling." Bibby said she went outside a few minutes later and heard another small explosion... "We are still getting details from the scene but I am told the incident is under control and there is no active fire at this time," he stated in a news release. CBC News

Canadian Pacific Railway wants to limit shipments of dangerous goods

Canadian Pacific Railway Ltd. wants the power to refuse to haul dangerous goods, a signal it has grown weary of the risks and regulations that accompany the business of hauling oil. The country's second-largest rail company says it wants an overhaul of the so-called common carrier obligations of the Canada Transportation Act that require railways to haul any and all legal goods in rail cars that meet safety standards. CP CEO Hunter Harrison has touted the railway's safety record as rail companies have faced criticism over several recent derailments and explosions. But Mr. Harrison said CP's board of directors, concerned about the company's liability and the potential dangers faced by the public in the event of a derailment, has decided it no longer wants to haul some dangerous goods, but was given legal advice that it had no choice. Globe and Mail

Earthquake measuring 4.9 strikes off Vancouver Island

A minor earthquake with a magnitude of 4.9 struck about 168 kilometres west of Port Hardy on the northwest tip of Vancouver island around 12:35 a.m. PT Wednesday, but no damage was reported. The Earthquakes Canada website said damage is unlikely from a quake of that magnitude. CBC News

4,500 Toronto Hydro customers still without power

Toronto Hydro says the lights have come back on for the vast majority of customers who lost power last night, amid a large-scale outage that was partially due to the long winter the city has faced. As of late Wednesday afternoon, Toronto Hydro CEO Anthony Haines said that some 4,500 customers were still without power. That was down from 87,000 customers at the peak of the problems on Tuesday night. CBC News

Letter - Railways and government committed to rail-network safety

A letter to the editor by Lisa Raitt, Minister of Transport, states, Re: "Federal rail-safety measures remain inadequate" (Opinion, Feb. 25). The safety and security of Canadians is a top priority of the government of Canada, and as the Minister of Transport, I am vigilant in ensuring this. Our government will take action to improve the safety and accountability of Canada's railways when necessary. That is why we have tabled new amendments to the Railway Safety Act that will improve railway safety and strengthen oversight while protecting taxpayers and making industry more accountable to communities. This legislation is among the actions we have taken following the tragic Lac-Mégantic derailment in July 2013, and addresses recommendations in the Auditor General of Canada's fall 2013 report. We are strengthening oversight and increasing collaboration between communities and the rail industry and responding to concerns of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. Research has shown that simply complying with government regulations cannot ensure safety. That is why Transport Canada has adopted the Safety Management System (SMS) model..." Montreal Gazette

Letter - Railways and government committed to rail-network safety

A letter to the editor by Michael Bourque, President and CEO, Railway Association of Canada, states, "Re: "Federal rail-safety measures remain inadequate" (Opinion, Feb. 25). Mark Winfield's article suggests Canada's railways are "self-regulated." Railways have to comply with dozens of regulations and hundreds of rules, in addition to the Railway Safety Act - a modern piece of legislation that has been regularly reviewed and updated. By law, each federally regulated railway must also have a Safety Management System (SMS) in place that is approved by Transport Canada. SMS frameworks have not replaced regulation. These safety systems serve as an additional layer of oversight and best practices on top of Canada's robust regulatory regime for rail safety... For example, under Transport Canada's Protective Direction 32, Class 1 railways must now provide municipalities with aggregate information on the nature and volume of dangerous goods being moved through their communities, information that is needed for emergency response planning and training. Short line railways must also provide this information, and have an additional legal duty to report any significant change in the volumes of dangerous goods that they move. The Railway Association of Canada collaborated with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and the federal government in developing and implementing this information-sharing plan, and we believe that it strikes the appropriate balance between municipal emergency preparedness and public security..." Montreal Gazette

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

PQ rails against federal anti-terror bill

Quebec sovereigntists, environmentalists against TransCanada Corp.'s Energy East oil pipeline project, aboriginal rights advocates, red squares. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service would have the power to snoop on all these groups and infringe on their privacy and freedom of expression under the new anti-terrorism bill, C-51, Parti Québécois justice critic and leadership candidate Alexandre Cloutier warned on Wednesday. "The struggle against terrorism shouldn't become a veritable witch-hunt," he told reporters at the National Assembly. "The responsibility of the Canadian secret service is to fight terrorism, not to keep records on Quebecers who participate in the democratic life in Quebec in good faith."

Montreal Gazette

Muslim Canadians worry about effects of anti-terror talk

"I'm a Muslim. I'm labelled a terrorist. I trust you, do you trust me? Give me a hug." That's what Mustafa Mawla's handwritten signs read as he stood in Toronto's Dundas Square on a frigid day in January. It was part of a social experiment he and a group of young Muslim-Canadian filmmakers undertook to explore their feelings in a country where politicians are ramping up the talk about fighting terrorism. CBC News

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's hasty cellphone video takes aim at Canadian foreign policy

CBC News has details about the cellphone video made by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau before he shot a soldier and stormed Parliament Hill on Oct. 22. The video is to be shown to MPs at the public safety committee at a special meeting on Friday. The video, whose existence was first acknowledged by the RCMP four days after the Oct. 22 shooting, is short — less than a minute long, sources tell CBC News, and was recorded on a cellphone. The Ottawa Citizen was reporting Wednesday evening that it was filmed in the front seat of Zehaf-Bibeau's car in the moments before his attacks. Sources told CBC News the cellphone was not found on his body. In the video, Zehaf-Bibeau gives his reasons for attacking Parliament, including a reference to Canada's foreign policy and to Canadian Forces in Muslim countries. At the time, Canadian Forces trainers were in Iraq and the House had voted in support of Canada joining the air bombing campaign. Canada had also been a key participant in the air campaign against Libya, the homeland of Zehaf-Bibeau's father and a country to which the Parliament Hill shooter had long expressed a desire to return. CBC News

Tories Criticized Over 'Fear-Mongering' Facebook Post On Bill C-51, West Edmonton Mall Threat

A Conservative party Facebook post has spurred accusations that the government is using fear-mongering to promote its proposed anti-terror legislation. And at least one Alberta Tory politician has publicly suggested his federal cousins have gone too far. On Monday, a screengrab from a video by Somalia-based terror group al-Shabaab was posted to the official Facebook page of the federal Conservatives. The group, linked to al-Qaeda, attacked Kenya's Westgate Mall in September 2013 and murdered close to 70 people. Huffington Post

Edward Snowden says Canadian intelligence gathering has 'weakest oversight'

U.S. National Security Agency whistleblower Edward Snowden says Canada has one of the "weakest oversight" frameworks for intelligence gathering in the Western world. Snowden made the comments during a teleconference discussion hosted by Canadian Journalists for Free Expression and the Ryerson School of Journalism, moderated by CBC Radio host Anna Maria Tremonti. He was speaking via video link from Russia. "Canadian intelligence has one of the weakest oversight frameworks out of any Western intelligence agency in the world," he said. Snowden said he wouldn't specifically weigh in on the government's new anti-terror legislation, saying that whether it is good or bad is ultimately up for Canadians to decide. Bill C-51 provides for a sweeping range of measures that would allow suspects to be detained based on less evidence and lets CSIS actively interfere with suspects' travel plans and finances. Critics say the legislation is too broad and lacks oversight. The government, however, says the powers in C-51 are necessary to keep Canadians safe. It points to the requirement for judges to sign off in advance of CSIS breaking Canadian law, arguing that is adequate oversight for the new powers. CBC News

Legal experts worried about Canada's new anti-terror legislation

Nearly half of all Canadians feel less safe about a terrorist attack on homegrown soil than they did two years ago, according to a new poll. However, some of our country's top legal minds say Ottawa's response to the threat — Bill C-51 — goes way too far. An open letter to Parliament signed by 100 legal experts and professors, urges the prime minister to quash the legislation. Vancouver criminal lawyer Eric Gottardi explains their concerns. News 1130

La Couronne amorce ses plaidoiries finales

La Couronne estime que «les preuves sont accablantes» contre les deux hommes accusés d'avoir comploté pour faire dérailler un train de passagers entre New York et Toronto. Chiheb Esseghaier, qui étudiait au Québec lors de son arrestation, et Raed Jaser, de la banlieue de Toronto, font face à de nombreuses accusations liées au terrorisme. Jaser a plaidé non coupable alors que dans le cas d'Esseghaier, qui se représente lui-même, mais qui ne veut pas participer à ce procès auquel il ne croit pas, c'est le juge qui a enregistré le même plaidoyer en son nom. Le Devoir ; Maclean's

Bill C-51 is rightly aimed at violent Islamic jihadi terrorists

An opinion piece states, "Despite the general justification of the preamble, there are no marginal annotations explaining the details of Bill C-51, the government's proposed anti-terrorism law. This means that commonsense is required to rein in the anxieties of our imagination if we are to discern the reasons why changes to existing security legislation are warranted. We also need to be aware of why these changes are proposed now, whatever the weight one accords the attacks of last fall. The five parts of the bill deal respectively with: (1) information sharing among government agencies; (2) preventing suspected persons from boarding commercial aircraft - a "no-fly" list - along with appeal procedures available to those barred from flying; (3) new thresholds and provisions for judicial oversight regarding the arrest of persons suspected of terrorism or of advocating terrorism, including electronic advocacy; (4) expanding the capabilities of CSIS with warrants from the Federal Court and new reporting requirements; and finally (5) strengthening the ability of the Minister of Immigration to keep information on admissibility of prospective immigrants and refugees secret..." National Post

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News' Power & Politics held a panel discussion with MPs regarding the likelihood that the Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video will be made public. Rough Transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

NIL

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Une première base de données Snowden est créée au Canada

La première base de données en ligne de documents classifiés dévoilés par Edward Snowden, ancien consultant de la National Security Agency (NSA) aux États-Unis, a été créée au Canada. L'archive Snowden est un projet conjoint des Journalistes canadiens pour la liberté d'expression (JCLE) et de la faculté d'information de l'Université de Toronto. Pour la première fois, des centaines de documents classifiés ont été indexés pour une recherche exhaustive en ligne. Associated Press (Le Devoir)

The apps Edward Snowden recommends to protect your privacy online

There are a host of free, easy-to-use apps and programs that can help protect your privacy online, and if everybody uses them it can provide a sort of "herd immunity" said Edward Snowden in a live video chat from Russia on Wednesday. Snowden appeared via teleconference in an event hosted by Ryerson University and Canadian Journalists For Expression, to launch the CJFE's online database that compiles all of the publicly released classified documents the former U.S. National Security Agency contractor leaked. In response to a Twitter question, Snowden expanded on what tools he recommends for privacy. CBC News

Microsoft Corp achieves ISO cloud privacy certification

Privacy is top-of-mind for many industries, especially when it comes to the cloud. Since the U.S. government began demanding access to cloud-based data from Microsoft's Irish data centre, customers realized that they may not be safe from privacy violations even if their information is not resident in the U.S. Microsoft and other industry players have been fighting the demands, since they're all placed in the awkward situation of breaking someone's laws no matter what they do. If they capitulate, the EU won't be happy (nor will customers), and if they don't, the U.S. government will be miffed. With lawyers. National Post

Mobile apps plagued by security problems

According to the February 2014 McAfee Labs Threat Report, many apps identified as having Secure Socket Layer (SSL) issues by the Computer Emergency Response Team (CERT) at Carnegie Mellon University last September have still not been fixed, putting users at risk. In an eWeek article, Intel Security's CTO, Raj Samani, talks about why this could be happening. National Post

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

Steinbach man allegedly assaults RCMP officer

A Steinbach man was arrested Sunday following an incident at the Frantz Motor Inn, RCMP report. While conducting patrols at the inn, police attempted to identify a man who had allegedly made threatening remarks to bar security. RCMP allege the man refused to co-operate with police and he was arrested. They allege during the arrest, the man assaulted an officer. A 19-year-old man of Steinbach was arrested for allegations of assaulting a police officer, resisting arrest and being disorderly in a licensed premises. Winnipeg Free Press

Booze bust: RCMP seize alcohol headed for northern communities

RCMP have seized a lot of booze after a check stop near the northern Saskatchewan community of Southend. Mounties were targeting those taking alcohol into communities where it is banned. CTV News

Two men charged in identity-theft investigation

Drugs, credit-card-making equipment, identification, piles of mail, an arsenal of weapons and thousands of dollars are among items seized in connection with what police are calling a sophisticated Port Coquitlam theft and fraud ring. In late February, members of the Coquitlam RCMP's prolific target team executed a search warrant on the home of Alvin Abhai Chand, 45. Chand had previously served a year in jail for running a large-scale credit-card creation and alteration factory, and after his release in early 2014 police noticed a spike in criminal activity around his home in the Citadel Heights neighbourhood. The Province

More than 300 fentanyl pills seized from Lethbridge home

More than 300 pills of fentanyl were removed from a Lethbridge home on Thursday, the second time in less than a week that officers in the southern Alberta city seized quantities of the potentially deadly opiate. Members of the Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams (ALERT) in Lethbridge executed a search warrant at a home in the 100 block of Bluefox Boulevard North as part of a drug trafficking investigation. Calgary Herald

Langley man, 22, charged in attacks on three women

A Langley man has been charged in connection with physical and sexual assaults on three women. RCMP say 22-year-old Kevin Sharp is facing five counts after three separate investigations. Police say they began investigating last October, when a man assaulted a sex worker in his vehicle in Langley. The Province

Leanne John, schoolgirl missing at Clayoquot Wilderness Resort, found safe

Leanne John, the 14-year-old girl who went missing while in a remote part of Vancouver Island's west coast has been found safe. The teenager from Ahousaht was on a school trip to the Clayoquot Wilderness Resort on Bedwell Sound when she disappeared during a hike late Tuesday afternoon. RCMP at the resort confirmed just before 1 p.m. PT on Wednesday that she had been found in good condition. CBC News

Winnipeg man up on child porn charges busted again

The Winnipeg Police Internet Child Exploitation Unit and Tech Crime Unit have charged a 45-year-old Winnipeg man for breaching the conditions of his release. In April 2013, he was charged with possessing, accessing and distributing child pornography. The court case is ongoing. CBC News

Interviews complete for new deputy police chief

A new deputy police chief could be announced later this month. Tom Galloway, board chair for the Waterloo Regional Police Services Board, said interviews have been completed and an internal candidate will be selected. The new deputy chief could be in attendance at April's board meeting, he said. Deputy Chief Steve Beckett retired from the service last month after 35 years as a police officer. The Record

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Wanted: Violent sex offender who planned to live in Edmonton

A violent sex offender who was just freed from Grande Cache Institution and planned to call Edmonton home is already wanted on a Canada-wide warrant. Ashton Dennis Natomagan -- born Nov. 21, 1981 -- is serving a five-year sentence for sexual assault causing bodily harm. He was freed from the medium-security prison 435 km west of Edmonton on March 2 and was to live in Edmonton but failed to report to authorities as required and is now wanted on the warrant. Even if Natomagan had reported to authorities, Edmonton city police were prompted to issue a warning to the public about his release. Edmonton police said Wednesday that Natomagan is considered to be a sexual offender who poses a risk of significant harm to the community and that he was to be closely monitored by Correctional Services Canada. QMI Agency (Edmonton Sun, Winnipeg Sun); CBC News

Police seek assistance finding federal offender

The OPP Repeat Offender Parole Enforcement (ROPE) Squad is asking for the public's assistance locating a federal offender. Jamaal Jackson, 30, is serving a seven-year, seven-month sentence for several robbery related offences, and now has a Canada-wide warrant for breaching parole. "Robbery is a theft with violence," Det.-Sgt. Brett Anderson, from the ROPE Squad, said. "Could have been an assault or weapon involved. There are several robbery offences he is serving time for." Anderson said Jackson is not at his halfway house in Toronto. QMI Agency (Whig-Standard)

Harper déposera son projet de loi pour mettre fin à la libération conditionnelle pour certains types de meurtres prémédités

Le gouvernement Harper déposera un projet de loi pour mettre fin à la libération conditionnelle des criminels condamnés à la prison à vie pour certains types de meurtres prémédités. Le premier ministre Stephen Harper et le ministre de la Justice, Peter MacKay, ont indiqué mercredi, lors d'une annonce en Ontario, que des modifications seraient ainsi apportées au Code criminel. Un projet de loi sera déposé aux Communes la semaine prochaine, a précisé le premier ministre Harper. Actuellement, de façon générale, les personnes condamnées pour meurtre au premier degré peuvent être admissibles à la libération conditionnelle après avoir purgé au moins 25 années de leur peine. Le Journal de Montréal ; Radio-Canada ; Winnipeg Free Press; Kelowna Now; Agence France-Presse

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CTV News' Power Play interviewed Justice Minister Peter MacKay regarding proposed legislation that would deny parole for some murders. Rough Transcript

CTV News' Power Play interviewed law professor, Allan Manson, and Howard Sapers, the Correctional Investigator for Canada, regarding proposed legislation that would deny parole for some murders. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Power & Politics held a panel discussion with MPs regarding proposed legislation that would deny parole for some offenders. Rough Transcript

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Unlocked doors, security blind spots at N.W.T. women's jail: report

The N.W.T. prison from which two women escaped six years ago still has a number of safety and security gaps, according to Tuesday's Auditor General of Canada report on the territory's corrections system. "These concerns are significant," said Glen Wheeler, the audit principal with the auditor general's office. "Addressing them will enable the Department of Justice to better ensure the safety and security of correctional facilities for inmates and staff." The female unit of the Fort Smith Correctional Complex dates back to the 1960s and has a capacity for 20 inmates. It's the only adult female facility in the territory. CBC News

Stephen Harper unlikely to be called to testify in Mike Duffy trial as PM's name left off witness list

The witness list continues to grow for the criminal trial of Sen. Mike Duffy, but one name remains off it so far: Prime Minister Stephen Harper. Harper had not been asked to testify as of Tuesday - just over a month before Duffy's trial is set to begin - suggesting that the Crown doesn't believe it needs the prime minister as a witness to prove its case against Duffy. Expectations are also diminishing that Duffy's defence team will try to call Harper as a witness. Postmedia News (Jordan Press, National Post)

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Canada sending team of experts to Guinea to help with Ebola fight

Canada is sending more public health personnel to West Africa to help with the Ebola containment effort. The Public Health Agency of Canada says it will send a group of specialists to Guinea, the country where the outbreak began in December 2013. Canadian Press (Brandon Sun)

INTERNATIONAL

Boston: Tsarnaïev admet sa responsabilité

Djokhar Tsarnaev assume sa responsabilité dans l'attentat qui a ensanglanté l'édition 2013 du marathon de Boston tout en accusant son frère, tué lors de la traque policière, d'en être l'instigateur et le principal coupable, a déclaré une de ses avocates. Djokhar Tsarnaev a joué, selon Judith Clarke, un rôle secondaire dans l'attentat du 15 avril 2013 qui a coûté la vie à trois personnes et en a blessé plus de 260 autres et dans la fusillade qui a tué un policier quelques jours plus tard. Le Figaro ; Associated Press (National Post)

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CTVNews

UPDATE: Chemical fire at Vancouver's port prompts evacuation, health warnings <http://ow.ly/JWGFU>

BC1

65 firefighters in hazmat gear are on scene of #PortofVancouver chemical fire: <http://ow.ly/JWHLe> #PortMetroFire

CBCAlerts

Vancouver firefighters union says multiple shipping containers on fire at Port Metro Vancouver <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2982024>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBCAlerts

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video shot on cellphone, less than 1 minute. Shooter explains why he attacked Parliament Hill: <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2982016>

PnPCBC9

Have questions about #C51? Tomorrow @evansolomoncbc talks w/ the experts, the lawyers, the politicians about the anti-terror bill. Tune in!

PnPCBC

Don't miss tomorrow's #C51 anti-terror bill special episode - 90 minutes where we dig deep into what the bill is about, with the experts.

TorontoStar

#LIVE Snowden goes into problematic provisions of Bill C-51. #AskSnowden. <http://on.thestar.com/1w3ATiS>

bccla

#HumanRights ramifications of #C51: international news! @guardian covers concerns of legal scholars & rights groups <http://tinyurl.com/qca2cea>

mgeist

Why Watching the Watchers Isn't Enough: My Talk on Privacy, Snowden & Bill C-51 <http://www.michaelgeist.ca/2015/03/watching-watchers-isnt-enough-talk-privacy-snowden-bill-c-51/> ...

HuffPostCanada

Tories accused of fear-mongering with Facebook post on Bill C-51 <http://huff.to/1KjUzWp>

stphnmaher

Has anyone asked the West Edmonton Mall managers how they feel about @CPC_HQ posting terror threats on Facebook?

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

ctvsaskatoon

Booze bust: RCMP seize alcohol headed for northern communities <http://regina.ctvnews.ca/booze-bust-rcmp-seize-alcohol-headed-for-northern-communities-1.2263907> ... via @ctvregina

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

WhigStandard

Federal offender on the lam #ygk <http://www.thewhig.com/2015/03/04/police-look-for-assistance-finding-federal-offender> ...

pmharper

Announced our Govt's intent to introduce legislation to keep Canada's most heinous criminals behind bars for life.

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51
2015-03-05

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was minimal – moderate today.
- Le Devoir reported that former Prime Minister Jean Chrétien, who recently had his name attached to an open letter expressing opposition to Bill C-51 alongside former Prime Ministers Joe Clark, Paul Martin and John Turner, withdrew his opposition to the bill.
- Media reported today that legal scholars from the Saskatchewan and Saskatoon area have added their names to an open letter from over 100 Canadian law and legal professors expressing concern with the current form of Bill C-51.
- Media reported that according to the Parti Québécois, the current wording of Bill C-51 could be interpreted to incorporate environmentalists, protesters, and other groups in the bill's efforts to crack down on terrorism.
- Overall, the tone of coverage regarding Bill C-51 today was mostly negative with various articles questioning the language in Bill C-51, worrying that it could be interpreted too broadly.
- Social media activity was moderate and trends mainly focused on responses from March 4-5 on Edward Snowden's comments regarding Bill C-51.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- "What is important for us in that bill is we struck a balance that we can give the tools to both the law enforcement and intelligence officers so they can track terrorists so we can avoid radicalization and we can be better prepared to the evolving threat of terrorism." ~ Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney
- "We will support C-51 because of measures that will help keep Canadians safe: making better use of no-fly lists, building on the powers of preventative arrest, and allowing for more coordinated information sharing within government. However, there are also concerns, and we hear them, and we will offer non-partisan amendments to address the gaps. We hope the government will be constructive, and work with us to make a better law..." ~ Liberal MP Wayne Easter

- "This new legislation will not make Canadians safer, but rather gives government agencies many new and unchecked powers to intrude on the rights of Canadians who are not at all involved in terrorist activities." ~ Sarah Buhler, an assistant professor at the University of Saskatchewan's college of law
- « La menace, elle est tellement large qu'elle inclut, par exemple, un groupe autochtone qui déciderait de revendiquer un parc... » ~ Alexandre Cloutier, porte-parole péquiste en matière de Justice
- "I think the question is what we now face with ISIS, and what we face with networked, digital recruitment ... whether this is a different threat than what we faced 10 or 15 years ago." ~ former Conservative Senator Hugh Segal

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

NIL

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Bill C-51 could violate rights, lawyers say

The federal government's anti-terrorism bill gives government agencies too much unchecked power, say Saskatoon legal scholars who added their signatures to an open letter to parliamentarians, urging them to vote against the controversial law. "This new legislation will not make Canadians safer, but rather gives government agencies many new and unchecked powers to intrude on the rights of Canadians who are not at all involved in terrorist activities," said Sarah Buhler, an assistant professor at the University of Saskatchewan's college of law. Powers granted under the proposed legislation could be used by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) against groups such as environmental groups and First Nations, Buhler said. "The wording is so broad that it could potentially threaten to criminalize legitimate dissent," she said. Her colleague, assistant professor Clayton Bangsund, noted the Criminal Code already contains terrorism-related offences, which leads him to wonder what purpose the new law would serve. Bangsund said wording in the bill is "broad and ambiguous." The bill would authorize CSIS to "engage in intervention activities and disruptive measures," such as "wiping information from a target's computer or fabricating information to discredit a target," Bangsund said. It would also allow CSIS to ask a judge for a warrant to pre-authorize actions that contravene the charter, he said. Postmedia (Star Phoenix, A4)

La loi C-51 n'enchanté pas le PQ

(...) De passage en banlieue de Toronto, hier, le premier ministre Stephen Harper s'est montré peu ouvert à amender le projet de loi, dont l'étude en comité parlementaire débutera la semaine prochaine. «Évidemment, on va écouter, mais le gouvernement a fait beaucoup de délibérations sur le contenu de ce projet de loi et nous sommes tout à fait déterminés à l'adopter», a-t-il déclaré. Face aux craintes que suscite C-51, le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a pour sa part assuré que «les activités pacifiques de protestation ne sont pas incluses» dans le projet de loi. Le Journal de Québec, 20

Popular security bill could put lid on voices of dissent

An opinion piece states, "On Wednesday, I joined a small group of Canadians who have actually read Bill C-51, the Conservatives' bill designed to toughen up Canada's terrorism laws. The merits, or lack thereof, of Bill C-51 have consumed lots of attention in Ottawa, with Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney saying (over and over) that Canadians want more protection from terrorists, Opposition Leader Thomas Mulcair arguing the bill goes too far and has inadequate oversight of security agencies, and Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau saying he'll support the bill, but wants better oversight and a mandatory review of C-51 in future. The bill forbids "changing or unduly influencing a government in Canada by force or unlawful means" and prohibits "interference with critical infrastructure." Democratically elected governments shouldn't be changed or influenced "by force," but how can protests or civil disobedience campaigns change laws if they can't "influence" the government? That's the whole point. And who gets to decide when such influence is undue? That section is likely to raise flags among groups like First Nations, student and labour activists and environmentalists, who sometimes break the law (i.e., block roads, stage sit-ins, etc.) in order to try to change policy." The Chronicle-Herald, A13

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

Ex-Tory senator questions spy powers

A former Tory senator says the new powers proposed for Canada's spies under the Conservatives' new terror law are "unprecedented" in peace time. But Hugh Segal wonders if what Canadians are living through can properly be called "peace time." "I think the question is what we now face with ISIS, and what we face with networked, digital recruitment ... whether this is a different threat than what we faced 10 or 15 years ago," Segal said in an interview earlier this week. "And I would argue that it is." Bill C-51 would give the Canadian Security Intelligence Service police-like powers to "disrupt" threats to Canada. CSIS would be able to use those powers to address terrorist threats, but also threats to Canada's infrastructure or economic stability. Both opposition parties and security experts have criticized the Conservatives for drastically expanding CSIS's powers, while declining to include more independent oversight over Canada's spies. Segal, who retired from the Senate last year and currently holds the post of master at Massey College, has long championed increased oversight for Canada's intelligence agencies. Unlike our closest security partners, Canada has no parliamentary oversight of the country's various spy agencies. The review bodies Canada does have are dwarfed by the agencies they're supposed to monitor. For instance, the Security Intelligence Review Committee - with 17 employees and a budget of under $3 million - is tasked with reviewing the operations of CSIS, with a projected budget of $537 million. The Communications Security Establishment - Canada's answer to the NSA, employing more than 2,000 - has a review body with an annual budget of around $2 million. Toronto Star, A8

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

Terrorisme: Jean Chrétien réitère son opposition au projet de loi conservateur

Les audiences sur le projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 commenceront dans moins d'une semaine, et l'ex-premier ministre Jean Chrétien, qui n'a pas été invité à témoigner, a réitéré ses craintes à la suite d'une conférence à l'Université Concordia mercredi. « Quand on joue avec les droits et les libertés des citoyens, il faut être prudent. C'est une pente dangereuse, a prévenu celui qui a dirigé le Canada de 1993 à 2003. C'est facile de se servir des émotions, de la crainte des gens pour supprimer certaines libertés qui sont parfois difficiles à reconquérir. Moi qui ai été pour Pierre Elliott Trudeau le ministre de la Justice, c'est mon devoir d'être préoccupé. » Il propose que le gouvernement mette « au minimum » une clause faisant en sorte que la loi ne soit en vigueur que durant deux ou trois ans. « On a déjà beaucoup de lois qui donnent beaucoup de pouvoirs aux polices dans notre pays. » M. Chrétien fait partie des quatre anciens premiers ministres qui ont récemment signé une lettre ouverte réclamant un meilleur mécanisme d'examen des agences de sécurité nationale et qui n'ont pas été appelés à témoigner lors des audiences, selon une liste obtenue par Radio-Canada mercredi. Le Devoir

Legislation needs amendments

A letter to the editor written by Liberal MP Wayne Easter states, "In the wake of the deadly attacks on military officers in Quebec and on Parliament Hill last October, we must consider how to best protect Canadians from modern terrorist threats, while safeguarding our values. Although the government's new anti-terrorism legislation, Bill C-51, takes some proper steps in that direction, it will need fixing. Having been the government during 9/11 and other terrorist events, the Liberal Party is well aware of the tough issues and sensitivities involved. We will support C-51 because of measures that will help keep Canadians safe: making better use of no-fly lists, building on the powers of preventative arrest, and allowing for more coordinated information sharing within government. However, there are also concerns, and we hear them, and we will offer non-partisan amendments to address the gaps. We hope the government will be constructive, and work with us to make a better law; if not, we will present our amendments to Canadians in this year's election." Estevan Lifestyles

Lincoln politicians address business community

Niagara West-Glanbrook MP Dean Allison touched on some foreign affairs by acknowledging the work on the anti-terrorism Bill C-51 and some of the significant progress that has taken place overseas in countries like Afghanistan, but the majority of his update reflected discussion about business-related issues, including trade, infrastructure, research and development and entrepreneurship. Allison said the federal government is looking at further ways to support business, including reducing some of the red tape businesses face. "We're trying to foster an environment that makes it easier for people to do business," said Allison, who noted corporate taxes were also reduced. Bill C-51 has been scrutinized, Allison said it's a matter of providing authorities with the power to protect Canadians from terrorist activity, and really only impacts people of risk. The bill, he said, will assist with better communication between government agencies who tend to "operate in silence." Niagara This Week

Standing on guard for Canada

A letter to the editor states, "On reviewing the federal Conservative government's Bill C-51, their "anti-terrorism" law, I see there is a clause that this law is to protect Canada against activities that undermine the security of Canada, including "the interference with the Government of Canada in relation to the economic or financial stability of Canada." I am also aware of the related RCMP document entitled, "Criminal Threats to the Petroleum Industry" which refers to "the anti-Canadian petroleum movement" and refers to alliances by the "anti-petroleum movement" with "violent aboriginal extremists" in BC. I am concerned that this law by Stephen Harper and his government will allow you to conduct surveillance on me because of my ongoing opposition to projects such as Enbridge Northern Gateway oil/ condensate pipeline." Prince George Citizen

Former watchdog chair Chuck Strahl says existing security oversight is enough

The former head of the committee watching over the country's security service says he doesn't see a need for greater oversight, even as the government expands the agency's mandate. Chuck Strahl says he thinks the existing five-member Security Intelligence Review Committee has done a good job to date and can handle it in the future. The government's latest anti-terrorism bill would expand powers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and, among other things, would let it disrupt terror plots, rather than simply gathering intelligence. Strahl says he's leery of an NDP proposal to give parliamentarians a direct role in overseeing CSIS. Canadian Press (iPolitics)

Michael Den Tandt: Harper's betting Canadians are anxious to smite homegrown terrorists

An opinion piece states "Say what the critics might, as strategies go, it doesn't lack for dash. You'd have to reach back to 1988, and the great free-trade election, to find a gamble of similar moment on a single issue in our politics. For with their pending throw-away-the-key law, the federal Conservatives have bet the farm, tractor, livestock and kitchen sink on the assumption that Canadians are anxious to smite evil-doers, ranging from garden-variety serial killers to homegrown jihadi terrorists, and that the populist loathing of miscreants will supersede all else ahead of the federal election scheduled for October. Canadians who go abroad to fight for the Islamic State of Iraq and al-Sham could be locked up for life without parole upon their return to Canada, under the pending tough-on-crime law unveiled by Prime Minister Stephen Harper Wednesday, the Prime Minister's Office confirmed. "The highest responsibility of any government is to help keep Canadians safe and our country secure," PMO spokesman Stephen Lecce wrote in an email. 'Under our government's new legislation, High Treason would carry a life sentence without parole.' A PMO source confirmed that any Canadians who travel overseas to fight with ISIS could be guilty of high treason under the existing definition in the Criminal Code of Canada — and thus, imprisoned for the rest of their natural lives, if convicted and sentenced under the new law. What this amounts to, on the heels of Bill C-51, the Conservatives' new anti-terrorism legislation, is a doubling-down on public security as the issue, to a degree not seen before from this government. It marks a significant rightward shift for a party that, before now, had tended to tinker around the margins of hang-'em-high conservatism, with such measures as mandatory minimum sentences, without ever quite leaping in with both feet." Postmedia News (Canada.com)

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements
au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding the forthcoming anti-terrorism legislation was minimal, while it received significant coverage on CBC television's "Power & Politics" program, including an interview with Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Minister Steven Blaney.

General Coverage / couverture générale

CP24 interviewed Minister of Public Safety, Steven Blaney regarding Bill C-51. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Power and Politics featured an interview with Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney on issues surrounding Bill C-51. Rough Transcript

CBC News' Power and Politics featured a panel discussion of security and legal experts on the potential implications of Bill C-51. Rough Transcript

Threat Disruption / Perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements
au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

This social media analysis is based on the following keywords:

"anti-terror bill" AND "Canada"
"anti-terror bill" AND "Harper"
"anti-terror bill" AND "Ottawa"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Canada"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Harper"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Ottawa"
"anti-terrorism act" AND "2015"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Canada"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Harper"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Ottawa"
"bill c51"
"c-51"
"Canada" AND "anti-terror law"
"loi anti-terroriste" AND "2015"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "conservateur"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "Harper"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "Ottawa"
"loi sur la protection du Canada contre les terroristes"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Canada"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "conservateur"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Harper"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Ottawa"
"security legislation" AND "Canada"

There were a total of 1852 social media posts on March 5 2015. The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

In total, there were approximately 1447 tweets, 292 Facebook posts, 38 blog posts, 36 news posts and 39 other posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the day:

Coverage peaked between 12 pm and 6 pm ET on March 5 with social media posts based on tweets and retweets of Edward Snowden speaking on Bill C-51 and tweets from CBC News' Power and Politics based on a special edition focusing on terrorism and national security.

Stakeholders

@CanadaFP

When Canada recognizes a real threat like ISIL, we do not stand on the sidelines #StopISIS

@ICLMG

Bill C-51: Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015 | Voices Case Study, Reactions & Proposed Changes voices-voix.ca/en/facts/profi... #cdnpoli #AttackOnDissent #C51

@ICLMG

The govt can't intimidate activists by calling us extremists writes @DavidSuzukiFDN <http://huff.to/1AJuzIS> #cdnpoli #C51 #AttackOnDissent

@OpenMedia_ca

Former PMs won't be able to speak up against secret police #BillC51 to parliament ow.ly/JZ3XB

@OpenMedia_ca

UBC students want @JustinTrudeau to stand up for #privacy and fight secret police #BillC51 <http://ow.ly/JZ5oc>

@bccla

#HumanRights ramifications of #C51: international news! @guardian covers concerns of legal scholars & rights groups <http://tinyurl.com/qca2cea>

Media

@ipoliticsca

Former watchdog chair Chuck Strahl says existing security oversight is enough | iPolitics bit.ly/1EjM0XT #cdnpoli

@PostmediaNews

Michael Den Tandt: Harper's betting Canadians are anxious to smite homegrown terrorists <http://ow.ly/JZ8ng>

@ipoliticsca

Former watchdog chair Chuck Strahl says existing security oversight is enough | iPolitics <http://bit.ly/1EjM0XT> #cdnpoli

@althiaraj

Existing Security Oversight Enough: Ex-Watchdog Chair <http://huff.to/1KtuGU3> via @HuffPostCanada

@TorontoStar

Conservative party nourishes terror threats to bolster political fortunes: Tim Harper <http://on.thestar.com/1zR3rYm> #topstories

@PnPCBC

Right now a special edition of #pnpcbc - Terror In Focus. Will the gov's new anti-terror legislation keep you safer? Join us as we dig deep.

@PnPCBC

Vote now on tonight's #ballotbox question: do you think the new anti-terror legislation should be passed as is? <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2983490>

@PnPCBC

Everything you need to know abt the gov't's anti-terror bill now on #pnpcbc. Get the facts and get informed - you are where you need to be.

@CTV_PowerPlay

Oliver: I think we can all agree terrorism in Canada is real but I'm not so sure the level of anxiety or the fear of insecurity is realistic

Hashtags

@moxyladies

"I have never seen the #RCMP #CSIS have such a cosy relationship with #government. Not supposed to be" <http://natpo.st/1zdqqNY> #C51 #pnpcbc

@Juicexlx

@billhillier I came to the conclusion that there wasn't any oversight.. at all

<http://ottawacitizen.com/news/politics/spy-agencys-review-group-cant-perform-oversight-role...> #CDNPoli #CSIS #PolQC

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca)*

Today's News / Actualités
March 6, 2015 / le 6 mars, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

White powder in envelopes sent to offices of federal ministers harmless: police

Quebec police say the white powder found in envelopes sent to the riding offices of the four federal cabinet ministers from the province was harmless. Provincial police spokesman Richard Gagne says none of the four envelopes contained a noxious product of any kind. He says authorities know what the substance is but won't reveal that for now because it's an important element in their investigation. Gagne also said in an interview today it's believed the same person or persons were responsible. The envelopes were discovered Thursday in the riding offices of Denis Lebel, the Conservative minister responsible for Quebec, and three other cabinet ministers -- Christian Paradis, Maxime Bernier and Steven Blaney. Certain media reported the envelope sent to Lebel's office contained a warning the Conservatives would be annihilated. CTV News; La Presse

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News reports on a statement released by Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney on the Zehaf-Bibeau video released today by the RCMP. Rough transcript

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NIL

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Privacy czar says federal anti terrorism bill is 'clearly excessive'

The federal privacy watchdog says the scope of the Conservative government's anti-terrorism bill is excessive and that it puts the personal information of Canadians at risk. In a submission to the House of Commons public safety committee, Daniel Therrien says measures in the bill to protect against unreasonable loss of privacy are seriously deficient. Therrien says all Canadians would be caught in this web. He says the bill could make available all federally held information about someone to 17 government departments and agencies with responsibilities for national security. Therrien says the legislation sets the threshold for sharing Canadians' personal data far too low. In addition, he's concerned the bill sets no clear limits on how long the information would be kept. Canadian Press (Times Colonist, Metro News, CTV News, CBC News, The Daily Courier)

Projet de loi C-51 : le commissaire à la vie privée a de nombreuses préoccupations

Le commissaire à la vie privée du Canada a exprimé plusieurs préoccupations concernant la protection des renseignements personnels dans le projet de loi C-51 dans un mémoire qu'il a fait parvenir vendredi au Parlement. Le projet de loi antiterroriste de 2015 déposé le 30 janvier par le gouvernement conservateur donnerait lieu à la création de la Loi sur la communication d'information ayant trait à la sécurité du Canada (LCISC) qui permettra de faciliter la communication d'information entre les institutions fédérales. Selon le commissaire Daniel Therrien, la loi permettrait à 17 ministères et organismes fédéraux exerçant certaines responsabilités en lien avec la sécurité nationale d'obtenir l'ensemble des renseignements personnels des Canadiens détenus par tout ministère. Journal de Montreal

Privacy Commissioner slams anti-terror Bill, C-51

"Canada's Privacy Commissioner, Daniel Therrien, has issued a devastating critique of the Conservative government's anti-terror legislation, Bill C-51. At the time the Conservatives unveiled C-51 cabinet ministers told Parliament that the government had "consulted" the Privacy Commissioner. They did not say what the Commissioner's view of the legislation was, but gave the impression he was onside. Now, we learn that the Conservative ministers were being disingenuous. In a letter to Conservative MP Daryl Kramp, the Chair of the House Public Safety and National Security Committee, Commissioner Therrien says: "the scale of information sharing being proposed is unprecedented, the scope of the new powers conferred by the Act is excessive, particularly as these powers affect ordinary Canadians, and the safeguards protecting against unreasonable loss of privacy are seriously deficient." Therrien does not mince his words. He does not even try to be conciliatory or diplomatic." Rabble.ca

Manitoba ombudsman concerned about anti-terrorism Bill C-51

Manitoba's ombudsman has joined other privacy commissioners in Canada expressing concerns about the Conservatives' proposed anti-terrorism Bill C-51. Canada's provincial and territorial privacy oversight officers jointly released a letter on Friday to the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security expressing concerns about the privacy implications of the bill. "Provincial oversight officers share the commissioner's concerns," acting Manitoba ombudsman Mel Holley said in a news release, referring to a letter posted Thursday by federal privacy commissioner Daniel Therrien. CBC News

Provincial ombudsmen express concern over anti-terrorism bill

Concern over the Federal government's proposed anti-terrorism bill has prompted privacy commissioners across Canada to act. Provincial and territorial privacy oversight officers have jointly released a letter to the chair of the standing committee on public safety and national security expressing concerns about the privacy implications of Bill C-51, otherwise known as the anti-terrorism act. Provincial ombudsmen detailed seven amendment recommendations to the chair of the standing committee, specifically related to the general language being used in Bill C-51. "We are confident that it is possible to both improve our capacity to preempt future terrorist attacks and enhance the privacy, accountability and transparency safeguards necessary to preserve our free and open democracy," the letter said. The document, signed by all 11 provincial and territorial Ombudsmen, was released in conjunction with a letter of similar concern from the Federal Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien. Winnipeg Free Press

Snowden: Canadians Face 'Intrusive' Spy Bill That Echoes US Patriot Act

In a teleconference hosted by the Canadian Journalists for Free Expression at Ryerson University on Wednesday, NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden warned that the country's intelligence agencies have the "weakest oversight" in the Western world, and that new anti-terror legislation championed by Prime Minister Stephen Harper was "an emulation of the American Patriot Act."

"And when [the agencies are] trying to expand their powers, it's pretty amazing that we have the Canadian government trying to block the testimony of former prime ministers who've had access to classified information, who understand the value of these programs, and who are warning the public broadly and saying this is something we really need to talk about, this is something we really need to debate, this is something we really need to be careful about," Snowden continued. As Common Dreams previously reported, the new surveillance legislation, known as Bill C-51, "would expand the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS)'s powers to 'disrupt terrorism offenses and terrorist activity,' make it easier for law enforcement agencies to carry out preventive detentions, and allow them for longer time, make it easier to federal agencies to share information, and give law enforcement agencies power 'to disrupt terrorism offenses and terrorist activity.'" While critics have said the scope of the legislation is overly broad and exploits recent attacks to expand unwarranted surveillance powers, Harper and others in Parliament say the bill is necessary for national security. Mint Press News

Conservative Party fights fear with fear with Bill C-51: Keenan

An opinion piece states, "Jihadi terrorists have declared war on Canada," a Conservative party fundraising email sent out this week reads. "They hate us for our values. They hate us because we love freedom and tolerance." On occasion, the Conservative government headed by Prime Minister Stephen Harper has shown an inclination to take on the role of the press — by producing and distributing its own approved news items to print and broadcast media through the PR agency News Canada Ltd., for example. It now appears it has decided to do the work of satirists, too. How else to explain the transparent layers of irony running through the Conservatives' public communications, the ham-fisted illustrations of doublespeak that so effectively lay bare the cynical, hollow heart and totalitarian inclinations of their new legislation? One imagines the frustrated novelists and comedians in the Conservative StratCom writers room shaking their heads at the efforts of editorial cartoonists and TV sketch troupes: You call that parody? Let us show you how this is done. "They hate us because we love freedom and tolerance." See, the devastating self-skewering element of this line is that it is nominally intended to serve as the justification for a proposed law, Bill C-51, that will restrict freedom. And it is offered at a time when members of the government are using the bill as a means of whipping up intolerance against Muslims to score cheap political points. Here we have a piece of legislation that would, among other things, curtail freedom of speech fairly broadly on matters related to terrorism and give an espionage agency domestic policing powers that allow it, in secret, to be specifically exempted from honouring the Charter of Rights." Toronto Star

Projet de loi antiterroriste : un père craint pour son fils radicalisé à Winnipeg

Un membre des Forces canadiennes à Winnipeg s'inquiète de l'impact que pourrait avoir l'adoption par Ottawa du projet de loi C-51 pour combattre le terrorisme sur son fils radicalisé. Le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) a communiqué avec le père lundi pour lui faire savoir que son fils se trouve dans sa liste de surveillance et qu'on le croit extrémiste radical. L'agence fédérale enquête sur ses activités depuis 2014 Le jeune homme, qui s'est donné le pseudonyme Harun Abdurahman sur Twitter, exprime dans les médias sociaux son appui à l'État islamique et aux combats de ses militants. Radio-Canada

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau case invites contrasts to Australian experience

An analysis piece notes "(...) How different the story is in Canada. Although more than four months have elapsed, the public has learned little from official sources about the Oct. 22 shooting that left Cpl. Nathan Cirillo and the gunman dead. Here; a coroner examined the body of gunman Michael Zehaf-Bibeau, but the results have not been made public. The body was quietly released to his father and whisked out of the country for burial late last year — a fact that was only revealed by an Ottawa Citizen report this week. We still do not know whether Zehaf-Bibeau — a crack addict — was high or sober when he shot Cirillo at the National War Memorial and the stormed Parliament. What we do know about him comes almost entirely from reporters digging into his past. We know from people who spent time with him in homeless shelters he had a serious drug problem. We know from court records in B.C. that he asked to be imprisoned to get clean, and from those same records we know he believed he had an undiagnosed mental illness, but that a court-appointed psychologist didn't concur. We also know from former co-workers he expressed sympathy with the Taliban, and that he was watching and sharing jihadi videos as early as 2007. We know he was a hard worker who made good money at that point in his life. And we know the story of his longing to emigrate to Libya, where he had spent happy times as a teenager, and of the passport struggles that stood in the way. But we don't know any of that thanks to official sources." CBC News

Zehaf-Bibeau video / La vidéo de Zehaf-Bibeau

Privacy watchdog says federal anti-terrorism bill is 'clearly excessive'

The scope of the Conservative government's anti-terrorism bill is "clearly excessive" and puts the personal information of Canadians at risk, the federal privacy commissioner says. In a submission to the House of Commons public safety committee, Daniel Therrien says measures in the bill to protect against unreasonable loss of privacy are "seriously deficient." The government brought in the bill — which would significantly expand the Canadian Security Intelligence Service's mandate — following the daylight murders of two Canadian soldiers last October. The bill would give CSIS the ability to disrupt terror plots, make it easier to limit the movements of a suspect, expand no-fly list powers, crack down on terrorist propaganda, and remove barriers to sharing security-related information. Therrien says the bill could make available all federally held information about someone of interest to as many as 17 government departments and agencies with responsibilities for national security. The legislation sets the threshold for sharing Canadians' personal data far too low, he says. In addition, Therrien is concerned the bill sets no clear limits on how long the information would be kept. Canadian Press (Winnipeg Free Press, The Telegram, Times Colonist, Metro News, Toronto Star, CP24, National Post, CTV News, Macleans)

RCMP set to release Parliament Hill gunman video

After more than four months of waiting, Canadians will get their first glimpse today of a video manifesto made by Parliament Hill gunman Michael Zehaf-Bibeau. RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson is scheduled to appear before a House of Commons committee at 11 a.m. ET where he is to display and discuss the video, as well as brief MPs on the Mounties' investigation stemming from the shooting. The video could answer lingering questions about Zehaf-Bibeau's actions that day — when he killed Cpl. Nathan Cirillo at the National War Memorial then stormed Parliament Hill before dying in a shootout inside the Centre Block — including whether he acted alone or had any help planning or carrying out the shootings. The cellphone video, which is less than one minute long, was shot shortly before the attacks on Oct. 22. In the video, Zehaf-Bibeau discusses waging "jihad," takes aim at Canada's foreign policy, threatens the Canadian military and invokes Allah. Jordan Press (Ottawa Citizen)

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video release supported by MP Wayne Easter

Canadians will soon get a look at the cellphone video made by the gunman who stormed Parliament Hill last October, and MP Wayne Easter says that's a good thing. Malpeque MP Wayne Easter says there are things to be learned from the video Michael Zehaf-Bibeau made before he killed Corp. Nathan Cirillo on Parliament Hill. (...) "There is no question it was a terrorist act that happened on Parliament Hill. How much was Bibeau inspired by radical elements and terrorist elements? We don't know. It might give us some indication there. And I think it will show us what motivates individuals to do a heinous act such as this." CBC News

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video edited by RCMP

The video of Parliament Hill shooter Michael Zehaf-Bibeau is an edited version, missing 18 seconds while the RCMP continue its investigation, Commissioner Bob Paulson said Friday ahead of its first public viewing. Paulson told a special meeting of the House public safety committee that the RCMP were still investigating whether anyone had helped Zehaf-Bibeau in the Oct. 22 attack and warned if that is the case, those individuals will be charged with terrorism offences. Because of that investigation, Paulson said the video shown Friday was missing 13 seconds from the beginning and five seconds from the end. CBC News; Radio-Canada; Le Journal de Montreal; TVA Nouvelles; Global News; La Presse; Reuters; Ipolitics; CTV News

Ottawa shooter in video: 'You are not even safe in your home land'

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau said he was seeking vengeance for Canada's military deployment in Muslim countries before killing a soldier at the War Memorial in Ottawa and storming through Parliament with a rifle. "You are not even safe in your home land," said the Ottawa shooter before the attack of Oct. 22, in which he was killed by guards and police. He was in his car as he made the video, which was presented at the public safety committee of the House on Friday. The recording was recovered from a cellphone left in a car used by Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau that day. The government has argued that the shooting was a terrorist act, based on Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau's comments about Canada's foreign policy. RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson said he views Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau as a terrorist and he would have been charged as such if he had been captured alive. He announced the RCMP removed 18 seconds from the video before releasing it to the public. The investigation into the attack, and whether Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau had any accomplices, is ongoing. The Globe and Mail; National Post; Canadian Press (Macleans, Windsor Star, The Gazette, Huffington Post, Metro News); QMI Agency (Toronto Sun, London Free Press); CBC News; Canoe; Presse Canadienne (Journal Metro)

Parliament Hill shooter calm in video shot minutes before attack

Just minutes before Michael Zehaf-Bibeau killed Cpl Nathan Cirillo and terrorized Parliament Hill in October, he hastily recorded a cellphone video from his car. In the video — released Friday morning to a special meeting of the Commons public safety committee — he says his attack is to show soldiers they are "not even safe in your own land." "Canada's officially become one of our enemies by fighting and bombing us and creating a lot of terror in our countries and killing us and killing our innocents," Zehaf-Bibeau says calmly. He ends: "Thank you." RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson told the committee they had debated the video's release, weighing the public interest against the fear that the video would be used for terrorist propaganda. "The video speaks for itself. It is what it is," Paulson said, noting that the release was in no way motivated or influenced by Parliament's debate concerning the Conservative's anti-terrorism Bill C-51. Toronto Star

Read transcript of the Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video

"To those who are involved and listen to this movie, this is in retaliation for Afghanistan and because Harper wants to send his troops to Iraq. So we are retaliating, the Mujahedin of this world. Canada's officially become one of our enemies by fighting and bombing us and creating a lot of terror in our countries and killing us and killing our innocents. So, just aiming to hit some soldiers just to show that you're not even safe in your own land, and you gotta be careful. So, may Allah accept from us. It's a disgrace you guys have forgotten God and have you let every indecency and things running your land. We don't, we don't go for this. We are good people, righteous people, believers of God and believing his law and his Prophets, peace be upon them all. That's my message to all of you in this, Inshallah, we'll not cease until you guys decide to be a peaceful country and stay to your own and I-, and stop going to other countries and stop occupying and killing the righteous of us who are trying to bring back religious law in our countries. Thank you." The Globe and Mail (The Hill Times); Le Journal de Montreal

Editorial: What the Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video tells us

"Canadians should have seen the video made by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau months ago. Even now, astoundingly, the RCMP won't show us the whole thing. Commissioner Bob Paulson had better have a sound investigative or ethical reason for censoring the video, because Canadians have been treated like children long enough. Paulson presented the video to a Parliamentary committee, and said that 18 seconds had been edited out, for "operational" reasons he would not disclose. Thirteen seconds at the beginning and five seconds at the end. Presumably, if the reasons truly are "operational," we'll be able to see the edited parts eventually. What we did see was not surprising, given what reporting has revealed so far and the hints dropped by government ministers. In the video, Zehaf-Bibeau says that his actions are "in retaliation for Afghanistan and because Harper wants to send his troops to Iraq." He includes himself among the "mujahideen of this world." He rambles about Canadian society, although he was born and raised in this country: "It's a disgrace you guys have forgotten God and have you let every indecency and things running your land. We don't, we don't go for this." In other words, vague Islamist boilerplate. This was what we had to wait four and a half months to see?" Ottawa Citizen

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News provided live coverage of the Standing Committee on Public Safety and National Security. RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson presented a video recorded by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau before his attack. The recording was recovered from a cellphone left in a car used by Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau that day. Commissioner Paulson said he views Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau as a terrorist and he would have been charged as such if he had been captured alive. He announced the RCMP removed 18 seconds from the video before releasing it to the public. The investigation into the attack, and whether Mr. Zehaf-Bibeau had any accomplices, is ongoing. Rough Transcript

CBC News provided coverage of a Q & A with reporters and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, Roxanne James on the video recorded by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau. Rough transcript

CBC News provided coverage from the Center Block of Parliament of Randall Garrison of the NDP reacting to the video recorded by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau. Rough transcript

CBC News provided coverage from the Center Block of Parliament of Liberal MP, Wayne Easter reacting to the video recorded by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau. Rough transcript

CBC News interviewed Ray Boisvert, former director of intelligence for CSIS. They discussed a video recorded by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau. Rough transcript

CBC News reports on the case of a father whose son, alias Harun Abdurahman, is now considered a radical extremist and on a watch list. A CSIS agent contacted him on Monday. A man answering Abdurahman's cell phone refused to talk the CBC last night but hours earlier he tweeted, I may be in some very big trouble. Rough transcript

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

900000 livres de sirop récupérées

Rappelons que ce vol spectaculaire aurait été commis entre le 1er août 2011 et le 30 juillet 2012. C'est en procédant à un inventaire de routine que la Fédération des producteurs acéricoles du Québec (FPAQ) avait constaté la disparition d'une quantité importante des inventaires de sirop d'érable détenus dans l'entrepôt de Saint-Louis-de-Blandford. Il appert que les voleurs ont eu accès à l'entrepôt de la FPAQ par l'intermédiaire d'un local situé dans le même immeuble. Sur une longue période, ils ont pu ainsi transvider le sirop d'érable dans des camions-citernes. Pour bien camoufler leur crime, les voleurs avaient même pris soin de remplacer le contenu de plusieurs barils par de l'eau. Pas moins de 300 personnes travaillant dans le secteur de la production et de la vente de sirop d'érable ainsi que dans le transport de marchandises ont été interrogées par les enquêteurs de la Sûreté du Québec (SQ), de l'Agence des services frontaliers du Canada, de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada et par l'Agence américaine de l'immigration et des douanes. Le sirop d'érable volé avait pris la destination des différentes provinces et du nord-est des États-Unis. Le sirop d'érable volé récupéré - environ 900 000 livres - est entreposé par la FPAQ dans son entrepôt à Laurierville. Il demeure toutefois la propriété de la SQ, le temps que durera l'enquête. Le Soleil, 23

CBSA intercepts source of tainted drugs in Saskatoon

Police have seized what they believe to be the same drug responsible for 10 life-threatening medical emergencies in Saskatoon last December. The Canada Border Services Agency intercepted suspicious package on Feb. 22, 2015 which was being shipped to Saskatoon from China. They found a significant amount of amphetamine. They executed a search warrant on March 5 at a home in the 100 block of 5th Street East. Officers seized approximately 500 grams of amphetamine, 48.5 grams of marijuana and 11.4 grams of psilocybin. Investigators believe the amphetamine is the same drug related to the medical emergencies which was initially thought to be cocaine or ecstasy. Ten people took the illegal substance which was cut with dangerous chemicals. Officers were called to two of the incidents on Dec. 20 which involved boys in their teens. One was at a home while the other was driving a car with passengers when he crashed at Gray Avenue and Central Avenue. News Talk 980

Alain Philippon phone password case: Powers of border agents and police differ

The case of Alain Philippon, a Quebec man who was charged for refusing to give up his smartphone password at the Halifax airport, illustrates the differences in search-and-seizure powers of border agents and police, but may also signal a need to update such laws governing officials at the border. "If a police officer stops me on the street and says 'Empty out your bag' for no good reason [and] they don't allege I've committed an offence, that's patently illegal," said Benjamin Berger, an associate professor at Osgoode Hall Law School of York University. "And yet I habitually do it when I take an airplane. Why? Because no one has forced me to go to the airport." Philippon, 38, of Ste-Anne-des-Plaines, Que., was charged under the Customs Act for hindering or preventing border officers from performing their role when he refused to divulge his cellphone password to Canada Border Services Agency officers during a customs search Monday night at Halifax Stanfield International Airport. CBC.ca

Calgary woman facing 10 immigration fraud charges

Charges have been laid against a Calgary woman accused of making multiple immigration applications under different names. The Canada Border Services Agency launched an investigation after receiving information from U.S. Consular officials in Calgary earlier this year. Yi Min Weng, 28, was arrested Tuesday and charged with nine counts under the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act for misrepresentation and using documents, and one Criminal Code charge for fraud. CBSA alleges the woman made a number of immigration applications under different names, including a visa application in 2007, a claim for refugee protection in 2007, and an application for permanent residency in 2010. Calgary Herald

Canada : il risque la prison pour avoir refusé de donner le mot de passe de son portable

La protection des données personnelles, sujet largement débattu sur les médias depuis les révélations de Snowden, refait à nouveau surface au Canada. Cette fois, il s'agit non pas d'une affaire d'espionnage, mais du refus pour un passager de divulguer le mot de passe de son téléphone lors d'un contrôle de douane. Les faits remontent à lundi dernier lorsque Alain Philippon, ressortissant québécois, arrive à l'aéroport international Stanfield d'Halifax à Nova Scotia après avoir effectué un voyage en République Dominicaine. Ce dernier se soumet sans difficulté aux formalités douanières. Mais contre toute attente, il lui est demandé de communiquer le mot de passe de son téléphone portable BlackBerry en vue d'une inspection de son contenu. Ce dernier refuse systématiquement de se soumettre à cette dernière mesure, ce qui lui vaut une garde à vue et la saisie de son téléphone. Developpez.com

Please! Not a strip club!

City Council will be briefed next week on the reconstruction of Huron Street, scheduled to begin later this year and to be finished in 2016. Among other things, city planners will be talking about their search for ideas for some kind of sign or outdoor landmark to welcome visitors pulling onto Huron after clearing Canada Customs at the International Bridge. The feature is expected to be located in a small green space in front of a PUC substation at the corner of Huron and Queen. Speaking Thursday night to a meeting of the Sault's cultural advisory board, Steve Turco from the city planning department revealed one early concept (shown), based on the famous 32-foot-high LAX letters, surrounded by illuminated vertical tubes, that greet visitors to Los Angeles International Airport. The proposed Sault location used to be maintained by the city's public works department but has recently fallen into what Turco described as "a bit of a state of disarray." All that will change as the city works to convert Huron Street into a pleasing streetscape that will remind visitors that they have arrived somewhere special. Soo Today

Windsor-Detroit bridge authority adds financial execs

The Windsor-Detroit Bridge Authority — the authority that will launch the public-private partnership to design, build, finance, operate and maintain a new $2.1 billion bridge across the Detroit River — said Friday it has named four Canadian financial executives to serve as members of its Capital Markets Advisory Panel. The Windsor-Detroit Bridge Authority is a not-for-profit Canadian Crown corporation that will manage the procurement process for the design, construction, operation and maintenance of the new bridge between Windsor and Detroit through a public-private partnership. It will operate the bridge and will set and collect all tolls. "I welcome the appointment of this financial advisory panel as the WDBA looks to maximize the benefits of the Public-Private Partnership," said Lisa Raitt, Canada's Transport minister. "Since it began its work six months ago, the WDBA has made great strides on the New International Trade Crossing project. Our government looks forward to further progress over the coming months." Detroit News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

NIL

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

RCMP in Nova Scotia charge two teens after finding air-soft gun at school

RCMP in Chester have charged two teenaged girls after getting reports of students bringing air-soft guns to a local school. Officers received the information on Feb. 26 and visited the school the next day. According to a news release, police were able to "substantiate the information" and seize the gun in question. On March 4, two 14-year-old girls from the Chester area were arrested and charged with possession of a weapon for a dangerous purpose. The Lunenburg County RCMP District Commander states in the release that even though air-soft guns are meant for recreational purposes, their presence in public places like schools is "extremely concerning" for police. "Even from a short distance away, someone that's highly trained would have a hard time determining if an air-soft gun is a real weapon or not," states Staff Sgt. Jean-Guy Richard. "We have to treat them as real weapons." Metro News; Chronicle Herald

La Ronge student to be charged for school bus threats

RCMP say charges are pending for a student who threatened another student on a school bus. It happened in La Ronge on Thursday afternoon. Officers say a youth with a weapon threatened another student. The student who was threatened complained to the bus driver, and the bus driver spoke to the child accused of making the threat. RCMP say the student took off on foot in the middle of the conversation with the bus driver, but was found and taken into custody shortly afterward. CBC News; Global News; Canadian Press (mySask.com)

Winnipeg police budget increase small, but more sustainable: Bowman

While the Winnipeg Police Service (WPS) received a modest $5 million increase to its 2015 operating budget Tuesday, it will cease to see the annual budget boosts of old going forward, because Mayor Brian Bowman says they are no longer sustainable. The city's preliminary operating and capital budget of $994 million for 2015 was released Tuesday at the city's executive policy committee. A total of 28 per cent of the nearly $1 billion budget is earmarked for police. The $5 million increase is small compared to past years, and the WPS won't be seeing the kinds of yearly increases to its budget that it use to. Bowman said that's what is different this year is the rate of escalation in the budget for police and its reduction. "The costs have been growing and they aren't sustainable," said Bowman. "This year's budget finds a modest reduction in the increase but there still is an increase." The mayor said the city doesn't suggest which areas of the department's budget should be targeted for cuts. But Bowman also said the department's pension plan eats up a large amount of its budget. CBC News

Man faces charges in woman's death following fire at home in Peel, N.B.

New Brunswick RCMP say a 25-year-old man faces charges in the death of a woman whose body was found inside her burned out home. Police say the body of 52-year-old Phyllis Roy was discovered following Monday's fire in the community of Peel, north of Hartland. Police have not identified the accused or released any details on the charges pending a court appearance today in Woodstock. Investigators say the home was engulfed in flames when firefighters arrived at the scene. The Mounties say the investigation is continuing. Canadian Press (Global News)

Missing St. Laurent teen last seen in Winnipeg

Lundar RCMP and the Winnipeg police are asking for the public's help locating a missing teenage girl. Juliette Forsyth, 15, of St. Laurent, Man. was last seen on Feb. 28 in Winnipeg, when she left a family residence. Family and friends have not heard from her since. Police believe she may be with a male acquaintance. Forsyth is listed at 5'3", 140-pounds. She was last seen wearing a black winter jacket, pink hoodie, blue jeans and tan mukluks. The Carillon

Hansel & Gretel's big wooden 'Sleepy Bear' stolen from candy company

RCMP officers on Vancouver Island are looking for anyone who may have recently acquired a big wooden bear, after a carved grizzly went missing from the Hansel and Gretel's Candy Company in Chemainus over the weekend. "It's a little bit of an icon up there, it's a very quaint community," said Cpl. Krista Hobday with the North Cowichan-Duncan RCMP. "We're not sure what motive would be behind stealing such an icon." Hansel and Gretel's Candy Company owner Ward Yeager said his store is decorated with 30 to 40 bears of various sizes on its lawn... The RCMP are actively investigating the theft and are appealing to the public to call the RCMP if they have any information about Sleepy Bear's whereabouts. "This is very easy to identify," said Hobday. "We do believe that whoever does have it in their possession, that others know about that." CBC News

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Harper Moves to Jail Canada Jihadist Fighters Without Parole

Canada's move to stiffen jail terms for what the government calls "the most heinous" offenses means citizens caught fighting for the Islamic State could be locked away for good. Prime Minister Stephen Harper said Wednesday Canadians convicted of certain murders such as those involving acts of terrorism or "high treason" will now face life in prison without parole. The proposed legislation, which would apply only to new sentences and not retroactively, will be presented to parliament next week. Canadian warplanes are part of a coalition carrying out air strikes against Islamic State militants, and the government this year proposed a law to boost the powers of security agencies to investigate terror cases while rejecting calls for stronger oversight of those new powers. The latest announcement comes in an election year, with Harper and his majority Conservative Party trailing in some opinion polls. "The fact is there are certain criminals who should never, ever be allowed to walk the streets," Harper said at the announcement in Toronto. "For the most heinous offenders and the most horrific crimes, a life sentence in Canada will henceforth mean exactly that -- a sentence for life." The announcement was made before Friday's scheduled appearance of Royal Canadian Mounted Police Commissioner Bob Paulson before a parliamentary committee, which invited him "to publicly display and discuss" a video manifesto recorded by Parliament Hill gunman Michael Zehaf-Bibeau, who killed a soldier before dying in a shootout on Oct. 22. The RCMP has never released the video. (...) Canada averaged 40 new first-degree-murder convictions per year over the last decade, according to data compiled by the country's Office of the Correctional Investigator, a watchdog. As of Feb. 8, there were 1,169 Canadians who had been convicted of first-degree murder, 227 of them in some form of parole, the OCI data show. Statistics show re-offending rates are low among those granted parole during a life sentence. A 2012 report from The Correctional Service of Canada, a government agency, said 3.5 percent of the 1,129 offenders serving life sentences released on parole between 1995 and 2005 were put back in jail within five years due to a new offense. Among those convicted of first degree murder and then released on parole, 2.6 percent were put back in jail for another offense within five years. Bloomberg News (2015-03-05)

Why shouldn't life mean life?

An opinion piece states "Canadians, for whatever reason, seem to like tough on crime measures. The country is safe by any reasonable standard — safer than it's been since my mother was in kindergarten, in fact — but the federal Conservatives still see value in churning out tough on crime measures one after another (30 bills have amended the Criminal Code since the Tories first took office, with nine more in progress or proposed). Why? Because, in general, it plays well with voters, many of whom, polling shows, are under the entirely mistaken impression that crime and particularly violent crime is getting worse. The latest example: Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Justice Minister Peter MacKay visited the Scarborough district of Toronto last Wednesday to announce that life will soon really mean life (sort of, anyway — more on that later). The choice of Scarborough was no coincidence, as parts of it have hit by some high-profile crimes in recent years. The actual legislation will come down next week, but based on what is known so far, it'll shake out like this: Someone convicted of first-degree ("planned and deliberate") murder, if that murder meets some additional criteria — if it occurred during a sexual assault or terror attack, if the victim was a police officer or correctional official, or if the crime was "of a particularly brutal nature" — will go away for life without parole. Life, in other words, will mean life. Again, there's a qualifier here. To sidestep the possibility that any such truly life sentence would be found unconstitutional, the Tories plan to leave in place one possible way for someone sentenced to life without parole to be released. After 35 years of their sentence has passed, they'll be able to petition the federal cabinet of the day for a special dispensation. This seems to be the Tories' way of making life really mean life to the maximum extent possible without triggering a judicial review they expect they'd lose." National Post

Mother of Smeltzer's victim applauds life-in-prison bill

The mother of a girl who was murdered nearly 35 years ago hopes a new bill regarding life sentences in Canada will save other families from living in fear like hers has.

Evelyn Thompson's voice is still emotional when she speaks about her five-year-old daughter. Kimmie was walking to school by herself for the first time in 1980 when she was abducted and then murdered by Harold Smeltzer. On Thursday, Evelyn spoke with Jill Slater and Dave Arnold on News Talk Radio, saying she still fears for the safety of her own family - and others - to this day knowing that Smeltzer is out on parole in Regina. NewsTalk 650

Sentence never ends for victim's family

Some years seem to have more significance than others, although really, there's little difference between one year and the next. Or the previous. But for some reason, anniversaries that fall on decades and half decades, feel like some kind of milestone. That's why this year is a particularly difficult one for Bob and Maureen Smythe who are marking five years since the killing of Bob's son Christopher. Christopher attended a house party on Rockland Road on Feb. 27, 2010 at a townhouse rented by Tyler Pastuck, then 26, and attended by Derek Crowther, 23, and Jacob Lawrence, 20, among others. The party progressed until the wee hours when neighbours called police after seeing a man being dragged by his ankles and then being "stomped on" by two or three other men. (...) In January 2012, Pastuck was sentenced to seven years in a federal prison while Crowther received a six-year term. However, their sentences were both reduced by 27 months due to time already served behind bars. Their sentences were upheld in an appeal. Lawrence never went to trial because he died in a motorcycle accident in June 2011. Now, the other two have one year left on their parole and are out of prison on statutory release (released into the community after serving two-thirds of your custodial sentence). Bob and Maureen Smythe, however, will never be released from their sentence. Their son is still dead. He won't come back. And the Smythes won't be able to "get over it." Campbell River Mirror

Federal offender wanted for parole breach

A Canada Wide Warrant is out for a man who breached his parole. Christopher Richardson is serving a two-year sentence for robbery and assault causing bodily harm. He is known to frequent Barrie, Richmond Hill and Newmarket. Richardson is described as a white male, 25 years of age, 6' (183 cm), 181 lbs (82kg). He has a tattoo on the right side of his neck, and numerous tattoos on both arms and hands. Inside Halton (Simcoe.com), Orillia Packet

Addiction root cause of break-ins, accused asks for federal sentence

A man from Portugal Cove-St. Philip's pleaded guilty in a St. John's court Thursday to two break and enters that happened on Boxing Day, which he says were motivated by his morphine addiction. Henry Lewis, 39, broke into two homes in the Southlands area of St. John's on Dec. 26 last year. (...) Lewis asked the judge to give him a federal sentence, so he could avail of services while behind bars to help treat his drug addiction. CBC News

Even small amounts of serious drugs attract jail time

A man caught with a gram of methamphetamine and a strip cut from a fentanyl patch was sentenced to 110 days in jail in Sarnia court. Nicholas Ernest Williams, 43, of Sarnia pleaded guilty to the Jan. 27 possession of methamphetamine and fentanyl. (...) A four-month sentence was appropriate for Williams, a long-term offender, due to the serious drugs involved, said federal prosecutor Michael Robb. Sarnia Observer

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

UN committee calls on Canada for inquiry into missing, murdered aboriginal women

A United Nations committee is echoing the call of critics who say Canada should establish a national inquiry into missing and murdered aboriginal women. The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women says Canada has violated the rights of aboriginal women by failing to thoroughly investigate why they are targeted for violence. The body is adding its voice to domestic calls for an inquiry, which the Harper government has repeatedly said isn't necessary. The UN report says Canada's police and the justice system have failed to effectively protect aboriginal women. It says native women face grave and systematic violations of their rights. Canada's formal response to the committee disagrees with the conclusion that there has been such a violation and rejects the call for an inquiry. Associated Press (The Guardian, CTV News), Canadian Press (680 News)

Missing and murdered indigenous women: Still looking for answers to a decades-old problem

There was a sense of optimism coupled with realism when Canadian federal ministers, premiers, chiefs and families of victims came together last week for a national roundtable discussion on missing and murdered indigenous women. "Families are looking for action today to make sure they're supported in their time of need, making sure they're protected when they experience these violent crimes," said Federal Minister for the Status of Women, Kellie Leitch. There was talk of action plans, creating a framework to raise awareness and plans to meet again next year, but no new money from the federal government and no inquiry. That left women, such as Bernadette Smith whose sister Claudette Osborne went missing in 2008, disappointed. Global News

Le féminisme à l'heure des réseaux sociaux

L'union fait la force, dit la devise adoptée par plusieurs pays. Bien des femmes l'ont compris au cours de la dernière année lorsque des discussions virtuelles ont été lancées sur les réseaux sociaux à propos d'enjeux les concernant. «Une par une, on peut faire une différence, mais lorsqu'on est en gang, on se soutient, on se protège et on se donne de la force aussi. Les réseaux sociaux permettent une telle expression», a affirmé la présidente de la Fédération des femmes du Québec, Alexa Conradi. Au cours des derniers mois, des hashtags féministes ont été partagés à des milliers, voire à des millions de reprises, notamment pour les femmes victimes de misogynie (#YesAllWomen), les lycéennes nigérianes kidnappées par le groupe de djihadistes Boko Haram (#BringBackOurGirls) et, plus près de nous, pour les femmes autochtones disparues et assassinées (#AmINext) et celles qui ont été agressées sexuellement (#AgressionNonDénoncée ou #BeenRapedNeverReported. La présidente du Conseil du statut de la femme, Julie Miville-Dechéne, qui est elle-même une grande utilisatrice des réseaux sociaux, croit que ces nouveaux outils de communication permettent d'ouvrir les débats et de multiplier les points de vue, qu'ils soient positifs ou négatifs. Si ces campagnes virales n'ont pas toutes engendrées des actions des autorités politiques pour endiguer les problèmes de violence faites aux femmes, les réseaux sociaux ont malgré tout permis de conscientiser une grande partie de la population à ces drames humains, selon l'ancienne journaliste. Journal Métro,

Misogynie 2.0 : harcèlement et violence en ligne

« Suivant la logique de la misogynie en ligne, le droit d'une femme à la liberté d'expression est beaucoup moins important que le privilège que s'accorde un homme de la punir pour s'être exprimée librement. » Laurie Penny, Cybersexism. Nous sommes féministes. Nous partageons nos idées sur le Web. Et nous sommes unies par l'expérience de la misogynie latente qui ronge Internet, les médias sociaux, notre vie publique, notre vie privée. Lorsque nous prenons la parole sur le Web, surtout pour dénoncer la violence sous toutes ses formes que subissent les femmes, le retour de bâton s'associe à une pluie d'insultes et de menaces : « Conne », « J'veais te venir dessus », « Féminazie », « Ostie, j'te foudroierais avec ta p'tite jupe », « Sale chienne », « Grosse truie », « Je te cockslaperais jusqu'à ce que tu fermes ta yeule », « Tu mérites de te faire gang raper », « Tu ne devrais pas avoir le droit de te reproduire », « Impossible qu'elle se fasse pénétrer par un homme sans qu'elle crie au viol », « Fermez don' vos gueules... pendant qu'elles ferment encore! » Ceci n'est qu'un échantillon du refrain entonné ad nauseam par les graphomanes misogynes qui sévissent sur la Toile. Ces mots témoignent d'un sexisme, d'un antiféminisme, voire d'une haine des femmes si répandue qu'ils frôlent désormais la banalité. Le cybersexisme est omniprésent dans les conversations en ligne. Il imprègne les fils de commentaires sur les réseaux sociaux et sur les blogues, partout où les femmes prennent la parole dans l'espace public virtuel. Il prend diverses formes : paternalisme, infantilisation, mansplaining, surveillance, attaques personnelles, slut-shaming, fat-shaming, diffusion publique de données personnelles, attaque à l'intégrité physique, menaces de viol et de mort, etc. Cette violence misogyne prend une consonance particulière quand elle s'exerce avec des accents racistes, islamophobes, xénophobes, transphobes ou lesbophobes. Ton Petit Look, Actualités Sympatico, Sisyphe, Voir

City spends thousands on hotel rooms because women's shelters are full

The city is spending thousands more year after year to put abused women and children in hotel rooms because there isn't enough space for them in local shelters. Taxpayers footed $112,000 for hotel rooms and food last year for people without homes because local shelters were maxed out. That's up nearly $20,000 from the year before. The city also spends money on hotel rooms for families without housing and people displaced by fires. But increasingly, the cost is to cover women and children leaving violent situations, city data shows. Those accounted for more than half of the cases last year. "There's little doubt that the demand is outstripping what's available in the community," said Katherine Kalinowski, chair of the Women's Housing Planning Collaborative. "I would even call it a crisis without overstating." City-funded hotel rooms for women's shelter clients are used "if there is no space and we've exhausted all the possibilities we can think of," Kalinowski said. That includes family and friends. But when that fails, as it did in more than 80 cases last year, the city foots the bill for a temporary hotel room. And that's happening more every year. In 2014, the city spent $112,000 on hotel rooms because there was no shelter space, said spokesperson Jen Recine. In 2013, the city spent $93,450 on hotel rooms, and in 2012, it cost taxpayers $73,880 for hotel rooms. (...)The ministry has increased funding for violence against women services by 51 per cent in 2013-14, for a total of $145 million for the province, spokesperson Kristen Tedesco said in an email. It spent $82 million, it says, on emergency shelter agencies to support 2,045 beds for abused women and children. Hamilton has received nearly $57 million for violence against women programs since 2003, she said. CBC News Hamilton

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

Raif Badawi flogging delayed for 8th week in a row

Raif Badawi, the Saudi blogger jailed for criticizing Islam, has had his weekly lashes delayed for an eighth consecutive week. His supporters confirmed the development on Badawi's official Twitter account. Badawi was arrested in June 2012 after criticizing the Saudi regime and expressing views critical of Islam on his blog. He was eventually sentenced in May 2014 to ten years in jail and 1,000 lashes, to be delivered in batches of 50 every week. He was flogged for the first time on Jan. 9. Badawi is a 32-year-old blogger and activist. His wife, Ensaf Haidar, and their three children are refugees living in Sherbrooke, Que. Haidar told CBC earlier this week she's heard from official sources in Saudi Arabia that her husband may face a new trial, this time for renouncing faith. CBC News, Agence QMI (Journal de Montréal, Journal de Québec), Associated Press (Le Devoir), Montreal Gazette

INTERNATIONAL

NIL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

CBC News Alerts@CBCAlerts 26 seconds ago

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney calls release of #OttawaShooter's video a 'stark reminder' of why Cdns must remain vigilant. #cdnpoli

Althia Raj@althiaraj 2 minutes ago

If anybody has any doubts about why the government wanted Paulson to testify at committee against his own will. Voici

Laura StoneVerified account@l_stone 1h 1 hour ago

"RCMP believes based on evidence, that Zehaf-Bibeau was a terrorist," Paulson says #cdnpoli

Cormac Mac SweeneyVerified account@cmaconthehill 8m 8 minutes ago

Paulson says jihadist movement is inspiring and he is persuaded that Zehaf Bibeau didn't come to this pact alone. #cdnpoli

Stewart BellVerified account@StewartBellNP 11m 11 minutes ago

RCMP Commissioner suggests Zehaf-Bibeau did not act alone.

Maclean's MagazineVerified account@MacleansMag 11m 11 minutes ago

RCMP: 'If Zehaf-Bibeau had not been killed ... we would have charged him with terrorist offences.' <http://ow.ly/K1n9D>

The Hill Times@TheHillTimes 15m 15 minutes ago

How broad was network involved in attack? asks CPC MP Ablonczy. Paulson says he believes Zehaf-Bibeau didn't come to path alone. #cdnpoli

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à:
PSPMediaCentre/CentredesmediasPSP@ps-sp.gc.ca*

Today's News / Actualités
March 9, 2015 / le 9 mars 2015
14:00 - 20:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 14h00 et 20h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

CSIS should have power to operate overseas, says minister

Canada's spies should be able to operate overseas without following the laws of "failed states," Canada's public safety minister said Monday. Steven Blaney defended Bill C-44 in front of a Senate committee examining the government's planned expansion of CSIS powers. The proposed legislation would allow a judge to authorize CSIS to conduct foreign operations "without regard to any other law, including that of any foreign state." Blaney reminded senators of the threat posed by Canadians who become foreign fighters in unstable countries. "We believe that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides sufficient guidelines for the activities of CSIS," Blaney told the Committee on National Security and Defence. "Asking them to abide by the laws of the possibly failed states where the activities would take place, as some have suggested, is simply ludicrous."... "Our government fundamentally believes we should not share our citizenship with someone who would cut off heads because of a difference of beliefs." QMI Agency (Canoe.ca, Standard-Freeholder)

(UPDATE) Anti-terrorism bill could be used to target activists: Amnesty International

A prominent human-rights group says the Conservative government's anti-terrorism bill could be used to target environmental activists and aboriginal protesters. In a brief made public Monday, Amnesty International Canada added its voice to those who say the bill would go beyond genuine security threats to ensnare those who mount demonstrations that fall outside the strict letter of the law. The Conservatives brought in the bill -- which would broaden the Canadian Security Intelligence Service's mandate -- following the murders of two Canadian soldiers last October. The legislation would give CSIS the ability to disrupt terror plots, make it easier for police to limit the movements of a suspect, expand no-fly list powers, crack down on terrorist propaganda, and remove barriers to sharing security-related information... Still, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney told the Senate national security committee Monday the bill would help track Canadians who travel to train and fight with terrorist groups overseas... Though he has done so in the past, CSIS director Michel Couombe was reluctant to provide updated figures, saying only that "there are more and more people" seeking to join militants overseas. "It is growing incrementally," Couombe said. "So it's not in the thousands today." Updating the figure continually could "reveal where we have to deploy resources," he added. Blaney backed Couombe, arguing that releasing numbers just begs further questions about whether the individuals are in Canada or abroad. Senate committee chairman Daniel Lang asked Blaney to reconsider and offer "at least some way of informing Canadians" so they understand the scope of the homegrown extremist threat. Canadian Press (CP24)

Spy watchdog expects to see 'smaller slice' of CSIS activities in future

The executive director of the watchdog that keeps an eye on the Canadian Security Intelligence Service is questioning whether the review body will have enough resources to do its job in the future. Michael Doucet, executive director of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, says the watchdog will see a smaller slice of CSIS's activities in coming years. Two bills before Parliament would reinforce the spy agency's long-standing ability to operate abroad and give it extensive new powers to disrupt security threats, rather than just gather information. Doucet told the Senate national security committee that his agency's annual budget has essentially been flat over the last number of years at about $3 million. He says the agency has enough resources to handle complaints about CSIS, certify the spy service's annual report to the public safety minister, and carry out seven or eight reviews of various issues. Canadian Press (680 News)

ISIS spreading to Afghanistan, Pakistan, CSIS director warns

ISIS is spreading to Libya, Afghanistan and Pakistan, the head of Canada's spy agency warned at the Senate defence committee today. At the same time, Michel Couombe, the head of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, urged senators not to forget longer-running foes like al-Qaeda as Canada turns its focus to the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria. "ISIS started in Iraq and Syria, but what we're seeing now, and you've seen it in media, it's spreading in Libya, Afghanistan, Pakistan," Couombe said. "Boko Haram just pledged allegiance to ISIS. So there's also this phenomenon of ISIS spreading." Canada's top security officials are appearing before the Senate defence committee today over the government's plans to extend the reach of CSIS overseas. Couombe and Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney kicked off the meeting. Other top security officials, privacy commissioner Daniel Therrien and former CSIS assistant director of intelligence Ray Boisvert will also be there. CBC News

Blaney, O'Toole, Bergen, Raitt hire new staffers

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney is a busy man these days, particularly since the government introduced its controversial new Anti-Terrorism Act, Bill C-51, and he's still hiring. Mr. Blaney hired Jeremy Laurin to serve as his new press secretary starting March 9. Until recently, Mr. Laurin was working as a manager of issues and stakeholder relations to Labour and Status of Women Minister Kellie Leitch, after being promoted from his role as principal secretary to Ms. Leitch at the beginning of the year. Hill Times

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

Gogama train derailment: 2 cars still in river after 38 leave track

Work at the site of a train derailment in northern Ontario, near the community of Gogama, continued through the night, CN Rail says. The company said Monday it is making good progress on putting out fires and car removal following the derailment of 38 cars on a 94-car train on Saturday. Two of the cars remain the Matagami River. The derailment site is about 110 kilometres southwest of Timmins. "Fire suppression work continues at the site, and CN and its external specialists work to extinguish fires one car at a time," CN communications tweeted Monday morning. "Extinguished cars are pulled clear for purging and eventual disposal; 24 cars are clear of [the] main derailment site as of this morning." CBC News

Murphy Oil reports leak up to 17,000 barrels in northern Alberta

Murphy Oil says up to 17,000 barrels of petroleum product have spilled at its Seal heavy oil site in northern Alberta. The U.S.-based company says on the afternoon of March 1, it found condensate near the surface in three areas. It says the spill occurred over an extended period of time, but it's still assessing how big it is and how long it lasted. Canadian Press (Global News, CTV News, CBC News)

Lac-Mégantic: By no means the last explosion of its kind

An opinion piece states, "The federal government can't be charged with inaction – Ms. Raitt and her department have worked diligently – but that doesn't mean there has been sufficient action. When the federal government announced bulked-up rail-safety measures last fall, Transport Minister Lisa Raitt said, "Canadians are never going to forget what happened in Lac-Mégantic." The oil-fuelled fireball that claimed 47 lives in 2013 scarred our national consciousness, but Ms. Raitt's words would carry more heft if oil-ferrying trains didn't keep exploding on her watch. On Monday, firefighters wrestled with burning cars after a derailment near Gogama, Ont., about 600 kilometres north of Toronto. The rest of us are grappling with questions, such as: Weren't updated safety requirements for tanker cars and a stouter inspections regime supposed to make the booming oil-by-rail trade vastly safer for Canadian communities?..." Globe and Mail

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

CBC News' Power and Politics held a panel discussion with MPs regarding railway safety and the recent derailments near Gogama, Ontario. Rough Transcript

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

Bill C-51 questioned by B.C. Premier Christy Clark

Premier Christy Clark has joined the ranks of Canadian leaders expressing concern that the federal Conservative government's anti-terror bill, C-51, could threaten Canadians' personal liberties. Last week Clark told Evan Solomon on CBC's Power and Politics that she has concerns about how the federal bill will balance security and freedom. "I think the federal government needs to be paying close attention to security for obvious reasons. I mean, we are engaged very much in the Middle East at the moment. And I think, you know, people want to know that they and their leaders are safe in the country," said Clark on Thursday. "I do think, though, it is important to remember that we have to keep our personal freedoms alive and whole," she said. "Generations of people for hundreds of years have fought for and preserved those personal individual freedoms that we have, and I would hate to see any changes that are going to mean that we start to water those freedoms down. That balance must be found." Over the weekend she repeated her views on CTV's Question Period, saying that Bill C-51 could diminish Canadian's personal freedoms in order to protect Canadians against unknown threats. CBC News

Denis Coderre présente le plan de Montréal contre la radicalisation menant à la violence

Le maire de Montréal Denis Coderre présente lundi après-midi la stratégie concertée de son administration avec les autorités policières et sociales pour lutter contre la radicalisation menant à la violence. Un centre de prévention de la radicalisation sera créé, ce qui est présenté comme une première en Amérique du Nord. Il aura pour but de travailler en amont du phénomène. Huffington Post ; CBC News

B.C. terror suspect says attack a call to action, trial hears

A B.C. man accused of plotting to bomb the provincial legislature on Canada Day recorded a video just days before the alleged planned attack saying he wanted to inspire others to follow in his shoes. John Nuttall and his wife Amanda Korody are on trial on multiple terrorism-related charges. Surveillance footage played in court shows the couple preparing a video message, which they intended to be released after the attack. Canadian Press (Vancouver Sun)

Un réfugié algérien s'entend à l'amiable avec le Canada

Un réfugié algérien qui a été envoyé aux États-Unis au lendemain des attentats du 11 septembre a finalement conclu un arrangement à l'amiable avec le gouvernement du Canada. Benamar se bat depuis plusieurs années pour recevoir une compensation pour avoir été détenu dans de mauvaises conditions durant près de cinq ans aux États-Unis, après y avoir été transféré par les autorités canadiennes. Il affirme avoir été maltraité et battu par des gardes durant sa détention. Presse Canadienne (La Presse) ; Canadian Press (Times Colonist)

Top financial crime expert leaves RBC for post at Deutsche Bank

One of Canada's top experts at identifying money laundering and terrorist financing at financial institutions is leaving the country for a new job in Europe. Karim Rajwani will join the British offices of Deutsche Bank AG starting next week, ending a long stint at Royal Bank of Canada, where he led the bank's anti-money laundering operations for more than a decade. Globe and Mail

'Meet a Muslim Family' campaign off to slow start in Halifax

A national outreach campaign called Meet a Muslim Family, meant to break barriers between Muslims and non-Muslims, has gotten off to a slow start in Halifax. The two-week campaign, which was launched by the Ahmadiyya Muslim community on March 1, involves people registering online to meet Muslim people living near them to chat and ask questions. It hasn't resulted in any meetings in Halifax - and the Qureshi family wants to change that. CBC News

Offerings - Ahmadiyya Islam's 'jihad of the pen' inspires peaceful approach to crisis

An opinion piece by Mohyuddin Mirza, outreach director of the Ahmadiyya Muslim community in Edmonton, states, "There is no dearth of commentaries, analyses, ideas and reports on the subject of extremism, terrorism, extremist Islam and radicalization of youths from western nations. A renewed urgency of handling or tackling this problem resulted after attacks on Canadian soil and more recently the massacre in Paris. The Islamic State (IS) is in the news on a daily basis and there is no end in sight for this ideology. Why have we not been able to find solution to this malaise of terrorism, especially in the context of Islam? And how much can the religion of Islam be blamed for such acts of violence?..." Edmonton Journal

Would the Conservative party have violated C-51? Maybe(?)

An opinion piece states "Last week, the Conservative party posted an image and excerpt from Al-Shabaab's threat against West Edmonton Mall, the party apparently hoping to solicit support for C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act. Press Progress, the media wing of the Broadbent Institute, subsequently wondered if this would have amounted to a transgression against C-51. The answer to that question is . . . debatable. And that ambiguity might be the problem. There is a separate conversation to be had about the wisdom, tastefulness and appropriateness of the party's post. Setting that aside for the moment, the hypothetical legality of the post depends on a reading of a new offence that would be established by C-51." Maclean's

Someone should watch the watchers

An opinion piece states "One of the recurring themes in science fiction is a dystopia. Books such as 1984, Animal House, and A Brave New World portray future society as anything but idyllic. Recently, there has been a spate of books for young adults with similar themes. The Hunger Games, The Giver, The Maze Runner, Divergent have now all been made into movies. Their central theme can be seen as the rebellion of youth against their elders but these stories all feature Orwellian levels of surveillance and control. In dystopias Big Brother is always watching... The difficulty with security measures, such as Bill C-51, is determining the limits. It is in assessing what is a real threat versus what is not. It is in making choices that protect society and not destroy it. We live in a digital age where our electronic footprint is huge. Companies collect and trade in this information. Making it available to the government for the sake of state security might not seem unreasonable. But what are the boundaries? Civilian or judicial oversight, at the very least, would seem appropriate." Prince George Citizen

Broadcast media / Médias télédiffusés :

RDI présente en direct le point de presse du maire de Montréal, Denis Coderre sur la prévention de la radicalisation. On annonce la création d'un centre de prévention à la radicalisation. Ce nouveau centre pourra accueillir les jeunes appelés à se radicaliser, offrir un soutien à la famille et aux proches et assurer une réinsertion. Transcription ébauche

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

Temporary foreign worker program changes to impact Alberta most, report says

Alberta will be significantly affected by Ottawa's overhaul of the Temporary Foreign Worker Program (TFWP), according to a Calgary-based think-tank. As of July, employers can have no more than 20 per cent of their workforce as low-wage temporary foreign workers. The number must drop to 10 per cent starting in July 2016. CBC News

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

Bloc Quebecois website targeted because of party's position on wearing of hijab

Islamic cyber pirates say they attacked the website of the Bloc Quebecois because of the party's position against the wearing of the hijab during citizenship ceremonies. The words "United Islamic Cyber Force" were sprawled in red letters across the top of a black page and there was also a link on the website to the group's Facebook page. Several other sites that were hosted by the same server as the Bloc's were also targeted. But the Albanian-based group said it was the separatist party that it had in its sights. In an email exchange with The Canadian Press, a spokesman wrote that the virtual attack was carried out simply because the Bloc showed a lack of respect toward women wearing the hijab. Simon Charbonneau, the Bloc's communications director, said no data was compromised during the hack and that police were made aware of the situation. Canadian Press (Brandon Sun)

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

L'enquête de la GRC sur Pamela Wallin se précise

Après avoir passé au peigne fin des centaines de demandes de remboursement de la sénatrice Pamela Wallin, suspendue fin 2013 pour des dépenses jugées injustifiées, la GRC souhaite approfondir son enquête sur 150 d'entre elles. Il s'agit essentiellement de demandes de remboursement liées à des dépenses pour des déplacements, de l'hébergement et des repas. Selon des documents judiciaires rendus publics lundi, la GRC souhaite notamment obtenir plus de renseignements sur des dépenses encourues lors de 24 voyages effectués par Mme Wallin pour son travail au sein de conseils d'administration. Radio-Canada ; Presse Canadienne (Le Devoir) ; CBC News; Toronto Star

Perquisition de la GRC dans les locaux du syndicat de la PPO

Le syndicat qui représente les agents de la police provinciale confirme que la GRC a effectué un mandat de perquisition dans ses locaux de Barrie, vendredi. La GRC indique que 13 mandats de perquisition ont été effectués vendredi en lien avec des individus associés au syndicat de la PPO, dans le cadre d'une enquête criminelle. Certains employés de l'Association de la police provinciale de l'Ontario (OPPA) ont pris congé et un a été suspendu par le conseil d'administration le temps que dure l'enquête. Le syndicat affirme qu'il n'est pas au courant d'accusation portée dans cette affaire. Radio-Canada ; Canadian Press (Globe and Mail, Mississauga.com, Brandon Sun, CBC News); Postmedia News (National Post); QMI Agency (Toronto Sun, Calgary Sun, 24 Hours, Tillsonburg News, Wiarton Echo); Toronto Star

Alberta Mounties will investigate after officer fired gun during Spruce Grove arrest

The RCMP will investigate after one of their officers fired a gun while arresting a suspect in Spruce Grove on Sunday. No one was hurt. Just after 3 p.m. on Sunday, a sheriff attempted to pull over a vehicle on Highway 16 near Stony Plain for a traffic violation. Edmonton Journal

Hey Joe - new face of RCMP

Kelowna RCMP media liaison Cpl. Kris Clark is leaving his position as spokesman after almost four years on the job. Clark's replacement will be Cpl. Joe Duncan, who hails from Windsor, Ont., and has 17 years with the force. Duncan started his career in Langley after finishing RCMP depot training in 1991. From there, he was posted to a satellite detachment in Fort Saint James for two years, before moving to Salmon Arm. Castanet.net

Windsor police officer faces new drug charge

A Windsor police officer previously accused by U.S. authorities of drug smuggling is facing a new drug trafficking charge - this time on this side of the border. Const. David Bshouty, 32, was arrested by the Windsor Police Service on Monday on a charge of trafficking a controlled substance. The arrest is the latest result of an ongoing internal investigation by WPS into Bshouty. Windsor Star

La police craint une augmentation des activités des gangs à Abbotsford

La police d'Abbotsford, dans le Lower Mainland en Colombie-Britannique, est inquiète à la suite de deux incidents violents qui se sont déroulés au cours des deux dernières semaines. Les policiers craignent une recrudescence des activités des gangs dans la ville. Le premier incident a eu lieu le 22 février en soirée lorsqu'un homme a été atteint par des coups de feu et un autre poignardé sur la rue Holly. Les deux hommes qui se connaissaient ont été transportés rapidement à l'hôpital. Radio-Canada

Blainville man, 21, faces more child-abuse, pornography charges

A 21-year-old Blainville man was back in court on Monday to face new charges related to his online activities, which allegedly involved tricking more than a dozen parents into allowing him to abuse or capture pornographic images of their children. Phylip St-Jacques, in custody since December, was clean-shaven and clad in a red-and-white striped shirt as he made a brief appearance at the Palais de justice. He faces charges in five cases involving approximately 15 parents with autistic children, who say he contacted them online and posed as an adult living with a form of autism. Montreal Gazette

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

Nombreux appuis à la demande de libération conditionnelle d'Omar Khadr

Des professeurs d'université, des médecins, des gens d'affaires - et même un ancien brigadier-général américain - mettent tout leur poids et leur réputation derrière le Canadien Omar Khadr, qui souhaite obtenir une libération conditionnelle, alors que le gouvernement le considère comme un dangereux terroriste. Presse Canadienne (La Presse, Le Devoir, Radio-Canada)

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

Report on Nunavut jail expected to raise 'extremely troubling concerns'

The Baffin Correctional Centre is a ticking legal time bomb that could go off at any moment, a senior bureaucrat warns in a newly disclosed memo that comes as the territory braces for a scathing report about Nunavut's most notorious jail. The Canadian Press recently obtained a copy of a January memo written by Nunavut's deputy minister of justice to several of her colleagues and copied to her boss, Justice Minister Paul Okalik. In it, Elizabeth Sanderson raises "serious constitutional and legal concerns associated with the ongoing use of the Baffin Correctional Centre" and urges cabinet secretary David Akeeagok to brief Premier Peter Taptuna about her concerns. Canadian Press (Toronto Star, CBC News, Globe and Mail, Maclean's)

G20 cop was unfairly punished for testifying, appeal judge says

The judge who sentenced Const. Babak Andalib-Goortani to 45 days in jail for using excessive force during the G20 unfairly penalized him for pleading not guilty and testifying in his own defence, an appeal court judge found. Superior Court Justice Brian O'Marra imposed a more lenient sentence on the police officer - a year of probation instead of jail time - according to the reasons for the appeal decision released last week. Toronto Star

Gun complaint nets Fernwood man 75 days in jail

A 23-year-old Fernwood man was sentenced to 75 days in jail after pleading guilty to uttering threats and possession of an imitation weapon in connection with an incident on the weekend. CBC News

Chilliwack man who was no-show for sex-assault sentencing may have 'done something rash', says his lawyer

A Chilliwack man who admitted to a prostitution-related charge and to sexually assaulting a teenage girl failed to show up at his sentencing hearing on Monday. David Thomas Hilpert was expected to appear in B.C. Supreme Court in Chilliwack. He pleaded guilty in December to two of the 13 charges he was facing. Hilpert's lawyer, Juan O'Quinn, said he had expected his client to be in court and feared that he may have "done something rash." Crown prosecutor Kimberly Jansen said she has asked the Chilliwack RCMP to check on Hilpert's well being. The Province

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

NIL

OTHER / AUTRES

The Gargoyle – Kenney tweets misleading photos of Muslim women in chains

An opinion piece states, "Defence Minister Jason Kenney used the occasion of International Women's Day to rally support for the war against ISIS by tweeting photographs of Muslim girls and women covered in black and being lead off in chains. "On #IWD2015, thank-you to the @CanadianForces for joining the fight against #ISIL's campaign to enslave women & girls," he tweeted along with the pictures on Sunday... To the casual viewer, these appear to be compelling photographic evidence of the mistreatment of women in some parts of the Muslim world. And, read with Kenney's reference to ISIS, they suggest to the reader that these scenes occurred under the terror group's watch in Iraq or Syria. But Kenney did not explain that the images are actually from a ceremonial Shia Ashura procession that celebrates the heroism of the prophet Mohammad's grandson, Hussein, and his family. The girls and women in the photo Kenney tweeted symbolize Hussein's sister, who was taken in chains to Damascus after he was beheaded..." Ottawa Citizen

National Post View

An opinion piece states, "On Saturday, Canada lost its first soldier in Iraq. The circumstances of his death are not yet entirely clear. What is known is that a group of Canadian commandos, deployed to Iraq to assist and train Kurdish peshmerga militia, were travelling at night in an area that had seen heavy action between peshmerga troops and ISIS terrorists. Somehow, the Canadians were mistaken for the enemy, and were fired on by their Kurdish allies. Sgt. Andrew Joseph Doiron, of the Canadian Special Operations Regiment, was killed. Three other Canadian soldiers were injured and have been evacuated for treatment..." National Post

INTERNATIONAL

U.E: près de 100 nouvelles drogues identifiées

En 2014, la liste de ces nouvelles substances était encore une fois dominée par les "cathinones de synthèse" (31 substances) et les "cannabinoïdes de synthèse" (30 substances), soit des substituts légaux de stimulants et de cannabis. En ce qui concerne la lutte contre le trafic de ces nouvelles substances, l'OEDT signale que le nombre de saisies en Europe a été multiplié par sept entre 2008 et 2013, à 47.000 saisies équivalent à 3,1 tonnes. L'Organe international de contrôle des stupéfiants, rattaché à l'ONU, s'était inquiété dans son rapport annuel, publié mardi dernier, de la multiplication des nouvelles drogues élaborées pour contourner les interdictions, pointant un "problème de plus en plus grave" de santé publique dans le monde. Le Figaro

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Twitter

MINISTER / MINISTRE

canoepolitics

CSIS should have power to operate overseas, says Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney <http://ow.ly/K7HGf>

TondaMacC

Sen Stewart-Olsen asks if Blaney would urge CSIS to publish most wanted terror list just like CBSA most-wanted deportees list.

TondaMacC

Blaney says the CBSA list is "a huge success" and "I would certainly take your recommendation for consideration."

TondaMacC

Blaney suggests a "most wanted" terrorist list is a "worthy" project & would help Cdns "feel involved."

TondaMacC

Now it's Blaney referring to #C51 "prevention" efforts despite his initial statements about not being here to discuss it.

TondaMacC

Sen Beyak (who chided NCCM founder for being thin-skinned) thanks Blaney, "We're not concerned about race but about the radicals among us."

TondaMacC

Blaney: "If it walks like a duck and talks like a duck...we have to call a cat a cat." Agrees it's imp't to name things for what they are.

TondaMacC

Beyak defensive about her right to "ask tough questions" likely in light of this:

<http://www.thestar.com/opinion/commentary/2015/03/07/conservative-senators-hold-kangaroo-court-on-security-siddiqui.html> ... and this <http://www.winnipegfreepress.com/local/we-are-not-the-enemy-muslim-leader-293794781.html> ...

TondaMacC

Sen Kenny asking about resources towards deradicalization strategy, how much money is new/incremental?

TondaMacC

Blaney: offers to provide list of mtgs #RCMP done then says: "Yes we'll have to allocate resources." Which seems to hint at more funding.

TondaMacC

Blaney refers to Toronto 18, says the Muslim community was key to derailing the "worst terrorist attack we faced in this country."

TondaMacC

Coulombe: yes, parents have come forward, some gone to RCMP, but says he doesn't have handle on overall total.

TondaMacC

Coulombe and Blaney refer to tiplines both RCMP and CSIS operate to take in information from people worried about suspicious activity.

RosieBarton

Blaney now reading out the CSIS tip line to the Senators: 613-993-9620. #hw

AndrewQMI

The RCMP's Canadian TERROR TIP LINE IS 613-993-9620 @MinStevenBlaney tells #Senate committee #terrorism

TondaMacC

Sen Mitchell asks about renewal of Kanishka project fund $10/5 years about to expire.

TondaMacC

Sorry that of course was $10 million over 5 years.. That fund expires at end of 2015. Blaney: we need to turn "research into action."

TondaMacC

Blaney all but says no to a renewal of the Kanishka project that funded research like this:

<http://www.thestar.com/news/canada/2015/02/27/soft-security-measures-also-needed-to-battle-home-grown-radicalism-experts-say.html> ...

RosieBarton

Coulombe says he believes SIRC is a robust review mechanism. #hw

StewartBelINP

"To misname things is to add to the world's unhappiness." @MinStevenBlaney quotes Camus at Senate committee hearing on anti-terror bill.

TondaMacC

Blaney: "protocols" to safeguard privacy rights will be developed once #C51 passes and allows info-sharing among 17 depts, agencies.

TondaMacC

Blaney clarifies #CSIS disruption warrants to apply where activity wd otherwise break law or infringe Charter; says only Cda requires this.

TondaMacC

Blaney still not clear on q of increasing #RCMP resources for deradicalization or other, but suggests he's aware of need to meet the threat.

TondaMacC

Hard to believe but in nearly 2 years as minister, this appears to be @MinStevenBlaney's first appearance at sen cttee on nat security/def

laura_payton

In discussion of oversight, Public Safety Deputy Minister Francois Guimont points out @OAG_BVG can audit the dept. #hw

Justin_Ling

CSIS director Coulombe says he doesn't want to put a number of suspected terrorists (previous #: 90) but says it's grown.

Justin_Ling

Also here at this committee is Michel Coulombe (head of CSIS) and Daniel Therrien (Privacy Commissioner.)

Justin_Ling

Blaney: "We believe the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is enough guidance for CSIS." Even though C-51 allows them to ignore it.

Justin_Ling

C-44 allows CSIS to ignore laws of foreign states. Blaney says that means the agency won't be bound by the laws of failed states.

Justin Ling

Blaney just said that dual citizens who commit acts of terror are "betraying their oaths of allegiance." ...and if they were born here?

Justin Ling

Gov't sometimes neglects to mention that their citizenship-stripping bill (which C-44 helps to enact) would apply to Canadian-born citizens.

Justin Ling

In fact, under the new law, Canadians who hold no other citizenship (but who could have access to another passport) can be deported.

Justin Ling

I wrote this about the citizenship legislation in June. (C-44 speeds up its coming-into-force.)
http://www.vice.com/en_ca/read/the-canadian-government-is-introducing-new-legislation-to-exile-and-banish-its-citizens ...

Justin Ling

Blaney doing that thing where he talks about the Five Eyes without saying "Five Eyes."

Justin Ling

Blaney talking up gov't's anti-radicalization strategy. "We did not get opposition support," he says. ...I don't think that was voted on.

@Justin_Ling

This committee really hasn't talked about C-44. They're talking about C-51. I think that's a shame.

Justin Ling

Blaney is quoting Albert Camus. #ExistentialCommittee

Justin Ling

Scrummed minister Blaney on whether CSIS needs warrants for all of its 'disruption' ops. Still kind of unsure. (bkgd nationalmagazine.ca/Blog/February-...)

Justin Ling

Six-on-three, nine-nine-three, nine-six-two-oh, tell us about the terrorist you know.

IAFFCanada

IAFF/AIP donne son premier cours Hazmat au Québec grâce au partenariat avec @Securite_Canada, @MinStevenBlaney

IAFFCanada

IAFF hosts 1st Hazmat training course in QC thx to partnership w/ @Safety_Canada @MinStevenBlaney #safercommunities

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

CN Comm

The comprehensive, coordinated response to the CN derailment at Gogama ON is making good progress

CN Comm

CN Environment developed protocol w/@environmentont & @environmentca to coordinate deployment & management of air & water testing systems

CN Comm

Structured, ongoing monitoring is enhanced through Mattagami First Nations elders & Gogama residents w/long knowledge of the local ecosystem

CN Comm

Fire suppression efforts progressing well as cars cleared from derailment site, which also facilitates ongoing construction of temp bypass

CN Comm

A CN work train will approach from the east later today; line remains closed & this work train contains only bypass construction materials

CBCNews

2 derailed CN rail cars carrying oil still in Ontario river <http://ift.tt/1F3zVFk>

CBCCalgary

Murphy Oil reports condensate leak up to 17,000 barrels in northern Alberta <http://ift.tt/185EtOC>

CTVNews

Murphy Oil says up to 17,000 barrels of petroleum product have spilled at its site in northern Alberta
<http://ow.ly/K7SUq>

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

CBCPolitics

UPDATED: CSIS director tells Senate committee ISIS is spreading to Afghanistan, Pakistan warns #cdnpoli #hw #c44

HuffPostQuebec

View translation Mise à jour - Un centre de prévention de la #radicalisation voit le jour à Montréal #polmtl
<http://huff.to/1Gkmvmw>

CBCMontreal

#Montreal to set up centre to address 'violent radicalization,' @DenisCoderre says <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2987464>

VancouverSun

B.C. terror suspect says attack a call to action, trial hears <http://ow.ly/2VIZik>

LP LaPresse

réfugié algérien s'entend à l'amiable avec le Canada <http://bit.ly/1GyVtv8>

globebusiness

Subscribers: Top financial crime expert leaves RBC for post at Deutsche Bank <http://trib.al/17kDHxF>

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CBCNews

Temporary foreign worker program changes to impact Alberta most, report says <http://www.cbc.ca/1.2987500>

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

icisaskatchewan

L'enquête de la GRC sur Pamela Wallin se précise <http://rc.ca/8vBFQC>

HuffPostQuebec

L'enquête de la #GRC sur Pamela Wallin se précise #Polcan (SRC) <http://huff.to/1GkNnCT>

TondaMacC

Mounties accuse Pamela Wallin of fraud, breach of trust; probing 150 "suspicious" claims, <http://on.thestar.com/1C2yHuC> via @torontostar

CTVNews

BREAKING: RCMP release production orders in investigation of suspended Sen. Pamela Wallin. More to come ...
#CDNpoli

RosieBarton

RCMP now looking at 24 expense claims Wallin made in relation to board work. There are 150 claims that merit further to investigation. #hw

CTVMercedes

@RobertFife says that the RCMP allege Sen Wallin misled the Senate in regards to some of her travel, to the tune of approximately $27,000

amyminsky

Sen LeBreton told RCMP there was no agreement with Wallin where she could charge the Senate for personal expenses

amyminsky

LeBreton told RCMP she doesn't feel Wallin neither deliberately set out to "scam the system" nor that she committed a criminal offence.

icionario

La GRC perquisitionne dans les bureaux de l'Association de la police provinciale de l'Ontario <http://ici.radio-canada.ca/regions/ontario/2015/03/09/006-grc-perquisition-syndicat-ppo-opp-barrie-oppa.shtml> ...

CastanetNews

Hey Joe - new face of RCMP <http://bit.ly/1ELTEZU> #Kelowna

TheWindsorStar

#Windsor police officer faces new drug trafficking charge <http://blogs.windsorstar.com/news/new-drug-charge-laid-against-windsor-police-officer> ... via @WinStarChen @WindsorPolice

ici_cb

La police craint une augmentation des activités des gangs à Abbotsford <http://rc.ca/8v6KbH>

moniquebeaudin

Blainville man, 21, faces more child-abuse, pornography charges via @mtlgazette @monique_muisse <http://www.montrealgazette.com/Blainville+faces+more+child+abuse+pornography+charges/10874671/story.html> ...

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

TorontoStar

Report on Nunavut jail expected to raise 'extremely troubling concerns' <http://on.thestar.com/1Hollkr> #topstories

TorontoStar

G20 cop was unfairly punished for testifying, appeal judge says <http://on.thestar.com/1AaiuMU> #topstories

CBCPEI

Gun complaint nets Fernwood man 75 days in jail <http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/prince-edward-island/gun-complaint-nets-fernwood-man-75-days-in-jail-1.2987761?cmp=rss> ...

natnewswatch

Kenney tweets misleading photos of Muslim women in chains, reports @glen_mcgregor <http://ottawacitizen.com/news/politics/the-gargoyles-kenney-tweets-misleading-photos-of-muslim-women-in-chains> ...

Blogs

Bill C-51: Labour must confront radical legislation with radical action

Thanks to documents leaked by Edward Snowden, we know that Canadians are under mass surveillance by state officials. Enter Bill-51, the Conservatives' so-called anti-terror legislation. Many of the changes proposed by the anti-terror Bill C-51 seem to legalize what is very probably already happening. Bill C-51 will lead to more cases like Arar's and Abassi's. For Indigenous people and communities, Bill C-51 represents nothing new. As the most criminalized and policed people in Canada, the anti-terrorism legislation simply looks like another attack following the traditions of: forced starvation, the pass system on reserve, residential schools, forced placement of children into child assistance services and the prison system. Communities or activists who question the very legitimacy of Canada or actively disrespect the tenuous sovereignty on which Canada is built, are the enemies of this legislation. The very existence of people who do not accept the legitimacy of Canadian sovereignty is a threat to Canadian sovereignty. How this legislation will be enforced is still an open question, but it's false to say that the only problem with the legislation is oversight, as many have argued. Instead, the path that Bill C-51 sets forth is dangerous and, if the Conservatives are re-elected, will allow for more extreme forms of repression. Rabble.ca

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Media Snapshot | Aperçu médiatique
Anti-Terrorism Legislation C-51 | Loi antiterroriste C-51
2015-03-07 – 2015-03-09

Table of Contents / Table des matières

- OVERVIEW / VUE D'ENSEMBLE
- SELECTED QUOTES / CITATIONS CHOISIES
- NEWS RELEASES / COMMUNIQUÉS
- PRINT MEDIA / MÉDIAS IMPRIMÉS
- ONLINE MEDIA / MÉDIAS EN LIGNE
- BROADCAST MEDIA / MÉDIAS TÉLÉDIFFUSÉS
- SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

Overview / Vue d'ensemble

- Media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was fairly extensive. There were several articles which questioned the timing of the release of the Zehaf-Bibeau video given the proposed C-51 legislation. However RCMP Commissioner Paulson addressed this by saying, "The release of this video at this time could be seen as seeking to influence that process. I assure you I have no such motive. The video speaks for itself. It is what it is."
- Several media outlets continued to report on concerns that Canada's Privacy Commissioner, Daniel Therrien, has with regards to C-51.
- Similarities were drawn between C-51 and the United States' Patriot Act. In response to this comparison Minister Blaney said, « Si c'était le Patriot Act, je dirais, les péquistes ont peut-être raison de s'inquiéter, mais ce n'est pas qu'on oblige de transmettre de l'information: on donne aux autorités la capacité [de le faire] »
- BC Premier Christy Clark voiced her concerns over the legislation.
- Amnesty International Canada voiced concerns that Bill C-51 could be used to target legal activism.
- The tone of coverage was mostly negative.

Selected Quotes / Citations choisies

General Coverage / couverture générale

- « Le premier devoir d'un gouvernement est de protéger ses citoyens. C'est pourquoi nous avons déposé la Loi antiterroriste de 2015. » ~ Ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile du Canada Steven Blaney
- « Si c'était le Patriot Act, je dirais, les péquistes ont peut-être raison de s'inquiéter, mais ce n'est pas qu'on oblige de transmettre de l'information: on donne aux autorités la capacité [de le faire] » ~ Ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile du Canada Steven Blaney

- "The release of this video at this time could be seen as seeking to influence that process [C-51 legislation]. I assure you I have no such motive. The video speaks for itself. It is what it is. » ~ RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson
- "However, the scale of information sharing being proposed is unprecedented, the scope of the new powers conferred by the Act is excessive, particularly as these powers affect ordinary I, and the safeguards protecting against unreasonable loss of privacy are seriously deficient." ~ Privacy Commissioner, Daniel Therrien
- "I do think the Conservative party crossed the line in posting things on their Facebook site which might actually contravene their own new proposed legislation." ~ NDP Public Safety Critic Randall Garrison
- "We will regret that forever. When you give up personal freedoms, it's very hard to get them back." ~ B.C. Premier Christy Clark
- "It is absolutely vital that terrorist threats be addressed through measures that are in keeping with international human rights obligations," ~ Alex Neve, Secretary General of Amnesty International Canada.

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

News Releases / Communiqués

Print Media / Médias imprimés

General Coverage / couverture générale

Un comité parlementaire visionne le message enregistré par Zehaf-Bibeau

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau s'est installé dans sa voiture pour enregistrer une courte vidéo quelques minutes avant d'assassiner le militaire Nathan Cirillo et d'attaquer le parlement, le 22 octobre dernier à Ottawa. L'homme regarde directement la caméra de son téléphone et, en anglais, reproche au Canada d'envoyer ses militaires dans des pays musulmans. C'est sur ce court enregistrement d'à peine une minute que le commissaire de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), Bob Paulson, se base pour dire, sans équivoque, que l'homme était un terroriste. Le commissaire Paulson s'est présenté vendredi matin devant un comité parlementaire avec la vidéo. «Je tiens à vous assurer que ce n'est pas mon intention. La vidéo parle d'elle-même», a assuré M. Paulson. Quelques minutes après la séance du comité, le bureau du ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, diffusait un communiqué lui attribuant une courte déclaration. «Cette vidéo nous rappelle malheureusement que les Canadiens doivent rester vigilants, car la menace du terrorisme est une réalité, au Canada et à l'étranger», pouvait-on lire. Et le ministre d'enchaîner: «Le premier devoir d'un gouvernement est de protéger ses citoyens. C'est pourquoi nous avons déposé la Loi antiterroriste de 2015.» La Presse Canadienne (L'Acadie-Nouvelle, 27; Le Devoir, Le Droit) (2015-03-07)

'Canada's become one of our enemies'

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau spoke quickly but calmly, recording his last thoughts on a hastily shot cellphone video, declaring himself part of the mujahedeen out to retaliate for Canada's military missions in Afghanistan and Iraq. Zehaf-Bibeau's final message was heard publicly Friday for the first time, released at a special meeting of the Commons public safety committee at MPs' request and the urging of Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney's office. Blaney said later it was "shocking and disgusting" and motivated him "more than ever" to push through a sweeping new anti-terror law, though he declined to point out exactly to how it would have prevented Zehaf-Bibeau's attack. Toronto Star, A1; Globe and Mail (2015-03-07)

Le commissaire à la vie privée inquiet

Nouveaux pouvoirs excessifs. Communication sans précédent de renseignements personnels à travers l'appareil fédéral. Violations manifestement démesurées du droit à la vie privée... Le commissaire à la protection de la vie privée du Canada, Daniel Therrien, s'est dit très préoccupé, hier, par les impacts du projet de loi C-51 sur les renseignements personnels des citoyens ordinaires. Il réclame des changements importants. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a déclaré du bout des lèvres qu'il étudierait les recommandations du commissaire, mais son bureau a maintenu la ligne dure, dans une déclaration envoyée à La Presse: «Le mouvement djihadiste international a déclaré la guerre au Canada. Les Canadiens sont ciblés par les terroristes djihadistes simplement parce que ces terroristes ont en horreur notre société et les valeurs qu'elle représente. Le terrorisme djihadiste n'est pas un droit humain, c'est un acte de guerre». La Presse, A12 (Le Soleil) (2015-03-07)

Sécurité à deux vitesses

Un éditorial déclare, « La salle du Comité de la sécurité publique et nationale était pleine à craquer hier. Tout le monde voulait être aux premières loges pour voir la vidéo enregistrée par Michael Zehaf-Bibeau avant de commettre son attentat à Ottawa, le 22 octobre dernier. Le commissaire de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), Bob Paulson, a dit qu'il l'aurait rendue publique plus tôt, mais qu'on l'en avait dissuadé en invoquant le risque de nuire à l'enquête et de la voir récupérée par les mouvements djihadistes. Il a finalement cédé, a-t-il ajouté, à cause des pressions des parlementaires, bien qu'il en ait retranché 18 secondes pour des " raisons opérationnelles ". Qu'il ait plié devant les pressions a de quoi surprendre puisqu'il avoue toujours craindre l'impact sur l'enquête et une possible récupération par des groupes armés comme l'État islamique. La diffusion de cette vidéo permet toutefois au gouvernement d'insister à nouveau sur la menace terroriste. Le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, a aussitôt réagi par voie de communiqué pour dire que "cette vidéo nous rappelle malheureusement que les Canadiens doivent rester vigilants, car la menace du terrorisme est une réalité, au Canada et à l'étranger". Il a aussitôt enchaîné en vantant les actions de son gouvernement. "Le premier devoir d'un gouvernement est de protéger ses citoyens. C'est pourquoi nous avons déposé la Loi antiterroriste de 2015 -- pour que la police et les organisations chargées de notre sécurité nationale disposent des outils nécessaires pour protéger les Canadiens", écrit-il... » Le Devoir, B2 (2015-03-07)

Officials flag federal anti-terror bill - Privacy commissioners, ombudsmen unite in labelling it 'far-reaching'

An opinion piece states, "Concern over the federal government's proposed anti-terrorism bill has prompted privacy commissioners across Canada to send out a warning. Earlier this week, provincial and territorial privacy oversight officers released a joint letter to Daryl Kramp, chairman of the standing committee on public safety and national security, expressing concerns about the privacy implications of Bill C-51, otherwise known as the anti-terrorism act... A spokesman for Steven Blaney, minister of public safety and emergency preparedness, defended the bill. "Information-sharing is essential," said Jeremy Laurin. "We think Canadians would expect that if one branch of government is aware of a threat to their security, that this information would be shared with other branches of government to protect Canadians." ... Winnipeg Free Press, A21 (2015-03-07)

The video, the PM and stoking fear

An opinion piece states, "The video that proves beyond reasonable doubt Michael Zehaf-Bibeau was neither drugaddled nor deranged, but rather that he committed a premeditated act of terror in retaliation for Canadian involvement in Afghanistan, bolsters the government's argument that we are at war with jihadists. Steven Blaney, the public safety minister, was quick to say the attack justified the Anti-Terrorism Act - even though the RC MP commissioner testified Friday that, had he lived, Zehaf-Bibeau could have been arrested under existing Criminal Code provisions..." National Post, A2 (2015-03-07)

We have reason to distrust the motives behind Bill C-51

An opinion piece states, "Ed. note: this is an open letter to Yukon MP Ryan Leef... Bill C-51, introduced on Jan. 30, has been rushed to committee already. Did you even have time to read it? Don't you think that something so important and so dangerous to our civil liberties requires better scrutiny? Shall we start with what is not in Bill C-51? Reading new legislation is hard. Every tiny word and phrase is defined and parsed to the smallest degree. Yet nowhere in Bill C-51, the Anti-terrorism Act, is there a definition of "terrorism" or "terrorist". Can you explain this? Bill C-51 is an omnibus bill. The reason for massive omnibus bills is to hide questionable legislation... Public Safety Minister Blaney and Justice Minister MacKay have refused to answer reasonable questions from Thomas Mulcair, preferring evasions and name-calling..." Whitehorse Daily Star, 17 (2015-03-07)

Anti-terrorism bill unduly exposes personal data, watchdogs say

The scope of the Conservative government's anti-terrorism bill is "clearly excessive" and puts the personal information of Canadians at risk, the federal privacy commissioner warns. In a submission to the House of Commons public safety committee, Daniel Therrien says measures in the bill to guard against unreasonable loss of privacy are "seriously deficient." Canadian Press (Hamilton Spectator, A13; The Record, The Guardian, Chronicle-Herald, Vancouver Sun, Telegraph-Journal, Times & Transcript); Postmedia News (Ottawa Citizen, A9; Windsor Star, Leader-Post, Edmonton Journal, The Gazette); La Presse Canadienne (Le Droit, 2); QMI Agency (Edmonton Sun, 18; London Free Press) (2015-03-07)

RCMP says no political motive in video's release

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau wanted his final words known. Should Ottawa have given him his wish? There has been debate since the video's existence was revealed last October as to whether it should be released publicly. When security services often cite online propaganda as a powerful tool to spread extremism, why would the RCMP release Zehaf-Bibeau's hasty attempt to justify his attacks in cellphone video recorded minutes before he stormed Parliament Hill? RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson addressed that question Friday even before it was asked, saying he'd decided it was in the public interest and could help Canadians understand the "phenomenon of terrorism." "The RCMP is not, nor should we be in the habit of, publicly discussing evidence or evidence collection during an active investigation," Paulson said in opening remarks to the Commons committee meeting Friday. Paulson noted the new legislation - currently before Parliament - in his remarks. "The release of this video at this time could be seen as seeking to influence that process," he said. "I assure you I have no such motive. The video speaks for itself. It is what it is. Toronto Star, A17 (2015-03-07)

Le patron de la GRC parle d'actes «terroristes»

Le témoignage du commissaire de la GRC, Bob Paulson, a donné le coup d'envoi à l'étude du projet de loi antiterroriste C-51 en comité parlementaire, hier. M. Paulson a divulgué le contenu de la vidéo tournée par Michael Zehaf Bibeau avant qu'il ne lance son attaque. Il a aussi fait le point sur l'enquête de son corps policier sur des actes qu'il a formellement qualifiés de «terroristes». Voici ce qu'on a appris. La Presse, A12 (2015-03-07)

As jihadis go, this one was third-rate

Since his attack on Ottawa last Oct. 22, Michael Zehaf-Bibeau has become the chilling face of Canadian homegrown terrorism. A widely published photo showing him brandishing a rifle with a kaffiyeh scarf over the lower half of his face and his long hair flowing wildly has helped cement the image. But the RCMP's release Friday of what would become his martyrdom video when he was gunned down on Parliament Hill leaves the impression that Zehaf-Bibeau was not a particularly adept jihadi. Questioning from government members made clear that, while the video is of limited propaganda value to the jihadis, the Conservatives see it as a boost to their antiterror agenda. "I'm glad that in your opening remarks you clearly indicated that it was a terrorist attack," Ms. James said to Mr. Paulson. Her Conservative colleague, Diane Ablonczy, said Zehaf-Bibeau's attack had "strengthened the resolve of Canadians to push back and to fight this kind of terrorism." The Opposition NDP, on the other hand, asked whether police were investigating the role mental illness played in Zehaf-Bibeau's attack. And NDP MP Randall Garrison got Comm. Paulson to acknowledge that the Oct. 22 attack could have been prosecuted as terrorism under existing law, the implication being that the Tories proposed Anti-terrorism Act, Bill C-51, is unnecessary. National Post, A3 (2015-03-07)

Video fuels terror bill debate

As MPs heard Parliament Hill shooter Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's voice for the first time Friday, it was impossible to separate his Oct. 22 shooting spree from the looming debate over the Conservative government's new anti-terrorism bill. RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson showed public safety committee members a video Zehaf-Bibeau made minutes before opening fire at the National War Memorial and on Parliament Hill. Paulson said the Mounties have no doubt he was a terrorist, bent on striking back at Canada for its involvement in the Middle East. The video's release came as a parliamentary committee prepares to consider Bill C-51 next week. Leaving Friday's meeting, MPs' comments on the video reflected their own party's stance. Conservatives cast Zehaf-Bibeau as a homegrown terrorist who underlines the need to overhaul Canada's antiterrorism laws. QMI Agency (Ottawa Sun, 6; Calgary Sun, Edmonton Sun, Toronto Sun) (2015-03-07)

Security emerging as a top election issue amid terror threat: finance minister

Canada's finance minister is saying publicly what political observers have long suspected: expect to hear the Conservatives talking a lot about national security in the upcoming election campaign. Joe Oliver told a conference Friday that the threat of terrorism at home and around the world has become a significant concern for Canadian voters - rivalling even the economy, a perennial favourite. Perhaps not coincidentally, Oliver's remarks came on a day when terrorism was on the minds of Canadians, with RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson briefing MPs about the investigation into last year's deadly attack on Parliament Hill. Oliver told his Ottawa audience that while pocketbook issues remain the top priority for Canadians, national security is a mounting concern. Earlier this week, the Conservatives generated more controversy with a Facebook fundraising post that referenced a threat by the terror group Al-Shabab against the West Edmonton Mall. The post features a photo of a masked person wearing fatigues, complete with the mall's logo, and a caption asking for support for the government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation. Canadian Press (iPolitics; Cape Breton Post, The Guardian, Times-Colonist, Telegraph-Journal); Ottawa Citizen (2015-03-07)

Show us the entire video

An editorial states, "Canadians should have seen the video made by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau months ago. Even now, astoundingly, the RCMP won't show us the whole thing. Commissioner Bob Paulson had better have a sound investigative or ethical reason for censoring the video, because Canadians have been treated like children long enough... The long wait, the dramatic buildup and the mysterious edits have all imbued this video with political significance it would not have had if the RCMP had simply shown it to Canadians in the days after the attack. This is convenient for the government, which has in the meantime got into the habit of using the Oct. 22 attack as a justification for its terrorism legislation, adding even more weight to this one man's words..." Ottawa Citizen, B7 (2015-03-07)

The face of terror

An editorial states, "Canadians gazed directly into the face of terror Friday with the release of a cellphone video made by Michael Zehaf-Bibeau moments before he launched his assault on Parliament Hill. Appearing lucid, calm and determined, he explained precisely the reason for his attack. It was "in retaliation for Afghanistan and because (Prime Minister Stephen) Harper wants to send his troops to Iraq," Zehaf-Bibeau said. His goal was "to show that you're not even safe in your own land." If nothing else, this confirms what most suspected, that the shooting of Cpl. Nathan Cirillo and the storming of Parliament's Centre Block last October were indeed acts of terror... Despite its chilling tone there's nothing in this video to justify Bill C-51, the Harper government's excessively intrusive new anti-terror legislation, with its assault on freedom of speech, privacy and security of the person. Rather than legitimizing a wholesale erosion of cherished rights, the image of Zehaf-Bibeau chiding Canadians for having "forgotten God" and deserving punishment should spur more effective "deradicalization" efforts nationwide..." Toronto Star, IN6 (2015-03-07)

Video provides Tories with political cover, not justification

An opinion piece states, "Exhibit A in Stephen Harper's case for the most comprehensive national security overhaul since the terrorist attacks of 9/11 is a recording so short that it is almost a misnomer to call it a video. At only a bit more than a minute in length in its entirety, the message Michael Zehaf-Bibeau recorded on his cellphone before he killed a soldier at the National War Memorial on the way to a shooting rampage inside the main parliament building last October does little more than clear up the issue of personal motive..." Toronto Star, A17 (2015-03-07)

Terror fixation draws attention from economy

An opinion piece states, "Two issues dominate Canadian politics. One is talked about. The other is not. The one talked about is terrorism. It is the topic of the day. Politicians furiously debate the government's new anti-terror bill. Does it go too far? Would it do any good if passed? Or, perversely, would it make matters worse? ..." Toronto Star, A6 (2015-03-07)

Why was it so hard to see the tape?

An opinion piece states, "As more and more time passed after Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's attack at the War Memorial and then on Parliament, a conspiracy theory gathered momentum in the social media: The RCMP wouldn't release the video message Zehaf-Bibeau left behind because it was not the flinty-eyed terrorist manifesto the Conservatives hoped it would be, the better to push through draconian antiterrorism laws and gradually turn Canada into a police state. Rather, so the theory went, the tape was full of incoherent ramblings from an apolitical madman..." National Post, A12 (2015-03-07)

Building better anti-terrorism laws

An opinion piece states from MP Wayne Easter states, "In the wake of the deadly attacks on military officers in Quebec and on Parliament Hill last October, we must consider how to best protect Canadians from modern terrorist threats while safeguarding our values. Although the government's new anti-terrorism legislation, Bill C-51, takes some proper steps in that direction, it will need fixing. Having been the government during 9-11 and other terrorist events, the Liberal party is well aware of the tough issues and sensitivities involved..." The Telegram, A18 (2015-03-07)

Conservatives use PR smarts to fight fear with fear

An opinion piece states, "... See, the devastating self-skewering element of this line is that it is nominally intended to serve as the justification for a proposed law, Bill C-51, that will restrict freedom. And it is offered at a time when members of the government are using the bill as a means of whipping up intolerance against Muslims to score cheap political points. Here we have a piece of legislation that would, among other things, curtail freedom of speech fairly broadly on matters related to terrorism and give an espionage agency domestic policing powers that allow it, in secret, to be specifically exempted from honouring the Charter of Rights..." Toronto Star, IN2 (2015-03-07)

Police state in making

A letter to the editor states, "Bill C-51 is aimed at terrorists, but as now written will allow CSIS agents to detain anyone who, in their opinion, may engage in unlawful conduct for "a political, religious or ideological purpose or cause." This is far broader than terrorism. Many Canadians have become very worried but do they wish to write Stephen Harper a blank cheque? ..." Windsor Star, A6 (2015-03-07)

Kenney says homegrown terrorism a 'reality' in Canada

Defence Minister Jason Kenney is warning Canadians that homegrown terrorism in this country is now a "reality" and they should not ignore the likelihood of more "jihadist attacks". Moreover, he says the threat of terrorism has never been greater and some Canadians are guilty of "wilful blindness" about the inter-connection of "jihadi violence" throughout the world. Kenney delivered his message in a sober speech Saturday to a conference organized by the Manning Centre for Building Democracy... Kenney said the federal Conservative government is taking action to protect Canadians — implementing measures in its anti-terror legislation, some of which he said were recommended by public servants many years ago after the 9/11 attacks but were "rejected for political reasons." The government's bill, C-51, has drawn controversy in recent weeks. Critics say it gives too much power to CSIS and the RCMP, and will threaten civil liberties without sufficient independent oversight. The bill redefines threats to national security to include, among other things, interference with critical infrastructure, including cyber systems, and to the "economic and financial stability" of Canada. Ottawa Citizen

Projet de loi C-51 : le ministre Steven Blaney pourfend le Parti québécois

«Bouillié pour les chats», «campagne de propagande mensongère», le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, dénonce vivement la sortie du Parti québécois contre le projet de loi C-51 sur le terrorisme. Les souverainistes «peuvent dormir tranquilles», même si Ottawa choisit d'aller de l'avant avec le projet de loi C-51, a assuré le député fédéral de Lévis-Bellechasse, en entrevue avec notre Bureau parlementaire. Mercredi dernier, le porte-parole péquiste en matière de justice, Alexandre Cloutier, a martelé en point de presse qu'il craignait une véritable «chasse aux sorcières». Selon le Parti québécois, les souverainistes, au même titre que les Autochtones, les environnementalistes et les étudiants risquent d'être «fichés » avec les nouveaux pouvoirs qui seraient confiés aux autorités avec la loi C-51. «Des propos qui sont tenus manifestement par des gens qui ne se sont pas donné la peine de lire le projet de loi», croit le ministre fédéral Steven Blaney. Selon le ministre canadien de la Sécurité publique, avec le projet de loi C-51, on est encore loin du Patriot Act, cette loi antiterroriste qui a été votée par le Congrès des États-Unis sous George W. Bush, après les attentats du 11 septembre 2001. «Si c'était le Patriot Act, je dirais, les péquistes ont peut-être raison de s'inquiéter, mais ce n'est pas qu'on oblige de transmettre de l'information: on donne aux autorités la capacité [de le faire]», a expliqué le ministre fédéral de la Sécurité publique. L'ensemble des organismes et départements devra suivre des protocoles «qui seront assujettis à la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés et à la Loi sur la vie privée», assure M. Blaney. «J'ai beaucoup de respect pour toute formation politique qui fait la promotion de ses valeurs politiques dans le respect de la démocratie», a fait valoir le ministre conservateur. «Et un des plus grand pour moi c'est René Lévesque, a continué M. Blaney. Il n'a jamais hésité à dénoncer la violence faite au FLQ: il l'a condamnée. Il a dit que c'étaient des actes barbares. Je pense qu'on a un très bel exemple d'un grand démocrate, d'un grand Canadien, d'un grand souverainiste québécois. » Le Journal de Québec, 11 (2015-03-08)

Security, at all cost?

An editorial states, "Just how far must Canadians be pushed to give up cherished privacy rights to help the authorities fight terror? That's the question federal Privacy Commissioner Daniel Therrien has raised as Parliament reviews Bill C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2015. It is a question that cuts to the heart of public concern over this hugely flawed, over-reaching legislation..." Toronto Star, A10 (2015-03-08)

Bill C-51 could have been used to prevent Arar from coming back from Syria to Canada, says lawyer

The federal government's proposed Anti-Terrorism Act, Bill C-51, would lead to "unbridled" information sharing, says immigration and refugee lawyer Lorne Waldman, a former co-counsel for Maher Arar, and had it been in place at the time, it could have been used to keep Mr. Arar from returning to Canada. "The fact that we're going to expand the information sharing with less and less controls over how information is shared is a huge problem, especially when we consider the lessons that we thought had been learned through the experiences of Maher Arar. People do not appreciate the dangers that lurk in this sort of unbridled sharing of information," said Mr. Waldman, a Toronto-based lawyer. (...) The House Public Safety Committee begins its study of the Conservative government's proposed Anti-Terrorism Act on March 10 with testimony from Justice Minister Peter MacKay (Central Nova, N.S.) and Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney (Lévis-Bellechasse, Que.). The Hill Times (2015-03-09)

Tackling human rights abuses here and abroad

From solitary confinement and the plight of missing and murdered aboriginal women in Canada to the country's anti-terror bill and its role in preventing human rights abuses abroad, Alex Neve has a lot on his mind these days. As the secretary general of Amnesty International Canada, Neve has been criss-crossing the country to speak about the need to end human rights violations at home and overseas. On Wednesday, he'll address two public events at the University of Regina. At 2:30 p.m., the topic will be Canada and the Global Struggle Against Torture (Room 119 Research and Innovation Centre Theatre). His 7 p.m. address is called Canada Votes 2015 - Putting Human Rights Issues on the Election Agenda (Room 216 Language Institute Rotunda). Neve began his speaking tour last fall as part of Amnesty's global campaign to end torture. And that also means looking in our own backyard. Amnesty is concerned about the practice of solitary confinement in this country's prisons, including the length of time prisoners spend in confinement and how widely it's used. "When you really understand the severe and often irreversible physical and psychological harm that comes through solitary confinement, you understand why the UN says it's torture," said Neve in a telephone interview. Internationally, Neve is also concerned about Canada becoming complicit in torture occurring elsewhere - including using the "fruits" of torture such as interrogation information or deporting someone to a country where he may face torture. Neve worries some of the lessons that should have been learned from the Maher Arar inquiry will be undone by the Tory government's Bill C-51 - the proposed anti-terrorism act that he believes will create "unprecedented and insidious new powers with virtually no oversight and accountability." Leader-Post, A5 (2015-03-09)

CSIS needs more resources, not more powers

An opinion piece states, "It is understandable that a majority of Canadians support the government's proposed antiterrorism legislation, Bill C-51. The incidents last October were shocking and traumatic, and the idea that a shooter could gain access to Parliament naturally increases our sense of vulnerability. It is less understandable why the government seems to be in such a rush to enact new legislation without a full debate about its content, its long-term impact, and its actual effectiveness in countering terrorism and protecting the security and lives of Canadians. The two terrorism trials taking place in Victoria (the Canada Day bomb plot) and Toronto (the Via Rail bomb plot) suggest that security intelligence and law enforcement already possess the necessary tools to confront the terrorist threat. This sense of urgency about passing Bill C-51 seems to be predicated on the notion that CSIS, in particular, needs new powers to better deal with security threats. Recent cases, both here and abroad, suggest however that it is not a question of new powers, but better communication, co-ordination, training, and most importantly, resources such as manpower and funding." Ottawa Citizen, C5 (2015-03-09)

Oversight, out of mind

An opinion piece states, "Canada's system of national security 'oversight' is imperfect. Its system of national security 'review' is frayed, perhaps to the breaking point. The government's antiterrorism law, Bill C-51, will accelerate this pattern. Without a serious course correction, we risk the prospect of avertable security service scandals. We have now written five backgrounders and almost 200 pages of analysis on Bill C-51, posted at antiterrorlaw.ca. The bill's shortcomings are acute. If we are to mitigate the risk of misadventure from this over-hasty law, it will be because the system has checks and balances - except those accountability systems are themselves imperiled." National Post, A11 (2015-03-09)

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

RCMP doubles its counter-terrorism efforts

The RCMP has doubled the number of Mounties on counter-terrorism investigations, with 130 of those officers hunting for possible suspects who may have aided Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's murderous rampage, RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson told parliamentarians Friday. NDP public safety critic Randall Garrison, whose party has said it will vote against C-51, said Paulson's remarks undermine one of the government's key arguments for the legislation. "What we heard very clearly was the RCMP commissioner saying the existing legislation was adequate to deal with this incident, both in terms of investigating and charging." Liberal public safety critic Wayne Easter said the video makes the case for C-51. Ottawa Citizen, A8 (2015-03-07)

Mounties seek suspects linked to Hill attack

The Mounties are searching for possible suspects who may have helped Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's murderous rampage on Parliament Hill last October, said RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson in releasing the gunman's last video in which he reveals his motivation. The committee is to begin hearing testimony Tuesday on the Conservatives' anti-terror legislation, Bill C-51, which would give sweeping new powers to police, spies and government to counter not just terror threats, but a broad range of "threats to the security of Canada." Commissioner Paulson said his decision to release the video was not connected to the political brawling over the legislation. "The release of this video at this time could be seen as seeking to influence that process," he said. "I assure you I have no such motive. The video speaks for itself. It is what it is." Postmedia News (National Post, A2) (2015-03-07)

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Online Media / Médias en ligne

General Coverage / couverture générale

Zehaf-Bibeau video shows that 'there was a terrorist threshold that has been met' connected to Oct. 22 attack on Parliament, says NDP MP

Statements from RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson as he aired a previously secret video recorded by a gunman who stormed Parliament's Centre Block last Oct. 22 raise questions about the way Mr. Paulson and the RCMP handled and described evidence the Mounties had on the day of the gunman's attack, after he had shot and killed a reserve soldier at the National War Memorial only minutes earlier. The video Mr. Paulson aired at a special meeting of the Commons Public Safety and National Security Committee also suggests the government would have known a week after the attack-when Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney (Levis-Bellechasse, Que.) criticized NDP Leader Tom Mulcair (Outremont, Que.) in the Commons for declining to call the attack terrorism-that the RCMP had clear evidence from gunman

Michael Zehaf-Bibeau himself that he intended to commit a terrorist attack against the Canadian military because of Canada's role in the Afghanistan war and its decision to deploy F-18 fighter jets against Islamic militants in Iraq. NDP MP Randall Garrison (Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca, B.C.) acknowledged that the video was the kind of evidence that would have been crucial to the Official Opposition as it has battled against Prime Minister Stephen Harper (Calgary-Southwest, Alta.) for the past several months over his frequent and strident warnings of terrorist threats within Canada, as well as NDP and other widespread opposition to the government's recently-released and controversial legislation, Bill C-51, containing sweeping new powers for the Canadian Security Intelligence Agency to "disrupt" suspected public security threats before terrorism is carried out. The Hill Times (2015-03-07)

La vidéo de Zehaf Bibeau et l'apologie de l'approche sécuritaire

À l'occasion du dévoilement vendredi de la vidéo tournée par Michael Zehaf-Bibeau avant qu'il ne commette un attentat à Ottawa en octobre dernier, le commissaire de la GRC Bob Paulson et, plus tard, le ministre de la Sécurité publique, Steven Blaney, ont insisté sur l'approche sécuritaire dans la lutte au terrorisme et à la radicalisation. «Le premier devoir d'un gouvernement est de protéger ses citoyens. C'est pourquoi nous avons déposé la Loi antiterroriste de 2015 – pour que la police et les organisations chargées de notre sécurité nationale disposent des outils nécessaires pour protéger les Canadiens», en a conclu le parrain du projet de loi C-51. 45eNord (2015-03-07)

Counter-terrorism work has 'sidetracked' 300 RCMP criminal probes

RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson says he thinks the full, unedited version of Parliament Hill shooter Michael Zehaf-Bibeau's self-filmed video will eventually be released. In an interview airing Saturday morning on CBC Radio's The House, host Evan Solomon asked Paulson if 18 seconds from the beginning and end of the video made on the day of the shooting would one day be made public by police. Paulson also expanded on a few of the topics that came up during his appearance before the House of Commons public safety committee on Friday, including counter-terrorism operations and the squeeze on RCMP resources. "We have over 600 officers reassigned to counter-terrorism, so that brings us up to 870 people [working on it]," he said. CBC News (2015-03-07)

RCMP seeing 'steady increase' of suspected extremists, commissioner says

The RCMP is tracking and investigating a "steadily increasing" number of suspected extremists, according to Commissioner Bob Paulson. Speaking to CTV's Question Period, Paulson said the RCMP is seeing an increase in such cases in certain areas of the country. "It's steadily increasing," said Paulson. "In Alberta, we're seeing a steady increase in the kind of files that are coming into the police. In Ontario, increasing. In Montreal, increasing." Security officials have said that more than 140 Canadians have left the country to fight with extremist groups overseas. While Paulson said this number has increased, he would not say by how much. "I'm trying to get out of the numbers business; it's increasing, the number of people that we are tracking and investigating," he said. Days ahead of another appearance before the committee - this time on the government's new anti-terror bill - Paulson also said he has no problem with strengthened oversight of the RCMP. Paulson will appear before the Commons public safety committee again Tuesday as it begins studying the Conservative government's Bill C-51. CTV News (2015-03-08)

Christy Clark says we could 'regret' giving away personal freedoms in Bill C-51

B.C. Premier Christy Clark is adding her voice to the chorus of criticism against the federal government's anti-terror bill, raising concerns that the legislation may compromise Canadians' personal liberties. In an interview on CTV's Question Period, the provincial leader said that Bill C-51 could "impinge" on the rights of Canadians, and requires "adequate oversight." "We should be very careful in Canada, in a country where so many people have sacrificed their lives to preserve our freedoms, to make sure that we aren't -- in the effort to protect ourselves against unknown threats -- really diminishing our personal freedoms," she said. "We will regret that forever. When you give up personal freedoms, it's very hard to get them back." Bill C-51 is the Conservative government's latest piece of legislation that is part of its broader tough-on-crime strategy. The anti-terror bill seeks to expand the powers of police and spy agencies, in order to stamp out terror plots before they unfold. The legislation has been a lightning rod for controversy, with critics suggesting that the bill crosses the line, giving authorities too much power without sufficient oversight to keep them in check. Canada's privacy commissioner, Daniel Therrien, agrees with Bill C-51's intended goal to increase information-sharing between authorities, but stressed that the rights of innocent Canadians may be sacrificed in the name of intelligence-gathering. CTV News (2015-03-08)

Kenney says homegrown terrorism a 'reality' in Canada

Defence Minister Jason Kenney is warning Canadians that homegrown terrorism in this country is now a "reality" and they should not ignore the likelihood of more "jihadist attacks". Moreover, he says the threat of terrorism has never been greater and some Canadians are guilty of "wilful blindness" about the inter-connection of "jihadi violence" throughout the world. Kenney delivered his message in a sober speech Saturday to a conference organized by the Manning Centre for Building Democracy... Kenney said the federal Conservative government is taking action to protect Canadians — implementing measures in its anti-terror legislation, some of which he said were recommended by public servants many years ago after the 9/11 attacks but were "rejected for political reasons." The government's bill, C-51, has drawn controversy in recent weeks. Critics say it gives too much power to CSIS and the RCMP, and will threaten civil liberties without sufficient independent oversight. The bill redefines threats to national security to include, among other things, interference with critical infrastructure, including cyber systems, and to the "economic and financial stability" of Canada. Ottawa Citizen (2015-03-08)

Bill C-51 questioned by B.C. Premier Christy Clark

Premier Christy Clark has joined the ranks of Canadian leaders expressing concern that the federal Conservative government's anti-terror bill, C-51, could threaten Canadians' personal liberties. Last week Clark told Evan Solomon on CBC's Power and Politics that she has concerns about how the federal bill will balance security and freedom. "I think the federal government needs to be paying close attention to security for obvious reasons. I mean, we are engaged very much in the Middle East at the moment. And I think, you know, people want to know that they and their leaders are safe in the country," said Clark on Thursday. "I do think, though, it is important to remember that we have to keep our personal freedoms alive and whole," she said. "Generations of people for hundreds of years have fought for and preserved those personal individual freedoms that we have, and I would hate to see any changes that are going to mean that we start to water those freedoms down. That balance must be found." Over the weekend she repeated her views on CTV's Question Period, saying that Bill C-51 could diminish Canadian's personal freedoms in order to protect Canadians against unknown threats. CBC News (2015-03-09)

Amnesty International says C-51 could be used to target activists

A prominent human-rights group says the Conservative government's anti-terrorism bill could be used to target environmental activists and aboriginal protesters. In a brief made public today, Amnesty International Canada adds its voice to those who say the bill would go beyond genuine security threats to ensnare those who mount demonstrations that fall outside the strict letter of the law. The Conservatives brought in the bill — which would significantly expand the Canadian Security Intelligence Service's mandate — following the murders of two Canadian soldiers last October. It would give CSIS the ability to disrupt terror plots, make it easier for police to limit the movements of a suspect, expand no-fly list powers, crack down on terrorist propaganda, and remove barriers to sharing security-related information... Still, Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney told the Senate national security committee Monday the bill would help track Canadians who travel to train and fight with terrorist groups overseas. Canadian Press (CP24; 2015-03-09)

Someone should watch the watchers

An opinion piece states "One of the recurring themes in science fiction is a dystopia. Books such as 1984, Animal House, and A Brave New World portray future society as anything but idyllic. Recently, there has been a spate of books for young adults with similar themes. The Hunger Games, The Giver, The Maze Runner, Divergent have now all been made into movies. Their central theme can be seen as the rebellion of youth against their elders but these stories all feature Orwellian levels of surveillance and control. In dystopias Big Brother is always watching... The difficulty with security measures, such as Bill C-51, is determining the limits. It is in assessing what is a real threat versus what is not. It is in making choices that protect society and not destroy it. We live in a digital age where our electronic footprint is huge. Companies collect and trade in this information. Making it available to the government for the sake of state security might not seem unreasonable. But what are the boundaries? Civilian or judicial oversight, at the very least, would seem appropriate." Prince George Citizen (2015-03-09)

Bill C-51: Labour must confront radical legislation with radical action

An opinion piece states "... Thanks to documents leaked by Edward Snowden, we know that Canadians are under mass surveillance by state officials. Enter Bill-51, the Conservatives' so-called anti-terror legislation. Many of the changes proposed by the anti-terror Bill C-51 seem to legalize what is very probably already happening. Bill C-51 will lead to more cases like Arar's and Abassi's. For Indigenous people and communities, Bill C-51 represents nothing new. As the most criminalized and policed people in Canada, the anti-terrorism legislation simply looks like another attack following the traditions of: forced starvation, the pass system on reserve, residential schools, forced placement of children into child assistance services and the prison system. Communities or activists who question the very legitimacy of Canada or actively disrespect the tenuous sovereignty on which Canada is built, are the enemies of this legislation. The very existence of people who do not accept the legitimacy of Canadian sovereignty is a threat to Canadian sovereignty. How this legislation will be enforced is still an open question, but it's false to say that the only problem with the legislation is oversight, as many have argued. Instead, the path that Bill C-51 sets forth is dangerous and, if the Conservatives are re-elected, will allow for more extreme forms of repression." Rabble.ca (2015-03-09)

Stewart, B.C./Hyder, Alaska border closure puts security at risk, says border guard union

The president of the union representing Canada's border guards says reducing the hours at the Stewart, B.C./Hyder, AK border is a hypocritical move for a federal government that says it places a priority on national security. "The government right now is about to pass a bill, C-51, in regards of the concerns that the government has with the terrorists and the people who are going off-seas to get training, and meanwhile they're reducing the hours at the border," said Jean-Pierre Fortin, president of the customs and immigration union. He's been told the reduction in hours at the northwestern B.C. border crossing is one of several such moves being undertaken by the Canadian Border Services Agency (CBSA) in other parts of the country. Terrace Standard (2015-03-09)

Would the Conservative party have violated C-51? Maybe(?)

An opinion piece states "Last week, the Conservative party posted an image and excerpt from Al-Shabaab's threat against West Edmonton Mall, the party apparently hoping to solicit support for C-51, the Anti-Terrorism Act. Press Progress, the media wing of the Broadbent Institute, subsequently wondered if this would have amounted to a transgression against C-51. The answer to that question is . . . debatable. And that ambiguity might be the problem. There is a separate conversation to be had about the wisdom, tastefulness and appropriateness of the party's post. Setting that aside for the moment, the hypothetical legality of the post depends on a reading of a new offence that would be established by C-51." Macleans

QP Live: Amnesty criticizes Bill C-51, Tories move on

An opinion piece states "Vegas bookies pegged low odds on Amnesty International supporting Stephen Harper's latest anti-terror legislation. Just kidding: Nobody in Las Vegas, except maybe that drunken Canadian bachelor party that just woke up, even knows about Bill C-51. But everyone who knows Amnesty's record wouldn't be surprised at the organization's criticism of Bill C-51—namely, that proposed changes "fail to meet a range of important international human rights obligations." Among those obligations, Amnesty says, is the government's obligation to allow Charter of Rights-protected protest to continue unperturbed. The bill's critics all point to one subsection of C-51 that could target such protest." Macleans

Amnistie internationale s'inquiète du projet de loi antiterroriste

Amnistie internationale craint que le projet de loi anti-terroriste du gouvernement conservateur soit utilisé pour cibler des environnementalistes ou des militants autochtones. Dans un mémoire dévoilé lundi, l'organisme de défense des droits de la personne ajoute ses craintes à ceux qui croient que le projet de loi va bien au-delà des menaces réelles à la sécurité publique, et qu'il retient dans ses mailles des militants dont les activités sortent un peu du cadre strict des lois et règlements. Le projet de loi C-51, déposé à la suite des attentats d'octobre dernier à Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu et Ottawa, accorderait notamment des pouvoirs accrus au Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité. Presse canadienne (98,5 FM)

L'amnésie sélective de Jean Chrétien

Une pièce d'opinion dit « Le 19 février dernier, Jean Chrétien, ex-premier ministre canadien et ex-chef du Parti libéral du Canada, signait une lettre ouverte aux côtés de son successeur, Paul Martin, de son prédécesseur, John Turner, de même que l'ex-premier ministre conservateur Joe Clark. Le tout, complété d'une impressionnante brochette de juristes et ex-juges de la Cour suprême du Canada. Dans la foulée du projet de loi C-51 du gouvernement Harper – dit «antiterroriste», cette lettre conjointe critiquait ouvertement l'absence d'un mécanisme transparent et imputable apte à 'surveiller' ce que fera le Service canadien du renseignement de sécurité (SCRS) des nouveaux pouvoirs élargis de police que C-51 lui conférerait. Pour les signataires, c'est une question cruciale en démocratie de 'protection du public' et de 'droits de la personne'... La semaine dernière, de passage à Montréal, Jean Chrétien réitérait sa critique de C-51. Dans le cadre d'une conférence donnée à l'Université Concordia, voici ce qu'il en disait : 'Quand on joue avec les droits et les libertés des citoyens, il faut être prudent. C'est une pente dangereuse. C'est facile de se servir des émotions, de la crainte des gens pour supprimer certaines libertés qui sont parfois difficiles à reconquérir. Moi qui ai été pour Pierre Elliott Trudeau le ministre de la Justice, c'est mon devoir d'être préoccupé.' Notez-la bien. Cette citation est à conserver pour la postérité... Pourquoi? Parce qu'elle est un symptôme patent d'amnésie sélective - un syndrome que développent souvent les anciens chefs de gouvernement... tous partis confondus. » Journal de Montréal

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

ISIS spreading to Afghanistan, Pakistan, CSIS director warns - Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney, CSIS head Michel Coulombe among witnesses at Senate defence committee

ISIS is spreading to Libya, Afghanistan and Pakistan, the head of Canada's spy agency warned at the Senate defence committee today. At the same time, Michel Coulombe, the head of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, urged senators not to forget longer-running foes like al-Qaeda as Canada turns its focus to the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria. "ISIS started in Iraq and Syria, but what we're seeing now, and you've seen it in media, it's spreading in Libya, Afghanistan, Pakistan," Coulombe said. "Boko Haram just pledged allegiance to ISIS. So there's also this phenomenon of ISIS spreading." Canada's top security officials are appearing before the Senate defence committee today over the government's plans to extend the reach of CSIS overseas. Coulombe and Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney kicked off the meeting. Other top security officials, privacy commissioner Daniel Therrien and former CSIS assistant director of intelligence Ray Boisvert will also be there... Another bill, C-51, is a much longer piece of proposed legislation that also aims to increase CSIS's powers, including giving the spy agency the ability to ask a judge for permission to contravene the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. CBC News (2015-03-09)

Suspected extremists tracked by RCMP increasing: commissioner

The number of suspected extremists being tracked by the RCMP is growing, according to Commissioner Bob Paulson. "It's increasing, the amount of people that we are tracking and investigating" Paulson told CTV's Question Period. "Although I am very satisfied with the framework that we are applying to assess the threat these individuals represent." Paulson did not say how many more they are tracking, but mentioned specific areas of the country where the RCMP has seen more activity. "In Alberta, we're seeing a steady increase in the kind of files that are coming into the police. In Ontario, increasing. In Montreal, increasing." Paulson also said the number of Canadians that have left the country to fight overseas with extremists is more than the 140 Security officials had previously said. "It's gone up a little bit" he said, but would not give an exact amount. "I'm trying to get out of the numbers business." Paulson will appear before the Commons public safety committee on Tuesday for the start of a study of the Conservative government's Bill C-51. The bill would grant Canadian security agencies additional powers, such as preventative arrest for the RCMP. CJAD (2015-03-09)

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Broadcast Media / Médias télédiffusés

Overall, broadcast media coverage regarding Bill C-51 was moderate. With the release of the Michael-Zehaf-Bibeau video came a great deal of speculation on political programs about whether or not the provisions of Bill C-51 would have prevented the attacks in Ottawa and Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu.

General Coverage / couverture générale

CTV News – Question Period interviewed RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson regarding the release of the Zehaf-Bibeau video and Bill C-51. Commissioner Paulson was also asked about the cases of suspended Senators Mike Duffy and Pamela and he was asked about morale in the RCMP. Rough Transcript (2015-03-08)

CTV News – Question Period interviewed Privacy Commissioner regarding his concerns on Bill C-51. Rough Transcript (2015-03-08)

RDI – Les Coulisses de pouvoir présente une entrevue avec le ministre de la Sécurité publique et de la Protection civile, Steven Blaney au sujet de la vidéo de Michael Zehaf-Bibeau et projet de loi, C-51. Transcription ébauche (2015-03-08)

CTV News broadcasted a live speech from the Manning Networking Conference in which Defence Minister Jason Kenney discusses Bill C-51, border security, and Canada's fight against homegrown extremism and global terrorism. Rough Transcript (2015-03-07)

CBC Radio's The House featured an interview with RCMP Commissioner Bob Paulson on the Michael Zehaf and possible powers of Bill C-51 to disrupt such attacks (2015-03-07)

Threat Disruption / perturbation des menaces

NIL

Security of Canada Information Sharing Act / loi sur la sécurité de l'échange de renseignements au Canada

NIL

Passenger Protect Program / programme de protection des passagers

NIL

Immigration Refugee Protection Act / loi sur l'immigration et la protection des réfugiés

NIL

Amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada / modifications au code criminel du Canada

NIL

Social Media / Médias sociaux

Social media

This social media analysis is based on the following keywords:

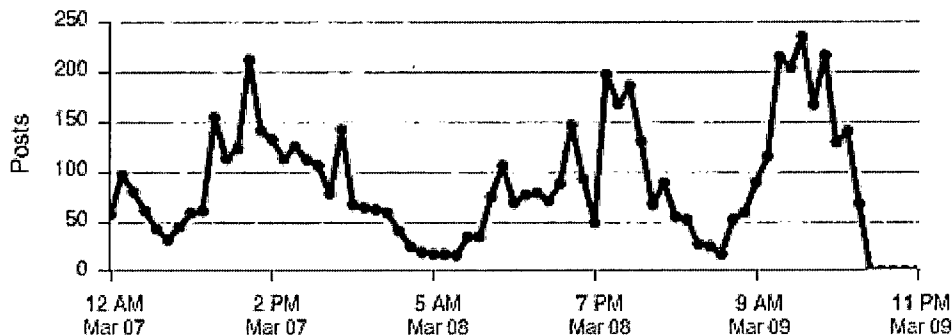

"anti-terror bill" AND "Canada"
"anti-terror bill" AND "Harper"
"anti-terror bill" AND "Ottawa"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Canada"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Harper"
"anti-terror legislation" AND "Ottawa"
"anti-terrorism act" AND "2015"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Canada"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Harper"
"anti-terrorism bill" AND "Ottawa"
"bill c51"
"c-51"
"Canada" AND "anti-terror law"
"loi anti-terroriste" AND "2015"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "conservateur"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "Harper"
"loi antiterroriste" AND "Ottawa"
"loi sur la protection du Canada contre les terroristes"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Canada"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "conservateur"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Harper"
"législation antiterroriste" AND "Ottawa"
"security legislation" AND "Canada"

There were approximately 6099 social media posts between March 7 and March 9. The following graph displays the breakdown of social media posts by type:

In total, there were approximately 2468 tweets, 1167 Facebook posts, 110 news posts, 105 blog posts, and 274 other posts.

The following graph demonstrates how social media activity progressed throughout the period in question:

Coverage peaked at approximately noon on March 7, based on a variety of tweets and retweets, including reports on the Privacy Commissioner's issues on the Bill and an open letter from the Mohawk Council of Kahnawake. Activity peaked again at 1 pm on March 9 based on tweets and retweets from media about Amnesty International's condemnation of the bill and committee hearings on Bill C-44 and C-51.

Stakeholders

@mgeist

RT @cforcese: #C51 & review, oversight, accountability: "Parliamentary review is not redundant red tape" <http://natpo.st/1MmEFYO>

@mgeist

RT @cforcese: Bill #C51: Do our Allies Really Have Similar Powers to Violate the Law? <http://bit.ly/1C2xGmo> #antiterrorismact

@bccla

Free public discussion on #C51 & #humanrights in #PrinceGeorge March 10 7pm. Join @bccla & #StandupfortheNorth! <http://bccla.org/?p=12913>

@bccla

Participate in the discussion #C51 #humanrights with @BCCLA & #StandupfortheNorth 7pm Mar 10 @cnc_bc_ca #PrinceGeorge <http://tinyurl.com/ob4zboq>

@bccla

1/2 Canada settles with asylum seeker who was sent to US on false terror allegations, detained & abused for 5 years <http://champlaw.ca/Benatta>

@bccla

2/2 Inaccurate info passed between gov'ts led to Benatta's detainment & abuse. #C51 would expand info sharing betw gov'ts & increase risks

@ICLMG

Bill #C51 could've been used to prevent #MaherArar from coming back from Syria says lawyer <http://www.hilltimes.com/news/news/2015/03/09/bill-c-51-could-have-been-used-to-prevent-arar-from-coming-back-from-syria-to-canada/41264...> #cdnpoli via @TheHillTimes

@ICLMG

Privacy Commissioner of Canada: Bill #C51 goes too far #privacy #infosharing #oversight http://m.theglobeandmail.com/globe-debate/without-big-changes-bill-c-51-means-big-data/article23320329/?utm_source=twitter.com&utm_medium=Referrer:+Social+Network+Media&utm_campaign=Shared+Web+Article+Links... via @globeandmail #cdnpoli

@ICLMG

Defend Our Freedom: National Day Of Action To #StopC51 - organize or join an action in your city! <http://we.leadnow.ca/stopc51> #cdnpoli #C51

@ICLMG

Debate on Bill #C51 between law prof Craig Forcese & ex-CSIS assistant director on March 12 10am at #UOttawa <http://shar.es/1ff041> #Ottawa

@ICLMG

Benatta reaches settlement w Cdn govt - his story shows why #C51 must be scrapped & why we need #oversight <http://champlaw.ca/Benatta> #cdnpoli

@OpenMedia_ca

Poll: Only 29% CDNs believe police/intelligence agencies should have more powers if erodes personal privacy <http://ow.ly/K4NTo> #stopC51

@OpenMedia_ca

Most Cdns do not want to give up privacy, so why is the gov't trying to set up a secret police force with #BillC51? <http://ow.ly/i/8VwLk>

@OpenMedia_ca

Well put. <http://ow.ly/K7z6m> #cdnpoli #BillC51 #privacy #spying

@privacylawyer

Many of these inspirational women would be guilty of the inciting terrorism offence in Bill #C51. Think about that. <http://ti.me/1E41Zqv>

Media

@HuffPostCanada

First Nations chief pens open letter to Harper on Bill C-51 <http://huff.to/18oBWP6> #cdnpoli

@HuffPostCanada

First Nations chief warns Bill C-51 'may fail in its obligation to protect' Canadians #cdnpoli <http://huff.to/18oqMtY>

@WNNews_Reddit

Canada: Anti-Terror Bill Greenlights Intel Obtained By Torture, Says Green Party Leader

http://www.vice.com/en_ca/read/anti-terror-bill-greenlights-intel-obtained-by-torture-says-green-party-leader-274 ...

@CTVNews

Canada's anti-terror bill could be used to target activists: Amnesty International <http://ow.ly/K793n> #CDNpoli

@AaronWherry

New from me: Would the Conservative party have violated C-51 with its Facebook post? Maybe(?)

http://www.macleans.ca/politics/would-the-conservative-party-have-violated-c-51-maybe/ ...

@CBCTheHouse

March 7 - RCMP Commissioner Paulson discusses Michael Zehaf-Bibeau video and Bill C-51. <http://buff.ly/1BcxQp7> #cdnpoli

@CBCPolitics

Bill C-51 questioned by B.C. Premier Christy Clark http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/british-columbia/bill-c-51-questioned-by-b-c-premier-christy-clark-1.2987123?cmp=rss&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter ... #cdnpoli #hw

@Justin_Ling

Blaney: "We believe the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is enough guidance for CSIS."

Even though C-51 allows them to ignore it.

Hashtags

@AndrewQMI

#terrorism #CSIS Canada spy agency boss says there's "incremental" growth in no. of Canadians wanting to go abroad for #jihad. won't give #

@AndrewQMI

#RCMP + #CSIS have tip lines to receive anonymous info about #terrorists or suspicious activities: spy boss Michel Coulombe #cdnpoli #qcpoli

@OttawaCitizen

Kenney says homegrown #terrorism a 'reality' in Canada <http://bit.ly/1HgyRgJ> #cdnpoli

@Lactualite

Amnistie internationale craint que #C51 soit utilisé pour cibler des militants autochtones <http://bit.ly/1EvMMRB>

@nooneisillegal

#C51: Panel discussion on the anti-terror bill Morris J. Wosk Centre, 580 W. Hastings #Vancouver 6:30 pm <http://ow.ly/K7xF2>

@NDP_HQ

RT if you agree with @ThomasMulcair. #cdnpoli #NDP #C51

*Prepared by the Public Safety Portfolio Media Centre / Préparé par le Centre des médias du portefeuille
Sécurité publique. We can be reached at / Vous pouvez nous contacter à: [PS.PSPMediaCentre-
CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca](mailto:PS.PSPMediaCentre-CentredesmediasPSP.SP@ps-sp.gc.ca).*

Today's News / Actualités
March 10, 2015 / le 10 mars, 2015
8:00 - 14:00 ET

This collection contains news items that appeared online between 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Eastern Time.
Ce recueil contient des actualités qui ont paru sur Internet entre 8h00 et 14h00, heure de l'Est.

Today's News can also be accessed through Newsdesk / Les Actualités peut également être accédée via InfoMédia

MINISTER / MINISTRE

EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT / GESTION DES MESURES D'URGENCE

NATIONAL SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ NATIONALE

BORDER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ FRONTALIÈRE

CYBER SECURITY / SÉCURITÉ CYBERNÉTIQUE

LAW ENFORCEMENT / APPLICATION DE LA LOI

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES / SERVICE CORRECTIONNEL

COMMUNITY SAFETY & PARTNERSHIPS / SÉCURITÉ DE LA POPULATION ET PARTENARIATS

PUBLIC SERVICE / FONCTION PUBLIQUE

OTHER / AUTRES

INTERNATIONAL

SOCIAL MEDIA / MÉDIAS SOCIAUX

MINISTER / MINISTRE

Bill C-51: Blaney, MacKay questioned on anti-terror bill fine print - Justice Minister Peter MacKay, RCMP commissioner and CSIS director appear before committee

Public Safety Minister Steven Blaney vowed to 'set the record straight' as he kicked off a much-anticipated committee review of his government's proposed new anti-terror measures on Tuesday morning. It was a pledge that opposition members, particularly New Democrat public safety critic Randall Garrison, were eager to put to the test. During his opening statement, Blaney highlighted the "key misconceptions" that he said had been put forward by members of the opposition and "so-called experts": the claim that "legitimate protest" could be treated as potential terrorist threats, which he called "completely false, and frankly ridiculous." Blaney also took issue with concerns raised over new information-sharing powers, which, he assured the committee, will only be done to protect Canadians. "Canadians would be unforgiving should we fail to fix this dysfunctional info-sharing system," he warned. Under questioning from Garrison, however, Blaney tacitly acknowledged that at least one concern articulated by legal experts is, in fact, legitimate. He admitted that CSIS won't require judicial authority for all disruption efforts, but only those that could potentially breach the Charter or Canadian law. Even so, Blaney insisted that such activities "follow a rigorous process." CBC News; Canadian Press (CTV News); Macleans

Deux ministres fédéraux devant un comité parlementaire pour défendre C 51

